'RED' GRANGE SENSATION OF SPORT WORLD

Illinois Star Center of Attraction; Is Likely Greatest Player of All Time; Uncanny Exhibitions Win Undying Fame.

CHICAGO, Nov. 14.—Loss after the 1924 football season has passed out of memory, when the greatest football player ever is buried in the "muddy British" center's coffin, fans will still be talking about a red-haired youngster named Grange.

The sensational Illinois fullback was an all-American last fall when he was a sophomore. If he failed to talk another yard all season, he could not be kept out of this year's football team.

But "Red" is more than an all-American. He seems destined to occupy a place in the football hall of fame alongside of Braden, Mahan and Brickley of Harvard, Thorpe of Carlisle and Eckersall of Chicago. His name probably will be remembered longer than Polard of Brown, Harlow of Ohio, Gips of Notre Dame or O'Rourke of the Army.

Whether Grange is as good or better than any of these "immortals" doesn't matter. His brilliant run have appealed far more to the throngs; his name has drawn more front page headlines. An automobile firm is now advertising its car as "the Red Grange of traffic."

But the very fact that Grange is the most advertised player in history is what makes his performance the more remarkable.

Here's what he did against Chicago—the only team able to tie Illinois so far this year:

Gained a total of 300 yards; scored all three of Illinois' touchdowns; figured in seven forward passes which gained 177 yards; failed to catch only three times, once losing a yard.

Grange has scored 12 touchdowns this year and played in only one full game—the Chicago tussle. He leads the west in total points—72.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 11.—Three important games, none of which however are expected to have material effect upon the race for the championship of the Pacific coast intercollegiate conference, were carried for the Pacific coast tomorrow.

Stanford, the undefeated, lines up against the University of Montana at Palo Alto in a contest which merits attention only with respect to disrespect—to the score the Cardinals will lose—except perhaps to the men from the wide open spars. Montana has been handled roughly in this first season in the Pacific coast conference, and the hope indicates the feeling of her warriors will not be improved any more.

California takes on her "line" team, the Douglas wolf pack from the University of Nevada and hopes to win by a score that will compare favorably with the one Stanford hopes to make against Montana. For some reason or other, California always has had trouble with Nevada. Even when the "wonder team" held sway in the conference, Nevada, a non-conference team, would catch the Bears napping and do something to make the students out in the sage country turn handsprings. In short, Nevada has been credited with being one team possessing the Bruins' goat.

In the Pacific Northwest, Washington, which married the California hopes for another string of California victories, takes a rest against College of Puget Sound at the latter's home at Tacoma. Oregon and Washington "steer" towards what should be more or less of a formality for the Websters' fighting team, which has turned out to be the most temperate outfit in the conference. Oregon defeated the mighty Washington eleven only to lose in the cruelest of fashions and with her normal ups and downs, Oregon should come back strong today and hang up a Cougar blase.

Classy game in the Northwest conference is expected at Seattle, where Gonzaga and Whitman are meeting. Both teams fight hard for what they get, and while Whitman is on the short end of the butting, Gonzaga is not expected to have a walk-away.

Amalgamated day coming in the middle of the week lightens Saturday's schedule in California and the inland states. Arizona played New Mexico at Tucson last Tuesday, University of Redlands and University of California, Southern Branch, met at Whittier. Wyoming played Utah, California.

VERNON QUINTET PLEASURES MANY LYCEUM PATRONS

The Paul Vernon Quintet presented a musical program of unusual merit and superb technique. The Quintet made up of rare artists and their program last evening at the Twin Falls high school auditorium was of unusual type. Prof. Vernon made several explanations of their interpretation of various numbers and explained that they were playing a rather rare program of chamber music instead of the usual offering of an orchestral program. Chamber music is what might be termed "chamber music" in the large public as a rule. It was of course they played both types of music. He also explained that they were not an orchestra.

The Quintet is composed of five artists who seldom appear on the public platform with such a variety of different but most in such a mature program as was presented last evening.

The majority of the music lovers of Twin Falls and surrounding territory were present and greatly appreciated the program presented by the Twin Falls Lyceum under the direction of the Chamber music association of this city.

