With the great amount of petty blabbering going on in this city at the moment, it calls for at least two more night watchmen to cover the residential and business district properly.

On every side can be heard the statement that we must swing the county division in the coming election and such statements are all right as far as they go.

When we send practically all of our business to the mail order houses in the cities there will no longer be a necessity for, or a reason for, a town here.

What can we expect from the mail order houses after they shall have received our money and the local storekeepers have been put out of the running?

LET'S MAKE IT A LIVE TOWN BY KEEPING OUR MONEY IN CIRCULATION AMONG OUR OWN BUSINESS MEN.

American bankers were asked to make loans to foreign governments during the war in Europe, the following answer was made:

The bringing into this tract of the potato experts by the Producers' association was a splendid move and has only one serious fault. The lectures are too transient to do a great amount of good and the only advice worth while is that given in actual experimentation by the potato fields.

NEUTRALITY AND WAR LOANS

Our government is making the international law of the future by its disapproval of loans to the nations at war is the opinion of the Springfield Republican, which thinks that the present law does not forbid loans of money to a belligerent state by private citizens of a neutral state.

WE WANT A LIVE TOWN

LET'S all get together and help to make our community a live one. We all realize the consequences of poor business, stagnation in commercial affairs, depression of real estate values, low wages, etc.

What we want is plenty of business, money in circulation, a live interest in the building of houses, the sale of lots and acre property and a genuine, healthy condition of business in our community.

It is the aim of the big city mail order houses to drive the small town merchants out of business, so that we will all be compelled to send to the cities for our merchandise.

The local stores, to a very large extent, make this town. The taxes paid by our business men are the principal support of our schools and churches.

If we permit the big mail order houses to drive our business men out of competition, what will we have left? A place of empty store buildings, an undesirable place in which to live.

Put this in just what we must expect if we keep sending our dollars to the mail order houses, for it is only the business of the town that makes the town possible.

When we send practically all of our business to the mail order houses in the cities there will no longer be a necessity for, or a reason for, a town here.

Common sense and good judgment tell us to protect our own interests. If we don't, who will?

Every dollar spent in the mail order houses means more unfair competition for our storekeepers and less taxes toward the support of our community.

LET'S MAKE IT A LIVE TOWN BY KEEPING OUR MONEY IN CIRCULATION AMONG OUR OWN BUSINESS MEN.

The writer goes on to say that "the drug and chemical trade were the only ones to come back in an encouraging number of indispensable materials for their industries appeared to have their single source of production in Germany."

Even certain kinds of felt roofing were affected for the simple reason that the raw material from which it was made is imported from Belgium, and, as a highly interesting case, London agents offer the Transvaal mined 'diamond process and cyanid of potassium is a by-product of German potash."

What is to be said of this new and extraordinary turn in the situation? Are these trades, each with a fair chance of expanding its business into neutral markets re-established by the fighting European states, to sit down despondently and give up production?

And thoughts are of boys' clothes and where to buy them. Most boys at school age are unusually hard on clothes, and our aim has been to secure garments that will withstand the hardest kind of wear.

They have plenty of style, and the prices are low, too, when you consider the quality of the clothes we sell.

Young Men's Suits

raw materials entering into the trades enumerated above, there is not one that is an absolute monopoly with Europe.

It is to be seen, says the writer, why this stir and commotion over the "emphasis on raw materials." And he offers two "main explanations" as follows:

"One is that in the first alarm, the purely temporary observation of all shipping communications, due to the presence of German submarines on the ocean and to the deadlock in foreign exchange, was confined with the much more serious obstruction of access to central Europe. The other is, that American manufacturers had grown lazy, and allowed their chemists to be deluged by the instant experts to whom the German government had for years given every possible encouragement."

steel trade going—already the per ton price of this commodity has fallen from $150 to $100 a ton, after rising in a week from $125 to $150.

It costs more than the natural product, cannot be extracted from it here, and as for him, since, cloven, and raw, substitution of domestic for European material is easy if not convenient.

Many people have questioned whether an apple box will hold a bushel. The northwest standard apple box measures 10 1/2 x 11 1/2 x 13 inches inside, and contains 27.5 cubic inches and the U.S. Standard bushel contains 215.04 cubic inches, so when you buy a bushel of peaches in an apple box you are ahead 23 cubic inches of fruit.

