MANY ATTEND THE CATHOLIC FILER PICNIC

A large crowd attended the Catholic picnic at the Filer fair ground on Sunday afternoon and enjoyed fine basket dinner and the afternoon in the shade. Two teams of strollers were worked up for a baseball game, lunch which was no expert account, not to keep the score and no black board long enough on which to mark it up, the result was not given.

There were several games indulged in. John McElroy won the 25 yard dash for children under six years. Willie G. Mario was winner in the dash for boys between six and seven. Veronica Thomas carried off laurels in the race for girls up to seven; John Buchanan won the 25 yard dash for boys up to 10 years and Sarah Vaitas for girls under the same condition; for boys from 11 to 15, the 50 yard dash was won by Vincent Hewitt, while Larry Strauss won the girl race in the same class. In the quarter mile dash for boys, Vincent Hewitt was first and Pete Erickson second; Helen Kieffer won the running race for girls under 15 years. Mrs. M. McElroy of Tuli, the married women's race for the same distance. A most interesting program was won by Vincent Peterson.

our conversation. Mr. Bryan complained of feeling ill, but passed it off lightly with the remark that he would be fit as a fiddle after a few hours sleep.

"I offered to have a physician visit him but he laughed and said there was no need of any alarm. It's just a little bad feeling. But he told me: 'I'll be all right in a few minutes.' 'We hung up and the next I heard he was dead'."

It was a few minutes after four that McElroy entered Bryan's room and called him. The companion did not stir and McElroy shook him. "He didn't awaken so I shook him again," the chauffeur told the United Press. "Then I placed my hand on his forehead to see if he was all right and he felt cold. I jerked the sheet aside and felt his face. It was cold, too. His hands were cold and then I knew he was dead."

"Mrs. Bryan sat just outside the door reading and called to her. 'Mrs. Bryan, I'm afraid something has happened to Mr. Bryan.'"

She dropped her papers. Her face went white. She knew he was dead before she came in to see him. When he died, she called, and went to his side and shook him. He didn't answer and she felt across the bed curtain and he was not there. She went in and out on the porch where she stayed to a clock and then to the kitchen and some of the others. "I don't remember it all very distinctly," she was such a shock and somebody. I don't know who came running. "His family friends went into the room and came out looking pale. One cried a little. We called a doctor but he couldn't do anything but tell us something we already knew—that Mr. Bryan was dead."

The physician gently drew the sheet over the companion's face and then attended Mrs. Bryan who was fighting a collapse. After the first outburst of her grief she bore up bravely, she reclined on a bed in the adjoining room and lay waiting for the physician. Her arrangements were made for disposition of her husband's remains.

None of the dead spread rapidly. Dayton loved Bryan and the death report was a stunning blow to the man. Many refused to believe it and hastened to the residence where the companion lay. Some a woman pathetically had cheerless him in his prosecution of John T. Scopes, assemblyman.

Because everyone, including himself, believed he had passed through the strenuous days of the evolution trial without suffering the least detriment to his health, Bryan's death came as a tremendous shock.

Only a few hours before, he had talked with friends of the big battle ahead in connection with the Scopes trial. Friends suggested a brief vacation before continuing the fight, but Bryan refused to rest.

That Bryan died of heart failure instead of apoplexy was the belief expressed by Dr. Raymond Wallace, Chattanooga physician who made an examination of Bryan last Friday. His examination revealed, according to Dr. Wallace, a slight depreciation of the heart with mixed blood pressure which was normal, though the arteries showed a slight swelling which the physician attributed to faulty heart action. Dr. Wallace said he advised rest and change of diet, but that same day Bryan went to jail and made a speech followed by another at Winchester Saturday.

At the time of his death, one of Bryan's chief ambitions was for the creation of the proposed Bryan University at Dayton. He had planned to confer today with the promoters of the proposed college. Mrs. Bryan was to have delivered last night. Mr. Bryan asked that two Bryans be sung, Mrs. Bryan singing "Blessed Thoughts" and "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go." Following the singing, practically every member of the audience shook hands with him.

