BARNEY O'NEIL DENIED PARDON

State Board Takes Unanimous Action in Denying Petition

BANKER GUTHY OF CHIME SAYS BOARD IN DECISION

Pete of "Technical Offense" Exploded Had Every Advantage in Trial.

Barney O'Neill must be content to remain while longer in prison than the wait of the most patient man, for his request for pardon was rejected Wednesday afternoon by the unanimous vote of Governor Wallace. Attorney General Peterson and Secretary of State Glidford, in announcing the decision after the hearing, gave particular attention to the fact that O'Neill had had the benefit of some of the best legal talent in this state and in tribal Columbus, Ind., who had tried him at a trial which was conducted in a country other than the one in which his offenses were committed; and later the whole case was reviewed by the supreme court.

In this statement it is denied that O'Neill's offense was technical. On the contrary, it was a violation of the law, and the state's contention of unlawfulness of money in the bank account should have been regarded as a trust fund.

The reasons for the board's action are so clearly set forth in the statement of the attorney general:

"It has been our desire and conscientious endeavor to weigh and consider every argument made on either side of the pending question, and in doing so we have given full attention to the name, with the desire of doing absolute justice as nearly as possible, not only to this applicant and his many petitioning friends, but also to the public at large, and to the community whereof the offense was committed."

"We have carefully gone over all of the evidence in the case submitted at the trial, the petitions filed, and have listened with open mind to the able presentation of the facts by the defense attorney, and the various seafarines of Shoshone county, who appeared before the board."

"We are impressed with the view that the law should not be enforced in a manner which would be calculated to inflict punishment upon one who has testified that when punishment has been inflicted with the intent of punishment, with due regard for the dignity of the law, the safeguarding of the public welfare, and the welfare of the individual in the future, the sentence that should be given to all who may be tempted to commit like offenses, and the fullest possible reformation of the criminal, that leniency should be exercised."

This petition, however, did not bring the benefits and advantages that could possibly be had to one accused of crime. He received the defense of one of the state's best lawyers at his trial, and was fully exonerated by the defendant in the courtroom, where he fought extradition to this country.

"His case has been passed upon by the supreme court of Idaho, where he received the able assistance of the lawyer who tried his case. He was granted a writ of habeas corpus, and credit is given to the author of the opinion, which the offense was committed before a fair and impartial jury, and before an able and upright trial court. These accented the law undoubtedly, and the court, in the words of the defense attorney, in the vindication of the law and the utmost possible leniency toward the accused."

"The error for which the petitioner is being sentenced, is not, as I understand it, a technical one, but rather an offense which involves a violation of the banking laws of the state which laws were enacted primarily for the benefit of the public, composed of all classes, and in applications of them, it appears that the public is to be protected from the result of misuse of these funds, because a deposit in a bank is a trust fund. The testimony in this case shows a waiver disclaimed for this trust, a turning of these trust funds into self-service, and the taking of a loan which has been found to be true by an unbiased jury under the direction of one of the state's most learned and conscientious judges. We do not feel that in justice to the public, and dependents in this case, the law should be applied which would at this time not make the individual liable to the court and jury, when heard the evidence and were doubtless as true to their sworn duties as we could possibly be."

"The petitioner, serving a minimum sentence of two years, has been in confinement at the penitentiary for five months, and although great consideration has been given to the hundreds of ex-citizens who have petitioned the board to have his sentence commuted, the influence of these petitions upon us cannot be denied, we nevertheless feel that in justice to the public at large, and to the petitioner himself, we should not at this time vote for par-

A PROCLAMATION

Home Industry Week, April 13-18, 1914.

A custom of something recently origin has sprung up in this state of observing a certain week in the year during which there has been requested to focus a proclamations calling attention to the importance of this movement to secure a better encouragement and, consequently development of our home industry.

If required no argument is demanded, that in helping to build up the business of our neighbor we do but help develop the community and thus, in so far as possible, help to make it as far as possible to patent first those industries which are located in our home communities; second, those industries which are located in the Pacific northwest, because they are the most numerous and the most important.

