PRIZE WINNING ESSAY OF THE GRADE CONTEST

The following is the prize essay for the fifth and sixth grades:

Miriam Ballantine. "The Book I Like Best."

I like the story of Just David. It tells of a boy 10 years old. He lived with his father who had been ill for many days.

One day David came running into the house. "Father, father," he cried, "look at that!"

He held up a small book. "It's a milk boy," he said. "It's a book about a milk boy. It's a book about a milk boy. It's a book about a milk boy."

The teacher said, "That's a very good essay. You've written a very good essay about a milk boy."

David was very happy. He had won a prize. He had won a prize. He had won a prize.

David and his father were both very talented violinists. At night David would play to his father. His father would play to David.

They were both very talented violinists. At night David would play to his father. His father would play to David.

They were both very talented violinists. At night David would play to his father. His father would play to David.

David stopped playing and ran over to his father and tried to wake him but he could not. He tried for a minute and then said, "If I like the squirrel, he has come to me and he's beautiful. He doesn't need his coat on his left if he's dead."

They both laughed and said, "That's a very good essay. You've written a very good essay about a squirrel."

Apologized for the Fish. Pollution has developed among the trout in a degree of abundance that is intensely annoying to visitors, officials to the people themselves, as was the case when the former Prince of Japan was visiting at Hiram Koon and twice lost a big fish from his line and the governor of the town appeared and made protest appeals for the unfortunely and inconsiderate behavior of the fish—Ohio trout.

WOULD MAKE FARMER LOAN DEPEND ON PRACTICE OF CROP DIVERSITY

Farmers and Bankers Are Economic Team Mates, but Obligation Rests on Farmer to Protect Soil and Balance Crops, Says D. H. Otis.

D. H. Otis

Director, Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association. THE banker or most properly be considered the team mate of a farmer, and as such must work in perfect harmony. Economic conditions demand it. The work is too heavy. It requires a "team" and the interdependence of the farmer and banker is as close as their hands. If agriculture fails we all fail. There are no two industries that offer greater opportunities for mutual betterment, for increasing profits and bank deposits than do banking and farming.

The Banker-Farmer movement presents a program that reaches down through the surface to the very roots of things. It recognizes the fact that bank programs should not depend upon the prosperity of a few but upon the prosperity of all and especially of the average man and the average woman. In the last analysis we must recognize a common interest, "each for all and all for each."

Periods of low farmer purchasing power are invariably followed by a decided increase in the number of business failures. When the income per acre is increased from one to two dollars there is a direct effect in decreasing the number of business failures and, vice versa, with a decrease of one to two dollars in the income per acre, business failures mount steadily upward.

There are many fundamental factors in farming with which all business men should be familiar. A bank would not long succeed if it were to attempt to use its capital stock for running expenses. Neither will the farmer. Farmers have been living out upon their farms for their investments but without their principal. Almost every effort by American farmers has resulted in decreasing the fertility of the soil. The banker who dives into the country and observes this process of mining the fertility from the land should feel that to that extent the resources of his bank are being squandered.

Yet some of our bankers are continuing to loan money to the one-crop farmer. When such a farmer comes around for a loan the banker should keep at least one cow, one sow and one pair of laying hens. At least one enough livestock to feed his own family. Agriculture is sick, production is unbalanced. Farmers are paying freight and other overhead charges on

The price paid for a story, depends entirely upon the merit of the story. I would suggest, Smokey, that you purchase the books, "100 Places to Sell a Manuscript" and "Practical Authority." They will tell you everything almost that is necessary for you to know in order to sell your stories, anything you have the right kind of stories. ## POCATELLO WILL SEE IDAHO FALLS BURLEY CONTEST

The Burley and Idaho Falls football teams will play a return game at Pocatello either Friday or Saturday of this week, the winner to play Boise the following week in Boise for the state championship.

This is the decision reached by the board of control, it was announced by Supt. M. C. Mitchell, president of the board.

The ruling will move the championship battle up one week, with the weather a factor, but the extra week will not work any material hardship on any of the contestants.

