Suspect arrested in shooting of man outside T.F. bar

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

A shooting outside a popular Twin Falls bar was preceded by a disagreement about colors in a possible gang-related fight.

Rodolfo Antonio Ortega, 23, of Wendell, allegedly shot another man in the leg with a 9mm semiautomatic handgun on Sunday in the parking lot of Woody's sports bar and grill. He faces up to 30 years in prison for aggravated battery with a firearm enhancement.

night by Boise police on charges of resisting officers, carrying a weapon while intoxicated, and having an open container. He was arraigned Thursday in Boise on the Twin Falls charges, according to the Ada County Jail, where he was held on $251,000 bond.

Media reports helped authorities nab their suspect.

A Boise police detective called local police on Wednesday saying he arrested someone who might be the Twin Falls shooter, according to court

DISHING UP A SETTLEMENT

MEAGAN THOMPSON/Times-News

C.R. Larsen, owner of Ground Round bar and grill in Twin Falls, cooks up lunch orders Wednesday. Larsen's insurer awarded $270,000 to the family of Edward D. Coats, who was killed in a June 2007 traffic accident involving a customer of the restaurant.

Local-control plan or controlling the locals?

Tax issue circulates in House though little has changed

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

BOISE — What has changed since a year ago, when a controversial plan to amend the Idaho Constitution to expand local-option taxing authority died on the Senate floor?

After all, the fall elections kept the political makeup of the 105-member Legislature virtually unchanged.

For starters, it depends on who's talking.

Senators, House members, lobbyists, staffers and city officials are divided about the Legislature passing local-option legislation. But most agree passage of a bill hinges on one thing — an amendment to place local-option taxing authority in the state's Constitution.

"They say I can bring just about anything with a constitutional amendment but I can't bring anything without a constitutional amendment," said John Watts, a lobbyist with the Idaho Chamber Alliance working with legislators and various groups to craft an agreement.

Local-option taxes, if approved by voters in cities or counties, allow governments to charge extra sales tax and use the extra revenue for their own purposes.

The debate revolves

Bar's insurer pays DUI victim's family $270,000

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

The family of a man killed almost two years ago by a drunk driver won $270,000 from the insurer of a local bar and grill.

The lawsuit filed by Edward D. Coats' widow and children ended in a substantial settlement, which probably wouldn't have happened if the case went to trial, says C.L. Larsen, owner of the Ground Round in Twin Falls.

Coats died after his vehicle was hit by a drunk driver, Sam Naranjo, on State Highway 50 by the Hansen Bridge on June 8, 2007.

Naranjo's insurer, Allstate, paid the Coats family $50,000, and Naranjo was also locked up for eight to 15 years for vehicular manslaughter.

But the family sued the Ground Round anyway, claiming it was negligent for serving Naranjo alcohol before the crash.

"Naranjo left the Ground Round ... At which time he was intoxicated to the point that his coordination and vision were impaired, and his ability to drive a motor vehicle safely was dangerously impaired," according to the lawsuit filed more than a year ago in Twin Falls.

Larsen, however, disagreed, and said he wanted to fight the lawsuit, but his insurer settled the case last week despite his desire for a trial.

"I wasn't at fault," said Larsen. "I don't think I should have been sued."

Larsen says Naranjo was not acting drunk or visibly impaired at the Ground

Round, where he ate a large portion of nachos, a cheeseburger and fries and drank two 33-ounce "schooners" of beer.

But in court records, Naranjo said he drank three of the large glasses.

Larsen said employees that served Naranjo were not reckless or grossly negligent in serving him.

According to an investigator for Larsen's defense, Naranjo left the bar at 4:30 p.m. and the crash happened at 4:42 p.m. The same investigator's report said that for Naranjo to blow a blood-alcohol level of .22 on an administered sobriety test, he must have consumed more alcohol than what he was served at the Ground Round. The legal limit for driving is a blood alcohol content of .08.

Empty beer cans were also found in Naranjo's vehicle, according to the

Rep. Hartgen wants to extend phone harassment laws to Internet

Hartgen said the bill — his first as a freshman legislator — would simply modernize Idaho statutes as the Internet permeates daily lives by prohibiting online contact that's intentionally annoying, threatening or offending. He cited a 2006 case in Missouri — in which a 13-year-old girl committed suicide after receiving online taunts from a woman posing as a teenager on MySpace — that prompted the state to update its laws.

"It seems to me we have a hole in our approach where the technology has gotten ahead of our legal structure," he said. "My attempt here is to bring the statutes into the modern world."

Under the proposed bill, first-time violations would garner a misdemeanor and up to a year in jail.

Subsequent violations would be felonies punishable by up to five years in prison.

In related news, Hartgen told the House State Affairs Committee he's scrapped a proposal to require bloggers and Internet posters to use real

Several wrecks but few injuries Thursday afternoon

Times-News

Two car crashes in north Twin Falls Thursday afternoon caused only minor injuries at most to a handful of people, but drew onlookers from packed nearby roads.

The first, called in to Twin Falls Police at 1:13 p.m., was caused when the driver of a Chevrolet extended-cab pickup truck failed to yield when crossing Pole Line Road, Staff Sgt. Dennis Pullin said. The truck was headed south from Costco to Target, and was hit by an eastbound red Oldsmobile four-door sedan driven by Ernest Crawford of Filer.

Twin Falls police and fire officials investigate a crash Thursday in the parking lot of Target on Pole Line Road. The truck, background, failed to yield and collided with the car. Only minor injuries were reported.

ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News

The collision caused the truck's back end to spin around, hitting a cement median in the Target parking lot and flipping the entire truck on the driver's side, Pullin said. The pickup driver was not injured, but

F&G blames wolf packs for decline in big game

The Associated Press

BOISE — Idaho Fish and Game officials say the state's wolf population is moving south and getting into trouble.

Fish and Game Director Cal Groen told the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee that Idaho's estimated 824 wolves are impacting the state's deer and elk population.

He says big game populations are decreasing by as much as 15 percent a year. Without the wolves, Idaho's deer and elk herds would be increasing 7 percent a year.

Groen says the wolf packs have become overcrowded and wolves have begun to kill each other.

Federal Endangered Species Act protections were nearly lifted from the predators in the northern Rocky Mountains in January; the decision is currently under review by President Barack Obama's administration.

State officials say Idaho needs to be able to manage the wolf population through hunting to protect the state's big game animals.

investigator's report, but it's unknown when the beers were consumed, and Naranjo testified that he did not drink alcohol after leaving the Ground Round.

Larsen said he feels his rights were trampled, and was forced by his insurer to settle. "We were basically told we didn't have a choice."

Larsen also said his insurer advised him there's a good chance a conservative jury would have ruled in favor of the Coats family, and settling was the most secure resolution.

Larsen said there's never been a fight at the Ground Round, which has a loyal breakfast, lunch and dinner crowd and sells more food than it does beer and wine.

The lawsuit caused Larsen to lose business, he said.

Larsen said he's sympathetic to the family's loss but doesn't think the crash was his fault.

"This was a tragedy," Larsen said. "(But) raking over our business doesn't bring a father or a husband back."

Coats' widow, Bonnie, declined to comment.

names, after it drew national attention and ridicule.

"After receiving many thoughts and submissions on that I decided not to introduce that," he said. "I think people blogged about that almost everywhere from between Maine to Hawaii."

Regarding the harassment proposal, the committee agreed to give the bill a hearing and expressed support for Hartgen's concept but was concerned over the mechanics of the idea.

"If someone calls me on the phone and harasses me, that's different than if they decide to post the same thing online, so I'm concerned if that should be outlawed," said Rep. Raul Labrador, R-Eagle, an attorney.

The generation gap of the Legislature surfaced when Hartgen, 64, agreed to forgo putting into law the names MySpace, Facebook, Friendster and Twitter as "internet posts."

Only one lawmaker on the committee volunteered the appropriate name.

"They're called social networking sites," said Rep. Brent Crane, R-Nampa, a 34-year-old who maintains a Facebook profile.

Hartgen said public officials would be fair game still and the change would not violate the First Amendment because harassing speech is not protected. He told the Times-News afterward that he has consulted with the attorney general's office.

Shooting

records. "(Boise police) Detective Lee told me that he had heard of the shooting and the description of the suspect from a news report," according to court records.

The shooting may be gang-related, but authorities said they're still investigating motive.

A witness to the Twin Falls shooting told police that two men were exchanging phone numbers until they began fighting and a gun fired, according to court records.

Another witness told authorities the two men displayed different colors to each other — red and black — and then one punched the other before a gun fired, court records show.

Some criminal gangs associate themselves with different colors, but Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loebs said he doesn't know if the shooting was gang-related.

"We have the same type of problem we have had for a number of years," Loebs said about gangs. "It's not getting any more serious."

Ortega was arrested in Boise with a gun and ammunition, and bullets were also found at the Twin Falls shooting scene, according to court records.

"The ammunition (from Twin Falls) matched with the ammunition recovered from the Boise arrest of Ortega," court records show.

The shooting victim is recovering from his injuries and was released from a local hospital.

Loebs expects Ortega to be brought to Twin Falls within the next 14 days.

Center to be checked out. The accident temporarily closed eastbound Pole Line down to one lane.

The second crash, called in at 2:46 p.m., again involved a vehicle crossing traffic — this time at Cheney Drive and Blue Lakes Boulevard. A smaller car failed to yield at the stop sign on Cheney and pulled out in front of a Jeep sport-utility vehicle headed south, Pullin said.

The two occupants of the car and the three of the other vehicle were all transported to St. Luke's, Pullin said. Only one had a minor injury. Three were children who were all buckled into car seats, he said.

Most names of those involved in the wrecks weren't available as of 5:15 p.m.

Taxes

around using the possible local tax money for transportation, which local governments and chambers of commerce support. In Twin Falls, it could mean an extra one-cent tax on every dollar to help offset the costs of its daily population doubling during weekdays. There have been some exemptions to the local tax restriction, namely for resort towns. But the issue has been gridlocked since the 1970s.

One bill introduced this year lacked the constitutional amendment and is considered dead. Another circulating the hallways without a constitutional amendment would require a 60 percent majority vote in the local sales tax elections. There's also talk of a bill for the 60 percent majority, not the two-thirds support required by House leaders. It also carries the constitutional amendment requirement.

A third possibility is the bill that stalled in the Senate last year. It would require a constitutional amendment — but local votes must be held in November; they must pass with two-thirds support; and any linked municipalities must get approval. So, for example, if Filer and Buhl want to share local-option taxes, voters in both cities must approve.

A constitutional amendment requires two-thirds approval in both chambers, plus a simple majority from Idaho voters.

Battle lines have already been chosen among Idaho's legislators.

On one side is the House, where the majority GOP leaders remain committed to an amendment. House Tax committee chairman Dennis Lake, R-Blackfoot, has said he won't hold a hearing on a bill without the provision. That feeling is shared by House Speaker Lawrence E. Denney, R-Midvale.

"You can't get it passed without it," said House Majority Leader Mike Moyle, R-Star, who said he doesn't want one but his caucus does.

On the other side is almost half the Senate and some leadership members, who oppose an amendment. Last year, after the amendment passed the House 51-19 but stalled on the Senate floor, many blamed the Senate for delaying local-option taxing.

Senate Majority Leader Bart Davis, R-Idaho Falls, said Tuesday the rules should be in a statute, not an amendment. But he knows others in the 35-member chamber might think otherwise.

"Why should I withhold the ability for local government to be able to govern how they best think they should," he said. "The Senate and House were never on the same page."

Watts said the Idaho Chamber Alliance does not support a constitutional amendment, a position shared last year by the Association of Idaho Cities. The Idaho Association of Counties supported one.

GOP legislators haven't indicated they've changed their stance, and new House members support the amendment rule. Rep. Stephen Hartgen, R-Twin Falls, said local-option taxes are regressive, would drive consumers out of town and are a form of taxation without representation.

"The last time that happened, a lot of tea got thrown into the water," Hartgen said.

One reason rural legislators want to change the Constitution is the concern that redistricting in 2010 will allow urban legislators to change code to make local-taxes even more likely, said Jim Weatherly, a retired Boise State University political scientist professor.

Rep. Leon Smith, R-Twin Falls, was the only Republican last year to side with the 18 Democrats in opposition to the bill. They support expanding local-option authority but oppose the constitutional amendment.

Smith said he'd be surprised if a bill passed this winter. "I personally don't think we'll have enough choices (when it comes to the economy), so we'll have a bloodletting and go home."

All this spells difficulty for cities pushing the issue. Twin Falls recently formed a long-term capital improvement plan but decided to rely on local-option taxing revenue for all road upgrades.

At Monday's Twin Falls City Council meeting, Councilman Lee Heider said after attending a recent AIC meeting, "the Legislature seems fairly agreeable" to local-option taxing.

'Hokey Pokey's' amazing journey from Idaho to fame

Thirteen years after his death, Larry Laprise's innocuous little song continues to roil controversy ...

Laprise, a musician who lived most of his life in Ketchum and Wendell, wrote "The Hokey Pokey" in the late 1940s to perform for the apres-ski crowd at a club in Sun Valley ...

Fortunately he had the wit to copyright the music in 1950, for a full-scale transatlantic controversy about the origins of the ditty has been raging for 20 years ...

Many in the United Kingdom are convinced that the familiar musical invitation to "shake it all about" is in fact British folk song ... They call it "The Hokey Cokey" ...

Now according to The Sunday Times, a national British newspaper, the Catholic Church and politicians in Scotland have warned that belting the song can get the singer arrested because it contains a sinister, sectarian message ...

That sure would have amazed Laprise, who was Catholic ...

The Scottish Catholics claim the ditty was really composed by Puritans during the 18th century to mock the language and actions used by priests at Latin Mass, and could be hijacked by bigots ...

Like fans of the Rangers, a Glasgow professional soccer team with a notably brutish coterie of supporters ... They've been banned from singing sectarian songs at the club's stadium ... Politicians have urged the police to arrest anyone caught singing the song under legislation on incitement to religious hatred ...

"This song does have quite disturbing origins ... It was devised as an attack on, and a parody of, the Catholic Mass," Peter Kearney, a spokesman for the Catholic Church in Scotland, told the Times ... "If there are moves to restore its more malevolent meaning then consideration should perhaps be given to its wider use." ...

The church claims the title derives from "hocus-pocus." ... The term is said to ridicule the words used by priests during communion, "hoc est enim corpus meum," or "this is my body" ...

Laprise claimed the idea for the song came from a similar song his father used to sing in French when Laprise was growing up in Detroit during World War I ...

"It goes back a long ways ... It's been handed down over the years," Laprise told the Times-News in 1992 ... "We just put English words to it and changed the tune to suit the group" ...

At the urging of friends, Laprise and the other two members of his trio, Charley Mason and Taft Baker, went to Salt Lake City and recorded "The Hokey Pokey" in 1949 ... The three earned a living playing at the Sun Valley Resort until 1965, when the new owners of Sun Valley canceled their contract and Laprise went to work at the Ketchum post office ...

With his wife Donna, Laprise moved to Wendell to care for their disabled daughter in 1973 ... He lived there until his death in 1996 ...