Now, therefore, I, John M. Haines, Governor of Idaho, do hereby issue this proclamation and set aside the week beginning Monday the 13th day of April and ending Saturday the 18th day of April, as Home Industry week, and advise the careful observation of the same by all citizens to the end that the spirit which it is intended to instill, will be learned by all and that this will result in great development of our home resources during the coming year.

Given whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the state to be affixed this 11th day of March, 1914.

JOHN M. HAINES,
Governor.

By the Governor:
WILFRED GIFFORD,
Secretary of State.

EVAN VEECHEN.

Book 1.

CHAPTER I.—Van Veechen, a young man of leisure, is returning from his vacation in the Twin Falls country. He has been away and is anxious to get back to his work.

CHAPTER II.—Several persons at reception in the hotel lobby.

CHAPTER III.—Van Veechen is a guest at a social gathering in the crowded saloon, making the acquaintance of the girl friend of the host.

CHAPTER IV.—Van Veechen is a guest at a social gathering in the crowded saloon, making the acquaintance of the girl friend of the host.

CHAPTER V.—Detective Flint calls. Van Veechen gets his version of the story.

CHAPTER VI.—Tom Phinney goes along with his friend to rescue some persons in a passing motor boat.

CHAPTER VII.—Van Veechen goes to the House of Mystery. He sees one of them, Mr. Callie, a shore later and finds him dead.

CHAPTER VIII.—Van Veechen goes to a house.

CHAPTER IX.—Van Veechen goes to the House of Mystery. Van recognises it belonging to Pale Carew.

CHAPTER X.—The sweetest girl in the world comes to Van Veechen to disclose her identity. Tom declares he will meet her again.

CHAPTER XI.—Van Veechen comforted in front of one of the windows overlooking the street, when the back door suddenly opened. He looked round and beheld Tom Phinney. Receiving a hasty greeting until Tom drew nearer, he was about to turn away again, but something in Tom's appearance and bearing abruptly struck him as being a bit cold. He gave the friend a sharp glance.

CHAPTER XII.—Tom's mysterious conduct was in complete contrast to his ordinary boisterous arrival; a grave and thoughtful cast now upon his usually good-humored countenance, and he was contemplating Van Veechen with a preoccupied stare which plainly took no note of his surroundings.

Stepping all at once, to become aware of the figure over by the window, Tom halted, uttered a faint "Hello, friend," then proceeded to a chair beside Van Veechen's into which he sank deliberately.

Van Veechen's eyes were drawn from time to time, gazing more and more puzzled, as the minutes passed without sound or movement from his companion.

"Well?" he dryly broke the silence at last. "It was an invigorating show-off we had last night."

A groan from Tom was the sole response. He didn't even trouble to look around. Then Van Veechen inhaled a short burst of obscenities into his mouth.

"But it had turned delightful today," he said, "from you."

"Great Scott!" cried the other impatiently. "What's the matter with you? You're life! Or is it money—your—your—what's the word? That neither of the other two possibilities had power to distract him, the least."

Tom, now slowly recovered his head and looked at Van Veechen, glancing. Without replying, he silently fell to caressing one wrist, which appeared to his companion to be somewhat swollen and bruised. Van Veechen's countenance mounted.

"What have you broken?" he demanded.

"I'm afraid I'll have to answer your question." "Oh, no, old Rocky Gavins! Then again don't be hasty, regarding the other wrist, which also was discolored and swollen. Van Veechen observed,

"Rocky Gavins?—h'm. What's happened to your hand?"

Tom flushed and tried to hide the telltale marks, but finding this impossible, he came suddenly back to earth.

"H'm," he abruptly announced. "I mean to have a look."

"I'm afraid I'll have to answer your question." "Oh, no, old Rocky Gavins! Then again don't be hasty, regarding the other wrist, which also was discolored and swollen. Van Veechen observed,

"Rocky Gavins?—h'm. What's happened to your hand?"

Tom colored again. "Gosh!" he growled sullenly. "A follow might as well try talking seriously to an idiot."

"Believe me," said Van Veechen, earnestly, "I never was in a more sober mood in my life. Mayn't I be permitted come vent for my stupification? You appear here utterly unlike the chap I know, and sit for minutes, about as garulous as a corpse, then overwhelm me with the amazing revelation that you are—last in love! Tom, my dear fellow, I feel as if I were getting married in a minute. Tell me frank, what is it?"

