General manager testifies in Latham lawsuit

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

A general manager for a shuttered auto enterprise testified Monday in Twin Falls that RLS Inc. sold cars out of trust since about October, affirming an allegation by KeyBank National Association in a $6.3 million lawsuit.

The bank in February filed the complaint against RLS Inc., or Hertz of Magic Valley, Robert Latham Sr., Robert Latham Jr., Tracy Frank, Scott Reaves, and local finance company 1-800

Finance Inc., registered to Reaves. Frank was a general manager of Hertz of Magic Valley and Reaves was general manager of Latham Motors, owned by RLS Inc., according to court records.

The bank alleges the defendants violated bank credit agreements by wholesaling cars, didn't pay the bank millions from "selling out of trust," denied the bank inspections, and violated limits on older car sales, according to the lawsuit.

KeyBank National Association is suing Frank, along with RLS Inc., Robert Latham Jr., Robert Latham Sr., Scott Reaves, who managed Latham Motors, and 1-800 Finance Inc., which is registered to Reeves. The bank seeks $6.3 million and asserts the defendants violated bank credit agreements, though the local auto enterprise has since closed.

Lodge, ski shop destroyed; none injured in end-of-season blaze

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

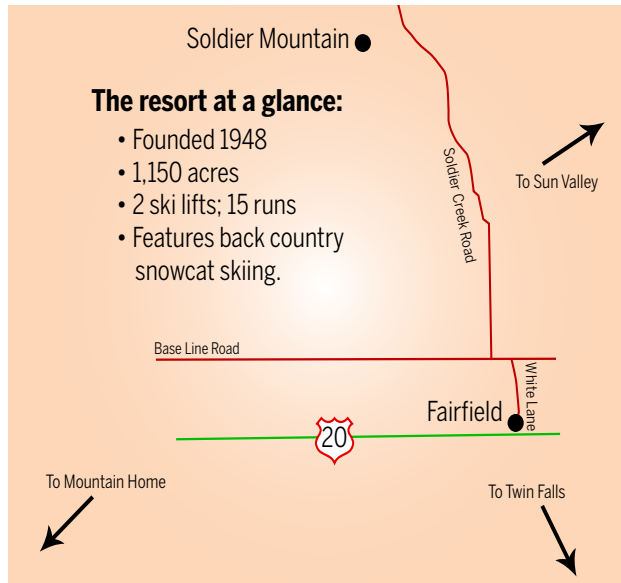

FAIRFIELD — An early morning fire Monday destroyed one of Fairfield's most iconic and historic buildings, the day lodge at Soldier Mountain.

The lodge, built in 1948, was already a total loss when firefighters responded after a neighbor called in a smoke sighting at about 7:30 a.m.

Monday. The resort's ski shop was also destroyed. The resort is owned by film star Bruce Willis.

Wayne Marolf, chief of the Fairfield Volunteer Fire Department, which covers all of Camas County, said the fire likely started behind the kitchen where appliances like hot water heaters were kept, and he said it

Judge rejects Adamson plea deal

By Debbie Bryce
Idaho State Journal

POCATELLO — U.S. District Judge B. Lynn Winnmill refused to accept a plea bargain Monday in the case of a former Idaho gubernatorial candidate charged with collecting, but not paying federal taxes for his employees.

Winnmill said he was not comfortable rendering a sentence without hearing all the evidence in the case against Dan Adamson of Chubbuck.

Adamson owned and operated Northwest Bec Corp., which managed nursing home facilities in Idaho, California and Oregon — including a number in the Magic Valley.

He pleaded guilty last October as part of a plea agreement.

Under the agreement, Adamson admitted to deducting and collecting federal income withholding taxes and employee contributions to Social Security and Medicare at six California facilities while failing to send the funds to the Internal Revenue Services during the third quarter of 2001.

the stand in Twin Falls 5th District Court. Selling out of trust is to sell a car financed by a bank without repaying the lender.

“A dealer that’s out of trust with the bank generally isn’t going to stay in business,” David Johnson, Twin city councilman and 30-year veteran in auto sales, told the Times-News. “I think selling a single car out of trust is a bad thing.”

Frank said about $2 million was generated in out-of-trust sales between October 2008 and February. “We were trying to keep the business open and operating,” said Frank, adding he doesn’t know the full scope of Latham Sr.’s agreements with KeyBank.

KeyBank asserts in its lawsuit that cars worth $4.8 million were sold out-of-trust.

Frank also testified the bank repossessed cars it shouldn’t have, which were slated for use in a rental car business.

“I felt the dealership owned them, that KeyBank didn’t have any right to them,” Frank testified. “It seriously jeopardized an ongoing business.”

The Lathams operated Latham Motors in downtown Twin Falls, which closed in October 2008, and Hertz of Magic Valley, which opened in 2000 under the franchise name RLS Inc.

A lawyer for KeyBank in court Monday called the defendants disingenuous.

Frank was the only defendant present in the courtroom, though, and said the Lathams tried to cooperate with the bank. “We made it as easy as we possibly could,” said Frank.

The Lathams alerted the bank to their closures, said Frank, and wanted to help liquidate automobiles.

Twin Falls 5th District Court Judge Randy Stoker on Monday ruled that the bank will need to make a good-faith effort to give copies of documents and computer files back to RLS Inc. and its directors, because the defendants need that information for federal financial filings.

Stoker said Monday he won’t tell the bank what to do with the collateral. “If you liquidate things unreasonably, it’ll come back to haunt you,” Stoker told lawyers for the bank.

The Lathams also operated Latham’s Auto Super Store in Elko, Nev., which appears to have closed in early February.

appeared to be accidental. Investigators from the state fire marshal’s office are expected to look over the scene on Wednesday to determine an official cause.

Saturday was the last day the mountain was open to the public for the season, and employees enjoyed a private “fun day” on Sunday while performing maintenance work. The resort is always closed Mondays.

When Assistant Fire Chief Shaun Stewart arrived on the snow-covered scene in the first fire vehicle just before 8 a.m., he said, the two-story main lodge was already destroyed and the ski shop, full of equipment, was engulfed.

“I had to make a quick decision about how to fight this,” he said. With the 1,250 gallons in that first truck, his crew alternated between wetting the ski patrol building next door and fighting the fire at the modular ski shop. Eventually a pump was brought to suck water out of a nearby creek. “We’re lucky the creek was open; it’s sometimes not open at this time of year.”

Stewart said it was also lucky that the wind was minimal. If it had been stronger, as it was on Sunday, likely all the buildings on the property and the surrounding trees would have ignited as well.

This is the first large structure fire in many years in Camas County, Stewart said, and he lauded the all-volunteer department for its efforts to save the other buildings.

Monday’s blaze was not the first fire at Soldier — in the mid-1970s, the ski rental shop burned, Marolf said. However, there were no indications that the lodge posed a greater-than-typical fire danger for a building of its age, agreed Marolf and Soldier Mountain manager Larry Davenport, and it had been assessed recently.

Davenport said he hasn’t heard yet from the corporate managers of Valley Entertainment Group, owned by Willis, a part-time Hailey resident. Paul Bloch, a Rogers & Cowan publicist in Los Angeles, said he was not sure if Willis had learned of the fire. Willis was married earlier this month and is on his honeymoon, Bloch said.

“There was supposed to be a new lodge built eventually,” Davenport said. Mountain managers recently unveiled plans for major improvements to the site, including a new lodge at the north end of the parking lot. “I have no idea at this time how it’ll affect that.”

Davenport said he’s certain there will be a ski season at Soldier next year, even if it has to be conducted out of temporary structures. He expects no employees will be out of work this year. Davenport said he was shocked and saddened by the fire, especially because the lodge is so closely associated with the Soldier Mountain experience.

“No matter where I travel, people say, ‘That’s where I learned to ski,’” Davenport said. “It was very nostalgic and there were a lot of memories here for people.”

Those people include Stewart, who has enjoyed the mountain for decades. “This is where I learned to ski; this is where my kids learned to ski. My wife spent hours sitting in that lodge waiting for the kids.”

Stewart and Davenport agreed that despite the loss of the lodge and ski shop, the timing was fortuitous.

“We were lucky that it happened today, and at the end of the season, that’s the good part,” Stewart said. “The bad part is a lot of history just went up in smoke.”

Disclosure

Majority Leader Bart Davis, R-Idaho Falls, who said he wants Idaho to improve its standing with good-government groups.

Currently, legislators are required to disclose information if there is a conflict of interest or personal benefit but may still vote. Lawmakers would still not be required to disclose specific details of their personal finances.

Last year, the non-partisan Better Government Association ranked Idaho 44th in overall integrity. In 2005, the nonpartisan Washington, D.C.-based Center for Public Integrity ranked Idaho tied with Michigan and Vermont for the worst disclosure laws in the nation.

