IDAHO FOLKS RIDE TRAINS (By Guy Flenner)

Additional responsibilities come with increased auto travel. One relates to safety. The increasing number of accidents are leading many of the more timid Idaho folks to even ride on trolley cars and railroad trains, although they had bought autos for the express purpose of using them. Although laws pile upon laws and caution signs become nearly as plentiful as the advice of old maids to mothers, the list of auto casualties continues to lengthen appallingly.

Light figures here to a certain extent—the headlights that glare so many people to glory. This may be remedied by more laws, but it seems certain, as the Safety Conference convened by Secretary Hoover points out, that better illumination in cities and on highways would materially lessen the risk to both auto drivers and pedestrians.

There are places along Idaho highways that should be lighted. The service could be installed at very low cost. Anyway, lights are not so valuable as life, and they cost less than litigation.

The Union Pacific built an expensive line and a wonderful depot for Boise, and then a state highway was built around the depot for the further accommodation of autoists traveling to and from the capital. "That's not fair," the railroad may have said as it gleefully plunged its share of the highway bill.

Idaho's "roadco's" should be increased by at least one "round-up" of enduring faith in one of the best states of the northwest.

WHERE IDAHO LOSES OUT

The Ford Motor Co. interests are credited with having invested about a million dollars in Custer county mining properties and are developing those properties which had been all but abandoned by their former owners.

Another company from without the state has just invested another million in the purchase of mining properties in Idaho.

So far so good. It is better to have outside capital come in and develop these properties than to have them remain dormant and non-productive, but how much better it would have been for all of Idaho if Idaho capital could and would be used in the development of the natural resources of the state.

With the foreign capital investment the net revenue above operating expenses goes to the foreign owner and investor, which is a natural result. If Idaho capital were invested in Idaho enterprises and all of the returns remain within the state Idaho would be a great deal better off.

The state, unfortunately, has been obliged on account of its lack of capital, to see the benefit of its natural resources in a large measure go to build up outside industries and communities.

One of our greatest natural assets, our timber, is foreign owned. Our mines are largely foreign owned and the dividends derived from the working of the mines and the harvesting of the forests goes to enrich other than Idaho citizens.

The people of the state it would seem are not as alive to their own interests in this respect as they should be. Thousands of Idaho dollars have been squandered in buying stock in oil wells of no value, invested in stock in mines in other states which did not pan out, invested in banana rubber and other stocks in far away countries while our own resources we have permitted more far-seeing investors to grow rich from.

If all of the money, Idaho money, which has been sunk in wildcat ventures in out of the state schemes had been invested in legitimate Idaho resources the investors in question would be in the dividend receiving class today and Idaho would be millions of dollars ahead of the game. It is not yet too late. There are untold resources in Idaho, legitimate investments within the state that can be made to pay good dividends.

Idaho investors need a little more confidence in their own state, in its resources and a better knowledge of Idaho conditions. When that time will have arrived Idaho will be better off. If all of the dividends which have been paid to non-residents of Idaho from Idaho's natural resources had remained in the state there would be a far different story to tell than that which has been recited the past few years.—Exchange.

CHAPTER V
The morning was another gorgeous blue winter day. The air was clear and early about. As I came up from the stream where I had washed, I met Jean going down, wearing a blanket, and looking for lack of a better word, a week on a dusty trail had made the presence of snow water, an Esop as one wanted it, a peculiar luxury.

"Go, but it's good to be alive!" she exclaimed, swinging her arms, to the part of her costume. "Does one ever want to feel like this on the prairie?"

"Always mildly intoxicated, as Mike says, but there are not his words. That's why westerners are more thoughtful and more reckless than easterners. Always an atmosphere hangs under their boots."

"How to make a crop?" "How to do one with one?" "as also took a great deal of fresh air. "See you at breakfast?" "If the rooster crows?"

That day and the day followed. They busy, busy days. The oxen were tired and footsore with their long journey, and we decided to let them rest. Jean took me to look at the land. I was determined that on the very first day I would plant some crop on the new place. I had a plan for the land for a garden. By mid-afternoon I had spaded quite a sizable garden plot. Then I broke the clods and Jean and I took to plowing rows of potatoes. The following day I continued my digging, and that evening, with assistance from Jean and Marjorie, planted out onions, carrots, beets, lettuce and radish.