"She's the tenderest, most musical singer in the world," said Tom fervently.

"That's the genuine poetic touch," said his friend. "And her hair?—her eyes?—in the tall or short? Paycock, or Diana? Honey or Hippolyte?"

"I—I don't know," stammered Tom.

"What?" Tom twisted and squirmed uneasily in his chair.

"Dash it all!" blurted he at last. "I was all new for company here; I didn't have any idea what sort of girl I'd find out of me. When I say I don't know what she looks like, I mean just that, but it makes me out a blooming hussy! But I haven't seen her. I have; she's the best girl who looks like her. Yet I want to find her worse than ever. I wanted anything in my life."

The other's aspect grew grave enough now. They had plainly manifested that they had parted Sunday, Tom had undergone no experience of significance that had affected him profoundly.

"You, pardon, Mr. Van Veechen," said Alexander, "but I saw you wasn't reading a paper this morning. Have you seen today's Sphere?"

The name started him.

"The Sphere? No, let me have it." He flung the sheet open. And there in glaring headlines extending clear across the front page, was a question that struck him like a blow between the eyes:

"WHICH IS PAIGE CAREW?—TALENTED VIOLINIST MYSTERICALLY MISSING."

And below this was a unadorned, two column half-tone portrait, which may have been made from a photograph of his cousin.

CHAPTER VI.

$500 Reward.

When Rudolph Van Veechen rallied from the staggering blow of the brutal re-creation, he contrived by a mighty effort to focus his attention upon the sensational news-story that lay before, and which tickled so loud as a jay-lab uso of black ink and red ink and double-leaden could make it. It was a "missing girl" headline which bore the name of his cousin, which bore the name of his cousin, and most incongruously of all—doubtless as being the least important factor—Miss Paige Carew.

In the first place, it was made immediately that everybody who knew, or should have known where Paige Carew was, either would not tell, or else they did not know, and it was demonstrated how this reticence was conclusive evidence that she had encountered some unknown fate. Every possible change was made upon the evidence, in the hectic headline: "Where is Paige Carew?"

Rudolph Van Veechen, president of the Rocky Mountain Society for the Protection of Girls, had been equally evasive in his replies. The interview with him was quoted in full, and the allusive comments made it appear as if he were at the time disposed to the verge of insanity.

A recent celebrated case was that of a woman who had been kidnapped, and certain circumstances were "played up" to the deliberate intention of causing him to intimate that the girl had met with a like outcome.

In short, so shortly was the whole world that the Sphere—in its way committed itself, and however Miss Carew might reappear, and whatever the subsequent explanation, it would be good—for another "front page" story, and the Sphere would have nothing to retreat.

"Paige, white with rage, gnashed his teeth. Glancing up to ascertain whether he was the target of the public gaze, he saw that he alone, at least, had his eyes fixed upon him.

"That," gritted he, muttering the sheet with a vicious jab of his pen, "is damnable. If that meddling little reporter were here I'd thrash him within an inch of his life. Lord, won't Uncle Theodore rag—rare bit half when he gets it! Before me, out chapter'll be something doing now."

"Alexander! Where did that boy go?"

As Alexander was upon the steps at once, by his mad, his mad one of childhood, he said:

Van Veechen instructed: "Telephone the Economy garage and have Ramley fetch my touring car home immediately—the largest one."

Enclosed in one of the club's booths, Alexander soon got the garage and next Sunday, when he thus addressed:

"Say, you Ramley kick your boy wants his biggest buzz-wagon at the Postman, C. Q. D. Get it!"

"What's that?"

"Well? Who? Me? Well! I'd rather be a fresh kill than a pickled maul. Here, you, young, and don't get lost on the way, you'll never be able to find Anna."

When his forecasted further requests by speedily hanging up and resuming his occupation of lurking, unobserved but alertly vigilant, for the

"throughly deplorable."

"At any rate—if that hunking brother known anything about Paigie, no man made to tell it; Flint can do what ever he pleases with regard to the survivor."

Their talk wandered far into the realm of speculation, carrying them over the luncheon hour and back to their seats in the lounge. It was profane, and the memory of a passenger whom Rudolph had "overboarded" for Van Veechen served as a welcome diversion, although anticipation lent the incident an unexpected excitement.

