WORKERS AND FARMERS FOR CONGRESS

The American Federation of Labor has frankly announced its intention of taking a very active part in the coming national campaign. True to its traditions, it is not interested itself in any third party movement, and not even asking any choice between the two dominant parties, but is aiming to elect, within each party, as many men as possible whom it can trust to look after its own interests.

The official organ of the Federation opens the campaign with an editorial headed "Wanted—200 Workers and Farmers in Congress," declaring that the wage-earners and the farmers have the necessary votes and are also imbued with the "spirit of democracy" to control this government of ours, and that "in a real democracy the workers and the farmers would control the government," because they constitute so large a majority.

Whatever may be thought of this radical suggestion, there is no denying that the two classes mentioned deserve more representation than they have. It is quite possible, too, that a greater proportion of the industrial workers in Congress would be a good thing for this country.

As the labor men point out, the lawyers alone have 200 members at present. This is a number out of all proportion to the relative size and importance of the legal profession, and far beyond the necessary requirements of Congress itself for legal talent.

It is one of the curious things about American politics that our legislation should be so completely in the hands of lawyers. These lawyers, too, are as a rule not particularly brilliant members of their profession. They often have only one visible qualification—the power of public speech. This gift, which the American people have always expected and demanded in their public men, is by no means so highly rated as it used to be. There is a growing distrust of plausible speakers, a suspicion that a man who talks easily in public may really have little worth saying.

The voters may really decide to send a few dozen more "workers and farmers" to Congress this year.

EXCHANGE-RATE BENEFITS

It is time to get rid of a lot of nonsense regarding this remarkable drop in the rate of foreign exchange. From a common-sense point of view, it is a very good thing—good for the United States, and, though bitter medicine, good for Europe.

How does it help the United States? By diminishing the volume of exports, thereby throwing more goods into the American market, thus lowering prices.

The factor in keeping American prices so high has been the draining out of this country of so large a volume of commodities for the foreign market. When foreign money is worth so much less than American money, that makes prices so much higher abroad that the foreigners cannot afford to buy our goods. Thus they are eventually distributed here, and in accordance with the law of supply and demand, becoming plentiful, they become cheaper. That benefits all consumers. Exporters may complain about it for a while, but few of them will lose anything but the speculative profits they hoped to make abroad over and above a legitimate profit. Manufacturers need not lose anything. There is demand enough in this country to absorb about all the goods of almost every kind, that can be produced for years to come, and a little relaxing of prices will enormously stimulate this demand.

How does it help Europe? By forcing Europe to get down to work and speed up her own production. That will enable her more nearly to take care of her own wants, and when she gets her industries properly re-established, to export larger quantities of goods to this country. Then she must start paying us what she owes. She cannot pay us in gold, because she has none. She cannot pay us in paper, because we will not take her paper except at a rate ruinous to her. The only way she can pay us is in goods. And the more goods she sends us, the less war debt she will be burdened with, and the quicker everybody will get back to a normal basis.

We will gain, too, by the payment of that debt. It will make us financially stronger. Moreover, we can use Europe's raw or half-manufactured materials to advantage in our own industries, and the additional importations will help reduce our living expenses little by little without necessarily hurting anybody.

THOSE "WANTED" GERMANS
There is one very simple way in which the problem of those German officers demanded by the Allies might be solved. The men "wanted" might give themselves up. It would be the honorable thing to do. The German government agreed, in signing the peace treaty, that if would surrender for trial all officers charged with war offenses. As loyal German citizens, it might be supposed that honorable men would co-operate with their government to this end, instead of embarrassing it. Moreover, from a military standpoint their self-surrender would be logical. The peace treaty grew out of the armistice, and the armistice itself was a German surrender. Those same offenders, in the natural course of events, would have had to surrender in the field if the Allies had pressed the war to the bitter end.

It would be a good thing for the offenders, and for Germany. Criminals who put no obstacles in the way of a fair trial generally get off easier. Moreover, their voluntary surrender would go far to re-establish the good faith of the German government and people, in no way could they better serve their country. But will they do it? They will not.

ANOTHER SCRAP OF PAPER

One of the most interesting angles to the German extradition dispute is the reported action of the German government in annulling the financial agreement it had recently concluded with Belgium. This step, it is announced from Berlin, has been made necessary because of Belgium's participation in the extradition demand.

Here is another curious problem in German psychology and statecraft. Germany, of course, had agreed in the peace treaty to surrender whatever military leaders should be required by the Allies to answer for crimes contrary to the law of nations. The Allies have presented such a list, which, though larger than most people expected, is said to be backed by strong evidence in every case. Belgium, as one of the Allies, has naturally participated in that demand. Whereupon Germany takes umbrage at Belgium for assuming that Germany would do what Germany agreed to do, and Germany proceeds to turn her latest treaty with Belgium into another "scrap of paper."

Don't jump at the assumption that the poor emperor of Austria has enough to live on even with his salary reduced to $750,000. Maybe it's German money.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Decker of Kimberly were Artesian City visitors, calling at the C. M. Arstein home.