At first it was announced that the team making the most progress in the game last week at Burley which ended in a tie, would be chosen to play Boise. This has changed, however, for the present arrangement, which is far better, as the game at Burley was not played on a very much yardage could be gained, but to try and see how many scores could be made.

The Pocatello game will not be played Friday although it may be switched to Saturday. The day of the week for the Boise clash is up to Boise school.

The ruling is set forth by the state board which is composed of Supt. J. E. of Caldwell, Supt. C. H. of St. Maries, and Supt. M. C. Mitchell of Twin Falls, in which Mitchell should be adhered to, it was announced.

The game scheduled for Thursday evening between the Royal Lanes and the Silver-Mark has been moved up a day on account of Thursday being a holiday, and there is no chance will vie for honors Friday evening.

Favourite Days OF AMATEUR COACHES

Coach Hines will probably surrender to Lincoln in this evening for a real workout. The local team is not satisfied with the way the boys are taking the count. Game with Nampa on Thursday, and in order to show for this evening they will play the team from Nampa on Thursday, and in order to show for this evening they will play the team from Nampa on Thursday.

BY ANDREW SMITH

The play I have outlined in the diagram below is probably the strongest play in almost every coach's repertoire. I know of no team of any account that does not count upon this play in its best and safest game plan. Nearly every coach works it about the same, the only difference is that some get more perfection, more speed and power.

It is the old, old play of back outside tackle. The first and most essential part of the play is that the back should be a clever, powerful, driving back, and able to check the defensive tackle. He should have plenty of snap and drive in his attack on the tackle, with a following charge on that. In case he can get the tackle leader on his shoulder, he can carry him clear over behind his center.

The No. 2 and 3 backs must start with a burst of speed and plenty of drive to get the defensive end as fast as they can possibly get him, in order to make the hole between the defensive end and tackle as large as possible.

The No. 4 back should take about the middle of the line and parallel to the line of scrimmage. In order to drive the defensive end and tackle, the No. 4 back receives the ball on a direct pass from center.

The line, side guard runs out of the line on the snap of the ball with plenty of speed, running low and turning straight down the field, with running back and low, as usual as he can get into the hole.

The other lineman on the line and center should check the defensive line in its own half, in a very determined manner, in order to keep these defensive linemen from carrying over into the base over which the No. 4 back runs.

OAKLEY OIL AND BARBECUE TUESDAY

There should be a large attendance of Twin Falls people at the barbecue tomorrow to see the West Pearl Oil company well tested. G. W. Stedman, of the company and W. D. Reynolds of Raft River, who were here Saturday, say that there is no question that the test will demonstrate the presence of oil and gas in paying quantities. It is also said that there are unmistakable signs of both in the Carpenter well which is likely to prove a very paying proposition if not a gusher.

These are things about which everybody here has heard. The time to test them out has come and the test should be complete as pledged. If they should prove true it will mean a great deal for southern Idaho. The West Pearl company expresses plenty of confidence in the success of the test or it would not announce a barbecue, which is certain to draw a crowd. Let everybody go who can, because you can always get a better idea of things if you see them, than if somebody tells you.

If there is oil there in large quantities, there is likely as has been asserted, plenty of oil all the way along through Shoshone Basin to Deep Creek. The presence of oil in the Basin county seems reasonably certain since the Standard has leased a lot of land there. Without good indications this would not happen.

Of course, oil is a rather uncertain proposition, and even the Standard makes mistakes, but notwithstanding the unfavorable report of the extension geologist some time ago, it looks as if there might be oil in paying quantities to the south of us in Idaho. Tomorrow's test will go a long distance toward showing whether there is or not.

"STORY OF THE BIBLE"

The Dearborn Independent seems to think that Van Loon's "Story of the Bible" is not a work of high character, and says in effect that if a scholar who had never heard of either should first read Van Loon's work and then read, say, St. Luke's Gospel, he would be astounded at the contrast and charmed by the superiority of the work of the apostle.