At about the same time, stories began to circulate in the UK that during World War II, a Canadian officer suggested to British band-leader Al Tabor that he write a party song. "The Hokey Pokey" came from an ice cream vendor whom Tabor had heard as a boy, calling out "Hokey pokey penny a lump. Have a lick make you jump" ... Music publisher Jimmy Kennedy reneged on a financial agreement to promote and publish it, and finally Tabor settled out of court, giving up all rights to the number ...

The only copyright belonged to LaPrise, and until the day he died he received royalty checks ...

And that's what it's all about ...

Design phase of Filer sewer project begins

By John E. Swayze
Times-News correspondent

FILER — The city of Filer is ready to start the design phase of a $12.5 million sewer project voters approved in 2006.

Representatives from Zenon Environmental Inc., a division of General Electric in Ontario, Canada, met with city officials and J-U-B Engineers Wednesday to sign a $1.3 million contact agreeing to supply components for a membrane bioreactor.

A membrane bioreactor is an expandable 5- to 15-acre facility that breaks down wastewater and filters out pollutants using a series of membrane filters and ultraviolet irradiation. Remaining solids are compacted and dried for disposal and treated water is suitable for irrigation or groundwater recharge.

"The process of engineering and drawings in the design phase actually starts today," Mayor Bob Templeman said. "These should all be completed by Sept. 1 and contractors then have 30 days to review designs and bring back construction bids."

Once bids are opened and a contractor is selected, construction of the physical plant is expected to begin on Nov. 1 and near completion toward the end 2010.

Approximately $4.6 million of the original bond amount is also earmarked to replace seven miles of deteriorated sewer collection line extending from U.S.

Highway 30 to North Street and Fair Avenue to Stevens Street.

John E. Swayze may be reached at 208-326-7212 or swayzef@aol.com.

ISDB closer to self-governance with proposed legislation

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

BOISE — The State Board of Education introduced legislation Thursday that would create the Bureau of Educational Services for the Deaf and Blind to oversee and manage programs offered by the Idaho School for the Deaf and the Blind in Gooding.

The move — part of an ongoing transfer of responsibilities away from the State Board — would essentially make the school independent of the board, said State Board Executive Director Mike Rush. A volunteer board of directors, essentially a school board of trustees, would be created and oversee the school and its programs.

Rush told the Senate

Education Committee the change would make the school operate more like the Idaho Digital Learning Academy, which provides services statewide but also specialized programs to individual districts.

Rush said the State Board would continue to oversee rulemaking for the school. He said the bill does not target closing the school, and there is likely no fiscal impact.

"We think it offers some significant advantages for governance," he said.

The committee voted to give the bill a hearing.

Rush said administrators at the school in Gooding are supportive of the change.

Man charged with murder still not mentally competent

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

An elderly man accused of shooting his estranged wife and killing her much younger boyfriend last summer along a quiet residential street in Jerome still isn't competent enough to stand trial, but that could change in 90 days.

Fortino Leon, 73, is charged with first-degree murder for the July shooting of Javier Zavala-Paniagua, 22, outside a residence at 221 Fifth Ave. E.

He's also charged with aggravated assault for shooting his estranged wife, Maria Leon, 41.

Leon was committed in November to the Idaho Department of Correction Security Medical Program to restore his competency, and Idaho Department of Correction officials are saying that might happen in another 90 days.

"While Mr. Leon has exhibited some progress, it is the opinion of the treating staff that he continues to lack the ability to participate in his own defense, and such, is not competent to stand trial at this time," according to a Jan. 29 letter from IDOC to 5th District Court Judge Jason Walker.

Leon's defense team on Thursday asked Walker to seal the IDOC letter from the public, but Walker declined to do so.

Young children watched the summer shooting while playing outside, and a neighbor said he tried to stop Leon from driving away.

Walker set Leon's next status hearing for April 16.

Woman testifies in E. Idaho torture case

POCATELLO — An eastern Idaho woman took the stand to describe the beginning of a 15-year relationship with a man accused of torturing her over a period of nearly four months near the end of the relationship.

"He was charming," the 49-year-old woman testified on Wednesday in Idaho's 6th District Court. "After awhile, he started telling me that people saw me having sex with (other men). I was incredulous. I would deny it."

She said the relationship with Jose Manuel Sanchez turned into psychological and physical coercion within a few months after meeting him.

Sanchez, 61, has pleaded not guilty to 112 counts of felony aggravated battery — one count for each day he is accused of torturing the woman.

He is accused of coming to the woman's home in the evening and burning the woman's genital region and buttocks with a wood-burning tool.

The woman testified Wednesday that Sanchez told her of injuries that could happen to her if she weren't careful.

"He told me his wife wanted to kill me and eventually she probably would," she said, the Idaho State Journal reported.

She said that Sanchez told her there were shadowy groups watching her, and that in early 1993 she received a letter in Spanish. She had Sanchez translated it, and the letter said she was to shave off all her body hair and write "666" on her stomach.

"I believed it was from one of the clandestine groups," the woman testified, saying she complied with the shaving directive for six months. "I thought they had the power to do whatever they wanted to do to me and get away with it."

She testified that Sanchez told her he found pieces of meat at her back door and in her mailbox, and that she found a piece of meat on the steering wheel of her car.

She said Sanchez told her that the meat was a message that she was "dead meat."

When asked why she didn't contact the police, she testified that Sanchez told her the clandestine groups were above the law.

"I thought the group behind it was higher up than the police," she said.

Among other unusual occurrences, she said, was finding a fresh animal skin under her bed.

"It was wet skin with membranes and blood," she said.

The woman said Sanchez eventually became physically abusive, kicking and hitting her to get her to confess to promiscuity.

"I'd cry and ask him not to hurt me," she said.

The woman's daughter contacted Chubbuck police last year, and Sanchez was arrested on Dec. 22 at the woman's house.

Officials find 15 dead horses near Emmett

EMMETT — Authorities are investigating a case involving 15 dead domestic horses found on federal land in southwest Idaho.

Officials with the Bureau of Land Management say the horses were found in recently about six miles southwest of Emmett, each with their brands removed to fluster efforts to identify an owner.

Lee Kliman, BLM enforcement ranger, says the horses may have been released alive, but failed to fend for themselves in the wild.

Kliman also says the challenging economic conditions, rising feed prices and a slow market resale may be forcing some owners to make difficult decisions.

It's not the first time domestic horses have been found abandoned on public land. BLM officials say at least 17 domestic horses have been turned out in southwest Idaho in recent weeks.

Those responsible can face state and federal criminal charges.

Idaho Senate approves wolf transfer bill

BOISE — The Idaho Senate voted 31 to 1 for a plan to offer the state's wolves to the rest of the country.

The bill's sponsor, Moscow Republican Sen. Gary Schroeder, told the Associated Press this is a way to protect the state if it is sued over killing wolves.

Idaho can kill or move wolves south of Interstate 90 if they are causing problems. Schroeder said the state should be sure no other state wants the wolves before killing them.

The predator was almost removed from the endangered species list in January but that action was put on hold after President Barack Obama said he wants to review executive orders, such as delisting the gray wolf, put into place by former President George Bush.

Legislative leaders leery of using federal cash

BOISE — The leaders of the Idaho House and Senate say they are poised to turn down federal stimulus money if there are too many strings attached to using it.

During a luncheon hosted by the Idaho Press Club on Thursday, Senate President Pro Tem Bob Geddes and House Speaker Lawrence Denney also said they intend to balance the state's budget without relying on federal stimulus money.

Denney, a Midvale Republican, says it wouldn't be wise for the state to use one time money to fill an ongoing economic problem.

Geddes, a Soda Springs Republican, says he is unaware of any effort to lobby Congress to make sure Idaho gets its fair share.

Both lawmakers say Idaho shouldn't be hamstrung by federal rules that force states to use temporary cash infusions to expand programs that could cost more in the future.

Legislative leaders don't want to raise taxes

BOISE — The top Republicans in the Idaho House and Senate say raising taxes is not an option for helping the state survive economic turmoil.

During an Idaho Press Club luncheon on Thursday, Senate President Pro Tem Bob Geddes and House Speaker Lawrence Denney said lawmakers are clearly facing tough budgetary choices. But they warned that increasing taxes could cause the state's recession to be longer and deeper than anticipated.

Geddes, a Soda Springs Republican, says the struggles facing ordinary Idaho citizens is more difficult than those facing state government.

Denney, from Midvale, says taking money out of citizens pockets would only make matters worse.

As of Dec. 31, tax revenue came in about $100 million less than a year ago. Tax revenue for January has not been released, but state officials say it will fall short of projections.

sion in remote Alaska villages.

"It was nothing less than sexual and cultural war on Alaska Natives and native people," John C. Manly of Newport Beach, Calif., a lawyer for the plaintiffs, told a news conference Thursday.

According to the lawsuit, Jesuits known to be pedophiles were sent from around the world to the Fairbanks Diocese in Alaska and, along with some of their employees and volunteers, committed child abuse ranging from fondling to rape in the hamlets of Nulato, Hooper Bay, Stebbins, Chevak, Mountain Village, Nunam Iqua and St. Michael.

The lawsuit now has 63 plaintiffs and dozens more may be added, Manly said. He also said the world head of the Roman Catholic Society of Jesus had been served in the United States with court papers naming him as a defendant.

In addition, The Rev. Francis E. Case, who retired last year as secretary or second-ranking official of the order and now lives at Seattle University, was added as a defendant in the 112-page amended lawsuit filed this week in Bethel, Alaska.

He's accused of covering up abuse by priests.

In a deposition taken in May for a different child abuse lawsuit against the Jesuits, Case told Manly that as provincial he tried to keep such matters from becoming public to protect the "reputation" and "the good name of the society."

Infant who survived Tenn. tornado grows up fast

By Joe Edwards
Associated Press writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — A year after a firefighter found him thrown into a muddy field by the tornado that killed his mother, toddler Kyson Stowell is getting ready to celebrate his second birthday.

His incredible survival was one of the most comforting stories to emerge from the misery caused by a string of tornadoes that killed 59 people and splintered homes and businesses in five Southern states last Feb. 5.

"God just saw fit for Kyson to be in our lives," his grandmother Kay Stowell said.

The blond-haired, blue-eyed occasional mischief-maker will have cake and ice cream for his second birthday on Feb. 16, an event that's as heartwarming as it is improbable.

Rescuers found Kyson face-down and motionless in a rural field northeast of Nashville strewn with splintered lumber, couches and toys, about 100 yards away from his mother's body. But the infant was OK, needing only two days of hospital treatment for scrapes and a collapsed lung.

Now, Kyson's talking, and he likes four-wheelers and dump truck toys. He watches videos about a little brown bear and the alphabet. And, at 33 inches tall and 28 pounds, he's big enough to occasionally get himself into trouble.

"The other day he got in the refrigerator, found some eggs and dropped them on the floor," Stowell recalled with a chuckle. "He loves scrambled eggs; he wants them every day."

Stowell thinks he has little memory of the tornado, which brought winds to the area reaching 165 mph.

"One time a storm was coming and he said 'boom boom' and kind of grabbed at me," Stowell said.

But if there's a positive to be gleaned from the storm and its aftermath, Stowell wants Kyson to see it. After well-wishers filled her sunroom three times over with clothes, toys and other gifts — some from as far away as Australia — she donated some of it to others affected by the tornado.

"We want to teach Kyson to help people and stick together in tragedy," she said.

Kyson Stowell, 11 months, is held by his grandmother, Kay Stowell, at a hospital in Nashville, Tenn., in this Feb. 7, 2008, photo. Kyson was found in a field about 100 yards from where his house had been, after a severe storm went through Castalian Springs, Tenn., His mother, Kerri Stowell, was killed.

Air Force One: Obama's 'spiffy ride'

By Mark S. Smith
Associated Press writer

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Suffice to say, President Barack Obama likes his new ride.

"It's pretty nice," he told House Democrats Thursday in an after-dinner speech here. "Thank you for giving me a reason to use Air Force One."

The president spoke after a 31-minute maiden voyage on the specially outfitted 747 that will be his airborne home and office for the next four years.

Moments before taking off from Andrews Air Force Base, Obama visited the press cabin in the rear of the plane to show reporters his Air Force crew launch jacket, his name stitched on the breast.

"What do you think about this spiffy ride?" he asked reporters. "It's not bad."

It's the kind of impression the massive blue-and-white plane makes wherever it goes.

The flight from to Williamsburg, Va., was a brief one. Just time enough for an onboard meal of a cheeseburger and fries, according to aides.

The purpose of his maiden journey outside Washington was to push his economic rescue package through Congress, a telling choice for a president who took office at a time of deep economic uncertainty.

"He's saying that he's willing to go anywhere and talk to anybody in order to get a recovery and reinvestment plan that moves this economy forward," press secretary Robert Gibbs said.

Departing from the South Lawn, Obama broke from tradition as he boarded Marine One, the presidential helicopter. He seemed to stun the Marine standing at attention by reaching out to shake his hand. The Marine obliged, shaking the president's hand before returning to a steady salute.

If push comes to shove, cut state pay

Let's say you're a $35,000-a-year math instructor in Idaho who's been in the classroom for 10 years. You have enough seniority and the subject you teach is enough in demand to make it unlikely you'll lose your job even if the economy gets much worse.

But cuts — big ones — are coming, and some of your teaching colleagues won't keep their jobs.

That will have implications for you next year, as well. Class sizes will be larger and preparatory time reduced. And shorter staff will make it harder to prepare students for make-or-break standard achievement tests.

So would you favor cutting your own paycheck — maybe as much as 10 percent — to keep other teachers in your school working?

That's the question many of the 53,000 teachers and other public employees in the state will likely soon face.

There's sentiment building among House Republican leaders for cutting paychecks as an alternative to more layoffs. Senate Republicans — and most members of the budget-writing Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee — are more skeptical, but there's little doubt that lower-than-expected state tax collections will require significant additional reductions.

Public schools are already on the hook for $62 million in cuts, under a plan endorsed by both Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna and Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter, but that's probably optimistic. The state's other big-ticket agency — the Department of Health and Welfare — has been hit even harder.

The wild card in this discussion is how much more of the state's three rainy day funds lawmakers are willing to tap. The governor called for spending just 35 percent of the $390 million in reserves; most lawmakers think using up at least 50 percent will be necessary.

There are some think-outside-the-box ideas in play, including a year's delay in expanding the grocery-tax credit, saving $15 million.

But if it comes down to the choice between layoffs and pay cuts for public employees, we agree with House Republicans.

For starters, trimming thousands of jobs in a state that already runs a fairly tight ship would devastate public services and ruin small school districts. And even if the economy turns around on a dime, those services couldn't be restored for years.

It would be much less painful to revive state workers' pay over several years.

This is conversation that must include state employees, and it must start soon. Decisions about what and how much to cut will be made in a matter of weeks.

Idaho is out of easy options for dealing with this faltering economy; only a range of painful alternatives remain.

Let's make the best bad choice we can.

Obama needs the GOP; here's why

WASHINGTON — When Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi announced in early January that there would be no mid-February recess for Congress unless the giant economic stimulus bill demanded by Barack Obama were on its way to the White House, she accomplished two things.

On the positive side, she clearly signaled to Republicans that delaying tactics could cost them vacations and campaign time in their home districts. But conversely, her hard line was a tacit green light to her fellow Democrats to ram the staggeringly expensive piece of legislation through, whatever objections the GOP raised.

DAVID BRODER

Last week the $819 billion tax and spending bill passed the House with all but 11 Democrats supporting it and not a single Republican voting yes. The first important roll call of the Obama presidency looked as bitterly partisan as any of the Bush years.