"The Latest Capture Hunt of Arstein"
Last Sunday some of Artesian promising young men went for a hike and while climbing a hill south of the city they saw something lying in the rocks and as they looked it commenced to take shape, shook its head and showed its teeth. The young men suddenly became inquisitive for home and mamma and they made a home run arriving at the city they spread the news of a big cougar or Mountain Lion in the colors, and they rounded up our cities greatest sportsman, Mr. Ben Marshall, who armed himself with a Winchester rifle an automatic revolver and a butcher knife and with one of the boys to act as a guide they proceeded to the head of the Cougar and after several hours of hard scaling and climbing they arrived at the place and in sight of the game. After Mr. Marshall had taken several shots and the lion roared standing they proceeded to rush him with the butcher knife prepared to get a fine pet but to their great surprise it was not a lion at all, but a hare, that had crouched in some six months or more ago, so the sportsman had a long hike back home.

Mrs. C. M. Arstein was a caller at the Hicks home. Donnie and Helen Marshall were visitors at the Worthington home in Hazelton.

TO PERMIT NO CASH TO LEAVE COUNTRY

Departing Folks Get Receipt for Their Money—Enough Left to Take Them to Vienna

By FRANK E. MASON.

PRAGUE, Feb. 21.—Czechoslovak customs officials meanwhile American citizens passing their money with the loving care usually bestowed by politicians on a dangerous murderer.

The Central European powers are highly jealous of the exchange value of their money, and to keep their currency from becoming cheap in neighboring nations, they permit only a small amount of money to be carried out of their country.

The Czechoslovaks don't believe in doing things by halves. So if you are unfortunate enough to bring American dollars or French francs into Bohemia, you leave them there in exchange for a paper receipt, taking with you only enough money to get to Vienna; debts of your immediate destination.

At the Czechoslovak frontier, I had turned my pockets inside out and impressed the stolid customs official that I really had only just enough money to get to Vienna. I stepped back to watch the third deserter.

My companion, a New York business man, produced his pocketbook. It had only Czechoslovak crowns. Without a word, the Czech suddenly turned forward both his hands to the Yankee's breast pocket of the American coat, with different government detective "irritating" a refund for a fee.

"Do you think that is the way to pay for a citizen of a country from whom you are trying to borrow money?" I demanded of the official. "Our country has to protect itself," returned the Czech.

"Aschur," American, D. Gara, of Cleveland, saved himself from the same humiliating treatment by producing a paper receipt for the military of finance, permitting him to take American dollars through Bohemia. It took him five hours and a trip through four different government buildings in Prague to get this permit.

When they finally shook the dust of Bohemia from their feet, the latter of having straggled at the Woodrow Wilson station in Prague was forgotten by these late Americans in the eager of their treatment at the border.

Secretary Wilson Urges Home Building

NEWARK, N. J., Feb. 21.—At the first annual dinner of the Real Estate Board of Newark at the Hobart Hotel, Secretary of Labor Wilson delivered the principal address. Speaking on the own-your-own-home campaign, he said:

"One of the principal reasons for the adoption of the slogan is that we believe that homebuilding can find no judgment in the mind of the men who are owners of their own homes. High rentals are not due to the cost of building, but to the demand. The only relief is in overbuilding, building more homes. Hence our slogan, 'Own your own home and build now.'"

CARLAUX ON WITNESS STAND

Former French Emigrant Defends Against Charges of Plotting Against Country

PARIS, Feb. 21.—(Formal denial that he had favored a "pretentious peace" was made on the witness stand today by former Premier Jos Carillaux, who had told the Chamber of Deputies and the press that he had favored the armistice with Germany, but that he had talked freely with Count Jaimes Almondo, who was afterwards proved to be a German agent.

"I not only desired to advocate a policy of peace, but I was also a policy of peace," Carillaux said.

Carillaux was questioned at length by Leon Bourgeois, who was president of the session and also president of the trial court. In response Mr. Carillaux admitted that, during his stay in Paris, he had talked freely with Count Jaimes Almondo, who was afterwards proved to be a German agent.

"I do not know that Almondo was a German," said the defendant. "I suppose I was too confident."

Two Kinds of Dental Ethics

UNDER old-style ethics, a dentist who advertised was a quack. The only way a dentist could be ethical was to sit tight, say nothing and keep the masses ignorant.

Under new-style ethics, it is a dentist's highest duty to advertise. dentistry so the people may know all about the dangers of bad teeth and the blessings of good teeth. The new style is followed by Registered Dentists who use the E. R. Parker System in their practice.

Under this System you get better dentistry for less money—dentistry without the fear of pain—dentistry with fewer visits—dentistry where each patient is treated by a man who is skilled in the kind of dental work each patient needs.

Which kind of ethics do you think is best—the kind that tells you nothing or the kind that tells you everything?

CHANGES ALL OVER TOWN

Twin Falls Daily Times

Oliver T. Brown says: "When George changed the cherry tree he did it because it was the best way of getting at all the berries and picking out the best ones without loss of time. If George were here today and wanted a job, he, a furnished man, a home or anything else, he would advertise in the Classified Columns because he would know it was the quickest way of getting the most response and picking out the best ones. He would advertise in the paper that is 'first in the hands of his fellow countrymen.'"
