The testimony in the Harper libel suit against Roosevelt, revealing the political horsetails of the party should give food for serious thought to the voters of the party. It is apparent to any man who reads the evidence, that despite the anxiety of the man in office to do absolutely right, the domination of the party bosses slowly but surely forces the office holder toward the line of easiest resistance.

There can be no real reform until the political system which created these bosses is completely wiped out of existence. Such destruction is hardly possible, inasmuch as the party finances, backed by the big business interests are in the hands of the bosses. Without the financial aid no party can be successful, nor without it can any revolt against the system, hope to succeed.

It must be evident that political freedom is not a reality as long as the Boss Barons of American life control men of honor. It is well that the people face clearly the fact. They must be willing to make sacrifices to break up the system. They must support financially every reform movement. Until they are willing to do this, the boss is an established part of our political system and the real "boss" party. It is not just to criticize many of the men in public life, who, hemmed-in by poverty, have sought to do the will of the people and have by reason of their poverty made a part of the displaced political system and have therefore failed.

BUY IT NOW The gospel of "buy it now" which is being preached in all eastern centers with the purpose of stimulating industry and the circulation of life money needs preaching badly in the west today. Some cities have been progressive enough to start municipal improvements and thus aid in providing wages for the laboring classes. The cities which have done so are prospering just that much more than their neighbors. Twin Falls has need of stimulating all its activities and the pushing of improvements will no doubt find a ready recommendation with the bulk of the people. Money put to circulation by reason of the bond issues brings in outside money and to the fullest extent is made to oil the wheels of local industry among all taxpayers. There is usually a tendency to cut off all public work during financial depression instead of the municipality acting as a paternal assistant to its citizens in time of need.

THE REPLY TO GERMANY

Even those who were inclined to think that Ambassador Count von Bernstorff's recent communication in criticism of our neutrality should have made him persona non grata in Washington profess to be pleased with the friendly reply from our State Department. The fitting answer, says the New York Times, "would have meticulously tickled the country; the answer actually sent will nevertheless, have its proper approval." This latest utterance from Washington, the Syracuse Herald observes, "is as clear and terse an exposition of our policy regarding both the British embargo and the exportation of arms, and it is so free from diplomatic subtleties and ambiguities that we may well feel disposed to pardon the German Ambassador for evoking it." The reply to the German Ambassador's note "can not fail to make a profound impression throughout the world," declares the New York World. Eighth papers are indeed, visible in approval of it. German comment is not available, but the New Yorker Staats-Zeitung, representing pro-German sentiment in this country, thinks it has occasioned a quarrel in more than one quarter. First, "in view of the fact that it had been intimated that the American reply to the Bernstorff memorandum would be very sharp, the note as given out will disappoint all those who had expected at least a break in the diplomatic relations between the United States and Germany." Moreover, "Those will be disappointed who had hoped that the State Department would change its attitude toward the shipments of arms. Nothing of the kind happened. A few empty, amiable phrases about the friendly relations between the two countries and a few words for the purpose of mockery, a hiding behind the old sophistries with regard to the shipments of war-material."

"The only really remarkable thing about the reply is that it evidences the desire to keep and nourish the impression that Count von Bernstorff and not the German Government, is the author of the original note. "One could almost wish that the tone of the reply was more energetic—at least it would have sounded more sincere!" Count von Bernstorff's note which was quoted in these columns last week objected to our Administration's policy, chiefly on the ground of acquiescence in British aggression and failure to stop the exportation of munitions of war to the enemies of Germany. The American reply, says the New York Evening Post's correspondent, is regarded in Washington as a carefully framed statement of the position of the United States which will clear up any doubt that may have existed concerning that position. The phraseology of the note is highly commended by the New York papers, which conjecture variously as to its authorship, especially considering President Wilson or Mr. Lansing responsible for the final wording, though the document is signed by Secretary Bryan. Count von Bernstorff is informed that the negotiations between the United States and Great Britain are "hardly appropriate for discussion between the Government of the United States and the Government of Germany." Mr. Bryan regrets to find the language of the Ambassador's memorandum "unacceptable as being construed as impugning the good faith of the United States in the performance of its duties as a neutral." He adds: "I take it for granted that you are also aware that your Excellency is laboring under certain false impressions that I can not too explicitly be setting forth the facts as they are."

