FARM-SANITATION.

(By W. S. Starr.)

The essentials of good health are pure air, pure water, pure food, plenty of exercise and pleasant surroundings.

The first—pure air—we have without stint.

The second—pure water—is not so plentiful and its purity is not everywhere that could be desired.

As to pure food, the farmer has a decided advantage over the rest of mankind. If his food is not pure and wholesome it is the result of his own carelessness.

He naturally gets plenty of exercise bustling for the other necessities of life.

The question which will occupy the greater part of our time is the one of securing for the farm home a supply of water as pure and healthful as the present conditions will allow, considering the financial ability of the average farmer.

The general conditions on the farm are conducive to rugged health.

Most farmers take pride in their strong constitution and on being exempt from the many ills that the human family is heir to.

But dysentery and typhoid fever are diseases which vex many a man, woman and child. These diseases often take the whole family down and are often fatal, that can, for almost every instance be traced to water infected by bacillus coli or bacillus typhosus.

It so appears to us that the water supply for the South Side Twin Falls tract must always come as it does now, from the canal. The water in the main canal is fairly clean and pure. But many are situated several miles from the main canal.

People living on creeks and laterals should be careful to pollute the water by dumping refuse near or into it or allow any sewage to drain in any ditch or culvert which supplies their less-fortunate neighbors below them. We should put in practice the Christian precept, "Love thy neighbor as thyself", or think of yourself in his place and treat him as you would like to be treated.

During the irrigation season the water in a majority of the creeks and laterals will be unfit for domestic use. The water from these creeks and meadows carries much organic matter which is anything but healthful.

As the tract becomes more densely populated and more stock is kept on the farms, more manure used on the land, more vegetable matter worked into the soil, the danger from impure water will become worse and worse. It is plain enough that we should not use water from such creeks and laterals during the irrigation season, if at any time. Nor should cisterns be filled at this time or when rain is falling or about to fall. Cisterns properly constructed and filled when the water is at its best, and equipped with a cistern pump or water elevator and purifier are giving general satisfaction. Exposed filters and filters built in connection with it.

But let me emphasize the fact here that disease germs, such as bacillus typhosus cannot be filtered out of water. Pure air is a great purifier. The mountain brook, the roaring swirling creek or river are good examples of this. This is nature's way of disinfecting water.

The cistern bucket pump which carries the air down to the bottom of the cistern, to bubble up through the water to the top, is worth more than as a water purifier than all the filters ever invented. Water in a cistern equipped with one of these pumps never becomes stagnant but, instead, like good wine, improves with age.

Nearly every case of typhoid fever on the tract can be traced to the use of water, either from the lower flows where the water was pumped from Rock creek, the natural drainage from an old settled community, where much stock is fed during the winter, or from the water used directly from small laterals, when it not only becomes very warm during the day but is polluted by the drainage from fields and barn yards. We readily see that every farmer should have a cistern of not less than 100 barrels capacity, which can be filled when the water is cold and before the irrigation season begins and by judicious use this will last the average family for drinking and culinary purposes during the warm part of the summer and until the irrigation of crops ceases.

Should our water supply become infected with disease germs so as to cause an epidemic of fever, we must resort to the use of disinfectants.

Much progress has been made on these lines in late years and iron and copper sulphates have proven effective in destroying bacillus typhosus. The copper sulphate when used in proportion of 1 to 100,000 has given the best results.

In the sterilization of the water supply for a large city, where the cost of chemicals is quite an item, iron sulphate used with 1 per cent of copper has given good results. However, we have not been able to get hold of anything that just suits the farmer.

In the large expensive plants the sterilizing is done in the filters where the disinfectant is prepared in solution and the water flow is regulated exactly and the solution carefully coated and the amount used, according to a meter. It seems to work perfectly. I believe that if we cannot use these sterilizers by putting them directly into the cisterns, we can easily build our own large and filter the water more slowly and we will use the same system employed in the large plants.

I believe that this is a subject which the government should take up and have their experts devise some safe and practical system for the farmers use, and publish a bulletin giving all necessary information.

Disposition of Sewage.

After discussing the question of water supply we cannot fail to see the close connection of these two subjects.

In taking care of sewage we have these objects in view: To keep our water clean and to dispose of the sewage in a safe and practical system for the farmers use, and publish a bulletin giving all necessary information.

How the water supply of our neighbors...

Few of us have made sufficient permanent improvements to have reached this subject, or "best" come to the point where we can afford to put in a plant for decomposition and disposal of sewage as will become necessary as the tract becomes more densely populated.

However, the dairy farmer who keeps a number of cows must consider this problem from the very first. Dairy products should be produced under strictly hygienic conditions. It is not possible for me to give, in this little paper, the details of any system which would be of direct benefit to anyone, but such information can be obtained by applying to the proper authorities. Bulletin number 143 of the Kansas experiment station, Manhattan, Kansas, gives some good ideas and shows an "average" disposition. It recommends a septic tank, containing partitions where the sewage is decomposed and liquefied. It then runs into pipes of drain tile and led to some convenient plot of ground and used for irrigation.

The purpose of this paper is to awaken the farmers to the necessity of keeping rubbish and manure cleaned up and put where they will do the most good. Keep the farm clean and sanitary. Make it good to look at. Keep the water pure, the air pure, and such a home is the place to live a pure life.

We want our homes on this tract to be model homes. We want to see every farm home surrounded by well kept grounds—bright and clean—clean pure. Such conditions will not only save you doctor bills and pay in a financial way, but will keep the boys and girls contented on the farms and they will grow up better citizens.

