THINK ABOUT IT

Twin Falls Commercial Club

DO IT NOW.

Probably every person in this city who can, expects to help in caring for the poor people by a contribution to the local Associated Charities. But a great many have probably so far overlooked the matter of that donation. If you have so far forgotten, do not wait another day. Do it now. Send a check to Superintendent Blue or if you have cast-off, but clean and whole clothing, send them to W. J. Young. Despite the fact that this has been a prosperous year there will be some people who will suffer as soon as the working season shuts down. Don't make a mistake of figuring that what you forget to do, some one else will fill the want. Most times the want is not filled. Make that donation just a little larger than usual in proportion to the prosperity that has come to you.

From the revelations made in the conspiracy to destroy the ammunition plants in this country, there is need for a house cleaning of a large number of undesirable residents. It is no time dallying with a class of men who bring nothing but trouble to this country. They should be put in federal prisons or else turned over to the allies whom they are fighting by their actions in this country.

The danger to this country cannot be overestimated. In its lax methods of dealing with foreign political offenders. No other nation allows as much liberty as the United States. It is time to increase the restrictions.

Another feature of the recent conspiracy is the supposed participation in the affairs by naturalized American citizens, who cannot forget their former allegiance. The naturalized American who aids another country in violation of the neutrality of the United States is a traitor and should be given the option of being turned over to the trenches of the country it is aiding or made to face a firing squad in this country.

GERMANS ASK WHAT THEY ARE FIGHTING FOR

The persistent peace-talk in the German papers and the equally persistent official and semi-official denials that Germany has any desire to open negotiations present a curious contradiction. What does it mean? Some editors infer that Wilhelmstrasse regards the present as a favorable moment for the conclusion of hostilities if advantageous terms could be secured, the successive peace-hints and denials being intended to elicit counter-proposals from the Allies. They point out that so far Germany is in the position of a victor who could offer something as a basis of negotiation, having in her possession almost the whole of Belgium and Poland, and valuable tracts of land in Russia, France and Serbia. One editor, who is not altogether friendly to Germany, has described her as being in the position of a poker-player who after a run of luck is anxious to get out of the game while the majority of the chips on the table lie before him. It is, however, significant that possible conditions of peace form a subject of discussion in the German press and are debated among members of the various political parties, even to the extent of breaking the political truce which has prevailed since the war began. So much so has this been the case that we learn from the Berliner Tageblatt, the Imperial Chancellor has been attacked by his own party for not formulating the terms of peace that Germany will demand. The National Liberal party has passed a resolution stating what it intends to work for in this direction, which, according to the Tageblatt, runs:—
The Central Committee of the Naional Liberal party declares . . . that the result of the present war can only be a peace which, by means of extensions of our borders on the east, west and overseas, safeguards us from renewed attacks, either military, political, or economic and repays the enormous sacrifices which the German people have made heretofore and are determined to make until the victories end come . . .

"The Central Committee will stand solidly with the entire party against any government that does not pursue this end with rigid firmness."

The Imperial Chancellor is taken severely to task by the Hamburger Fremdenblatt for not defining more explicitly the objects for which Germany is fighting. It says:

"The attitude of the Imperial Chancellor toward the goal in this war is a matter of solicitude—solicitude that the highest imperial official does not find himself on this question so vital to the German people, in agreement with the overwhelming majority of the nation. This solicitude of the Imperial Chancellor in which he asserted that Germany was fighting for a peace that would insure for her and her allies that firm safeguard that Germany needs for a lasting peace had for the development of her national destiny. Under those words one may have in mind very different things, for in the last analysis the ideas of what is necessary for our national future differ widely. . . .

"Today we may, without going into details, express in all calmness the fact that we are striving for an extension of our borders."

This request for the definition of peace-terms is supported by the Hamburger Nachrichten, which says that the people now demand the right "to know for what they are making such gigantic sacrifices." Nor is this confined to the National Liberal party, for we find the Catholics of Germany issuing through the Central Committee of the powerful Center party, exactly the same inquiry. According to the Berliner Germania, the Center party's resolution runs in part:

"The terrible sacrifices which the war has imposed upon our people demand increased protection of our territory in the East and West which will make it impossible for a foreign enemy to fall upon us again, and which for all time will secure the economic necessities of our increasing population."

From The Hague comes a rumor of what Germany's peace-terms are to be, as Reuter's agency reports:

"At a recent conference in Amsterdam, which was attended by several members of the Reichstag, one of the members stated that Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the Imperial Chancellor, had declared that Germany was inclined to conclude peace on the basis of the cessation to Germany of Belgium and the Meuse line, the cessation of Courland and the payment of an indemnity of 80,000,000,000 marks ($7,500,000,000)."

These terms are promptly denied by the official Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, which says:

"We do not know where The Hague

Jenkins & Co.

Correspondence Bureau may have obtained its information, but must state that it is absolutely without foundation. The Chancellor has made no statements. It would have been premature, anyway, to talk of peace-conditions now. "If, despite our repeated denials, such reports that Germany feels the inclination or need to make peace continue to be strewn abroad, it leads to the conclusion that our enemies are making obvious and stupid attempts to raise courage in their own countries by representing Germany as yearning for peace."—Literary Digest.

RESOLUTION OF SYMPATHY

Albion, Ida., Nov. 19, 1915.
At a regular meeting of Naomil Chapter No. 4, O. E. S., held on the above date, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted: Whereas, in view of the loss we have sustained by the decease of our sister and associate, Mrs. Mattie Hansen, and of the still heavier loss sustained by those who were nearest and dearest to her.