Davis acknowledged the bill goes beyond what lawmakers are generally “attracted to” but it needed to maintain integrity in Idaho’s system.

“When we look at the public and their need to have confidence in this culture, the environment that we live in, I felt that, on balance, this is probably something that is in Idaho’s best interest to do,” Davis said.

Senate Minority Leader Kate Kelly, D-Boise, another co-sponsor, said the measure is preventative, and noted provisions are similar to those followed by members in Congress.

“We tried to strike a balance of gathering some useful information without getting too personal,” Kelly said. “If the information isn’t there, no one can look at it.”

An attorney with the office of Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter helped craft the bill’s language. Otter supports the concept of the bill but does not take an official position until it passes both chambers, his spokesman Jon Hanian said.

The most recent disclosure brouhaha came in 2005, when then-Sen. Jack Noble, a Republican, tried unsuccessfully to introduce a bill to change the state’s formula in setting the distance required between schools and liquor stores. But Noble’s convenience store would have benefited and he initially didn’t declare a conflict of interest. After changing his story, a Senate committee voted to censure Noble and he eventually resigned.

Monday’s bill received unanimous approval from the nine-member committee, but Sen. Monty Pearce, R-New Plymouth, questioned whether there was enough of a concern, and if the information was already available “on Google for anybody?”

“I think integrity in government is ultimate — I’m just not convinced at this point that this is really gonna solve what we think it’s gonna solve,” he said. “I personally feel we have a hard-enough time getting honest people to run for government and then we start making it more onerous and more inquisitive.”

Sen. Denton Darrington, R-Declo, who has served in the Legislature since 1983, said he didn’t have any issues with the bill.

specific quarter was only part of a long-term pattern that started in the second quarter of 2001 and ran through the second quarter of 2007, for a total of $7.5 million.

U.S. Assistant District Attorney Michelle Mallard said the agreement would avoid a lengthy trial and the expenses associated with one. In exchange for the guilty plea, she did not present other evidence in the case, depriving Winmill of context the judge said he needed.

“I would have been more comfortable if you had presented evidence of relevant conduct,” Winmill said after calling a 25-minute recess to consider his decision. “I am sympathetic to your concerns, but Congress didn’t list budget restraints as a priority (for federal prosecutors).”

Winmill said Mallard and Salt Lake City attorney Max Wheeler, who represents Adamson in the criminal case, could renegotiate the plea agreement, or Adamson could withdraw his plea and proceed to court.

Both attorneys said they were confident an acceptable agreement could be reached.

Mallard was still working on details of a new plea agreement Monday afternoon but said she expected a new sentencing date to be set as soon as Tuesday.

Adamson, 57, ran for governor in 2006, losing in the Republican primary to C.L. “Butch” Otter. He faces a maximum sentence of five years in prison and will be required to pay the more than $7 million in restitution to the IRS.

fresh concessions for long-term federal aid and raised the possibility of quick bankruptcy for either manufacturer.

Obama took the extraordinary step of announcing the government will back new car warranties issued by both GM and Chrysler, an attempt to reassure consumers their U.S.-made purchases will be protected even if the companies don’t survive.

“I am absolutely committed to working with Congress and the auto companies to meet one goal: The United States of America will lead the world in building the next generation of clean cars,” Obama said in his first extended remarks on the industry since taking office nearly 10 weeks ago. And yet, he added, “our auto industry is not moving in the right direction fast enough to succeed.”

Obama, flanked by several administration officials at the White House, announced a short-term infusion of cash for the firms, and said it could be the last for one or both.

Chrysler, judged by the administration as too small to survive, got 30 days’ worth of funds to complete a partnership with Fiat SpA, the Italian manufacturer, or some other automaker.

GM got assurances of 60 days’ worth of federal financing to try and revise its turnaround plan under new management with heavy government participation. That would involve concessions from its union workers and bondholders. The administration engineered the ouster of longtime CEO Rick Wagoner over the weekend, an indication of its deep involvement in an industry that once stood as a symbol of American capitalism.

Marijuana trafficking case dismissed

Times-News

Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loebs said Monday he dismissed a marijuana trafficking case against a former Realtor because lab tests on evidence are not completed.

The felony case against Laurel Condon was dismissed Thursday in Twin Falls 5th District Court without prejudice, which means Loebs could re-file charges.

Condon, 39, was accused of felony marijuana trafficking after police searched her house and a garage in February, according to court records. Police allegedly found 3 pounds of pot worth an estimated $19,950 at 215 Fillmore St., along with $19,350 in cash, court records show.

Evidence in the case was sent to the lab for tests within days of it being filed, Loebs said. The case was filed on Feb. 13, court records show.

Condon, of Twin Falls, told the Times-News Monday she has no comment. In their dismissed case against Condon, police say she's pictured on a laptop from her home posing with marijuana plants, according to court records.

Condon was also charged with possession of a controlled substance in a case from last year, which has a hearing set for May 7 regarding an alleged probation violation, court records show.

New law protects wild areas in 9 states

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Obama signed legislation Monday setting aside more than 2 million acres in nine states as protected wilderness.

Obama called the new law among the most important in decades "to protect, preserve and pass down our nation's most treasured landscapes to future generations."

The law — a collection of nearly 170 separate measures — represents one of the largest expansions of wilderness protection in a quarter-century.

House passes controversial pharmacy bill

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

BOISE — The House voted 48-21 on Monday in support of a bill to allow pharmacists with moral objections to refrain from fulfilling prescriptions.

The measure had passed through committee after hours of testimony, despite the fact that pharmacist groups did not endorse it. Some say current Idaho law doesn't prohibit pharmacists from refusing to fill prescriptions.

The bill's sponsor, Rep. Tom Loertscher, R-Iona, said pharmacists should be free to refuse fulfilling prescriptions or items like birth control based on their conscience.

Two Magic Valley Republicans, Leon Smith of Twin Falls and Fred Wood of Burley, voted against the bill.

Smith said he didn't oppose it for moral reasons but rather legal ones, and pharmacists told him most of the provisions already exist in law.

"I heard from three pharmacists at home and basically they said, 'what are you doing messing with this?'" he said. "They could exercise most of these rights already."

Wood, a doctor, said the bill serves as an intrusion of the government in the doctor-patient relationship.

Opponents of the bill argued that pharmacists would be denying prescriptions, thereby forcing people to travel elsewhere to get them filled. Rep.

Stephen Hartgen, R-Twin Falls, voted in favor of the bill. He said the argument that it will reduce availability of drugs is flawed. He said there are pharmacies across the state, including in supermarkets.

"The idea that it's restricting access doesn't reflect the reality today," he said.

Rep. Wendy Jaquet, D-Ketchum, opposed the bill.

"I don't see the pharmacist as a gatekeeper, especially in rural Idaho," she said.

Idaho Power told to expand energy education in schools

PUC approves Idaho Power plan

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

State regulators directed Idaho Power Co. to expand two of its education programs last week, using money from the 2008 sale of sulfur dioxide emission credits, to teach kids about efficiency.

In a decision signed Friday, the Public Utilities Commission largely endorsed a proposal from the utility about how to use $500,000 for energy-education projects at schools across its service territory. The idea was first suggested more than a year ago by the Idaho Energy Education Project, whose coordinator, Bill Chisholm, is from Buhl.

Commissioners approved a modified version of a plan the utility proposed that would expand its current education efforts. Using $250,000 a year, the utility will expand the use of a home energy audit program in the classroom and pay for teams of students to research and present possible energy-efficiency measures at their schools. Commissioners, however, decided $75,000 a year for a suggested solar-panel program should be split between the other two initiatives.

An advisory committee will help Idaho Power create and run the programs, commissioners wrote, though it will not play an oversight role. It will also help the utility create a final review of the two-year program after it ends. The expanded programs are set to start with the new school year this fall.

Idaho Power's suggestions had been well-received by all parties at a workshop the PUC held in January in Boise. Commissioners wrote that they favored the utility's proposal over one from the state Office of Energy Resources and Department of Education because Idaho Power's focused on schools within its territory and has lower overhead and administrative costs.

A third proposal from Chisholm was rejected last year for not being detailed enough.

Education spokeswoman Melissa McGrath said Monday that Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna would have liked to see the joint proposal picked, but is excited to work with Idaho Power on its plan.

"We would have ensured that the energy-education programs were aligned to state standards," she said.

Chisholm said Monday that the approved program represents progress, even if it's not quite what he first envisioned and took longer to happen than he hoped. He now plans to weigh in on two new sulfur-dioxide sales, again recommending that some of that money be invested in energy efficiency, conservation and education.

"I'm actually very excited that it is moving forward," he said.

Idaho Power officials could not be reached Monday afternoon for comment.

Interested parties have 21 days to ask the PUC to reconsider its decision.

