RUBIN'S GEAR

Ruhr Brutality Is Greatly Exaggerated, Says French Most of Those Stories Are German Propaganda; French Are Trying to Create Harmony in Occupied Zone, Is Claim.

(Copyright 1923, by U. P.)
DUSSELDORF, March 1—Despite a stream of stories regarding the "brutality" of the occupation, stories entitled untruthfully by German propaganda bureaus which have been found to be exaggerated, a trip by Ruhr troops quickly demonstrates that the occupation is not carried out very lightly on the position as occupiers go.

One of the remarkable features of this French venture in the carelessness of the troops with respect to rights and liberties of the inhabitants as far as possible, they avoid interference.

In general, the attitude of troops toward inhabitants and vice versa is one of studied haughty indifference, each contemptuously ignoring the other. A common sight is the French troops marching through the heart of German cities, and the streets were crowded with the soldiers marching with business like men, looking straight ahead making not the slightest attention to the people on the sidewalks.

On their part the Germans carefully ignored the presence of the marching columns or stared fixedly as they continued on their way.

Because of German troops and who looked fixedly in the other direction, children, however, aware of what the heads of the troops as though the column were a circus parade. At each halt a jaunting group would play Prax and other music, and the marching column would be untroubled on the machine gun carts.

It is understood that the troops have the complete make the occupation as favorable as possible to the people. Aside from humanity there are other things which the French are doing.

First, one of the main objects of the French and Belgians is to win the good will of the inhabitants in the hope they will cooperate and tolerate the occupation.

Success of the occupation largely depends upon this factor.

Second, consideration of the power of the world public opinion inclines the Germans to be more lenient with their plans.

Further, there is a business which has been found to be profitable in the Ruhr.

There is a contrast between this occupation and that of French troops by Germany during war time.

RAILWAYS WEST OF MISSISSIPPI
TO BE MERGED

All Railroads West of Mississippi to Be Consolidated Into Four Gigantic Systems In Proposal of Hale Holden; Each System Would Operate About 30,000 Miles of Line.

WASHINGTON, March 1—Consolidation of all the railroads west of the Mississippi into four gigantic systems was proposed to the Interstate Commerce commission by Hale Holden, president of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railway.

Holden told his plan as a substitute for the consolidation of all the railroads into one system. His plan contemplates seven systems in western territory.

The principal part of each group is set forth by Holden under Group 1—Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, Great Northern, Northern Pacific, Colorado and Southern, Chicago and Great Western and Kansas City Southern.

Group 2—Santa Fe, Chicago and Northwestern, St. Louis-Southwestern and Western Pacific.

Group 3—Southern Pacific, Rock Island, El Paso and Southwestern, Missouri Pacific, Missouri, Kansas & Texas.

Group 4—Union Pacific system, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, St. Louis-San Francisco System.

Each of these smaller roads would include within its territory the proposed systems. Each system would operate about 30,000 miles of line.

Holden stated that the Burlington, Northern Pacific, Great Northern and Colorado Southern were organized originally to consolidate if authority of the commission were given and urged that this permission be granted.

He said that a large number of the lines were operated at a loss and that a re-organization could be made in carrying out this important project of the transportation act.

Congressman Cochran introduced last night a bill to merge the railroads.

AMBASSADOR HARVEY THROWS ANOTHER BOMB
INTO BRITISH RANKS

Asks British to Refrain Before Not-Consenting America's Demand for Payment of Debt.

LONDON, March 1—Again Ambassador Harvey has let loose the force of controversy, this time by a speech at the "Pittsburgh" dinner to the British debt financing commission.

In plain words, the American ambassador told the Anglo-American committee that the present British government would do well to refrain to meet famous Harbord note, in which the ambassador for Great Britain declared that most of the debt owed to America had been borrowed for Italy.

Harvey said a great proportion of the amount lent by the United States to Britain had been used by the latter for clothing and food. He said the United States carried a heavy burden, that thirty per cent of the debtors were of British stock and that he had $7,000,000,000.

The Harbord note, Harvey said, implied that the United States would only make advances for France. Britain would back the notes, but he said was untrue, and he hoped that Britain would explicitly say so.

CONSTRUCTION
OVER AMERICA

Department of Labor Reports That Great Improvement in Business and Industry Generally is Opening Up All Over the Country; Unemployment Will Be Absorbed.

