TREATIES NOT RATIFIED

Americans learn with surprise that the treaties resulting from the Washington armistice conference are not yet in effect and are not likely to go for some time to come. They do not become operative until all of the signatory powers have ratified them and exchanged ratifications and the United States is the only one of the five big powers that has taken the necessary steps. Japan has ratified the Shantung agreement, and is expected to ratify the important five-power naval reduction treaty and four-power Pacific treaty at any time. But when Great Britain, France and Italy will ratify is problematical. There is even a possibility that the United States may never do so at all, for that country seems strange in its attitude toward the League of Nations. It is a kind of international affair, and the United States is the only one of the five big powers that has taken the necessary steps.

MURDERERS

Four thousand men convicted of murder have been executed in America since 1890.

Some were innocent and, about them, Alexander Herman writes an interesting series of articles.

Modern America has an average of at least 2,000 murderers a year. There probably were just many thirty years ago, though never discovered. Crime of all kinds is harder to cover, up than in the old days.

On the basis of 9,000 murders a year, the score since 1890 would be 1,000 executions, 250,000 murderers escaping justice and 1,000 more.

A considerable percentage of the latter go to prisons or criminal insane asylums. But we are concerned only with actual execution.

The execution of a few innocents attracts more attention than the escape, from death penalty, of a great army of guilty.

It is to use an old expression, a sign of the times.

It shows a national desire for justice and an increasing valuation placed on man's life.

It is not long since accused men, under the Napoleonic criminal code, were presumed guilty until they proved, themselves, innocent.

It is the other way now—presumed innocent until proved guilty.

An amazing system of safeguards has been built up to prevent conviction of "the wrong person."

Despite all these safeguards, an innocent person is occasionally convicted and executed for a murder committed by some one else, as long as we have capital punishment, innocent people necessarily will be executed. This is inevitable, by the law of averages, if we refuse working the law of exceptions.

There are loopholes and weaknesses in every system devised by the brain of man.

The only comforting thing is that the systems slowly but surely become fairer and less apt to make the innocent pay the penalty of being guilty.
