

Interdependence Is Theme of Talk

County Agent McLean Declares That Country Needs City for Best Development.

The following address was delivered at the Twin Falls Commercial club luncheon last Thursday at the Rogersons:

Chairman and Gentlemen:
I wish to call your attention to a sentiment that seems to be more or less prevalent amongst the farmers which I run up against now and then in making my rounds. It is that the interest of the farmers and the city men are antagonistic, or, at least, essentially different. It seems to me that for such a feeling to gain any headway would be unfortunate particularly in the community which is as rural as this one is. A farmer said to me the other day: "Why, the City of Twin Falls could not exist if it were not for the country surrounding it." I answered: "I grant you that, but can any of us exist without the help of the people around us?" Social life is all a much more complicated affair than it was a few years ago when we made our own, tallow dips and lighted our own houses, or when we raised our own wool, spun our own yarn and made all our own clothes. Even the food which the farmer eats, he is largely dependent upon others to supply. We are all of us very much interdependent. I call this farmer's basis a number of districts here in Idaho which have good soil and water rights and could raise as abundant crops as this tract, can but which are getting fifty cents a bushel less for their wheat this year, and their land is priced way below this. The reason for this is that they have no transportation lines and the reason that they have no transportation lines is because they have no cities. Railroads do not go into a district which has no farming facilities or places for storing the crops. I said that a rural district would not exist, and transportation lines built to them, is like a log in which the nerves and nerve centers have become paralyzed. It is a big mass of unviable flesh which cannot be exercised so that its surplus circulation to the parts of the body where it is needed. So, although a farming section can exist, its existence will be profitless and useless without its railroads and cities as nerves and nerve centers. I pledge my earnest efforts to overcome this feeling and I hope you gentlemen will help. It seems to me there should be no dividing line between the interests of Twin Falls business men and the farmers about here, and certainly there should be no dead line. I remember recently to talk before some teachers on the teaching of agriculture. One teacher asked me what was the use any way in teaching agriculture? She said: "Is the use where I teach I know the parents don't wish their sons to become farmers nor their daughters to become farmers' wives and the boys who come in from the farms in the country spend all their time out of school on the farm and shouldn't they be broadened by being taught something besides agriculture the few years they are in school?" I responded that the reason for teaching agriculture, as I see it is not at all to make farmers or farmers' wives out of pupils taking the course. I realize fully that many of the very best professional men in our large cities are brought up on the farm and we must keep a constant stream of our country blood flowing to the cities in order to keep them from becoming a stagnant pool or a salt sea. But the reason for teaching agriculture is that the boy or girl may know the science of the things which surround him and the things with which he comes in contact every day. If he knows how to make the most of the things that surround him now, he will much more likely be able to make the most of any circumstances in which he may be placed in the future. On this line of instruction there are millions of dollars worth of wheat marketed every year and hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of potatoes and other crops. To illustrate what the people in well educated here who does not know what good wheat is or the diseases of potatoes or something about their culture. To illustrate what I mean, a teacher told me last year that she asked a boy in Pocatello how high the hills were that he could see from his window at school, and he responded 25,000 feet. The teacher drew the moral that there was little use of teaching him about the glories of the Canadian Rockies or the height of Mt. McKinley when he thought his own foothills were 25,000 feet high. And I say, what is the use of teaching children about the wonders of things far removed from their daily lives when they do not even know the elements of the things they see each day. We do not know what we are going to do or the circumstances under which we are going to live far in the future. I am not long out of college and I know that I am in a very different locality and doing very different work from what I expected when I was in school. Look at your own career. You may be better off or worse, but are you doing what you expected to do at the school age? It seems to me that the way to make the boy or girl know how to take advantage of any circumstances into which he may be thrown is to teach him to make the most of the things which surround him here. This district and all Idaho, for that matter, is essentially rural and the neglect of the study of agriculture seems to me wrong. The State Extension Service and the University of Idaho are laying special emphasis on boys and girls club work and the teaching of agriculture in high schools and it is largely for this reason that they do it. We had a fine exhibit at the high school last week which showed the possibilities in Boys' and Girls' club work, but that is not one per cent as good as it should be here in this country. Your school is offering courses in agriculture. If a few who take them and the reason is largely that parents seem to feel they are committing their children to a life of drudgery on the farm if they do not learn to do agriculture. Won't you please encourage this subject and Boys' and Girls' club work in this country? Thank you.

LABOR AND THE NATION IS TIED OVER THE DRAFT

DRAFT FOR WORKMEN AT THIS TIME SEEMS TO BE IMPROBABLE

Both Labor and Government Opposed

Class Exemptions Possible in the Next Draft to Leave Out Skilled Workmen Needed in the Trades.

(I. N. S. Leased Wire)
WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—Labor and the military authorities of the United States are today rapidly approaching a class Government departments claim there is a serious shortage of labor. Labor leaders declare there is no shortage but that men must be released from military duty.

The draft for conscription of labor has been suggested, but this is generally believed to be improbable. It is too strongly opposed by labor leaders, as well as by many administration leaders.

Class exemptions now seem to be the one way out. When the next draft comes provision will be made for the wider exemption of skilled artisans. Even now strong pressure is being brought to bear upon the authorities for the release of thousands of mechanical and electrical workers from the national army. The general staff is loath to give these releases, but it faces the opposition of those administration leaders who are responsible for the industrial war work.

Great difficulty has already been encountered in the building of ships. The aeroplane program is already feeling the effects of labor shortage and all war industries are claiming that lack of labor threatens to retard America's progress in the war.

Dutch Cabinet Is Stirred by England

Pro-German Papers Make Most of Situation—Germany Suppresses the Labor Unions.

(I. N. S. Leased Wire)
THE HAGUE, Oct. 15.—The cabinet is conferring daily on the situation arising from the action of England in cutting off all commercial cable communication with Holland.

Holland is now isolated, as it is understood that shipping from this country to England has ceased or is about to cease.

Pro-German newspapers, especially the Vaderland, are making most of their opportunity. Sarcastic comment is directed against England for cutting commercial cable communication and against the United States for detaining Dutch cargo ships.