It was not for lack of effort on the part of the new president. Obama visited Republican and Democratic lawmakers, and even encouraged the Democratic draftsmen to scrap a couple of egregiously irrelevant spending programs they had penciled into the bill.

But the complaint I heard from Republicans was that Pelosi and her lieutenants, committee chairmen Charlie Rangel and David Obey, had used the tight timetable and their control of legislative procedures to block virtually all efforts to open the bill to compromise.

In the floor debate, Rangel and Obey rebutted the claim. Nonetheless, there are compelling reasons to hope that Senate consideration of the bill is far more open, even if that means spending more time than Obama and the Democrats would prefer.

This bill is almost certain to be the biggest if not the last weapon the government employs to halt the sickening economic slide that has gripped the country. So much is uncertain, and so much is riding on it, that it's worth taking time to try to get it right.

Professional economists have raised questions that are anything but frivolous about its design. Martin Feldstein, a top Reagan adviser, has questioned the efficacy of the current menu of tax cuts and spending proposals to generate consumer demand and produce jobs. Alice Rivlin, who played a similar role for Bill Clinton, has called for a sharper focus on short-term job growth as distinguished from slow-acting steps for energy independence or health care quality. Even the Congressional Budget Office has challenged how quickly this massive infusion of dollars will be felt in family budgets and the marketplace.

Beyond these policy challenges, there are political considerations that make it really important for Obama to take the time to negotiate for more than token Republican support in the Senate.

Nothing was more central to his victory last fall than his claim that he could break the partisan gridlock in Washington. He wants to be like Ronald Reagan, steering his first economic measures through a Democratic House in 1981, not Bill Clinton, passing his first budget in 1993 without a single Republican vote. The first way leads to long-term success; the second foretells the early loss of control.

This vote will set a pattern for Obama, one way or the other. He needs a bipartisan majority because harder ones await when he turns to energy, health care and entitlement reform.

The good news is that Obama can find such support in the Senate, if his allies are smart in the way they handle the bill and allow Republicans, including Mitch McConnell, Lamar Alexander, Chuck Grassley and John McCain, to have a real voice in reshaping it. And then the dozen or so House Republicans who wanted to vote yes before the process turned ugly will finally be able to do so, when the bill comes back to the House.

What Obama can't allow is for Majority Leader Harry Reid to become impatient and force a showdown or pull the bill off the floor, as Reid did with immigration reform in the last Congress. So much is riding on this — both substantively and politically — it's worth taking the time to do it right.

Why Constitution is no place for local-option taxes

As the citizens of Idaho feel the ever-increasing burden of property taxes, they are seeking other alternatives to fund local needs. Because property taxes have generally been the only viable option for residents to finance street maintenance, sewer and water systems, school improvements, etc., the state Legislature is looking at ways to grant limited local-option taxing authority to local citizens.

This authority would permit the residents of a city or county to consider other tax options — such as a small local sales tax — in lieu of additional property taxes. The issue is usually not more taxes, but which type of taxes best fits the needs of the people.

The main debate in the Legislature has turned to whether to grant this authority through statute or by amending the state Constitution, which would require a two-thirds vote from both the House and the Senate, then go before the people in a general election. All agree that a constitutional amendment is not required, but by placing the provision in the Constitution, future legislatures will find it very difficult to ever rescind the local-option taxing authority or change the requirements for its implementation. Idaho's 2009 Legislature can thereby insure that its preferences and priorities are binding on all legislatures in the future. However, the notion that today's lawmakers are better equipped to make responsible decisions than future legislators is unwarranted.

With no sure way to predict Idaho's future circumstances and needs, locking the provisions of a local-option tax in the Constitution could easily result in unforeseen consequences. To illustrate, let us project ourselves, for a moment, thirty years into Idaho's future, and consider a few scenarios:

• Imagine the Treasure Valley with over 2 million residents. Rapid growth has left the valley's highway system extremely inadequate.

Instead of raising property taxes to fund road improvements, the people of Ada and Canyon Counties vote by a 90 percent majority to implement a half-cent-per-gallon local option fuel tax so that visitors to the area will help pay for the roads they are using. (This is already being done in neighboring states such as Nevada and Oregon.) Can't do it. The constitutional amendment provides only for local-option sales tax — it never anticipated the changing times and circumstances. The 2039 Legislature is powerless to provide an exception unless it keeps modifying our state Constitution.

• Imagine that McCall is the tourist capital of Idaho in 2039. Out-of-state investors have pushed local real estate values beyond reason and the citizens would like to pass a local-option sales tax strictly designated to reduce property taxes. The Legislature would like to permit certain qualifying communities to pass a 1 percent sales tax by a 60 percent supermajority, on condition that the sales tax provide direct property tax relief to the residents. Can't do it. The constitutional amendment calls for a two-thirds supermajority no matter what other restrictions may apply — even if it is used to immediately reduce property taxes.

There are future events that haven't even been imagined by Idaho's 2009 legislators. To suppose that they can somehow control those unknown events by misusing the Constitution to impose their limited understanding on future lawmakers is indeed unwise.

Certainly local-option sales taxes do not come without risks. Decisions to implement such taxes should be made responsibly and infrequently. But local control is a conservative principle long treasured by Idaho citizens. People reserve the right to manage their own communities without excessive legislative interference.

I respect the good intentions of those who seek to protect future generations with a constitutional amendment, but I am putting my trust in tomorrow's citizens to govern themselves.

Since 2001, Republican Brent Hill of Rexburg has represented Madison and Fremont counties in the Idaho Senate, where he chairs the Local Government and Taxation Committee.

Obama: Act now on stimulus

Senate struggles for a compromise

By David Espo
Associated Press correspondent

WASHINGTON — In an uncertain reach across party lines, Senate moderates struggled for a compromise on economic stimulus legislation Thursday as the government spit out grim new jobless figures and President Barack Obama warned of more bad news ahead.

With partisan tensions rising, several Republican attempts to remake the bill — with higher tax cuts, lower spending and fresh relief for homeowners — failed on party-line votes.

"This is the moment for leadership that matches the great test of our time," Obama said Thursday night as the Senate plodded through a fourth day of debate on the legislation at the heart of his economic recovery plan. Earlier, he declared, "The time for talk is over. The time for action is now."

The president added he would "love to see additional improvements" in the bill, a gesture to the moderates from both parties who were at work trying to trim the bill with a newly recalculated, $937 billion price tag.

After fitful, secretive talks lasting well into the evening, the would-be compromisers remained shy of agreement, and Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., announced they could have another day to work at it.

Sen. Claire McCaskill, D-Mo., said the group was discussing reductions in the bill in the range of $100 billion or more and expressed optimism about the outcome. No details were available. A roster of $88 billion worth of cuts was circulating Thursday, almost half of which would come from education grants to states, with an additional $13 billion in aid the local school districts for special education and the No Child Left Behind law on the chopping block as well.

But the group is also hoping to add perhaps $25 billion in infrastructure projects.

Increasingly, the events that mattered most were not the long roll calls on the Senate floor, but the private conversations in which the White House and Democratic leaders sought — either with the support of a large group of centrist lawmakers or without them — to clear the bill.

Either approach remained a possibility for the Democratic leadership. One path could lead to passage with as few as 60 votes, the minimum needed, while the other presented the opportunity for a larger bipartisan success for the young administration.

"As I have explained to people in that group, they cannot hold the president of the United States hostage," said Reid, D-Nev. "If they think they're going to rewrite this bill and Barack Obama is going to walk away from what he is trying to do for the American people, they've got another thought coming."

Republicans countered that neither the president nor Democratic congressional leaders have been willing to seek common ground on the first major bill of the new administration.

"We're not having meaningful negotiations. ... It's a bad way to start," said Sen. John McCain of Arizona, Obama's opponent in last fall's presidential campaign.

In an Associated Press interview, he said Obama "gave the Democrats the leeway to basically shut out Republicans starting with the House and now here in the Senate, and I don't think that's good."

Octuplets' mom battled depression

WHITTIER, Calif. (AP) — The veil of secrecy octuplets' mother Nadya Suleman shrouded herself in for more than a week was lifted Thursday with the release of public documents showing that the 33-year-old struggled with depression for years until she finally began to realize her childhood dream of having a huge family.

Suleman, who now has 14 children, told doctors she battled with depression for years after she was injured in a riot in 1999 at the state mental hospital where she worked.

The doctors' reports were included in more than 300 pages of documents released to The Associated Press by the state Division of Workers' Compensation on the same day NBC released excerpts of Suleman's first interview since giving birth last month. Among other things, the documents reveal that Suleman collected more than $165,000 in disability payments between 2002 and 2008 for an injury she said left her in near-constant pain and helped end her marriage.

Meanwhile, Suleman told NBC what her mother and others have said since the octuplets were born: that she always wanted a huge family to make up for the isolation she felt as an only child.

"That was always a dream of mine, to have a large family, a huge family," she said. "I just longed for certain connections and attachments with another person that ... I really lacked, I believe, growing up."

In the interview — scheduled to air on the "Today" show Monday and again Tuesday on "Dateline" — Suleman calls her childhood "pretty dysfunctional."

In the state report, however, doctors indicate she had a happy childhood. She told them she was an above-average high school student, enjoyed being a cheerleader, had many friends and stayed out of trouble. She said her parents were loving and supportive. As an adult, however, she said she often battled depression as she struggled to get pregnant and particularly after her injury.

In the report, Suleman told a doctor she had three miscarriages. Another doctor disputed that number, saying she had two ectopic pregnancies, a dangerous condition in which a fertilized egg implants somewhere other than in the uterus.

James W. Lewis is seen in federal court in Kansas City for a hearing on charges unrelated to the fatal 1982 Tylenol poisonings to which he had previously been linked.

FBI takes sudden new interest in 'Tylenol Man'

BOSTON (AP) — James W. Lewis has a habit of getting into trouble. And a knack for getting out of it, too.

He was charged with killing and dismembering a man in Kansas City, Mo., in 1978, but the case was thrown out. He was jailed on rape charges decades later in Massachusetts, but went free when the victim refused to testify.

And while authorities in Chicago have long suspected Lewis was responsible for the deadly 1982 Tylenol poisonings, the only thing they ever pinned on him was an extortion attempt against the maker of the pain reliever. No one was ever charged in the seven cyanide deaths.

Now the FBI says there are new leads in the Tylenol case and on Wednesday seized a computer and boxes of files from Lewis' Boston-area home. The mysterious and sudden flurry of activity has raised hopes of a long-awaited break in the sensational 26-year-old case.

"Up until yesterday, I thought this would never be solved in my lifetime or ever," said Jack Eliason, whose sister, Mary McFarland, a 31-year-old mother, died after swallowing poisoned Tylenol.

Exactly why investigators have suddenly taken so much interest in the self-proclaimed "Tylenol Man" is unclear, but the FBI cited advances in forensic technology, along with publicity and tips that came in around the 25th anniversary of the crime in 2007.

Authorities have refused to release any further details of the investigation, including the whereabouts of Lewis, who is in his early 60s.

In a space of three days beginning Sept. 29, 1982, seven people who took cyanide-laced Tylenol in Chicago and four suburbs died. That triggered a national scare and a huge recall, and eventually led to the widespread adoption of tamperproof packaging for over-the-counter drugs.

The MADOFF list

Celebrities aren't the only victims

By Adam Geller
Associated Press writer

NEWYORK — The scope of Bernard Madoff's alleged fraud is detailed in 162 pages of minuscule type — a list of the disgraced money manager's once-trusting customers, including a bevy of the rich, famous and powerful.

In between, though, are all the others — the names you've never heard. A retired teacher from the San Francisco Bay area. An emergency room doctor in Oregon. A carpenter from upstate New York. Thousands of mostly ordinary people, until now all but overlooked. Their voices reveal the true toll of Madoff's scheme, one that cannot be measured in dollars alone.

To do so, would overlook the anger, despair and silent shame they share.

"My wife says, 'keep yourself busy and get your mind off it,'" said Alan English, a Florida business owner whose life savings were lost to Madoff. "But how can I take my mind off something that has destroyed my whole life?"

English is one of thousands of Madoff customers whose names were made public late Wednesday in a filing with the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Manhattan, and serves as testament to the sweeping nature of Madoff's alleged $50 billion fraud.

The list includes scores of famous names, from Hall of Fame pitcher Sandy Koufax, to World Trade Center developer Larry Silverstein to actor John Malkovich and CNN host Larry King.

But on a list with 13,000 entries, they are the exceptions. Run a finger down the list and what's most noteworthy is that so many of the Bernard Madoff's client list was made public late Wednesday by the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Manhattan. Not everyone on the list is a victim, but the file demonstrates Madoff's far reach.

English was thrilled.

The son of a shoe salesman, who grew up in a one-roomed apartment in Brooklyn, English had carved out a comfortable middle-class life after building a successful personnel agency on Wall Street. He and his wife, Rita, raised two daughters on Long Island.

It was Madoff money that helped English realize a dream of selling his business and moving to Pembroke Pines, Fla., where he bought his dream home and started a small woman's clothing business.

It was Madoff money that made him feel secure about retiring after back pain and an arm injury meant English could no longer work.

Now, after nearly two decades of investing with Madoff, English says he has lost everything. His last statement said he had $1.25 million. "Phantom money," he snorts, angry as much at the regulators as Madoff himself. English has filed claims and is working with an Internet support group to hire a lawyer, but he holds out little hope of ever getting much money back.

"I feel like my whole life has fallen apart," he said. "Forty years of working and saving all that money, and there's nothing there."

names are people who might be just another neighbor or co-worker or friend.

They are people like Dr. Bonnie Sidoff, 56, an emergency room physician in West Linn, Ore. Years ago, her mother told her if she ever wanted to invest some money, she couldn't do much better than Bernie Madoff. Evelyn Rosen had never met Madoff personally, but in her circle of Florida country club friends, having money with the New Yorker was "considered an honor," Sidoff said Thursday.

So when Rosen died in April 2006 at the age of 80, her daughter left the $100,000 or so in her account with Madoff. Not only that, she took the money her mother left her in other accounts and invested that with Madoff.

In December, the day before the Madoff scandal broke, Sidoff and her husband Mike, both emergency room doctors, wired another $150,000 for Madoff to invest. The day after they learned the devastating news, the couple received a letter confirming the deposit.

"That was pretty heart-breaking," Sidoff said.

An analysis of the list shows that the people come from 44 states and at least 40 countries, from the Cayman Islands to Kenya to Switzerland. Florida has nearly 2,200 entries.

Not everyone on the list was a Madoff victim; some ended up in the document simply because they are lawyers or accountants whose clients are connected to Madoff, for example. Some had no dealings with Madoff whatsoever. But the sheer volume of the list demonstrates the reach of Madoff's world.

Bob Finkin, a lawyer from Queens, is one of the victims.

Finkin, who is 80, said he lost $350,000 of his own money with Madoff. But his family's foundation lost nearly $2.5 million, money that would've been used to support drug rehabilitation and mental health programs.

As a young lawyer, Finkin said he was introduced to Madoff in 1966 by a wealthy friend at a gathering at a local hospital.

Finkin's investment started out with $10,000, but then over the years "it grew, grew, grew." Seeing his personal investment's success, Finkin decided to entrust the family foundation to Madoff. As recently as August, he gave Madoff an additional $500,000 in foundation money to invest.