Sellers are making $12,000+ a month with eBay and Craigs List

Despite the fact that economic indicators point towards the United States heading towards a recession, with stock market crashes, home foreclosures, unemployment, gas prices peaking at all time highs and government bailouts. One of the major bright spots in this dismal economy is eBay. The opportunity to work with eBay and other online auction web sites can have positive benefits for anyone. Why settle for minimum wage when it's possible to make over $100,000 a year from the comfort of your home? Online Auctions are ever growing in popularity, and over 220 million people signed up for eBay, with approximately 1.5 million individuals making a full-time living through online auctioning, people are leaving their everyday jobs.

Michael J. Syme, online

auction expert and author of the book "Simple Steps to Making Money with Online Auctions," is one of many people who have left the mundane aspect of a 9-to-5 desk job and has begun to make his own income at home with the help of his children. Now Syme is making around $12,000 a month by selling a variety of items that can be found in any home and any yard sale.

"People shouldn't wait until they find themselves laid off or out of a job before they find out they are not financially secure," Syme said. "They should start ensuring their own and their family's financial future immediately."

Jessica H. a single mother of two says "I purchased my first new car this year from the extra money I made selling on the internet".

Not only does eBay allow people to make money and get rid of some things that may no longer be of use, there are more benefits than cash. If a seller can make $1,000 a month or more with eBay, they can qualify for most of the same benefits that would be made available in a regular 9-to-5 job, such as health, vision, and pharmacy and dental. Over 200,000 members of eBay qualify for these benefits and more.

Using eBay at home cut back on paying for gas and having to deal with the hassle of rush hour traffic, in addition, consumer demands through the Internet are continually growing, allowing for a higher income rate per seller. Consolidated revenues for eBay in the year 2008 are expected to reach anywhere from $7.05 billion to $7.3, a 31% improvement from the year 2007.

It's not surprising, with recent economic woes people are looking to make their dollar go further, eBay and other online auction sites are the place to buy items for a discount.

According to a speech given by former Senior Vice President of Products Development, Lynn Reddy, On eBay, there is an average of one car sold every two minutes, a car part or accessory sold every three seconds, diamond jewelry every 83 seconds, and a pair of timberland shoes every 10 minutes. These items and more, from concert tickets to clothing needs, are bought and sold daily by average people looking to gain or save on income to better their current cash flow.

"Anybody can do it if they know the right technique," Syme said. "With the right techniques it's easy to make extra income."

Author and eBay expert makes $12,000 a month from home

Syme said he does not recommend attempting to become a full-time online auctioneer with eBay without learning the basics first.

"It's like driving a car," Syme said. "It's easy to do but if no one shows you how to drive, you could end up in an accident that costs you time and money to fix."

This should not be taken as discouragement to start working with online auctions. It's rather easy to get started in the process and become acquainted with the techniques. With a little homework, access to an internet-ready computer, and some basic computer knowledge, anyone can be on their way to making money with the fastest growing community in the U.S.

"Why worry where your next paycheck will come from," Syme said, "when selling on eBay it's like getting paid every day."

Bliss child find nears

Child find and kindergarten registration for Bliss School District will be held from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. April 22 at the school.

Spring is the time for the annual Bliss School District screening and preregistration of children who will enter kindergarten in August. Preregistration allows the staff to work with parents to make sure their child has the necessary preschool skills needed for kindergarten. If you have a child who will be 5 years old on or before Sept. 1 who will enter kindergarten in the fall, please preregister them. You will need to bring a copy of your child's birth certificate and immunization records.

Federal and state laws require that all public school districts conduct annual child find activities to identify children with special needs who may need special education services to meet developmental disabilities and delays. Child find activities are conducted to create public awareness of special education programs, to advise the public of rights of students, and to alert community residents of the need for identifying and serving children with disabilities from the age of 3 through the semester in which they turn 21.

Disabilities and developmental delays include children who may have difficulty walking, talking, hearing or learning, or who may display behaviors that appear different from other children their age or their siblings.

On Thursday, Gooding County Sheriff's Deputy Jeromy Smith, right, received recognition from Twin Falls County Sheriff Tom Carter for being instrumental in saving the life of a Kimberly man.

Twin Falls County sheriff recognizes Gooding County deputy for heroism

By Mary Hanson
Times-News correspondent

GOODING — Gooding County Sheriff's Deputy Jeromy Smith was honored Thursday for recently going above and beyond the call of duty.

Smith, a six-year Gooding Sheriff's veteran, was headed home after assisting the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office on Feb. 27. As he drove back toward Gooding in his sheriff's vehicle through west Twin Falls County near Buhl, an emergency call concerning a man found not breathing in the water at Miracle Hot Springs came over his radio.

Smith decided to help and arrived at the scene to find a bystander attempting to resuscitate Gary Dickenson of Kimberly. Smith put his first-responder experience to work, quickly using the portable defibrillator in his vehicle to stabilize Dickenson before an ambulance arrived to take Dickinson to St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center.

"There is no doubt Deputy Smith contributed a major part in saving the man's life," Twin Falls County Sheriff Tom Carter said during a Thursday award ceremony.

"Deputy Smith could have continued to Gooding, letting someone in our county handle it, but he realized he could get there quickly and seconds greatly matter in a situation like that."

After Dickenson was safely on his way to Twin Falls, Smith drove back to Gooding and finished his shift without mentioning the incident to his co-workers or family. Family members who attended the award ceremony attributed that to Smith's modesty.

"He is modest," Smith's mother, Kay Pierce, said. "That's Jeromy, all right!"

Recurring trigger finger difficult to treat

DEAR DR. GOTT: I get trigger finger. This is the third one I have gotten in the past two years. A cortisone shot does nothing, and surgery is the only thing that has helped me. The episodes are very painful, and I want to know if there is anything to prevent them from happening again.

DEAR READER: Sadly,

ASK DR. GOTT
Dr. Peter Gott

you are probably a pro when it comes to recognizing the symptoms of a trigger finger. However, I will bring my reading audience up to speed before I answer your question.

Trigger finger is a condition in which a finger joint catches in a bent position (partial dislocation). A person might be able to straighten the finger with a gun's triggerlike motion and snap it back into proper position, thus the name.

More severe cases might lock the bent finger, and a person will be unable to straighten it. More than one finger can be affected at the same time, and both hands can become involved.

Common causes are repetitive motion of the fingers of the dominant hand at work, during sports, or with some hobbies.

While I can't say you won't continue to have symptoms, there are several steps you can take toward that goal. Soak your hand or hands in warm water. Stretch the fingers of one hand, and massage the palm and each digit with your opposite hand. Repeat the same process with the opposite hand. While you sit in front of the television in the evening, apply gentle massage to each hand for several minutes.

Avoid repetitive gripping whenever possible. If necessary, break up the routine with different hand exercises between the repetitions and take periodic rest breaks.

A Trig-Star competition was held recently at Camas County High School and Carey High School. The high school trigonometry competition is graded on correctness and time. The competition was sponsored at the high schools by the Big Wood Section of the Idaho Society of Professional Land Surveyors.

Students competed for a first-place cash prize of $125 and local merchant awards provided by the Sun Valley Company, Soldier Mountain Ski Resort and South Valley Pizzeria of Bellevue. Members of the Big Wood Section administered the test in Carey on Feb. 25 and in Fairfield on March 4. The winner of the Carey High School contest was Amy Ellsworth, daughter of Spence and Laurie Ellsworth of Carey. The winner of the Camas County High School Contest was Mollie McLam, daughter of Matt and Debbie McLam of Fairfield. Awards were presented at each school on March 9 during a brief ceremony. The winners test scores and times will now be entered into the competition at the state level with other students from across Idaho to determine the Idaho Trig-Star winner, with an award of a $500 scholarship from the Idaho Society of Professional Land Surveyors. The state champion can go on to a national competition which awards of $2,000, $1,000 and $500 scholarships for the first three places, along with teacher excellence awards. Trig-Star, sponsored nationally by the National Society of Professional Land Surveyors was created in 1984 to educate high school students about the profession of surveying and promote math skills.

SW Idaho officials say gang crime is down

NAMPA (AP) — Cooperation among various agencies has led to the convictions in federal court of more than 40 gang members or their associates the last five years in southwest Idaho, officials say.

“My take on it is there has been a decrease in crime generally and a marked decrease in gang crime, but it tends to ebb and flow,” Canyon County Prosecuting Attorney John Bujak told the Idaho Press-Tribune. “If you compare, go back a year, there’s been a significant decline in the number of cases. We used to have drive-bys daily, certainly weekly. Now every once in awhile two rival gangs get in a spat and you have these drive-bys.”

Bujak credited area task forces specifically designed to combat violent street crime combined with successful prosecution for the success in reducing gang crime.

A special assistant U.S. attorney works out of Bujak’s office and can prosecute gang members charged with federal crimes, which can lead to longer sentences.

Canyon County Deputy Prosecutor Ellie Somoza said gang members convicted of federal crimes are sent out of state to federal prisons.

