The Times wishes to commend Police Officer Hamm for his neat appearance in the uniform which he personally purchased. The uniforming of all the city Police force will be a move in the right direction and one that will meet with the approval of the citizens.

CROSSING ALARMS NEEDED

While the accident of last Friday cannot be charged to the negligence of the Short Line, yet the need for better protection of dangerous crossings is imperative. The crossing at which the accident can be truthfully said to be a dangerous crossing, likewise many others upon the Twin Falls tract where the railroad track crosses diagonally many of the public highways which are lined with trees and weeds thus shutting off a clear view of the railroad until the vehicle is almost upon the crossing. The Times believes that the Short Line should take steps to install alarm signals to those in use on its main line. Such a step will be expensive, but negligence at some future time on the part of the railroad employees may be more costly than the preventive measure.

FOR A BETTER AND BIGGER PARK

For several years the desire of those most deeply concerned in the civic welfare of this city, has been for some place close into the city where a recreation park and public playground could be secured at a minimum cost. Several efforts have been made to secure the city thirty-five acre tract one mile from the center of the city on Lake Lakes boulevard. The financial disaster that threatened for several years however, put a stop to the securing of the land.

Now that the financial situation is clearing there is the same opportunity to secure the tract at a reasonable figure. The Times believes that the city and the citizens should take steps within a short time to get an option upon the day tract and attempt to make it into a beautiful city park and public playground. The land with a very pretty little copse across one corner is ideal for developing into one of the most beautiful spots in the city. Let's get together and make a campaign for this park. If the welfare of the children of this city means anything to all of the citizens, it must mean an effort to provide clean amusement and recreation.

A CHALLENGE TO OUR SHIP-REGISTRY

The bare facts of the seizure of the American steamship Hocking, bound in ballast from New York to Norfolk, Va., by a British cruiser, and her taking to Halifax by a prize-court, is enough to make a true American man's head in shame," says the New York American, giving vent to the feeling of indignation shared by some other editorial observers. If Washington will stand for this, remarks the New York Morning Telegraph, then "American sovereignty might as well be surrendered and a neutrality established with George V. as our overlord." The state department has made prompt protest to Great Britain, the press inform us, and the Washington rumor is that the Hocking incident will be settled by arbitration. Meanwhile the New York Evening Mail informs us that the high-handed action of the British Admiralty in seizing an American vessel in American waters, engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States, is explained on the ground that the Hocking came into American registry from Danish ownership and is suspected of being backed by German capital. By this seizure, the Mail adds, the control of the American registry-list is, in effect, taken from our government; and, if it is allowed to stand, the United States will be deprived of the power to decide whether or not a ship is to enjoy the protection of the United States flag. Another ship, the Hamburg, of Dutch registry, but whose ownership is ascribed in press reports to the Krupp of Germany, has been taken just off the port of New York and also docked at Halifax for action by a prize-court. The commercial effect of this new policy of Great Britain, in the view of New York shipping authorities consulted by The Sun, will be harmful to many ships sailing under Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Dutch flags, may cripple America's trade with South America and the West Indies to a great extent, and may also send freight charters of supposedly safe vessels up to prohibitive rates.

The task of making protest in the case of the Hamburg, The Sun points out, devolves upon the shippers of her cargo and the Dutch company that owns the vessel. The Hocking is owned by the American Transatlantic company, of which Mr. Richard Wagner is president, who is reported as saying that he is a born American, that all the stock in the company is owned by Americans, and that he blames all his trouble on the "continual and persistent hostility" of the Commissioner of Navigation, Mr. E. T. Chamberlain, toward the company, which the Commissioner stated publicly was owned by German interests. And, adds Mr. Wagner, "the fact that after he had refused American registry to our ten ships my appeal to Secretary Lansing caused Mr. Chamberlain to be overruled has not done him feel, any better toward us." The Sun relates further that the seizures are in line with the announcement by Great Britain of the suspension of Article No. 57 of the Declaration of London. This article sets forth that, even if a ship flying a neutral flag and carrying a cargo to a neutral port is owned to the extent of 50 per cent by an enemy subject the vessel can not be seized for confiscation. On October 25 an Order in Council declared this order suspended. On this point the New York World says that when Great Britain thus refused to recognize the long-established principle that the character of a ship is determined by her flag, "the great fabric of international law already mutilated, was reduced to tatters," and now we have prize-court law "as arbitrary and despotic as it was before civilization had rationalized it to some extent." The World also notes that the seizure of the Hocking as a matter of law presents an open question because our own authorities were not agreed as to her right to American registry and it adds:

"Some officials of the Department of Commerce and the Department of State held that so long as the vessels were owned and operated by an American company the fact that Germans were stockholders was not important. The Commissioner of Navigation was very emphatic in his objection to the transfer, arguing that any German ownership would certainly lead to complications.

"As a matter of policy, however, the British seizure appears to be indefensible. The Hocking was bound from New York for Norfolk, Va., with the intention of loading coal for Argentina. She carried a neutral flag and she was engaged in neutral trade. To capture a ship with such a status involved a needless controversy without accomplishing any military object worth the cost."