The condition on our Twin Falls tract are unsurpassed for the ideal farm home. Let us be content with nothing less. Go to work on these lines. Your neighbors will fall in line. They can't afford not to. It will pay if you want to sell, but as a rule when you have all these things about you, I am sure you will feel that there is no other place in the whole wide world for you and that is a farm home on the Twin Falls tract.

OVER TAXED

Hundreds of Twin Falls Readers know What It Means.

The kidneys are overtaxed:
 Have too much to do.
 They fall about it in many aches and pains.
 Backache, headache, headache.
 Early symptoms of kidney ills.
 Urinary troubles, diabetes, Bright's disease follow.

Mrs. Edith Kustion, living in the second ward, Idaho Falls, Idaho, says: "I can heartily recommend Doan's Kidney Pills as they effected a complete and permanent cure in the case of my son, now 15 years of age, who was suffering from kidney complaint. There was a terrible pain through his kidneys and across the small of his back and it was so acute that he was forced to go around in a stooped-over position. His kidneys were too frequent in action he had inflammatory rheumatism in his legs and feet and the latter was so badly swollen that he could not put on his shoes and for weeks we had to wrap up his feet in bandages. We gave him many remedies but received no relief until we finally procured Doan's Kidney Pills and he began using them. He was wonderfully relieved in a short time, steadily improved and is now well. He has not felt a symptom of rheumatism or kidney trouble since that time, and we all gladly endorse Doan's Kidney Pills as the remedy that brought about this change in his condition."

POULTRY.
(By Mrs. B. F. McPherson).
In mercantile life the first few days of the year are usually devoted to taking stock, and in our business I think it proper that we should begin the year in the same way. I do not mean merely that we should balance our accounts on our ledger and ascertain on which side our balance is, this while important and necessary is only a beginning. The most important need is that we realize that the mistakes we made last year and find a way to correct them and that we recognize the opportunities before us and fit ourselves to make the most of them.

This country has both advantages and disadvantages that we did not meet farther east. In the first place we do not have such heavy dews and seldom have rain to interfere with raising the young chicks, while on the other hand the scarcity of wood is very hard on them and for some reason which I cannot explain, chicks that are hatched late do not grow off the early ends so well. Of course they can provide shade for them by planting corn or sunflowers, and by hatching very early we will avoid the other difficulty.

I should advise those who do not hatch before May to hatch in another way as it will give us early pullets for winter layers and they will be grown up and out of the way while the warm weather lasts. Then, too, the feed question has been somewhat of a problem to me. I like to feed a good deal of corn as I think the young chicks grow and develop faster and I get a much greater egg yield from my hens when I feed it, for at least one-third of their ration. I have only been able to buy it at times, when it was scarce from the east. But the worst handicap to poultry raisers here is the exorbitant price of lumber and this seems to be a disease for which there is no remedy. If one by any chance is found I am sure the whole poultry fraternity will bless the one who discovers it. When I go into my hen houses and see a hundred hens crowded into the room that should be occupied by but 50 and realize that I have spent as much as one or two such houses should have cost, I feel that a crime has been committed that should be answered for either by individual or corporation.

I wonder if my fellow poultry raisers all keep an account of what their hen feed costs and what they do with the poultry they sell so as to know just how much profit accrues to them for keeping them? It seems to me a matter of course to take up a few eggs and take to the store—that the matter is easily lost sight of and often I've heard the egg money mentioned in the way they would if they had found it, but by any chance do you think the hens benefited as having eaten their heads off etc. and this when no account of expenditures and returns had been kept. You will never know certainly for yourself that your hens are the most profitable of any stock kept on your farm till you have kept this account for at least one year, and if you do it at a steady and regular basis for it will be a revelation to you. Some may object that their hens are not kept yarded and consequently they do not know how much their by-lining costs them. Very well, then put it this way, the hens help themselves—to what? The grain left in the straw when threshing was done, what is left in a corner feeding that nothing else would get; what thrown out of the barn in manure, and perhaps other things that are worth about as much to you, and in this case, what do you do to return to the owner of a story I read the other day. An old colored man went to a white man and asks for a job, and was told: "All right, you can go to the right and pull out driftwood and when you sell it you can have half the money." Only in the case of the hens you get it all. I hope however, if your hens do provide for their own wants in the manner outlined and the eggs are clear gain that you will keep a one-sided account in order to know how much you are in debt to them if you haven't done it before let me persuade you to begin at once.

If you will pardon me for relating some of my own experience I will tell you what my book showed from last year. I had during the year a total age of 100 hens from which I got 10,000 eggs. I hatched over 500 chicks and raised about 340. The heavy loss was largely due to crows which might have taken 300 or more and the cold rain in June was responsible for almost the remainder of it. I sold 140 of the surplus at $2.00 each for $280.00 and for the eggs I received $21.00, making the total receipts from the hens $299.00 for the year. The feed for hens cost $117.48 and feed for raising the young chicks, including oil for incubators and brooders was $58.81, making the total expense $206.29 which leaves a net profit of $192.71 plus 150 eggs retained for layers which would bring $150.00 if put on the market now. This added to the cash profit from hens equals $342.71, a little better than $200.00 per hen for the year. In this calculation I have given the hens credit for all the eggs used for incubation and culinary purposes at the prices I should have been compelled to pay if I'd bought them. I did the same in regard to the chickens used.

My breed, as some of you know, is S. C. W. Lechmans and when I started my breeding pens last year I selected my best layers and what I consider the type of hen that came nearest to the description in the Standard. The two points I had in view were eggs and uniformity of size and appearance. The results show that my pullets with very few exceptions are of the same type. I expect that their mothers were more uniform, and they give promise of excelling them as layers, as my last year's pullets began laying when three weeks younger than those did the year before. When we do not keep these accounts we use the money and do not know the credit balance. It is a waste of time to go into detail to pave the way for some other things I'm going to say about Leaks.
