Announcement to the Public

Having taken over the implement business of Miller & Dean and having added a complete stock of shelf and heavy hardware in addition to the full line of implements always carried by the retiring firm, we announce that we are now in a position to care for the wants of every farmer, every builder and every household in the Twin Falls country in the lines above quoted. We believe that we can give the public better values at lower prices than they have ever obtained in this country.

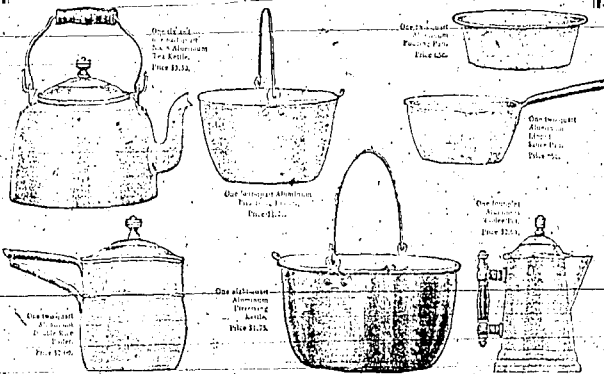

The new firm will be known as the Idaho Hardware & Implement Company and will be composed of Messrs. Miller & Dean of the old firm and Mr. W. P. Con, who brings to the business experience obtained through eighteen years of commercial selling of these lines in the east. Mr. Con can be said to know the business from the top to bottom and will be able to give the patron the benefit of his buying ability coupled with the knowledge of values.

Besides the usual implement and hardware lines the new company has added harness and all kinds of saddlery.

It will be the policy of the new firm to handle the only first-class goods at all times and to furnish its patrons not with cheap goods, but only the best at living prices, which will make satisfied and permanent customers.

HOME COMPANY HAS SPLENDID EQUIPMENT

A few days ago a representative of the Times had the pleasure of being shown through the new plant of the Gem State Lumber company, at a place that he was a surprised would not expect it, for here he found all goods kept in a manner that could not be excelled in any city, no matter what size. Everything is under cover, even to the driveways. Most enclosed sheds and buildings have a large window always a dark, dreary appearance, but cannot be improved upon. A public conveniense corner is partitioned off in one part of the office and here is always found the latest books and plans, together with many other things, full things for the prospective builder. At the rear of the office is located a large room where all the doors, windows and mouldings are stored. The mouldings are all stored on end and held in place by a device that the dust cannot settle on, them the Gem State company have worked out a closed type of shed that does away with the dirt, dust, etc., and serves all the good features of both the open and closed-type. One thing in particular is noticeable, and that is the men at construction who provide ample air circulation and at the same time protects all the lumber from the elements and weather. However, having all their goods under cover is only one of the many under features of this plant. To compare them with other lumber yards, we can say, so we only mention some of the other good improvements in order to do the Gem State people justice. The office is finished in Scotch pine wall board and louvered with fire brickets which give an appearance that and the customers are always insured with bright, clean stock. In addition to the warehouse, there is a large roomy balcony, which is found a display of door doors which cannot be equalled in any city of this state. At the end of one alley is a permanent watering trough, which is used by the customers and judging from the comments, is very much appreciated. In building this plant, the Gem State company have earned neither time nor expense in putting up buildings that are a credit to the community. They cordially invite the public to call and make an inspection as they believe they are now better prepared to serve the public than ever before.

Million Dollar Mystery

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS

Stanley Hargrave, millionaire, accidentally kills a man, and is of the gang of brilliant men known as the Black Hundred. Lives the life of a recluse for eighteen years. Hargrave's brilliant and mysterious leader of the Black Hundred. Knowing Braine was to get him, he engages from his own house by a balloon the girl's school where eighteen years before he mysteriously left on the doorstep his only daughter, Florence Gray, and her inheritance of $1,000,000 from the bank, but it is reported that this dropped into the sea when the balloon escaped in vain.

Florence arrives from the girls' school, Cousins Olga, Braine's cousin, visits her and claims to be a relative. Two hunters, detectives, and their plot is foisted by Norton, a newsman.

After falling in their first attempt, the Black Hundred try to force her to ask her for money, but she escapes, again following him.

After the countless calls on Florence the next day, once more safe at home. The visitors having gone, Jones removes a section of the flooring from a room in the house.
Pursued by members of the Black Hundred he rushes to the water front and succeeds in dropping the box into the sea.

Accomplices of Braine succeed in kidnaping Florence while she is shopping and hurry her off to sea. She leaves the sea and is taken to a desert country by a party of fishermen. The Black Hundred locate her, and Braine disguised as her father attempts to rescue her.