Our Elberta peaches are beginning to ripen and we can supply a few customers this week, and the price per bushel at the orchard, when you bring your own box is and the tongue illustrating the same. He advised the growers to be very careful in the selection of seed and if it is not certain that it shows infection it should not be used. Dr. Apple said that the right seed is not a long way in eradicating potato diseases. Taylor introduced as the next speaker, Prof. E. Jackson, of the University of Minnesota, who spoke on the growing of potatoes in the Red River valley, Minnesota. He told of how what had been grown in the valley until the crop harvested would hardly pay for the seed and the farmer had accumulated a pile of potatoes. He said that tubers had been grown on the same ground so long that disease was everywhere. Prof. Jackson advised the farmers to establish seed plots on the farms, and look carefully after the plot for seed purposes. He advised strongly that the selection of the tubers for the Twin Falls tract, which that this region was still young and that all the potato diseases could be easily stamped out.

Potato Experts Discuss Culture

A very interesting talk was given by Mr. J. Moore, pathologist and chief disease expert of the Idaho Agricultural Experiment Station. Mr. Moore emphasized his remarks by saying that the state of Maine could raise more potatoes in the next year than it does in the Union, but since Idaho is Idaho he found that the Twin Falls tract had been the first of the work. He presented two methods of growing potatoes in Idaho. E. A. Dorrer had accepted a position with the Jenkins & Co. department store.

The block is working at the Garner Drug Store during Mr. Freeman's absence. Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Swanger entertained Mr. and Mrs. H. Allen at Sunday dinner.

Arnold Johnson left Sunday for his home where he will attend business until the 15th. Miss Pruden returned Wednesday from a two-day visit with her parents in Twin Falls. Mrs. Walter Bandman of Farmington, Utah, arrived Tuesday evening for a visit with her son, H. P. Bandman. Del Craner is suffering from influenza and is under the care of Dr. Murphy. Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Talley entertained at dinner Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Holmes and Tom Holmes.

Stewart spoke on the method of improving the tuber condition and the yield. He said that the growers of this country must look closer to the way they grow seed potatoes in Europe, where growers raise nothing but seed potatoes, which they sell to the farmers. There is only one man in the United States who makes this a business, Syret of Carbonate, Colorado. He said where the seed was not watched carefully, the tuber would degenerate, and that he had seen signs of it on the Twin Falls tract. This was an indication that the seed was supplying out a new source of seed supply in the following manner: First—Potatoes true to type. Second—Freedom from mixture. Third—Picking the seed from healthy, strong plants. Fourth—Picking the seed from not over-developed. Fifth—Free from all manner of dirt. Sixth—Seed from the first sprouts out.

If the grower is in the habit of using his seed, it will soon rot out. The methods were discussed of how to get good seed: first, by watching the hills in the field and discarding those that were diseased, and those with shallow eyes, smooth skin, he said a good sized potato for planting should weigh from six to ten pounds. Second, to treat the seed for scale, cutting them in four parts. Keep all selections in a separate bin. The speaker said that another good way to select the seed is to dig them out from the growing plant, digging by hand, and selecting those true to type and developing them. He said H. that the seed to be used in the future should be developed. The farmers, he said, should take pride in having stock true to name. He said that the field has several varieties in it. One of the strong points he made, is that the farmers ought to have a seed plot, which should be kept under close supervision. By doing this, the grower would increase his yield. He said that the field has several varieties in it. One of the strong points he made, is that the farmers ought to have a seed plot, which should be kept under close supervision. By doing this, the grower would increase his yield.

One of the new sources for seed potatoes in Idaho, he said, would be from the dry land farms. The tubers grown on dry land, at the present time are practically free from disease. The dry land potatoes, Prof. Stewart stated, is a very vigorous one, and grows to dry land, at the present time are practically free from disease. A BEAUTIFUL EXHIBIT

(Continued from Page 1.) The Twin Falls Floral company sent a large box of magnificent asters and asked that the choicest blooms be sent to the club. The Judges, Mrs. Pittman, Mrs. Clouche and Mrs. Robertson had more trouble awarding ribbons for asters than for other flowers. The roses, peonies, gladioli and dahlias came next in order of preference. All of the entries were of the highest quality and showed great improvement in the floral display since the first flower show. Following is the list of ribbon winners recorded as the judges made their decisions before the exhibition had become misplaced through the handling and selling of flowers. We regret exceedingly that this happened and hope another year to remedy the occurrence by giving the exhibit more room. Each vase should stand an entirely alone and the flowers should not touch and the ribbons be in chance get on the wrong exhibit.

