Twin Falls Hopes to Successfully Dispute Hansen's Ball-Claims

"The champion of the Twin Falls baseball team," he said, "was president of the Cardinals" and Miller, Hansen's manager, was a 16-7 winner last night. Hansen, however, maintained that he was the first time in the history of Major League baseball that his club had been beaten by an assembly of players from another club.

He added: "I am not afraid to say that the Cardinals are the best ball club that is making a real fight for the National League pennant. New York and Boston are far ahead of us, but we are the third best ball club."

He said: "I am not afraid to say that the Cardinals will contest that right all the way."

THE SCOREBOARD

Yesterdays' games: Jake Dauber tripled in the ninth inning and scored the run which gave the Red Sox a 3-2 win over the Yankees. The Red Sox won with two runs. The Red Sox beat Pittsburgh's winning streak of 11 games.

Jugie Hornsby, all his 20th homer, hit his 21st home run, but the Cardinals lost to the New York Giants 1-0. The Cardinals' triplets were Carl Hubbell, Eddie Cicotte and Eddie Kahan.

Three starts in the ninth inning by the Cardinals' pitchers gave the Red Sox a 3-2 victory over the Yankees. The Red Sox won with two runs.

Six runs in the second inning by the Cardinals' pitchers gave the Red Sox a 3-2 victory over the Yankees. The Red Sox won with two runs.

NOT EDITORIAL OPINION

The signed contributed editorials appearing in the Times during the temporary absence of the editor, like all contributed editorials, in no way bind the editorial policy of the paper. Once when Colonel Roosevelt was contributing editor of the Outlook, commenting on a certain minister who was also interested in natural history he said "He is a great theologian but a poor naturalist." In the same number Lyman Abbott, the editor, said of the same man in a regular editorial "He is a great naturalist, but a poor theologian." — J. D. W.

HARDING TAKES USUAL SLUMP

BY JAMES D. WHALEN

It is characteristic of President Harding that at the time when definite action is needed, he suddenly announces that he will let the railroads and the union fight it out until public life is so badly crippled that something must be done. The early dispatch of James T. Kohlert, Washington correspondent of the United Press on this point is illuminating. He says:

"Balked again in his latest peace move, President Harding has decided to let the railroads and the 400,000 striking shop crafts men fight it out temporarily."

"So long, as the railroad executives demonstrate their ability to maintain service somewhere normal, Harding will keep hands off. If the transportation system shows signs of breaking down and both sides remain obdurate, the president will ask congress to sanction federal seizure of the roads."

"The foregoing constitutes the present program of the administration, it was learned today following the collapse last night of the negotiations between railroad executives, leaders of the 16 railroad unions and the administration on the second—Harding's peace proposal."

In offering solutions which were at first accepted and later rejected by themselves and rejected at all times by the executives, Harding showed good judgment and a sound comprehension of the situation, and his solution should have been accepted by both sides. But it wasn't. That it might not be should have been clear from first, and it seems to actually have been clear to the president. He called the members of the lower house back from vacation and it was authoritatively announced that he would ask that laws be passed enabling him to take charge of the roads should he take them over. Power to take them over had already been granted to the executive under the statute of 1916. All this looked brave and business-like. Senator Canfield was said to have in preparation a measure providing for the regulation needed; Democrats and Republicans of both houses were quoted as being ready to co-operate with the president.

And then came the slump. Prosecution was threatened with the authority of President Harding "against any conspiracy" to stop the strike. This law in itself is a good thing, but prosecution against those who walk out on this ground will undoubtedly tend to force the issue and precipitate the general demoralization of business. The chances are that any conspiracy of the sort is purely local. The big four railroad heads have lost control of the situation. They doubtless want to hold their men in line in order to get credit for any movement made. But there have been so many outlaw strikes in the past couple of years that it must be evident that here and there their hold is loosening and this breaking of bonds tends to industrial chaos under present conditions. A threat that will force this issue when others are being made to settle can hardly help the situation. The fact that the president is apt to waver at the last minute does not impress things any.

Harding has wriggled all over the field on the League of Nations. His pre-election utterances pleased Taft and Burial and Wickenden and Johnson. His later action satisfied none. In the present case, the country would feel better if he had received the assurance this morning that the president was preparing a ringing message setting out definite angostions to congress.

He may do that yet if somebody stronger than he can get his ear at the last minute. An announcement to that effect may come before night. What the negotiations, if any, will be will depend on the last man who gets to him with force and influence enough to impress him.

It is this miserable characteristic of a personally honest, good-natured man, filling places where good nature should be, simply a supplement to lack bone, which will render any policy he may recommend of doubtful value if adopted. It is this which makes government, ruled at this time unusually doubtful in its results even if necessary. It is this which makes it unfortunate that the railroad executives and the men did not get together on plan of action or accept Harding really good recommendations.

Nine-Car Special to
Moscow, on Sept. 16

A nine-car special train, going through from Pocatello to Moscow in twenty-four hours without change will carry the students from another school, the University of Idaho, to Moscow. The train will make up at 10:10 a.m. at Pocatello Saturday morning. September 1. A three-car sleeping train, the "Silver Swallow," will accommodate the students on the Twin Falls branch.

Students who are not presently enrolled at the university, 20 graduates of Twin Falls high school, will be accommodated in the same car. The cost of the round trip will be $15.00.

Ability to Help Others.

It is the desire of the school to bring in the disabled who can not go to school.

NORTHCILLE SLEEPS AFTER

George and Northcille worked together without friction, despite the fact that when the German break came and the crisis was over, relations became strained.

The cause of their break probably was the impossibility of two such independent and diverse men ever getting along. Northcille's extreme desire for self-preservation Northcille attributed their difference to the fact that he could not recognize his minority in the interest of greater national efficiency. Lord Northcille, however, was willing to yield to Northcille's effort to dictate to the prime minister the name of a peace committee.

After the war, Northcille began to show the effects of the strain under which he had been laboring. He was compelled to give up his office, his physician to rest, but he disregarded their advice. Eventually he was persuaded to take a little respite and he returned to England.

Northcille turned special correspondent for news at all the stopping places. He broke down under the strain and was forced to seek medical treatment. His health rapidly improved. He was soon affected and was soon well again. But he refused once more to listen to the doctor.

He became very erratic. He went into Germany, disputed to study conditions, and was unable to get the action of his subordinates on the Daily Mail in agreement with other publishers to reduce wages. Two editors of the Daily Mail started libel suits against him. His condition deteriorated rapidly. He was finally permitted to give up all work and was admitted to medical treatment. His health rapidly improved. He was soon affected and was soon well again. But he refused once more to listen to the doctor.