RESOLVED, that she be remembered to the memory of the departed to say that in regretting her removal from our midst we mourn for one who was in every way worthy of our respect and regard, and for a sister whose utmost endeavors were exerted for the welfare and prosperity of the community in which she lived; a friend and companion who was dear to us all; a sister whose upright and noble life was a standard of emulation to all who knew her.

RESOLVED, that the heartfelt sympathy of this Chapter be extended to her family in their affliction. Resolved, further, that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of the Chapter and a copy be transmitted to the family of our deceased sister and to each of the newspapers.

SUGAR FARMING IN KANSAS

A Manufacturing Success Built on Raising Live Stock.

By H. B. Palmer.

"That which comes out of the soil must be put back into the soil." There you have the basic law of agriculture, written into the code of the farmer of today by centuries of husbandry. A few years ago a group of copper mining men of Colorado recognized the infallibility of that principle and decided to work it out on their sugar beet. They picked out the sister state of Kansas for their demonstration and bet 4 million dollars on the result. They are winning the bet.

It took vision and nerve to stake 4 million dollars on the sandy soil of the Arkansas Valley in Western-Kansas, near the Colorado line, far removed from the rain belt. Another "faith without works is dead," there was careful planning and prospecting before the land was bought and the big project started. The underlying every stage of the development of the enterprise, there was always that fundamental truth of enduring agriculture—the fertility of the soil must be preserved. Today the thousands of acres of sugar beets, wheat, alfalfa, maize, Kafir, oats, barley; the thousands of cattle, hogs and sheep; the tons of machinery; farm and factory buildings; wells, irrigation ditches—all are letters spelling the motto of the Garden City Sugar and Land company, "give back to the soil what you take out and let dollars be the by-product."

The theory is simply worked out in obedience to natural laws. Each activity forms a link in the chain of the evolution back to the soil. The process is not unlike the old-nursery verse, "This is the House that Jack Built." It goes like this, without the rhyme, if you don't mind:

This is the sugar that sells.
This is the beet that makes the sugar that sells.
This is the wheat (it sells, too) and alfalfa that rotates to prepare the soil for the beet that makes the sugar that sells.

These are the cattle that drop riches on the soil for the wheat and alfalfa that rotate for the beet that makes the sugar that sells.

This is the maize and Kafir and oats and barley that (together with alfalfa and by-products of the sugar refining process) feed the cattle that enrich the soil for the wheat and alfalfa that rotate for the beet that makes the sugar that sells.

These are the wells and pumps and ditches that water the grain that feeds the cattle that enrich the soil for the crops that rotate for the beet that makes the sugar that sells.
No one crop or part of the plan is maintained for its single individual value, but only in its necessary relation to the others and because of the collective ability of all to produce the final result.

The Garden City Sugar and Land company is not primarily in the cattle raising business. The cattle are given a place in the plan for the fertilizer they produce. The cattle holdings comprise a breeding herd of two thousand. In addition, five hundred feeders are bought, fattened and sold annually. There also are seventy-five dairy cows whose product forms a valuable part of the plan. Feed, is grown in sufficient quantities to absorb other products in a stock-feeding mixture. This mixture consists of one-fourth alfalfa hay and one-fourth molasses (both by-products of sugar making), one-fourth crushed grain and one-fourth alfalfa meal. The cattle are on a diet of this mixture and alfalfa hay and are handled in small units of two hundred, a foreman to every unit. The small unit saves one hay and manure hauls. The surplus feed is marketed.

A drove of 1,600 hogs is maintained to offset the overhead expense of Kemerer who has to employ the year around. The "campaign" (sugar makers term for the harvesting of the beets and refining the product), comes only once a year in the late fall and early winter, and lasts only about one hundred days. The rest of the year the sugar plant is idle.

But the hogs are allowed to follow the cattle. They are pastured on alfalfa and are given a feed mixture. They also run in the beet fields after the harvest and pick up manure poured from beet tops and the beets the harvesters missed.

Last spring the Garden City Sugar and Land company topped the Kansas City Market with 405 head of hogs. After running in beet fields they were given a 4-weeks' fattening feed of three-fourths ground maize and one-fourth dried beet pulp.

Of its forty thousand acres of holdings, the company has about twenty-one thousand in cultivation. There are five thousand acres in beets, seventy-five hundred in alfalfa, thirty-three hundred in wheat. The rest is in feed grains and pasture land.

The 1915 crop of beets is ready for harvest now. In 1914 the crop averaged twelve and a fraction tons to the acre. A good deal of beet land is operated by tenants. The beet land cultivated by the company averaged more than fourteen tons to the acre, but the tenant land results pulled the general average down to twelve and a fraction. The company has taught itself a lesson in labor efficiency that it is not likely to forget. At the start it imported Russian farmers and put them on a share basis. It was a mistake. The company now knows it can get far better results by employing American farm workers on a salary. It is changing to that basis as rapidly as possible.

The sugar beet robs the soil of its lime. In the sugar refining process the beet is made to give up this "root" and the lime water extracted goes back to its rightful owner, the soil. Lime is the affinity for sugar and large quantities are used in the sugar refining process. The waste lime rock used at the factory supplements the lime water extracted from the beet itself as a soil conditioner.