when fully reviewed and comprehended." To quote:

"In the first place, this Government has at no time and in no manner relinquished one of its rights as a neutral to any of the present belligerents. It has acknowledged as a matter of course, the right of visit and search and the right to apply the rules of contraband of war to articles of commerce.

"It has indeed insisted upon the use of visit and search as an absolute necessary safeguard against mistaking neutral vessels for vessels-owned by and enemy and against mistaking legal cargoes for illegal. It has admitted, also the right of blockade, if actually exercised and effectively maintained. Reference is made to the unsuccessful attempt to secure mutual concessions from the British and German Governments regarding interference with neutral sea-trade. Secretary Bryan regrets that your Excellency did not deem it worthy of mention in modification of the impressions you expressed." He continues:

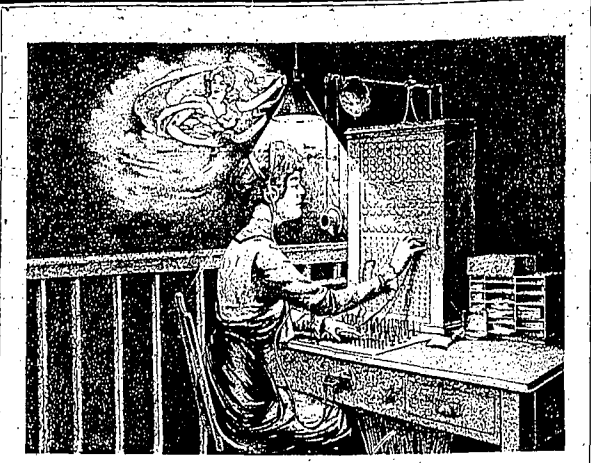

"In the third place, I note with sincere regret that in discussing the sale and exportation of arms by citizens of the United States to the enemies of Germany, your Excellency seems to be under the impression that it was within the choice of the Government of the United States, knowing its professed neutrality and its diligent efforts to maintain it in other particulars, to prohibit this trade, and that its failure to do so manifested an unfair attitude toward Germany.

"This Government holds . . . that any change in its own laws of neutrality during the progress of a war which would affect unreasonably the relations of the United States with the nations at war would be an unjustifiable departure from the principle of strict neutrality, by which it has consistently sought to direct its actions, and by respectfully submit that none of the circumstances urged in your Excellency's memorandum alters the principle involved." The note closes with the declaration that the United States Government feels compelled to speak with perfect frankness because "the friendship between the people of the United States and the people of Germany is so warm and of such long standing, and the ties which bind them to one another in amity are so many and so strong."

No fault, comments the New York Journal of Commerce, can be found with the opening sentences of the memorandum which seem "to be addressed by a candid friend to one of extreme sensibility who has been hurt through a misunderstanding of the conduct of that friend toward one who is an enemy of the person aggrieved. There is, it is remarked, "a keen though gentle touch in the statement that the use of visit and search is an absolutely necessary safeguard against mistaking neutral vessels for those of an enemy and legal cargoes for illegal but no reference is made to the difficulty of applying this use with mines and submarines." The second complaint of Count Bernstorff, concerning the exportation of arms, "was easier to deal with, because there is no room for doubt regarding the application of established principles."—Literary Digest.

SILAGE FERMENTATION

(By W. M. Esten and J. C. Mason)

The following is a digest under this title of Bulletin No. 70, issued by the Storrs Experiment Station of Storrs, Connecticut. It is, for all odds, the ablest and most complete work on the subject of the preservation of silage, going founded on five years of investigation, by eminent scientists. It is a work worthy of inspection, and is authoritative in its assertions.

