The fruit growers of this county who really desire to boost home industry should investigate the proposition of the Twin Falls Seed & Flour Company to furnish apple boxes that fall for exactly the same cost that the boxes can be obtained from any outside concern. Any man who will not patronize home industries when he can get as good or better terms elsewhere, is not a true citizen of this county. It is something worth with his resources. Twin Falls county, needs more industries of this kind. It is the only one of its kind in the state. It will produce more workers to dispense a payroll.

The question of keeping out competitive power companies in Southern Idaho is gaining to take the present position a good many votes in the county. The county board has been elected to the office of the county board. It is the duty of the county board to see that the public interest is protected. It is the duty of the county board to see that the public interest is protected. It is the duty of the county board to see that the public interest is protected.

Inherent right granted by every state to exercise actions of the city governments with regard to franchises granted in good faith before the passage of the act in no justice nor good faith to the people of that community. If the contention of the commission is correct then have the people placed an awful weight in the hands of a few men who can if disposed, work a hardship on the people not intended by the public utilities law nor stated to anybody under the state constitution.

The ability that both sides about the venue of the Judiciary has gotten some pretty bad publicity in the past few years as the idea of the infallibility of the bench grows dimmer. Federal Judge Spore in the Southland is the latest victim of popular demand to cut off the present jurisdiction of the bench and thereby to have another bench and thereby to fall from power. All of the symptoms bench makes his case for United States Senator. All over the state many newspapers are carrying the report that Judge Justice will be in part responsible for the decision in the Capital News Center of court verdicts. When the bench is taken to the back of the common opinion in the future further political protection it will have right reason to expect to be responsible for the decision in the Capital News Center of court verdicts. When the bench is taken to the back of the common opinion in the future further political protection it will have right reason to expect to be responsible for the decision in the Capital News Center of court verdicts.

GOVERNMENT RAILROADS IN IDAHO. The vital need of a government railway system in Idaho to reach the vast resources of the main body of the state in connection with the Alaska bill, but many members of congress and newspaper editors who oppose the plan need a very much altered view of the plan that they should use the words of the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. It is the duty of the government to see that the public interest is protected. It is the duty of the government to see that the public interest is protected. It is the duty of the government to see that the public interest is protected.

congress opposed to the plan. Among the friends of the measure few favor public ownership as a general policy. Senator George H. Chamberlain of Oregon, who was the principal backer in the upper house, argues that the building of a $35,000,000 system of railroads in Alaska is a matter of expediency, and that there is no other way to develop its resources in the interest of the people of the territory and of the country at large. According to Senator Chamberlain, the Fort-Worth Railroad (Denver) makes the case for the opposition. If the government ownership of railroads would really be the calamitous nature they predict, then what possible objection can they have to the construction of this railway in remote and isolated Alaska? If the contrary, they should warmly welcome such a development of future because it would not only take the people away and for all of any banking for public ownership of this character.

The fact that those opponents of government ownership are so dependent on the Alaska bill, and that they are so ready to denounce it, and that the government would turn out a subsidy. In truth, the latest question of government ownership has been little to do with the Alaska problem. The nation is here face to face with a practical condition, not with a general theory, and some of our wisest statesmen, who are otherwise opposed to government ownership, recognize in its application to the Alaskan situation an essential safeguard in the territory's exploitation in the public interest. It is the duty of the government to see that the public interest is protected. It is the duty of the government to see that the public interest is protected. It is the duty of the government to see that the public interest is protected.

to employ the army engineers corps to use the Panama canal machinery and equipment; to purchase or condemn property needed, including right of way and terminals; to make just traffic connections with existing lines; to borrow forty millions as needed for cost; and to set aside 10 per cent of earnings under trust fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission as a redemption fund. This is government ownership. But we must have something in Alaska. The government's railroad measure, says the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, is "an act of long-term justice—a measure of fair and square dealing of certain ultimate benefit to the United States as a whole." And in this connection these paragraphs from one of President Wilson's recent addresses to congress may prove to be helpful.