Nine years of operation have demonstrated the proper crop rotation. This is the formula:

From the virgin sod to wheat, one year.

From wheat to beets, three years, manured as often as practicable within that time.

From beets to wheat and alfalfa.

Christmas Shopping at Booth's

For ten years we have been headquarters for the Christmas Shopper. Many, many look to us each year to supply them with their Holiday gifts ---they DEPEND on us. Each year we have seen the demand change more and more to the really practical gifts---something that's worth giving---something that's within reason in price. We have kept pace with the demand and this year is no exception---handkerchiefs, collars, gloves, silk hose, hand embroidered underwear, fancy towels, silk petticoats, furs, bags---why we expect to sell nice corsets and brassieres for gifts and they are very acceptable too. The recipient likes something for personal use or for the home. We've searched the great markets for gifts. Knowing the perplexities of Holiday shopping---we want you to feel free to come in "just to look around." Let us help you---let us suggest.

"Another Package from Booth's" four or five years. Wheat planted in the fall, sifts in the spring, wheat cut in July above the growing alfalfa, two cuttings of hay to follow.)

From wheat and alfalfa to wheat, one year.

Wheat to beets, five years. (With proper fertilization.)

The wheat that is raised becomes something more than a by-product---it forms a big selling product along with the sugar. Most of this year's crop is still in the stock. Some that has been threshed ran fifty-one bushels to the acre.

"That is not a guess and not an estimate," J. P. Nolan, the farm manager, said. It is accurate, actual computation. The land was measured by chain. We have to be exact because we have to show our books to the stockholders. This wheat was raised on old best land, properly irrigated. The crop had water whenever it needed it and in proper quantities."

Mr. Nolan has an exceedingly firm motto: doubt of any rain belt farmer or achieving as much as fifty bushels of wheat to the acre.

The water supply apparently is inexhaustible. Twelve feet below the surface the prospectors found water for irrigation purposes. But the well drillers went on down through a strata of solid blue clay, forty to eighty feet thick and beneath that found a vast supply of unusually pure water.

The irrigating machinery consists of an electrical power plant, a reservoir, ditches and forty wells. A considerable surplus of electrical energy provides marketable commercial power which is sold to outside consumers. The pumping operations also supply power for light and grinding at most of the farms.

At least one hundred thousand acres of land, tributary to the plant and capable of irrigation furnishes an opportunity for expansion. The sugar refinery is a gigantic structure of brick and concrete that cost 1 1/2 million dollars. It was finished and put in operation in 1909. It has a capacity of 1/4 million 100-pound sacks of beet sugar a year. Last year it produced 150,000 sacks for which it found a ready market.

DOUBLE BILL AT ORPHEUM

A Bill Which Will Please all for the Last Three Nights of the Week.

For the last three nights of the week, with Saturday matinee, the Orpheum theatre is putting on a first class bill. The vaudeville is a double number. Dawson and Lawson will be seen in hand balancing and an acrobatic act out of the ordinary. Dreans and Goodwin will be seen in clever comedy entertaining, singing, talking and dancing.

In motion pictures "The Warning" is a powerful story in two parts featuring E. Forrest Taylor, an actor of merit, well known in southern Idaho. This is a vivid story of homesteading in the far southwest and has many thrilling and romantic parts.

The Mutual program for this week is better than ever before, showing the Astor Cup Races, the World Series Baseball champions, President Wilson and his intended, the latest Paris Fashions and other up to the minute events the world over.

Last but not least is one of the Keystone comedies featuring Chas. Chaplin and Mabel Normand in "Mabels Married Life." This is a picture that will surely drive away dull care.

LAVERING OFFERS VARIETY

Four Acts of Vaudeville and Pictures Friday and Saturday.

The first Hippodrome vaudeville show, directed by the western representative of the Sullivan-Conditine circuit, will be offered at the Laving Theatre, Friday and Saturday, with special bargain matinee Saturday at 2:30, with admission for children 5 cents and adults 15 cents. Four acts of vaudeville, headed by Betty Barrows & Co., will be offered in addition to the usual splendid photoplay program which includes "Neal of the Navy."

The next Paramount attraction is on Monday at which time the eminent actor, H. B. Warner, will be offered in his great stage success, "The Ghost Broker."

MUTT & JEFF IN A NEW FROLIC

Bud Fisher's Pets Will be in Collogue Next Week at Laving.

"A little nonsense now and then is relished by the best of men," and women, too. The old adage is proven over and over again by the continued and most extraordinary success of Gus Hill's production of "Mutt and Jeff," New York's best citizens, butchers, bakers and makers turn to the funny pictures in the morning newspapers to see what those two funny fellows Mutt and Jeff are up to. Nor is the habit confined to any class, creed or status of life's success. The banker, the lawyer and the judge enjoy the daily cartoons as well as his less fortunate brothers and applaud Bud Fisher's satirical humor. Millions of the best people in America have laughed at Gus Hill's company presenting Mutt and Jeff in their various plays and will continue to laugh at them as long as Bud Fisher and Gus Hill can keep the pace up. Mutt and Jeff have made four complete tours of the United States and Canada, with absolutely no sign of diminishing popularity and will continue to do so for years unnumbered. Mutt and Jeff in Collogue will not only live up to the past records of phenomenal business but will prove to be the crowning triumph of Mr. Hill's long career. All known box office records have been hopelessly shattered by the enormous popularity of this "Sure Fire" success and has been known as the "money play" for house managers and theatre owners. Mutt and Jeff in Collogue will come to the Laving next Tuesday, Nov. 26th. It was designed for laughing purposes only. There isn't a serious thought or a suggestion, in the entire show. It's mission on earth is simply to banish dull care and stir the back worm and growch. Get seats early as Mutt and Jeff in Collogue invariably plays to capacity houses and the carry bird catches the best seat.

