THE ATTACK ON WEEKS

There are some officials at Washington who, because of their isolation from the people and their thick cloak of officialdom, have no consciousness of the trend of public opinion, and are prone to be pulled along by it. Secretary of War Weeks seems to be one of them. He is now under fire because of an address he made before the Western Reserve university where he attacked the "Red, White and Victorious" laws. Senator Cooper, republican, of Kansas, has recently written Weeks to task for his utterances and declared that they were based on the institutions of this republic warranted the president demanding his resignation as head of the war department.

Naturally, the result of the Indiana, the Pennsylvania and the Iowa primary elections should make many of the stampeding and reactionary advocates run to cover. And their attempt to shield themselves is usually done under the process of condemning the people because they desire the right to express themselves, which the primary gives them.

If Secretary Weeks is against the primary and free expression by the people, he has that right, but he should not be permitted to embarras the administration with which he is associated by shouting it from the housetop. He has well earned the title given him by Senator Cooper of "moss-back" and "anachronism".

The opposition evidenced by Secretary Weeks indicates a pessimism that is becoming to a cabinet officer and disturbing to the rest of the country. To be sure, he explained that he spoke as a private citizen exercising his privilege of free speech and not as a government official; but such an explanation falls short of revealing the distress, as private citizens who are high government officials should, of really doing themselves.

Franklin Mr. Weeks, who was formerly but is not now a member of the legislative branch of the government, looks optimistically when he asserted that, in the public mind, the legislative body of the national government may not have been as good as it is today, but it is doubtful if it is not better.

It is this kind of attitude in the government that is responsible for the increasing demand to have a constitutional amendment.

Not should the secretary be too sure that in his attempt to improve the work of the fathers by amending the constitution he stands, as he failed, singularly. Hardly had the work of the fathers been finished until the country attempted to improve on it and succeeded to the extent of ten amendments by December 15, 1911. The eleventh amendment went into effect January 29, 1791 and the twelfth, September 25, 1804. By this time the constitution had more amendments than original articles, which were only seven. Still changing conditions caused the people to feel that it was inadequate, so on February 1, 1865, the thirteenth amendment was adopted. The fourteenth was proclaimed July 14, 1868 and the fifteenth on March 30, 1870. After this the amendment took a rest until February 26, 1913, when the sixteenth amendment was adopted, followed by the seventeenth, May 31, 1913, the eighteenth January 29, 1919, and the nineteenth August 20, 1919. Altogether there has been a good deal of tinkering with the constitution—perhaps too much—but the government still lives.

Indeed, the country has undergone some pretty severe strains and has come out of them not only triumphantly, but stronger than ever. Present conditions are not all that could be desired, but they are too good for Mr. Weeks to surround himself with them and impose it on a group of graduates—Exclam.

We are mighty careful about our heels, but singularly careless about our sole-soul.

Experience is the mirror into which youth may not look. Age, alone, confers that privilege.

Notice to All Water Users

Owing to the extraordinary demand on our City Water works system for irrigation water during the present hot, dry weather, the capacity of our filter plant is overtaxed. In order to protect our supply of filtered water, it will be necessary to restrict the use of filtered city water for irrigation purposes to alternate days of the month.

Effective at once, and continuing in force until further notice, consumers at even numbered street addresses will use city water for irrigation only on the even dates of the month. Consumers at odd numbered street addresses will use city water for irrigation only on the odd dates of the month.

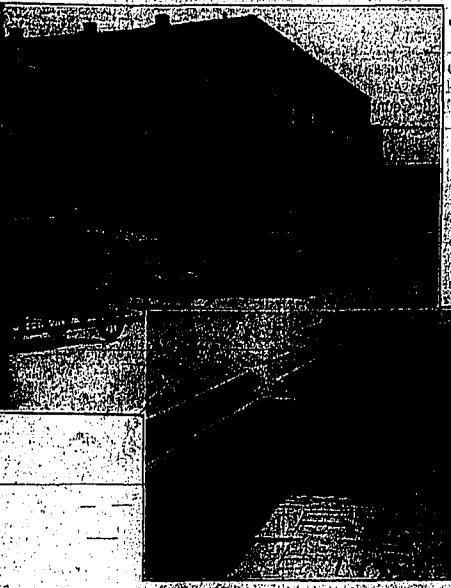

Example: No. 160 Fourth Ave. East will use water for irrigation on June 29th, 30th, July 2nd, etc.

No. 161 State Ave. North will use water for irrigation on June 29th, July 1st, July 3rd, etc.

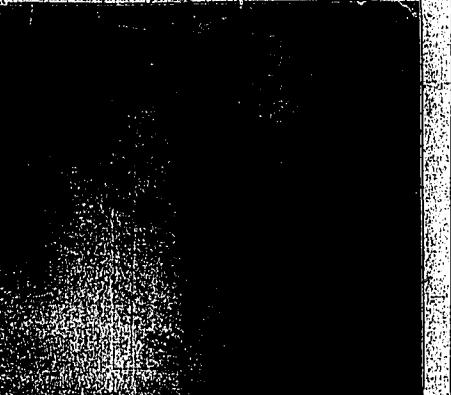

These restrictions do not apply to the use of domestic water, nor to public buildings.

RIDGE IS SCENE OF BATTLE

DYNAMITED, SAFE AND RUINS

Above is what was left of the demolished offices of the Southern Illinois Coal company at the mine. After the fighting ceased the large safe shown in the foreground and said to have contained considerable money, was opened by dynamite and the office building burned to its foundation.

C. L. Koenig, American Coal Co.'s manager, STANFORD, was the first of those killed and to receive the services of a coroner's inquest of circumstances.

Mrs. W. H. Craven and children of the family are spending the week at Hollister, Calif., in search of her husband's name. It is very convenient for tourists to get information.
