REPORTERS' DRIVE

DELEGATE DRIVE

Over 4000 Join Organization During Big Campaign for Membership

Twain Falls, Nov. 15.—Districts' Overseer, county chairman in the late Red Cross membership drive, has completed a report on the work accomplished in the past year. Miss Overseer and Mrs. Laird, branch chairman, desired to thank every one who has done their part in the work. The report of the organization follows:

DEFICIENT PSYCHOLOGY IN MINERS' PUBLICITY.

The leaders of the miners' union need lessons in publicity, based upon psychological understanding. The mere loud statement that the miners want a six-hour day and a five-day week immediately arouses opposition from eyes those who naturally sympathize with the under dog. Now, if the miners had presented their demands properly for public consumption, they would have said that: "Large numbers of coal miners die each year of consumption, contracted in the industry. "The germs of consumption are spread by the widespread use of coal. "Help us to protect the health of the American people by carrying on a campaign against the miners' greatest enemy—T. H. "We are not going to start a drive to raise seventeen million dollars to eradicate a disease that is making hundreds among coal miners, and spread by them and the infected product of the mines to every city and hamlet of the land, but we propose to fight the disease by forcing miners to stay above ground long enough each day to enjoy the beneficial effects of poison gases and powder smoke which they are compelled to breathe during their working hours. "It has been demonstrated scientifically that a miner can work six hours a day for five days a week and suffer only a minimum damage to his health, provided he spends much of his spare time in God's great outdoors, amid the flowers and in the sunshine. "For these reasons the miners' organization has decided to fight for life of its members and the very life of the nation by eradicating consumption from among the miners, thus guaranteeing the public coal that is not laden with germs from some overworked miner's lungs. Are you with us to help save America from the white man's scourge? If so, get behind our demands, and buy your winter's supply of coal in summer. A lot more plausible, truthful propaganda of the same sort would do a world more good than just the mere statement of the miners' demands, without explanation of the reasons back of them.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE COAL STRIKE.

When the federal court at Indianapolis ordered the officials of the Mine Workers to reveal the names of the officials they obeyed the mandate to the letter. In the result directed to local officers there were no unnecessary explanations and no suggestions as to what the local officers should talk. When the contemptuous order reached local miners, it was discovered that no directions were contained in the notification requiring the men to return to work, so a great many refused to return. Then, too, the strike cancellation order did not contain the seal of the union nor the written signatures of the international officers, and anybody who knows anything about the conduct of affairs of labor organizations knows that communications without the seal of the union are not official. Further than this, the court did not require the cancellation order to bear the union label, and anybody who knows union affairs knows that material not bearing the union mark is not permitted in the narrow precincts of union rooms. And with another deficiency is noted, in that the notification was not written on the official letter head of the United Mine Workers, but upon blank sheets of paper, which blank paper no doubt did not carry the water-mark indicating it was made in a union paper mill. If the union men were disposed to accept as official communications with all these deficiencies, they could be too easily misled.

EDUCATION VERSUS PIGS.

Difficulties presented to the government in its attempt to give returned service men what they want, not as a body, but as individuals, is made clear by the story of one soldier who came back with a limp resulting from a Hun bullet. He declared he did not want any vocational education. "I'll swap your education for a pair of pigs," says this soldier. He probably knows that education rarely uplifts the individual from performing certain useful labors, but pigs, if given half a chance will grow into profits faster than a surplus can be piled up at any sort of vocational employment. Viscountess Astor objects to being called "The Nancy," even by her loving husband. She also insists she shall not be satisfied with a mere 3000 majority in her race for parliament—but the labor party of England has a candidate who don't lose lung ago has been labeled a wicked hedonist, or at least as being animated only by low, selfish motives. Lady Astor calls the outworn slogan of American politics, "You know why is the laboring man's friend," in her speeches, and perhaps the voters do know.

OIL TO BE FUEL FOR BRITISH SHIPS SOON

Nation Hopes to Win Back Place at Head of Shipping World by New Economic Move.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—England hopes to win back her predominant place in the shipping world through oil-burning steamships, which will be far more economical to operate than coal-burning vessels. Quickly and unobtrusively, the British shipping companies in this country are exchanging their fleets of oil-burners. This increased cost of British coal is a further incentive.

The change in the most "radical" of the steamship companies is the fact that the sailing vessel and the fast clipper of the last century.

Herein the economy: The Maritime-English largest steamship, a coal burner requiring 312 cubic tons of coal and stokers; a ship of the same size burning oil would need but 22 tons, and the stokers would be more efficient but, what's more important, more cargo space.

It is expected that within two months to change a coal burning ship into an oil burner if the necessary machinery is available.

The shipping companies are feeling their capital, brains and energy to restoring their former pre-eminence and they hope to ride to success on the new oil.

The revolution of Admiral Fisher as to the necessity of oil-burners in the future of the navy applies for all warships, which then were not capable of diving and operating in submerged conditions. It is the oil engine for warships to go.

Admiral Fisher says coal-burning warships would be an useless and wasteful expenditure of hundreds of years ago in any future war.

The discovery of both shale oil and petroleum in the latter part of the century and the former in Norfolk, will be a great aid to this country in the future in the manufacture of an efficient war fleet and commercial ships.