“It’s been pretty significant the number of people we’ve taken off the street,” said Somoza, who has prosecuted gang cases at the state level for the past four years. “We don’t have any federal prisons in the state of Idaho, so they are sent away from family, their fellow gang members, their sphere of influence. It’s a way to effectively cut them out of the gang here in Idaho.”

Royal Roping Productions held the Triple Crown Team Roping Series in the Magic Valley in the fall of 2008. A portion of the proceeds raised has been donated to First Choice Home Care and Hospice with the remaining funds being gifted to the Alzheimer’s Association in Boise.

Use over-the-counter drugs such as Advil, Aleve or Motrin for minor pain symptoms.

If more severe problems occur, seek the services of your physician. You are no stranger to steroids, but apparently they don’t provide relief, so let’s bypass that option.

Trigger-finger release can be performed under local anesthesia. I don’t know whether you have had this performed, but you might want to speak with your physician about the possibility.

A final resort is surgery under anesthesia for tendon release, a procedure you have apparently already undergone.

I urge you to get into a stretching-exercise routine as a preventive measure. Start gently, and work slowly.

To give you related information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report “Managing Chronic Pain.” Other readers who would like a copy should send a self-addressed stamped No. 10 envelope and a check or money order for $2 to Newsletter, P.O. Box 167, Wickliffe, OH 44092. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I want to tell you about my experience with vitamin C tablets to stop urinary-tract infections. My urologist suggested two vitamin C tablets (1,000 milligrams each) daily. I have been free of UTIs for many years with this remedy. My urologist said it is more difficult for an infection to take hold in acidic urine.

DEAR READER: Your urologist is right on the money. Vitamin C helps increase the amount of acid in urine. As a result, the bladder is not an appealing environment for harmful bacteria. You have found a remedy that works for you and may help other readers. Thank you for writing.

Rueben Moses Jones Jr.

Rueben Moses Jones Jr., 96 of Twin Falls, passed away Saturday, March 28, 2009, at his home of a short illness.

He was born on May 29, 1912, to Rueben Moses Sr. and Mary Della Jones, at Mule Creek Ranch in Southern Idaho, which was a family owned ranch until 1970. He was the only son with three sisters. Rueben served in the U.S. army Air Corps, worked on farms, ranches and worked as a miner. In 1964, he worked for McVeys Inc. in Twin Falls for 10 years and then at Cactus Pete's until his retirement.

Rueben enjoyed hunting, fishing, visiting with people, and sharing stories, but his biggest love was going to the hills to cut firewood. He was known to many around as grandpa and loved to be called that. He will be missed by many friends and family.

Rueben is survived by three sons, Rueben of Fort Smith, Ark., Benny of Buhl, Idaho, and Bob (Terry) of Everett, Wash.; 18 grandchildren, and many self adopting grandchildren. He was preceded in death by his parents, three sisters, three grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

Memorial services will be held at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday, April 1, at White Mortuary "Chapel by the Park".

Dorothy Louise Cederquist Haslam

Dorothy Louise Cederquist Haslam, 92, of Twin Falls passed away Sunday morning, March 29, 2009, at St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center.

Dorothy was born to John Arthur "Art" Cederquist and Hazel Cordelia Spencer on Dec. 8, 1916, in Willitts, Calif. At that time, her father worked for Union Pacific Railroad and they moved frequently, living in California, Nevada and Utah. They settled in Salt Lake City so Dorothy could graduate from West High School in 1934. Dorothy played on the West Tennis Team and lettered in that sport. Dorothy fell in love with L. H. "Speck" Haslam and they eloped to Tooele, Utah, on June 19, 1934. This marriage was kept a secret for over 50 years, until the children were planning their 50th wedding anniversary. In 1933 her father moved to Twin Falls, to start the Globe Seed and Feed, and later Dorothy and her mother followed, along with Speck. They were officially married on Dec. 26, 1934, in Salt Lake City with all members of their families witnessing this event. To this union three daughters were born, Susan, Janet and Linda.

In their younger years, Dorothy and Speck were members of many social, fraternal and trade organizations in Twin Falls and Idaho. They were also charter members of the Blue Lakes Country Club and golf was their passion. They only took two vacations in their lives that were not golf oriented, one to China (no golf courses there at that time) and a Mississippi river trip (this was a real water hazard). Dorothy was a gracious hostess and loved the closeness of her dear friends. She was a fabulous cook, always testing new recipes on her family to see if they were good enough for the bridge or dinner party groups. In her older years, Dorothy was glued to the television watching all sporting events, but you better not expect a conversation during a golf or tennis match. Speck passed away in June 1997. She especially loved her family and was always interested in their lives at various places in the world. She was a member of the First Presbyterian Church in Twin Falls.

Dorothy is survived by her daughters, Susan "Sue" Pollard, Twin Falls, Linda (John) Pope, Livermore, Calif.; son-in-law, Larry McElliot, Twin Falls; seven grandchildren, Steve, Melissa, Adam, Shelly, Brad, Chris and Lori; nine great-grandchildren; four great-great-grandsons plus one more due anytime; a friend, Lynn Espy and her massage therapist, Brenda Malone, whom she loved and who brought her great relief. She is preceded in death by her parents; her husband; daughter, Janet; sister, Virginia; an infant brother, Ellsworth; a great-great-grandson, Andrew; a son-in-law, Roger J. Pollard and numerous aunts, uncles and cousins with whom she had been very close. Dorothy was dearly loved by all of her children and will be missed by all who knew her.

Visitation for family and friends will be held from 4 to 8 p.m. Thursday, April 2, at White Mortuary "Chapel by the Park" with graveside service being held at 11 a.m. Friday, April 3, at Sunset Memorial Park. In lieu of flowers the family request that remembrances be sent to The Mustard Seed, 455 Main Ave. E., Twin Falls, ID 83301. Please join the family in celebrating Dorothy's life by sharing remembrances and signing the online guestbook at www.MeM.com.

For obituary rates and information, call 735-3266 Monday through Saturday. Deadline is 3 p.m. for next-day publication. The e-mail address for obituaries is obits@magicvalley.com. Death notices are a free service and can be placed until 4 p.m. every day. 1 'polypill' may replace handful of heart drugs

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — It's been a dream for a decade: a single daily pill combining aspirin, cholesterol medicine and blood pressure drugs — everything people need to prevent heart attacks and strokes in a cheap, generic form.

Skeptics said five medicines rolled into a single pill would mean five times more side effects. Some people would get drugs they don't need, while others would get too little. One-size-fits-all would turn out to fit very few, they warned.

Now the first big test of the "polypill" has proved them wrong.

The experimental combo pill was as effective as nearly all of its components taken alone, with no greater side effects, a major study found. Taking it could cut a person's risk of heart disease and stroke roughly in half, the study concludes.

The approach needs far more testing — as well as approval from the Food and Drug Administration, something that could take years — but it could make heart disease prevention much more common and more effective, doctors say.

"Widely applied, this could have profound implications," said Dr. Robert Harrington, an American College of Cardiology spokesman and chief of Duke University's heart research institute. "President Obama is trying to offer the greatest care to the greatest number. This very much fits in with that."

The polypill also has big psychological advantages, said Dr. James Stein of the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

"If you take any medicines, you know that every pill you see in your hand makes you feel five years older. Patients really object to pill burden" and respond by skipping doses, he said.

No price for the polypill has been disclosed, but its generic components cost only a total of $17 a month now and doctors expect the combo would sell for far less.

The study was led by Dr. Salim Yusuf of McMaster University in Hamilton, Ontario, and Dr. Prem Pais of St. John's Medical College in Bangalore, India. The findings were presented Monday at the cardiology college's conference in Florida and published online by the British medical journal Lancet.

The study tested the Polycap, an experimental combo formulated by Cadila Pharmaceuticals of Ahmedabad, India. It contains low doses of three blood pressure medicines (atenolol, ramipril and the "water pill" thiazide), plus the generic version of the cholesterol-lowering statin drug Zocor, and a baby aspirin (100 milligrams).

Doctors have talked about such a possibility for years. As the patents on many heart medicines expired and the drugs became available as cheap generics, a few companies started trying to develop all-in-one pills.

The family of Linda Draper wishes to express our sincere thanks and appreciation to all our friends, neighbors and relatives for the cards, flowers, food, visits and all other acts of kindness that were so graciously extended to us during our recent loss. They were deeply appreciated.

12 die in bloody siege at Pakistan police academy

By Stephen Graham
Associated Press writer

LAHORE, Pakistan — The deadly police academy siege played out for hours Monday on Pakistani television, with scenes of the militants in the compound holding security forces at bay.

Local TV showed frightened police scrambling over the walls of the academy, desperately trying to escape the gunmen who killed at least six cadets and wounded scores of others.

The scenes were reminiscent of the three-day terrorist siege of Mumbai, India, in November, and analysts say these commando-style attacks stoke even greater fear than bombings because they generate more media attention and portray the state and its security forces as weak.