The bulletin treats principally on the changes which corn undergoes after it has been placed in the silo, and explains the curing process minutely. From this bulletin we learn there are two acids developed during the curing process of silage, which are lactic acid and acetic acid. These acids are not only as a preservative, but also serve in silage digesting, and as a tonic in the animal system. The development of these acids is favored by high temperature, which is essential to the perfect preservation of the silage.

The outline explains in this bulletin the silo should be properly constructed and of a non-conductive material. Quoting from a part of their bulletin, on page twenty, paragraph three, we have the requirements for the proper curing of silage:

"The necessary factors are proper temperature, lack of air, symbiosis. The development of heat is spontaneous. The lack of air is obtained by close and air-tight walls. All these factors are automatic and are produced to perfection in a properly constructed wooden stave silo."

In determining the curing of silage on different temperatures, the authors give data on the benefit derived by the higher temperature in the curing of silage, and conclude with the following quotation:

"The experiment explains why silage does not keep as well in cement, stone or brick silos. The cement, stone and brick conduct away the heat generated in a silo and the acid fermentation is checked, unless the temperature of the air at silage time is much warmer than normal. Another factor is that cement and brick are porous and allow the water to rest and which causes it to seep. The appearance of silage is not so complete as to its quality. It may appear to keep perfectly at the edges of a cement silo, but the acid and chemical tests are necessary to prove that it is normal silage. The odor of silage is the next best test."

In testing the silage produced by different kinds of silos they give the following comment, to explain the reasons why wood makes the best material for preserving the silage:

"In the first place, wood is a poor conductor of heat. It conserves the warmth temperature at the beginning of fermentation so the proper acid is formed, and prevents largely the freezing of silage. Secondly, silage keeps best against wood and nothing is lost around the edges. In some cement silos suffer a loss of silage is experienced at the edges."

The testing of conductivity by using a silo having a number of different materials in the wall, alternating wood, stone, brick, etc., gave the investigator a good opportunity to note the bacterial changes which take place as evidenced by heat or cold, and they conclude their bulletin by the following comment:

"When ensilage comes into contact with the brick and the cement surface of the stone and the brick, the heat generated by fermentation is conducted away so rapidly that the temperature does not rise to the height necessary to prevent the development of the organisms of putrefaction. That is, to prevent rotting, or perhaps the temperature does not rise to a height sufficient to cause the best development of the organisms of fermentation, and to prevent thereby the development of the organisms of putrefaction. The successful preservation of ensilage may require the development of certain organisms which, by the very fact of their development, retard or prevent growth of organisms which would be detrimental."

Professor Henry, of the Wisconsin experiment station, has also arrived at the same conclusion. In the Proceedings of the University of Wisconsin, dated June 12, 1888, he says:

"Probably very few stone silos will be built in the future, as experience shows that a stone wall fills the silo during the curing process, and, if it does not seriously injure that portion of the silage in thickness of several inches, it renders it at least less palatable than ensilage nearer the middle of the silo. The reason for this is, in our opinion, that the stone wall of a silo has not won more friends in the eastern states is owing to the common use of stone in its construction. On our experimental farm at Madison our first silo, built in 1881, was of stone, and our conclusions in regard to ensilage were made up from results obtained from this silo; but we put up a wooden structure, and we confirm our results should be considered vastly more by our people than they were."

Conclusions.