He took them with trembling hands: "This first travel to him from Bobby Mawson, who made it a point to oppose to Pale every time he met her."

"Why did you not tell me that Miss Carew was in England?" complained Bobby, regardless of number of words. "Do not know her present address, but will find it without fail before night."

"I—I don't know," stammered Tom. "What?"

Tom twisted and squirmed uneasily in his chair.

"Dash it all!" blurted he at last. "I was all new for company here; I didn't have any idea what sort of girl I'd find out of me. When I say I don't know what she looks like, I mean just that, but it makes me out a blooming hussy! But I haven't seen her. I have; she's the best girl who looks like her. "The Sphere? No, let me have it." He flung the sheet open. And there in glaring headlines extending clear across the front page, was a question that struck him like a blow between the eyes:

"WHICH IS PAIGE CAREW?—TALENTED VIOLINIST MYSTERICALLY MISSING."

And below this was a unadorned, two column half-tone portrait, which may have been made from a photograph of his cousin.

CHAPTER VI.

$500 Reward.

When Rudolph Van Veechen rallied from the staggering blow of the brutal re-creation, he contrived by a mighty effort to focus his attention upon the sensational news-story that lay before, and which tickled so loud as a jay-lab uso of black ink and red ink and double-leaden could make it. It was a "missing girl" headline which bore the name of his cousin, which bore the name of his cousin, and most incongruously of all—doubtless as being the least important factor—Miss Paige Carew.

In the first place, it was made immediately that everybody who knew, or should have known where Paige Carew was, either would not tell, or else they did not know, and it was demonstrated how this reticence was conclusive evidence that she had encountered some unknown fate. Every possible change was made upon the evidence, in the hectic headline: "Where is Paige Carew?"

Rudolph Van Veechen, president of the Rocky Mountain Society for the Protection of Girls, had been equally evasive in his replies. The interview with him was quoted in full, and the allusive comments made it appear as if he were at the time disposed to the verge of insanity.

A recent celebrated case was that of a woman who had been kidnapped, and certain circumstances were "played up" to the deliberate intention of causing him to intimate that the girl had met with a like outcome.

In short, so shortly was the whole world that the Sphere—in its way committed itself, and however

Miss Carew might reappear, and whatever the subsequent explanation, it would be good—for another "front page" story, and the Sphere would have nothing to retreat.

"Paige, white with rage, gnashed his teeth. Glancing up to ascertain whether he was the target of the public gaze, he saw that he alone, at least, had his eyes fixed upon him.

"That," gritted he, muttering the sheet with a vicious jab of his pen, "is damnable. If that meddling little reporter were here I'd thrash him within an inch of his life. Lord, won't Uncle Theodore rag—rare bit half when he gets it! Before me, out chapter'll be something doing now."

"Alexander! Where did that boy go?"

As Alexander was upon the steps at once, by his mad, his mad one of childhood, he said:

Van Veechen instructed: "Telephone the Economy garage and have Ramley fetch my touring car home immediately—the largest one."

Enclosed in one of the club's booths, Alexander soon got the garage and next Sunday, when he thus addressed:

"Say, you Ramley kick your boy wants his biggest buzz-wagon at the Postman, C. Q. D. Get it!"

"What's that?"

"Well? Who? Me? Well! I'd rather be a fresh kill than a pickled maul. Here, you, young, and don't get lost on the way, you'll never be able to find Anna."

When his forecasted further requests by speedily hanging up and resuming his occupation of lurking, unobserved but alertly vigilant, for the

REDUCED RATES FOR ELECTRICITY

The commission has greatly reduced our rates for lighting service. All our schedules are lower than are enjoyed by the largest cities in the Intermountain country.

Those who have heretofore done without electric service on account of its cost may now effect a real saving by having their houses wired and using electricity.

Our present customers are also afforded the opportunity to make use of longer hour service and better lighting facilities at a less cost than heretofore.

Our rates for sign lighting, irrigation pumping, water heating service, as well as our average rates for power are still the lowest charged in the west.

We have done more to popularize the universal use of electricity for all forms of service than any other Company in the world. We now ask your continued support in our attempts to make Idaho the big electric State that it thus far gives promise of becoming.