Dunker coal was refused to certain Dutch ships in American ports that were strongly suspected of carrying cargoes that would eventually find their way into Germany.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 15.—A dispatch from Berlin today said that General von Ludendorff has expressed great dissatisfaction over the government's demand for increased production of all war materials.

That the German military are suppressing all trade unionist activity in Germany was learned here for the first time today.

A dispatch from Berlin said that delegation of union leaders visited German headquarters to lodge a protest against the drastic measures adopted towards labor, but it failed to say if any satisfaction was given.

Interpreters Work on German Writing

Examining Documents Seized On A Dutch Ship—German and Austrian Diplomats Held.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—Federal interpreters began an examination today of official German and Austrian documents seized last evening on the Dutch ship Oranje when she arrived from the Orient. The government agents are seeking evidence of German plotting in Peking, while China was still neutral.

Government officials said they do not know whether the documents show any plotting.

Thirty-two German and 38 Austrian diplomatic officers, passengers on the Oranje, are here awaiting permission from the government to continue eastward.

OPPOSE MISSISSIPPI NEGRO DRAFTED TROOPS

(I. N. S. Leased Wire)
CAMP FUNGTON, Kan., Oct. 13.—Officers and men here are protesting against the coming of 12,000 drafted negro troops, not so much because negroes from Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, New Mexico, South Dakota and Arizona are coming, but because some 8,000 negroes from Mississippi are also to be drafted here.

Many have telegraphed or written to congressmen and governors in protest and Junction City and Manhattan men already have organized to fight the move.

Major General Wood, commander of this division, refused to comment on the matter.

THIS STORY SHOWN AT THE

ORPHEUM THEATRE

An Extraordinary Foto-Play in 15 Chapters

Each chapter is a complete story in itself, and a jump can be made from one to the other without in the least destroying the sequence of the story. William Duncan and Carol Holloway in the stellar roles accomplish some death defying stunts. The tale in brief follows the adventures which befell the discoverer of a valuable ingredient for the making of a powerful explosive, and the efforts of a foreign-enemy to get possession of the secret. The photography is unusually beautiful and artistic.

The marvelous adventure story of the great outdoors written by J. Stuart Blackton and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

THE CAST

- JOHN GWYN ..... WILLIAM DUNCAN
American mining engineer on whose shoulders rests the responsibility of furnishing the United States government with a rare mineral used in the manufacture of a very high explosive shell.
- NAN LAWTON, the heroine ..... CAROL HOLLOWAY
"CUT DEEP" RAWLS, an outlaw ..... GEORGE HOLT
"SHOE STRING" DRANT, his partner ..... JOE RYAN
HENDRICK VON BLECK ..... WALTER RODGERS
The eye of the Central Powers, not an enemy to an individual but to a country—an international spy.
- DON CARLOS YBARRA ..... CHARLES WHEELOCK
Owner of the Lost Mine

Most of the scenes were taken in the Yosemite Valley and other sections of the Sierra Nevada and the picture is said to contain some of the finest mountain photography ever registered by the camera. William Duncan, remembered for his splendid work in "Through the Wall" and other big features, directed the picture and played the leading role. The heroine is Carol Holloway. Others in the cast are George Holt, Joe Ryan, one of the greatest riders in the world, and Walter Rodgers.

German influences in this country and the length to which agents of the Fatherland will go to thwart industry in this country are strikingly shown in "The Fighting Trail."

DEMURE "YOUTH" IS CHANGED INTO DASHING WESTERN GIEL

It is a far cry from the demure role of "Youth" in "Everywoman" to that of a daring mountain girl who rides, shoots and matches her wits against a gang of outlaws, but that is exactly the transformation that occurred in the life of Miss Carol Holloway.

MANY OF US REMEMBER THE GREAT PLAY "EVERY-WOMAN" THAT APPEARED AT THE LAVERING THEATRE LAST WINTER

Miss Holloway's work in this picture is a splendid example of histrionic versatility. Local photoplay fans will meet a girl, Miss Carol Holloway, who, in a few months, has conquered the Far West. This is by her courage and during in perilous places, her remarkable riding and ability to withstand hardship, she has won the admiration of the hard-riding cowpunchers and a place in the front row of screen heroines.

Spooks of Preceding Episode "THE STORY OF YBARRA"

John Gwyn, an American mining engineer, is sent west to work on a mine producing ingredients of a most powerful explosive needed by the government in the manufacture of ammunition. Agents of the Central Powers dispatch Hendrik von Bleck to thwart Gwyn. The latter scarcely reaches the home of Don Carlos Ybarra, owner of the mine, when it is raided by outlaws led by von Bleck and Ybarra's brother. When dying, he tells Gwyn and Nan, that he is not the girl's father.

This great story, the episode of which is shown today, is the most marvelous melodramatic romance of the great outdoors ever produced and one that is certain to enthrall you. It is the story of a terrible struggle for a mineral deposit of fabulous value wherein a fearless man and an heroic girl stake their lives against dual odds—the ferocity and perils of nature and the fierceness of a band of outlaws who shatter the law and destroy men's lives in their mad pursuit of fortune.

Every kind of thrill and danger—the air, the land and water—is met with as the story unfolds. Hard-fighting, quick-shooting fighting men, afraid of nothing on earth, meet in battle time after time and struggle for supremacy with primeval ferocity.

This wonderful photoplay has for its stage the vast outdoors, with the mountains or the desert always in the background.

William Duncan, the greatest fighting man on the screen, and Carol Holloway, whom you will call the most fearless girl in the world, play the leading roles in this marvelous drama and you will follow their adventures breathlessly. You will learn to love them and admire them and their experiences will be so realistic that you will feel as if you knew them.

CHAPTER 3

At that moment Ybarra, shuffling on toward ray away. Either through coincidence or the house, halted a moment to watch it by kindness of Providence, the frightened rabbit, dashed toward the entrance of the cave. As it was about to enter there for shelter, it took a sudden turn and fled in the opposite direction with a reckless speed. Ybarra was immediately suspicious. Something—perhaps some one—must have frightened the animal. He uttered a little cry. Perhaps some one was in his cave. He turned and called:

"Joe! Joe!"
It took Joe the relic of a dauntless tribe of earlier days, Ybarra's faithful servant, appeared in the doorway. Don Carlos motioned to the cave. Joe understood. The old Spaniard, his days for physical combat passed, went on toward the hacienda, leaving the Indian to take to the safety of the cave.