Black-clad Pakistani commandos eventually stormed the compound on the outskirts of Lahore to end the eight-hour siege by the grenade-throwing gunmen, with three militants blowing themselves up and authorities arresting four, officials said. At least three other unidentified bodies were recovered.

Mohammed Amir Rana, a terrorism expert at the Pakistan Institute for Peace Studies, said Pakistan-based terrorist groups historically focused on battling India have often used commando-style attacks rather than the suicide bombings favored by al-Qaida and the Taliban.

Rana said he believes a surge in these types of attacks indicates terrorists are learning from each other and adopting what they see as an effective tactic.

Taliban militants in Afghanistan carried out similar commando-style attacks in Kabul on the Justice Ministry in February and a luxury hotel in January 2008.

“You see a trend here from bombings to suicide bombings and now commando-style attacks,” said Rana. “When one group has started a new tactic, then a second group adopts it because they think it is more effective.”

The year-old civilian government is under pressure from the United States to contain extremists and has been struggling to rally public support in the face of the violence in what many in Pakistan see as America’s war.

Pakistan’s top civilian security official said militant groups were “destabilizing the country,” suggesting the plot may have originated with Pakistani Taliban leader Baitullah Mehsud.

Meanwhile, a Taliban member claiming to speak on behalf of a shadowy little-known group called the Fedayeen al-Islam said it was behind the attack.

Tom and Pam Hlady pose Monday on the porch of their five-bedroom Fargo, N.D. home. They are willing to house as many as nine evacuees of the Red River flooding even while they go on vacation Thursday to Phoenix. Such overwhelming generosity is synonymous with North Dakota. As a result, storm shelters are virtually empty.

Looking out for their own In Fargo, goodwill runs as deep as the Red River

FARGO, N.D. — One family offered their home to anyone left homeless by flooding, even sharing their security entry code. When another couple lost their house, total strangers showed up at their hotel with chicken dinners, brownies and quilts.

In the neighborly spirit synonymous with North Dakota, some people have given out their phone numbers on radio talk shows, offering shelter to any listeners in need. The generosity is so common that even as thousands of people are driven out of their homes by the overflowing Red River, most storm shelters are virtually empty.

“There is a different flavor up here — the type of hard-working ethic and the people helping each other up here that you don’t see in a lot of cities,” said Tom Hlady, who signed up through his church to take as many as nine people into his five-bedroom home.

On Monday, weary residents were grateful to see the Red River retreating after its steady, threatening climb last week. But they faced a new threat: an approaching snowstorm expected to kick up wind-whipped waves that could threaten the sandbag levees. The storm was expected to arrive Monday afternoon and persist through Tuesday evening.

Locals don’t consider the outpouring of kindness at all unusual.

Their 138-year-old city was ravaged by a fire more than a century ago and tested often over the years by the Red River. Fargo, they say, is a survivor, and one neighbor watching another’s back is a way of life.

Hlady and his wife are leaving this week for a vacation in Phoenix. They planned to give their home’s keypad security code to the church for anyone who needs a place to stay.

“People can go in, use our food, our beds and do whatever they need to do,” Pam Hlady said.

Red Cross spokeswoman Courtney Johnson said emergency shelters are being used by a relatively small number of flood victims.

On Sunday night, three shelters in Fargo, Grand Forks and Moorhead, Minn., hosted just 257 people, including about 30 firefighters. That, Johnson said, suggests that most families found other places to stay.

The spirit of outreach is all over news radio.

When sandbaggers were needed urgently in nearby Hendrum, Minn., broadcasters repeatedly gave driving directions to volunteers, and hundreds of people turned out to save the town. When someone requested a Weary residents welcomed the Red River’s further retreat Monday but faced an approaching snowstorm expected to kick up wind-whipped waves that could threaten the sandbag levees they built to protect their city from a major flood.

Storm latest test for Fargo’s levees

FARGO, N.D. (AP) — A blizzard battered North Dakota on Monday, threatening to create wind-whipped waves that could lash the patchwork levee system that has shielded much of Fargo from the swollen Red River.

Engineers scrambled to shore up the dikes in hopes of averting the latest potential disaster nature has inflicted on this beleaguered city.

The winter storm was expected to bring up to a foot of snow and 30 mph winds that could weaken the levees with big waves. Officials acknowledged that no one knows whether the levees will withstand the punishment.

The Red River dropped to 38.96 feet Monday, nearly 2 feet below its peak but nearly 21 feet above flood stage.

windshield for emergency airboats, a listener volunteered to make one.

One caller to WDAY said he had delivered a bunch of pizzas to the Fargodome stadium, where the sandbagging effort was based. Then he called back to say he would fetch a bunch of crayons, coloring books and puzzles.

“Where do kids need them?” he asked.

Sarah Sebranek, a social studies teacher at Fargo North High School, has seen it at every turn.

Last Tuesday, when the sandbagging effort intensified, more than half of her students did not show up for classes. When her church offered free day care so parents could help fight the floodwaters, the Red Cross showed up unannounced with peanut butter and jelly, snack chips and pint-sized cartons of milk.

Obama tougher on autos than banks

By Charles Babington
Associated Press writer

Analysis

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama is dealing with the beleaguered auto industry more sternly than he has with bailed-out banks and insurers as he takes the nation another step into uncharted government regulation of industry.

By now, it may seem obvious that the government is playing major roles in running huge corporations, including banks, insurance companies and automakers receiving billions of dollars in federal aid. Yet the message is still hard to absorb by many unions, retailers and, most visibly, executives who took big bonuses or chartered jets to congressional hearings where they sought the money to keep their firms afloat.

The Obama administration, perhaps reflecting public sentiment outside Michigan, has shown less patience with the auto industry than with other troubled sectors.

General Motors’ chief executive, Richard Wagoner, must go, the administration said, workers must make concessions and Chrysler must pursue a merger with Italian automaker Fiat SpA if more government help is to be considered.

The administration is tightening its oversight of bailed-out financial companies, too, but it has generally been more lenient in terms of time, personnel and other factors. Nor has Obama demanded that financial-sector workers and unions make more “painful concessions,” although that sector is far less unionized than the auto industry.

Union contracts, it appears, are not as sacrosanct in the administration’s opinion as the one it has left intact at AIG, which provided politically radioactive retention bonuses to employees.

The president went farther down the road of federal intervention Monday. He embraced possible short-term bankruptcy and reorganization by Chrysler and GM (Ford is not involved), an idea he had rejected as president-elect in November. Obama even advanced the novel idea of having the government back new-car warranties issued by both GM and Chrysler to reassure buyers nervous about taking a chance on those companies.

“I know that when people even hear the word ‘bankruptcy’ it can be a bit unsettling,” Obama said in his remarks at the White House.

Indeed. But many other events, including plunging job rates and savings accounts, have unsettled Americans even more.

From economy’s ills, new American villains rise

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — “The better the villain,” Alfred Hitchcock said, “the better the movie.” And in the epic production that is the United States of America, we have followed that advice since the earliest settlers landed. For every hero the American story factory produces, a vivid new villain comes off the assembly line in short order.

We love bad guys in America — even when they’re not really bad. Demonizing helps define the best in us. Here’s an incomplete list from the history books: Indians, Quakers, witches, Englishmen, the federal government, Southerners and Northerners, Chinese, Germans, Jews, Japanese, North Koreans, communists, socialists, Vietnamese, liberals, conservatives, gays, lesbians and Muslims. The Evil Empire and the Axis of Evil.

Now, a fresh group has been dropped into the cultural dunk tank. Bin Laden? Back-burnered, at least for now. Saddam? Gone and forgotten. Instead, in these jumbled days of economic uncertainty, fairly or unfairly, America’s newest Snidely Whiplashes bear faces like those of Bernie Madoff, AIG executives and the private jet-flying heads of the Big Three automakers.

“Someone always needs to get dragged into the hot seat. It’s part of the American process,” says Imad Hamad, who would know. He is regional director for the American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee and is based in Dearborn, a town just outside Detroit where Arabic script is ubiquitous and more than 30 percent of the population is of Arab descent.

In the eyes of some Americans, Muslims and Middle Easterners became the cultural bogeymen after 9/11, and Hamad’s organization and community are still dealing with the fallout. Even with a new president whose grandfather was Muslim, he says, suspicion continues to make life difficult for people stereotyped by anti-Muslim sentiment. “In the Middle East, they cut you one time,” Hamad says. “In America, they put you in the death machine over and over.”

The minting of villains, justified or otherwise, is a time-tested human response to threat and fear. When something horrible happens, it’s easier to blame a group than to blame a process or to look inward. But in America, where big narratives have always ruled the day, it seems especially pronounced. You’d think a nation of immigrants might be wari-er of demonizing outsiders, but history says otherwise.