Our note to Great Britain about her interference with neutral shipping is described in a Washington dispatch to The World as containing "some sharp passages" and as being "very emphatic in condemnation" of several features of the British Order in Council. At the same time we learn from a London correspondent of the New York Times that no apprehension of serious conflict between the two countries is apprehended in England, and that, on the contrary, it is expected that her explanation will be satisfactory to Washington. We read then:

"The alleged action of German vessel-owners in resorting to the use of the United States flag to protect cargoes which were being shipped from America to Holland or other neutral ports, thence to be transhipped into Germany, was what inspired England to abrogate Article 57, under which ship and cargo were protected by the flag flown. This alleged use of the American flag is held by British authorities to be wrong in that it is only a subterfuge. The feeling in official circles is that the United States will agree that the new rule of compelling ships to show their papers, proving the ownership of the vessel, as well as the cargo, no matter what flag is used, is legitimate.

"The British attitude is that because of the prevalence of this German character of a vessel can not be determined by the flag flown as the Declaration of London set forth. It is argued that as a means of determining the precise ownership of the vessel, and subsequent inquiry can work no harm. The authorities here feel that they are authorized to do this in warfare on an enemy.

"It will be explained to the United States Government through Ambassador Page that the ships and cargoes will be held only long enough for investigation into the ownership of the vessel, and that the inquiry will be speedy. If it develops that the ships are wholly or partly owned by Germans, the British authorities will reserve the right to hold the vessels as prizes of war, but in every instance the facts will be laid before the American Government before final judgment so that the United States may present any facts which it deems necessary."—Literary Digest.

TALKS ON THRIFT

No. 35—SUCCESS THROUGH THRIFT

"The finest thing that ever happened to me, the finest thing that ever happened to any young fellow is to be poor. There is no greater advantage than poverty—not as a condition to stay in, but as a condition to work out of. Behind every story of success is a story of hard work and self-denial."—Edward Bok, Editor of The Ladies Home Journal.

Luther Bailey was a small town merchant in New York State many years ago. One of his customers went West, leaving an unpaid account of several hundred dollars, which he promised to pay as soon as he could. Time went on and still the debt was unpaid. Finally the debtor offered his creditor in payment a piece of vacant real estate he had acquired in the western city. Mr. Bailey accepted it because he believed that half a loaf was better than none. To make a long story short, this land increased in value with the growth of the city. Mr. Bailey in time sold it at a good profit. Instead of blowing it in, as many men would have done under similar circumstances, he saved it and reinvested it from time to time, with the result that in his later years he was very rich and when he died his children were well provided for in his will.

A young woman in Cedar Rapids, Ia., less than three years ago, was induced by her employers to lay aside a savings account at least two dollars each week, and more as she could. Today, out of a very modest salary she has on deposit in one institution over $800 on which she receives interest semi-annually. She also has a checking account in another bank. She has a standing not only with her employers, but also with her associates in the same office that the non-savers do not have.

Mrs. Harry Carson of Shelbyville, Ind., is said to have become a half millionaire with a start in the decidedly feminine business of military in that city. Her name was Flora Joseph and at thirteen she lost her father. The orphan started at pressing and cleaning hats. But she quickly lost her job because she had too many ideas of her own about how the work should be done. Then she borrowed $25 and at that early age, with little or no experience, she invested it in stock and started a millinery shop in her room.

Ten years later, at the age of 23, she had saved enough to purchase the largest business block in Shelbyville. Fairly launched now in real estate, at 30 she was the richest woman in her own right in the State and a few years ago she married Mr. Carson, a wealthy broker. What, her fortune is today is not known, but if any woman was ever self made financially, Mrs. Carson can claim that distinction.—T. D. MacGregor.

When the Cash Comes In

Farmers, at this time of year, are receiving part of the rewards of their season's labor in the form of pay checks from the sale of grain, stock, produce, etc. This bank will gladly cash or receive for deposit any and all pay checks of this nature, no matter on what bank they may be drawn and without any cost or trouble to the depositor.

If you deposit all your pay checks in a check account with this bank, you can then make your full payments in the most approved business like way, by issuing your own personal checks.

AN IDAHO CREDIT PLAN

Welsner Merchants Devise Scheme to Aid Local Farmers.

A plan of extending credit to farmers which was conceived and put in operation by Welsner merchants that works well there has awakened the interest of the federal reserve board at San Francisco, who intend to adopt it. It is given below as taken from the Welsner American:

At Welsner, Idaho, the Merchants' association, composed of 150 members and comprising 85 per cent of the business interests of the town have entered into a co-operative arrangement for extending credit, which has meritorious features as to justify widespread adoption.

The plan referred to is devised with reference to extending credit to farmers, and its main features are the following:

Application: The Welsner association has appointed a representative, the major portion of whose time is occupied in the duties of "field man." At his office at certain hours of specified days farmers file with him applications for credit to the extent desired. These give information as to the applicant's assets and liabilities. These applications are passed upon by an executive committee of three members of the merchants' association.

Crop Mortgage: Upon approval of its application, applicant executes to the representative of the merchants' association as trustee a mortgage covering his growing crop. The mortgage obligates himself to do certain things in connection with the production of the crop, and failing to do these gives to the trustee the right to take the necessary steps to develop the crop and harvest it.

Credit Certificate: Upon execution of the crop mortgage, a credit certificate is then issued available for use in buying of any of the members of the merchants' association, whose names are reprinted upon the certificate. This certificate is signed by the trustee and is much like a letter of credit, setting out the amount and conditions of the credit. Bank drafts are cashed on or before November 1st, etc., and drawn on the trustee of the merchants' association are given the mortgage in connection with the certificate in exchange for the goods, the seller making appropriate endorsement upon the credit certificate; the last seller takes up the certificate and delivers it to the trustee for registration. The trustee is thus kept informed constantly of the advances made to any of those to whom credit is thus extended.

