THE AMALGAMATED SUGAR COMPANY

Bulletin No. 3.
Twin Falls Idaho.
June 23rd, 1923.

In going through the country I noticed a great many web worm moths. These are little buff colored butterflies. They deposit their eggs on pig weed and best leaves on the underside of the leaves, of a purely white color and the size of a pin head. They are not easily seen unless a careful search is made for them. Even though no eggs can be found do not assume that all danger is past. Often the eggs are overlooked and the first indication you have that your crop is infested is the presence of newly hatched worms hanging from the underside of the leaves by a short web. These can best be seen by getting down on the ground and looking up and down the rows. Both the worms and web are light colored and not very easily seen unless the light is just right, looking away from the sun makes them more easily discerned. The young worms feed on the underside of the leaves for several days after they leave the eggs and do not eat the upper surface. Their presence is not suspected many times until they are so far developed that much damage is done before they can be controlled, but if noticed in time it requires less poison and they are easy to kill. Paris green has proven the best for quick results. Four pounds of Paris Green to 50 gallons of water with a 4 nozzle sprayer at 80 pounds pressure will do the business. We have sprayers and Paris Green all ready but our field cannot see any farmer's field every day, therefore, it is necessary for each grower to keep a close watch of his field, especially where the moth appears in abundance. Lamb's Quarter, Russian Thistle, and Fig Weed should be cleaned up around the field as these are their natural breeding plants. As soon as you discover worms, call your field man or if you can't get him notify this office.

Notwithstanding the local showers we are getting I notice a good many of the successful growers have already started to irrigate, every other row. They aim to just give the young plants a little drink, enough to keep them doing their best. In talking with Art Scott, who had started to run water June 15th, he said he had 128 acres to irrigate and he felt he had to start a little early in order to get over all before any silted. His plan was to get over all his beets lightly with water, then as soon as the ground was dry enough to cultivate, then get back with water before the plants stopped growing. He intends to feed them like he did his cattle so as to keep them doing their best all the time. Art does not believe in a feast and famine and I agree with him. Just enough moisture from now to October first, not too much at any one time but always enough to keep them doing their best. One may have to water ten times or only five, depending on climatic conditions, but once they are wet do not let them get dry again. Each grower must be governed by the quality of his soil and the amount of rainfall as to the number of irrigations necessary. Just keep your beets growing their best as the season advances and beets get larger and throw out feeders one should not cultivate too close to the rows, but keep away from the beets so as not to disturb the feeders. Try to cultivate after each rain or irrigation until the leaves cover the rows.

Greek Operation of American Red Cross Is Model of Efficiency For Conduct of Large Scale Relief Work on Long Range

When the American Red Cross withdrew its relief forces from Greece, this summer, it will have established a record for effective emergency relief. Its operations, which involved the feeding of 500,000 refugees from Anatolia and Eastern Thrace and the supplying of the medical needs of a million destitute and homeless people are too large to be easily grasped. The photographs above show the loading of American Red Cross ships at Piræus for transshipment to Greek islands and some of the Red Cross supplies delivered to the ultimate consumer.
The scope of the work can be better illustrated by a summary of accomplishments in a particular district, typical of the operation of the relief program throughout the entire Greek peninsula and the islands surrounding it. Piræus district, where American Red Cross work was directed by Henry C. Wolfe, of Oakland, Ohio, and the medical phases of the program by Dr. J. C. McKean of El Paso, Texas, afforded such an illustration.

Through the month of January, February, March and April the American Red Cross was feeding in the Piræus district alone 40,000 refugees and on May 1 that number was increased to 45,000 owing to recent arrivals.
The organization has completely furnished and equipped eight relief hospitals in the district with a total capacity of 312 beds.
It has opened and is operating three ambulances at the towns of Zante, Patras and Argos. These ambulances, on an average between 300 and 500 refugees daily. Medicine has also been supplied to the smaller refugee centers through out the district and hospital.

Three milk stations for babies are in operation in the towns above mentioned, feeding about 1,000 babies a day.
The typhus epidemic, which threatened to become serious, has been brought under control and at the beginning of May there were only a few remaining cases in the district.

Every refugee has been vaccinated and the campaign to inoculate the refugees against typhoid and cholera has been started.
Ten Greek doctors are in the employ of the American Red Cross in the district as well as about 50 nurses and hospital attendants. The medical program has been organized so that it can continue to function after the American withdrawal.
Twenty-five thousand refugees have been bathed and disinfected at the American Red Cross bathing plants and their clothing fumigated. Ten thousand refugees have been shod with blankets.
Thousands of pamphlets giving advice on how to avoid sickness have been distributed among the refugees of the district and posters dealing with various phases of the sanitary program have been posted in prominent places in the towns and villages.
Camp sanitation has been emphasized and enforced.

