You Can't Stay Where You Are

You turn through a kodak aim and smile at old-style clothes. Skirts cluttering the ankles... hats perched high up on hair... wasp waists... awkward sleeves—odd how your taste has changed!

Yet day by day your taste changes in all you wear and do. You don't like the same books, enjoy the same movies, choose the same underwear; prefer the same soap you did a short while ago. You are so used to the better, you wonder why you like the old. Advertisements make you know the better as soon as it's proved to be better. They tell of good things accepted as good taste in the best homes. The hosiery, glass-curtains, lighting fixtures other modern use; why their use is preferred. Advertisements influence so many around you, sooner or later you'll feel the change. Even if you never read an advertisement, you'll use in time some of the conveniences which advertisements urge you to use today. Advertisements form a tide of taste that sweeps you forward; you can't stand still. Since you'll enjoy what they advertise anyway, why not begin enjoying it now?

JEFFERSON BOOK AT LIBRARY

BY JAMES D. WHELAN.

"The Life and Letters of Thomas Jefferson," by Frank W. Hirst, a new volume just added to the shelves of the Twin Falls public library.

The career of Jefferson is covered in a way that completely refutes the charges of his enemies that he was merely a theorist, an unscrupulous politician, or a "shifty doctrinaire," timid and cowardly.

Though President Lincoln and the first President Inarison were great enough to defy the powers of monopoly and give credit to Jefferson, these great organized interests, with spare instinct, have ever tried to the anti-Jeffersonian, and furnished sinews of war to fight democracy.

Of course, the entangling alliance letter is quoted, and Hirst seems to think it still applicable; though he quotes, not merely the Jefferson letter written when Napoleon took over Louisiana, regarding the necessity of marrying ourselves to the British fleet; but quotes another letter over two years later formally suggesting an alliance with Britain.

On the tariff his position did not change in essentials for 41 years. To say he favored permanent, protective tariff because he enforced an embargo is absurd. He favored an embargo, though he admitted it would hurt us, because he believed it would hurt England more and compel her to revoke the infamous Orders of Council against our trade.

Hirst shows that Jefferson, in theory a free trader, was in practice in favor of reciprocity. Speaking of the difference between Jefferson and his great rival he says: "Hamilton acknowledged the economic supremacy of free trade, but advocated the protection of native industries on nationalist grounds."

How much conditions 15 years ago resemble those now existing can be seen by comparing the letter of Jefferson to those just before his death in 1826, with current congressional speeches. Hirst summarizes his letter as follows: "The protectionists, he cries called it 'regulation of commerce'—to take the earnings of depressed agriculture and put them into the pockets of flourishing manufacturers while the moneyed incorporations 'under the guise and cloak of their favored branches of manufactures, commerce and navigation, were riding and ruling over the plundered ploughman and beggared yeomanry.'"

The chapters of Hirst on Jefferson's fight for independence and the character and origin of his arguments and principles thereon are good, though not quite completely worked out.

The Man with Three Names by Harold MacGrath

Mandell still kept three or four sows home, and frequently now they roiled into the country in the early morning. The women might forget to be brilliant, frosty morning. They had abandoned at the top of the hill where she had met Catherine. The brush swept and the dogs howled and the flogging blue water of the lake gurgled in her down hole.

"What's the first glorious name old Mandell picked in an uncertain voice? 'What was that?'" "The 'Sawtooth.'"

"All this with a gesture. 'To my genuine is to fool' 'I love in my life that I ever forget a man will, daddy; they never failed me.'"

"What was that?" "The 'Sawtooth.'"

FARM RELIEF LEGISLATION

By GEORGE E. ROBERTS

From The Monthly Bank Letter For June Issued by The National City Bank of New York

Congress at this writing continues in a quagmire over agricultural legislation. The Haysen bill, which provides for certain agricultural subsidies for disposing of farm surplus, is the export trade without affecting the price of the commodity. It is a fund of $175,000,000 from the Treasury to put into operation...

Senator McNary, are the most objectionable. Both bills would distribute what amounts to a Treasury subsidy to certain agricultural products and would involve the Government in price fixing. This country should be able to dispose of its farm surplus on any plan of setting up a Government export corporation to sell foodstuffs at lower prices than to our own workers at home. Moreover, such artificial stabilization would be harmful to agriculture itself, because it would tend to stimulate the continued production of surplus and aggravate the very conditions it was meant to remedy.

Proposed Legislation Unnecessary. All of these measures, however, if they are passed, will have the effect of increasing the price of production and is getting a larger price for the farmer's product. This, in turn, represents not more than a natural change from a country in which the farmer is the dominant industry to one of diversified industries, a normal and desirable change in the structure of the domestic economy.