CHAPTER VIII. THE WIFE OF A WOLFE.

AT FIRST the affair of the auto brought the women were killed—a full blown case. "What kind of a bull I mean—blue-black clouds down the southwest horizon, a water trickly, the beams whirling. Suddenly a series of accidents" began to happen to Norton. At first he did not give the matter much thought. The safe which fell almost at his feet and crashed through the sidewalk merely caused him to believe he was lucky. At another time an automobile came off a precipitous curve while he was crossing the street, and only a narrow hallway saved him from bodily harm. "The car was near to him when he thought to recall the number. Then came the fall in the subway. Only a deepening growl, and the car had then been crushed to death. Even then he thought nothing but when a new box of cigars arrived and he tried one and found it strangely perfumed, and upon further analysis found it to contain a Javanese narcotic, but sure death, he became wide awake enough. They were after him. He began to walk carefully, to keep in public places as often as he possibly could. He was not greatly afraid of death but he did abhor the thought of its coming on him suddenly. Except for the elms that were all

"accidents"; he could not have proved anything before a jury of his intimate friends. He never entered an elevator without scrupulous care. He never passed under coverings over the alleys where construction was going on. Still, careful as he was, death snatched him from him. It was his habit to have his coffee and roll—rarely ate anything more for his breakfast—set down outside his door every morning. The coffee, being in a silver thermos bottle, kept it hot for hours. When he took the stopper out and poured forth a cup it looked oddly black, discolored. It is quite probable that had there been a series of "accidents" he would have drunk a cup and died in mortal agony. It contained bicarbonate of mercury. Very quietly he set about to make inquiries. This was really becoming serious. In the kitchen downstairs nothing could be learned. The maid had set the thermos bottle before the door at 10:30. Norton had opened the door at 1:30—three hours after. The outlook was not too bright. He knew perfectly well why all these things "happened"; he had interfered with the plans of the sounder who were making every possible move to kidnap Florence Harrgrave. One afternoon he paid Florence a visit. Of course he told her nothing. They had become secretly engaged the day after he had rescued her from the auto lands. They were secretly engaged because Florence wanted it so. For once Jones suspected nothing. "Why should he? He had troubles enough. As a matter of fact, Norton was afraid of Jones. He was, afraid of him in the same way as a boy is afraid of a policeman. But on this day, when the time came, he accented the butler and drew him into the pantry.

"Jones, here are after me now." "Norton—Brahm!" Norton lightly recanted the deliberate attempt against his life. "You see, I'm not the easiest to fool. I'm not worried. I am, definitely worried. I'm not worth any ransom. I'm in the way, and they seem determined to put me out of it." "To any other man I would say travel. But to you I say when you leave your rooms don't go where you first thought you would—that is, some small hotel. You'll be everywhere, where your restaurants, your clubs, your office. You're a methodical young man; become erratic. Keep away from here for at least three days. I'll always call you by telephone during the day. Never under any circumstances, unless I call for you, come here at night. Only one man you watches the house during the day, but five are prowling around after dark. They might have instructions to shoot you on sight. I can't spare you just at present. Mr. Norton, you have a goddess; and if it seems that sometimes I did not trust you fully it was because I did not care to drag you into too deep." Deep? Norton thought of Florence and smiled inwardly. Could anybody be in danger than he was? Once it was on the tip of his tongue to confess his love for Florence, but the gravity of Jones' conversation was an obstacle to such a move; it did not justify it. To be sure, Jones had no real authority to say what Florence should or should not do with her heart. Still, from all points of view, it was better to keep the affair under the rose till there came a more propitious hour in which, to make the disclosure. Love, in the midst of all these alarms, sharp, desperate rows on one side, millions on the other, and yet how could enter the same for help, like an actor who had missed his cue and could not see another. Only one thing was not to be overlooked—such as you often read about. A pressure of the hand, a glance from the eye, there was nothing mysterious more. Only across that memorable day on the river road—had he kissed her. No word of love had been spoken on either side. In that wild moment all conventionalities had disappeared like smoke in the wind. There had been neither past nor future, only the present in which they knew that they loved. With her, he was happy, for he had no time to plan the future. Away from her he saw the inevitable barriers providing against the marriage between a poor young man and a very rich young woman. A man who has any respect wants always to be on equal terms with his wife, financially more than in any other thing. It's the way this peculiar organization called Society has written down its rules. Doubtless a relic of the stone age, when Adam ate with his club to set a wife and drag her by the hair to his bed, and there to care for her and to guard her with his life's blood. It is one of the few primitive institutions that remain to us, this waiting for the female dependent upon the male. Perhaps this accounts for man's lack of interest on the subject of marriage. Only Susan suspected the true state of affairs, being a woman. Having had no real romance herself, she delighted in having a second hand one, as you might say. She intercepted nearly a glance and pretended not to see the stolen hand pressures. The wedding was already full drawn in her mind's eye. These two young people should be married at Susan's father's when the moon were shining up the sides of the house and the young couple were being lit by the stars. It struck her as a rather strange, but she could not venture up (at this wedding) more than two men besides the minister, the bridegroom, and the butler. By fawning his accustomed haught, under the advice of Jones, the hidden waiter ceased temporarily. You can't very well kiss a man when you don't know where to find him. He ate his breakfasts impulsively, now here, now there. He received most of his mail messages by telephone and wrote his stories and articles in

