THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Written By Charles Goddard

SYNOPSIS
Stanford Marvin, a wealthy manufacturer of automobiles, was kidnapped and put to work. His son Harry, and his orphaned daughter, Pauline, love each other but she wants to see two years of thrilling adventures before marrying. Her reason is that she is ambitious to be a writer. Old Mr. Marvin asks to see what she has written. While Pauline and Harry are in search of a magazine containing her first story, Mr. Marvin learns the case of a mummy just received from Egypt. Raymond Owen, his rascally private secretary, helps lift off the front of the case, but leaves old Mr. Marvin to remove the mummy's bandages alone. Marvin draws a fainting spell, and the half-neglected mummy comes to life, step out of her case, take a bracelet from her wrist and try to force it into his hands, while her lips reveal a strange message from the remote past. Restored to consciousness by Harry and Pauline, the old man believes it is all a dream, until, later, he finds the identical bracelet on the mummy's skeleton wrist. He pronounces Pauline one year to see life and places her in the guardianship of Owen. A final heart attack gives him just time to write on the doctor's prescription pad a very brief and simple will. Then he dies. A lawyer tells that the will would have permanent charge of Pauline's vast estate if something should happen to her before she marries. Owen, the rascally man, and Owen conspire to kill Pauline. The preceding chapters have dealt with the many efforts of the two, to accomplish this.

Marvin factory—the one that burned in 1892.
"But that is in the town."
"No indeed. The town has grown away from it—around the new factory. The old building is half a mile from any road. No one goes near it."
"Good! But about the fire, I don't like that idea."
"The fire will be nothing," said Balthazar with a toss of his hands. "I will see that there is little damage. All that is necessary is to get him excited enough to be off his guard and send him without being seen. Here we are now. Take that side road, Master. The trees will hide the car."
Owen swerved the machine into what looked more like a thicket than a road. It was overgrown with giant weeds and grasses, but the heavy wheels of the automobile crushed through the firm impediment. In three minutes, they had wrecked fifteen years of nature's retirement.
"They're here," said Owen, with a jerk of the wheel, "but once had been the pride of Brathville when the first Marvin opened his first factory. Now it lies, tomblike, in its overlooked down.

"Where does it lead to?" he asked.
"To the old furnace pit below," answered Balthazar. "It is not a pleasant place—and a safe one!" he added with a grin.
The black pit into which he gazed was perhaps twelve by four feet in dimensions and about five feet below the ground level of the building. From it came the smell of the must of years. Damp, fetid grime and moans waited it. Owen drew back quickly.
"Yes," he said, "there couldn't be a better place. But—we don't need to stay here any longer. Who is to do the work?"
"I have a friend of the name of Balthazar," answered Balthazar. "He was trained to lay bricks before he taught himself to lay plans. He is a man of wisdom and caution."
"Caution!" cried Owen. "It is always caution. I should like to see some deeds instead of delays, some risks instead of remonstrances."
"Master, he will take any risks—but it will cost."
"Again!"
"We are risking our lives to kill for you, Master."
"I will pay you as soon as we are caught—not before."
"That is reasonable, he will be easily caught."
"This afternoon, if you think best. The sooner the better. Come back to the machine. This place is too was opened, he found himself not in a secluded apartment, but in a "bathhouse," as Owen called it. The light flashed through the briefly opened entrance, seemed to extend a hundred feet ahead of them.

The door was closed silently and they were in utter darkness. Owen did not see who opened it, who closed the "bathhouse door," an electric flashlight from his pocket and guided the way along the corridor. The sound of voices came to them faintly. Balthazar rapped at another portal, and they were admitted into an immense room—a room fitfully lit, reeking with the accents of bad liquor and bad liquor.
There were perhaps twenty men in the room. They were playing cards. A billiard table, its cover, torn beyond hope, was the best of the dice game. The cried Owen. "It is always caution. I should like to see some deeds instead of delays, some risks instead of remonstrances."

growth of silos. Had one not known that the great new Marvin factory, born of this fire, lay just half a mile to the westward, she would have fed a sense of gloom in viewing this ruined mansion of industry.
With Balthazar leading, they pushed their way through west and toward the door of the dilapidated structure. "You don't want to go inside, do you?" asked Owen nervously. "That form looks as if it would fall if it were not for the wall of the old workroom that had once been the main workroom of the factory."
Owen followed hesitantly. The room had no roof. Its covering had caved in years ago, and the feet of the braves of its ruins, now crumpled on masses of fallen brick and board and glass. It would have been gloomy had not the afternoon sun splash on them amid the wreckage.
From the inner wall of the old workroom towered still the chimney that once had smoked and barked proudly from its own pipe, settled the quest of Brathville's men that worked nearby. The parapets and moorland decayed away. The chimney was about twenty feet wide at the base, and its pipe of red and blue in its brick sides, still towered forty feet above the ground. Balthazar led them toward the base of the chimney. He pointed mechanically to an office about two feet square in the side of a low wall. Owen looked through the hole and looked down.