Drafts of this character constitute such paper as would undoubtedly be readily acceptable from the seller for discount by any local bank desiring to increase its loans, and would in all probability be acceptable by banks in larger centers.

Member banks having such paper would find it viewed with the utmost favor, when offered to their federal reserve bank for rediscunt. The length of the paper proceeds from the fact that there is the specific security of the crop, which, under normal conditions would provide the security of the loan; but they would follow the general responsibility of the farmer; then that of the rediscounting bank.

In stead of more or less inadequate supervision of borrowers by the representatives of the various members of the merchants' association, none of which would have information as to the total credit extended to any farmer, this plan would centralize much supervision in the trustee acting on behalf of all thereby securing important economy of supervision and much greater efficiency because of all information as to credit extensions.

Fuller competition in selling is maintained. The mortgage is for the common benefit of all sellers concerned. If it ran only to one member of the association, the farmer would necessarily be obliged to confine his purchases to that one, thus eliminating competition.

In the consideration of plans for the length of the paper proceeds from the fact that there is the specific security of the crop, which, under normal conditions would provide the security of the loan; but they would follow the general responsibility of the farmer; then that of the rediscounting bank.

The results of operation are the final test of any plan. This is the first year in which this plan has been in operation at Welsner, Idaho. It is stated that the crops thrived and under control of the merchants' association, made certain that every cent advanced under this plan will be repaid in full without a single loss.

In the consideration of plans for rural credits much attention has been given to the co-operation of borrowers. The plan approaches the problem by a co-operation of sellers.

While final results must ultimately determine the success of any such plan, yet many elements of any such advantage to seller and buyer suggest themselves. Although a plan for extending credit individually, yet fundamentally it links the whole community co-operatively. Sellers have the incentive to extend credit which arises from the certainty of increased business through the development of the territory. The risk of loss is minimized and the paper received is so available in bank that the procedure differs little from selling for cash. The cost of supervision, a burden necessarily falling upon buyers, is reduced to a minimum. The buyers have the benefit of competition that would apparently would closely approximate that resulting from cash-buying. They have the benefit of being guided by suggestions from the trustee, who as "field man" would presumably acquire special skill. Important errors and serious neglect would thus be avoided. Safety is a necessary basis for liberal credit, and it seems obvious that credit could be extended upon such conditions much more liberally than under ordinary conditions to the very great advantage of those lacking means. This would be an important stimulus which ought to add largely to the prosperity of the community, and there would be the further probable result of weeding out undesirable citizens, since only those worthy of credit would remain.

The plan described here has been devised for extending credit to wheat growing farmers. It seems capable of many modifications that would adapt it to other situations.

NO JOKE FOR BUHL WOMAN

Mrs. F. C. Brown to Sue Boise Man for Breach of Promise.

When, after she had "waited at the church" from Saturday to Wednesday, her bridegroom failed to appear, Mrs. F. C. Brown of Buhl decided to bring him to account and came with her attorney to the suit for breach of promise. Mrs. Brown came to Boise Saturday, she says at the request of a Boise man with whom she had been corresponding, and they were to be married Saturday here. She left for Buhl Wednesday night in response to an urgent telephone call, after instructing her attorney to prepare papers in her damage suit.

Mrs. Brown was a former resident of Boise. She is a vivacious little person with bright, black eyes, and claims to be much in love with the man whom she expected to wed last Saturday.

"I love that man," she tells you how much. He is nothing for looks has several disfigurements, and is bald headed, but his eyes are remarkably beautiful. Our love affair began when he boarded at our home in Buhl. He would invite me out to dances and parties and my husband being much older than I, and not caring to go, would urge me to accompany him, dear old innocent. A red hot love letter from this man, which fell into my husband's hands a year ago, caused him to divorce me. Since then I have supported my five children. I have had three pairs of twins, the four little girls are all living, but only one of the boys.

"Couldn't I find him.

"When I arrived in Boise Saturday

I went straight to the rooming house where my prospective husband told me to meet him, but we could find nothing of him. After waiting some time, I telephoned to his sister-in-law, at whose home he boards, and she answered he was out doing chores and she would not call him. I tried again and she said he had gone out with some hay.

"Finally I succeeded in reaching him through the reuse of getting someone else to call up for me.

Says Eye Dodged.
"Then he told me he had been sick in bed but would see me that evening. I told him I wanted to see him the next morning at 11 o'clock, but when the next morning arrived, he failed to put in an appearance and I later learned he had slipped out down the valley.

"I at once instructed my attorney to commence suit for breach of promise and had it not been for my call to Buhl tonight, I would have had the paper signed and ready. I don't know what is wanted at Buhl, the only thing I can think of is that one of my children is ill, but I expect to return on the next train, unless I find some serious trouble at home."

Says Parents Were Pioneers.
Mrs. Brown claims to be a trained nurse. Her husband's father was one of the pioneers of Boise, she said, and built the log cabin which still stands on Fifth street between Idaho and Main streets. She was quite excited when interviewed last evening, feeling she had been most unjustly treated.

"I have corresponded with this man since 1911," she said. "Some one suggested that the reason he backed out of marrying me was because of my five children, but that is nonsense."

for he had himself photographed with four of them, so you see he must know about them. I do not intend to stand suffer for my humiliation."—Statesman.

and analyze without prejudice, the doctrine of reciprocity with Canada and strip it of its subterfuge and verbiage it represents nothing more in its last analysis for nothing less than the no-finesness of the New England manufacturer. It means protection for the eastern manufacturer and free trade for the western farmer. It means that the producer, the farmer, the stock raiser, is to sell on the open market and buy of you in a protected market. It means that you want to buy of Canada because you think you can buy cheaper and it is impossible for you to buy cheaper there without injuring the western farmer. You think you can use the Canadian farmer to beat-down the price on the western farms of the United States.

