THE OPEN AIR BARN

Hoard Dairyman's Exponent of Open Air Structure for Dairy Stock.

We note with interest the article in your issue of October pinned in regard to the Ohio, man who has been held in such strict control in keeping his dairy herd in a cow-barn. The article is especially interesting to us because it is right along the line which we have been following for years, only we go farther in the open air treatment than Ohio friends. Our cows live out of doors the year around, entering the barn only to feed their grain, which is proportional to them according to their individual requirements, and to be carded and milked. The average time the cows spend in the barn is about three hours a day. The balance of the twenty-four hours they spend in a large open corral where they drink, eat alfalfa hay, stand around or sleep, at will. From fifteen years of experience we have come to the conclusion that this method is the best, at least, it is the best method to follow in this climate. A daily record is kept of each cow's milk production, and it is a fact that more milk is produced by the open air method than in any other. The temperature in the barn is very much the same as it is in the corral, and the only purpose of the barn is to have a dry clean place in which to do the milking and to grade the cows. If the barn was very warm and comfortable the cows probably would be more susceptible to disease than they are when the barn is open at the winter months, but the open air method in going in and out.

The proof of the pudding is in the eating. This level has lately undergone a thorough test for the first time, with the result that we find that the open air method is superior to the entire herd of 100 cows. In some months in the case of the veterinarian who had the test we found it to have a dry clean place in which to do the milking and to grade the cows. If the barn was very warm and comfortable the cows probably would be more susceptible to disease than they are when the barn is open at the winter months, but the open air method in going in and out.

best quality, and an ounce of salt goes into every feed. The alfalfa is raised and put up with special care, and with the idea of obtaining the best results from the stock to which it is to be fed.

Weather permitting the hay is cut while it is at the first blossom appear, while there is still much sap remaining in the stems. It is raked up and bunched in small shocks as soon as it can be well handled, and allowed to do most of its curing in the stock. By this time it is ready to stack these shocks have settled considerable, and the hay is just as ready to use as if it had been cured in a stack.

The stacks are made five or six feet high, and are held together, with the loss of but few of the leaves and tender stems. The shocks are laid on all sides, which are piled on hay-sides, and drawn by teams through the field to the stacks.

FINDINGS OF BOARD OF INQUIRY.

Findings of board of inquiry, Portico hotel, Twin Falls, Idaho, 4:00 p. m., Saturday, February 6th, 1915, for the purpose of investigating and placing responsibility for the death of Lind Christian, who was killed during the fire at the Oregon Short Line Railroad company, opposite the freight depot, Twin Falls, Idaho, on the morning of February 5th, 1915.

After listening to the testimony of all available witnesses, we find that Lind Christian was seen alive at the Oregon Short Line depot on the evening of February 4th, at which time Oregon Short Line train No. 51 was standing at the station. Fierman a young man answering his description was ordered off the train by Philip Seales, while train was pulling up to the station from the station to take the train, evidently to steal a ride, on the right hand-side of the train between the rear of the tender and the forward end of the baggage car; that upon being ordered off he stepped on the ground on the right hand side into a hole of injury. After falling over they pulled out and the indications are he attempted to board some portion of the train and fell across the south or right hand side rail, body being found next morning about 180 feet south or right of the main track, portions thereof being dragged a distance of about 30 feet. This train No. 54, engine 870, was the last train passing Twin Falls station until the body was found.

We, therefore, conclude that the deceased met his death through his own carelessness in attempting to board