Bryan's three children, William, John and Sarah, were with him.

His Book

It was his text book that started the trouble. This is Prof. George W. Hunter of Knox College, Galesburg, Ill., and he wrote the "Civic History" which caused John T. Scopes to be indicted in Dayton, Tenn., for teaching evolution. He won't attack the trial.

PASSING OF A WORLD FIGURE

BY JAMES D. WHELAN

A great world figure passed out yesterday to the land beyond. William Jennings Bryan died under circumstances which were favorable to the cause which he represented and which will strengthen that cause with many, as it will be felt that in a sense he was a martyr to the principle.

Bryan made many mistakes in his political career. Before America entered the Great War he showed a tendency to temporize, owing to his undying hatred of war as a means of adjustment, which lost him friends at the time, but after we had declared war on Germany he immediately telegraphed his offer of assistance to President Wilson and never failed during the terrific struggle to uphold the cause of the nation with that rare eloquence which always created enthusiasm, even unto the day of his death.

He was an enthusiast for peace. Although Bryan, like all speakers, said many things which offended defenders of things which he attacked, and sometimes said mistaken things, he never intended to give pain. Personally and internationally he lived up to his statement that he "never opposed any person without pain and never favored anyone without pleasure," and it is this feeling, coupled with an unusual degree of sentiment, which gave his eloquence that peculiar appeal when addressing the masses.

Never a profound economist, largely because of the percentage of humane sentiment which he possessed, he nevertheless pushed forward the cause of economic justice to a remarkable degree. Those who followed him through the three unsuccessful campaigns for the presidency, did not always agree with him, but they did know that he would never yield dishonestly to the demands of predatory trusts should he win the goal. His greatest single act was at the Baltimore convention, where he brought about the nomination of Woodrow Wilson, an act the ramifications of which will affect even the most remote posterity.

Let it also be said, however, that while measurably an exhorter, Bryan said and wrote some really profound things in economic and international matters. Some of his speeches for international peace agreement rank high in intellectual merit. His address of acceptance in 1900 was a masterpiece even in the opinion of his greatest critics and his writings on the difference between individualism and socialism, while brief, rank among the best.

His speech on the Wilson Tariff bill in 1894 was a fine definition of Democratic doctrine, to which he always adhered.

In his last great fight, in the midst of which he died, Bryan has doubtless been in a measure misunderstood. There is some talk, part of it growing out of good intent and purpose, about the justice of teaching the fact that evolutionary theory exists and the fact that it has clung in its favor certain scientific discoveries which make its presentation as hypothesis in higher classes advisable. It is none the less true that a purely materialistic slant is given the doctrine by many works used as text books. This expression of Marxian socialism with its materialistic conception of history, and its resultant doctrine of economic determinism, leading straight to Bolshevism, calls for a vigorous awakening of those who do not want the young insidiously led into infidelity and Russianization. Bryan recognized this and his fight against it will bear fruit.

300,000 BOY SCOUTS OFF TO CAMP

Many acres are being added this summer to Boy Scout camps through the co-operation of business men's clubs. The Kiwanis clubs have purchased several choice sites; Rotary Camps, provided by International Rotary, are a feature with many local councils; the Lions International are greatly interested in Boy Scout camps. James E. West, Chief Scout Executive, was recently made an honorary life member of the Lions as a tribute to his services to boyhood throughout the world. The American Legion Posts are sending leaders and raising funds to help Boy Scout camps.

Some 300,000 Boy Scouts camped for a week or more last year and an even greater number are laying plans this summer. Boy Scout camps offer a chance for outdoor life within reach of the purse of every boy. The average fee is less than $6. Boy Scout camps are carefully graded, and rigid standards of safety and sanitation are enforced. Some 3,500 separate camps are conducted by Boy Scouts throughout the country. Only boys who are members of the Boy Scouts of America may attend, but any boy who is twelve years of age may become a scout.

WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS LETTER

BY CHARLES P. STEWART

NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON—Aviation will get a lot of Congress' attention next winter, there'll be a fight over it, too.