"What is this raw material about which you talk? Does your manufactured product represent the finished product to you any more than the farmer's crop represents the finished product of his labor? The farmer tills his corn or sows his wheat, watches and tills the long season through, harvests them, then threshes and hauls them to the railroad—will anyone be blinded by self-interest conclude that that is any less his finished product than your manufacturer's article. In the store which he has raised and fattened, the pig which he has gathered, the hog which he has prepared for market any less the finished product of his labor than your manufacturer's product is of yours? This doctrine of raw material is a high sounding phrase to conceal the narrow, selfish policy of those who want the benefit of the protection policy and would at the same time deny the benefit to their neighbors and countrymen.

"Now I want to say in all courtesy but with entire candor that you are greatly mistaken if you suppose that any such system will ultimately prevail in this country. We will either have a policy, which applies to the whole country or we will have none at all, a policy which covers the whole country and all factions and callings, or we will have none of it. It is infinitely better to establish and maintain in this country any such shortighted, narrow, selfish policy as the doctrine of free trade for the farmer and protection for the manufacturer involves. I say this much and more briefly and less pointed than I feel, because we are soon to write a platform upon which the Republican party is to build for the future, if you should succeed in incorporating any such doctrine in that platform as this doctrine in that platform as this doctrine of reciprocity and free raw material at no distant date you will realize the mistake for myself I believe in a reasonable policy of protection, a moderate tariff but I would unhesitatingly vote to take the last vestige of protection from the New England manufacturer if she prefers to do business with Canada. I do not think that free trade for this country is a good thing but I am sure that it is infinitely better than free trade for some and protection for others. Such a system is indefensible and intolerable."

We have been selling blankets in good quantities since early in September, and now that the cooler weather has come the demand has increased, and we are selling them more freely than ever. Those who have been trading here, come in feeling sure that they will find the prices right, and of course they do, and when those who have not been in before, see our splendid values, they are both pleased and surprised, and no wonder, for I certainly do give great values in all kinds of blankets. Buying in quantities, shipping under most favorable conditions, with the very favorable circumstances under which I buy, enable me to make prices that show big savings to my customers.

Blankets from 50 cents a pair to $8.50 a pair, that other stores ask a lot more for.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

A feud has existed between Colonel Arthur Stanley and his cousin, Blair Stanley, ever since a diamond, the diamond from the sky, found in a fallen meteor by an ancestor. Also, the succession of the Stanley earldom in England may come to an American.

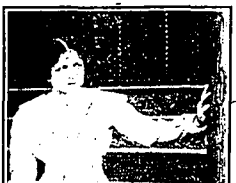

had been given much space in the newspapers. The reports were meager as to just how his injuries had been sustained save for the fact that his physician, Dr. Frank Durand, a stranger to Los Angeles, had by good fortune been with him at the time of the accident.

Arthur's Business Affairs Are Looked After by Blair.

homecoming to it, a crashed, shattered, unconscious and seemingly dying man. And then the accident seemed to be a three days' wonder, and other sensational happenings and events of interest supplanted it in the papers, and John Powell and his affairs gave no further concern save to those who were personally interested.

Among these was a pretty young woman who lived quietly under the name of Esther Harding at a modest hotel. Esther, after her first rebuff at the postoffice, the Powell mansion, the day after the injured man was brought back, returned again and again and was persistent in her demands to see the injured man.

nature disclosure of his real identity she could help it. But she was determined to go even to this length were it necessary and were she further deluded access to the one in all the world she loved with every fiber of her brave and loyal little heart.

Some intuitive sense of Esther's attitude must have impressed Vivian Marston, for she did not uphold the manservant. Instead she said, "I will see the young lady," and followed the servant from the sickroom where Arthur lay semiconscious in restless fevered sleep.

"You cannot come in here," she said tensely. "Mr. Powell is at death's door. Any intrusion or excitement would be his death."

Esther faltered. Then the Stanley spirit asserted itself. "Better he die with a real friend by his side than live with such as you and your associates ministering to him!" she said scornfully.

"Vivian was cool and kept her wits. That will be a matter for our friend to discuss when he is able to decide it. Will you believe me if I permit you to enter and you can see for yourself that he is delirious?"

Esther bowed assent. If her enemies—for she knew they were enemies—were fighting fairly it behooved her to do as much.

Arthur lay with eyes closed, tossing in a fevered sleep. Esther knelt by the bedside, and her hand caressed the poor blinded arm nearest her. Her gaze was upon the fevered, languid countenance of Arthur. She kept a hold of Vivian, who passed by the foot of the bed and took a small instrument from the table there. Then Vivian passed softly to the back of the bed between the injured man and the window.

Then his eyes opened, and he saw her. "Esther!" he murmured. "Is it you, dear?"

"Yes," she whispered softly. "It is Esther."

He smiled and was about to try to speak again. Then Vivian moved slightly. A film passed over Arthur's dark eyes. They closed, and he lay still. "The drug lulled him again to semiconsciousness."

Esther's fortitude gave way. Arthur was so weak she feared even now that the hand of death was on him.

Callous as Vivian Marston was, the grief and heartache that the deep blue steadfast eyes of Esther so poignantly expressed for a moment stirred some tender memory of youth in the breast of the worldly woman.