WINTER STORAGE OF APPLES

How to Keep the Apple Crop in the Late Spring.

With the arrival of spring in commercial apple growing throughout the Missouri river valley, with increasing care in the handling of orchards and up-to-date management, we may reasonably expect a much larger production of apples in commercial orchards in the future.

Winter storage ought not to be thrown on the market as early as October. To throw the entire crop of the country on the market at that season would depress the market price, and render the value of the remainder of the crop worse offered by the growers for sale at one time, lower values must inevitably result.

In the handling of the commercial varieties of winter apples, which should be placed in some form of safe storage as soon as possible after picking from the trees, there are not a sufficient number of ammonia cold storage plants already constructed to accommodate all the apples produced, so far, with safety, carry the late keeping crops of the winter varieties until February and March. These storage cells are equipped with upward ventilation, and air is admitted for the purpose of cooling the air, which is then forced into the market in October or November, thus depressing the market. He can store on his own premises, or in his nearby town, until the market will justify offering for sale.

In this connection some very valuable work has been done by the agricultural colleges at Manhattan, Kan. They have demonstrated by carefully handled and recorded experiments that large storage cells can be constructed at a cost of $10 per cubic foot, and that they will safely carry the late keeping crops of the winter varieties until February and March. These storage cells are equipped with upward ventilation, and air is admitted for the purpose of cooling the air, which is then forced into the market in October or November, thus depressing the market.

It then becomes important that the grower should have independent methods of storing his commercial apple crop, the same as the farmer does his corn on his own farm, and then bring it to the market in October or November, thus depressing the market. He can store on his own premises, or in his nearby town, until the market will justify offering for sale.

In this connection some very valuable work has been done by the agricultural colleges at Manhattan, Kan. They have demonstrated by carefully handled and recorded experiments that large storage cells can be constructed at a cost of $10 per cubic foot, and that they will safely carry the late keeping crops of the winter varieties until February and March. These storage cells are equipped with upward ventilation, and air is admitted for the purpose of cooling the air, which is then forced into the market in October or November, thus depressing the market.

Whereas, in the case of large commercial orchards, a greater storage capacity is desired, perhaps the method pursued at Woodsprings and at Pratherwood in Canyon county, Idaho, is the best. It has been found by experience that a storage house with a capacity for holding 10,000 bushels of apples, can be constructed at a cost of $10 per cubic foot, or $100,000.00 for one storage, or $12 per bushel, the amount expended in the construction of the building is nearly saved in one season, leaving the building ever after subject to only a small running expense.

Perhaps the district containing in use at present the most interesting construction, "The Building," is forty by 100 feet. The basement is 8 feet in height, constructed with cement walls. The superstructure, a building with the walls 12 feet in height, is built over the top of the usual dead-air space walls. In this case, as the climate is mild, they have but one dead air space of 12 inches. In climates of greater severity, this 12-inch dead air space may be increased to 18 inches, or even 24 inches. Along the main storage aisle, the space under the roof, used for the storage of box material. The basement and first and second floors should be equipped with a carrier instead of with an elevator, as the latter is not necessary. The stairs should be wide enough to allow passage between the main entrance during winter and in early spring. To guard against the effect of the sun heat, a timber-joist roof-shield is constructed outside of the building, supported by timber posts, and the roof is covered with shingles.

The building cost, including the expense of painting and electric light and ventilation, $5,000.00, or $100 per bushel of capacity. If filled solid with the building would hold a much greater number of ears, but always must be left for handling the fruit and the plums of horses, as these must be segregated by altitude and species, and the building must be strongly made to support the weight of the trees.

Mr. Bryant's method of storing the apples in one end of this room and allowing the cold air to pass from the bottom through the apples, allowing the air to circulate with less heat and more air, and with a less expense. Besides, a combination of the method employed by Mr. Bryant and the method used in southern Idaho will be perfectly satisfactory.

During the winter, or at any time other than temperature are available, it is found practicable to reduce the temperature at about 32 to 34 degrees.

With the advent of the warm days in February and March, increased care is taken to keep the cold night air, making it as dry as possible. Doubtless, a house of this style of construction could be made use of in the orchard districts of the Missouri valley, as the number of apples produced in the Missouri valley are not as cold as in the elevated region west of the mountains, the method employed by Mr. H. R. Bryant of Princeton, Ill., will doubtless be found a desirable method.