When Ybarra entered the house, he was welcomed warmly by the one bright ray in his shattered, lonesome life. It was young Nan, a beautiful girl, whom he called Nan. She was dark, of the Spanish type, but nevertheless sparkling American. Ybarra often described her to strangers as the kind of a girl an orphan always imagines his mother was. And that was description enough, both of beauty and of character.
"What's the matter, father?" she asked nervously. "Why did you call?"
"I thought perhaps those two mad men from Lost Mine, Shoestring Drant and Cut Deep Rawls, were about again. Yaqul Joe is looking around now. It may be nothing. Don't be alarmed." He tapped her on the shoulder. Despite his assurances Nan was alarmed. She feared the men whose names her father had mentioned, for often before she had heard of their manifold intentions of abducting her.

Following morning things occurred rapidly and unfortunately at the little mountain town of Lost Mine. Von Bleck and Gwyn arrived at the mine about the same time. The secret agent of the Central Powers got in first, and Gwyn met him in the dining room as he was eating breakfast. Both were clad in rough western attire, having ridden the entire distance from Barstow by horseback, though along different roads. At the first sight of him, Gwyn comprehended. He had been followed. In an instant he recalled the conversation on the trail—remembered how von Bleck had attempted to talk business. Everything that had passed between them flashed like a bolt of lightning into his mind. He had no doubt that his suspicions were true. He walked over to the Central Powers' agent, and, without a preliminary word, said:

"Von Bleck, you've gone about far enough. I know who you are, what you are, and what you want. Look out. I'm working to save my nation. You are working to destroy it. I wouldn't for a moment allow such a little thing as your life to stand between me and my mission here. I warn you, keep off my trail!"

"Von Bleck said nothing. He merely sneered. Gwyn ate a hurried breakfast, and, after inquiring the way to Ybarra's mine, started out upon the back of a hired horse to find it. It was as though the occurrences at Lost Mine that morning were unfortunate, and they were; for when von Bleck had finished his meal, and departed, he sent his faithful servant, the young mining engineer to his destination, and left his plans, if such a thing were possible, he asked which trail to follow as Ybarra's. The route was ascertained by the bulletin found by reference to his notebook. As fate ruled, his appointed guides were none other than Shoestring Drant and Cut Deep Rawls, who had been about the mine, awaiting an opportunity on the previous evening.

After they had led him several miles into the mountains, they discovered a horse, and, as they were about to mount, Don Carlos Ybarra, and, due both to von Bleck's shrewdness in the situation and that of the outlaws, they struck a bargain. It was an enormous bargain almost as great and important as the one made by Gwyn and Hatterman, but the conditions under which it was made were in sharp contrast to the other. It was agreed that if von Bleck, through the aid of the outlaws should gain possession of Ybarra's cincharr mine, the outlaws were to be paid the fabulous sum of one million dollars, in addition to which von Bleck was to add them in what was more important than the money, to their minds—the abduction of Ybarra's daughter Nan.

Meanwhile, Nan and Yaqul Joe had come to Lost Mine with a shipment of dynamite, and, as they were about to start for New York office, Nan left Joe in charge of it, with instructions for him to wait for the mail, while she hurried back across the hills, anxious to see father, whom she did not care to leave alone. She was riding leisurely along the narrow trail that curved along the side of one of the mountains, when, suddenly rounding a curve, she met Gwyn face to face. The path was not wide enough for both horses to pass easily, and there was a sheer drop of more than five hundred feet into the valley from it. Nan's horse, frightened by the sudden appearance of Gwyn, reared and started to turn in its tracks. One of his feet slid over the edge of the trail and he commenced to fall. Gwyn, in an instant, was out of his saddle and beside her. It was useless to try to save her. Already she had lost his balance. Gwyn caught Nan just as she was about to go over the edge, and dragged her back to the level ground. He then turned to the brink for a brief second and toppled into space.

Nan, when she had recovered from the shock of her narrow escape, murmured that she was wondering how she would reach home, when Gwyn astounded her by revealing his identity. He also was agreeably surprised when she mentioned the daughter of Don Carlos Ybarra, whom he was on his way to see. He had his own trail in the mountains, and was in search of a fine spot out when they met on the narrow trail, and when she looked at him with her great, dark eyes, and Gwyn was overcome by her beauty and carefree freshness, he said:

"That night, shortly after dusk, when the stars were clouded with the evening mist, three figures emerged on horseback from the woods and advanced across the little clearing in Ybarra's hacienda. Von Bleck and his desperadoes had returned. They dismounted, and von Bleck landed in the unlocked door, and, facing the occupants with drawn revolvers, Von Bleck declared that this would be the last time he would see such an efficient expert of the Central Powers' "system" as he must some time calculate incorrectly. Neither Gwyn nor Ybarra threw up their hands in surrender. Instead they drew their own weapons, and gave furious battle. Von Bleck and the desperadoes, Gwyn and Ybarra, turned their shots. In the excitement one was hit. For several minutes the fight raged—hand to hand at times—and then Don Carlos fell, a bullet in his back. He was not dead, but from behind and Nan was caught in the iron-like grasp of the chuckling Cut Deep.

"Hurry up! Get it!" Von Bleck yelled. "Hurry up, and then run!"
The outlaws rushed toward the kitchen, and "suddenly stopped. They were there. Through the open door came the sudden clatter of hoofs upon the grass. The marauders knew immediately what it meant. Yaqul Joe, returning from town, had seen the two men battered and bruised, and he had seen the girl, who he had seen her horse in the gully below. He was rushing to the house for Don Carlos. The position became dangerous. Taking this by surprise they might all be killed. Cut Deep leaped into the kitchen. Von Bleck followed, just as Yaqul Joe burst into the door, and fired. The bullet pierced his hand, but Von Bleck leaped into the kitchen before he could shoot again, stammered in his confusion, and said:

"For several minutes Gwyn and Joe hurled their bodies against the portal. At last it sagged and fell in, with the two men battered and bruised, sprawling upon it. They looked up quickly, expecting to meet a volley of shots. Nothing happened. The kitchen door, and then the door, and then an open window, with broken panes told the reason. But a few feet from it, the cover torn off, was an old wooden chest. Yaqul Joe reeled, his eyes upon the chest, and he uttered a little cry, ran to it and began rummaging through its contents.