"And along the way, we felt comfortable with him," he said. "I laugh at it."

English, 65, never met Madoff personally, but everyone he knew on Wall Street vouched for the investor. So when a business partner arranged for him to invest with Madoff's firm,

Tamarack's future uncertain

Still no pact to keep resort afloat after March 1

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Lenders led by investment bank Credit Suisse Group and the court-appointed receiver running Tamarack Resort in north-central Idaho have yet to agree to a renewed cash infusion needed to keep the resort afloat after February. Lawyers on Thursday described talks over the resort's financing as "challenging."

A state court judge did give tentative approval to a plan to use more than $2 million remaining from a $10 million October bridge loan from the Zurich-based bank to fund operations until the end of this month. The money is left over because winterizing unfinished resort property didn't cost as much as previously anticipated.

At troubled Tamarack, once hailed as America's newest all-season resort but now mired in foreclosure lawsuits, skier visits have hit just 27,000 this year as the national economy falters and snow conditions have been less than optimal, leaving the resort with an operating deficit of $304,000 as of Jan. 23, more than the $133,555 deficit anticipated two months ago by San Diego, Calif.-based receiver Douglas Wilson Co.

"The operative part of the ski hill has proven to be more of a loss than the lender previously anticipated," Liz Walker, an attorney for Credit Suisse, told 4th District Judge Patrick Owen during Thursday's hearing.

Tamarack didn't provide last year's skier figure. By contrast, the Bogus Basin ski area near Boise had 179,138 skiers through Tuesday, 3,000 more than last year.

Tamarack is currently being run by the receiver after majority owners Jean-Pierre Boespflug and Alfredo Miguel ran out of money from a $250 million syndicated construction loan, then failed to make repayments. Credit Suisse, which is working on behalf of holders of the loan, says it's now owed more than $270 million.

Work on the resort's centerpiece Village Plaza ground to a halt last year, tennis stars Steffi Graf and Andre Agassi bolted from a luxury hotel project and banks foreclosed on a conference center and employee housing at the site.

Douglas Pahl, a Portland, Ore.-based attorney for Douglas Wilson, told the judge that the inhospitable market for resort real estate and deepening global recession have made discussions over securing funding for Tamarack difficult.

"So far, we've not been successful in reaching an agreement on a longer-term budget" with Credit Suisse, Pahl said, adding that to be prudent, the receiver has modeled a range of options from March onward, ranging from full operation to a "shutdown scenario."

In a post-hearing interview with The Associated Press, Douglas Wilson, the receiver's chief executive officer, reiterated that no decision has been made to shutter Tamarack, which includes private real estate, a golf course, ski hill and other sporting amenities on Lake Cascade about 90 miles north of Boise.

IDAHO

Developer will pay for dumping storm water

BOISE — Federal officials say an Idaho developer will pay more than $47,000 for illegally dumping storm water into a tributary of the Middle Fork of the Payette River.

The Environmental Protection Agency announced the fine Thursday against Craig Frame, a developer based in Crouch, a small mountain town north of Boise.

The EPA accused Frame of illegally discharging storm water runoff from his Silverado Pines Subdivision construction site into Dry Creek, which empties into the Middle Fork of the Payette River.

Jim Werntz, the agency director in Idaho, says failing to control construction site storm water can seriously damage Idaho's waters. Excessive sediment is blamed for choking fish and damaging fish habitat.

EPA investigators also accused of Frame of failing to apply for, and operating without a discharge permit, a violation of the Clean Water Act.

UTAH

Bill would get rid of immigrant driving cards

SALT LAKE CITY — A state lawmaker wants to get rid of driving privilege cards for undocumented residents.

Rep. Stephen Sandstrom, R-Orem, says the measure, House Bill 137, isn't meant to punish immigrants, but rather to protect Utahns from national security threats.

The driving cards were created in 2005 and let undocumented residents get auto insurance and drive legally without using false identification. The cards require no proof of citizenship to obtain, but can't be used as official identification.

Tony Yapias, director of Proyecto Latino de Utah, says it's a bad year to get rid of the cards because the state will lose the revenue it gets when the more than 40,000 card holders renew each year.

Agency denies request to protect 165 species

SALT LAKE CITY — The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on Thursday turned down a request to provide endangered species protections for 165 plants and animals — including 85 that live in Utah — but said another 39 in the West might qualify.

The agency was responding to a 2007 petition by WildEarth Guardians, an environmental group asking that more than 200 species in 14 states be protected under the Endangered Species Act.

Included in the request were beetles, flowers, mountain snails, fish and other species.

"For most of these species, we really were not provided much information at all," said Diane Katzenberger, a spokeswoman for the agency in Denver.

Typical petitions offer details about species' population, habitat and threats, she said. In some cases, the petition included only the name of a species and little else, she said.

But Jay Tutchton, an attorney for WildEarth Guardians, said it shouldn't be necessary that the initial request provide a complete record of a species they believe needs protection. He also said that even though there's scant information on some species, the fact that they're rare should prompt the federal government to consider protection.

Watchdog: U.S. Treasury overpaid for bank stocks

Banks starting to pay dividends on federal investments

By Jim Kuhnhenn
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The federal government overpaid for stocks and other assets in attempting to help financial institutions last year, a government watchdog said Thursday, taking further issue with the beleaguered $700 billion rescue program.

Elizabeth Warren, chairwoman of the Congressional Oversight Panel for the bailout funds, told the Senate Banking Committee on Thursday that Treasury in 2008 paid $254 billion and received assets worth about $176 billion.

The figures were reached by extrapolating the results of a study of 10 government transactions, comparing the price paid by Treasury and the value of the asset at the time of purchase. Warren did not present details of the transactions the panel analyzed. A full report will be Still, lawmakers and watchdog groups continued to express frustration with the implementation of the rescue plan, known as the Troubled Asset Relief Program. Referring to overpayment on assets, Warren said Treasury has failed to specify its goals and methods in helping more than 300 institutions. "There may be good policy reasons for overpaying, but without a clearly delineated reason we can't know that," Warren said.

Idaho regulators sue investment company

IDAHO FALLS — State regulators have filed a civil lawsuit against two men claiming they defrauded an eastern Idaho woman of $295,000.

The Idaho Department of Finance filed the lawsuit late last month in 7th District Court.

The lawsuit says Tyree Mackey of Driggs and Jeremy King of Lehi, Utah, misrepresented an investment opportunity they offered Elsie Wach through Millennial Financial Group. State officials say the two men failed to disclose that the money would be used for their personal benefit.

Finance Department Investigations Chief Jim Burns says the state stepped in to prevent others from investing with the two men. The lawsuit alleges violations of anti-fraud provisions of the Idaho Uniform Securities Act.

Sho-Ban Tribes to re-evaluate casino plan

FORT HALL — The Fort Hall Business Council is re-evaluating plans to build a new $90 million casino and resort near the existing Fort Hall Casino.

The Shoshone-Bannock Tribes have already secured $35 million for the project, which included a convention center, hotel, golf course and water park. But Council spokeswoman Liberty Toledo said council members are concerned about taking on a huge debt during the economic downturn.

Toledo says the council will consider its options during a meeting on Feb. 17.

She says a resort is still the ultimate goal, but the timing may be different than originally thought.

NEW JOBLESS CLAIMS EXCEED EXPECTATIONS

New jobless claims jump to 626K, Idaho to release figures next week

By Christopher S. Rugaber
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — New jobless claims jumped far more than expected last week in an already dismal labor market, and there's no relief in sight for workers as mass layoffs persist.

The Labor Department reported Thursday that the number of newly jobless workers seeking benefits rose last week to a seasonally adjusted 626,000, from the previous week's upwardly revised figure of 591,000 — far more than analysts' expectations of 583,000.

That's also the highest since October 1982, when the economy was in a steep recession, though the work force has grown by about half since then.

The numbers reflect the large spate of layoffs announced last month by companies from all sectors of the economy, including Caterpillar Inc., Pfizer Inc. and Microsoft Corp.

Idaho Department of Labor will release county and statewide jobless claims next week — labor officials say they expect to see an increase, but stopped short of saying just how high that number could climb.

Economists expect the government to issue a grim report today that will show the unemployment rate rose to 7.5 percent in January, up from 7.2 percent in December. That would be the highest rate in 17 years.

The housing slump and financial crisis have hammered spending by businesses and consumers, sending the economy into a recession that is expected to continue until at least the second half of this year.

The recession's impact was visible in other economic data Thursday. Factory orders fell by 3.9 percent in December, the Commerce Department said, a record fifth straight drop.

For all of 2008, orders for everything from autos to computers to food rose by only 0.4 percent, the weakest showing since orders

Stores see January sales fall

Analysts expect continued decline in coming months, but Wal-Mart posts rise

By Anne D'Innocenzo
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Shoppers grappling with rising layoffs and shrinking retirement accounts dug deep into survival mode last month, leading to sharp January sales declines for many retailers. The poor results raised more concerns about the financial health of the industry.

The malaise crossed the spectrum of retailing, from department stores to teen chains. Gap Inc., luxury retailer Saks Inc. and Children's Place Retail Stores Inc. were among those posting deeper-than-expected sales declines.

Wal-Mart, the world's largest retailer, was a notable exception, reporting sales that beat Wall Street's forecast, as shoppers continued to focus on necessities like groceries.

To raze, or not to raze — local preservationists say there is no question

Rumors spread like wildfire around downtown Twin Falls that one of the city's two historical preservation organizations planned to restore the old Red's Trading Post building located at Second Avenue East and Shoshone Street.

Not true, say members of both the Twin Falls Historical Preservation Commission and Preservation Twin Falls Inc. "The Red's Trading Post building is a spectacular old building, but I don't think that restoring it is anything more than talk," said Russ Tremayne, a member of the nonprofit group Preservation Twin Falls Inc.

He added that the group does not have the money to buy the building or restore it.

Paul Smith, a retired attorney who volunteers as the chairperson for the commission, also said he does not know of any specific plans to restore the building.

Both Smith and Tremayne expressed a desire to preserve the old building, which is one of the few remaining lava-rock structures in downtown

Twin Falls. The building's colorful past includes time as bar, a flourishing brothel and eventually a trading post and gun store.

"It's already on the Historical Registry, but the city doesn't have to ask permission to tear it down," Smith said.

City officials purchased the building last year for $200,000, and said they plan to raze the building as part of a four-block redevelopment project.

KMVT to move ahead with digital transition: President Barack Obama signed a bill into law Wednesday that pushed the digital television transition from Feb. 17 to June 12.

However, KMVT will continue as planned.

"We intend to continue toward the DTV transition on February 17," said Lee Wagner, general manager of KMVT.

Running both digital and analog signals costs television broadcasters more money because they must lease two signals — a "few hundred dollars" more per month for KMVT.

Moreover, Wagner said that the analog equipment at KMVT is outdated.

"I'm not sure it would last until June 22," he said.

Army reports jump in suicides

Count may surpass deaths in combat

By Pauline Jelinek
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The Army is investigating an unexplained and stunning spike in suicides in January. The count is likely to surpass the number of combat deaths reported last month by all branches of the armed forces in Iraq, Afghanistan and elsewhere in the fight against terrorism.

"In January, we lost more soldiers to suicide than to al-Qaida," said Paul Rieckhoff, director of the Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans of America. He urged "bold and immediate action" by the departments of Defense and Veterans Affairs.

According to figures obtained by The Associated Press, there were seven confirmed suicides last month, compared with five a year earlier. An additional 17 cases from January are under investigation.

There was no detailed breakdown available for January, such as the percentage of suicides that occurred in Iraq and Afghanistan or information about the dead. But just one base — Fort Campbell in Kentucky — reported that four soldiers killed themselves near the installation, where 14,000 soldiers from the two wars have returned from duty since October.

Some Fort Campbell soldiers have done three or four tours of duty in the wars. "They come back and they really need to be in a supportive environment," said Dr. Bret Logan, a commander at the base's Blanchfield Army Community Hospital. "They really need to be nourished back to normalcy because they have been in a very extreme experience that makes them vulnerable to all kinds of problems."

Officials said they did not know what caused the rise in suicides last month and that it often takes time to fully investigate a number of the deaths. "There is no way to know — we have not identified any particular problem," said Lt. Col. Mike Moose, a spokesman for Army personnel issues.

Yearly suicides have risen steadily since 2004 amid increasing stress on the force from long and repeated tours of duty in Iraq and Afghanistan.

The service has rarely, if ever, released a month-by-month update on suicides. But officials said Thursday they wanted to re-emphasize "the urgency and seriousness necessary for preventive action at all levels" of the force.

Labor pick deals with husband's tax problems

Labor Secretary nominee Hilda Solis became the latest Cabinet nominee to face questions about unpaid taxes Thursday as a Senate panel abruptly postponed a scheduled vote on her confirmation.

The postponement came after revelations that Solis' husband settled tax liens on his California auto repair business this week that had been outstanding for as long as 16 years.

The discovery posed another political headache for a White House already chafing after tax problems and other controversies derailed some administration appointments, including former Sen. Tom Daschle's nomination as health secretary. President Barack Obama pledged in TV interviews this week that he would "make sure that we're not screwing up again" in the vetting process.

White House spokesman Robert Gibbs insisted that Solis' own tax returns "are in order."

"She's not a partner in that business," Gibbs said. "So we're not going to penalize her for her husband's business mistakes."

Asked if the Solis nomination was in trouble, Gibbs said, "I don't believe it is at all."

USA Today first reported Thursday that Los Angeles County records showed 15 outstanding state and county tax liens totaling $7,630 against Sam Sayyad and his business.

White House spokesman Tommy Vietor said Solis and Sayyad were unaware of the liens until asked about them this week. He said Sayyad paid about $6,400 to Los Angeles County on Wednesday to settle the liens, but he plans to appeal.

Administration gearing up to slash warheads

The Obama administration, reversing the Bush administration's limited interest in nuclear disarmament, is gearing up for early negotiations with Russia on a new treaty that would sharply reduce stockpiles of nuclear warheads.

Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton has notified Congress and her staff that she intends to get started quickly on talks with the Russians, who have voiced interest in recent weeks in settling on a new treaty calling for cutbacks in arsenals on both sides.

The 1991 Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty expires at the end of the year. It limited the United States and Russia to 6,000 nuclear warheads each. The American stockpile is believed to be about 2,300 warheads, and the Russians' even lower.

Clinton's spokesman, Robert Wood, said the new administration was serious about negotiating reductions in nuclear weapons. A replacement treaty for START "will be put on a fast track," Wood said.

CIA pick backs Obama on breaking from policy

CIA Director nominee Leon Panetta assured senators Thursday that the Obama administration will not send prisoners to countries for torture or other treatment that violates U.S. values as he contended had occurred during the Bush presidency.

Panetta, testifying before the Senate Intelligence Committee, later acknowledged that he does not know specifically what happened in the secret program allowing so-called "extraordinary rendition." CIA Director Michael Hayden has said that the Bush administration moved secret prisoners between countries for interrogation and incarceration, separate from the judicial system, fewer than 100 times.

Panetta said that President Barack Obama forbids what Panetta called "that kind of extraordinary rendition — when we send someone for the purpose of torture or actions by another country that violate our human values."

