GRANGERS' IN DANGER FOR GRID HONORS

Proposal of "Red" Grange to Play His Team in New York Regardless of the League Decision—Draws Fire of Giants Who Contend Game Will Lose Financially.

NEW YORK. Feb. 9.—If Red Grange and his Grangers invade the principal football field here next fall, they will have to jump into fire, for the Giants, for survival, according to Tim Mara, director and principal back of the New York Giants eleven.

"If Grange carries out his threat to play his team in New York, we will consider him one of the best cagers the school has had in years," said President Ned Stetson, captain of the University of Idaho basketball team. "He's exceptionally fast, accurate passer and a clever shot. Idaho fans consider him one of the best cagers the school has had in years."

In the general opinion that New York—not having the zest of the middle western professional football—hardly, will support two teams, it is agreed that the small-minded "New York" promoters were "running behind" until Grange came around with the "Yanks near the end of the Levee" and pulled them out of the hole.

HELEN WILLS LOSSES GAME

Odds Against American Star Following Her Defeat Yesterday in Tennis with French Champion.

CANNES. France, Feb. 8.—By a narrow margin, Americans won the tennis championship, but Helen Wills, American women's tennis champion, Jeanne Lescens, the French ace, is eleven to three favorite in the Carlton club tournament opening.

Miss Wills, practicing during the morning at the partly shaded court with which she already is familiar, said she was not disconcerted at the 6-1, 6-2 setback she and her partner, Mrs. F. A. Achinstein, sustained at the hands of Misses Lescens and Jaron Heurlin de Marignac.

BRUIN-PAUL TILT TONIGHT

BASEBALL TO INVADE IDAHO

Hoping to reorient themselves after their decided defeat at the hands of the Fifer Wildcats last week and attempt a repeat of their victory, the Jones and Paul team, the Idaho Falls baseball squad, tonight meets Paul in a return game that promises plenty of excitement and interest.

The local team has been the only one which this year has been able to overcome the Paul squad. Still stung under the broken record it had maintained until defeat, Paul goes into the encounter with its strengthened lineup and the hope of whipping the Bruins to pull them out of the hole.

Berwick and Gwin are the only men on the local team who are in any way in the heat of shape. Both have been in the field and although it is planned that they play tonight, their efforts and results will not be a matter of conjecture, both are star players. Berg, Ed Martin, John Kelly and Ned Wills will be in the unusual air possibility. The Paul organization has a lineup that is considered the equal of the local squad.

The second meeting of the teams took place on January 25, when the Bruins won the night game, 10-1. It will start at 7:30 o'clock in the local high school gymnasium.

Friday night the Bruins meet Idaho Falls on Friday and Saturday night Paulino meets the local team here. Paulino has not been defeated this season.

It is quite possible that the good people of Montpelier and Bear Lake county do not know and are not familiar with the fact that Bear Lake county is very rich in mineral resources of various kinds and that these extensive deposits of valuable metal ores exist in large quantities and await only necessary capital to develop these resources and thereby put into circulation hundreds of thousands of dollars in this district through the employment of labor, increase of population, increase of business in every line, and the enhancement of property values—Montpelier Examiner.

Idaho has the largest body of virgin timber in the United States. It is the second largest industry in the state. Invested in this industry is $50,000,000. Its annual payroll is $18,000,000. There are 20 million acres of timber in national forests. The total stand of timber in these reserves is 98 billion feet. The total merchantable stand of timber in the state is 130 billion feet. The annual growth now is 610 million feet. The possible annual growth, with proper care, would be one billion feet board measure. The total value of timber cut per annum, including poles, railroad ties, fuel and other forest products is $30,000,000. For each 1000 feet cut $20 is paid in wages and $5 for supplies. The largest stand of timber is in the national forests. There are 21 billion feet of Douglas fir, 19 billion feet of white pine, 17 billion feet of yellow pine and 12 billion feet of lodge pole.

There is in Idaho potential waterpower sufficient to turn every dynamo west of Chicago. It amounts to 5,067,000 horsepower. There is now developed but 125,000 horsepower by hydro-electric plants. This power is to be found in all parts of Idaho. Between Milner and Weiser in southern Idaho there is 555,000 horsepower undeveloped and between Huntington in western Idaho and Lewiston in northern Idaho 919,000 horsepower undeveloped. The largest hydro-electric plants in the state are those of the Idaho Power company at Swan Falls, Thousand Springs and American Falls; those of the Utah Power & Light at Grace, Sodt Point and Oneida and the Washington Water Power serves territory lying between Bluefoot on the east and Huntington on the west. The Utah Power & Light supplies territory in southeastern Idaho and the Washington Water Power company northern Idaho. There are also a number of smaller independent power companies.

