FINDS "BABY" BROTHER AFTER 50-YEAR HUNT

Tale From Colorado That Proves That Truth is Often Stranger Than Fiction.

That truth is often stranger than fiction is again exemplified in the story of Artie Warren, a young man of Rifle, Colo., who has just returned here on a ten day's visit with his mother, Mrs. S. Clark of Twin Falls, following the death of her half a century, during which the older brother, Warren, had continued a fruitless hunt for his younger brother. In 1853 the mother of the Clark brother died at the family home in Bureau county, Illinois, when Arthur was three years of age. At about the same time a Mrs. Watts living in a nearby village, lost her only son in death. Madelon Clark, father of Artie, at that time, as he was unable to care for the younger one, readily consented to the betrothal of Mrs. Watts, taking Arthur to rear.

The understanding was that Arthur was to grow up at the Watts home, and at twenty-one he was to receive a horse and saddle and $500 in money. But fate intervened, and he never received the money and was never known to his own father.

Shortly after Mrs. Clark's death the Watts family moved to Kansas, taking Arthur Clark with them. They resided at Holton. In the meantime the Clark moved to Ottumwa, Iowa. Arthur Clark's father lost trace of the Watts family, an easy matter in those days of slow communication.

When Madelon Clark, the father, died some years later relatives were unable to find any trace of Arthur Clark.

It was not until after young Clark had become a grown man and married that he learned his name was Watts. On her deathbed Mrs. Watts summoned Arthur and told him the truth as far as she could, but was unable to advise him of the whereabouts of his kinsfolk.

Eventually Arthur "Watts" located his life, reared a family and four married daughters and one son living. During these years Warren Clark had been vainly searching for his "baby" brother. Only a few weeks ago came the first definite clue to connect Arthur Clark with the Watts family. This clue led to the tracing of the Watts family to Holton, Kan., and Arthur "Watts" was finally found living here in Rifle.