JERUSALEM Israel seizes Lebanese ship carrying Gaza aid

JERUSALEM — The Israeli navy intercepted a ship carrying humanitarian supplies from Lebanon to the Gaza Strip and towed the vessel into port Thursday, foiling a new attempt by international activists to break Israel's blockade of the Palestinian territory.

It was the first time Israeli forces seized an aid ship, after the navy let some boats in and turned others around.

The interception was condemned by Lebanon and Syria, adding to regional tensions in the wake of last month's devastating Israeli offensive against the Islamic militants of Hamas who control Gaza.

Talks in Egypt to cement a long-term cease-fire in Gaza ran into obstacles Thursday. A Hamas delegation left Cairo without agreeing to a truce deal.

In an apparent slap at Hamas, Egyptian officials reported that security officers frisked the delegation returning to Gaza and confiscated $9.5 million to $11.5 million in dollars and euros. The cash was deposited in an account in Egypt, and the delegation was allowed to return to Gaza, a security official said.

Ginsburg undergoes surgery

Supreme Court justice diagnosed with cancer

By Mark Sherman
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg had surgery Thursday for pancreatic cancer, raising the possibility that one of the ideologically divided court's leading liberals — and its only woman — might have to curtail her work or even step down before she had planned.

Ginsburg, 75, has been a justice since 1993. She has been increasingly vocal in recent years about the court's more conservative stances, especially after the appointments made by President George W. Bush.

Pancreatic cancer is often deadly, although the court said doctors apparently found Ginsburg's growth at an early stage.

In 1999, she had colon cancer surgery, underwent radiation and chemotherapy, and never missed a day on the bench. Statistics suggest this could be a tougher fight.

Ginsburg underwent the surgery at the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York. She will remain in the hospital for seven to 10 days, said her surgeon, Dr. Murray Brennan, according to the court. The justices hold their next private conference on Feb. 20 and return to the bench from their winter break on Feb. 23.

President Barack Obama expressed hope for her speedy recovery, White House press secretary Robert Gibbs said Thursday, and offered his thoughts and prayers.

If Ginsburg or another justice leaves the court, it falls to Obama to pick a successor. Anyone he might choose to Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg leads fellow members of the Supreme Court down the steps of the court's building in Washington on Sept. 6, 2005, during ceremonies honoring Chief Justice William Rehnquist, who had died. replace her probably would be as liberal as she, if not more so, keeping in place the 5-4 conservative tilt of the court.

Ginsburg is only the second female justice in the nation's history. The other was Sandra Day O'Connor, who retired in 2006, and Ginsburg has lamented being the only woman on the court.

In the spring of 2007, she vented her frustration with the court's increasingly conservative tone by writing two sharp dissents that were made even more notable by her decision to read from them in the courtroom.

Objecting to a decision that upheld a nationwide ban on an abortion procedure that opponents call partial-birth abortion, Ginsburg said the ruling "cannot be understood as anything other than an effort to chip away at a right declared again and again by this court — and with increasing comprehension of its centrality to women's lives."

A short while later, the court threw out a discrimination suit by Lilly Ledbetter, a longtime Goodyear supervisor who was paid thousands of dollars a year less than her male peers. "In our view, this court does not comprehend, or is indifferent to, the insidious way in which women can be victims of pay discrimination," Ginsburg said.

Ginsburg was a federal appeals court judge in Washington before President Bill Clinton appointed her. She served as a lawyer for the American Civil Liberties Union before that and argued six cases before the high court.

The new cancer was discovered during a routine, annual exam late last month at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md. A CAT scan revealed a tumor measuring about 1 centimeter across at the center of the pancreas, the court said.

The court offered few details about the operation or her anticipated course of treatment.

Pancreatic cancer is one of the most deadly cancers. Nearly 38,000 cases a year are diagnosed and overall less than 5 percent of patients survive five years.

'We may end up in the Hudson': Pilot told controllers he was going into river

By Joan Lowy
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The air traffic controllers became increasingly frantic as they scrambled to find a runway for crippled US Airways Flight 1549 as it descended perilously close to Manhattan. Then came the matter-of-fact reply from the captain: "We're unable. We may end up in the Hudson."

Audio recordings released Thursday by the Federal Aviation Administration reveal a tense, lightning-fast scramble as controllers tried to arrange an emergency landing before losing touch with the Airbus A320 after it ditched into the Hudson River. In the confusion, controllers mistakenly referred to the aircraft as Flight 1529 at several times; even the pilot or first officer misidentified their flight at one point.

The last words from Flight 1549 as it left the ground at New York's LaGuardia Airport at almost 1:26 p.m. MST Jan. 15 were, "Good day." One minute and 48 seconds later, the crew reported, "Hit birds, we lost thrust in both engines, we're turning back to LaGuardia."

A controller at the radar facility in Westbury, N.Y., handling the plane once it left LaGuardia told the airport tower: "Stop your departures, we got an emergency returning." After identifying the flight, the controller said, "He lost all engines, he lost the thrust in the engines, he is returning immediately."

The flight had been in the air for two minutes and six seconds.

Then 17 seconds later, Flight 1549 reported back to TRACON (the Terminal Radar Approach Control facility): "We're unable. We may end up in the Hudson."

Airline passengers wait to be rescued on the wings of a US Airways Airbus 320 jetliner that safely ditched in the frigid waters of the Hudson River in New York on Jan. 15.

scramble to divert the plane to Teterboro Airport in New Jersey.

"Emergency inbound," one controller said as he tried to arrange a landing.

"He was a bird strike. Can I get him in for Runway One?" said the TRACON controller, identified by the National Air Traffic Controllers Association as Patrick Harten, a 10-year veteran.

"Runway One, that's good," the Teterboro controller replied, according to the recordings released by the Federal Aviation Administration. "Cactus 1529 turn right two-eight-zero" for Teterboro, Harten ordered the plane's pilot. Cactus is the call sign used by controllers for US Airways.

"We can't do it," the crew said.

"OK, which runway would you like at Teterboro?" Harten asked.

"We're going to be in the Hudson," the pilot replied.

"I'm sorry, say again Cactus," Harten said after hearing the pilot's message that he was ditching the plane. There was no response.

The Teterboro operations staff worried that the Airbus 320 might weigh too much to land at the small airport. Risks include blowing a tire, running off the runway or breaking apart on landing.

"I believe he's too heavy, but let me talk to the supervisor," airport operations said.

"Yeah, he's gonna land here cause he's, he's, he's fallin' down right now, he's comin' in, he's gonna land," a Teterboro air traffic control supervisor said, adding that he was calling out emergency rescue equipment.

By then, however, it was no longer needed.

"It appears that Cactus might have went down the east river there," TRACON told Teterboro.

After contact with the plane was lost, the tension at TRACON was clear in Harten's voice as he tried to raise a response from the aircraft. He sighed and then whispered to himself, "Right."

"I guess it was a double bird strike and he lost all thrust so ...," he said. It was not clear whether he was talking to other controllers nearby or another plane.

At LaGuardia, controllers were talking to a helicopter that kept the plane in sight.

"I got him in sight right next to the USS Intrepid, midriver," the helicopter reported.

Notable steel guitarist Tom Brumley, 73, dies

By Dennis McLellan
Los Angeles Times

Tom Brumley, a legendary steel guitarist who contributed to the "Bakersfield sound" of Buck Owens and the Buckaroos in the 1960s before spending 10 years performing with Rick Nelson, has died. He was 73.

Brumley died Tuesday at Northeast Baptist Hospital in San Antonio, eight days after suffering a heart attack, said his wife, Rolene Brumley.

During his years with Owens, from 1963 to 1969, Brumley traveled the world and played on landmark recordings such as "Together Again," "I've Got a Tiger By the Tail" and "Act Naturally."

Brumley, whose "pure" steel sound was known in the music industry as "The Brumley Touch," received an Academy of Country Music Award for No. 1 Steel Guitarist in 1966.

"I grew up watching the Buckaroos," said country music singer Marty Stuart, who recorded with Brumley and knew him for 20 years. "To me, they were country music's answer to the Beatles. Tom's steel guitar parts stand as monumental and foundational works that are considered textbook in the vocabulary of country music.

"He was also, in my opinion, one of the cornerstone guys that kind of bridged country music and rock 'n' roll, as well, with his Ricky Nelson works."

Brumley left Owens' band in 1969, after Nelson invited him to play steel guitar with his band for his "Live at the Troubadour" album.

"It was a godsend being asked to join Rick's band, and I still think 'Garden Party' was a highlight of my recording career," Brumley told the Edmontion Journal in 2005. "Initially, I only accepted the offer to do four shows with him at the Troubadour, but I enjoyed it so much I stayed with him for 10 years."

Brumley said that Nelson, who died in an airplane crash on New Year's Eve 1985, "was such a great guy, and we had such a close relationship that I still stay in touch with his boys."

Brumley later spent three years recording and touring with Chris Hillman and the Desert Rose Band.

From 1989 to 2003, he performed with his sons, Todd and Tommy, in the Brumley Family Music Show in Branson, Mo.

Over the last decade, he performed or recorded with artists such as Chris Isaak, Merle Haggard, Glen Campbell, Waylon Jennings, Ray Price, Reba McEntire, Rod Stewart and Martina McBride.

Born in Stella, Mo., on Dec. 11, 1935, Brumley was the third of six children. Their father was Albert E. Brumley, a gospel singer, composer and music publisher whose songs included "I'll Fly Away," "I'll Meet You in the Morning" and "Turn Your Radio On."

At 14, Brumley began playing bass in a band with his brothers Al, Bill and Bob (and later Jackson), who played at local music festivals and on local radio and TV stations.

Brumley, who began playing the steel guitar in 1954, had a two-year stint in the U.S. Army in Germany and worked at his father's music publishing company.

In 1962, Brumley's brother Al, who had just signed with Capitol Records, asked him to play steel guitar on his second recording session.

It was a fateful occasion. "Buck Owens was down at the studio and heard Tom play on my session," Al Brumley recalled. "He told Don Rich, one of his sidemen, that if he ever had a chance to hire Tom, he would."

Later, after Brumley got a job working in construction for his wife's father in Kingsland, Texas, he got the career-making call from Owens.

"Of course, Tom was excited, but he was disillusioned with the night scene and the bars and things where most everybody had to play at that time," Rolene Brumley recalled. "He said, 'I don't think I want to pursue the music business because of all that.'"

Times-News

The countdown is on. South-central Idaho and the 2009 Special Olympics World Winter Games got acquainted this week as the Final Leg Torch Run wound its way like the area's rivers from Mini-Cassia to the Magic Valley and up to the Wood River Valley. After the athletes and law enforcement officers that accompanied the Flame of Hope on its trek toward Nampa on Wednesday, the area was left to wait for Sunday and the start of events in Sun Valley. ## Misdiagnosis of food allergy leads to years of suffering

DEAR DR. GOTT: I have had stomach and bowel problems for years. I lost an excessive amount of weight, had diarrhea six or seven times a day, every day for months and found that I could not tolerate foods that I was always able to eat in years past even though there was not one food that upset my stomach every time. At one point, I couldn't even tolerate bottled water. I wanted to die and couldn't envision myself living the rest of my life chained to the bathroom.

Over the last eight years, I have had numerous expensive medical tests, some two or three times, and all were negative. I am female, 5 feet 8 inches and weight 115 pounds. That is 50 pounds less than what I used to be. When I mentioned to my primary-care physician that I thought this problem may be related to a food allergy, he shrugged it off and continued to set me up for tests. I was labeled with IBS, given prescriptions and shunted to the side. It didn't matter that I still had stomach problems and the prescriptions were not helping.

After eight years of this, I had had enough and went "out of network" to a doctor. I was asked to keep a food log for five days but kept one for a month. This doctor, after seeing the food log and examining, all in one visit, told me I had a classic case of gluten/wheat sensitivity.

I followed a somewhat strict gluten/wheat-free diet for one week and noticed a difference. After receiving my proper diagnosis, I started doing some of my own research. I found that skin conditions, such as psoriasis and eczema (which I had had for eight years also), may be directly caused by a food allergy, as are excessive diarrhea, unexplained weight loss and IBS.

I knew there was something wrong with me other than IBS, but I couldn't get my primary-care doctor or the numerous specialists I had seen to acknowledge this. No one ever asked me what my regular diet was. I don't expect you to print this letter but hope you will because I know it will help others who have been labeled as having IBS but don't get better on appropriate medication.

DEAR READER: When I received your letter, I was dismayed that you had to suffer for eight years because your physicians simply wouldn't listen. I was also incredibly pleased to hear that you decided enough was enough and took your care into your own hands. In this way, you not only received an appropriate diagnosis but you also found a caring, attentive physician.
 I have said this before, but based on the increasing number of letters I receive from disgruntled patients, I feel it is necessary to say it again: Physicians need patients; they are their livelihoods. It is in the physician's best interests to treat every patient with kindness and respect. Patients also need to take responsibility for their health and stand up for themselves. Most common ailments, such as high blood pressure, high cholesterol, arthritis and others can be improved by taking simple steps to modify weight, diet and exercise.

Creating in clay

An afternoon in the CSI pottery studio

Photos by
ASHLEY SMITH
Times-News

College of Southern Idaho sophomore Francis Raddatz works on a bowl Wednesday afternoon during class. Raddatz says she enjoys pottery because it allows her to get into a zone and it's relaxing. She says she'll probably give the bowl to family.

Francis Raddatz, shaping a bowl Wednesday during class, says some of the more challenging objects to make are tall vases.

A bowl basks in the afternoon light of the college's pottery studio Wednesday.

Shreds of clay rest on the perimeter of Francis Raddatz's bowl as she works. Raddatz, who has been making pottery for years, can shape bowls and other items in a matter of minutes. Over the course of the semester she'll use about 125 pounds of clay.

Redesigned event makes a new noise in the canyon

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

After nine years of the same old song, Jazz in the Canyon is changing its tune.

Some acts and venues were finalized this week as Snake River

Canyon Jam, set for June 11-14, replaces Jazz in the Canyon as the summer's music highlight.

Stacy Madsen, executive director for Magic Valley Arts Council, said Snake River Canyon Jam will incorporate other genres of music, like rock, bluegrass and blues, into the traditional jazz lineup. The festival will expand from three to four days, adding a Twin Falls Municipal Band performance on Thursday and, Madsen hopes, a brunch on Sunday. Friday's Jazz and Wine at Kimberly Nurseries and the Saturday canyon concert will remain on the schedule.

Madsen said the arts council's board of directors decided on the changes after listening to local concert goers.

"Based on feedback that we had from attendees in the past, people wanted to hear other varieties of music besides jazz," she said. Acts lined up this year include local favorites Ethan Tucker and Sassy Lee, Boise Americana band Bellamy Rose, and Portland-based Cajun band Voodoo Mountain Zydeco.

Love lives

Relocated Las Vegas singer introduces herself to Idaho audience

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM — Tyia Wilson traded the bright lights of Las Vegas for the bright sun of Sun Valley three years ago. But on Valentine's Day she'll show her new neighbors a side of herself they've never seen.

Wilson will sing a variety of Broadway, standards, pop, jazz and country songs in "Love Lives on Stage!" — a Valentine's Day benefit for the nexStage Theatre.

The doors open at 6:30 p.m. with an array of decadent desserts and pink champagne. Wilson's concert follows at 8 p.m. Then the theater will open to the public at 10 p.m. for a dance party with Tyia playing contemporary mainstream electronic, hip-hop and rock music.