Their conclusions are as follows:

1. The fermentation of corn silage is essentially the change of sugar into several acids. The most important change is the conversion of a part of the sugar by lactic acid bacteria into lactic acid. A second change is produced by the action of yeast on the remaining sugar, changing it to alcohol. The acetic bacteria change the alcohol into acetic acid.
2. The presence of air is necessary for the proper production and preservation of silage.
3. The walls of a silo should be non-conducting to heat, cold and moisture.
4. Mature corn makes silage of better quality with less waste than young corn.
5. Silage undergoes ripening, somewhat similar to the ripening of cheese, which softens the fibre, makes it more digestible and gives it a pleasant and agreeable flavor. This ripening occupies from three to four weeks.
6. A silo is the cheapest form of storage.
7. Any farm product can be stored, provided there is sufficient room for the mixture to be fermented into acid to preserve it.
8. The following mixtures silo successfully and make a very desirable and nearly balanced ration: Alfalfa and dry clover and timothy or wheat or oats and peas, and corn and cow peas or soy beans.
9. A round wooden stave silo, taking all things into consideration, has proven most satisfactory.
10. Nothing excels the feeding of silage, especially lucerne silage, during the dry summer months, for keeping up the milk flow to its highest point.

ONE WEEK ONLY

SLIAGE FOR SHEEP

With the tremendous increase in the use of silage for fattening a larger amount of the corn plant and the greater use of silage generally during the last two or three years, there has been a great deal of inquiry especially during the present winter as to the value of silage for sheep. Recently silage has come into general use on cattle farms. Now that its value as a cattle food, from the standpoint of cheapness, is becoming more and more apparent, the man who owns sheep is beginning to ask why he cannot share in a good thing too.

Unfortunately, the use of silage for sheep feeding purposes has been tried out to a limited extent. Few farmers have used it and the Experiment Stations have done little. From all sources of investigation it seems now that there is no reason why silage should not find a permanent place in the list of desirable and economical feedstuffs for sheep. The writer has just several men this winter who have used it with satisfactory results, and one man especially, who had fed out quite a string of sheep with silage almost the sole feed, was very enthusiastic in his appreciation of it. We have not found any men who have had trouble from feeding it.

There has been a popular conception that silage is more or less dangerous to feed to sheep, especially heading ewes. It was thought that it had a weakening effect on the lambs, also that there is likely to be some mortality among the ewes. Such ideas do not seem to be well founded. It is true that such results have been noted in flocks which had silage, but careful observations show that other factors may have had more to do with the results than the silage. At the close of three years ago the ewe flock had considerable silage, in fact all they cared for. Also the lambs were not so strong at birth as they ought to have been and some loss was experienced at lambing time. But an excessive amount was allowed and ewes were entirely too closely confined without adequate exercise. Exercise is an absolute necessity for pregnant ewes if satisfactory results are to be had at lambing time. Lack of an experienced shepherd to handle these ewes at lambing time doubtless contributed to the loss. Since that year we have had no bad results.

Back in the fall of 1907 the Indiana Experiment Station conducted an experiment on silage for feeding pregnant ewes. One lot of ewes was fed silage along with clover hay and grain, while another lot was fed more silage and more grain but no silage. These two lots of ewes were as nearly alike as could be had for the purpose. Practically the same experiment was repeated and again in 1909. During the first year a limited amount of silage was fed. The second year, four pounds of silage per day, was allowed and as no bad results accompanied this liberal feeding the last year the ewes were given all they would clean up which was practically 45 pounds. With all they weighed of the silage, no deleterious results were observed either in the ewes or in the lambs.

As to results from these three years' experience, the authors of the bulletin concerning this experiment say that the general thrift and appetite of the ewes was superior to that of the hay and grain lot. The ewes, having a quantity of silage, made each year a larger gain over winter than did those on dry feed. The latter averaged for the three years a gain of 13.75 pounds while the silage ewes gained 19.75 pounds or more than twice as much. Yet the writers state definitely that his gain was no more fat like corn feeding would produce, but that the ewes were in good condition to produce strong vigorous lambs. It was a noticeable fact, that this resulted through the whole three years, the lambs from the silage having the strongest feed, i. e., silage, averaged nearly ten per cent larger at birth. As to the cost of feed, the ration including silage, proved the most economical, while more satisfactory results were obtained. The lambs from these two lots of ewes were all fed out for an early market and those from each lot did equally well, gaining nearly a half pound per week until they were sold.