This is doubtless true. Van Loon's stories are not histories, even to the extent that Meudlbach's were, and the latter always marked authentic incidents in his start, while Van Loon leaves the impression that his story is literally true. To those who read critically, indeed, there is ample notice that his statements should always be taken with plenty of salt. For instance, in his "Story of Abraham," he warns the student who would understand Napoleon—not to waste time reading a dozen volumes of Napoleonic biography, but to listen to a song composed during his domination of Prussia, by a noted German composer, to which the music was written by another noted German, both of whom hated the emperor, and draw your conclusions therefrom.

This would give about as clear an idea of the issues involved and the character of the Emperor of the French, as the song, "Gott Strafe England," so popular in Germany a few years ago would give people of a future generation of the issues of the Great War, and the character of Herbert Asquith. However, if this advice is not one that will appeal to a serious student as being of much value in determining the character of Napoleon, it is of the greatest value in determining the historical value of Van Loon's very readable romances, whether written for old or young, and should serve as a danger signal to penny readers.

JESSE JAMES

Jesse James never lived at all, R. F. Dibble claims in his new book, "Strenuous Americans." The notorious bandit, according to Dibble, "was a pure creation of the mind. He was born, he lived, he died, in the complex and far-reaching imagination of his race. He was America's Odysseus, America's Beowulf, America's Robin Hood."

Over a western bank we once saw a weather-beaten sign riddled with bullet-holes which old residents claimed were from Jesse's pistol. We have seen other historical relics of his career. We have further been led to believe that Jesse was shot April 3, 1882, while fringing a pickle on the wall, and we have talked with old-time reporters who "covered" that shooting.

All hokum and bunkum, according to dabbling Mr. Dibble. We'd be inclined to believe that Dibble is joking—if he weren't so historically accurate in his treatment of other characters in his book; such as P. T. Barnum, Brigham Young, Mark Hanna, Admiral Dewey and James J. Hill.

Come to think of it, we never actually SAW Jesse James. All we know about him is hearsay, second-hand evidence. So we have to believe either Dibble or the rival faction of historians.

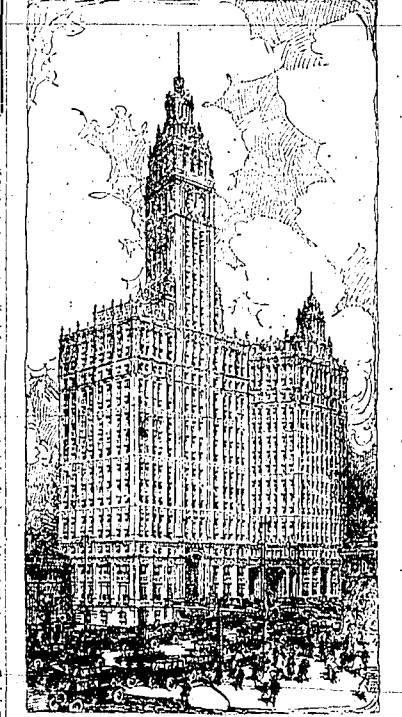

The more we ponder this, the less certain we feel of our ground. And the more it dawns on us that 99 per cent of the things we "know"—things we accept as unquestionable fact—are merely matters of faith on our part.

For instance, we have always believed that Columbus was first to discover America, though we have no actual proof that any such person as Columbus ever existed. Our confidence in Chris rests on tradition—inherited say-so.

Similarly, we believe there's a city named Hong-kong, though we've never seen it.

Faith is the mightiest of all human forces.

Here's Proof That Advertising Pays
 Famous Wrigley Building in Chicago Being Doubled in Size

The part of the Wrigley Building erected two years ago has been nearly doubled the floor area of the south wing, as being added. This new section, nearly completed, occupies the entire block, immediately across South Water Street, fronting on Michigan Avenue and reaching to the height of the main part of the west structure with a connecting bridge.

There is a concrete slab as well as steel and glass front of the section that "advertising pays." In these magnificent buildings Mr. Wrigley has created an impressive monument to his credit. They have large and bright windows. They have the advantages of the main section. They stand a monument to the industry of the Nation's second city—Chicago—bringing matters that bearing unanswerable testimony to the POWER OF ADVERTISING.