We agreed that by the third day the men should be ready for the road again, and Jack was away soon after sunrise of the bright spring morning. He took the trail for the valley station, and I followed to the south and the sound of his wagon rumbling over the soft earth came floating back on the breeze as a note of approval, or at least a friendly voice which Jack affected when he was exclaiming.

"My next effort was the digging of a cellar. The location of our shack had to be decided upon, and for this I called Marjorie and Jean into council. My plan was that should we have one row of the ravine, and that Jack should build his close to the other, so that each would command an unbroken view of the neighbor. I gave even then we had some pretension of the specter of loneliness creeping over the place, and I had a plan for the blizzard, and already we were planning our lines of defense.

"We shall I said, "and one door will lead into them all. A room in anything you call it. We can change the name at any time, but for the moment it is kitchen, the next, living room, and so on."

"Draw a plan of it," said Marjorie. "I'll do it," I said, and I drew a plan. So I sat down and drew a plan, while the girls watched over my shoulders with as much interest as though I were an architect designing a palace.

"The house will be one story," I explained, "and long, and narrow, because this is the simplest as well as the cheapest way to build it, and we are to be our own carpenters. The walls will be of adobe, covered with a coat of plaster, and the roof will be of two thicknesses of boards, bent to a gentle oval over a stout ridge-pole, and gabled with tar paper. There will be no chimney, but a low much the West owns to tar paper. Wherever the new settler goes, he carries with him a bundle of tar paper. I continued, warming up to my subject, "that if a fire ever breaks out for these western prairies it should be put out with tar paper. We had between two laths. "Oh, yes, does the tar paper burner still wave?"—you see, it has possibilities."

"That isn't it awfully smart?" said Jean, who had a strain of delirium in her that at times conflicted with her common sense.

"Ah, that is one of my chief virtues. You may not know yet, but you will learn in time, so I have insured myself that population is not nearly so scarce on the prairie as it seems. She says that the inmates of one of these little settlements in many cases number literally millions. Millions! Well—they don't like tar paper. Blessed be tar paper!"

I scratched the outline of the shack to the end with my stick, and then digging a cellar in the center of the little plot. For a depth of nearly two feet I dug through a brownish soil that turned easily and threw clean from the shovel. Then I struck a sticky, yellow clay, and the going was much slower. But by the time was unimpaired. He galled as he brought his horse to a standstill; that sprang lightly to the ground.

"I see I am right," he said, addressing Marjorie and Jean. "I don't you notice now?"

Marjorie was the first to act, although I suspected, even then, that he had spoken more particularly to Jean. "My brother, Frank," she said, "is Jean's brother, Jack. This is Mr. Brock."

"We shook hands cordially, and Jean asked our visitor if he had had dinner. "I have not," he confessed. "You'd better go to any trouble." But the other was already in the house, making preparations.

"There's a stream around here, if my maps are right," the policeman continued, speaking to us. "as both Dick and I could do with water."

When you admire the handsome appearance of U. S. Royal Balloons—remember also they are True Low-Pressure Balloons

If you are one of the thousands of car owners who have been attracted by the handsome appearance of the all black U. S. Royal Balloons, it will please you to know this—

These tires hold their good looks during the full period of their long service life. They do not show finger marks, mud or grease stains.

The beauty of U. S. Royal Balloons is in addition to those characteristics which have made these tires famous. They are distinctive in being True Low-Pressure balloons.

Their construction and design positively avoid the necessity of over-inflating the tires to insure long service. You can run them at genuine low air pressures and get the comfort that balloon tires are intended to give.

Their "Low-Pressure Tread" is flat. It provides much greater area of road contact than a round tread, thereby distributing the weight evenly to every tread block. That is why the tread wears slowly and evenly.

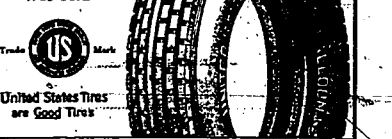

The continuous flexing of a balloon tire on the road calls for great strength and flexibility of construction. Latex-treated Web Cord, the patented process developed and patented by the United States Rubber Company, meets this flexing perfectly and accounts for the exceptional mileage of U. S. Royal Balloons.

So U. S. Royal Balloons make a real contribution to the beauty and the comfort of the modern car. Start now enjoying the advantages of true Low-Pressure balloons.