role of the man who proves that the "ghosts" haunting an old Spanish castle are really ruthless hired by a wicked Duke. This play, by Paul Dickey and Chas. W. Goddard, was hailed on Broadway last year as one of the most unique dramatic productions in history. It certainly makes a film so utterly different that there is nothing on record with which it can properly be compared. Cecil B. DeMille directed the production, and he was supplied lavishly with every degree of talent and every physical accessory which he could possibly utilize.

"SAFETY FIRST" FOR AUTOISTS

A Few Suggestions From the Standpoint of a Railroad Man.

By Howard Elliott
Secretary Safety and Efficiency Committee, San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad.

If auto drivers were as careful as street car drivers, collisions between automobiles and trains would be as rare as those between trains and street cars. Before a trolley car crosses a steam road at grade, where there is no human flagman, one member of the crew goes forward, looks both ways and listens. If the road is clear he gives the "come ahead" signal. If, not, the car must not move until danger is past. Suggest this procedure to the auto driver and he smiles.

"Unnecessary," "A waste of time," and "Too much bother," are some of his excuses. Yet this one simple precaution would, if followed, practically eliminate the grade crossing horror. There are more and stronger reasons why the auto driver should be more careful than the motorman. The motorman is prohibited from talking to passengers. There is no such prohibition for auto drivers. The motorman must pass a rigid examination as to eyesight, hearing, steadiness of nerve and sobriety. The auto driver is subjected to no such test.

Therefore, even if the conductor did not get ahead and flag across, the motorman would still be more apt to effect a safe passage than the auto driver, who oftentimes is talking and does not have his mind concentrated on the business of driving.

Another thing. The street car employs the passengers are so many "persons." Perhaps he could not name one of them by name. If one should "sicken and die, he would not shed a tear. Yet he protects his charges with extraordinary care. The law demands it, the rules of his company require it, and his best judgment dictates it.

The auto driver's passengers are usually his kith and kin. Their lives are as precious to him as his own. If one should die, his heart would bleed. Yet he races across a railway track looking neither to right nor to left (as careful observation show a vast majority do) and then calls unreasonable and unnecessary for his adoption those precautions which street railway companies take to safeguard the lives of those in whom they have only a passing interest.

"Not Question of Cost."

It is not a matter of damages. If you think it is how much, Mr. Automobile Driver, will you take for your daughter or your son?

It is a rule of law in nearly every state in the Union that the highway traveler at a railroad crossing must look and listen effectively; that he must look and listen both ways, and that if by so doing he could have seen a train and avoided collision with it, a collision occurs, the presumption arises that he either failed to look and listen or was heedless of what he saw and heard, in either of which events he would be guilty of negligence barring recovery.

In the following states the courts hold that in addition to looking and listening the traveler on the highway must stop: Oregon, Maryland, Massachusetts, Alabama, Iowa, Wisconsin, Missouri, New Jersey, Maine, Wisconsin, Michigan, West Virginia, and California.

While the railway companies want, and what all students of the problem believe desirable, is that drivers of vehicles on reaching railway crossings shall be even more careful than appears necessary, not because any rule or law compels it, but because the love of life for themselves and others should impel them to habits of careful care.

The railway companies are taking the lead in an endeavor to eliminate accidents. In most parts of the country they represent the only organized effort to combat the evil. The Auto Club of Southern California has done a most wonderful work in placing sign posts at points of danger. It is a pity that like work cannot be done by the automobile organizations everywhere.

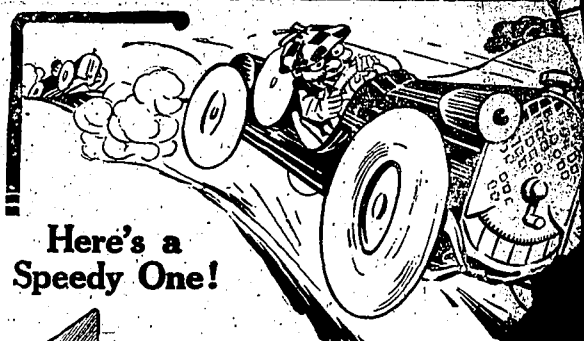

The Long Island railroad is employing vigorous tactics to bring home to the public the dangers of reckless automobile driving on Long Island. Instead of the hackneyed phrases, "Stop, Look and Listen," or "Railroad Crossing, Look Out for the Cars," or "Danger," or "Safety First," they have posted in conspicuous places all over the system large streamer signs bearing the following inscription: "This Sign May Save Your Life Today. All the precautions in the world will not save the lives of those who drive automobiles recklessly over railroad crossings. When approaching a crossing, please Stop, Look and Listen. We are doing our part. Won't you do yours?"

"Long Island Railroad."

This campaign is resulting in a great reduction in accidents. In Southern California the railways have installed at a great many crossings, wigwag or moving signals, lighted at night. They have proved very effective.