PROMISES, PROMISES: Saving teacher jobs tough

While Obama intends stimulus money to states for education, hard to make sure states use it for that

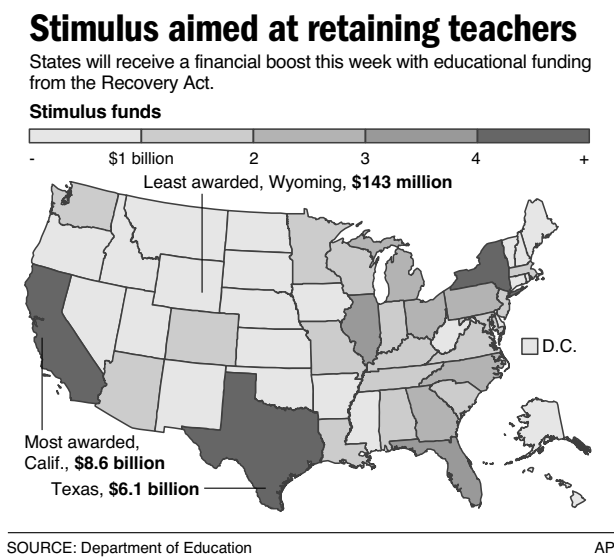

By Libby Quaid
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama promises his economic stimulus law will save hundreds of thousands of teaching jobs, but some states could end up spending the money on playground equipment or wallpaper — and the president might not have the authority to stop them.

Obama says nearly all of the education money in the Recovery Act, which will start going out to states this week, is designed to retain teachers.

Education Secretary Arne Duncan threatens to “come down like a ton of bricks” on anyone who defies the administration’s plans to bring relief to states like California where 26,500 teachers have gotten pink slips. Across the country, 9 percent of teachers — about 294,000 — may face layoffs because of budget cuts, according to a University of Washington study.

But plans for the money are pulling in other directions, particularly in states with Republican governors:

- Hawaii Gov. Linda Lingle wants to fill a budget gap.
- Idaho Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter wants to hold the money in reserve.
- South Carolina Gov. Mark Sanford wants to pay down debt; he’s been turned down by the White House budget office and is threatening to refuse some of the money, as is Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin.

There are loopholes in the stimulus law for both states and school districts.

Of the $100 billion for education in the stimulus bill, $40 billion comes as part of a fund to stabilize state and local budgets that has fewer strings attached. As the bill made its way through Congress, lawmakers decided not to prohibit states from using the stabilization money to replace precious state aid for schools. That means instead of getting extra help to weather tough times, school districts could wind up with no additional state aid even as local tax revenues plummet.

State lawmakers and governors in Kansas, Rhode Island and Texas are among those seeking to use their federal stimulus dollars to replace state aid, rather than add to it.

In addition, the law was written so broadly that most of the stabilization dollars can be spent on just about anything — carpet, wallpaper, playground equipment, even new school construction — which may bother Senate moderates who insisted on dropping a new school construction program before they would vote for the bill.

That’s because school districts can spend the

Shooter in N.C. rampage may have been after wife

By Mike Baker
Associated Press writer

CARTHAGE, N.C. — A painter accused of shooting up a North Carolina nursing home may have been after his recently estranged wife during a rampage that killed seven defenseless residents and a nurse tending to their care, authorities said Monday.

Robert Stewart’s wife was working as a nursing assistant at Pinelake Health and Rehab when he attacked Sunday, not long after the two split, said Carthage Police Chief Chris McKenzie. The breakup was part of a rocky relationship that spread over many years and bookended other failed marriages, according to court documents.

Authorities declined to elaborate on how their relationship may have played a role in the rampage, but the prosecutor who charged the 45-year-old suspect with murder left no doubt the attack had a purpose.

“We can share this: This was not a random act of violence,” said Moore County District Attorney Maureen Krueger.

A day after the shootings, Krueger said authorities didn’t plan to release much more information about Stewart — nicknamed “Pee Wee” by his hunting buddies because, one said, he’s about 6-foot-2 and 300 pounds — or the case outside of the courtroom. Several search warrants police executed in the hours after the shooting were sealed, and Krueger would not say why.

But it appeared the relationship between Stewart and his wife, identified by a neighbor as Wanda Luck, was tied in some way to the rampage.

“We’re certainly looking into the fact that it may be domestic-related,” McKenzie said.

According to marriage records in Moore County, a 19-year-old Stewart married 17-year-old Wanda Gay Neal in July 1983. They divorced three years later, and both were involved in several other marriages before they reunited and married a second time in June 2002. McKenzie said he believed the couple had recently separated again.

After his first divorce from Luck, Stewart remarried in South Carolina to a woman named Ellen Susan McCaskill. She identified herself as Sue Griffin during a brief interview on Sunday, and told reporters Stewart had recently started telling family he had cancer and was preparing for a long trip and to “go away.”

In an interview Monday, Griffin said that during their 15 years of marriage, Stewart would often talk about Luck and make comparisons between the two, complaining that, “Wanda doesn’t do it like that.”

“I’d look at him and say, ‘Well, I ain’t Wanda,’” she said. “As time went on, I could tell he wasn’t quite over her.”

One of Luck’s former husbands, Joseph Ferguson, said Monday that their union lasted less than two years. He said Luck talked about Stewart, whom he later met, calling him a “normal guy” and saying he was shocked by Sunday’s events.

World’s largest laser now ready for use

By H. Josef Hebert
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — After more than a decade of work and $3.5 billion, engineers have completed the world’s most powerful laser, capable of simulating the energy force of a hydrogen bomb and the sun itself.

The Energy Department will announce today that it has officially certified the National Ignition Facility at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory in California, clearing the way for a series of experiments over the next year. Scientists hope the experiments eventually will mimic the heat and pressure found at the center of the sun.

The facility, the size of a football field, consists of 192 separate laser beams, each traveling 1,000 feet in a one-thousandth of a second to converge simultaneously on a target the size of a pencil eraser.

While the NIF laser is expected to be used for a wide range of high-energy and high-density physics experiments, its primary purpose is to help government physicists ensure the reliability of the nation’s nuclear weapons as they become older.

The laser “will be a cornerstone” of the weapons stewardship program “ensuring the continuing reliability of the U.S. nuclear stockpile without underground nuclear testing,” Thomas D’Agostino, head of the National Nuclear Security Administration, said in an interview Monday.

The NNSA, a semi-independent arm of the Energy Department, oversees nuclear weapons programs.

The NIF laser was first proposed in the early 1990s, when the project’s cost was put at $700 million. Construction began in 1997. Its early years were marked by setbacks including trouble — eventually overcome — in keeping its critical optics perfectly clean.

U.S. launches new fight against Afghan drug trade

By Lolita C. Baldor
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — American authorities are planning a broad new campaign to choke off the prime source of financing for terrorists in Afghanistan, sending in dozens of federal drug enforcement agents to disrupt the country’s massive opium trade and the money that streams to the Taliban and al-Qaida.

The surge of narcotics agents, which would boost the number of anti-drug officials inside Afghanistan from a dozen to nearly 80, would bolster a strategy laid out last week by the Obama administration to use U.S. and NATO troops to target “higher level drug lords.”

Detailed plans described to members of Congress behind closed doors earlier this month suggest the effort will be modeled after the federal Drug Enforcement Administration’s campaign against drug cartels in South America.

Rep. Adam Smith, D-Wash., who chairs the House Armed Services terrorism subcommittee, said the DEA’s effort is aimed at crippling the Afghan narcotics networks by driving up the costs of the opium trade.

“Any financing effort is really going to focus on the drug trade and the DEA is going to have to play a key role,” Smith said.

Unveiling his new strategy for Afghanistan last week, President Barack Obama said the country’s economy “is undercut by a booming narcotics trade that encourages criminality and funds the insurgency.”

As the U.S. beefs up its military and civilian presence there, Obama said officials will track the growth of the Afghan illicit narcotics production as one measure of the administration’s progress.

The strategy review called the drug trade the major driver of corruption in Afghanistan, and said allied forces must support local counternarcotics efforts to destroy drug labs, equipment and caches. It also urges efforts to identify other agricultural programs for Afghan farmer to replace their dependency on the illegal drug trade.

The DEA aims to complete its expansion inside Afghanistan by later this fall, building a team of nearly 80 agents and some additional analysts, said Michael Braun, who was DEA’s operations chief until late last year.

“We are undergoing a significant increase there as we speak,” said Braun, now managing director of an international security consulting firm that works with U.S. authorities in south Asia.

Braun said proceeds from the drug trade in Afghanistan have allowed the Taliban to flourish. There are also indications, he said, that al-Qaida is heavily involved in Afghan opium trafficking.

Trimming the sails of payday lenders

Idaho is the Wild West as far as payday lenders are concerned.

Short-term loans of up to $1,000 can be made for an unlimited amount of time in this state. There is no maximum fee and the annual percent rate isn't capped.