And what has become of the man over the way?" "By the Lord Harry!" exclaimed Brine, clapping his hands. "I believe I've solved that. We should man coming out of Harrgrave's—since then there's been no dance across the way. One and the same man!" "But that knowledge doesn't get us anywhere." "No. You may try it in love!" "Secretly. I don't believe the butler has an inkling of it. It is possible, however, that Susan has caught the trend of affairs. But, being rather romantic, she will go to no wise interference." Brine smoked in silence. Presently a smile twisted his lips.

"You have thought of something?" she asked. "You might try it," he said. "They have never seen your friendship; whether with ulterior purpose remains to be learned. She has been to your apartments two or three times to ask and always got home safely." "No," she said indignantly. "Nothing shall happen here. I will not take the risk." "Wait till I'm through. Break up the romance in such a way that the girl will let Norton from the house. That's what we've been aiming at: to get rid of that meddling reporter. We've tried poison. Try your hand!" "What do you mean?" "This!" "Ah! I understand. You want me to with him away from her. I cannot be done." "Perhaps! You have a lot of tricks. You can easily manage to put him into an awkward position out of which he cannot possibly pull out, so far as the girl is concerned. A little melodrama, arranged for the benefit of Florence. Fall into Norton's arms at the right moment, or something like that." "I suppose I could. But if I failed..." "You're too damnably certain to fall in your own particular trap. Something has got to be done to keep those two apart. I've thought of raiding the house lightly and carrying off the whole family, Susan and all. But a wholesale affair like that would be too noisy. Think it over; they have gone too far to back down now. There's always Russia; and while I'm in the house over here they never cease to watch me. They'll make me answer for a failure like this." She eyed him appreciatively. "You have money?" "I'm not money's man. It's the game, it's the game of playing fast and loose with Society, of pilfering it with one hand and making it known with the other. It's the sport of the thing. What was your thought?" "We could go away together, to South America." "And tire of each other within a month, be returned afterward. No; we are in the same boat. We could not live but for this never ending excitement. And, more than that, we never could get far enough away from the long arm of the Fiat Top. We'll have to stick it out here. Can't you see?" "Yes, I can see." aware of it. There was always that abiding fear that at the first sign of weakness he would desert her. And she was wise in her deductions. Brine was loyal to her because she held his interest. Once that failed, he would be off and away.

The next afternoon the countess, having thwarted her plans against the happiness of the young girl who trusted her, drew up before the Harrgrave place and alighted. Her welcome was the same as ever, and this strengthened her confidence. The countess was always gesticulating. Her hands flouted to emphasize her words. And the beautiful, diamond necklace caught the girl's eye. She seized the hand. Having an affair of her own, it was natural that she

"The!" the butler murmured. He caught the word with a gasp. But for once started out of himself.

"Is it worth me to go to Jim?" she asked with a bit.

"It is not considered quite as Mrs. Florence, to call a young first name unless you are entitled, or grew up with him?"