Ignore the Signals. But it is noted that many autoists ignore the signals, and at places where the railways have lowered the rates in the face of approaching trains it is not infrequent for drivers to crash through the gates before they notice that they are down. The Long Island railroad, tired of having autos driven through the gates, is now experimenting with gates made of heavy wooden spars the size of a large telephone pole. They are painted in black and white stripes to make them as conspicuous as possible.

But no system has yet been devised, or can be invented, which is " fool-proof." What should be organized at once is an "Auto Drivers' Careful Club." Its dues, few seconds' wait at grade crossings, an occasional ten-foot walk across tracks and the physical exertion of an arm swing, its benefits, long life and freedom from injury. Its motto, "More Weddings, Less Funerals."

Here is Pledge.

The Pledge: "I promise to henceforth exercise extreme care at the intersections of road and rail. On reaching a crossing, I will stop, look and listen. If there is an automatic flagman, I will look diligently both ways, whether the signal is moving or not. If there is more than one in my car, one will be appointed monitor to walk across and survey the situation. If the way is clear, the monitor will signal to "Come ahead," using the same arm movements that railway flagmen use in passing signals to the engineer. In all cases I will observe signs and signals, but in no case will I rely entirely upon them. If I do own an auto, I will be equally careful as a pedestrian, and will exert myself to secure new members of the Carrol Club of the Automobile States of America."

ALIAS SUMMONS

In the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of Idaho, in and for the county of Twin Falls.

Leona Anderson, plaintiff, vs. Arthur Anderson, defendant.

THE STATE OF IDAHO SENDS GREETINGS TO ARTHUR ANDERSON THE ABOVE NAMED DEFENDANT:

YOU ARE HEREBY SUMMONED AND REQUIRED to appear in an action brought against you by said plaintiff in the said District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of Idaho, in and for the County of Twin Falls and to answer the complaint of the above named plaintiff filed therein within twenty days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons, or if served elsewhere within forty days.

This is an action brought for a decree of divorce, dissolving the bonds of matrimony between the plaintiff and the defendant; that it be ordered by this Court that the plaintiff be adjudged and decreed to be the legal and equitable owner of the following described property, situate, lying and being in Twin Falls, Twin Falls County, State of Idaho: Lot Four (4) in Block Forty-nine (49), as the same is plotted in the official plat of Twin Falls Township and of record in the office of the County Recorder of said County, and for such other relief as the Court may seem just and equitable, as will more fully appear from the complaint hereto, a copy of which is hereto attached and herewith served upon you.

AND YOU are advised that if you answer and consent to the said plaintiff's "complaint for the said divorce," you will be bound by the same as if you had appeared in person and testified in said District Court.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

A feud has existed between Colonel Arthur Stanley and his cousin, the late Stanley, over an heirloom, the diamond from the sky, found in a fallen meteor by the latter. Also, the father of the Stanley children in England may come to an American. When a daughter is born to the colony and the mother the colonel buys a spy boy and substitutes him. Three years later the spy boy, mother, and child had part in the discovery of the diamond from the sky, and a document with the Stanley secret. Years later Hagar, son of Hagar, falls in love with Esther, Dr. Lee, the late Colonel Stanley's friend, adopts Esther, Arthur Stanley, son of Hagar, falls in love with Esther and does his companion and cousin, Blair Stanley, rightful male heir of Stanley, in stealing the diamond Blair causes the death of the doctor and tries later to put the blame on Arthur, who takes the gem. Arthur Stanley eludes his pursuers and joins Hagar, who reveals his identity and upbraids him for his wild life. Needing money, he pawned the diamond in Richmond. At a ball, at which an adventurer, Vivian Marston, wears the borrowed diamond, Hagar's spy boy steals the diamond, and to avoid detection drops it into a mail box. Arthur leaves Richmond and goes to the mountains. The diamond passes into a mail bag, picked up by Quabba, organ grinder, Quabba's monkey steals the diamond. Hagar takes Esther to Stanley hall.

Williams, the billposter, raised himself and wiped the blood that ran into his eyes from a deep cut in his forehead, held a handkerchief to the aching wound and inhaled of life, the night but still holding fast to his diamond from 126 pky.

Marmaduke Smythe also got from the burning fallen tree and the dead man beneath it and ran, forgetting his sword fears and misery at the lightning memory of this phantom of the night. The white cat from behind a cloud and dimly revealed the gray roof and dull white walls of the ranch house by the bay yard. Toward it Smythe ran wildly, and, reaching its door, he hammered furiously with both fists and, forgetting the solid component of a lifetime, screamed loudly he knew not what.

his frightened wife, holding high a lamp. Frayed and tattered, more like a tramp than a gentleman of the law, the half hysterical Englishman told his broken story of a dead man lying beneath a burning tree, and then, as though he would put the horrid occurrence behind him, the strange messenger turned and fled again. And yet for all his fright and all his panic the Englishman had clung instinctively to the deer head that had been his impediment, beloved and cherished, since the sale at Stanley hall. How long ago that was, whether days or weeks or months, Marmaduke Smythe could not have told.

"It was all a horrid nightmare," he afterward would say. "America is all right for the Americans, he would say, but it is decidedly weird, wild and murderous for a British subject to retain any desire to sojourn there. Had it not been my bounden duty as legal representative of the earls of Stanley to find the American heir I would never have visited or tolerated in such utterly impossible wilderness and crude communities, I heartily assure you."

