THE COST OF INTERVENTION

An army of 600,000 men; a cost of $2,000,000 a day; a total of $450,000,000 the first year; almost certain loss of 250,000 Americans by death or injury in battle and by typhus fever; that, say our experts on Mexican affairs, will be the result of any American attempt to intervene in Mexico—to invade and occupy that country," says the Salt Lake Telegram. "For invasion means occupation; were defeat of the scattered bandit bands by the handful of United States troops along the border will not bring peace to the country; the mountains and valleys must be policed to prevent the descent of new brigands from their secret fastnesses.

"The bulk of the army of intervention must be volunteers, for the 25,000 regulars now on the border are practically all that can be spared for duty in Mexico. Experts expect half of such a volunteer army to disappear in the first six months—and they set six months as the probable length of a campaign of conquest.

"Typhus, Smallpox and Yellow Fever will be the three worst foes. Men stricken with typhus at noon are often dead before night. And because northern Mexico has no clean water supply, danger of scores of diseases is always present."

Those newspapers and politicians who cry for intervention in Mexico fail to count the cost of that experiment, but military men, whose business it is to anticipate such things are unanimous in their opinion that intervention could only result in tremendous loss in both life and resources. President Taft, who steadfastly opposed intervention and who had access to the advice of the United States board of strategy, pointed this out forcibly several times in speeches. A military writer in Leslie's Magazine, some months ago showed that the total cost of intervention in money could not be less than $400,000,000.

One phase of the Mexican situation frequently ignored by politicians and not realized by soap box statesmen, is the extreme patriotism of the Mexicans. There is no doubt that Huerta provoked the expedition to Vera Cruz, and had not the South American countries intervened and the march to the interior been obstructed, he would have rallied the whole people behind, which is what he undoubtedly planned. The letters of Carranza and Villa published at the time both show that they would have joined him in fighting us. Carranza said so bluntly and Villa diplomatically. "Of course Huerta would have been eliminated but he would have gone out as a national hero, with the hope of being recalled. No man can for a moment stand in Mexico as an assistant of an invading army. This is natural and would occur in almost any country. It may be recalled that at the time of the breaking out of the civil war, Secretary of State Seward desired to reunite the country by provoking a war with England and France.

THE PROGRESSIVE DISPERSION

The proposed entrance of Charles Van Deusen as a candidate for the position of state treasurer on the Democratic ticket is significant as showing that the movement away from the Progressive party is not all in the direction of the Republicans, as one might judge from the headlines of the Republican press. Those Progressives who followed Roosevelt in the campaign of 1912 solely for personal reasons and who believed in the essentials of the Republican platform will naturally gravitate back to that organization; in fact, they all did so in 1914, except a few politicians. But there was a large element that was dissatisfied with the policies of the Republican party and who left it rather on account of the principles enunciated in the Progressive platform and because of the principles omitted from the Republican platform. These men are standing out or tending toward the Democratic party as it becomes apparent that any union between the Republican and Progressive parties must be substantially along standpoint lines.

The Progressive party, insofar as it was not purely a personal party, was the result of the fight made in the senate and the house by the band of "Insurgents" led by LaFollette in the upper house and Vic Murdock of Kansas, in the lower. The primary demand of these men was for a lower tariff rate, and they first raised their voices against the Payne-Aldrich tariff. LaFollette did not join the Progressive ranks but thousands of his followers did, and Murdock became an active leader. The home of the followers of these men is naturally in the Democratic party, unless the Republican national convention is willing to go the whole way in meeting their demands and is willing to nominate candidates who are sincerely in favor of their principles.

It is, therefore, not surprising that men of the stamp of Van Deusen, convinced that the Republican party will never meet the requirements, turn to the Democrats instead of waiting to be either "delivered" by the Republican party leaders at Chicago, or to be compelled to assume the attitude of bolters, should the Progressive convention decide to swallow the standpoint program at Chicago.

Personally, Van Deusen has endeavored himself to the people of this state by his fearless exposure of graft which led to the cleaning up of the state house, and will command thousands of Republican votes on that score, if nominated.

WHERE DO THE PEOPLE COME IN?

It appeared perfectly natural for the more public spirited individuals to look askance on the Poratello conference held some time ago, and to assert that the gathering was held for the purpose of furthering the wishes and chances of leaders of the Republican party in the state, thus forestalling the purposes of the primary law.

Like some eyes were turned towards Lewiston, especially from South Idaho, to get the purport of that gathering. The difference between the two, Poratello and Lewiston, was not in the purpose but merely in the degree of power and influence represented. The Lewiston representation was lacking in influential representation or a single leader of consequence. The Poratello gathering was of the influential in Republican circles and it will be supreme. There is danger in both—the old danger of substituting the wishes of the bosses for the desires and choice of the masses. Such meetings of politicians are sometimes extensively advertised, but the matters of discussion and agreement are practically secret.

The truth concerning the purposes of both gatherings appeared in the accusations and opinions bandied back and forth between the northern and southern sections of the state. Northern politicians accused the south in making a choice of one man in the south part of the state for the nomination for governor. The south made the same accusation against the north.

As the methods and intent of both meetings were identical, and political bosses, distasteful and menacing swords, neither side can equal if the other wins, for both were in disregard of the desire of the people of the state and the people will reject both.—Grange Free Press

Above is a picture of W. H. Miller of Gooding, Idaho. It is evident he believes in getting the utmost use of his car, and that he knows it will make good. This is the first Dodge car to come to Idaho and it has now been run over thirteen thousand miles over all kinds of roads in ten months, as Mr. Miller purchased it in March 1915. We wish that you could have a heart to heart talk with Mr. Miller, and let him tell you of the marvelous service this car has given.

You will find this satisfaction with every one who drives a Dodge Brothers' car. The Dodge Brothers' car has made good from the very first. This is very evident from the fact that Dodge Brothers have gone to fourth place in the production of automobiles and right now there is considerable speculation in the motor world regarding what place Dodge Brothers will occupy before the end of 1916 as it is known that several new buildings are being rushed to completion and that the total floor space of the plant will total more than 60 acres when these buildings are completed, making it one of the very largest factories of any kind in the world.

Let us prove to you the power and the sturdiness of the Dodge Brothers' car by a demonstration different from any other you have ever had.