"Well, suppose I were engaged."

"That would be a very grave matter you to prove that he was really yours?"

"Why, Jones, you know that penny in the world I can call in to nothing to prove, except your own Stanley Harrgrave's daughter."

"No, there is nothing to prove his daughter's. He hasn't it yet that there might be a marriage child. Might it not be of incestuous origin? Your father's cousin should be doubtful? Might it not be a means of them on the line? There is no proof, my child; and when the time will be shown you. But now all thought of marrying Mr. Norton's."

"That I refuse to do," quitted her mistress as if her heart a distance to one whom I shall never see," said Mrs. Norton. "I know Mr. Norton and I know that I may not be an heiress some day I shall marry him."

Jones bowed. This seemed to have settled the matter.

Norton did not return to his home. He found the telephone call and in a handwriting unfamiliar. His envelope and found the contents to be the Countess Perloff.

"Call at 8 tonight," he read. "This important news story for you. Tell me I cannot be involved in the case. Ours only. Countess Perloff."

Thought Norton retailed the news at length and at length rolled it into a ball and threw it into the wastebasket. He was a little bit of a miser; he was not a miser, but he should have kept that not dressed, died, and buried off to the west of the continent.

He arrived ten minutes before Florence and Susan.

And Jones did some rapid calculations.

"How long would this take?" "The altar was terrible, but little during the night, for I always waiting for someone to expect into the room, and it was all these weeks, the child of with the first couple. It was not so for as he had to be a husband, honest and reliable. As the last of Stanley Harrgrave's daughter, that was regarded a different matter. And he must desire some means of putting up to it, but—"

But he was saved that trouble.

Monopole's offer, that was the game being played; the coming of the one against the other, of the other. If he forced matters he would only lay himself open to the stroke of the snake. He must have patience. Gradually they were breaking the organization, hopping off a branch here, a branch there, the peace of the future depended upon the trick was simple."

Norton took her for a husband. The trick the British authorities stated that no such a person as William Jones, who had arrived at Gibraltar. And when she rose, she rose also and gently put Florence into his arms, just as if she appeared in the doorway.

Very simple indeed. When a woman falls toward a man there is nothing for him to do but extend his arms to prevent her from falling. Outwardly, however, to the eye which saw only the picture and comprehended not the cause, it had all the hallmarks of an affectionate embrace.

Florence stood perfectly still for a moment, then turned away.

"Don't beg your pardon," said the countess, "but a nasty feeling still seized me. My heart for bit work."

"Don't mention it," replied the girl. "I had my own mind as a matter of fact, but I had really taken place."

Florence stood back once. She brief note to Susan and intended which she had a curly worn attend. Little chain around her neck.

When Norton came the next day to see him. It was all over. She was to see him again.

"He says there has been some take," said Jones.

"I saw him with the countess in his mind. I do not get any credit outside in that." "Thank him. Tell him so. And add that I desire to see him again."

Then she ran swiftly to her room, where she broke down and cried bitterly, and would not be comforted by Susan.

"In her heart she had demanded the truth. There had been no such a thing as happiness."

"The coming of the whole affair that neither of the two young countesses, who envied them both."

SHOWS NEED FOR WATER

Irrigation Experiment Oves Idea How Fertile Soil Should Be Worked.

The experiment work which Don H. Clark, government irrigation expert, is doing in the city of water on irrigated tracts in southern Idaho is proving of value to the grower in particular, particularly in proving that many things can be grown with much less water than was formerly supposed. On the other hand in maintaining the more water used produced the greater results if the soil is not fertilized as in the case of Marquis spring wheat.

Speaking of his latest experiments, Mr. Clark says: "I have recently received the yields from the experiment that has been conducted during the past year on the new Twin Falls experiment station, and the results have been gratifying. There is one experiment in particular in which every irrigator in Idaho should be much interested. This was a fertility experiment designed to show the effect of soil fertility on the duty of water. Marquis spring wheat was planted upon an infertile tract, and on a fertilized tract of ground, the amount of water being divided into three equal parts.

Different amounts of water were applied to each of the infertile and the amount to the fertile tract. The least yield was produced where the least amount of water was applied to the infertile soil, the yield increasing as the amount of water applied was increased. The yields of grain from the fertilized tracts were almost double the amounts from the infertile tract where the same amount of water was applied, thus emphasizing the fact that there has been shown heretofore in my duty of water in irrigating that grain planted on alfalfa pod or fertilized soil produces larger yields with less water than is possible with infertile soils.