"They're got it! They've got it!" he fairly shrieked. And then, reaching down one side, his finger pressed on something. The inner side flew open, revealing a large, sealed envelope, yellow with age. "But they haven't got it all!" he shouted almost joyously. Rushing past Gwyn and Nan, who stood, mystified, in the center of the room, he unlocked the door and ran and knelt beside Ybarra. The old Spaniard opened his eyes dazedly and smiled at his servant. He took the envelope from him and proceeded to tear them open.

"Joe," he ordered, "follow their trail. Get it from them." The old Indian, hesitating not a moment, rushed out of the door, and in another moment could be heard galloping away through the night. Gwyn and Nan were beside Ybarra by this time. The girl looked down into the Spaniard's face and saw there a hidden terror. He was dying.

CHAPTER 4

"Father! Father!" she whispered, her throat closing on the words as she realized that Don Carlos had yielded the end.

Ybarra looked up at her and smiled, bravely. His outstretched hand held a fluttering, bulky manuscript. The other envelope lay on the floor. He handed it to her, and as he exerting all his energy, he spoke with quivering lips.

"Nan, dear," he said tenderly, "I am not your father. Don't let them get it! I'm your father. I know I love you as my child. This is the story; it will explain."
Ybarra pushed the yellow papers into her hand and fell backward on the floor.

Nan and Gwyn gazed at each other for a moment with a look filled half with an uncomprehending mystery, half with a feeling of horror. Ybarra's confession had so shocked and astounded her that she could find no words to voice her feelings. Gwyn, in a flash, before she had known it, met her that he had not been able to study the girl. He could see, of course, that the revelation made by Ybarra was what was dying had thoroughly understood it. He had not learned exactly in what light she had looked upon her supposed father, he deemed it wisest not to speak until she had spoken.

"You will not read this until I have passed beyond either your blame or your approval. Although, as you will find it not your father, I have tried to take his place, for I loved you as my own, both for my own sake and because I loved your mother. With my placed upon possession of vast estates in Chihuahua, in Mexico. The main estate was comprised chiefly of farm and ranch with I received a large income. Among my most devoted servants was one whom you know, an Indian—Yaqul Joe. He was at that time, and afterward, a most loyal associate."

"While I was living on my estate there came to me one day an American, a Southerner, named George. He was a very handsome man. He bore a letter from a friend of mine asking me to advise him. With him was only one person, his daughter. Frankly, a very beautiful girl of twenty years. Should you be curious as to her features, you have but to look in the mirror. Upon my invitation, Ybarra and I decided to go to the mine at my home until they should be ready to return to the states. I was enthralled by the beauty and charm of Wythe's daughter. My devotion grew each time I spoke with her until I was admitted that I loved her and was joyous when she told me that the love was returned.

"About this time a New York friend of mine, James Lawton, came on a visit to me. He was a very young man whom I had not seen for some years, and was on a visit to Mexico. He decided also to stay with me. It was but a very short time before he had so openly known that he, too, was in love with Frances. I paid little attention, however, feeling sure that my suit was safe. Some time later I was decided to investigate some land grants in California which had been taken to me, but which I had never investigated. I concluded that Lawton had taken to me a position in my family that there was a valuable mine on the property. We left the estate in the care of Yaqul Joe and set out for California. By means of some old maps and papers, we were able to locate an old cincharr mine which had been lost for 150 years. We drew a chart showing the location of the mine and divided it into two parts, each useless without the other. We each took one part. Then I returned to my home to raise money for the reopening of the mine, while Lawton remained to attend to the preliminary details. I left with him all the money I had with me, to cover the first expense of the undertaking.

"When I returned, I brought Joe with me. He confided on the way that Frances cried continually with Lawton. She did not love him. Upon arriving again at Lost Mine, I learned that Lawton had taken to me a position in my family that there was a valuable mine on the property. "The scene that followed was one to shudder at. In a civilized country, at a rich estate, it seemed too ridiculous for belief. Yet it was true; and its absurdity made it the more sorrowful. Lawton, having won everything, made an offer. To this day I do not know whether it was a selfish or generous motive that incited it. He said that he would give me the mine, and she had her own. I was to consent to marry him. We all left the room.

"I was on the road, crying, and I was the first to reach her, but I said nothing of the game. When I attempted to approach her, however, she screamed at me. I learned later that she had been offered to buy but had not waited for the explanation. I naturally was despicable in her eyes. She took her upstairs and pleaded with her. He told her that it was his desire that she agree to marry Lawton in order that a vast sum of money which he had lost gambling would be returned. If she refused, he said, they would both be driven to poverty and their lives ruined. She refused at first, but he pleaded and, before she had time to agree, he did not tell her that she as well as money had been gambled for. He was too proud for that.

"Frances was married to Lawton and shortly afterward Wythe died, gave Lawton a half interest in my estate in order to keep them near me, for my love for his wife was still existent. Some time later I was decided to investigate some land grants in California which had been taken to me, but which I had never investigated. "When I returned, I brought Joe with me. He confided on the way that Frances cried continually with Lawton. She did not love him. Upon arriving again at Lost Mine, I learned that Lawton had taken to me a position in my family that there was a valuable mine on the property. We left the estate in the care of Yaqul Joe and set out for California. By means of some old maps and papers, we were able to locate an old cincharr mine which had been lost for 150 years. We drew a chart showing the location of the mine and divided it into two parts, each useless without the other. We each took one part. Then I returned to my home to raise money for the reopening of the mine, while Lawton remained to attend to the preliminary details. I left with him all the money I had with me, to cover the first expense of the undertaking.

"The scene that followed was one to shudder at. In a civilized country, at a rich estate, it seemed too ridiculous for belief. Yet it was true; and its absurdity made it the more sorrowful. Lawton, having won everything, made an offer. To this day I do not know whether it was a selfish or generous motive that incited it. He said that he would give me the mine, and she had her own. I was to consent to marry him. We all left the room.

