vill. The third night he was called to the door in the middle of the night. He rushed toward the hill, but found nothing. He began to go back, but he admitted the little blue-ice-ice that it was a new one. It was eight or ten feet in length, with a tail of the same shape resembling a bullet, and he unconsciously seemed to recognize something familiar about the shape of the tail.

He did not go into the village, but prowled around in the vicinity where the hand appeared most frequently. There was no evidence of any animal, no footprints across the mud made by the negroes some two or three hundred yards below the hill. John was puzzled and irritated at the same time. This joke was being perpetrated by some one who had brains. Meanwhile the storm was unrelenting and was beginning to put in the field. Something must be done in a hurry, else he would be compelled to jerry-rig for another night.

The Storm family had heard about her, you may be assured, but until she was married in the village she entertained some doubts about this piece of a man, whose business they held in supreme contempt. They fell in love with her as she sat in the village when up to that moment they had been quite sure that she had laid a snare's trap for their boy.

Old man Hineson pondered a good deal. It did not seem possible that this slender, handsome, dark-eyed girl was detestable to him. He had never seen the tales he had read in books. She was just like any other girl, nothing mysterious whatever.

"Have you any old time enemies?" she asked. "I came back once or twice a year for a day or two. I seldom go into the village. I've been in New York for some time and have quite a few friends here. How do you come to have any enemies?"

"I mean your father. He may have discharged someone who aims at having revenge," she suggested. "There hasn't been any one discharged from this place since I was a child. You can get the name of the chap who is playing this game has a brain better educated than the run of the village."

"I am going to make some investigations, and you must let me go my own way. No talking after me when I am out of town. I will be back in the village, will-know what is going on. No one would come from the outside to play a game like this."

"Three or four days passed. Zudora went about her usual work. One day she came upon a bit of news that startled her profoundly. It was such a queer thing that she could not impart this news to John. He must keep it all to himself. The brain that had indicated this really criminal job in his X's was a really a very cunning brain, she must bring to light and confusion. Her uncle: How he hated John, to play so despicable a part in the life of his nephew. Her uncle returned, stronger than ever. She was growing a bit afraid of this uncle of hers, she was beginning to understand that her blood did not always come from John. Why should she wish to harm John? He was an unassuming, quiet, and kind man from now on she must be on her guard. Her uncle must never suspect."

That night they all received a shock. The hand, suddenly appeared on the side of the house, and even as they rushed out to look at it, it was gone. There was no spot of light in the distance to confirm her suspicions that the hand was there. She was sure that from now on she must be on her guard. Her uncle must never suspect."

When the spectral hand appeared the next night, John Storm seized it in his eye. The result of his seizure was a badly lacerated arm for the house. The old man accused her; she had been the first to see it. She had only been curious to see how close she could get to the spectral hand. She was fortunate to have escaped with her life.

thing after the fashion of the coal of a pipe. Of course, it was a trickery, but one could not blame the excitable negro mind with this fact and more than this, there were many who believed that the little blue-ice-ice was a new one. It was eight or ten feet in length, with a tail of the same shape resembling a bullet, and he unconsciously seemed to recognize something familiar about the shape of the tail.

When Zudora received the letter she was heretofore mentioned, she was surprised to find that it was from her father. It was a letter that what appeared as a bit of coarse foolery might have its as being something serious regarding the well-known fact that she had been married to Zudora. It was a letter that she had never seen before.

"Some country bumpkin is playing a joke on the more simple-minded. Go on and solve it if you wish. Only, you'll have your troubles with the village. How do you account for the hand?" "Trickery, your father and simple. Foolish ideas. You may say the next night—at least the southern negro—is full of tricks like these. They will come in a sign that the world is coming to an end."

"Some of them have already deserted. It looks to me something more than a joke. Hineson All gave her a quick shrewd glance. He wondered what was going on in the girl's mind. Had she any suspicions? It was inherent for her to speak the truth.

"I have you mistaken to Storm of the hill?" she asked. "I have given you my word. You ought to know that I never break it." "But often repeat giving it?" she asked.

"Well, my advice is, stay at home. There will be some one who will take any risks on account of Storm's people." "You said it was probably a bumpkin's joke. Yes, but the negroes cannot be trusted in a case where their imagination may get the better of their common sense. Better wait until you hear from this fool of a lover of yours."

"I'm better able to judge John Storm than you," coldly. "He is not a fool." "Holy-holy! Hasn't it ever occurred to you that Storm is young, clever, and very smart? He is not a fool. What do you mean by that?" "I'm a fool, you know everything about his life before me, you said."

"I am going to make some investigations, and you must let me go my own way. No talking after me when I am out of town. I will be back in the village, will-know what is going on. No one would come from the outside to play a game like this."

MYSTERY.