... AT THE ... THEATRES

THREE STAGE SCENES BECOME TWO HUNDRED ON SCREEN
The whole latitude given the builders of screen movies is emphasized in Oliver Morosco's production of "Blippy McGee," a First National attraction. When the Morosco stage version of Marie Conway Oler's widely read story was presented it was in three scenes. On the screen there are more than 200.
"In addition to the expansion of the screen version, we have the most different natural sections of the south," says Morosco, whose latest picture will be seen at the Idaho theatre on Wednesday. "It would have been impossible to bring to the stage the remarkably beautiful settings that we found among the aristocratic old mansions in Natchez, Miss."
AT THE ORPHEUM.
Four offerings of exceptional quality, full of exciting songs, wholesome comedy and dancing on a scale never attempted before, will be the attraction at the Orpheum theatre tomorrow.
This extraordinary bill is headed by Anderson Young & Co. America's premier travesty artists in an elaborate production of "The Merry Widow of 1921," a spectacular novelty herald of surprises and ballroom situations. In most enjoyable bit of sentimental showing the humorous side of the popular productions of the present day. Helen & Freeman, skilled feature attraction, Miss Jessica Dixon, "The Overcast Girl" mounted by Frank Freeman. Miss Dixon entertained more than 200,000 of our boys in England, France and with the army of occupation in Germany as a dramatic soprano. Billie & Lottie, a clever pair in "A Harem from Broadway," presenting a musical comedy in a manner original. The Great E. B. is another novelty that will prove entertaining as well as instructive. His athletic feats are fast and marvellous. His lack-ward and forward bending is unsurpassed by any other in his line. In conjunction with this great bill is the noted feature picture "A Big Town Home" with Tom Mix, the favorite star of all western plays. The latest International News Weekly makes a program that hits the mark as very pleasing entertainment.

WHAT GERMANY HAS ACTUALLY PAID

An illuminating survey of German economic and political conditions, and of sentiment in Europe and the United States, interesting to everyone who is seeking a solution of the Ruhr problem, is supplied by Mr. Charles H. Gray, special European correspondent of the New York Times, and published in a recent issue of that newspaper.

A fair appraisal of the situation is convincing of the important fact that its writer is unbiased. That he had an unusual opportunity to observe is evidenced by the statement that he has been, both during and since the war, a visitor in many of the countries whose problems are associated with those of Germany, as well as in Germany itself. He finds that the one solid hope that survives in Europe is that the United States may still provide the way to peace and a return to normal economic conditions. He sees in the United States a steady growth of sentiment favorable to effective, if restrained, participation in an effort for settlement. This, he declares, has revived the belief that America cannot march longer through aloofness.

Figures presented by the correspondent of the Times, from data said to have been supplied by the reparations commission and compiled from other sources, are made by his analysis to show that the total payments by Germany up to the end of 1922 were between 15,000,000,000 and sixteen billion gold marks, or approximately $1,850,000,000. He goes on to show, however, that of this sum only about $1,200,000,000 was paid in cash or in deliveries in kind, though it is indicated that the payments in kind have been greater than Germany has been credited with. It is stipulated also that the value of the Surrender mines has not been taken into account, though the returns to the French from that source may amount to between four hundred million and eight hundred million gold marks. Other material taken over for which no credit has been given includes military, naval and aeronautic supplies, and German navy itself. But it is explained that the allies realized little out of these and that the Germans were not thereby deprived of much productive wealth. But as a result of the compilation, the following illuminating tabulation has been made by the Times from Mr. Gray's figures purporting to show what Germany has paid up to January 1, 1923, estimated in gold marks, worth about four to the dollar:

Cash (payments under treaty)	1,905,665,395
Deliveries in kind (real value probably greater)	3,484,312,000
State properties (in real territories)	2,501,212,000
Restitutions (property found in Germany)	2,700,000,000
Allied expenses in Germany	1,206,650,005
Sequestered property	4,000,000,000
Total	15,800,000,000
Deduct loans by allies to Germany	290,000,000
Total in gold marks	15,510,000,000
Total in dollars (approximately)	$1,850,000,000

Aside from the payments made in cash and in deliveries in kind, the chief credits are in restitutions, which can hardly be regarded as reparations, as they comprise property taken over by the German army and since returned, and sequestered property, much of which consists of German holdings seized in the United States, and which will eventually be returned to their owners. The figures are intended to refute the claims of the Germans that they have already paid, in the way of reparations and restitutions, a sum equal to one hundred billion gold marks, or approximately twenty billion dollars. Yet there remains, as the correspondent points out, the indefiniteness in many of the valuations which makes it next all difficult to present a good showing for either Germany or the allies.

These are the conditions which are said to exist, with extreme pressure being exerted by the French to compel payments, and with a debtor nation taxed to its uttermost to aid to the payments demanded. Even if France has the right to act, it is not so apparent from all that has been shown according to Mr. Gray, that it has acted wisely or prudently in the circumstances. The present task, he believes, is to bring to France a realization that whatever use that country may make of the present military advantages which a cooperative war has placed in its hands, it cannot permanently overcome the industrial superiority of the German people. If this is true, the hope of safety lies in joining the allies and Germany itself, as represented in its democratic government, in founding a new system which would make impossible in the future every form of offensive warfare. In this undertaking there are indications that the American people will soon be ready to throw the full weight of their influence and power. The Monitor.