But the worst of Marmaduke Smythe's hardships in darkest America were over: By dawn he reached a distant ranch and encountered a be-whiskered farmer driving to the nearest town. Smythe and his precious deer head rode twenty miles in more or less comfort and arrived, dusty, tattered and torn, at a fair sized city. At the straggling outskirts he picked up coverage again and then when they drove up a business street the sign "King George Route" above a somewhat middle class hostelry to haze so high standing a name made Smythe clutch the old rancher hastily by the arm.

"If you will stop here, I will absolutely thank you," he said.

The farmer stopped his horse at the curb. Smythe paid him and thanked.

CHAPTER XLII

THE WORKING OF THE CONSPIRACY.

EVER before him in the darkness the contorted face of a dead man and ever jangling in his breast the crystal and metal truncheon that cost his comrade's life! A cold sweat was on the forehead of Williams, the billposter, as he saw these things and felt these things and ever brutally lashed the wretched horse over the rough and stony mountain road in the stifling darkness.

Once he did this just as the front wheels struck a stump or boulder. The rickety wheel crashed, the wagon went over, and the man was flung out head first on the road. The spokes of the wheel the flickering lantern jolted out and the glass broke and tinkled in the road as the wagon toppled over, and the frenzied horse, relieved of his dragging burden, sprang with a flash of renewed strength and galloped off into the night in the direction of the barn. It tripped and fell heavily and lay heaving and helpless on the mountain road.

Then, cursing the deed he had done and the truncheon he had done it for, him again and crossed the sidewalk carrying his dead head trophy, also dusty and travel marked. The day clerk, loitering at the doorway, smiled at the eccentric, looking figure before him. "I have been lost in the wilderness and suffered untold hardships for a fortnight," stammered Smythe. "Could I secure a room and bath?"

Williams, the billposter, raised himself and wiped the blood that ran into his eyes from a deep cut in his forehead, held a handkerchief to the aching wound and inhaled of life, the night but still holding fast to his diamond from 126 pky.

"Sure!" said the matter of fact hotel clerk. "You can have two rooms and two baths if you pay for them." Marmaduke Smythe took off his hat, pressed it in a reverential manner to his breast, gazed at the sign at the doorway of the hotel and cried fervently, "God save the king!"

Then a dizziness overcame him, his eyes closed, and he swooned back stiffly on his heels. Hogan, the head porter, passing by with his hand truck, quickly followed the quick gesture of the clerk and ran the truck under the heels of the swooning Smythe as he fell stiffly back, still holding, however, to the deer head with a strong, tense grip. "This was Lawyer Marmaduke Smythe, out of the wilderness at last, delivered safely to a room and 'bath,' while the day clerk signed the register for him as 'Lord Savens, London, England.'"

Meanwhile in Los Angeles Esther resolutely stayed on, determined to see Arthur, despite the efforts she knew were being made by those who surrounded the injured man to prevent it. She did not trust to Vivian's promise that she should see Arthur when he was conscious or recovered. Day by day she called at the Powell mansion, as Arthur's beautiful residence was known, and day by day she received word from the impassive face of the servant that Mr. Powell could see no one.

When one day she was coldly told that Mr. Powell had been taken early that morning to a sanitarium and that his condition was critical, so far as the results of his mental injuries were concerned, but that physically he had improved.

The Conspiracy Was Revolving to Blair.

Questions concerning her, for since his physical and mental weakness had been augmented by the drugs which he used, as he thought, in secret, the whole story of Durand, De Vaux, Vivian and even Blair had been to convince him that his recollections of having seen Esther were but the manifestations of periodic insanity, caused by his injuries.

And so the soul struggles had achieved their dreadful purpose. Between their concentrated suggestion and the use of drugs Arthur had become convinced that his obsession regarding Esther was a manifestation of madness, and he grew terrified at the thought of it and endeavored to keep Esther from his mind. "How is Arthur?" asked Blair upon one of the few occasions they were alone. Blair added, "for I don't believe a word that cursed Durand says in his snug fake doctor phraseology."

"Arthur grows stronger bodily every day," said Vivian, "but his dope taking makes him a mental weakling. He writes continually, and sometimes he cries like a little child. This is who he thinks of Esther."

"Had as Blair was there was something in his blood that made such a working, soul working conspiracy revolving to him. He sprang from his seat, his face working convulsively with rage. "I'll have no more of this!" he cried.

CHAPTER XLII. In the Lion's Clutch. "YOU'RE a nice one to talk!" said Vivian to Blair. "I suppose you have this job?" And with an expressive gesture she indicated the luxurious private office of the Good Hope Oil Company, the headquarters of John Powell's oil mining and other industrial ventures which Blair Stanley, as a relative and a supposed business associate and interested capitalist from the east, had taken full charge of. Blair winced. The shot had gone home," if Arthur Stanley, as "John Powell," recovered in body and health, if he shook off the shackles of morphine and rid himself of the harpies who surrounded him, it would mean the loss of the power and authority that had become sweet to Blair. Vivian laughed as she noted Blair's changed expression. "You see," she said, "you may hate Durand and you may despise De Vaux; but after all, it was a good thing for you that Durand was present when Arthur was injured and saved his life and brought him back. Durand has played fair with you and put you in the saddle here. So it was lucky for you that he and De Vaux came to find the diamond."