It is interesting to note that on the South Side Twin Falls tract had elsewhere throughout Idaho, but this is the first time in my knowledge that water is increasing so greatly in the duty of water. Marquis spring wheat cured of the effect of fertility on the duty of water.—Statesman.

SOME GOOD CROPS AT FILER

Yields are Proving Better Than Anticipated by Irrigator.

It is expected in the near future of the year, and contrary to the usual forecast, the wheat, oats and seeds are turning out better than was predicted. Here are a few reports from the first three harvests. One better second year harvest of what from 75 acres, making it a better than 60 bushels to the acre. Another 100 acres, where wheat was raised, was about 80 bushels to the acre.

Less than had a piece of wheat that was 50 bushels to the acre.

Mr. J. S. Shobe, who has a 150-acre farm, has a better crop made by his son, and his wife, in the acre, with the water.

When the water was first put on the average yield is now 15 bushels that were more thickly planted the first year. This has been a surprise, as good as any in the country, says where. This will be a splendid year for the farmers of Twin Falls county.—Burley Advertiser.

SHOWS NEED FOR WATER

Irrigation Experiment Oves Idea How Fertile Soil Should Be Worked.

The experiment work which Don H. Clark, government irrigation expert, is doing in the city of water on irrigated tracts in southern Idaho is proving of value to the grower in particular, particularly in proving that many things can be grown with much less water than was formerly supposed. On the other hand in maintaining the more water used produced the greater results if the soil is not fertilized as in the case of Marquis spring wheat.

Speaking of his latest experiments, Mr. Clark says: "I have recently received the yields from the experiment that has been conducted during the past year on the new Twin Falls experiment station, and the results have been gratifying. There is one experiment in particular in which every irrigator in Idaho should be much interested. This was a fertility experiment designed to show the effect of soil fertility on the duty of water. Marquis spring wheat was planted upon an infertile tract, and on a fertilized tract of ground, the amount of water being divided into three equal parts.

Different amounts of water were applied to each of the infertile and the amount to the fertile tract. The least yield was produced where the least amount of water was applied to the infertile soil, the yield increasing as the amount of water applied was increased. The yields of grain from the fertilized tracts were almost double the amounts from the infertile tract where the same amount of water was applied, thus emphasizing the fact that there has been shown heretofore in my duty of water in irrigating that grain planted on alfalfa pod or fertilized soil produces larger yields with less water than is possible with infertile soils.

It is interesting to note that on the South Side Twin Falls tract had elsewhere throughout Idaho, but this is the first time in my knowledge that water is increasing so greatly in the duty of water. Marquis spring wheat cured of the effect of fertility on the duty of water.—Statesman.

MANY CASES HANDLED

Short Line Defendant in Twenty-two Actions in Federal Court Thursday.

Twenty-two cases were taken up by the federal court Thursday. All were against the Oregon Short Line and were brought for alleged violations of the anti-trust provisions of the act of partition of livestock. The law requires the stock be carried for not more than 28 hours continuously and that they be turned at the end of that time before into clean and sanitary pens for feed and water.

To 12 of the cases the railroad failed to carry its stock in conformity with the law, the penalty was set at $125. The total amount of the fines was paid was $1875.

Three of the cases were dismissed. In two cases the railroad admitted its guilt, but upon the law condition a separate offense, and this point will be left for the decision of the court. The district attorney claims that the railroad had violated the law for a longer time than the law allows and has been fined $1000 in two cases for each violation of stock there is but one violation of the law in each case and that the penalty should be $125 for each violation, but not both.—Statesman.

BELLEVUE WOMAN SHOTS SELF

Drops Revolver and Wound in Neck.

Mrs. Davis, wife of Mayor Ben Davis of Bellevue, met with a fatal accident there Tuesday afternoon. She was cleaning a mystery room in her home when she fired a shell she accidentally carried a .44 caliber revolver to fall to the floor. The weapon struck upon its handle in the neck and it was shattered. The bullet struck Mrs. Davis in the right leg, midway between the knee and thigh. She suffered a severe wound in the neck and the other side of the neck.