Now the Legislature is taking some small steps to reign in the payday-loan cowboys, who cater to mostly low-income customers who can least afford high fees and triple-digit interest rates.

The Senate on Thursday unanimously approved a bill requiring Internet lenders to be licensed by the state. The legislation would invalidate any loan provided by an unlicensed lender, and allow the Idaho Department of Finance to issue cease-and-desist orders and to sue unlicensed lenders. The legislation now goes

Our view: A bill in the Legislature requiring Internet payday lenders to be licensed is a good first step, but tighter regulation of the industry is needed.

What do you think?

We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

to the House.

That's fine as far as it goes, but it's time Idaho put some limits on the mess that payday borrowers can get into if they don't make payments on time.

Idaho, Oregon, Utah, New Mexico, Delaware, South Dakota, West Virginia, Virginia and Wisconsin are the only states that don't limit fees or interest rates which payday lenders can charge. The trouble with that system is that once you default, it's practically impossible to catch up because the fees and interest rates keep going up.

Let's say you write a post-dated check for $460 to borrow $400 for two weeks. If at the end of 14 days your check bounces, you're on the hook to your bank for a not-sufficient-funds fee plus the original costs of the loan and any additional fees or increased interest rates the lender might impose.

Members of the payday loan industry's national trade association are required to offer customers in default an extended repayment plan at no additional cost, but not all payday lenders are members of the trade group.

Idaho needs to place reasonable limits on payday loans, as has Washington. In that state, they're limited to 45 days and the fee is 15 percent up to $500 borrowed and 10 percent from $500-$700, which is the legal maximum for short-term loans. The cost is capped at $15 per $100 and the annual percentage rate at 390 percent, plus Washington requires short-term lenders to offer repayment plans to customers in default.

Even in a let-the-marketplace-rule state like Idaho, lawmakers have some responsibility to curb predatory lending. Capping interest rates and fees would be good first steps.

Should Obama be betting the ranch on Geithner?

Being slow to anger is fine. Being slow to honesty is not.

President Obama got frosty during last week's press conference when asked about the bonuses paid to employees of American International Group, the failed company that received an $180 billion taxpayer bailout. He said he needed time to get angry "because I like to know what I'm talking about before I speak."

JOAN VENNOCHI

When Obama finally got mad, he got mad at Wall Street. But he knows who else deserves the cold shoulder. The list of bonus conspirators includes his own economic team, which is headed by Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner.

The controversial AIG contracts, which provide for so-called retention bonuses, were written in March 2008. A year later, after taxpayers became 80 percent owners of AIG, the bonuses were protected by Connecticut Senator Christopher Dodd, via a special provision inserted into the federal stimulus bill.

Dodd said he did it because Geithner's Treasury Department asked him to do it.

Geithner said his staff did it and he did not know "the full extent" of the bonus payments until March 10 — an assertion that defies logic.

Reporting by The Wall Street Journal and The New York Times establishes the following chronology:

AIG cited the bonus retention plan in a public filing in early November. Geithner, then president of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, was involved in major AIG matters until he recused himself around the time of his Nov. 24 nomination as Treasury secretary.

Some lawmakers raised the matter of AIG bonuses at a December hearing. Over the next weeks, AIG officials briefed lawmakers about the retention bonuses. On Feb. 28, Treasury Department staff were briefed on AIG matters, including the bonuses, by the New York Federal Reserve Bank.

On March 3, Geithner was asked directly about the bonuses at a House Ways and Means Committee hearing.

During that hearing, Rep. Joseph Crowley, a Democrat from New York, asked what could be done to stop AIG from paying $160 million in bonuses.

Geithner responded by saying executive pay in the financial industry had gotten "out of whack" in recent years. He promised to do something about it when companies getting taxpayer bailouts were involved.

The bonuses were front-page news on March 15. Geithner eventually said he would take "full responsibility" but insisted he did not learn of the bonuses until March 10. A Treasury Department spokesman later said Geithner "was not aware of the timing or full extent of the contractual retention payments or other bonus programs until his staff brought them to his attention on March 10." It took until March 20 for Geithner to confirm that his department pushed Dodd to write the budget loophole into the economic stimulus plan.

The president has made it clear Geithner is his guy. What he has never made clear to the American public is why.

Obama stood behind

Geithner when his then-nominee said he didn't pay his taxes because of some misunderstanding of the tax code. Now Obama is standing behind Geithner when he says he didn't know about the AIG bonuses because he didn't fully understand what his staff was negotiating.

The president is now asking American taxpayers to trust Geithner's plan to help buy up so-called toxic assets, as well as to expand the government's authority to take over troubled corporations like AIG.

That's asking for a lot of trust. So far, on a personal level, Geithner has done little to show taxpayers he deserves it. But Obama continues to praise him, and even said in a "60 Minutes" interview that he would reject Geithner's resignation, if offered.

A market rally boosts Geithner's stock when it comes to pleasing Wall Street. But it shouldn't erase the honesty question for Main Street.

A Treasury secretary who trims the truth on any level is a liability. But Obama is sticking with his investment, out of loyalty, stubbornness, or both.

There has been plenty of time to figure out who knew what about the AIG bonus formula and when they knew it. If the full calculation doesn't get Obama angry, it should.

How to pay off the national credit card

President Obama sent Congress a bold budget reflecting the values of his campaign and the dire economic straits he inherited. This plan would, however, raise deficits to unsustainable levels well after the economy recovers. Now Congress has a chance to make the budget better by reducing the long-term deficits.

Or it could make it worse. The president's budget reflects the candidate's diagnosis of America's economic ills and offers good remedies. It proposes investments in education, science and infrastructure that will, if spent effectively, enhance the productivity of American workers. Steps toward health-care reform, especially electronic medical records and research on the cost-effectiveness of treatments, will help make the system more efficient.

Most of these targeted cures enjoy wide public support, but that support starts to erode when it comes to paying the bill. Designed to facilitate a rapid economic rebound, the budget's humongous multiyear deficits (overwhelmingly attributable to the recession itself, the financial rescue and the temporary stimulus) are both inevitable and appropriate. But as the economy recovers, that higher spending should be recouped. The "pay-fors" in the Obama budget are well designed, but they are not big enough to compensate for the increased spending once economic growth returns.

Obama would shift tax burdens from average working Americans to those who earn most, but the proposed shifts are modest and, on balance, would reduce future revenue. The president would turn the temporary Making Work Pay credit into a small permanent tax cut for most workers and enhance the earned-income tax credit for low-wage earners. He would return the top tax-bracket rates to the Clinton-era 36 and 39.6 percent from the Bush-era 33 and 35 percent.

Restricting tax deductions to a maximum of 28 percent is a good idea, but it should be pushed further. It would be preferable to convert deductions to credits, so that all taxpayers get the same benefit from a given dollar of, say, mortgage interest paid. Differential subsidies to upper-income homeowners are not only unfair but encourage the building of more McMansions.

The other major "pay-for" in the budget is the cap-and-trade plan, since auctioning pollution permits would generate revenue. Tightening the emissions cap over time would raise the price of carbon-based fuels in a reasonably efficient way, encourage shifts to alternative fuels and reduce the amount of heat-trapping carbon-dioxide being released into the atmosphere. The impact of rising transportation costs on low-income people would be mitigated by the proposed income tax changes in favor of low-income workers.

The pay-for package is persuasively designed, but it will not fully compensate for the rising spending. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that, if the president's budget were approved, deficits would remain above 4 percent of gross domestic product even after the economy recovers and that the national debt as a percentage of GDP would nearly double, from 42 percent in 2008 to 82 percent by 2019. Since much of that increased debt would be held by the Chinese and other foreigners, America's vulnerability would be heightened.

Congress could greatly improve the president's budget by accepting its main outlines but adding steps to reduce long-run deficits. Lawmakers could phase out the income tax cuts at a lower level by protecting, say, 92 percent of taxpayers from tax increases instead of 95 percent. They could convert tax deductions to tax credits in a way that raises more revenue or redesign the climate-change proposal to increase revenue faster (perhaps adding a small gas tax increase that would rise in the future).

Congress could increase funding for health-care reform by including part of employer-paid health benefits in taxable income. It could put the Social Security system on a sustainable long-term basis by making minor tweaks to benefits and revenue to take effect a decade or more hence. Or it could pare back future spending on programs not contributing to raising productivity. All of this may sound politically poisonous, but so does unsustainable long-term borrowing.

There is also a serious risk of Congress making the president's proposal much less fiscally responsible by accepting the new spending and tax cuts but rejecting the pay-fors. That is a scary scenario that only strong, responsible congressional leadership can avoid.

Alice Rivlin, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, was the founding director of the Congressional Budget Office and was director of the White House Office of Management and Budget from 1994 to 1996. She wrote this commentary for The Washington Post.