HISTORY OF THE ELECTRIC LIGHT

Smithsonian Institution Issues Pamphlet Reviewing the Earliest Experiments.

Washington—"History of Electric Light" is the title of a pamphlet issued by the Smithsonian Institution dealing with a subject of almost universal interest. Many of the inventions described in this pamphlet are in the collection of the United States National museum in the divisions of mineral and mechanical technology.

At the present time there are about 200,000,000 incandescent and about 200,000,000 incandescent lamps in use in the United States alone and about an equal number of incandescent lamps in use in foreign countries. This would make use of electricity as an illuminant, was first made possible only by patient research and experimentation through a period of 123 years by many men of many nations.

Origin of Electricity.
 Following a brief review of the early records of electricity and magnetism, the pamphlet traces the derivation of the word "electricity" from the Greek word for "electron," and describes the earliest experiments with electricity made by the ancient Greeks. In 1733, and later known as the Leyden jar, from the repetition of his experiments at the University of Leyden, and the accidental discovery of animal electricity in 1787 by Lulli Galvani—the important work of Alessandro Volta, a professor of physics in the University of Pavia, is taken up. Volta discovered that electricity could be generated by chemical means and in 1796 made a pile of zinc and zinc disks with cloths wet with salt water between them.

The first use of electricity as an illuminant was made two years later by Sir Humphry Davy, who demonstrated that electric current could carbon and strips of metal to form carbon and zinc light.

Experiments of Oersted.
 The first use of electric knowledge in the east of England and into Denmark and France, were the experiments of Hans Christian Oersted, a professor of physics in the University of Copenhagen, and of Andre Marie Ampere in Paris, in 1820 by the use of the battery. The electric current flowing through a coil would give it the property of a magnet, the nature of which depended on the direction of the electric current, is named in his honor.

Next Davy claims our attention where George Stenoza, the son of a poor Italian, studied as a teacher in the high school at Volterra, in 1825 discovered the relation between voltage and resistance in a resistance in an electric circuit, which is called "Ohm's law." The unit of electric resistance is named for him. From 1825 to 1828 experimentation was widespread on various metals touching on the outstanding features of the electric circuit, in detail in this pamphlet, there may be mentioned the discovery of the principle of the dynamo.

 Washington, D. C.

Many of the inventions described in this pamphlet are in the collection of the United States National museum in the divisions of mineral and mechanical technology.

name, by Sir Michael Faraday; the demonstration of an experimental incandescent lamp, in which a platinum wire was made incandescent in air, by Sir William Robert Grove; the first patent on an incandescent lamp, by Sir Humphry Davy; the first commercial installation of an electric light system, in London, in 1852, by the invention of the "arc" electric lamp, by Sir Charles Wheatstone, and the invention of the "incandescent lamp," in which a filament of carbonized paper was used, by Edison, in 1879.

Edison's Experiment.
 When Edison first began the study of the incandescent lamp in 1879 there were several commercially established arc light systems in use in the United States. All these systems operated on the "arc" system, and there were no means by which the lamp could be turned on or off without doing the same with all the others on the circuit. Edison realized that while this was satisfactory for street lighting where arcs were generally used, it was not so satisfactory for household lighting. After many experiments, Edison was successful, and in 1879 he made a dynamo which not only generated an arc in the same way as a carbon lamp in which the filament carbonized in a carbonized piece of ordinary wood. On October 21, 1879, current was turned into the lamp and it lasted 45 hours before it failed. A patent was applied for on November 4 of that year and granted January 27, 1880.

New York—"I'm so busy practicing for a golf contest that I have no time to help my wife," lamented a student of Michael Hobley, twenty-three years old, of this city, when he took Hobley into court. He hoped to get a professional and get a large salary.

The judge advised the husband to contribute more to his wife's support and, if golf cost him his income, to give up golf. He was discharged under a suspended sentence.
