Bitterness is Involved Into Hearing Before Senate Committee on Staffield Measure Scrap Opens.

Senator Charges Forestry Official With Having Made Western Trip to Discredit Conference.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—Bitterness between advocates of the new and the forestry associations grew more intense today as hearings on the Staffield grazing bill continued before the senate public lands committee.

Senator Staffield, republican, Oregon, chairman of the committee, charged O. M. Butler, secretary of the American Forestry Association, in having made a trip through the west last summer "to discredit the hearing on this proposed legislation."

Butler denied the charge, saying: "That was the purpose of the trip," said Staffield, "to knock about it."

Butler insisted that grazing had been limited to the growth of pine in the forests. He read from a stockman's publication an article depicting grazing as injurious to the forests.

"That statement is incorrect," said Butler. "Why is it incorrect?" Cameron asked.

Butler replied by reading from the report of the environmental survey in charge of the experiment station at the University of Idaho.

IDAHOANS MUST USE MORE BEET SUGAR

A very fine example of the necessity of cooperation, in using Idaho products, in order to keep a very important industry in Idaho, is called to the attention of Idahoans. The Idaho Home Industries Association, in discussing the sugar beet controversy, in which growers are asking for an $8.00 per ton guarantee. The direct point is that if more beet sugar were used in Idaho, allowing the sugar companies to take advantage of the freight differential, more money could be paid the beet growers of Idaho.

The present contract guarantees the farmers $6.00 per ton for their sugar beets and a bonus contingent upon the price of sugar for the season. In 1925 the average price was $7.61 to the farmer and in the past three years the average price paid per ton in most sections was $8.29. It, however, appears that the sugar companies cannot afford to take the hazard involved in guaranteeing $8.00 per ton. One of the important reasons for this is that of the 5,000,000 tons of sugar consumed in the United States annually only about 2,500,000 tons is grown or refined in the western states. The demand for cane sugar even in western states and the cheapness of production of Cuban sugar as compared with the standard of living of the western farmer and the scale of prices paid his employees, naturally makes an $8.00 per ton guarantee a hazard.

On the other hand cost of production of sugar beets is variously estimated at from $60 to $77.50 per acre. The yield per acre on the Minidoka project in 1924 was 3.6 tons but in 1925 this increased to 9.6 per acre. In the southeastern section the average yield for last season was approximately 12 tons per acre. The growers feel that this is too narrow a margin for the production of a profitable crop and that the price should not be set by the percentage of extraction made by the poorer mills, approximately 73 per cent, but by a higher percentage due to better mills and a higher percentage of saccharose content. The only $8.00 contract being offered is by the Great Western Sugar Co. in Colorado, because of a competitive fight with the Holly Co.

The important fact brought out is that the beet growers in Idaho could be guaranteed a higher price for their beets if more beet sugar were used in Idaho and in the intermountain section. The use of more sugar would give the sugar companies the advantage of the freight differential and guarantee a better margin of profit for the extra tons sold in the intermountain section, which would be distributed to the beet growers as a higher guarantee for their product.

BURBANK AND THE DEITY

James D. WHELAN.

The religious opinions of Luther Burbank regarding which, for instance, the Idaho Falls Times-Register ran an editorial comment, recently reproduced, are of far less importance than the opinion of the same famous Californian on the subject of potatoes, pumpkins, fruits and flowers on which he is an acknowledged authority. Contrary to the often accepted theory that because a man may make a shining success in one line, his opinions must necessarily be of value in all; the facts often are that too intense application to one branch of study incapacitates him from getting a proper perspective of other things. It is true, indeed, that study in one particular line, may be of great benefit in aiding investigations along similar lines. Wagesman, the great international authority on ants, on the psychology of which he wrote a whole volume, found it necessary in making comparisons, to extend his studies to both animal and human psychology. Though a moderate evolutionist, he arrived at the conclusion that the rationality of man differed from the mental activities of both insects and animals, that they could not have had a common origin, and that, hence, the intellect of man must be the direct gift of God. In this Wagesman was reasoning within one particular branch of knowledge, namely psychology, on which he was a recognized authority.

But nobody, not even Burbank, can discuss the mental reactions of a squash; or the psychology of an Irish Cobbler, or even a Burbank spud. In fact, there is a tendency toward materialism in conducting investigations exclusively in purely material things, and his conclusions, so far from being considered authoritative because of such investigations, might be looked on with more caution for that very reason.