Tickets are $75 each for the desserts and concert; they're $15 for those who show up for the after-show party.

"I have a love affair with the physical effort of singing — it's cleansing," Wilson said. "And I have a passion for all music. I think it brings us together, no matter what kind of music it is. And that's why I hope to share so many different types of music in my concert."

Wilson studied under jazz guitarist Kenny Burrell at University of California, Los Angeles. She was discovered while performing on "Soul Search" and since has sung the national anthem for the Lakers and Clippers, done cabaret-style performances at the home of former Canadian Prime Minister Kim Campbell for such celebrities as Stephen Spielberg and Clint Eastwood, and sung at various Las Vegas casinos.

The first black woman to pursue a country music recording contract, she contributed the lyrics to Russ Freeman's "When Love Was Lost and Found" and "Safe at Home."

And she has been a regular singer with the 35-member orchestra Las Vegas Jazz Connection.

"Performing in Las Vegas is challenging because you have a lot of talented people and a lot of competitive people all vying for very few jobs," said Wilson, who will be accompanied on Feb. 14 by pianist Dorinda Rendahl, bass player Chris Clark and drummer Ted Dyer.

Sun Valley, in contract, offers a laid-back place where she can raise her 7- and 1-year-old daughters.

"I love it here — it's paradise," she said. "Summer is like heaven on earth. I've never seen anything like it where you go from a white

Jazz

The board isn't forsaking jazz, though. Saturday's concert lineup includes Hot Club Sandwich, a Seattle jazz band that won over the Jazz in the Canyon audience last year. And Jazz and Wine at Kimberly Nurseries will stay true to its name, Madsen said.

"I think people are excited about it," Madsen said, adding that feedback about the changes has been mostly positive. "It's a draw for them to continue to attend the event."

Not everyone is thrilled with the festival's transformation.

In a letter to the editor Wednesday, Bob Wojka questioned why the Magic Valley Arts Council would want to fix something that wasn't broken.

"The disappointment that I think I feel is the loss of the emphasis on the jazz," Wojka said in an interview. "And I have the concern that we're going to see it become just another event."

But music fan Ann Alvarez welcomes the change.

"It was kind of getting to a point where I think it needed a little bit more oomph," Alvarez said.

Alvarez has been going to Jazz in the Canyon for years, she said, and understands why some die-hard fans resist the change. Still, she said the metamorphosis might be best for the community as a whole.

"It was always one of the highlights of my Twin Falls year, but let me tell ya, I love music and I think it would be a really nice thing to kind of broaden the interest in the music festival here," Alvarez said.

"I love jazz," she added,

"but you know, why not?"

Community School brings 'Clarence Darrow' to life on the nexStage

Times-News

One of the most famous trial lawyers in history will be on stage in "Clarence Darrow," set for Feb. 18-21 at the nexStage Theatre in Ketchum.

The two-act play written by David W. Rintels and based on Irving Stone's "Clarence Darrow for the Defense" invites the audience to join Darrow as he reminisces about his personal life, the famous and the infamous people he defended in court, and his 50-year career. Darrow may be best known for his work in the Scopes Monkey Trial.

Actor Terry Croghan will portray him. Croghan, a Bay Area lawyer for more than 25 years, stepped on stage in 2001 with the Hamilton Players in Hamilton, Mont., where he has performed in many productions.

19 and two shows to benefit the nexStage on Feb. 20-21.

The production was made possible by John and Peggy Baker, parents of two Community School students. After seeing the production in Montana, John Baker wanted to bring it to the Wood River Valley. "I was clearly moved when I witnessed this one-man play and feel fortunate that we are able to have the production here benefiting both The Community School and the nexStage Theatre."

The Feb. 18 student night includes a raffle of iPods and iTunes gift certificates; proceeds go to the school's literary review. Tickets are $5, and raffle tickets are $5.

The dinner theater on Feb. 19 will feature cabaret seating with catering by Ciro's, and raffles for a diamond and a tuition credit. Dinner theater tickets begin at $150. Doors open at 6 p.m. with cocktails and hors d'oeuvres; show begins at 7:30 p.m. Reservations: Community School's development office, 622-3960, ext. 164.

Feb. 20-21 performances start at 7 p.m. Tickets are $20 for adults and $5 for youth. Tickets: nexStage box office, 726-4TKS.

Concert: The Army Ground Forces Band's Woodwind Quintet

Seen Feb. 1 at College of Southern Idaho

A free hour of perfectly polished playing (this is the military), in a recital hall small enough for watching the musicians: a splendid diversion for a winter Sunday afternoon. My first time hearing the witty "Wapango" by Grammy-winning Cuban jazz artist Paquito D'Rivera, and I'm hooked.

Musical theater: Mt. Harrison Heritage Foundation's 'Fiddler on the Roof'

Seen Jan. 31 at King Fine Arts Center in Burley

The direction of this presentation was truly exceptional. Stage sets, performer blocking and movement on the stage were outstanding. The choreography for nonprofessional dancers: superior. Christine Horsley did a great job of coordinating the efforts of her production staff and honing all into a delightful and extremely entertaining stage show.

Let Jerome singers deliver your message of love

Times-News

Jerome High School's auditioned choirs, Divisi and Chamber Singers, are again selling Val-o-grams — singing valentines. Members of these select choirs will serenade your sweetheart with a love song and a rose, at work, at home or at the gym.

And when they say they will go anywhere, they mean it.

"Last year we sang to someone's wife in the middle of her aerobics class," said Rachel Avila, a member of both choirs. "It was hilarious."

"The students had a great time doing this last year," said Jerome High choir director Karen Palmer.

"They loved to watch faces turn red as they delivered their song."

Each Val-o-gram is $25.

To order, call Palmer at 324-8137, ext. 4124, or e-mail her at palmerk@d261.k12.id.us.

Time slots are available on Feb. 13 and 14. Orders will be taken until 3 p.m. Feb. 13.

Footlight Dance honors Special Olympics with Saturday performance

Times-News

Footlight Dance Co., under the artistic direction of Hilarie Neely, plans its Senior Company premiere performance, "Olympic Dances," at 7 p.m. Saturday at Hailey's Community Campus Theater.

The company of 19 dancers will honor the 2009 Special Olympics World Winter Games being held in Sun Valley and other Idaho venues, by interpreting through dance forms.

Ice skating will be done with ballet; jazz interprets snowshoeing; tap interprets hockey; modern interprets alpine skiing; and hip-hop interprets snowboarding. Footlight's jazz dance will be joined by the Wood River High School Jazz Band's live music. The show will include a parade of flags, an opening ceremony dance and music from Paul Cox, who composed for "In a World of Differences, Make a Difference."

The production's message: tolerance and understanding of everyone's gifts to the world.

"Our Special Olympians share a spirit of hard work, dedication and joy to get to the games, just as our dancers do when they work toward performances," Footlight's press release said. "The Olympians are unique and provide a rich fabric to our culture, just as the arts and artists bring richness to our communities."

Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for students, available at Chapter One Bookstore in Ketchum and The Toy Store in Hailey, from the dancers and at the door. Proceeds provide scholarships for students attending classes and summer workshops.

Information: Neely at 788-3481, ext. 6, or www.footlight-dancecentre.com.

Explore contemporary feminism with Amy Richards

Times-News

Amy Richards, of the "Ask Amy" online column and author of "Opting In: Having a Child without Losing Yourself," will discuss the current state of feminism in a free public lecture at the Sun Valley Center for the Arts in Ketchum.

Richards' talk at 7 p.m. Feb. 18 is part of the center's "Domestic Life" project, which examines the role that homes play in our lives and why we spend so much time and money on them.

"It's impossible to talk about the home without talking about women's roles," said the center's Britt Udesen. "On the one hand we have set ourselves these high standards for how we decorate and entertain in our homes, but at the same time more women are working outside the home and ferrying kids to one extracurricular activity after another."

Richards' book (Farrar Straus & Giroux, 2008) is a spirited response to a controversial New York Times magazine cover story in 2004 that claimed that America's best-educated women were choosing motherhood over career.

Richards reminds readers of the real strides the women's movement has made in allowing women to choose and juggle both," Publishers Weekly said in its review.

Richards is also co-author, with Jennifer Baumgardner, of "Grassroots: A Field Guide for Feminist Activism" and "Manifesta: Young Women, Amy Richards speaks at a recent Sun Valley Center for the Arts luncheon with Gloria Steinem.

Feminism, and the Future." Over the years she has worked as a consultant to Gloria Steinem, Anna Deavere Smith and the Columbia School of Public Health. As an activist, she helps groups execute their visions for living in a more just society.

In her "Ask Amy" column at www.feminism.com, Richards fields questions on everything from eating disorders and rape to "why can't I fight in the Marines?" and "who is Gloria Steinem?"

"The questions have become far more detailed and compassionate," Richards said in a Sun Valley

Center press release. "Initially I received many hostile letters, and even the desperate ones were abrupt and seeking only one-word answers. The letters now are more complex. I've also seen trends. There was a time when many people were asking about men's role in reproductive health, another phase when people were asking about dress codes for high school students. But all along I have received so many questions on job discrimination, divorce and violence, mostly sexual violence."

Test your Oscar-picking skills

Clip up, fill out and send in your entries for our Academy Awards Prediction Contest.

Who will walk away with a golden statuette this year? Will Heath Ledger win, becoming only the second actor to receive an Academy Award posthumously? Will "Slumdog Millionaire" snag Best Picture?

Last year's pick-the-Oscars winner, Christine McNurlin of Twin Falls, won by correctly guessing 11 out of 16 categories. This year's winner will receive a $25 gift certificate to Best Buy and be featured in an Entertainment story.

In the case of a tie, whoever correctly predicts the Best Foreign Language Film will be the winner. (Luck plays a part in this category. How many southern Idahoans had access to all five nominees?)

Send this form to Times-News, Attention: Virginia Hutchins, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, ID 83303, or drop it off at our office at 132 Fairfield St. W. in Twin Falls. Entries must be received by Feb. 20 and include your name and telephone numbers. The winner will be notified by Feb. 24.

Champions of new music will play Ketchum

Times-News

The Shanghai Quartet, one of the world's most respected and polished string quartets, will bring its virtuoso technique to Ketchum on Saturday.

The Ketchum program, part of the Sun Valley Center for the Arts' Performing Arts Series, presents some of the best-loved works in the Western string quartet repertoire, from pieces by Beethoven and Ravel to Samuel Barber's achingly beautiful "Adagio for Strings."

Two brothers from Shanghai — violinist Weigang

Li and violist Honggang Li — plus violinist Yi-Wen Jiang of Beijing and New Yorker Nicholas Tzavaras on the cello, regularly tour the great music centers of North and South America, Asia and Europe.

Their extensive discography (over 25 recordings on multiple labels) ranges from traditional Chinese folk tunes to Mendelssohn, Brahms and the soundtrack to Woody Allen's 2005 film "Melinda and Melinda." In 2003, the quartet released its most popular disc: a 24-track collection of Chinese folk songs titled "Chinasong" (Delos), which features music arranged by Yi-

Wen Jiang reflecting his childhood memories of the Chinese Cultural Revolution. Current recording projects include the complete Beethoven string quartets (Camerata), an ambitious seven-disc project that will be completed in 2009.

The quartet has a history of championing new music and juxtaposing Eastern and Western sounds. Among its major commissions and premieres are works by Lowell Lieberman, Bright Sheng and Zhou Long. To celebrate its 25th anniversary in 2008-09, the quartet is premiering new commissions from three continents: Krzysztof Penderecki's "String Quartet No. 3," Chen Yi's "From the Path of Beauty" and jazz pianist Dick Hyman's "String Quartet."

The Shanghai Quartet will play at the Presbyterian Church of the Big Wood in Ketchum at 7:30 p.m. Saturday. Tickets are $25 for Sun Valley Center for the Arts members and $30 for non-members: www.sunvalleycenter.org or 726-9491, ext. 10.

The two remaining concerts in the Performing Arts Series are ukulele master Jake Shimabukuro on April 3 in Hailey and the Hot 8 Brass band on May 9 in Sun Valley.

Jerome girls hammer top-seeded Burley

Tigers will face Burley-Minico winner for title

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

BURLEY — After last week's loss to Burley, the Jerome girls basketball team felt deflated, having lost out on the No. 1 seed and home-court advantage for the Great Basin Conference West tournament.

On Thursday, the Tigers made up for it by shoring up their defense and rebounding and Jerome advanced to the tournament championship game after a 46-27 victory over host Burley.

"We had so much more energy," said Jerome's Carrie Thibault, who scored 11 points. "We knew this was a big game and we could feel that energy at school and at practice. We brought it."

Jerome will host the GBW tournament championship game Monday. The Tigers will play the winner of Saturday's Minico vs. Burley elimination game.

The Tigers (18-4) are happy to bring the title bout back to Jerome, where they are undefeated in the past two seasons.

Jerome ended Burley's 12-game winning streak and dealt the Bobcats (17-5) just their second home loss this season.

"We knew we had to win the battle of the rebounds," said Jerome coach Brent Clark. "It was our defense and ability to rebound."

In its five-point loss to Burley on Jan. 27, Jerome allowed the Bobcats to grab 15 more rebounds and score 12 second-chance points. The Tigers fixed that problem Thursday by owning the rebounding margin, 25-20, and allowing just two second-chance points.

"We were more aggressive and we weren't afraid of contact and we knew that's where we had to win it," Thibault said. "To stop (Burley) you've got to box out and stop Kassi (Kerbs), because she's the heart of their team."

The Tigers held Kerbs to 10 points — about a dozen below

NATE'S NIGHT

CSI guard Miles makes long-awaited debut tonight

By Mike Christensen • Times-News writer

Nate Miles has been smiling a lot lately and with good reason. His wait is finally over.

Tonight, Miles will make his long-awaited college basketball debut when the College of Southern Idaho men host the College of Eastern Utah.

A lean 6-foot-7 guard with a silky shooting touch from long range, Miles was one of the most highly anticipated freshmen in the nation prior to the season.

Ever since he scored 47 points in leading his junior high team to the city championship in Toledo, Ohio, it was evident college basketball was in Miles' future.

Getting there, however, has been anything but routine.

With a mother battling alcoholism and a father not up to the task of raising two children, Miles and his sister were in a tough spot. An aunt in Detroit took them in a couple times, but at age 5 Miles was about to be taken away from his home by family services.

"My granny stepped in and raised me and my sister like we was her own," said Miles.

After his junior high efforts, Miles was invited to play AAU ball by coach Sean Patterson. Miles quickly grew close with Patterson and his son, Sean Patterson Jr., and Patterson Sr. eventually became Miles' legal guardian.

Hall, Sizemore lead Valley into Canyon title game

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

HAZELTON — The last two seasons, the issue for the Valley girls basketball team has been closing.

No such problem Thursday night.

Katie Hall scored eight of her game-high 20 in the fourth quarter and Valley outscored visiting Declo 21-9 in the final eight minutes to take a 60-45 win and advance to the Canyon Conference championship game.

The Vikings (18-3), who have won the conference regular-season title the last two years only to fail to advance to the state tournament in both instances, blew a nine-point first-half lead but slammed the door shut on the Hornets (12-10) when the chips were down.

Despite recent history, there were no "here we go again" moments when Declo tied the game late in the third period.