Florence sets fire to the boat and is rescued by a ship on which Norton was abandoned.

After the story, the rendezvous of the Black Hundred, a man learns of the recovery from the sea of the box of money by a sailor. He sends a secret return to the bottom of the sea, and he quickly communicates the fact to Jones. A duplicate box is planted and is secured by the members of the Black Hundred. Jones examines the box mysteriously disappears.

Flinding himself checkmated at every step, the Black Hundred try to en-mesh the Hargrave household in the law in order to gain free access to the house. The timely discovery of the plot by Norton sees the police at the heels of the pack and results in a raid on the gang's rendezvous, which brings proof to the barren of the guilt.

Following a telephone message, Jones enters the Hargrave house, where he is addressed as "Mr. Hargrave." Florence is again lured from her home and taken out to sea. Through Norton's aid she is able to escape. She is rescued and returns to her home in time to confront an agent of the Black Hundred.

In all this world. Now, you're not could any longer. You are a woman to her own apartment but for the fact that the chemicals needed were hidden in the cave.

Now it happened that Florence went out for her early ride the next morning and crossing a hill she saw a man with a bundle under his arm.
The man did not observe her. So, very quietly, she slipped from the horse, leaped to a tree, and started after the man to learn what he was doing so far from the city. She could never forget that face. She had seen it, that dreadful night when the note had been held by the hands of her enemies. The face belonged to the man who had impugned her father.

It occurred to her that she might just as well do little detective work over her own track. She had passed through so many terrifying episodes that she was beginning to crave for the excitement of a hunt. As this man seem, like a gambler who has once played for high stakes, she no longer saw pleasure in thimbles and redies and black. She followed the man with no little will and at length saw him approach a small, steep, apparently a spur, and a hole suddenly yawned. The man vanished quickly, and the next again took on his original appearance. A level floor led the path to a cave. By the man appeared again and clunk away.

When she was sure that he was beyond range, she came out from the piece of concealment, crept up the small and searched about for a few yards of this strange door. Dilige-ently rewarded her and she soon found herself in a large musty, earth-filled cave. Light was scattered about, and there were boxes and crates and a large chest. Men evidently were, recently, at work here, for adventure against the night. She nothing to reward her hardihood, and she was in the habit of finding to the cave's entrance. She beheld terror that was moving.

She was near the chest at that moment. The cave was not a deep one. There was no tunnel, only a small, and somewhat shallow, hole by which she had entered. She the chest and stepped inside, and drew the lid down. She was just in time, to do door opened and three men came, talking loudly. They had by secure in taking as their own pleased. To Florence it seemed impossible that they did not hear the sound of her feet. She felt her as she might, she could gather but little of what they said, except—

"If Hargrave has this paper, we might be able to get it out of him."
To an outsider it is a blank paper, but the boss will be able to read it."
"The paper must be kept away from the city of the chest and she heard no more."

Very softly Florence raised the lid of the chest to see what was putting the man in his lips. As she turned toward the chest he set down on the ground, immediately in front of her, a chest. An inspiration came to the girl, an exceedingly daring one. She took her liberty in her hands as she crossed the door. But the door of the cave added her. When she reached down again the music paper was there.

She stepped forward to her before the man left the cave. As she heard the hidden door jar in silence she raised the lid and stepped out, breathing deeply the paper she had hidden.
It was indeed blank, but Jones or Jim would know what to do with it. And would they be so stupid as to let her take it? No, she had not accomplished all alone. Her exitation was of short duration. She heard the whine of the motor cars. The men were returning. Why?

They were returning because they had discovered a woman's shoeprint under it. It was not a shoeprint, but a handprint. And there was no handprint. To reenter the chest would be foolhardy. It would be the first time she would look back and what desperately. She saw but one change, the wall. And even while she was stepping toward, with the brilliant moonlight she saw the light of the door. She had not ed up the courage and led herself down into the well, which proved to be filled with more, not less than an unknown river.

The men came in with a rush, they upset boxes, looked into the chest, and the man who was evidently in command passed down the well to check his hand. Their search was thorough, but they found no one. And at length they began to realize that perhaps a woman had set as far as the door and then turned away, walking on the dark.

She had been gone from the house less than an hour when a man ran up the steps of the house and rang the bell. Jones being busy at the rear of the house, the maid answered the ring.

"Is Miss Hargrave in?" asked the stranger.

"She is upstairs. The door began to lock ever so slowly."

"Do you know where I can find her?"

The maid eyed him with covert fearfulness, remembering that the reporter was with her, and: "I believe she is at the Rose Garden this afternoon."

"Yes," she said.

"Thanks." The man turned abruptly and ran down the steps.

"Why didn't you call me?" he demanded impatiently.