"Where does it lead to?" he asked.
"To the old furnace pit below," answered Balthazar. "It is not a pleasant place—and a safe one!" he added with a grin.

"IDAHOME" The Flour of Quality

It has long been a well established fact that Idaho leads, especially among the best baker and in homes where quality is desired.

Idahome is made from the choicest wheat grown in Idaho and the result is the best flour on the market today.

Just try a sack and note the difference in your bread, cakes, rolls or anything you care to bake—it will be a delight to you.

Idahome is put up in twenty-four, fifty and one-hundred pound sacks and is very moderately priced when quality is considered—in fact it costs you no more than inferior grades.

When ordering your groceries tomorrow be sure that you include a sack of Idahome flour—try it along with the brand that you have been using, we're sure you'll be pleased—if not, return it to your grocer—Idahome is guaranteed.

PERILS OF PAULINE

gined, was sneering cordially at a mechanic who was fixing the engine of a large machine.

"Isn't she a beauty?" demanded Harry of Pauline. "Her greatest speed is three miles an hour, and she has been up more than 100 feet from the ground."

The aviator looked at Harry, his questioning rebuke. "I've had her up 5,000 feet myself," he said defiantly, and put her a mile a minute against the wind.

"Harry laughed.

"May we go up now?" asked Pauline.

"No," said Harry. "I have just told you that it is a machine."

"Well, I will take one like it," she said, turning to the aviator. "Where my brother goes, I shall go."

They were interrupted by Raymond Owen, who came leisurely through the bushing of the field.

"Do not use this aeroplane, Owen," said Pauline. "It is extremely exclusive. Wait until I get mine."

Owen was puzzled. The aeroplane did not form any part of his present plans. Besides, he was a little nervous for behind the bushes from which he had just emerged he knew that Halthaz and Ravell by hiding. He had brought them there in the hope of a capture, but the presence of the aviators had foiled them.

However, he managed a cheery answer and followed Harry and Pauline to the house.

Ravell went through the bushes and joined the aviators. Halthaz followed him.

"That's a great machine—a wonder," said Ravell.

"You bet it is," said the aviator. "But who let you in?"

"I used to run one myself," said the disgraced soldier, ignoring the inquiry and moving, as if fascinated, around the machine.

"Come along," said Halthaz. And reluctantly Ravell followed him across the grounds to the wood gate and out into the road.

Harry and Pauline were in the library when the telephone bell rang about three hours later. As Harry answered the call, his face suddenly blanched. He shut almost closed questions over the wire, and snapping the receiver on the hook, turned with a look of dismay to Pauline.

"What is it—what has happened?" she cried. It was sudden that Harry showed alarm.

"The factory at Brathville is on fire," he called back to her as he was running to the door.

She flew after him to the parage. "I'm coming, too," she cried.

He looked his protest, but there was no time for words. He helped her to the seat of the racing machine, and she shut down the motor.

Owen stood pacing after them with a look of almost pining anguish. He was called back to the library by Harry and renewed ringing of the telephone bell.

The voice of Halthaz sounded over the wire.

"The factory has gone to the tower, and the fire is spreading to the barn, and the wind sweeps it on. The firemen are helpless."

"What does that matter?" questioned Owen coldly. "They are on their way to you. Let us arrange to follow."

"But the fire will wipe out the town, Master."

"What is the town to me? Have your men got their firemen's clothing?"

"Yes, Master. Shall we help extinguish the factory?"

"Let it burn. If you do the work I paid you to do, I can spare a factory."

It was on a hilltop ten miles from burning Brathville that Harry and Pauline in their racing car. He saw the smoke-roun with the bird-like shape that marked a city's doom.

"That's the whole town, looking," said Harry in a hoarse voice.

Pauline shuddered and gasped, fastening at the farthing battelements of flame. They sped on.

As they drew nearer the smell of hot smoke reached them, and they could hear the roar of the wind-driven machine. On the hill overlooking the town they could see houses after houses burst into flame; and, now, glowing like driven beasts along the road, came fire, red-hot men, women and children, carrying their smouldering bodies, weeping, shouting and afraid.

