Appointment of Miss Ada Walkington as business manager of the hospital is a recognition of efficiency for work in that institution which is entirely commendable. Hereafter, each branch will be run by those qualified in the department.

WOOL PROFITS COMING TO CROWERS

Wool growers have thus far received refunds aggregating $444,574.83 from the excess profits collected by the United States department of agriculture from dealers who handled the 1918 wool clip under the government regulations which fixed the price of wool and limited the profits that might be made. This work of collecting and distributing excess-wool profits was transferred from the war industries board to the department of agriculture by executive order dated December 31, 1918.

Total excess profits of $1,481,207.99 have been found to have been taken on the 1918 season's wool operations. Of this amount, $748,829.22 has been collected, the balance of practically an equivalent amount being due from only 58 dealers. Many of these dealers are residing payment, making sums in federal courts necessary. Ninety per cent of the money awaiting collection is payable by 12 dealers. The efforts of the department are directed particularly at this time toward expediting and assisting in the trials of pending cases. All cases thus far reached for argument or for trial have been decided in favor of the government.

FREIGHT BUSINESS PROBABLY BREAKING RECORD

Without any strain on the transportation machine the railroads probably, at the present time, are loading and moving more freight cars each week than ever before in history. The number of cars loaded in the week ended September 20 was 1,076,553. This was 15,742 more than in the corresponding week of 1923 and only two per cent less than the record figure of 1,097,274 which was reached in the last week ended September 29 this year was never equaled before 1923 and was exceeded in only four weeks of last year. Total loadings increased almost 151,000 cars a week between the fourth week in July and the third week in September. There is no reason to doubt there has been a further increase since then.

"In spite of the big increase in loadings the railroads on September 14 had a surplus of more than 167,000 cars. This was a decline, however, from more than 222,000 surplus cars at the end of July. They can still handle a substantially larger business without car shortage if weather conditions stay good.

"If, however, traffic demands should continue to increase and severe weather should come it is by no means inconceivable that there would be a 'car shortage' in the late fall or early winter. There is no imminent danger of a car shortage, but it is not too early to begin a campaign to get shippers to load cars heavier. The average loading of cars recently has not been as heavy as it should be and to make sure there will be no shortage of cars the average loading should be increased."—Railway Age.

"MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING"

Defense day, or as it was originally called, mobilization day, has come and gone, and like ignorance of the civil war among the inhabitants of the Tennessee mountains, there are thousands of people in the United States who do not know that such a day was ever planned or that the projection of it by the war department caused a general protest among multitudes of peace-loving citizens or that the day itself was actually held on the 12th of September. Like most occasions of worry the anticipation of something that never happened brought with it nervous anxiety and lurid pictures of imperial militarism on the part of many thinking people which led them to make such an outcry against the plans of the war department that stop-pedaling the dispatch notes of armed conflict seemed to become necessary, and especially as September 12 and November 3 were so close to each other.

If there had been any real occasion for defense of country or mobilization of troops or conscripting men and property every true American would have risen with enthusiasm and a genuine patriotism to the need of the hour. But we don't want to fight, we have seen through the tinsel glory of battles, the memory of 1914-1918 still lies like an unclosed wound in the soul, and we hate the very psychology of war. The great mass of American citizens refuse to carry a revolver in the hip pocket even when they know that bullets are apt to waver down on the way home at night. The logic of being prepared is inane. The argument for self-defense is academically sound. But somehow we dislike to go about like a walking arsenal. This is the temper of the United States among the nations.

Better than a "Defense Day" would be an honest effort on the part of the present administration to carry out its pledge to enter the world court of arbitration and to take a little more interest in the league of nations which is making substantial progress against heavy odds. We believe with Premier McDougal that it is compulsory arbitration imposed by a league of all the great nations, Germany included, or it is more ornamental and another great war.—The Baptist.

SYNOPSIS

Sir Oliver Trevelyan is betrothed to the beautiful and aristocratic Lady Rosamund Goldolphin, but the marriage is opposed by Rosamund's brother, Peter, and her guardian, Sir John Killigrew. When Oliver's young half-brother, Lionel, kills Peter in a quarrel suspicion falls on Oliver. A trail of blood is found leading from the body to his door. Even Rosamund believes him guilty. Desiring to protect Lionel, Oliver can only protect his innocence but he obtains from the justice a decree, to be produced in case of trial, alleging to the fact he bears no mark of recent wounds. Therefore the trail of blood, although that of the murderer, is not his. A few weeks later trial takes place and Lionel, charged with fear that Oliver will reveal the truth, hires a private investigator to follow him. He succeeds in finding the trail, which is a party given. With Oliver's disappearance it is assumed he has fled to escape trial. He is, however, in the coast of Portugal when Leigh tells Oliver of Lionel's part in the affair and orders, for a price, to take him back to England. Oliver accepts, and Leigh is about to turn back when he sees a great ship heading down upon them.

CHAPTER VII (Continued)

Clare handed as was the Swallow and the other two men were in the road. She was not making more than one knot to the Starboard's head, but she was a Starboard was beyond all doubt judged by the heavy waves she issued. Sir Oliver's hand on the tiller, and he sprang to the wheel, thrusting his elbow into the water and the other two men were in the road. She was not making more than one knot to the Starboard's head, but she was a Starboard was beyond all doubt judged by the heavy waves she issued. Sir Oliver's hand on the tiller, and he sprang to the wheel, thrusting his elbow into the water and the other two men were in the road.

"He signaled to the mate to fire the culverin."

The mate made with a blow of his elbow that almost sent him sprawling.

"Was you out of the count?" the fellow protested.

"That's thirty foot!" roared the skipper. "I had to keep the mate steady from shore. If the mate comes jutting out to meet us we are in for a rough time on our side here!"

He span the wheel round in his hand and turned her down wind. Then he relinquished the helm to the mate again.

"Hold her!" he commanded, and following orders as usual, he handed himself down the companion to see them expected.

Men sprang to the railings to look to him, and went swarming aloft to let the reefs of the topsails; others ran astern to the dunnage by the mizen; and the skipper had her leaping and plunging through the green water with strange, unfeeling, racing straight to sea.

From the poop Sir Oliver watched the Starboard. He saw her yaw a point or so to starboard, making straight to intercept them, and he observed that although this maneuver might be fully a mile away, he was to the wind than the Swallow, yet equipped as she was with half a ton of canvas again as a canvas sail.

The skipper knew that she was gaining steadily upon them none the less, and he was not to be deceived.

The skipper came back to the poop and stood there moodily for a few minutes, his eyes fixed on the Starboard. He saw her yaw a point or so to starboard, making straight to intercept them, and he observed that although this maneuver might be fully a mile away, he was to the wind than the Swallow, yet equipped as she was with half a ton of canvas again as a canvas sail.

"The Swallow started under the blow, recovered, an instant, then she came to a halt. She was not making more than one knot to the Starboard's head, but she was a Starboard was beyond all doubt judged by the heavy waves she issued. Sir Oliver's hand on the tiller, and he sprang to the wheel, thrusting his elbow into the water and the other two men were in the road.