"I am a trained nurse," she said, and Dr. Durand is a notable physician. Our friend is having the best of current treatment. When he is well enough you shall see him. Till then we must abide by the doctor's orders. Believe me, I am your friend and mean no harm to you or him. On the contrary, I will do all I can for both of you."

And such is the strangeness of these perverse natures that tears welled to Vivian's eyes, and for a few moments she felt smothered by her own sympathy. However, when Esther had departed Vivian forgot the stirring of her better emotions and gave strict orders to the manservant not to admit this caller again under penalty of dismissal.

Esther returned to her hotel torn with conflicting emotions. Duty called her to Richmond, where she was to stay, slowly, but surely, recovering her reason, and duty and, stronger still, her deep and ardent love for Arthur held her here—a love that grew the stronger despite the strange, weird destiny that seemed to be bent on keeping them apart forever.

Esther had been in communication with Blake, the Richmond detective, whom she had trusted as at least one disinterested and influential friend. This night she averted her eyes from the condition of their friend—she had wired him previously of Arthur being injured—would keep her for the time at least in Los Angeles, and while she slept that night, perchance to dream of happier days to come, a strange convulsion of the strangers of a well-gathered in the luxuriously appointed library of the young millionaire who lay upstairs in delirium from his injuries and opiates.

First, there were Durand and his lacker, the dapper Count de Vaux. Then there was Vivian, her enticing charms doubled by the becoming nurse's uniform she wore. Then there was Blair Stanley, silent and sullen, while the other three chattered of their plans and strategies.

CHAPTER XL

FROM a millionaire's luxurious library to the wild outdoors is a distance that may be bridged quickly by thought. But the soul stragglers who plot for a fortune and the diamond from the sky have no thought of a wide campaign in the woods not twenty miles from where the man whose means, mind and heart happiness they plot against was injured and by those injuries placed helpless in their hands.

But by the rude campfire are two paste smattered, overall clad circus billposters, and they are pertinent to the plotters in the shattered man's library in Los Angeles, for they, though they do not know it now, are nearer to at least one great end for which the plotters seek to strangle a soul—the diamond from the sky.

The diamond lies unnoticed since early forenoon on the alighting board of one of the many beehives in the apiary of Fletcher Jones. It lies where his little three-year-old daughter dropped it when a testy bee had stung her after she had found the diamond beneath the rock where Snythe had put it.

Where the billposters are camped in the woods beneath a freest dead tree is not 500 yards from the best yard of Fletcher Jones. For some days the billposters with their wags and parapetaria have made the struggling barns and washable boardings of this thinly settled region blossom gaily with the bills announcing the appearances of Stanley's Stupendous Circus. The circus is playing the towns and cities large enough to meet the requirements of what the proprietor calls "a regular show."

Their life has been slow in starting, but now it burns well. As the billposter who is called Jack Williams beats himself to mix some punkish flour, the billposter whose name is Ben Burk fumes over the fire and sheds a few tears and wipes his eyes from the acrid smoke of the newly started fire. And night comes quickly in California. It is daylight and then dusk and then dark. And far off on the other side of the hill Lawyer Snythe of London has lost his way and walks in a circle, seeking shelter.

There is no snip," says the bill poster named Burk, as he scratches among the dirty tin of the ladder and holds the strip taut and shakes it by a doubling ear. "I told you not to make flapjacks!"

"What's your kick about molasses, boy?" asks the other, pert, leaning from the whitish mass he is stirring. "Didn't we pass a bee yard not a quarter of a mile down the road?"

"The other looks disgusted. "I should think you'd be sick of cooking and stirring paste to sling up hills with all day without mixing and cooking paste to eat at night!" he grumbles.

"Beat it! Make yourself useful and go and get some honey. We got lots of time before we have a fire hot enough for flapjacks," says the other. "If I do cook flapjacks you won't have anything to eat but bacon; the bread's all gone. Close your trap and go and swipe some honey. When I saw those beehives I got to thinking of flapjacks. Anyway, I've got to go for water as it is for honey. Beat it!"

So the billposter named Burk, still grumbling, takes plate and knife as he is laid and moves off in the darkness to the sweet store of the bees busy beyond.

The moon shines vaguely just above the sky line. Its dim light barely throws a shadow as Burk skulks across the field after coming out of the woods and enters the rancher's back yard. He rocks an occasional life as he passes and the murmur of disturbed bees passes duly from within them. He pauses at last by one that rocks with gleam resistance, and he is about to enter the cap piece when something gleams opalescent in the moonlight on the alighting board of the rocking hive. Burk stoops over and picks it up. In the dim light from the moon, he sees it is a curious large locket attached to a curious chain of dis' old gold of ancient workmanship. But the face of the locket, as when he gazed beneath the vain moon of a night...

Burk gapes at the sight of it. Was ever a diamond of such a size? Burk is a billposter and knows little of diamonds. "He cannot tell diamonds from paste, perhaps," but he can tell paste from diamonds. "I wonder if it's fake?" he gasps. "Why, a piece of jewelry so would be worth a fortune!"

"What he reached for the locket beneath the dead tree he noticed his partner is absent. He holds the locket in the fire-light and is rewarded by a blinding dazzle, reflecting the crimson light of the flames from the flecked globe as large as a bright sun. Then he hears a step behind him and springs guiltily to his feet. It is Jack Williams, back from the spring with a pail of water for their coffee.