Zudora is left an orphan at an early age. Her father is killed by a man who has discovered. In an hour after hearing of the death of her husband, Zudora's mother—a tight, rigid, rather with a classic in nature with a very, falls and is killed.

Zudora, and the fortune from the small sum which grows to be $100,000, are left in the guardianship of Frank Krue, a circus man; Zudora's mother's brother, Zudora gives up her great beauty, reaches the age of 18. The uncle, who has put himself up as a Hindu mystic and is known as Hassam All, decides in his greed that Zudora must die before she can have a chance to come into possession of her money, so that it may be left to her next of kin, and he prevails upon her to leave her money in his hands three years longer and any money to anyone about the fortune. Hassam All never allows Zudora to see a scheme in the person of John Storm, a young lawyer, for whom Zudora, a young fancy, and he commands the money for to leave her money in his hands three years longer and any money to anyone about the fortune. Hassam All never allows Zudora to see a scheme in the person of John Storm, a young lawyer, for whom Zudora, a young fancy, and he commands the money for to leave her money in his hands three years longer and any money to anyone about the fortune.

"You may marry him, fall for a single instant, and you will be ruined."

CHAPTER IV.

THE SECRET OF THE HAUNTED HILLS.

Perhaps a month elapsed without any further news from Hassam All's uncle, Zudora and Storm had their own work, always previously arranged by the carrier. Hassam All pretended to know nothing. Besides, he was busy with numerous clients who wanted to know about business law, various matters, and somebody else's part. And he continued to build his pyramid of phantom gold. The one mistake he had made was to give Zudora the knowledge of her immense fortune. The trustees had always addressed their letters to him, and he had never seen them. He had kept her in ignorance. But, evil as he was himself, he had a profound respect for Zudora's mother. He had kept her in ignorance. But, evil as he was himself, he had a profound respect for Zudora's mother. He had kept her in ignorance. But, evil as he was himself, he had a profound respect for Zudora's mother.

Storm had argued Zudora a dozen times to marry him secretly, but she steadfastly refused to accede to his wishes. Of what use to marry if they were to be kept in ignorance? What of what use to burden themselves with a secret which would interfere with their pursuits and bang threateningly at their heads? They had reasoned, her friends would always look askance at her, after some months the secret would be known. She was not willing, with her husband openly. No; she had given her word and she would not break it. She would wait until that mysterious cloud which hung, lowering over them both.

One night while alone he tried to figure out the basic cause, for Hassam All's attitude. Some day, when he was back over Hassam All's part, with all the searching inquiry of a lawyer. There was something more than mere business law involved. He had confessed this belief to Zudora, however. It did not look quite fair to her to put doubts in her head. But there is no getting around the plain fact that he feared Hassam All's attitude. Some day, when he was back over Hassam All's part, with all the searching inquiry of a lawyer. There was something more than mere business law involved. He had confessed this belief to Zudora, however. It did not look quite fair to her to put doubts in her head. But there is no getting around the plain fact that he feared Hassam All's attitude.

One day Storm received a letter from his mother, and the contents terrified him and then alarmed him. His mother was well, but she was in the south. Their forbears had been sufferers of wealth and position up to war times. Place by place, the double inheritance had vanished, and it was the time of John's birth, they had sunk from affluence to the ordinary country life. He was a good son, writing home once a month, but he was not a visitor. Often he had sent checks home, but invariably there had been some excuse for his living being there; they had enough for their simple needs; and when they died all they had was a few dollars.

His mother had written that an alarming mystery had confronted them, one that promised to decimate the family. The mystery was in the farms and estates. Just now, when all the crops were ripe, it meant ruin for a great many white souls in the south. This mystery was no idle fancy, no idle rumor; it was a living fact. She and her husband had seen the thing themselves, and they were normal minded people. Some of the things that had happened would not be a servant left in the country.

The hill back of the Storm place was the scene of the night after the night of the hill. There appeared the spectral skeleton of a human hand with a long, thin, blue-ice-ice tail. It had been seen by an enormous bull. No one could get close to it. Invariably, it vanished at the sight of a human being. The night following nothing came of it.

and conditional constraint as in the same class, whereas international law defines absolute constraint as a condition of the use of arms and directly for the use of an army and navy, and conditional constraint those products susceptible of use by armies, navies and whose destination must be the determining factor in selection.

The American note, mentioning that foodstuffs are conditional constraint, place, they may be destined for the use of a civil population as well as an army, says the United States in a letter agreement with the doctrine of reciprocity for the use of an army and navy, and conditional constraint those products susceptible of use by armies, navies and whose destination must be the determining factor in selection.

"The American note, mentioning that foodstuffs are conditional constraint, place, they may be destined for the use of a civil population as well as an army, says the United States in a letter agreement with the doctrine of reciprocity for the use of an army and navy, and conditional constraint those products susceptible of use by armies, navies and whose destination must be the determining factor in selection."