WASHINGTON, March 1—A bleak doom in construction work with a gloomy outlook for the industry generally is opening up throughout the country, according to the report of the department published by the labor department today.

This revival will largely absorb all unemployment and will result in a decrease in some sections, the report indicates.

Only negligible unemployment exists in the country, especially in the industrial belt, and this is expected to be entirely absorbed within the next few months.

The most optimistic reports come from the middle west with generally no more than a slight improvement in the last encouraging report was from South Carolina, where unemployment conditions were described as only fair.

Labor shortages of varying degrees are noted in several sections, especially in agriculture in the west, northwest and south, where reports are received.

Illinois and Ohio have launched especially ambitious building programs and Minnesota and Indiana reported a very optimistic outlook for the construction of the season.

The shortage of farm labor this season is predicted to be very acute, the report says. It is expected that the farm labor shortage in Kansas City will be the largest of the year and that larger movements from the farms to the cities this year and normally, occurring in the latter part of the year.

A serious situation is seen by the department in the case of the large wheat crop expected this year. The supply of regular farm labor here, last year, it is feared, will not meet the demand at any time.

SENATORS AFRAID TO VOTE CONVICTIONS

WASHINGTON, March 1—The votes of United States senators are controlled by fear of political conviction, Senator Charles McNary, republican, declared today, in one of the most remarkable "saw snags" in the history of the Senate.

McNary, who retires to private life next Sunday, in delivering his farewell address, severely arraigned the senate for its failure to convict those who have been afraid to vote on the case.

We are glad to learn that some of our Twin Falls friends are growing fat on California oil investments and only wish that more of the residents of the Magic City had some such an income.

The Twin Falls telephone office was quite badly disturbed Wednesday afternoon about 5 o'clock and from that time on night by calls which always said "Give me a light-five" and some how the Old Home Town and spend their good cash.

It begins to look as if we might only have three candidates to select from at the election in Twin Falls. Then again you can never tell, we may have three tickets instead.

Diversified farming and growing of livestock will do more towards bringing back prosperity to this tract than any other thing. We are glad to note that farmers and city property owners are falling in with this idea which we have been advocating for several months as the only solution of the farming industry in northern Idaho.

Crack Athletes Establish Four New Indoor Marks in Recent Record Breaking New York Meet

Presenting the record breakers of 1923. Recently in New York these star athletes surprised the talent by setting some new figures in four different events.

Loren Marchionni, the holder of many indoor and outdoor records, established a new indoor record for the 60 yard sprint with a mark of 1:2.6 seconds, which is 1/10 second better than the previous mark.

Jimmy Connolly, the Georgetown star, ran the 2-1/2 mile in 2:46.2, beating the old mark of 2:46.2.

The Fate of Nations Decided In the Kitchen

ventrals the marks of the world were ransacked to provide luxuries for the city's tables. For the first time in Western Europe the art of cooking came to be studied carefully and even scientific. But for all that the best utensils the Romans possessed were iron, heavy, clumsy, difficult to clean. The fests of Rome's wealthy men, however, which sufficient food to feed thousands was wasted, became a byword. One of these huge banquets, given by Lucullus, is said to have cost the equivalent of half a million dollars. Just a million dollars for a dinner! No wonder Rome declined and fell.

Would You Have Liked Steak a la Hunc?

That who was to take the place of Rome had held the power that had been hers? There were two rival peoples, each of whom had the chance to establish supremacy. One was the Hun, led by Attila, called "the scourge of God." The other was a more civilized people, but their cooking was not on a par with their skill in metal work, in machinery, in chemistry, and in other agencies. They were a people of very few foods, lamb, beef and dairy formed their principal articles of diet—all good, healthful foodstuffs, to be sure, but not to be compared with the well rounded diet that the Germanic people enjoyed. It would have been simple for a culinary genius to prepare which folk would cooperate. In 722, on the fields of Poitiers, Charles Martel and the Frankish army defeated the invaders who were glad to recross the Pyrenees into Spain.