"What's the excitement? Whatcha hidin' from?" asks Jack. "I'm a sinner," Burk brings the chain and locket into view. "Think I'm a sinner?" he asks. "I think I'm a sinner, anything? Suppose it was a real diamond and as big as that?" "I'll bet it is," says Burk. "You're a duffer," they ain't afraid to say. "It's what the jeweler says, and a piece of junk!"

"But there's nothing cheap looking about it. That might be a brass one, but the locket is a diamond. Let's give it the light," remarks Williams, and goes over to the wagon. He catches a glimpse of a diamond from one of the stars in the square. "That's a diamond," he says. "It's a diamond," he says. "It's a diamond," he says.

"What? You ain't afraid to say it?" he cries, with hoarse greediness. "Who found it? Did you? No, you found it and I'll bet you're a sinner. You've got to give me the diamond, or I'll cut your throat." "I have been good enough to tell you when you were sick and broke your back against it, and if it's worth the price you are yellow dog enough to hog it all. That shows me just what you are. And if it's worth ten plus or ten millions I want no part of it, you dirty, cheap four flusher and sneaking swine!"

And they mutter no coffee and cook no dinner and stir the soup with each other, but with hatred and greed in their hearts they lie for the last time blanketed side by side. One of them slapping the other's face, the other slapping the other's face, the other slapping the other's face.

unswerving! Let us kick out these vermin, and when Arthur is well and strong I'll kill him, like a southern man, with his own hands, man to man and fair to fair!

"You are a fine one to spout heroics!" sneered Vivian. "Do you forget? This Vivian checked herself. I thought she sneered, she admired the man. He was a man for all his outward poverty. She had no intention of taunting him now for his having inherited a weak old man—Dr. Lee—the diamond from the sky.

ment, and when his milk tests 5-6 at the cheese factory they know he leads the van.
One of the best things in the lecture was delivered in the open house last night. Ralph Parlette is a national figure and his lecture on the "University of Hard Knocks" should be heard by everybody in the land, especially young men. It applies, however, to all classes of people, and is delivered in a manner that appeals to you. His amusing sayings and word pictures are wonderfully drawn and hold one from the time he starts until he closes. He talked two hours and could have held his audience another hour easy. It is too bad that a bigger audience was not present. An intellectual treat does not seem to appeal to Filer people to as great an extent as it should.

HOGS AND IRRIGATION

Possibilities of the Industry Pointed Out in Government Report.

Farmers on reclamation projects, where forage and grain crops are the chief crops are urged by the department to consider very carefully the possibilities of raising hogs as a means of disposing of their products which will bear transportation charges. An investigation of this problem on the North Platte reclamation project in western Nebraska, and eastern Wyoming, has led to the conclusion that the swine industry can be extended with great profit to the community similar conditions.

On the North Platte, it is stated in a report on this subject there appears to be no fear that the annual exportation of hogs should not be developed to a point where the resulting revenue will represent an important part of the swine industry in their crops. The demonstration work which has already been conducted with a view to extending and improving the swine industry should be continued. In particular, attention is being bestowed upon arousing the farmers to the necessity of community action in controlling hog cholera.

In 1913 about 55 per cent of the crop acreage on the North Platte project was devoted to alfalfa and about 32 per cent to grain. As in the case of many of the other reclamation projects, the cost of transportation from the North Platte region to the large market centers is so high that the price paid to farmers for hay and grain is less than the cost of transport. In 1913 for example, the local price of alfalfa was from $3 to $5 a ton, and for different grains from 40 cents to 60 cents per bushel. Experiments conducted at the experiment farm that year showed that alfalfa when pastured by hogs had a value of 100 per cent over that of the corn which was hogged off its value as a feed was from 90 cents to $1 a bushel. These figures made it obvious that the general more profitable use of the farmers on the project to convert their alfalfa and corn into pork than to attempt to dispose of them directly.

Local conditions which favor the development of the swine industry. Forage crops and grains can be produced cheaply and abundantly. Comparatively few general diseases are known to start in the business, the returns come promptly, and the swine population increases rapidly. Under these conditions a number of hogs are declared to be:

- (1) The standardization of breeds in the community.
(2) The adoption of satisfactory methods of breeding, feeding, housing and marketing.
(3) Adequate control of diseases.
(4) Community co-operation.
In developing these requisites, the department has worked in co-operation with the National Live Stock and the Nebraska State Live Stock Sanitary Board. This co-operative work has apparently borne good fruit, and the number of hogs in the project rose from 14,000 on November 1, 1913, to 22,241 on November 1, 1914, an increase of approximately 60 per cent. In addition, a large number of farmers have expressed their intention of entering the business, and many of those who now have herds are planning to increase their size. There are it is said, ample facilities for producing all the feed that is necessary for four or five times the present number of hogs now being grown.

oodur in the fall litters during cold weather. Fall pigs can be wintered at comparatively low cost, but they should be farrowed sufficiently early to have the pigs born before cold weather. The following year they can be economically fattened on grain and alfalfa pasture and marketed soon after the opening of the Spring market. Most of their growth from alfalfa pasture with a 2 to 3 per cent ration of grain increased in the fall. In this respect the hogs are better market before Christmas.
An acre of alfalfa furnishes ample grazing for twelve 100-pound hogs, and the general alfalfa crop is cut and carried. The best results are obtained from dividing the pasture into two parts, using each alternately. Exclusive pastures have been avoided at all times. It is best to provide more alfalfa than the hogs can feed down closely and to clip the pasture when the general alfalfa crop is cut. When a grain ration of 3 pounds a day for each 100 pounds of live weight is fed, the most advantageous returns from an acre of alfalfa are apparently secured. With ordinary prices for grain a 2 to 3 per cent ration can be made profitable.