The general results of this test running for three years show definitely that the use of silage for ewes, even in large amounts, will not interfere with the health and thrift of the pregnant ewes nor of her prospective lambs. Also the satisfaction which the silage affords seemed to promote the thrift and general health of the ewe, and because of the better health and vigor the feed was better nourished, with the consequent result that larger lambs were produced. Furthermore the production of three satisfactory results did not affect the lambs unfavorably, and the silage ration was more economical.

Accurate data regarding the value of silage in a ration for fattening sheep and lambs is scarce, but what there is indicates that it is useful. As far back as the early nineties the Michigan Experiment Station fed some lambs on silage and other feed stuffs. The gist of their findings is to the effect that a mixture of feeders composed largely of a good quality of silage proved a cheap and successful ration for fattening lambs.

The Iowa Station at Ames made some comparative tests of dry hays, roots and silage as roughness in 1906 and 1907. In lots fed the first winter, the silage cheapened the ration considerably. During the second winter the various lots were fed for a long period, 105 days, and the silage fed refused to eat much silage. They ate almost as much grain and hay as the other lots did and on these lambs feeding was more expensive than was the case with silage. The other two combinations. But the average of the two years was favorable to the use of silage as a means of cheapening the ration. The lambs from all lots finished into market topers, but the dressed carcasses showed the silage fed a little superior on the dry hays. Taking these few experiments then into consideration, and also the general results which various feeders have obtained in practical work, it seems that silage has an important place among the desirable and economical feeds for fattening sheep.

It is my opinion that silage can be fed to sheep with satisfactory re-ults. The use of moldy or frozen silage may cause trouble, but good clean, bright silage can be used with excellent results, either as a succulent food for breeding ewes in winter or as a cheap but satisfactory and efficient roughage for fattening sheep and lambs. This opinion is based on the results of a series of tests which have been fed, and partially on the experiments quoted above. The results to date point toward silage as a cheap and valuable feed for sheep.

RIMBERLY

The Better, Brighter Calf is a thing of the past, but the interest in better babies will continue, and it is believed much good was done. The appreciation of the community is extended to the Ladies Pioneer club, under whose able management it was conducted and which furnished not only the incentive but medals and diplomas and much valuable material and information. The physicians, Dr. Alderwell, Weaver, Coughlin, Murphy, Miller, Fisher and Davis, also the nurses Mesdames Callahan, Miller, Cramer, Anderson and Gray, gave their services. A very interesting program was given in the school auditorium, Saturday afternoon, following which the awards were made as follows: The bronze medal given to the child of the month was given to Harry Stansbury McCoy, of Hansen, who scored 99.

Diplomas were given in Class 2 to Urick Strong, 94.7; Ruth Elizabeth Lynch, 96; Class 3 to Harry Stansbury McCoy, 99; Ruth Arlene Wooten, 97; Class to Elizabeth Hart, 96.5; Frances Louise Van Houten, 96.5; Class 5 to Harold Franklin Hoover, 97.5; Edna Margaret Newby, 96.5.

The Liberty bell medals were earned by the following pupils for the last period: grade one, Blanche Weller; grade two, Inna Nelson; grade three, Owen Severance; grade four, Loren King; grade five, Willie Wilmarth; grade six, Anna Nelson; grade seven, Joy White; grade eight, Olive; grade nine, Besse Rice; grade ten, Herbert Harding; grade eleven, Clarence Lomp; grade twelve, Kenneth Zuck.

Plans have been made for the close of school as follows: Class sermon, May 16; class exercises, May 17; graduation exercises, May 21.

attractive as any apples shown at the exposition from any state or section. The donations and other varieties of fruit from Twin Falls were also showing up very creditably in the state.

Mr. Taylor on account of short apple propulations by the legislature made for state fruit work in Idaho has been granted a year's leave of absence during which time he will act as field horticulturist of the Utah Fruit Growers' association with headquarters at Salt Lake City. He will be the general field man for the association and will visit the growers' orchards assisting in various operations of growing as well as picking of the fruit.