"I was on the road, crying, and I was the first to reach her, but I said nothing of the game. When I attempted to approach her, however, she screamed at me. I learned later that she had been offered to buy but had not waited for the explanation. I naturally was despicable in her eyes. She took her upstairs and pleaded with her. He told her that it was his desire that she agree to marry Lawton in order that a vast sum of money which he had lost gambling

THE LA FOLLETTE CASE

The developments today in the La Follette case indicate the wisdom of the policy suggested by the TIMES of September 27 in the editorial entitled "Convict LaFollette—Then Out Him." With ample machinery of law to convict in cases of seditious utterances, spectacular enemies played in to the hands of the senatorial friend of the kaiser, by making an appeal to congress and to the galleries, without awaiting the result of investigations by the United States aid state prosecuting attorneys to see if the laws of the nation and the state of Minnesota had been broken.

Under the circumstances congress could do no less than order an investigation, and this allowed LaFollette to turn, by the use of some clever sophistry to make a proteoche exit for the benefit of the grand stand. The word "sophistry" is used advisedly. For LaFollette does not tell the truth when he says in effect that this investigation is tantamount to a trial, and that therefore he must be confronted by his enemies. It is similar to a grand jury investigation, where the question is whether there is enough evidence to warrant holding a trial, assuming that all the incriminatory evidence should prove true. Should the committee hold that there is not sufficient evidence to warrant an outing, the case will end. Should it find that there is enough evidence to warrant further proceedings, the senate will then determine whether it will accept the recommendations of the committee and proceed to try him or whether it will reject the report. Should it reject the report, LaFollette holds on. Should it decide to accept the report and place him on trial, then, as in court he will be confronted by those testifying against him. But a lot of people do not know this and Mr. LaFollette, having misrepresented the attitude of the committee will be believed by many who do not know any better.

Had the men who signed petitions for his impeachment awaited the result of the investigations of the prosecuting attorneys they would not have given the wily Wisconsin man so favorable a chance to play politics. Should the prosecuting attorneys have decided that there was no technical violation of the law, which would warrant prosecution the case would have ended. Had they determined to try the matter before a grand jury, La Follette would never have claimed that he had a right to face witnesses there; for the average man would know better. Had the true bills been found by grand jury and conviction secured on regular trial, the senate could then have proceeded to oust him on the evidence thus secured.

The TIMES does not pretend to pass on the guilt or innocence technically of the Wisconsin man. That he is guilty in spite of there is no question, but that is another matter and does not carry with it penalties under the law.

MAIN ARGUMENT SOUND

The idea of the principle of interdependence of forth in the address of County Agent Donald McLean, published elsewhere herein, is correct. Production does not mean creation, but does mean the moving of things already existing from places less convenient and serviceable to places more convenient and serviceable, the work of the merchant and the railroad man are simply links in the productive chain. The farmer is a primary producer. He can in some way exist without the merchant and the railroad man, whereas they cannot at all exist without him, but each is necessary for the best development of the other.

It might perhaps be proper to suggest that the illustration of the railroad and the city is hardly true to life. The roads are partly interested in what the country has done and partly in what it can do when they construct lines and frequently run across stretches of undeveloped territory, plating towns and establishing stations along the way at places which they believe to be so situated that they will form the centers of towns and cities in the future, and having in mind the natural resources which somebody will develop later on.

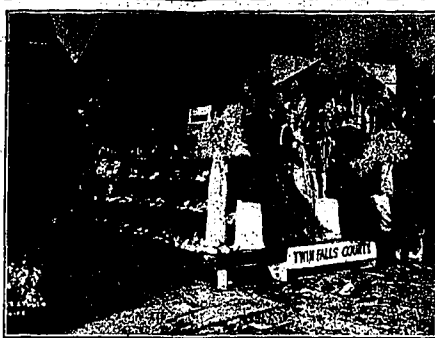

The main point in the talk, however, the interdependence of different lines of industry, one on another, springing from the division of labor which is the primary cause of industrial and economic development, is sound, and the ideas advanced are worthy of consideration.

Twin Falls Wins From Buhl Team

Hard Fought Game Results in Defeat of the West End Eleven at Buhl.

The Twin Falls high school football eleven defeated the Buhl high school eleven last Friday afternoon on the Buhl field by the score of 12-0. This is the second game of the season to the credit of the local eleven, having defeated Jerome 99-0 a week previous to this game. It has been some years since Twin Falls has been able to defeat Buhl on their own field and local followers are much elated over the recent victory. The team was accompanied to Buhl by a number of rooters who did their bit in aiding in the game.

The game opened with Neuman of

AGRICULTURAL EXHIBIT AT STATE FAIR

Twin Falls kicking to Buhl on their 10-yard line. During the first of the first quarter it seemed that the Buhl eleven would carry off the final honors of the game but the Twin Falls line soon found itself and held their opponents for downs. Twin scored the first touchdown with only three seconds of the first quarter remaining for play. The second quarter was evenly played by both teams. Captain Fix of Twin receiving several fine passes from Neuman. In the third quarter Neuman went over the Buhl line on the fourth down for a touchdown which was not allowed, however, because of offside play, and Buhl kicked out of danger. In the second quarter Buhl attempted a long forward pass which was intercepted by Neuman in spectacular fashion and carried thirty yards for a touchdown. In the fourth quarter Twin punted and kept the ball in Buhl territory. The features of the game were the sweeping end runs of Buhl, the forward passes received by Captain Fix, end runs by Halbacks Lavendar and Davis, line plunges of Fullback Glasgow, tackle plays by Bailey and the punting and passing of Neuman.

The Twin Falls line while composed for the most part of new material in Strong, Carter, Van Tassel, Mickelwait, Pereboom, and three veterans, Thometz, Bailey and Fix, gives much promise for the future. Barker, of Filer, officiated as referee, and Berry, of Buhl, as umpire. The Twin Falls team will meet the Rupert eleven next Friday, October 19, on the local field. The game will be played at 3 o'clock on Lincoln Field, the new athletic field adjoining the Lincoln school. This ground is being placed in good condition for the gridiron sport. Below is given the line-up of the twin falls first and second teams, also the partial schedule for the teams.