From then on the history of Western Europe was the history of the different Germanic kingdoms established there and their struggle against the other Germanic invaders from the north—the Danes and Normans. It was a struggle between similar peoples with similar ancestries, and enjoying similar kinds of food, and it is hard to see where the Anglo-Saxons, the Danes, and the Normans (Normans) united in a common front. The later tribes amalgamated into the nations that we know today. In this time, however, we find a strange thing. The other Germanic peoples, which folk would cooperate, in fact, the Germanic people developed its own school of cooking. When the Spanish and the French and the Dutch settled, the proud fruits were especially proud of their kitchen ware, but no modern own diet—with this difference, that with the Persians the good things of life were confined to a very few persons, while among the Greeks every free-born citizen lived upon a fare that was wholesome and stimulating. The Athenian who applauded the plays of Sophocles and Euripides was not content with the bare, meagre fare of the Roman, and with the bread-dipped-in-oil diet of the Egyptian, he demanded well cooked meats. A variety of vegetables (artichokes were his favorite) and sweet such as honey, figs and dates.

When the seat of power was transferred from Greece to Rome, well cooked, well flavored food continued to be held in high esteem. Beef, lamb, mutton, beans, peas and other foodstuffs developed the sturdy instincts that composed the entire western world. But when Rome became all-powerful a gradual change took place in her methods of cooking. Rich, heavy sauces came to be favored, and adulterated, single meats and habits finally drove the Romans out of Spain. Spanish cooking was very rich as we know it today, highly seasoned, pungent, peppery, and not hardly the result of a steady diet. That same year for Columbus discovered America, and the following three hundred years most of the important wars are concerned in some way with the desire of the different nations to obtain possessions in the New World.

Indians Good Fighters But Mediocre Cooks

No one seems to have considered the diets of the Indians at all, and the Indians were unable to protect their native country. Of course they did not have fire arms, but even after they acquired those they were no match for the whites. The truth is that the Indians, though they gave us two important vegetables—corn and the potato—were not cooks at all in the modern sense of the term. Though they had some permanent dwellings, they did not cook at all. It was campfire cooking, much like what boy scouts do today. They were usually very primitive, and their cooking was such as mannaled ware utensils. As a matter of fact, the colonists themselves did not possess them. Among their most cherished possessions brought with them from Europe were cleaning pots and pans, but to make them shine required hours of work and without the aid of soap. The Dutch settled, the proud fruits were especially proud of their kitchen ware, but no modern meals, there everyone would sit after dinner until bedtime came. The one big advance that was made in the kitchen was the introduction of "enameled" ware about 1810. This gave the housewife kitchen utensils that were practically perfect and far superior to anything she had known before.

Kitchen Still Is Center of Home

Today, although the kitchen has been forced to share its importance with "dining" room, living room and library, it still remains one of the most important rooms in the house. As we have seen in the Middle Ages, the question of America's future is largely determined. Will the experiment of the melting pot succeed? Will this nation go forward to repeated triumphs and to greater and greater prosperity, or will it follow the limited range of the European Rump and the other mighty nations of the past?

The food that is prepared in the kitchen will tell the story of the nation's future.

Kitchen will tell the story. How well and how thoroughly it is cooked, how it is seasoned, what variety is afforded—all this will count. In one particular the modern American housewife has a tremendous advantage over those of colonial days. With very little effort she can keep her kitchen utensils shining, for enameled ware pots and pans are cleaned with hardly any trouble at all; it is not necessary to spend long hours in scouring them to make them gleam. Also, most women like to have their kitchen less neat and attractive, and it is possible to get enameled ware that harmonizes with almost any color scheme.

These pots and pans are important because what goes into them may well decide the fate of the country. We have seen how successful civilization failed because of the limited range of its cooking. There is no limit that can be placed upon American cooking; enameled ware cooking utensils make stews, baking, broiling all equally easy.

In the West, as the question of cooking hardly entered; it was a contest between nations whose cooking, differing though it did in certain particulars, was based very similar. But if days become the strength of the nation may be tried against the best of those cooking; and whose success was fundamentally set with our own. As the American kitchen will tell the story of the nation's future.

GRAIN PRICES HIGHER.
CHICAGO, March 6. Grain prices were higher at the close of the market of trade today.
Trading was erratic in the wheat and other cereals market. The strength in wheat traded today was largely due to unfavorable weather reports from the southwest and a better demand for flour from mills in the northwest. Foreign generally credited reports that wheat stocks in the western Hemisphere were not so low since last summer was unfavorable. Other reports, however, said the crop could average 2000 million in the northwest. Foreign buying of wheat was of moderate volume.