"That isn't even in our minds at all," said Valley coach Brian Hardy. "It was an experience, but these Hall added 17 rebounds for a double-double and threw in five steals, while Camelle Sizemore scored 18 and pulled in nine boards. Dacia Hunter scored 10 and added five rebounds and five assists.

Judge may toss some evidence in Bonds case

SAN FRANCISCO — A federal judge says she might toss some of the strongest evidence against Barry Bonds, a blow to prosecutors trying to prove the home-run king lied when he denied knowingly using performance-enhancing drugs.

Last time they met: The Bruin sophomores will no doubt remember how a Region 18 title was ripped from their grasp when the Golden Eagles thumped them 21-0 in the championship finale last May. The victory sent CSI to the national tournament and Salt Lake home.

Nick's notes: "This year's (SLCC) squad will run as well as they did last year. (Coach) MaryKay (Amicone) always her kids ready to go. They're very well coached. We got a chance to watch them, and they're a fundamental, sound squad. It'll be good to get after it and see where we fit in." — CSI head coach Nick Baumert

Miles

"He looked at me like his own son," said Miles.

At Toledo Libby High School, Miles began making his mark. After his sophomore year, he spent a summer at Oak Hill Academy in Wilson, Va., and recruiting attention ballooned.

Miles returned to Libby but was expelled after some kids he was with kicked in a door during a school dance.

"Being with the wrong people at the wrong time," said Miles.

He landed at Cornerstone Christian Schools in San Antonio, Texas, and played two seasons there. He committed to the University of Connecticut in November of 2006, but it would take two more prep school stops before Miles found the right situation academically to meet the NCAA Clearinghouse's eligibility requirements.

As Miles bounced around to Notre Dame Preparatory School (Fitchburg, Mass.) and The Patterson School (Lenoir, N.C.), Internet rumors circulated about him being kicked out of schools.

"Every school that I left was because I wanted to leave," said Miles. "It was never that any of the schools got rid of me. I chose to leave because the situation wasn't right."

He finally enrolled at UConn this past fall, but after about 70 days, his dream was derailed.

"Nate told me once, if it wasn't for bad luck, he wouldn't have any luck at all sometimes," CSI head coach Steve Gosar said.

Miles was accused by a female student of becoming physical and trying to pressure her into sex. A restraining order was issued on Sept. 22, 2008. Miles denied the claims from the beginning, and when the restraining order came down he tried desperately to reach coaches and friends for advice.

When his attempts failed, he called the girl himself, violating the order.

He was expelled from school on Oct. 2.

"I felt like I was really dealt the wrong end of the stick," said Miles. "I think UConn made a very bad decision without looking at all the details and the facts before they made their decision."

Miles' accuser never appeared at any of his court dates. He has met the requirements of the court, including undergoing counseling, and later this month all of the charges are expected to be dropped.

Fortunately, UConn wasn't Miles' last chance.

After returning home to Toledo Miles got a call from Patterson, who gave him Gosar's number. In CSI, Miles saw a chance at redemption.

"They were willing to take a chance," said Miles. "That's where it all started. A new beginning."

When he arrived in Twin Falls on Oct. 21, Miles was frustrated and sullen. Because he left UConn more than 15 days after fall semester began, he had to endure a 16-week probationary period before he could suit up for CSI.

While it took a while, Gosar "really saw (Miles) start to appreciate the things that were around him. I think he saw the light at the end of the tunnel."

Tonight, Miles will walk out of that tunnel with a big smile on his face.

"I've been listening to everything coach tells me to do on and off the court. Now it finally pays off in the end, and I get to play on Friday," said Miles.

And when he plays, prepare to be impressed. During his first days in Twin Falls, Miles broke all five practice shooting records kept by the Golden Eagles — knocking off former CSI sharpshooters like Brad Garrett and Nick Hansen.

"He's got a great feel for the game," said Gosar. "As well as he shoots it, I'm not sure he doesn't pass the ball better than he shoots it."

"His passing really has a chance to make a big effect for us because he can help make everybody better and help get other people shots."

Miles' former team at UConn is currently the top-ranked NCAA Division I team in the country. While he still keeps in touch with his former teammates and coaches, his focus is now on helping CSI accomplish similar success at the NJCAA level.

"I'm proud of all those guys, first and foremost," Miles said of UConn. "It would have been good to be there, but I'm happy where I'm at. They're No. 1. At the end of March when it's all said and done, we want to be No. 1, too. I was going to UConn to win ball games and get better, and that's what I'm going to do here. I just want to get better and win ball games and win a national championship. That's what it's all about."

"When it's all said and done, it would be lovely for Connecticut have a national championship and CSI to have a national championship."

Gosar would certainly take that.

As for tonight, count the CSI coach among those eagerly awaiting Miles' first minutes in gold and black.

"I'm as anxious to see what Nate does when the lights are on as anybody," said Gosar. "It's been a long time coming for him. I know he's excited."

"I can't wait to see what he can do."

challenge for today's 5:30 p.m. game and Saturday's 3 p.m. tip-off is not taking the visiting Golden Eagles lightly.

"We all know better than to look down on a team," said CSI freshman forward Shauneice Samms. "Plus, we know they're going to come in with a new plan."

CSI women's head coach Randy Rogers said CEU presents an interesting challenge with a lineup of players that rotates regularly and is never shy about putting the ball up. Rogers said Eastern Utah has the "potential to be pretty good."

As for the CSI men, there's no doubt they're focused on this weekend's outings. CSI has slipped to fourth place in the SWAC standings following a three-game losing streak. Those three losses, by a combined 10 points, leave CSI at 3-4 in conference and 16-6 overall as Eastern Utah (19-2, 5-2 SWAC) comes to town. CEU is tied for second in the SWAC with North Idaho, which beat CSI 69-67 and 69-66 last weekend, the latter coming on an 80-foot buzzer-beater by NIC's Melvin Jones.

CEU and NIC share the No. 15 spot in the latest NJCAA Division I poll. CSI is three games back of league-leading Salt Lake Community College in the standings and sweeping this week's games would go a long way toward getting CSI back in the title race with the No. 8 Bruins.

"It's probably the biggest weekend of the year so far," around to face Eastern Utah today (7:30 p.m.) and Saturday (5 p.m.). CSI will have a new weapon today as 6-foot-7 freshman Nate Miles makes his debut.

"We just want to get our chemistry right," said Miles. "We've been practicing really good this week and going hard and everything looks like it's going to OK. But we need to get both these Ws this week."

After three close losses, head coach Steve Gosar is ready for his team to make the plays and get the key bounces down the stretch.

"We've got to start pulling these close games out," said Gosar. "I'd like to have a game that's not so close, but we need a win, and we'll take a win any way we can get one."

While Salt Lake is 6-1 in SWAC play, the conference season isn't even to the halfway point with eight games remaining.

"We still have a chance to make a run," said Gosar. "There's still a lot of basketball left."

Aggies win first game as ranked team

LOGAN, Utah — Gary Wilkinson had a perfect shooting night and scored 18 points to lead No. 25 Utah State over New Mexico State 78-59 on Thursday night, extending the nation's longest winning streak to 17 games.

Wilkinson finished 5-for-5 from the field, made all eight of his free throws and had 11 rebounds as the Aggies (22-1, 10-0 Western Athletic Conference) moved within two wins of the school record of 19 in a row, set in 2000.

Tyler Newbold added 17 points for Utah State and had five of the Aggies' season-high 12 3-pointers, going 5-for-6 from beyond the arc. Jared Quayle finished with 12 points, eight assists and seven rebounds for Utah State, which is nationally ranked for the first time in five years.

Utah State has won 30 straight at home.

Jahmar Young led New Mexico State (11-12, 5-5) with 15 points.

Utah State made its first five 3-pointers in the first half and opened the second half 4-for-4 from beyond the arc. Newbold finished 5-for-6, adding one last 3 with less than a minute left as Utah State scored the last seven points of the game.

Pooh Williams scored 11 points and Twin Falls High grad Brady Jardine had nine rebounds for Utah State.

NO. 9 XAVIER 83, TEMPLE 74

CINCINNATI — B.J. Raymond scored 23 points and led a 3-point barrage that swept No. 9 Xavier to its 11th straight win Thursday night, an 83-74 victory over Temple that kept the Musketeers perfect atop the Atlantic 10.

Facing a defense geared to take away the inside, Xavier (20-2, 8-0) made most of its big shots from way outside. Raymond went 5-of-7 from behind the arc as Xavier went 11-of-18 overall.

Summitt reaches 1,000 wins

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Pat Summitt now has 1,000 victories, an unprecedented height even she finds dizzying.

"It's a hard number to even comprehend," the Tennessee coach said.

Summitt became the first Division I basketball coach — men's or women's — to win 1,000 career games Thursday night as her 12th-ranked Lady Vols beat Georgia 73-43. It was their second chance in four days at giving their coach her latest and one of her greatest milestones.

These baby Lady Vols (17-5, 6-2 Southeastern Conference), with seven freshmen on the roster, are nothing like the squads that brought Summitt her seventh and eighth national championships in the previous two seasons. This is an inexperienced group that had Summitt joking about whether they would even be up to the task of winning the 17 games she needed to reach 1,000 this season.

and No. 11 Butler shook off its first Horizon League loss of the season by beating Detroit 66-61 on Thursday night.

Hayward was 7-for-7 from the field and 4-for-5 from the free throw line for the Bulldogs (20-2, 11-1), who stayed one game ahead of Wisconsin-Green Bay.

WISCONSIN 63, NO. 23 ILLINOIS 50

MADISON, Wis. — Jason Bohannon was 6-of-7 from 3-point range, helping Wisconsin snap a six-game losing streak with a 63-50 victory over No. 23 Illinois on Thursday night.

Bohannon's 20 points and six 3s tied his career highs for the Badgers (13-9, 4-6 Big Ten).

Villegas grabs early Buick lead

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Camilo Villegas seems to play his best golf when Tiger Woods isn't around to defend a title.

Villegas holed out for an eagle early in his round and made a string of birdies late for a 9-under 63 on the easier North Course at Torrey Pines, giving him a three-shot lead Thursday in the Buick Invitational as he goes for a bizarre hat trick.

A victory this week would be his third straight at a tournament where Woods was the defending champion.

Villegas won the BMW Championship and Tour Championship last fall to close out the FedEx Cup portion of the season — both won by Woods the previous year — and he got off to a blazing start on a cloudy, chilly day along the Pacific bluffs.

He hit a lob wedge over the bunker and into the hole for eagle on the par-4 second hole to quickly put his name atop the leaderboard, then built his lead with three birdies in a four-hole stretch on the back nine.

Davis Love III, coming up on two pivotal weeks as he tries to get into the Accenture Match Play Championship, and Aaron Baddeley each shot 66 on the North while playing in the same group.

The best score on the South Course, site of the U.S. Open last summer, belonged to Scott Sterling and Matthew Goggin at 69. Given the disparity of these courses, the leaderboard doesn't sort itself out until everyone has played both sides.

Phil Mickelson, a three-time winner of the Buick Invitational, put together a solid round of 70 on the South Course with a few big par saves, including a 15-footer on his final hole.

British Open and PGA champion Padraig Harrington, making his PGA Tour debut, started strong with three birdies on the opening four holes of the North Course, but a four-putt double bogey on the 17th sent him to a 71.

Woods is the four-time defending champion at the Buick Invitational, but still is recovering from season-ending surgery on his left knee — a week after his U.S. Open playoff victory.

"I'm glad he's not here," Villegas said. "He plays pretty good around here, I can tell you that."

Villegas wasn't too shabby on the North Course, which was more than 3½ strokes easier than the South, but still no bargain with blustery, cool conditions, along with greens that were firmer than usual with no water on them in anticipation of rain this weekend.

Coming off a missed cut last week in the FBR Open, Villegas opened with a simple birdie on the par-5 first, then made a mistake with his tee shot on the 326-yard second hole by hitting his drive to the right, 50 yards from the flag with a bunker in the way.

Using a new 63-degree sand wedge, he popped it up over the sand and never saw it go in the hole.

"I had a decent lie," Villegas said. "I just puffed it up in the air, and I knew it was good, but I didn't see the ball go in. My caddie said, 'It went in.' Early in the round, not much of a reaction."

Bonds' 'flaxseed oil' defense just might work

Barry Bonds sat at the defense table

Thursday surrounded by a handful of lawyers. It may turn out to be small consolation indeed, but sticking to that cockamamie story he told a grand jury in San Francisco some five years ago has at the very least guaranteed him a heck of a legal bill.

The feds have been out to nail Bonds just about every day since, dropping nearly 300 pages of exhibits in U.S. District Judge Susan Illston's lap to support their contention the disgraced former slugger lied when he said he never knowingly took steroids.

Any sensible person knew Bonds was lying the day his testimony was leaked to the press. So for all the time that's passed and all the legal wrangling that lies ahead, it's worth remembering exactly what Bonds told the grand jury in December 2003: that he didn't know what was in those exotic cocktails that his longtime pal and personal trainer, Greg Anderson, mixed up for him, that he rarely asked about the ingredients and never remembered the names, and couldn't pronounce several even if someone had bothered to spell them out.

Never mind that Bonds was layering on muscle like

JIM LITKE

Popeye after downing a can of spinach or that his hat size was swelling to the size of Mr. Met's.

"I thought it was flaxseed oil," is what Bonds said back then. Crazy as it sounds, that defense might just work.

What prosecutors have collected in the intervening years are drug tests, conversations, calendars and witnesses to implicate Bonds. Illston made no final ruling on how much of that evidence would be admissible at trial, but said she was inclined to exclude three positive drug tests from 2000-2001 and some documents, including a doping calendar, seized from Anderson's home.

Important as those pieces are to the government's case, the judge said she wanted direct testimony linking the test results and a doping calendar to Bonds.

The only person who can provide that is Anderson.

Considering he's already gone to jail for a year after refusing to talk to the grand jury about Bonds there's every reason to think

Anderson — as his attorney, Mark Geragos indicated — is prepared to do so one more time on March 2, when Bonds' trial is scheduled to begin.

Illston said she might allow the jury to hear a taped conversation in which Anderson discusses steroid use with another member of Bonds' inner circle. But as far as the jury hearing Anderson's voice during the trial, that will likely be it.

It seems fair to ask at this point what has really changed. For all the time and expense invested going after Bonds, it's back to the he-said, he-said dispute that characterized baseball discussions throughout the supersized era. Pitchers and catchers don't report until next week, but all the headlines the game is generating — between Bonds getting ready for trial and Roger Clemens wondering whether he should — are peppered with the word "steroids."

Throw in the millions that major league baseball spent to come with the Mitchell Report, and it looks like Bonds is the only person in this whole mess who got some bang for his buck. He extended his career a few seasons longer than logic suggests he could, collected more paychecks than he deserved and thanks to a legal team that hasn't shown any signs of slowing down, Bonds is still walking around a free man.

That could change, of course. Government prosecutors may yet be able to put into evidence a few of the exhibits that Illston looked unfavorably on, and there's a long list of former players — Jason and Jeremy Giambi, as well as former Bonds' teammates Bobby Estalella, Benito Santiago and Marvin Benard — prepared to testify about their relationship with Anderson and how it reflects on Bonds.

Illston also could allow testimony from others close to the slugger, including a former girlfriend, about the physical and emotional side effects associated with the use of performance-enhancing drugs. But whether those will directly tie Bonds to actual use of the drugs is no clearer than it was the day he walked into the grand jury room.