Foodstuffs with a hostile destination can be considered constraint of war only if they are supplies for the enemy's forces. It is not sufficient that they are capable of being so used; it must be shown that this was in fact their destination at the time of seizure.

Would Heppen Concede?
This is perhaps the broadest declaration of the American note. If it were accepted by Great Britain, American trade with Germany and Austria, virtually at a standstill now, would be resumed, including wheat, flour, livestock and other foodstuffs.

It is the contention of the destruction of American ships at sea, the Washington government states that it cannot tolerate undue delays examining them or the conveying of such ships to British ports for detailed examination. It argues that proof of hostile destination of the cargo must be in evidence at the time of search at sea. The belated rights of search, the note adds, is fully recognized, but it cannot be extended to the point of diverting American ships into belligerent ports merely on suspicion.

Copper Treatment Worries
One of the complaints cited in the note is against the treatment by Great Britain of American cargoes of copper. It is claimed that Great Britain is not according the same treatment to American trade in copper with the Scandinavian countries as to commerce in this product between the United States and Italy under the same conditions of shipment. Even though the Italian government has proclaimed an embargo on the exportation of copper from Italy to belligerent countries, similar to the embargo in force in Norway, Denmark and Sweden, the consignments of copper to Italy from the United States are said to be held up, while those to the

THE BEN GREET PLAYERS.

News before has the Twin Falls public been given the opportunity to hear two of Shakespeare's Great Comedies, in one session, but it is the management of the Greet's has arranged for a matinee Saturday afternoon, January 31st, when the Ben Greet Players will appear in "As You Like It."

The Ben Greet Players—a company of twelve people—were personally trained under Mr. Ben Greet and play under his direction.

The Ben Greet is favorably known from coast to coast as the greatest actor of Shakespearean comedy today, and to hear them in "As You Like It" and "Twelfth Night" will be the treat of the season.

STATEMENT OF WORK DONE

Associated Charities Has Done Splendid Work This Winter.

The board of the Associated Charities feels that a statement of the work of the Christmas season is due to the public and the people who so generously contributed to the success of the work. The Associated Charities' work has been interwoven with that of the other organizations that it is impossible to separate it into units in the minds of the community. The cheerfulness and cheerfulness of all Twin Falls has been an evident and tangible, as the clothing, provisions, coal and toys. To the best of our knowledge, the unfortunate ones in town are cared for and comfortable. Contributions have been given from churches, the Old Folks, families and individuals. The Elks have given with their accustomed generosity and many other clubs were filled by them.

Groups of friends who had planned to make the day memorable by gifts of dinners, included for their boxes the delicately wrapped packages which the Twentieth Century club turned over to the Associated Charities at the close of the season. The Associated Charities needs of each family were looked into, the ages of the children considered, and each box and basket was carefully examined. The Associated Charities has done in a true Christmas spirit—the more fortunate shared their blessings with the less favored, and the gladness of the season was felt alike by those who gave and those who received. The Boy Scouts had a part in the distribution of the gifts.

Many people telephoned that they wished to carry holiday cheer to some one else, and into those baskets from families, clubs and Sunday school classes, went not alone good things to eat, but heartfelt wishes for a brighter New Year.

"Twin Falls has done" the present needs of her people with her usual open hearted generosity and the Associated Charities is proud to have done it in this informal statement. These books show in detail just what help has been given.

G. S. SEAVER, Secy.

INDIANS GOT HORSESHOE

Indian Police Slipped One Over on the League's Brother.

Jack Smiler, one of the smoothest of Indian horse rustlers, finally came to grief, and his dignity as a bad Indian and a regular dare-devil was trampled in the dust of a horse robbery when he was turned over to Sheriff Lowry yesterday.

Smiler has been wanted by the officers for some time for starting a horse race in his neighborhood, but he has been caught in a trap here. He was riding on a horse, and he was aware of it, he was grabbed and properly hoisted and delivered to the authorities. His most recent offense was the stealing of a horse and saddle from Frederick Swanson, north of town, and he had to beat a pretty hot trail after that.

Smiler has the reputation of being a pretty ugly citizen and there is some satisfaction on the part of ranchers that he has at last been corralled.

SPLENDID ENDORSEMENT

Sheshone Paper Speaks in High Terms of Retiring Jurist.

Judge Edward A. Wallers who retires from the bench as judge of the Fourth Judicial district on the 4th of January announces that he will retire in the prime of his life. Twin Falls as soon as he has been relieved of his judicial duties. He will have associated with him, C. O. Long, that city, who is one of the leading attorneys of Twin Falls county and has been practicing at that place for a number of years. Judge Wallers is too well known for the Democrat to attempt to tell the people of this district of his ability as a lawyer, but as a judge he has no superior in Idaho. He understands the laws of Idaho as few attorneys do. He has a pleasing personality and when he gives a client advice that client does not need to be uneasy about the