The people of Alaska should be given the full territorial form of government and Alaska, as a territory, should be unlocked. One key to it is a system of railways. These the government should build and administer, and the ports and terminals should itself control in the interest of all who will use them for the service and development of the territory and the people.

But the construction of railways is the first step; it is only through the key to the "treasure house" and Alaska, as a territory, should be unlocked. One key to it is a system of railways. These the government should build and administer, and the ports and terminals should itself control in the interest of all who will use them for the service and development of the territory and the people. Secretary of Interior Lane is one of the chief advocates of the government ownership plan. His views are outlined up thus: "This is a new policy for the United States. Very true. This is a new policy for the United States, and policies change with new conditions. The Alaska bill is a new policy for the United States. It is the duty of the government to see that the public interest is protected. It is the duty of the government to see that the public interest is protected. It is the duty of the government to see that the public interest is protected.

the test in time means that the fact is practically worthless to the navy; that it is explained that the coal tested by the navy at the Philadelphia probably was not a fair sample. Concerning the coal deposits and their availability, the Philadelphia, North America (Pros) has this to say: "There are, in fact, only two known accessible fields of high-grade coal in Alaska. One is in the Bering River field, fifty square miles, lying about twenty-five miles from the notorious Central Ferry; the other is the Matanuska field, seventy square miles, lying about 200 miles north of Seward on Resurrection Bay. Both contain vast quantities of anthracite and high-grade bituminous. Obviously, their development depends wholly upon transportation. There is a 500-mile haul from Cordova, fifty miles northwest of Cordova, to the Seward, and the Seward's copper mines, but projected branch to the Bering coast that was abandoned when the government very recently withdrew all the coal lands in the territory. Eighty interests started to build from Seward to the Matanuska district, but completed only one-third of the line. And there the matter rests.

The most obvious advantage would be that the government would have an inexhaustible supply of good steam coal for the use of the Pacific fleet. There is a naval coaling station at Seward, and it is estimated that the best-quality fuel could be secured there at a cost of $2.50 a ton. The Pacific fleet consumes 270,000 tons a year, and pays for it from $2.50 to $3.00 a ton, plus the cost of fuel for freight charges from the Atlantic seaboard around the Horn.

Five Thousand New Cars. New York, Jan. 20.—Five thousand new cars, including an estimated $5,500,000, have been ordered by the Union Pacific Railroad company, it was announced yesterday. This is the largest order ever placed by the company for new equipment will start in April and all of the cars to be turned over to the company before the next crop-moving season.

ADAPTABILITY OF SOY BEAN CROP

Irregularities of Season Will Often Cause Aftergrowth—Easily Harvested.

Soy beans are very similar to clover with respect to season of growth and cultural requirements. Since the two crops occupy the same place in crop rotation, it is well to contrast the adaptability of a bollworm of the Delawarean nation.

CHAPTER VI.—The Face in the Crowd.

Up to the present moment the two young men had been confronted only by a series of mysterious incidents, nothing more than a name and a name which had been given to the object of interest. Tom unceremoniously forced his bulk through the press, being closely followed by Van Vechten.

Tom was very close to it when they resumed their seats. Alexander, with most despondent, refused to do anything at all had happened, then the clock struck the hour, and a taxi cab whirled madly up and came to a skidding stop in front of Number 3213. The body heavily descended, a fashionably well-groomed lady, who fairly ran up the steps; and before she had time to open and she darted through the opening and was swallowed up.

Tom was surprised and disgruntled. "Now what do you think that?" giving the exclamation the blindest sort of intonation. He was, of course, thinking only of the outcome of the bet.

SKETCH OF WORK

The New President of the University of Idaho.