A smart man once said a jury is nothing more than 12 people chosen at random to decide which side has the better lawyer. Judging by the way this case started out, you've got to like Bonds' odds.

Lakers snap Boston's streak

BOSTON — Lamar Odom made a pair of free throws with 16 seconds left in overtime to lead the Los Angeles Lakers to a 110-109 victory over Boston on Thursday night and snap the Celtics' 12-game winning streak.

Kobe Bryant scored 26 points with 10 rebounds and Paul Gasol had 24 and 14 for the Lakers, who also snapped Boston's 19-game winning streak on Christmas Day and sent the Celtics into a 2-7 skid that is the worst stretch of the New Big Three era.

Paul Pierce scored 21, and newly minted All-Star Ray Allen had 22, but he missed a desperation, off-balance shot at the buzzer while Boston fans clamored for a foul call. Rajon Rondo scored 16 with 12 assists, and Kevin Garnett scored 16 before fouling out with 4:22 left in the fourth quarter.

It was a physical meeting that featured a pair of double-technical and enough shoving to pass for a playoff game, but both teams were tired when it ended.

Bonds

establish that, I don't think any of them work," Illston said.

The only person who can do that seems to be Bonds' personal trainer, Greg Anderson, who spent more than a year behind bars for refusing to speak to a federal grand jury investigating Bonds. And Anderson's attorney, Mark Geragos, has said his client will not testify against Bonds at the trial, scheduled to start March 2.

Without someone to authenticate that the test results were from Bonds' urine, Illston said claims that the tests were Bonds' were "classic hearsay."

Based on the same logic, Illston said she likely also would exclude a doping calendar and other papers seized by federal investigators at Anderson's home.

She was inclined, however, to allow a recorded conversation between Anderson and Bonds' former personal assistant Steve Hoskins in which they discuss injecting steroids. Hoskins recorded the conversation without Anderson's knowledge.

Illston will issue a formal decision on the evidence discussed Thursday at a later date. She also will hold a separate hearing on whether to allow testimony from expert doctors the government hopes would persuade a jury that changes in Bonds' body were due to steroid use.

According to court documents, Bonds tested positive on three separate occasions in 2000 and 2001 for the steroid methenelone in urine samples; he also tested positive two of those three times for the steroid nandrolone.

The three positive drug tests — seized during a 2003 raid of the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative, the headquarters of a large-scale sports doping ring — are a key part of the government's effort to prove Bonds lied when he told a grand jury that year he never knowingly took performance-enhancing drugs.

The judge and the lawyers didn't discuss a fourth positive steroids test seized in 2004 from a lab used by Major League Baseball to test its players in 2003.

The difference between that test and the three positive tests from 2000-2001 is there's no need to authenticate it.

Prosecutors said former BALCO executive James Valente is prepared to testify that Anderson handed him the three biological samples and told him they belonged to Bonds. But the judge said Valente's testimony was not enough to link the sample and Bonds.

Victor Conte, BALCO's founder, has always maintained that Bonds' biological samples were tested "down and dirty" and unreliable.

"These alleged Bonds test results and records not only lack a chain of custody and contain inaccuracies, but they also involve people with no formal training," Conte said in an e-mail Wednesday. "This causes uncertainty and creates doubt regarding the validity of this testing and record keeping evidence."

Without those three positive tests, the government's next-best evidence is Hoskins' recording of Anderson discussing undetectable steroids.

Hoskins said he made the secret clubhouse recording in front of Bonds' locker in March 2003. Hoskins said he was trying to obtain evidence to show Bonds' skeptical father Bobby Bonds, a former Major Leaguer who died of cancer in August 2003, that his son was using steroids.

Super Bowl players arrive in Hawaii

KAPOLEI, Hawaii — Physically drained and emotionally spent from their whirlwind week, Super Bowl champions Troy Polamalu, James Harrison and James Farrior participated in their first Pro Bowl practice Thursday.

The trio was jet-lagged, but couldn't hide the glow and smiles even as they tried to defrost from their frigid victory parade and recover from their gutty victory over the Arizona Cardinals.

"This is beautiful, man," Farrior said. "There's nowhere else I'd rather be."

The Steelers arrived late Wednesday. They first flew to Chicago for a brief stopover before spending seven more hours on a plane to Honolulu.

"I'm a little weary," said Farrior, making his second trip to Hawaii. "We had a long flight over here and we're just coming off the parade and Super Bowl, so everything has been hitting me all at one time."

"Now that I'm in Hawaii, I'm just going to relax and sit back."

Harrison appeared even more worn out than after his Super Bowl-record 100-yard interception return for a touchdown, a pivotal play in the win.

"After the game, it was the most physically and mentally exhausted that I've been in a game to date," he said. "I was up for 30 hours. I really couldn't get no sleep even though I was dead tired. When I finally got a chance, my body just gave up and I feel asleep."

Polamalu said he was looking forward to two things: sun and surf. But Steelers fans shouldn't worry about him joining the big-wave surfers on Oahu's North Shore.

"I'm a little-wave surfer. Tiny-wave surfer, actually," he said.

PATRIOTS FRANCHISE CASSEL

BOSTON — The New England Patriots placed the franchise tag on Matt Cassel on Thursday, making it tougher for other teams to sign the free agent quarterback.

The Patriots might keep him if they have doubts that Tom Brady will be ready for the start of next season after sustaining a serious knee injury in the 2008 opener. If they're confident Brady will be ready, they could trade Cassel rather than pay him the $14.65 million offer for 2009 in the franchise designation.

Cassel had a breakout season in 2008, starting 15 games after starting none the seven previous seasons — four with Southern California as backup to Heisman Trophy winners Carson Palmer and Matt Leinart, and three after New England drafted him in the seventh round in 2005.

For now, he remains a free agent, but the Patriots can match any offer made by another team or allow him to sign with that team in exchange for two first-round draft picks. The franchise tag value is the average of the top five paid NFL players at a particular position.

If and when Cassel signs the one-year designation, he will be under contract to the Patriots and could be dealt.

FORMER COWBOYS RECEIVER GLENN ARRESTED

IRVING, Texas — Former Dallas Cowboys receiver Terry Glenn was arrested on public intoxication and marijuana possession charges after appearing disoriented at a hotel, police said Thursday.

The Jan. 25 arrest came after a call of a suspicious person who was wandering the hallways checking door handles, said Irving police Officer David Tull.

After determining Glenn was "intoxicated or disoriented," officers arrested him on a public intoxication charge, Tull said. A subsequent search turned up a small amount of marijuana, leading to a misdemeanor charge of possessing less than 2 ounces of the drug.

Tull said Glenn was released on bond the morning after the arrest. Glenn also had outstanding traffic warrants in the Dallas-Fort Worth suburb of Roanoke.

A phone call to James Gould, Glenn's agent when he was released by the Cowboys in July, wasn't immediately returned.

NFLPA APPEALS PAYOUT TO RETIREES

SAN FRANCISCO — The NFL Players Association is appealing a federal court decision ordering the union to pay $28.1 million to retired players for allegedly cutting them out of lucrative marketing deals.

NFLPA interim executive director Richard Berthelsen told The Associated Press on Thursday that the union contends the ruling "was wrongly decided by the jurors and that there was not sufficient evidence in the record on which to base the verdict they rendered."

A jury found in November that the union failed to include the retired players in deals with Electronic Arts Inc., the maker of the popular "Madden NFL" video game, and other companies.

The players' association filed its appeal Tuesday in U.S. District Court in San Francisco. Berthelsen said a timetable has not yet been established to hear briefings on the appeal.

NASCAR trying to survive economy

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — NASCAR's season-opening event had a much different feel Thursday.

Drivers came to media day with all the typical enthusiasm for the Daytona 500 and the new season. But they ended up fielding more questions about the economic downturn than Jimmie Johnson's quest for a fourth consecutive championship, Tony Stewart's new venture as an owner/driver or what could be Mark Martin's best and last chance at getting a Cup title that has eluded him for nearly three decades.

All those story lines took a back seat to the struggles facing a sponsor-driven sport trying to survive tough economic times.

"We obviously are driven by a lot of corporate sponsors and our fans are the most loyal out there," four-time Cup Series champion Jeff Gordon said. "They're all going to be tested during this time."

Hundreds of NASCAR employees have been laid off since the end of last season. Several owners merged race teams, others slashed budgets and some even folded shops altogether. Bill Davis Racing, The Wood Brothers and Petty Enterprises had massive layoffs. Even powerhouse teams like Hendrick Motorsports, Joe Gibbs Racing and Roush Fenway Racing endured cutbacks.

Chrysler, Ford and General Motors have seen a significant drop in car sales, and world leader Toyota also has been affected by the economic downturn. The problems have created doubt about whether the four automakers will be able to maintain financial and technical support that has become vital to the sport.

"The news is depressing, and I know a lot of it is real," Roush Fenway Racing driver Matt Kenseth said. "I don't know how it's going to affect the sport or our season or our sponsors or any of that."

Full sponsorships have become scarce, with teams settling for two or more corporations splitting up the high price of advertising on race cars.

David Reutimann got good news Thursday when Aaron's opted to sponsor the No. 00

Toyota for the entire season. Defending Daytona 500 champion Ryan Newman may be in a more typical situation. He moved from Penske Racing to Stewart-Haas Racing during the offseason and is still looking for someone to sponsor his car for several races.

"We all need to be conscious about it and do the best that we can to make sure the grandstands are full," veteran driver Bobby Labonte said. "Everybody's has to pucker up a little bit. But at the same time, you've got to believe the cup is half full. You just hope to ride the storm, hold on as tight as you can."

NASCAR officials have tried to do their part. They sliced ticket prices for the Daytona 500 and worked with local hotels to get reduced rates.

"Generally the teams, and I know NASCAR, are doing more with less," NASCAR CEO Brian France said. "Can we do even more? Sacrifice? Sure. I just know that budgets are coming down, layoffs have happened, people are doing more with less. NASCAR is no different. We've looked at every single thing we can for the sport to figure out (a solution)."

Drivers are searching for answers, too.

Dale Earnhardt Jr. suggested track owners build their own hotels so they can better control the cost for fans attending races.

"I just wish it was easier to go see a race," Earnhardt said. "People aren't coming to the race track because it's expensive to do it."

Carl Edwards suggested NASCAR scrap its fancy, season-ending celebration in New York City and instead frolic with fans in North Carolina in an effort to give something back.

There was also talk about drivers' salaries coming under scrutiny, much like Fortune 500 CEOs who have been criticized for taking bonuses while cutting jobs.

"We all play a role," Gordon said. "I wouldn't expect any employee at Hendrick Motorsports to take a pay cut, so I can keep my salary what it is. It's not about that. If we have to cut costs, I want to know how I can cut costs along with the next guy, the next guy and the next guy."

Choosing Your Resume Strategy
Should You Be a Specialist or Generalist?
by Larry Buhl, for Yahoo! HotJobs

In a buyer's (and increasingly picky buyer's) market, you may be tempted to throw all your skills on the resume, praying that the sheer variety of your experiences will overwhelm an employer. After all, you wouldn't want a potential employer to overlook that one gem in your background that could really set you apart.

But does the generalist resume work best today? Not necessarily. Recruiters say emphasizing the breadth of your experience depends on what you're looking for.

The Generalist's Advantages
Positioning yourself as a generalist could be effective if you:

- Target small companies. "A company with than 500 employees may see a job-seeker with a broad base of skills as giving them more for their money," Dave Upton, founder and CEO of ExecuNet, tells Yahoo! HotJobs. At tiny companies or start-ups, a broad array of skills is often essential due to the need to wear different hats, Upton added.
- Target downsizing companies. Organizations that consolidate functions will often want someone who can do many things, such as a single HR generalist who can handle compensation and benefits as well as recruiting functions, says Stefanie Cross-Wilson, co-president of recruitment and talent management at Hudson.
- Will take any job. Recruiters agree that the scattershot approach yields scattershot results even in the best of times. But if you simply want a foot in the door of a company — any company, doing anything, anywhere — selling yourself as a jack-of-all trades could pay off.

The Specialist Positioning
Selling yourself as a specialist is preferable if you:

- Know exactly what you're looking for. If you're sure about what you want and know how your skills match up to the requirements, make the case that you're the one they need and don't muddle your resume with a variety of unrelated skills.
- Work in a competitive industry. These days, employers who used to receive dozens of resumes for a position may see hundreds or thousands. The person who fits the job best, particularly in a competitive field, is more likely to get the job than someone who can do a bit of everything, recruiters say.
- Seek a job requiring specialized skills. An employer filling a job that requires deep knowledge of industrial automation, forensic accounting, or video game design, to name a few, can usually find a candidate with the exact skills to match the job. If you don't have the specific skills, your knowledge of gardening, accounting, or music theory, while nice to have, won't make up that deficit.

The Best Approach

- Still not sure which approach is best? Recruiters recommend playing it safe by positioning yourself as a "specialist, with breadth." To do this:
- Research a job opening and the company to find out exactly what skills are needed, and what other skills might be useful.
- Emphasize the depth of your expertise in the most necessary job skills — the ones that actually match the job description — and add your compatible skills at the bottom of the resume.

Don't send out a hodgepodge resume. You're more likely to confuse the recruiter or the hiring manager, who may think of you as a dabbling without depth.

This tactic, recruiters say, will cover your bases by showing the breadth and depth of your skills, and that could be a winning combination in a tight job market.

"When more people are vying for the same jobs it's even more important to show your skills fit well," says Lindsay Olson, partner and recruiter, Paradigm Staffing. "If you are a generalist, then you should be able to tweak your resume to fit the position. A resume should show me how you fit the requirements, not make me guess."

Cross-Wilson agrees: "If you possess the 'nice to have' skills, then show them, but not at the expense of the 'must have' skills. In most cases, if you are not competitive on the must-haves, you will not get the job."

Moderating a Vugraph show, Edgar Kaplan once famously and accurately remarked at the beginning of a deal in which trumps broke 5-0: "Declarer will win the opening lead and cash a high trump, then go into the tank for 10 minutes." That would have been an apt prediction about today's six-heart contract, which came up in a sectional Swiss teams. Marty Hirschman was declarer.

When he ruffed the opening diamond lead, he was in a good position to claim 12 tricks: four hearts, four clubs, two aces and two diamond ruffs. However, when he cashed the heart ace, West unkindly pitched a diamond.

After a lot more thought, Marty led a club to his ace, ruffed a diamond, then led a high trump from dummy. He next played a club to his king and cashed two more trumps. Then came the diamond ace, stripping East of his last exit card. Declarer had pitched three low spades from dummy on the last two trumps and diamond ace. In the four-card ending, dummy had the A-Q of spades and two clubs, and Marty now simply played another club.

East, seeing he would be endplayed to lead spades if he ruffed, elected to discard a spade. So South cashed the last club. Again East declined to ruff. Accordingly, at trick 12, declarer simply cashed the spade ace (irrelevantly dropping East's king) and lost the last trick to the long trump. So long as East had three diamonds, there was nothing he could do to avoid this position.

ANSWER: With this pattern, the choice over the fourth-suit inquiry is to raise the fourth suit and bid out your shape precisely, or to bid three no-trump. With extra values raise to four clubs; but here, with a minimum. So just bid three no-trump, and try to go plus.