"All those words Blair hears into a rage. "You shall never have that!" he cried fiercely. "The Powell million, made in oil or mines, are just as any other dirty money to me. But the diamond from the sky belongs to the Stanley alone. It came from me by man hand, but fell from the stars in a molten meteor, born of a miracle to our adventurous ancestor. If a hundred lives stand in my way the diamond shall never be the vulgar swag of thieves, but to be made marketable and hawked through the jewel marts of the world."

"Blair threw her arms around him. "Blair," she cried, "they must never have the diamond! I would suffer myself to be cut to bits rather than it should meet the abhorred fate like that!" And these two looked into each other's eyes and understood and trusted each other fully, for they both remembered the night of the Handolph ball—the first—their glances the whole story of Durand, De Vaux, Vivian and even Blair had been to convince him that his recollections of having seen Esther were but the manifestations of periodic insanity, caused by his injuries.

"The big blow" of Santley's stupendous circus, as its proprietor would say, was undoubtedly Mrs. La Belle, the Lady of Lions, Splinters, the clown, was a big hit too. But La Belle's act with the three great Nubian lion Lancelot was the "blow-off." It was the last act on the bill and was the worst of the worst practices of the show, but La Belle was new to the show this season, and Splinters was her husband. She was bold and handsome, and Splinters, the clown, was famed with many a bitter pang of jealousy through her coquetry—to mildly describe it.

Sam Santley, proprietor of Santley's stupendous circus, was what was known as a working boss. Through devious ways—luck at gambling and by the exercise of shrewd practices—he had gained his way from card shark to ownership of a show that bore his name. Santley personally supervised his own show from big top to cook tent. He acted as ringmaster and announcer, while the lion was on.

When Sam Santley published his call for show people in the amusement journals there was one line that always was in the advertising. This line read: "Boozers and chancers do not write. You will be lost a minute." Translated from circus jargon this Delphic utterance meant that drunkards and male flirts were not endeavor to join with Santley's circus. The reason of this was that had Santley attempted to employ these matters of Bacchus and Venus himself.

He sold beer to the "graffers" and "inkers" and "razorbaks"—that is, the sure thing gamblers and pickpockets, grafters, the crooks and rippers. And the dandies and men and other employees, razorbaks. "But when there was hard drinking to be done with that show Sam Santley did it himself and got murd and then suddenly drunk only to be up more or less red eyed and trembling and yet alert and on the job when the big tops went up on the lot the following morning. And as for the indescribable man in the evening, Mr. Santley also monopolized the fair. Wee to any of his circus people who transgressed the bounds of strict morality with his show! But with himself it was another matter, and Sam Santley looked with longing eyes on La Belle, the Lady of Lions.

"The show had reached Los Angeles, playing up through Lower California and the Texas border. Business looked good, and Sam Santley himself walked from the performers' entrance of the big top highly pleased with himself and would be generous in the performers' entrance. La Belle, the Lady of Lions, had given him a smile. Splinters, the clown, had seen it, and his face had contorted in jealous hatred under his blamut makeup. Then Sam Santley had strode to the "privilege" tent, which he had advertised men and the followers of the circus generally met for social converse when "on the lot." When the performance was going on in the big tent there was a lull for the grubbers, door talkers and shill-bears, not to mention the plate board, cane and dull rock men and other purveyors of amusement out of and in the side shows. This lull was taken advantage of by dropping into the "privilege" tent for bottled beer and perhaps a brief "massage" or two at craps. All these things paid Sam Santley. He sold the bottled beer at a profit, and no temporary game of craps was so short but what the official "pass picker" swept in Mr. Santley's percentage.

"At the entrance of the "privilege" tent Sam Santley, in his ringmaster's costume, is accosted by a grimy, stammering, shaking man in a stained and tattered suit of paste marked overalls. "What's the matter with you? Get out of the way!" growls Santley. "The creature before him moistens his lips and mumbles: "I am Williams, boss—Jack Williams. I was out with the bill posting outfit, don't you remember?" "Why aren't you-out with it now?" snarls Santley. "Got drunk, I suppose, and quit the job cold, and now you're here with a hangover pandulating. Get off the lot before you're kicked off. As for any money, you don't get a jitney. 'Beat it!"

"But listen, boss. I wasn't drunk; I didn't quit. I walked a mile like a crazy man. A tree fell on the wagon in the woods way back in the interior and killed Ben Burk and the horse and smashed the wagon." "Come in and tell me," interrupted Santley, for the loss of a horse and bill posting wagon was something to worry about. That Burk had been killed did not matter much. Bill posters cost nothing. It is different with horses and wagons.

Then, seeing Williams was shaking as with ague, Santley ordered a drink of whisky from his private stock for him. Williams gulped it down and told his story as best suited him. But he said no word regarding the trumpery that had perhaps been the real cause of the death of Burk the bill poster and the loss of the horse and wagon.

A game of craps attracted Santley's attention after he had made a mental calculation that after all the horse was a powdered old bit of crew belt and Santley shrank and sprang forward, and just then the clown, Splinters, standing behind him, drew a pistol from his pierrot garb and shot the man through the back.

"The lion's head drew away, bearing the diamond with it to the edge, and a hand reached for it. And then the crowd surged into it, screaming in horror, and Arthur and Esther were torn from each other by the human wave."

"Then a loud cry of horror rose, and the vast audience heaved as a wave heaved, for the lion had sprung and the woman ere her smirk could change to a look of fear and had struck her down and with his cruel claws spat her fair bosom and tore away the gleaming jewel there."