First Team	Second Team
Captain Fix	L. E. Carlson-Strong
N. Bailey	L. T. Fletcher-Hoy
A. Pereboom	L. T. Hoffendon-Bailey

November 16, Rupert vs. Twin Falls at Rupert.
November 23, open date.
Thanksgiving day, open date.

The Twin Falls mole skin aggregation will play Rupert on the new athletic field near the Lincoln building at three o'clock Friday. This is the third game of the season for the boys, winning from Jerome and Buhl by a good margin, and they should stand equal chances with Rupert.

Captain Fix, Bailey and Neuman, the old men of last year's team, showed up well in the Buhl game and are expected to give a good account of themselves against the Rupert bunch. Bleachers have been installed this week on the new field and a good crowd should turn out to root for the boys in this, their first game at home.

Merchant Marine Conscripted by U. S.

All of 2500 Tons and Over Requisitioned By The Government Yesterday.

(I. N. S. Leased Wire)

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15—America's merchant marine today was conscripted for war duty. The order of the shipping board requisitioning all privately owned American vessels of 2500 tons and over went into effect this morning.

According to the estimates of the shipping board some 450 ships aggregating a tonnage of approximately 1,000,000 entered into the control of the United States government.

These ships will be directly under the control of Edward F. Carty, director of operations and the chartering board. A series of conferences will begin immediately to determine what shall be done with the vessels. For the most part individual ships will be turned back to their owners to be operated under the direction of the chartering board at rates to be set by that board. This step is taken to give the shipping board power over ocean going rates and to equalize the freight rates from American ports.

Nitro-Glycerine Explosion Fatal

(I. N. S. Leased Wire)
CAMDEN, N. J., Oct. 15—Two workmen are dead, one is missing and another was badly injured today by an explosion in the nitro-glycerine plant of the DuPont Powder company at Gibbstown, N. J., near here. Only four workmen were in the building at the time.

One of the dead men was identified as Jesse De Vault. The other body could not be identified but Marple Reed and Martin Spoljanovic are missing and it is believed to be one of them.

Raymond Snell Baker was injured. The plant was a comparatively small building and it was wrecked. About 200 pounds of high explosives went off. Officials of the plant scouted a theory of a plot. No other damage was done.

"THE STORY OF YBARRA"

a hard life in the hills. They spoke well, however, which surprised me; they must have been fairly well educated, and I judged, had sunk to desperation in their early manhood. Their names you have heard since. They were Drant and Rawls. They were the men who had seen us bury Lawton, and as a reward had been offered by the authorities for the conviction of the murdered, they claimed blackmail, which I was forced to pay. They continued their demands for money until I could meet them no longer, and fled secretly to this little abode in the hills bringing only you and Joe with me. We dug the shaft which leads to the mine, and developed it only enough to yield a living. It is as rich today as it has never been touched. And it is yours when you read this, for I shall have passed away. One half of the chart is in an envelope that lies near this. The other half, which we took from Lawton's body, is in the main part of the chest. Together they will serve to locate the mine. Alone, neither can help. But Yaqui Joe can also take you there. He is the only one alive, after the first search, who knows the location. That is all.

Your mother knew this story up to the point of her death. She forgave me, and you, Nan, dear daughter, of my heart, if not of my body. I ask you, Nan, though I can never hear your answer. I may only live and die in hope.

"DON CARLOS YBARRA CORDOBA."

Gwyn looked up from the manuscript as he finished reading. He saw that Nan's eyes were filled with tears, but he had not seen them and forced a smile. Gwyn gazed at her, almost mechanically opening the other envelope as he did so. From it he drew a paper which he unfolded and yellow and brittle from age as the envelope which had enclosed it. Carefully, so as not to tear it, he unfolded the sheet, until there lay spread before him the map of the lines and writing that seemed to lead to one side, stopped abruptly as they came to the edge of the paper. It was plain that it was Don Carlos' and that, in his letter, it was but a half of the map.

"This is what they wanted," Gwyn said thoughtfully. "It is the chart. They must have learned of its existence in some way."

"Yes," replied Nan, "and they must have gotten the other half. Do you remember when Joe ran off the chest after they had left, he shouted: 'They got it, but not all!' He meant the chart. They got a half. This is the rest. He went out to find their trail. He should be back by now. Do you suppose that anything could have happened to him? If they ever get him and make him tell us the truth, I shall suddenly pale at the thought of what they would do to the Indian."

Free lunch will be given at 11 o'clock after which the auction will begin under the management of Capt. H. B. Lue. The sale will be held October 24.

Running Without License—W. V. Johnson was fined by Probate Judge Duvall Saturday for running his car without a license. This is the second fine of this sort that has been levied in the county. The county now has 2912 cars registered, which is 260 more than in the county of the highest Idaho county. Twin Falls county has more than ten per cent of all the autos registered in the state. Other prosecutions for running without license are expected soon.

Big Concert Friday Night—The big concert in the Methodist church Friday night under the leadership of Charles H. Hester, begins at 8 o'clock with the famous musical festival. The new choir has over eighty-five voices. On the occasion of the concert numbers were given by Mrs. Hester, Mrs. Barton, Mrs. Guy Shearer of Fliler and Mrs. and Mrs. Butler. An instrumental trio by Dr. R. A. Parrott, violin; Miss Sarah Higgins, cello and Mrs. D. F. Regan, harp, will be given.

IS THEATRE STAGES "EYES OF THE WORLD" "The Eyes of the World" Clune's elaborate film of Harold Bell Wright's famous story, which comes to the Isis theatre Friday, is replete with the stuff of which thrilling motion pictures are composed and most of the well remembered incidents are the escape of the convict and his wanderings in the mountains, the kidnapping of Sybil, the flight of the girl into the hills and the search of the forest for her, the tragic end of Faine at the banquet table and the hand-to-hand fight of the lovers on the high mountain and ends in the tragic death of one of the pair. This scene was filmed on a precipitous cliff near the summit of the San Bernardino mountains in California, and so realistic was it made that Edward Piel, who played Rutledge, was injured during the work, though not seriously. The fight is a prolonged one and ends in Rutledge's toppling over the cliff.