At the edge of the town a company of firemen had been evidently barred from a nearby building without apparatus, and from a side road as Harry called out.

"Mr. Marvin," called one of the men, dashing to the side of the machine, "our chief has asked if he can see you. There is a chance saving part of the town by using dynamite."

Harry stopped the car and jumped out.

"He has better wait here," he said to Pauline.

"No," Pauline said.

"I'm coming with you," she declared.

"This way said the man. His companions followed, and he and Harry and Pauline hurried to the side road.

Another man in a fireman's uniform came running to meet them. As he reached Harry he struck him a blow in the face, knocking him into the arms of his followers. Two men seized Pauline. In the din of the flying cars on the main road and the roar of the fire, their cries were unheeded.

"Get them first," said Halthaz, taking off his fireman's helmet. "Then back to the automobile."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

"Why didn't I go?" why did I trust it, Halthaz?"

Raymond Owen, pacing the library of Castle Marvin, was berating himself for his faith in others.

There are no such things as religion or weakness. There are men who give the idols of evil that they can get a kind of remorse in the failure of the cruel machinations. Raymond Owen was one of these. He was coward. He aimed to be colonially a thief, but he had never had the power of his strange brain was only misdirected, not dimmed by the inherent cruelty of his nature, and the soul-destroying force of the drugs he used. But he had that weakness of the animal designs—the terror of sin.

To him now the library of Castle Marvin, flooded softly with the sunshine of mid-afternoon, scented of the flowers from the garden, was a place of fear and peril.

The vines of veranda made lazy shadows shifted with the shifting of the leaves on the wall of the library. They got on Owen's nerves. Owen was a man who was waiting for the joy of a death message. The waiting tortured him. He was not afraid that he might hear they were alive.

The dimming light in the library drove him out to the fresh air of the veranda. He turned sharply, however, and dashed back into the library, to catch up the telephone feverishly to trembling hands.

"Halthaz," said a low voice over the wire.

"Yes," Owen answered the secretary.

"It is all well. It is done," came the musical words of the grant.

Owen softly returned the telephone receiver to his book. A smile of complacency overspread his pallid face. He had not dared to ask questions, but he felt sure that if Halthaz had made his way to Westbury—the nearest place where a telephone could be had—the work had been fully completed. He felt sure that Harry and Pauline lay dead in the scalded pit of the main factory.

The telephone bell rang again.

Owen passed his hand clutching his chin in hesitant self-questioning. But he was not to be answered by the bell. "Hello—Castle Marvin," came a man's excited voice over the wire.

"This is Castle Marvin," Owen called.

"Tell Mr. Marvin all Brathville is burning—the factory's gone. We can't stop the fire."

"You are crazy, man. What do you mean?" yelled Owen in excellent alarm.

"I mean I'm the manager."

But Owen had hung up the receiver and was turning with a look of utter satisfaction away from the table.

"He was talking to me, wasn't he?" Owen said to himself. "I must warn the household," he whispered pleasantly to himself.

The automobile in which Harry and Pauline lay helpless crunched its way slowly along the crumpled road that Owen and Halthaz had traversed a few hours before.

Harry lay on his back in the bottom of the tonneau; Pauline lay on the seat. Halthaz with a drawn revolver in his hand, stood guard over them. But the machine moved so slowly that the other eyes on foot kept pace with it. To any indifferent eye, they were but figures of the contumacious and the foolish of the bushep told them that they were in a secluded place, but their bloodshot eyes gave them no clue to their whereabouts.

Gunshot after shot, helpless, hopeless, the only comfort that came to either of their minds was that they were together in the first hour.

To Harry it was certainly that this was the end. He had seen the face of the aviator Halthaz while they were building him in the shadow of the by-rack, in the glare of the fire. But as he lay on the bottom of the automobile, he felt faint of a sudden, the head of the by-rack. He caught the scent of it. No artificial perfume, no breath of blossom—only the acrid aroma of her hair. And his eyes have loved greatly know that good woman breathe a fragrant holy and sublime.

So, as their captors bore them through the overgrown pathway, he knew that she was near him, and he gave thanks that if death came, together they should share it.

"This is the place," said the voice of the spy, Halthaz.

They heard the chance of the footsteps from the soft moan of the woods by the head of the by-rack.

"Everything is here, is it not," Halthaz asked the same voice again.

"Yes," answered the voice of the spy.

"When did he leave us—where did he go?" demanded Halthaz.

"This is the place," said the voice of the spy, Halthaz.

They heard the chance of the footsteps from the soft moan of the woods by the head of the by-rack.