"There wasn't time."

"Yes, but I shouldn't have told him if Mr. Norton had not been with me." Florence ran to the front, dashed out, eyed the back of the man hastening down the street, smiled, and returned to her work or, rather, the maid to be asked by the stranger, "Did you see that man who looked like Mr. Har-grave?"

"I don't know how you got here," he said, "and don't care. But here we are together at last. Where is your father?"

"I don't know," hazily.

"I don't think quickly," he warned,
"I want answers to my questions, or I'll have you in my power, I'm about at the end of my rope. I've been in your hands for some time, and I have your father's name for you.
Now where is your father?"

"I don't know," she said.

"I don't know," she said.

"I don't know," she said.

"I don't know," she said.

"I don't know," she said.

"I don't know," she said.

"I don't know," she said.

This movement that turned the reporter's case. He too, now saw that the man in the cave and wondered how she had come there. When Braine reached the girl and pulled her into the lagoon Jim saw her face plainly.

"He flew from his senses and found a wife and started after Braine.
"By the dear Harry!" murmured the man. "Well, they say talk of monsters, but I don't know what I call luck. Florence Hargrave, out of where, into my hands! The god of luck has cast another horseshoe and it is mine!"

He had a flask in his pocket, and he forced some of the biting spirit down the girl's throat. She opened her eyes.

"Well, my beauty?"

"Florence eyed him wildly, not quite understanding where he had come from."

"I don't know how you got here,"
we are together at last. Where is

"I don't know," hazily.

"I don't think quickly," he warned,
"I want answers to my questions,
been in your hands for some time,
and I have your father's name for you.

"I don't know," she said.

The larger the training and the greater knowledge of conditions and requirements the sooner will this vast empire come into its own, and the older states made to feel that equality must be respected, and our possibilities more thoroughly understood. Every man owes a certain amount of time, money and energy to the community in which he lives, where he enjoys the benefits of civilization, and in which he holds his property (time, and not alone does the commonwealth benefit from his efforts and sacrifices, but he himself, abundant and more enjoyment out of life, feeling that he is not living to himself alone. This feeling is present to a more or less extent in all men, and the effort to inculcate it is to be desired, and that this energy is organized and expended in a definite way and to a definite end, the greater the benefits to both individual and state. ROBERT NOBLE DIES

Wealthiest Man in Southern Idaho—Dresses Many.

Robert Noble, one of the wealthiest and best known men in southern Idaho, passed away at his home in Idaho, Tuesday morning, following a short illness from diabetes. A pioneer in Idaho, having come here about 40 years ago, Mr. Noble finally became known as the sheep king of Idaho. In 1906 he moved to Boise, where he has since been active in the affairs of the Idaho Trust & Savings bank, of which he was president at the time of his death.

Mr. Noble was well known in Nampa. He was a friend and neighbor of Col. W. H. Dewey, when the latter lived in Tonawanda, New York, and the friendship grew during years of business relations in Idaho. He owned, among other holdings in Nampa, the building now occupied by the V. T. Eber company, that where the McKee garage is located and other city and farm interests in this vicinity. He was deeply interested also in Boise and Caldwell.

Robert Noble was born in Cumberland, England, October 19, 1844. His family moved to Kintesson, Ontario, which he was ten years old. In 1857 they came to the United States. When he came to Idaho in 1875, he was a poor man. He spent his first year in teaching ferry on the Snake river. Later he went to Reynolds creek where he worked for Peter Peters, whose daughter he later married. He received a good price for a wool-ding suit, took them to Oregon and sold them for a good price, bought sheep and traded his first hand into Owyhee country. At one time he owned as high as 20,000 sheep. In 1906 he moved to Boise and took an important place in commercial and industrial affairs. His principal holdings are in Canyon, Ada and Owyhee counties. It is estimated that he leaves a fortune of more than $2,000,000.

FOUR BUHL MEN INJURED

Car Runs Off Bridge—Coming at High Speed on Day to Buhl.

While going at a fast rate of speed, the car containing Harry Hanks, Roy Ballou, J. Masters and Frank Hanks, ran off the bridge, crossing the railroad near the Kintesson factory and was hurled in the ditch with terrific force, severely injuring the four occupants.

The party was returning to Buhl with the men that they could vote, and as the time was drawing near for the closing of the polls, Ballou, who was driving, was going at a high rate of speed when the accident happened. Hanks sustained a head cut on the head and a number of painful bruises, but no broken bones. Ballou received a gash on the head. Masters is suffering from a badly scratched back and a wound on his head. Frank Hanks received a fractured collar bone and arm besides numerous other injuries. Chas. Krehel, at the time of the