Corn is the principal grain used to supplement alfalfa pasture and hay. While the average yield in 1914 on the project was only 15 1/2 bushels per acre a large number of farmers secured a yield of 40 bushels and a few more than 60 bushels. Those farmers who tried hogging down the corn in 1914 report very satisfactory results. This method is the best for disposing of the vesting the corn, and it also adds a considerable quantity of fertilizer to the soil. In the report recently published by the department of Agriculture of the demonstration work on the project, this method is strongly recommended for general adoption. The use of alfalfa and corn as a ration for hogs and it is stated that twice as many were in use on the project in 1914 as in 1913.

Denver is the chief market for the fat hogs raised on the project, about two-thirds of which are shipped by the farmers themselves and one-third sold to local commission men for shipping. It is said, might be profitably practiced to a greater extent than it is now.

The chief problem, however, confronting hog raisers on the project is the control of disease. The natural conditions are such, it is said that the swine industry should be good, and their quarters easily maintained in a sanitary condition. On the other hand, the universal use of irrigation water for farming is a danger for disseminating disease, and the only way of overcoming this danger is by means of community co-operation. Hog cholera appeared on the project in 1913 and was widespread in 1914. The campaign against the disease was directed (1) toward the securing and enforcing of a quarantine order (2) to secure a prompt report of all outbreaks in order to treat the hogs in the infected herds; and (3) to improving sanitary condition. Hogs which were ill or showing signs of sickness were either killed or placed in a quarantine pen in order to prevent them from spreading infection. The ill hogs were treated with anti-hog cholera serum. Altogether, in the six months from July 1 to December 31, 1914, 4,887 hogs were treated with serum, the average, therefore, for each hog that died after treatment 6 hogs were saved. An outbreak of cholera in a herd which is not able to take proper precautions in a loss of as many as 90 per cent of the hogs. The total cost of the treatment for the six months was estimated at $2,400 and the saving at $25,000.

While it evidently pays, therefore, to fight hog cholera with serum, it is with more profit to take proper precautions to see that it does not appear. Treatment with the serum alone provides immunity for from 30 to 90 days only, and unless proper sanitary measures are taken, reinfection is almost certain to follow. The simultaneous treatment in which both virus and serum are injected is open to the objection that in incompetent hands it may spread the disease. This treatment should therefore be administered only by experienced persons. Since a diseased herd is a menace to all the neighbors, the control of hog cholera is distinctly a community matter, and a community organization is recommended as an efficient way of dealing with the problem. In fact the swine industry as a whole, it is said, is now in a position to be a community affair. There are many ways in which it will be profitable to all concerned for the farmers on a project to work together.

EDUCATIONAL BULLETIN

Boise, November 11th, 1916. To County Superintendents.

Dear Superintendent: In accordance with our proposal submitted to you some time ago, and heartily approved by all the superintendents who expressed an opinion on it, the State Board of Education passed the following rule:

Districts with three teachers or less which desire to carry on work above the 8th grade must obtain the approval of the county superintendent. This approval shall not be given if in the opinion of the county superintendent the elementary grades would suffer from the attempt to carry high school work.

The basis of this rule is the belief on our part that intimate knowledge of the situation such as the county superintendent possesses is necessary for the formation of a wise judgment concerning these schools.

In view of many inquiries from county superintendents, and for the purpose of securing reasonable uniformity throughout the state, we call attention to the following points, which should be considered in passing upon the applications of these schools:

(1). It seems to be the unanimous belief of county superintendents that schools with one teacher should never undertake high school work; indeed some of the superintendents have requested that a rule be made by the state board to this effect.

(2). It is evident that geographical situation should be taken into consideration. If a school is situated within easy distance of a good high school,

It is usually far better for the high school pupils of the district to attend the standard school under the provisions of article 23.

(3). It is proper to take into account the number of pupils and the number of grades in the elementary school, although one should be careful not to lay too much stress upon this, inasmuch as these conditions vary so much from year to year.

(4). Of course the number of pupils ready to take high school work should be given much weight.

(5). The financial ability of the district should also be taken into account. In some cases if the district is able to employ an additional teacher high school work might be authorized when otherwise it would be undesirable.

(6). Note particularly that a district may offer one or two or three years; of high school work, and take advantage of Article XXIII for pupils who desire to go beyond the course offered.

(7). You must help to make the trustees and people in these smaller districts see that they defraud not only the elementary pupils but the high school pupils themselves when they keep up the empty form of a high school, without any adequate equipment or teaching staff. This is emphasized in the High School Bulletin No. 1, page 11.

(8). The smaller district near a large high school should see that it cannot possibly give even fair high school opportunities as cheaply as it can get them under Section XXIII. Especially when they think they are getting the best school work for nothing; by having their regular teachers do it they are often paying a heavy price—neglect of the elementary grades.

Please make the fullest use possible of High School Bulletin No. 1. We shall be glad to send you additional copies of this bulletin or to send direct to any addresses which you may send us.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD J. SASSON,

Commissioner of Education.

IDAHO A PROSPEROUS STATE

Salt Lake Man Says This is the Place to Sell Cars.

If ever a Salt Laker journeyed through Idaho in the fall of the year, he would not be likely to come away with enthusiasm on conditions in the Gem State, Frank Dotterill is the man. Mr. Dotterill left Salt Lake 10 days ago, and he returned to Boise, Twin Falls, Idaho Falls, Blackfoot, Caldwell, Rexburg, Rigby, Nampa and other Idaho points before returning to Salt Lake.