Santley shrieked and sprang forward, and just then the clown, Splinters, standing behind him, drew a pistol from his pierrot garb and shot the man through the back. "The lion's head drew away, bearing the diamond with it to the edge, and a hand reached for it. And then the crowd surged into it, screaming in horror, and Arthur and Esther were torn from each other by the human wave."

"Couldn't Be Flattered. "Oh, go away! I don't want any insurance. Don't try to jolly me—I'm not affected by flattery. I'm not that kind of a man. Why?" "You're right," interposed the agent. "The minute I found your name on my list I decided to call on you at once. It is sickening to have to keep calling on men who expect you to jolly them and praise them and flatter them and try to make an impression on them. It isn't done by any business house in the regular course of business, so why should it be done by agents? My dear Mr. Gronch, we need great such men as you. We need them everywhere. Just what I thought," interposed the agent. "The minute I found your name on my list I decided to call on you at once. Just what I thought," interposed the agent.

"A hundred dollars at the outside is the loss," thought Santley to himself. He always had been lucky at dice. The cynical idea occurred to him that he might here in a brief moment recoup this loss. He drew a roll of bills from his pocket, tossed a $100 note on the crap table and growled, "Why shoot for chicken feed?" Raged, unkempt, without a dollar in his pocket and realizing Santley would absorb himself from any way that might be one him, owing to the loss of the horse and wagon, the miserable billposter eyed the hundred dollar banknote hungrily. Instinctively his hand searched his clothes, and instinctively and as if drawn by fate the wretched man brought forth the diamond from the sky. Santley eyed the chain and locked curiously. He thought how it would adorn the fair throat of the coquette, La Belle, the Lady of Lions. "I shoot a hundred bucks against the junk!" he growled, and tossed the die to Williams. The necklace with the great diamond clattered to the table. Williams selected the die with trembling hand and rolled them along the table top. "Come seven!" he gasped and snatched the thumb and finger of the casting hand. "The die rolled, panned, spun, rocked and settled. Two aces were uppermost. A losing first throw!"

Santley chuckled, swept the stakes up in his hairy paw and laughed hoarsely at the chafy faced, trembling, wretch who had lost the greatest that he had reached up from the knees of murder for—the diamond from the sky! "That night it blazed upon the breast of a false woman. That night Splinters, the clown, crept in the cage of Lancelot, the lion, and whispered into his ears the secret, and the lion nodded as though he understood. The next day Quabba learned through a fellow countryman, the gardener at the Powell mansion, that John Powell had not been taken to a sanitarium to cure his illness. In fact Quabba learned that physically Mr. John Powell had so far recovered that at the doctor's order he could now be taken out, and in order to divert him his friends were to take him to the circus that afternoon.

Esther received the information late and had arrived and entered the arena when the performance was well under way. At the end of the aisle, near where she sat, and at the edge of the hippodrome track was the private box containing Arthur, Blair, Vivian, Durand and De Vaux. All eyes were turned upon the arena, where Santley was announcing the thrilling and sensational act to follow: "La Belle, the Lady of Lions, and Lancelot, the superb untamed Nubian king of beasts."

Esther crept slowly down by the box to speak to Arthur when suddenly all in that box rose to their feet with a gasp of astonishment, for they on the breast of the woman in the lion's cage gleaming and dazzling in a shaft of sunlight, blazed the diamond from the sky.

"Then a loud cry of horror rose, and the vast audience heaved as a wave heaved, for the lion had sprung and the woman ere her smirk could change to a look of fear and had struck her down and with his cruel claws spat her fair bosom and tore away the gleaming jewel there."

Santley shrieked and sprang forward, and just then the clown, Splinters, standing behind him, drew a pistol from his pierrot garb and shot the man through the back. "The lion's head drew away, bearing the diamond with it to the edge, and a hand reached for it. And then the crowd surged into it, screaming in horror, and Arthur and Esther were torn from each other by the human wave."

"Couldn't Be Flattered. "Oh, go away! I don't want any insurance. Don't try to jolly me—I'm not affected by flattery. I'm not that kind of a man. Why?" "You're right," interposed the agent. "The minute I found your name on my list I decided to call on you at once. It is sickening to have to keep calling on men who expect you to jolly them and praise them and flatter them and try to make an impression on them. It isn't done by any business house in the regular course of business, so why should it be done by agents? My dear Mr. Gronch, we need great such men as you. We need them everywhere. Just what I thought," interposed the agent. "The minute I found your name on my list I decided to call on you at once. "A hundred dollars at the outside is the loss," thought Santley to himself. He always had been lucky at dice. The cynical idea occurred to him that he might here in a brief moment recoup this loss. He drew a roll of bills from his pocket, tossed a $100 note on the crap table and growled, "Why shoot for chicken feed?" Raged, unkempt, without a dollar in his pocket and realizing Santley would absorb himself from any way that might be one him, owing to the loss of the horse and wagon, the miserable billposter eyed the hundred dollar banknote hungrily. Instinctively his hand searched his clothes, and instinctively and as if drawn by fate the wretched man brought forth the diamond from the sky. Santley eyed the chain and locked

Coffee. What's this coffee worth? How much good feeling in a pound of it? And what's that worth? What is coffee worth without it? It's not the price that counts, but what you get for it—that is why Schilling's Best Coffee is economical. It is packed evenly ground in airtight tin, ready for use and moneybacked. Schilling's Best.