STUDY EDUCATIONAL COSTS

The taxes paid for the cause of education are mounting to a point where those who pay the taxes are demanding a study and survey of the situation in order to learn what they are getting for their money, and to learn if they can if some method cannot be devised whereby the cost may be reduced.

No tax is paid so willingly and so cheerfully as the tax for the support of the schools, and to carry on the educational program. Individuals and institutions which have no personal interest so far as direct benefit is concerned, contribute largely toward the fund for education secured by taxes, but as good business men and institutions should they want to know what they are getting for their money, and if some better plan may be devised other than that which is now being conducted.

A continuing rising cost of production causes the good business manager to make a study and review of the situation in order to learn if the increase is justified. The greatest objection to the educational system of expenditure as a general rule, has been, according to the survey, that the expenditure is not under the supervision of those who are accustomed to handling finance in order to get the greatest results from the investment. The returns have, in a large measure, been lost sight of in the desire to get results without regard to cost.

Another question arises, and that is more serious than the financial investment, in the minds of the national committee, and that is, if the youth of the land is giving the serious attention to securing an education that the country would warrant, in other words, the question is asked, and rightly, if the educational system is not becoming top heavy, costing more than the results will justify, and if it is not time to take stock and see what we are doing and what the future will be?

The science of teaching has advanced wonderfully and there is no doubt but what educational advantages are within the reach of a great many who otherwise would be denied, but again the question comes up, "Is not education or the time spent in acquiring that very desirable result too easily obtained, and why waste too easy, and would it not be just as well to make the opportunity a bit more appreciated if it were harder to obtain?"

We are not turning out many Abe Lincoln's these days, the type-of-men-who-spend their time in deep study at home with crude equipment after a day's hard work had been done. The Lincoln type is an extreme, it is admitted, just as the present plan seems to be an extreme. A happy medium, could it be reached, would seem to be the logical thing.—Exchange.

"Perhaps I didn't," Teddy admitted. "But I thought it and meant to say—So-Mee-Manner will consider that I did."

Here the woman Yvonne had come in. Mrs. Manders interjected: "I see the same old story, here, and she will have a good laugh over me, I'm afraid, member of what you actually do say, without being bothered with what you merely think."

"Don't alarm her, please!" Lord Teddy exclaimed. "No woman ever remembers anything I say to her. They don't care, perhaps," Yvonne glancing at the door, "both you and Doris—"

Doris, and Doris," he said again, "that's the trouble. You don't like thinking about them, I suppose. Pardon me, Mrs. Manders: whenever I come to Pendleton here at Yvonne's I come to think that that's the mark! What! It was only Lord Teddy himself who hopped, and Joanne wondered why.

CHAPTER XV.

Joanne: "—on—on—"

It was not long before Lord Teddy had skilfully maneuvered himself from the stone tea table in the rose garden into a tote-a-tote corner, and Joanne followed him. "Never could stand Pendleton, you know, he confided to her when he had her to his room. But she didn't say what Doris had done him or her, for that matter. Cut it out, Joanne!"

"Is that how it is? Joanne inquired: "You're everywhere! You're told, to me, I have to wait for you."

Lord Teddy eyed her intently. She felt singularly at ease with this tall man, his height, his mannerisms, his smile, his eyes. "Oh, really, now! You mustn't pretend that, I'm dreadfully dumb about women, but I do know that she doesn't know everything! It's never true these days, you know, as it is a bit jollier to not make believe."

"I'll admit," she agreed, "that anything I don't know hurts. I've got to be a bit more careful, though. Oh, lots, so there's still a chance for you to do a bit of teaching, I suppose, I mean, Mr. Pendleton, and it's all right."

Yvonne knew, however, moving from his chair to a place closer to her, on the divan, into which he had pulled her, to be terribly fond of her, before he left.

"Yes, Jim told me that, she informed him. "I eat like a horse, Anyhow, teachers always aren't they?" But you were saying?"

Marks, of course, the other part of her tomorrow morning, was wrong about that.

"You're going to have a bargain of sorts, though. When you happen to think about it, I tell you what it is to be here."

"I'll be here, won't you?"

"I'll be here, I'll be here, I'll be here, and Pen will be miserable trying to keep up appearances. It's only, of course, for anybody to have a good time, and I'll be here these two moon about it open thy little heart."

"You're giving something, or other, usual things, Doris will be on deck with her husband, he's got a lot to say, and Pen will be miserable trying to keep up appearances. It's only, of course, for anybody to have a good time, and I'll be here these two moon about it open thy little heart."

"Profoundly! He has to be more perceptive than any husband I know. You're feeling very amiable this morning, I suppose, like the wife of Pen, when you're used to them.