A HUNGRY BUNCH

Twenty-Four Trained Lions With the Names Show a Wonderful Sight.

Twenty-four full grown, jumbo-bred African lions, every one a born man-eater, is one of the many thrilling spectacles presented by the M. G. Barnes big show, wild animal circus. These animals are shown at one time in a stock-charged arena in the center of the show's mammoth tent, by Herr Louis Roth. This is the largest troupe of trained lions ever successfully shown and the daring of the trainer makes one fairly shiver. Many other dangerous and highly sensational wild animal acts are presented by this show. Major Thornton works with a herd of grizzly, cinnamon, Siberian, black and white bears. Big Bob, a chow was three feet ly being among the lot, Miss Florence, a petite, little girl, with a ringlet with a large number of Persian leopard, jaguars and pumas and her ability to control the bounding beasts is very amazing. Miss Mel Stark presents an act with Royal Bengal and Siberian tigers, the most treacherous animals around, the trainer's life being in peril every moment. Other features of a sensational character are Tom, Jerry Brutus, horse-riding African lions appear; Sampson, another lion, rides to the top of the tent surrounded by shouting sky rockets. A long, grizzly bear, goat and monkey ride galloping ponies around the arena in the same group. A large herd of elephants do some wonderful stunts in acrobatics and posing. A clever female comedy is a part of their act. High school riding stunts horses have a prominent part in the program. Bob Chocolate, directed by Miss Marie Sanders, does the tango in the most approved fashion. A large collection of horses in the entire world ranks with those carried by the "Circus." These horse troupe numbers five hundred and every one has been trained to perform. A company of one hundred Arabian and Standard poodle gallop through an intricate maze of drills and marches. Almost every known animal has been taken in hand by M. G. Barnes and created to net a "Keweenaw" of monkey, the kangaroo, lions, sacred cattle, zebra, zulus, goats, dogs, etc., etc. The program abounds with plenty of wholesome comedy for the little folks, original enough also to make the big folks explode. Flity comedy animals provide the fun. Performances will be given at 2 and 8 p. m. and the doors open at 1 and 7 p. m. A new, glittering four band parade is presented at 10:30. The show will be on exhibit in Twin Falls, Wednesday, May 12th.

"FOR IDAHO" THEIR MOTTO.

Officials of Idaho Commercial Club Foregather at Hieldfield.

"Hello, boys! the water's fine and the fish bite. Follow behind the boat and we will give you a Hieldfield 'come!' And 'Farmer Bill' of the Grub line fame led the secretary in the morning at the meeting of the Idaho State League of Commercial Clubs was held.

Right down to business. As business before pleasure is always a rule with the members of the league, the meeting was at once called to order, and after a few minutes had entertained the visitors with several fine addresses W. J. Tupper, vice-president of the Idaho Commercial Clubs, called the meeting to order.

Jenkins Forced Sale Is On Everybody's Tongue

Everybody knows that Jenkins and Company have been given twenty days to raise twenty thousand dollars and that failure to do so will wipe them out—everybody who knows this concern's good reputation for living up to their statements, and the high grade merchandise carried, knows that they will raise the desired amount.

Every business man knows that—creditors have better memories than debtors: And that creditors are a superstitious lot, being great observers of set days and times—so you can bet Jenkins and Company will see that they have positively the lowest prices so that no competitor can undersell them during the struggle.

Every day of the twenty, is to be a wonderful bargain day, there will be new bargains added all the time—Saturday, the first day of the great sale was a corker for the crowds came from near and far—and they profited greatly. See that you get your share of the bargains. Never mind what the other fellows say, come and see for yourself.

Every garment, every piece of goods, every pair of shoes, every hat, everything thru the store has been cut in price. Including our splendid stock of "Society" and "Kuppenheimer" brands of men's clothing. And the famous "Best-Ever" boys clothing—come see for yourself—come and compare—come and see what each dollar will do.