He found so many automobiles in use in Idaho and discovered so many prospective purchasers of automobiles who have so many sugar beets and ran across so much money, that he returned an Idaho boomer of the first water.

Discussing his trip recently he said: "No man who doesn't make a trip to Idaho at this season of the year—and particularly this year—can realize what a remarkable season they have had in that state."

"I went into Idaho with Harold Smith, one of our salesmen, for the purpose of looking over several Idaho towns, with a view of placing agencies for the new Hudson car, on which we expect initial deliveries in December."

"Mr. Smith and I thought it was a good idea to make a thorough investigation of all conditions in Idaho, and as a result of our trip I am frank to say that Idaho has much to be proud of."

"The farmers have had an exceptional year, and there is plenty of money in the state. I saw more sugar beets than I thought existed in the world, and incidents were related to me by prominent business men in the towns and cities I visited of farmers who have reaped such enormous crops this year that one might think the farmers had been operating mint mines instead of farms."

"Everywhere we went, we found prosperous, happy people, enjoying the good things of life and among these good things are thousands of automobiles."

"It was our purpose to thoroughly organize certain sections of Idaho as selling territories for the Hudson car, inasmuch as our instructions from the Hudson factory are to prepare to sell three times as many Hudsons as we have ever sold before."

"Twin Falls and Idaho Falls are exceptionally prosperous, and both have a vigorous, live appearance."

"I was agreeably surprised at Blackfoot to find everything in such splendid shape, and the same is true of Caldwell, Rexburg and Rigby."

"Nampa is thriving and both Boise and Pocatello are in excellent shape."

When the opportunity to sell right salary comes, you'll be in line for it if you watch the classified ads.

WIRELESS PLANT IN HILLS

Mysterious Aircraft Has Been Noted in Rapid Flight Near Dickey.

For sometime the federal government has entertained a possibility that somewhere in the mountain regions of Idaho a secret wireless station was being maintained in the interests of European powers now at war, and attempts have been made to locate the plant that apparently has communication with Canada and then with Europe. It is believed that of course, the mysterious aircraft that has been seen near Mackay to be in the service of such hidden wireless station. The Mackay Mirror, of this week contains the following story of the flying machine.

Al West, prominent stockman and proprietor of the Dickey stage station, while in the fields of his ranch a couple of weeks ago, was puzzled over a swishing, rumbling sound that apparently came from nowhere in particular. He first thought an earthquake was being pulled off in Custer county, but the sound came nearer and nearer, and he finally detected that it came from over his head, he held a large flying machine hurtling through space at lightning like rapidity. He rubbed his eyes in a howling way and took the second look to make sure that his eyes were not playing a trick on him. He watched the huge machine until it gracefully disappeared over a snow-clad hill that pierced the sky south of the stage station some 45 miles away, then stood in a contemplative mood for many minutes after the machine had disappeared, absolutely bewildered.

About a year ago Fred Westendorf and his cousin beheld the same spectacle in the same vicinity and told their story to many people of Mackay. Mr. Westendorf wrote many papers asking for information as to the flight of the machine, but none could throw any light on the mysterious appearance of a flying machine away up in the most mountainous country of the Rocky mountain region. Scoffers laughed at their story and such joking followed, but both of the men persisted in claiming the truth of their recital of the strange experience.

Al West, standing there in the field, puzzled, remembered the Westernfold account and the subsequent joking and decided that he would say nothing of the incident.

Upon returning to the house he was accosted by his wife with the question: "Did you see the flying machine?" Al replied, "Why, did you see one?" "Yes," said Mrs. West. "Well, I did too," said Al, "but I decided that I wouldn't say nothin' about it, till someone else did, for fear they might think I was locoed."

The strange and unaccounted for appearance of the machine was the topic of conversation in the West household for days, and the story was told to many of the travelers who pass that way. Thus, twice within one year has a flying machine been sighted 25 miles above Mackay. Many theories are advanced to account for its appearance, among which, and the most probable one, is that the government is making secret tests of its machines while another one is that some Custer county man has outstripped the inventive world with a machine that can make long flights in stiff winds, over the loftiest mountain peaks in the Rocky Mountain region. Others claim that the four people who have witnessed the flights of the machine have been the victims of a strange mirage, but the fact that all four have been first attracted by the unmistakable sound of a rapidly propelled air craft disproves this theory.

"Abe" and "Mawruss" Again Will Delight Twin Falls People.

In the case of "Potash & Perlmutter" seeing is believing. We were introduced to the stage version of those famous and humorous stories by Montague Glass the past season, and are quite able to understand the extraordinary success that has attended its production ever since the first performance.

"Potash & Perlmutter" is one of those rare contributions to the theatre, a play so filled with touches of human nature and comedy built around the peculiarities and foibles of certain well defined character types, that its appeal is well nigh universal. Wherever it goes it strikes a responsive chord in the majority of theatre-goers who receive it with the same unbounded "laughter" and "applause" which was accorded it last season.

Most acts playing the Sullivan & Conditine Circuit (finish on the Pacific coast, either in Seattle or Los Angeles) and the Seattle booking office for the circuit conceived the brilliant idea of routing these shows back east in companies and experienced no trouble in filling in solid time for the acts from the coast eastward.

The 25 cent shows at the Lavering the past few weeks have proved so popular that the management has decided to offer this exceptional vaudeville at that price and for good measure throw in the usual five reels of motion pictures.