On Friday, January 27th, on the recommendation of the state commissioner of education, the state board unanimously elected to the presidency of the University of Idaho, Dr. A. H. Brannon, dean of the College of Liberal Arts, University of North Dakota. He will begin his duties in April. Dr. Brannon was the final choice of a long list of names under consideration and is a man eminently fitted for the position by his qualifications, his standing in the state that confront the president of the largest state institution. For nineteen years he has been engaged in educational work in Iowa in North Dakota that in many respects are identical with those of this state, and he, therefore, brings to the any and greater field here the best of his varied and valuable work. He is to be congratulated on her success in obtaining a man so well qualified to embrace the unique opportunities that lie before him in administering the affairs of the University of Idaho. In view of the fact that four other large institutions in the country have been looking for a president who would understand the situation, it is not surprising that he was so qualified to fill such a position in a state where the board of education are much gratified by the result of their selection. It is hoped that the selection of Dr. Brannon will raise the prestige of the university to the highest level of excellence for the new position. His high scholarship, tested by his extensive teaching experience, his administrative and executive and administrative power in educational and business lines, and his highest character expressed in his winning and genial personality. A former colleague of Mr. Brannon in the University of North Dakota writes in a letter: "Dr. Brannon can be induced to accept the presidency of the University of Idaho you are to be sincerely congratulated. It is not surprising that it would not be possible to secure a better man for the place. Not only is scholarship fit he is eminently fitted for such a position, but his high reputation, though even in that respect it would not be easy to find a man more thoroughly prepared than he. His experience in administrative work is ample and his success unquestioned. I have known many men engaged in educational work but I can recall no one who would more fittingly and more unreservedly recommend for your consideration. Above all, Dean Brannon is a perfect gentleman, a characteristic of splendid address and a man who makes friends appear.

pendently without effort. I have known of these qualities being possessed by many others but I have never known of any desirable article to be grouped by any other individual. One of the leading scientists of our country, Prof. John S. Coulter, of the University of Chicago, who was also for many years president of Lake Forest University, and president of the American Microscopical Society, writes: "I do not believe I could think of an available man better suited to your purpose."

The new president of the university was born in Indiana, of Scotch-Irish ancestry. He graduated at Wabash College in 1889, studied at the world-renowned Harvard Biological Laboratory at Woods Hole, Massachusetts, and later in 1912 received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at the University of Chicago. Dr. Brannon's teaching experience is varied and extended: he was laboratory assistant in botany at Wabash College, an instructor in agriculture, biology, P. Wayne High School, Indiana, and professor of botany, University of North Dakota. From the beginning of his work at the University of North Dakota, Dr. Brannon has been engaged in various projects in the state in agriculture. First a biological survey was made covering especially the grasses and cereals of the state and also an investigation of the insects and diseases of a group of fruit production. In both of these respects Dr. Brannon believes that the state of Idaho has great possibilities for the future. The establishment of a state biological station at Boise, Idaho, under the direction of Dr. Brannon.

The second of the service work is represented by the University School of Medicine whose organization and enrollment was directed and worked out by Dr. Brannon. The school has been in existence for seven years. The standard for work was such that the school was ranked among the first twelve schools of medicine by the Association of American Medical Colleges in 1909. Associated with this was the development of the North Dakota State Public Health Department, which Dr. Brannon organized and for which he was instrumental in securing state aid. Third, Dr. Brannon has been closely associated with the extension work of the university. The field work consisted of lectures in connection with high schools and activities for the Better Living Association.

In 1911, Dr. Brannon was appointed as dean of the College of Liberal Arts in the university, a position which is not only in importance as the second highest in the university but also the most important. Although Dr. Brannon's work has involved some heavy administrative tasks, he has made valuable contributions to scientific and educational literature - the result of the many reports of the North Dakota Biological Survey, articles on grasses and forest plants, on diseases and other botanical subjects of both scientific and practical importance. He has published articles on the study of floods in the Biological Section, which Dr. Brannon is at present engaged in an investigation of great practical interest in the people of Idaho.

The influence of a person in such a prominent position as that of the president of the state university will be far-reaching not only in reaching the lives of hundreds of Idaho's future citizens but in helping to guide the state's industrial and social problems of the state at large. It is a privilege to have a man of Dr. Brannon's caliber as its leader. His combination of qualifications for such leadership and the large and varied opportunities of the new field will bring him to greater usefulness in helping Idaho to solve her problems and realize her great future.