40 dozen handkerchiefs, 42 dozen sub-handkerchiefs, 43 dozen napkins, 19 dozen tray covers, 14 dozen shoulder straps, 117 comfort bags, 1000 dress aprons, 200 dozen bandages of various kinds. Let us interpolate right here the astounding fact since the war began the American Red Cross has shipped $2,915 large cases to twenty different countries. Before the United States entered the fray these were sent to all belligerents since, of course, only to our allies. Mrs. White, chairman entertainment committee, explained its work and plans, noting $108.95 as a balance on hand. Mrs. McRoberts, of the publicity committee, said they found its work heavy rather than showy; that they were about to place boxes for change contributions in the stores; and told of the plan for individual Christmas boxes to each soldier from the county. Each box is in a plain stationary, with articles and goodies, including small fruit cake. Two requests were made: one for volunteers to bake cakes; and the other for names of soldiers, especially those outside of the Second Idaho. Mr. Blue reported fine progress and prospects for the Junior Red Cross, which is being well organized, in the different schools. But one discordant note had come to his attention—that a note from a parent saying, "My husband and I don't believe in raising money for war." No names were given, but the note will be kept on ice. Dr. Crossland reported for first aid committee that a class of twenty-five had been organized, twelve of whom had passed examination; also gave details of prospective effort. Miss Maxwell, for the membership committee reported much that was of interest—especially the fact that the organization now has a membership of 4,734, 3,208 of whom are in the Twin Falls chapter and 1526 in the auxiliary.

The treasurer, Mr. Bradley, made an interesting report of the finances of the order showing: Reimbursement dues were $3,096, of which there was due to the national fund $1,697, and refunded to auxiliaries $613.20. This left a balance applicable to the general fund of $1,398.80. Sales of insignia amount to $118.95, so that the total receipts were $905.85. The total expenditures of a general nature were $189.15, and the net balance in the general fund is $714.65. The total receipts of the relief fund were $1,791.34, while the expenditures were $1,764.94 for purchase of goods from the way to the hospital, and the expenditure of $175 for refreshments on the way, left this fund overdrawn to the extent of $148.56. It has been agreed that the membership dues, miscellaneous accounts show the receipt of $137 from the bridge party for the Christmas fund, $21.40 due to auxiliaries, and $135.15 from the sale of Christmas. Mr. Breckenridge, for the relief committee stated that while help had been granted in numerous instances, it has been given in only a few. He raised funds, so that no detailed statement was necessary.

Reports were made, or read by the secretary from auxiliaries at a Community Carry, Fliler, Hanson, Hazelton, Pleasant View and Rock Creek. These were all interesting and showed activity with results. Fliler reported that their Red Cross chapter netted $1,070 to the order to date, and was to be sent again sold at Lewiston. The election of officers being in order, Mr. Blue gave the report on the formative condition of the organization and to the need for all the training acquired by the present officers, and moved that the secretary be instructed to contact the entire vote of the chapter for each of the present officials to succeed his or herself. The motion was seconded and carried unanimously.

C. Siggins, U. S. Commissioner, at Twin Falls, Idaho, on the 10th day of December 1917. Claimant names as witnesses: Sidney Tull, William J. Ross, Kate Ross, Nellie Ward, of Hansen, Ida. BEN R. GRAY, Register.

"What! My Car?" "Yea! skidded—and it's up to you. You failed to provide the chauffeur with Tire Chains. Only good luck saved your wife from paying the supreme penalty for your negligence. She's on the way to the hospital, painfully injured, but the doctor thinks she'll pull through. You'd better hurry to the hospital and then reprop to Headquarters."

How strange it is that disaster must come to some men before they realize that all makes and types of tires will skid on wet pavements and muddy roads when not equipped with Chains. These men do not appreciate, until too late, that by failing to provide Weed Anti-Skid Chains they expose their families to injury and death. The time to provide against accidents is before they happen. Don't wait until after the first skid. Put Weed Chains on all four tires at the first indication of slippery going and you will have quadruple protection against injury, death, car damage and law suits. All Sizes of Weed Chains For all Makes and all Styles of Tires. For Sale By and if doubt is right then we are wrong.

In recent years the doubters have occupied a conspicuous place in the history of the world. James Russell Lowell said that doubt was the devil of the Nineteenth century. It has in large circles become a prevalent state of mind. A noted Roman Catholic writer in a recent work said that men were now as proud of doubt as men were formerly proud of faith. Indeed it sometimes seems as if in certain circles it is bad form to believe. Men no longer tell what they believe but what they do not believe. Some men who are members of Christian churches no longer say the Apostles Creed without mental reservations and sometimes a pastor after preaching some gospel truth is confronted by a man who questions the narrative and beginning his objection with 'I suppose I am very heretical, paused to secure the applause of the gallery. The hero of the modern novel is the doubter. Doubt is canonized and belief anathematized. It requires more bravery to say 'I believe' than it does to say 'I doubt' and yet the doubter manages to pose as the hero. Because there has been a great material progress during the age of doubt the doubters, assuming falsely that because two things exist together they must necessarily depend in some way on each other. This of course, is untrue. Day and night follow one another but do not depend on one another and the sensible American does not believe the politician who says that all the prosperity in the country is due to the fact that his party is in power.