The House committee, which investigated the subject last session, only finished its work just at adjournment. Its report is still coming out, a volume at a time, soon it will be available in full, all ready to be taken up directly by the lawmakers.

No particular conclusions are reached, but the evidence of the committee's witnesses speaks for itself. Some of it is pepperier than probably has been generally realized, its bulk having served to make it discouraging to go through in search of juicy details.

"There will be vigorous outbursts in debate, which certainly won't progress far without letting the country in on the fact that experts aren't all satisfied with the flying industry's development in America, especially considering that it started here."

I don't think American men's good aviators. On the contrary, the report emphasizes their ability. It's of American aviation's back weakness as an institution, military and commercial, that the committee complains. There seems to be almost complete unanimity in this. Many Army and Navy officers do indeed, dispute some of the more enthusiastic claims a citizen but all recognize the plane's importance.

That, Martin says, is the whole purpose of the Winslow bill, for aviation regulation, which Congress will be called on to consider.

Obviously it's to prescribe rules for the flying industry's safety. In reality, according to Martin, it is to outlaw all machines but the "trusts."

Evolution Trial Is Cause of Bitter Attacks on Bryan

Flier Reader Defends Commenter and Argues That Many Writers Get Stung in Attack on William Jennings Bryan.

(Communication.)
TWIN FALLS, Idaho, July 27.—To The Times: The late evolution trial has brought out a number of very nasty things, but none of them, it seems to me as repulsive as the attacks by word and article on upon that great commander, William Jennings Bryan. Why is it that the magazines and newspapers are always slandering this remarkable man? Their attacks are usually random and rarely funny. I suppose they have to resort to dirty stuff because Bryan's character has always been above reproach and they can't with safety take a crack at what is most sacred to any man. The papers are fond of drawing pictures of Bryan so ridiculously similar to a monkey that said pictures only cast reflections on the artist who drew them rather than on Bryan. Only the other day I saw in Life, published at New York, a picture of Bryan which was a caricature of the "Great Modern" "Tear-winger" was pictured as saying, only "bruh-hah" or something equally silly. Neither poor criticism of the greatest speaker in the world who has made a hundred times as much of life any member of the staff of Life, the magazine. Perhaps Bryan gets a certain amount of grim satisfaction in the realization that he is "the big man." Those who criticize him are more pygmies or dwarfs in comparison. It is too bad that some people in this world depend for a living on criticizing others. It is a thankless, patriotic job that would be better left undone. This is particularly true when the object of attack is as big, fine and upright a man as William Jennings Bryan. He has always proved himself to be a man of the world, and one who is under the ban with him. Few men of his life-long prominence have led absolutely clean and right lives as he has. It is disgusting and pitiful that in the sunset of life (Bryan is now going down the long slope which permits no ascent) he should be ridiculed in such a personal, nauseating way by the press.

I am not defending Bryan because I am a democrat for I am neutral in "politics" but the stream of attacks upon the great man have finally got under my hide and I just don't want a few views on the matter. Of course, the worst of evolution has. He realizes that when religion falls, there is nothing left. He is trying to maintain the faith—the bible—that with some people has wavered because of the slanders of scoundrels during the past few years.

I can appreciate a good joke as much as any man, but the kind of good-natured fling about Bryan are abhorred. Many of them are not abusive, but they are nasty—indeed, he has been dragged into the mire by artists and writers who, obviously enough, were born to amuse the public at the expense of someone who deserves better treatment. It is a reflection of the service in behalf of the human race.

How to Spend Your Money

is rather an unusual title for a bank ad. But we're serious in making this suggestion.

It's astonishing how some people let money slip through their fingers. Experience teaches that the person with plenty of cash available is almost invariably found to be the easiest and quickest buyer of non-essentials.

The most successful ways to stop these leaks is to possess a checking account and draw as the need may arise.

There is no necessity for skimping or for going without, but the checking account is a constant reminder and one that most always results in the small savings that so rapidly mount.

The man who spends all he makes is deceiving himself. His prosperity is fictitious.

Your account with this bank will be thankfully accepted.