The night temperature at Princeton, Illinois, is 34 degrees, while the day temperature varies but little. Methods which have been found useful at Princeton, although the country is of considerable elevation in the Missouri valley.

construction of his storage building, makes room for large ice storage in one end of the store room. The heating, in one end and not over 15, should the great weight of the ice stored be considered. The heating, in one end of the building, will be required to support the weight of the trees.

At Woodsprings, the building has had just been constructed by his neighbors, stored his crop in a nearby storage house until after the first of May, and sold him Ben Davis' fruit and extra fancy, at $1.00 per bushel. In a cigar-leaf orchard, won 125 boxes of fancy and extra fancy stored and sold at $1.00 per bushel his

Sometimes a Great Show."

PROGRAM

Monday and Tues., March 16-17

"Daniel in the Lions Den"

TWO PARTS.

This is a very noble play drama, one whose motive is deeply felt and is so highly dramatic as to be a great credit to the author. The scenes are magnificently presented, care and taste being exhibited in every detail. "In the Lion's Den" and "Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego in the Fiery Furnace" are startling situations depicted in this great drama. It gives the audience a thrill and sees it in the faith in his God. The Fiery Furnace is most thrilling andounding. Enchanted by Judd Hanna the children of trial find themselves as they look heavenward. Nothing has been left undone to make this great drama authentic.

Next Sunday morning at 10 o'clock the Lutheran, First Methodist and German Lutheran will be holding Lenten services.

Everyone is kindly invited to attend these Lenten services.

Methodist Church.

Sunday school at 10 o'clock. All students are welcome. Classes for the three-year-olds, first, second and third graders taught by Wm. Baker and S. P. Atherton.

There are plenty of classes for younger people, too. In fact the whole Sunday school is conducted by trained and experienced teachers in every department.

To send the children to Sunday school is as much a parental duty as to send them to day school—especially when parents are away without a good knowledge of the title.

The morning service at 11 is on the second Lenten topic, "The Story of Love." Special music by the quartette.

In the afternoon there will be "The Story of All" Don't forget that every Sunday evening you have the privilege of listening to the finest orchestra in the state.

The question for discussion in the Lenten class next Sunday evening is "What is Lent?"

Everyone is welcome to Lenten services.

The Evening League meets at 6:30. The Lenten services are held in the First Methodist church.

Dedicated to My Friends Who Came From the South.

When I first came to Idaho

I was amazed how things do grow!

I told to all my friends at home,

If you would see great things just come

To the fertile valley down by the Snake,

And see what crops the farmers make.

The finest fruit of every kind,

So abundant it would fill the mind

With visions of dreams that can be done

In the greatest land under the sun.

Like the Queen of Sheba in times of old.

All say the half has never been told.

A few friends said I'll come and see,

The wonders you've described to me.

Some stayed one year and said goodbye.

My luck down south won't try,

Some other life and longer stayed,

But over physical conditions became disabled.

Now, they too, have left the West,

Feeling the Southland suits them best.

My vision of the tract has never been realized.

And I have to pay till the plane are finished.

To see what comes of great men's dreams,

Where is such rich soil and powerful streams...

never so over the snowbound plain,

that I think of the Indians and how they suffered.

What the pioneers suffered from our age hands,

before they received these rich, fertile lands.

The sacrifice was great, let me never forget, the hardships they endured, the tragic death they met.

Christian civilization ever marches ahead.

And we are glad to know it as we are told.

So while we develop this wonderful country in the shadow of the Lord we'll continue to tell,

for what shall we profit if we gain

the whole world.

If in eternal darkness our spirits are buried,

Often from dear ones we have to be parted,

But we'll ever remain to them true-hearts.

And remember after all, the world is not so wide,

but what a few days will bring us to their side.

For we know not duty calls the friends

we have lost,

Often to other places, besides the great city.

So when we are called to bid them

farewell,

We'll cry very hard not to murmur or sigh.

We wish them complete restoration, to health,

and we'll pray that they may always be wealthy.

But let us not forget how truly happiness increases,

By laying up in Heaven for ourselves

real treasures.