"Everything is here, is it not," Halthaz asked the same voice again.

"Yes," answered the voice of the spy.

"When did he leave us—where did he go?" demanded Halthaz.

"This is the place," said the voice of the spy, Halthaz.

They heard the chance of the footsteps from the soft moan of the woods by the head of the by-rack.

"Everything is here, is it not," Halthaz asked the same voice again.

Four were softened into the heat of footprints on hot pavement. The voices died away. There came the distant chugging of an automobile that was being cranked.

Harry, physically powerful as he was, could have only the fraction of an inch of a flame in the grimy engine of the automobile that held him, hand and foot.

He was fearful of moving in the it, because he could not tell him what was going on behind the door.

His hand struck something. He felt the hand of Pauline against his forehead. He turned upon his side and around the car, from his mouth against the wall. He caught in his teeth the end of the cord that bound her hands.

A low spluttering sound came as if from afar off, but he did not know it. He was frantically tearing with his teeth at the knot in the rope.

The spluttering sound grew into a steady hiss. He turned once more into the street of the pl.

Pauline strained with her frail hands to loosen the rope, while Harry tore at it. It was impossible for him to tell her that she only tightened it by her struggles.

But at last he had cut it free. He

On All of Our Printed Matter, It Represents Good Workmanship, Good Wages, and Good Conditions.

Some time ago The Times called attention to the need for a thorough spring clean-up of the streets, alleys and private premises. With the advent of warmer weather and the thawing of the frost from the ground, the need for that clean-up became imperative. The rubbish piles should be removed and every vestige of fly breeding refused hauled away. Twin Falls is getting nearer every year to the flyless stage due to the care exercised by the city authorities and the citizens. It will not take many years to accomplish a much desired result if each person will do his or her part in keeping clean the premises.

Mexico will not become a settled civilized nation until it has been placed under the iron hand of some greater nation. Factional leaders will succeed other factional leaders until real peace will become out of the question under the present conditions. Mexico is suffering today from too many so-called patriotic leaders. A firing squad from some good strong nation would be the greatest boon to that country.

The intervention of the United States, once undertaken will no doubt be understood until the future reveals to that misguided bunch something of the real purposes back of such steps. Any steps now taken will appear to them as the continuation of Cato's school of philosophy to the citizens of those countries. It is hard to convince any nation that stronger nations can be generous.

The refusal of Great Britain to allow foodstuffs to go to German civil population while it places diplomatic relations in a strained position with this country, was not unexpected. England is not going to take any chances to subsidize her powerful foes even if it means overlooking of a few points in international law. The United States must be guided by the decisions of the first sea power is the essence of the note replying to the demand for better treatment of neutral shipping. It is no time for hysteria and the President is not going to take any snap judgments. The American people can feel assured that no war will come if it can be avoided by any kind of diplomatic evasion. There is one thing that America can be thankful for at least and that is the calm judgment of Wilson in holding down the passions of the population rather than the fiery disposition of Roosevelt.

D. W. Brunk and C. L. Tubbs, of the East Central Idaho Land and Trading company, returned Friday of last week from East Central Idaho, where they located 10 tracts on home place. C. L. Tubbs returned to the same place on Tuesday's early morning train with us but as they can get men in the firm will open an office in Idaho Falls about the first of April. Mr. and Mrs. Tracy will have charge of that office. —Adv. Mar. 16

William E. Miller and Florence H. Conroy, of Salt Lake City, were married at the office of the county recorder, Monday, March 15. The ceremony was performed by Justice W. J. Smith. They will make their home in the hill country.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN That sealed proposals will be received by the Mayor and City Council of the City of Twin Falls, up to eight o'clock P. M., on the FIFTH DAY OF APRIL, 1915, for the furnishing of the necessary labor, material and equipment for the operating of street sprinklers in the streets and avenues and parts of streets and avenues of Local Improvement District No. 20, in the City of Twin Falls, during the fiscal year 1915.

Bids should be made for so much per team and driver per day of eight hours, same to be used for either day or night work, at the discretion of the street commissioner. Bids will be required for five teams and drivers. Same shall be used to operate street sprinklers under control of the street commissioner, during such time as shall be necessary to keep the dust on said streets and avenues well laid.

Bids must be accompanied by certified check in the sum of Fifty Dollars, which sum shall be forfeited to the City of Twin Falls in case the bidder to whom the contract is awarded shall fail to enter into contract with the City within a period of five days after awarding of the contract.