The artists included: Mr. Vernon, director, pianist violin and violoncello; Lloyd De Coss, Jones, violin and viola; James; William H. Thomas, cello; and Carter, William.

best telephone voices. An American physician visiting London has discovered that American voices are better adapted to the use of the telephone than the British voices. This defect in the British vocal cords he ascribes to the fact that the telephone service of London is used so extensively for telephoning. English voices are not. They seem to lack the timber necessary for carrying over the wire. It is often remarked that American women are given to a softer of face. They do not talk any louder than their British counterparts, but their voices have a carrying quality that is sometimes rather trying.

No Danger From Comets

The Naval Observatory says that the mass of a comet is never large; and the material is, for the most part, exceedingly tenuous. It is probable that the earth, if struck by a comet, would witness nothing more than a meteoric shower. The explosion, if any, would be similar to those hitherto observed in the case of large meteorites.

FROM HONDU HEAD TO VERA CRUZ

Peace-time Disaster in the American Navy Owes Seven Million Dollar Saving and the Preservation of Many Lives to the Efficacy of the Pocket Flashlight

By G. K. SPENCER, U. S. N. R. F.

SOME seven million dollars' worth of American naval property preserved from destruction and a goodly number of precious lives saved!

Such is the record of three years of use in the Navy of the pocket flashlight—the "hand torch," as the bluejackets call it.

Naval ships and lives have been lost in that period, but never for want of a flashlight. Every nighttime naval situation afloat, when peril of ship and life threatened, has been dominated by the Yankee seaman's "hand torch." So was it at Hondu Head when seven destroyers were tipped from the Navy lists and so was it off Vera Cruz when the old Tacoma gave up her life in the blast of a hurricane.

Perhaps the actual and total saving to the government effected by the use of flashlights in the naval service may be impossible to compute, but estimates from that day in February, 1922, when the Destroyer Woolsey was rammed and sunk off the Mexican coast will tell.

Such is the record of three years of use in the Navy of the pocket flashlight—the "hand torch," as the bluejackets call it.

Naval Heraldism
And always in the moments of extreme peril the best traditions of the American Navy have been upheld to a manner which makes a narrative of gripping interest.

It was a faint moonlight night when a merchantman lumbered into the northbound path of the Pacific Fleet on the 2,500 mile run from Balboa to the Hawaiian Islands.

Mustered by flashlight
Suddenly appeared on all sides officers, boatswain's mates and rowdies with flashlights.

During the night collisions of 1921, off the southern drift waters on the California coast, the Destroyer Jacob Jones and Paul Hamilton were running two opposite horns of a great destroyer collision.

Quartermasters on both ships, even before the topmast lights could be switched on, swung their flashlight beams aloft and pressed the switches.

Whenever the cause may have been, the Destroyer doctrine is that a squadron present the leader of the "hand torches."

Maneuver Save Plans' Crew
One of the notable instances of the salvage of life and Government property occurred in the victory number of 1921.

On board the "Delphy" the "hand torches" were all at hand, ready to allow of some being taken by the "hand torches."

what a or vicinity the officer believed, he was in.

The Fatal Turn
Consequently, the report was made to Captain Watson that a turn must now be made in order to clear the point of Arguello in order to have a clear course into Santa Barbara Channel.

Disaster at Hondu Head
But it was at Hondu Head, where seven beautiful destroyers drove to death on the night of September 1, 1922, that the "hand torches" proved forever their right to be included in the necessary equipment of every warship.

men had not even stopped for clothing, they had their flashlights. Each vessel that a flash light meant a life or more.

End of the Delphy
The Delphy, meanwhile, in the center of the formation, leading the center column (the Young was leading the port column), went on a few feet and also struck, immediately her lights were extinguished.

Each act in this drama was ill-fated. The Delphy, in her attempt to clear the point of Arguello, struck the Young, which was leading the port column.

the yellow dawn would seem a flash of white light, the sun would rise and down the coast in the path of the destroyer.

Loss of the Tacoma
In February of 1923, while proceeding on duty off the Atlantic coast of Mexico, the Cruiser Tacoma, of the special reserve squadron in Central American waters, was overtaken by a terrible hurricane off Vera Cruz.

Scene of Horror
Below decks, indescribable scenes of horror prevailed. Men were tossed about like so many sacks.