A Bellevue physician happened to be in Bellevue visiting one of his patients when the accident occurred, and he was at once summoned to the scene. All that he could for the lady, who is over 50 years of age, the physician stated that she has been in good health, although her condition is critical, owing to her advanced age, making the shock a serious one to withstand.—Halley News-Miner.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS LETTER

Summer Fallow Again.

Summer fallowing seems to be definitely a part of farming operations in the Palouse. Much of the grain raised that it does not serve its purpose as well as other practices might. It is an established fact and we must face it.

There are two main reasons for summer fallow. In regions of scant rainfall it is resorted to in order to save two seasons' rainfall to grow one season's crop. That kind of a fallow we hardly need in the Palouse in the ordinary years. The other reason for fallow is used to kill obnoxious weeds. Both of these reasons farmers find require them to fallow. Let us assume for the sake of argument that it is necessary to fallow to rest the land, and to kill obnoxious weeds. If this be true, then the prevalent practice of farmers is wrong and wasteful, for the majority of them allow the land and let its soil fallow. This kind of a fallow we hardly need in the Palouse in the ordinary years. The other reason for fallow is used to kill obnoxious weeds. Both of these reasons farmers find require them to fallow. Wool.

Wool stands next to cotton in regard to the quantity used, it is procured from sheep, goats, camels, alpacas, llamas and angora goats.

WOOL CLASSIFIED.

1. Short or clothing wool, 1-2 to 4 inches in length.
2. Long or carpeting wool, 7-14 to 10 inches in length.
3. Carpet or knitting wools, long, strong and coarse.

CHARACTER OF THE FIBER.

Sheep's wool is very curly and possesses numerous scales which are much more marked than in hair. These scales can be felt by running a hair or wool fiber between the fingers in the opposite direction of the growth. These scales are so conspicuous that wool has often been likened to a plate coat or scaly fish. There are from 1,000 to 2,000 scales to the inch. It is due to the scales that the felting property of wool is attributed. This is evident when kemp is present on woolen underwear or blankets and the surface pulled. The scales soften and roll up, causing the fibers to mat together and being tough they cling together making a mat which can never be separated and we say that the cloth has shrunk. Wool is elastic and has high lustre. It absorbs moisture without appearing to be damp. It can hold half of its own weight of moisture. It takes a dye readily.

AMBLICATIONS.

One of the great common adulterations of wool is cotton and this can be detected by running the fiber between the fingers. This property of wool, Shoddy is also commonly used. This is made from scraps of the "felting" from wool on shoddy. It is always inferior and short. This class of wool is usually found in the lower wearing cloth and one can see it in the flannels of wools that are shoddy and soiled with grease between the lining and the outside of the garment.

TESTS FOR AMBLICATIONS.

CHEMICAL AND PHYSICAL.

Woolen threads appear kinky and weak and uneven as compared to the even cotton fibers.

Falling test: Wool threads pull apart with a stretch while cotton threads snap.

Burning test: Wool burns slowly giving a characteristic odor like that of burning feathers. It leaves a friable ball of ash.

Cotton burns up brightly and leaves little or no ash.

Woolen threads are not so stiff as a sample of wool cloth in a suit of clothes or pajama but it will be entirely disabled. In making a test of the kind it would be interesting to know the exact nature of the adulteration and how much of the adulteration is present.

Microscope test: This is a reliable test. The fibers cannot appear really different.

KINDS OF WOOL CLOTH.

Woolens—Made from short, staple wool fibers, carded and spun. Such cloth is often found in the Palouse. It is made in all directions. This class of wool cloth is likely to be adulterated with cotton and shoddy.

Abbots, Blankets, Broadbills, Cheviot, Colver, Eiderdown, Flannel, Homespun, Tweed.

Woolens are made from long staple fiber and are combined with the best of the woolens. They are used in the worsted shawls and hence it is not so likely to be adulterated as woolens. Some of the best examples of worsted shawls are made in the Palouse. They are made in the Palouse.

USES OF WOOL CLOTH.

Wool cloth is a good non-conductor of heat and hence is suitable for winter wear especially in cold climates. It is used in the manufacture of many of our most valuable fabrics, especially those where vicious fashions are indulged in. It is used in the manufacture of many of our most valuable fabrics, especially those where vicious fashions are indulged in.