The contractor will be required to furnish bond to the City in a sum equaling sixty per cent of the contract price with any other conditions, to be approved by the City Council, conditional, for the faithful performance of his contract.

Payment for the work will be made monthly on the first Monday of each month for all work performed during the preceding month and will be made by warrants drawn on the fund to be collected by special assessments against the property abutting on the streets and avenues to be sprinkled.

The City Council reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Dated March 15, 1915. STUART H. TAYLOR, City Clerk

Hill Climbing Contest

Held at Buhl Last Sunday

The only one of our competitors to put in an appearance was the Red people and they made a very good showing, and we feel sure they made many friends by so doing.

Here are the results of the climb:

- Class One—All cars listed at $800.00 or less at factory.
 - DODGE—Size of engine in cubic inches, 212.3. Geared 16.63 to 1 on low gear. Took Seven Passengers up the Hill.
 - Class Two—All cars listed at $1,000.00 or less at factory. Size of engine in cubic inches, 165.6. Geared 13.40 to 1 on low gear. Took Five Passengers up the Hill.
 - Class Three—All cars listed at $1,300.00 or less at factory.
 - REO THE 5TH—Size of Engine in cubic inches, 240.5. Geared 11:40 to 1 on low gear. Took Five Passengers up the Hill.
 - BUICK C-37—Size of engine in cubic inches, 220.9. Geared 11.76 to 1 on low gear. Took Seven Passengers up the Hill.
 - Class Four—All cars listed at $1,900.00 or less at factory.
 - BUICK C-55—Size of engine in cubic inches, 331.3. Geared 12.60 to 1 on low gear. Took Five Passengers up the Hill.

We are not satisfied with the showing made by our six, and will make another demonstration on this hill in the near future.

This hill is 43 per cent grade and is right out in the sage brush where the footing is soft.

Remember we are always pleased to show just what our cars will do.

A NNOUNCEMENT to Users of Electrical Energy in Twin Falls

The Idaho Power & Light Company will open its offices and sales room in the city of Twin Falls on Saturday, March 20th, on which date it will be ready to serve the public with all forms of Electrical service and sell the very latest and best in electrical appliances and equipment. Our new quarters at 137 Shoshone Street North will be open to the public on and after the above date and the people of the Twin Falls tract are invited to visit us at any time. We will be pleased to show the modern methods in electrical housekeeping.

We take great pride in stating that we have one of the most modern hydro power plants in the West and enough electric energy to supply the whole of Southern Idaho. This plant is built with all the latest equipment for giving satisfactory and permanent service. Every effort will be made to give that service the year around and allow nothing to interrupt pleasant relationship with our patrons.

In offering Electrical apparatus and equipment to the people of Twin Falls we fully believe that we can furnish the highest grade apparatus cheaper than anyone else because of heavier buying for our many branch offices. We are prepared to give this advantage to our customers in right prices.

In entering the Twin Falls field, we desire to make a record for co-operative work with the people of this city. We can not hope to succeed unless the people are given service and a share in the success of the Idaho Power and Light Company. To this end we must create not only field for our electrical energy but must become a part of the community. We want your patronage and your friendship in making Twin Falls grow.

Idaho Power & Light Co.

Harell was more than cautious. He was thinking not only his freedom but his life...

Some deeper, more compelling call than that of fear had lured him to leap from the window...

There he always found some gold of inspiration in the face of the blackest hour. Harell loved the air. He had loved, as if they were living things...

It was the matter of but a moment for Harell to step through the bushes and seat himself in the machine. He started the engine...

He was not totally dark in the chamber. There were drippings of light from crevices in the roof...

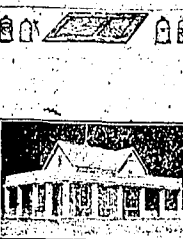

The smoke began to stiffen them. Harry, leading Pauline along the dim passages, stopped at every place to butt his strength against the wall...

"I am not sure," he answered. "But I believe that it is the old factory. I don't know any place else of this kind that they could have reached so quickly..."

"The fire broke was lighted in the old factory. It was the part of the fire in the town, indeed..."

"You mean it was lighted to—kill us?" she asked, her voice still tremulous, but with a gentle calmness that meant courage...

"It is possible," he answered. "He snatched her back along the floor. He had just strength enough to haul Pauline into his arms to pin her head upon his breast before the darkness fell..."

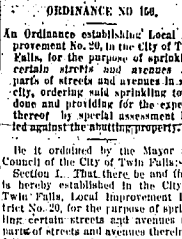

Talking about the value of plenty of pore-room, here's an Idahoan who evidently has firm convictions on that point...