Men today doubt the existence of God, the truth of the Bible, sickness, death, even the very existence of the doubter. Doubt has been whispered in the parlor, echoed in the press, taught in schools, even sometimes preached in the pulpit. One celebrated writer said doubt turned the wheels of progress. Another said doubt had done more for the world than faith. "It is well, therefore that we examine all these statements of the doubters before we dedicate this church in order that we may determine whether doubt has been the cause of progress or a drag on the wheels of progress. Doubt has employed the patronage of modern philosophy. When we begin the study of modern philosophy we meet first the name of Des Cartes, Educated by the Jesuits, he was well versed in the scholastic philosophy but beginning to doubt its truth he determined to further examine everything in the light of reason, and he assumed everything to be false that could be doubted. He began by laying aside everything which could possibly be doubted. As a result he eventually found that the only thing that he did believe was that he doubted. At this stage he formulated this statement: "I think, therefore I am." But at this stage he found that this mere statement was not itself sufficient, for it necessarily followed that if he existed, others before must have existed, and following this idea to its logical conclusion he found that it led to the idea of a creator, in other words to God. One by one doubts gave away this country President Wilson said that the condition was purely psychological; it was and the condition which threatened the financial fabric was doubt. Doubt caused the panic and it was only the return of faith, the restoration of confidence that ended the panic. In 1907 when certain interests desired to create disturbance they did so by creating a doubt as to financial conditions. The great Bank of Commerce at Kansas City was one of the strongest institutions, but because it was invidiously whispered around that this institution was shaky, people lost confidence and finally a run was started and after the bank had stood an unheard of strain for days it was compelled temporarily to close its doors, because it was being assassinated by doubt. God asks us only that we have as much sense in religion as in other things.

After a description of the state of confidence in which his father an aged Methodist minister had passed into the beyond, a description that caused many to shed tears, Bishop Hughes closed with an eloquent peroration in which he showed the accomplishments of faith, as contrasted with the lack of achievements of doubt in advancing civilization, in furthering science and discovery and

REPEATS TONIGHT AND WEDNESDAY. WHITE PLEASING VAUDEVILLE PROGRAM OF VARIETY

But Ah! Ah! Don't Miss Seeing Little 2 1/2 Year Old "Bob White" in the Beban Picture.

(First Night Review)

George Beban, without peer as a delineator of Italian characters on both stage and screen, displays in "Lost in Transit," now playing at the Idaho, all the fine, poignant touches that give life and appeal to each of his characterizations, proving absolutely the soul and honesty of the man himself. Comedy and pathos become virile from his characterization in this picture.

The production is a more elaborate one than usual, and shows throughout the touch of Donald Crisp who directed the production.

"The Big Star—"Bob White" But the one, big treat of "Lost in Transit," is not the star, not the director, but one little person known as "Bob White." Bob's simply a wonder—a 2 1/2 year old marvel, that simply grabs all the honors in sight. Nicole, friend Beban, finds Bob tucked in the rags of his junk wagon. Nobody wants him. "Whoever finds this child may have him." But Nicole never loses him, and there hangs a story that is interesting every moment.

The Vaudeville

In the two vaudeville numbers, there is a variety, clever dialogue, good stories—well told, some singing and dancing all done in an acceptable manner. Keane and Keane, get many laughs from their comedy sketch. Dick Hyland is a good Irish story teller, especially commendable as a trombone artist, and has two attractively customized girls with him who sing and dance. The vaudeville combination is pleasing. There is a clever comedy included in the picture program.

Prices Trend Down on the Markets

CHICAGO, Oct. 16—All cattle markets were congested, the trend of prices being downward. A disastrous fire at Kansas City diverted many shipments to Chicago and promised a run of 40,000 on Wednesday. Hogs were 10 cents lower, $17.25 to 17.75, taking the bulk. An $18.50 top was possible. Quality was indifferent.

The Greatest Car Value of the Day

Come and look the car over, see the beautiful lines. Start in at the rafiator, graceful, of the honeycomb type. Under the bonnet you find a Falls valve in head motor, powerful but very saving in fuel.

In the clutch you find the famous Borg and Beck clutch same as in many high grade and high priced cars. A unit power plant with a sturdy transmission amidship. Large propeller shaft with two universal joints. Rear axle full floating type by a well known and standard builder of rear axles. Rims are the latest Standwell type, 33x4 casings.

Our new home is at 317 to 321 Main Avenue West. Cars on display.

to believe and be eventually carried back all the furniture that he had carried out and he became a firm believer. Des Cartes differed from the chronic doubter, declaring that he had no use for doubt as such, and doubted only that he might find the truth, but that a new faith which moved him, faith in a more perfect system than the old system of Ptolemy. All the progress of science has been due to faith. The more men know, the less doubtful they become. Men sometimes parade their doubt as if it were something to be proud of, something which indicated that their great intellectual superiority over those believing. This is untrue. Every doubt indicates the presence of something which the mind of the doubter has been unable to master. The conceit of human nature is often responsible for doubt. There is a certain stage of existence in boys and girls when this state of mind is almost normal. It comes at a time when they cease to grow and begin to swell. Growth is a normal development, while swelling is a disease. This disease is to be treated like other afflictions of youth, like the mumps, measles and chicken-pox—the patient should be kept warm, and will soon recover. While the trouble exists is characterized by a feeling of superiority on the part of the afflicted over their parents and other people generally, and an assumption that they are much superior. Ordinarily it runs its course in a short time, but if it strikes in and becomes chronic it is serious. I am not opposed to legitimate doubt, and appeal to the reason and intelligence of man and does not assume him to be an idiot incapable of thinking rationally. Man should use his intelligence in a legitimate way. It is the man who makes his home in doubt, who is censurable and who is not using his reason rightly.

Professor William James, the great physiologist is scarcely the man to whom one should expect to appeal on this question and yet when he treats it, he completely demolishes the case of the doubter. He shows that if you doubt you cannot progress or do anything. While you are in doubt you do not move. Only when you begin to get faith in any course that you begin to move to adopt it. Hence, the man who doubts the existence of God and of divinity of Jesus Christ will live as if there were no God and as if Jesus Christ was not divine.

An unfortunate phase of doubt is manifested in "culturing" clubs such as are often found nowadays, where the members instead of original essays and poems too often devote their intellectual energies to criticism of someone who has been dead for some time.

"If doubt is a good thing, it ought to be good everywhere and capable of being applied to all conditions. Take faith out of the home and make the parents doubtful of one another and of their children and the children doubtful of their parents and you can indeed find the wheels going around but they will not be wheels of progress. The wheels of divorce contrive more for this reason. We see men who do not want any religion for themselves who are very glad when they find that their wives and children are of some religion, when financial trouble was threatened in in uplifting humanity. In the evening Bishop Hughes spoke on the finality of Christ showing that the lesson taught by the Savior was complete and needed no further revelation.