We're figuring out how to win in Afghanistan

WARDAK PROVINCE, Afghanistan — You drive up to the forward operating base in Wardak province in an armored Humvee, with the machine-gunner sticking up through the roof and his butt swinging on a little perch just by your head. Outside there's a scraggly downtown, with ragamuffin Afghan children, almost no old people (the median life expectancy is 45) and dust everywhere. The dust of Afghanistan piles up in front of the storefronts and covers the ruins of the buildings destroyed during the Soviet period, or during the civil war or during some lost conflict from centuries past.

The Humvee takes the serpentine path through the checkpoint and you pass a double line of soldiers heading out on foot patrol. There's a soldier that looks from a distance like a child in gear, but it turns out to be a tiny American woman smiling under her armor, pack and rifle, and you think that of all the great powers who've humped their way over these mountains, not another one sent out warriors as unlikely or effective as these.

After the checkpoint, there's a parking lot with great lines of heavy vehicles. For years, the coalition forces fought this war on the cheap, but that's changing. The U.S. has just increased troop levels tenfold in Wardak. The parking lots are bursting with hulking machinery, the avalanche of metal America brings to a war it takes seriously.

There's a line of portapotties and you're brought into a plywood room. There are about 25 Army Rangers inside except for a special-ops guy, Maj. Moses, who is dark-skinned with a thick beard.

As they talk, it becomes clear that aside from killing bad guys, they're also trying to figure out how to reweave Afghan society.

Before the Soviet invasion in 1979, Afghan towns had three parallel authority structures: the tribal elders, the religious clerics and the government representatives. The Soviets decimated the tribes and the indigenous government. That left only the mullahs, and their sudden unchecked prominence helped explain the rise of the Taliban.

The terror and the fall of the Taliban reduced clerical authority, too. By 2002, when the coalition forces arrived, village society was fractured, social capital decimated. The resulting disorder has been a perfect nesting ground for the insurgents. The insurgents are not popular in Afghanistan. But they have money, and young men in the villages talk about accepting a few hundred bucks to plant an IED.

Between 2002 and 2005, the coalition and the Afghans were slow to recognize the perils of social fragmentation. The general view was that warlordism and civil war were the biggest threats. Therefore, power should be centralized with the national government.

That approach has had some success. The Afghan National Army is the country's most trusted institution. But it's also had many shortcomings. The national police force is ineffective. The central government has rarely been able to reweave the social fabric at the village level. Nobody's been able to establish rule of law or end rampant corruption.

So the Afghans and the coalition are adapting. There's been a shift to supplement central authorities with village authority structures. Under the National Solidarity Project, villages elect Community Development Councils. Western aid agencies give the councils up to $60,000 to do local projects, but it's not the projects that matter most. It's the creation of formal community structures. Mohammad Halim Fidayi, the governor of Wardak province, and the guys in the plywood room are creating the Afghan Public Protection Program. Under it, villages would no longer depend solely on the national police sent from Kabul. Local committees would hire their own constabulary to guard schools, bridges and neighborhoods. Alongside just 26 national policemen in the area, there will be 250 local men from the APPP.

The program is controversial. Many feel it will lead to a return to local militias and warlordism. But if Afghanistan is to stabilize, there have to be local authority structures. The culture of conversation and consensus has to be formalized in institutions. These local structures have to be connected upward to the central state. And that's beginning to happen amidst the armored Humvees and the daily threat of death.

When you put more boots on the ground, you not only augment your army's firing power, you give it the capacity to experiment. A few years ago, the good guys had only vague ideas about how to win this war. Now they're much smarter.

A few myths about nuclear power

Thirty years ago this week, a chain of errors and equipment malfunctions triggered the defining event in the history of American nuclear power: the accident at Three Mile Island. Although no one died and the health consequences were insignificant, the mishap was vivid confirmation that things could go wrong with a nuclear reactor. It almost instantly galvanized popular opposition to this form of power, giving rise to lingering misconceptions about one of our nation's largest sources of electricity.

Three Mile Island killed the idea of nuclear power in the United States. The 1979 accident and the fear it spawned were undoubtedly setbacks to the nuclear power industry. Only recently did utilities even attempt to license new reactors again. But Three Mile Island didn't even kill nuclear power at Three Mile Island. While TMI 2 was destroyed, TMI 1 is still in operation today. In fact, in generating electricity, nuclear power is second only to coal, which produces about half the power we use. Nuclear today produces more electricity than it did at the time of the accident — about 20 percent compared with 12.5 percent in 1979.

Nuclear power is bad for the environment. Many nuclear reactor byproducts are dangerous and require careful long-term storage. This is at the root of the fairly widespread belief that nuclear power is incompatible with a concern for the environment, even though its effects compare favorably with coal's.

Nuclear power is "unnatural." From Godzilla to Blinky the three-eyed fish on "The Simpsons," many of pop culture's oddest creatures owe their existence to the mutating powers of radiation. It's easy to forget that radiation and nuclear processes are pervasive in the natural world. President Harry S. Truman put it memorably when he presided over the keel-laying of the USS Nautilus, the world's first nuclear-powered ship, in 1952: "Her engines will not burn oil or coal. The heat in her boilers will be created by the same force that heats the sun — the energy released by atomic fission, the breaking apart of the basic matter of the universe."

A nuclear power plant is similar to a nuclear bomb. Not really. Nuclear power plants use fission — the splitting of uranium atoms to release enormous energy — to create power. Modern nuclear weapons use nuclear fusion: the fusing together of hydrogen atoms to release even greater amounts of energy.

Nuclear power isn't without hazards, and the industry does itself a disservice by proclaiming it can construct a reactor that is "inherently safe," implying a condition in which nothing bad can ever happen. That's not possible in any manmade creation. It's also easily disproven the instant something bad does happen — as it did at Three Mile Island. All methods of power generation involve trade-offs, a balancing of risks against returns. We shouldn't evaluate nuclear power any differently.

How to care for your urban forest

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

KETCHUM — Think “forest” and you probably don't envision trees surrounded by homes, sidewalks and city streets. But municipal arborists know that those trees are as much a forest as any in the wilderness.

And in the urban forest, the activities of people — intentional and accidental — mean those trees need extra attention and care. People's needs for shade or sun, views and wind protection shape where and how trees are grown, and it's easy to make mistakes in planting, growing and pruning.

So how should you care for your urban trees?

Experts Jen Smith, arborist for the city of Ketchum, and Dave Kiesig, horticulturalist at College of Southern Idaho, offer these tips:

Choose your trees carefully

“The funniest thing I hear from people is, ‘I planted a tree and it got too big,’” Smith said.

Be sure to buy a variety of tree that will work where you plant it even after many years. Numerous Web sites and books describe the heights and girths of mature trees.

Nurseries are quick to recommend varieties that grow well in your area, but don't be afraid to vary a little from those recommendations. Otherwise, Smith said, you risk contributing to monocultures — too few varieties in an area can increase susceptibility to pests and diseases.

Where to plant?

Again, keep in mind the mature dimensions of your tree when planting. Also consider how buildings and sidewalk or street surfaces will impact the tree — Smith is quick to show a photo of a small tree planted in a three-foot gap between two tall buildings as an example of bad planting.

Don't plant the tree too deep or too shallow. Where the bark ends and the root ball begins is where the ground surface should be, Kiesig said.

“Ninety-five percent of a tree's roots are in the top 18

Photos by ARIEL HANSEN/Times-News

Ketchum arborist Jen Smith shows a pair of trees off Warm Springs Road that were improperly pruned. They are now weighted heavily to the south and may fall over. If they were dangerously near homes or cars, she says, she would cut them down.

Construction equipment can damage tree branches and roots, and ultimately endanger the tree, so consult an arborist if you are digging or building near trees.

inches of soil. People have this image of a tree's roots going to China, and that doesn't happen with most species,” he said.

Are there rules for pruning?

Yes, absolutely, say both experts. That's why you want a licensed professional to do your pruning unless you've taken classes and feel comfortable that you won't do damage. Inappropriate pruning can be extremely bad for a tree, even contributing to its untimely death.

Topping trees improperly, for example, can cause the tree to respond by putting out lots of quick growth, which will be weaker and can more easily cause damage to both the trees and the property beneath them. Smith points to several trees in downtown Ketchum that were badly topped — but quickly fixed by the city's arborists. Although the trees are growing healthily now, it's easy to see where the original cuts were made.

Ketchum arborist Jen Smith keeps this piece of tree trunk to demonstrate the damage that can be done by Christmas lights in just two years. She enforces regulations in the city of Ketchum that require lights to be removed during warmer months when the tree is growing.

WANT TO LEARN MORE?

Contact your city's administrators to find out what events will be held in honor of Arbor Day — many sponsor workshops on pruning or fertilizing and other tree-related activities. This year, Arbor Day is April 24, but events may be held before or after the designated day.

If you hire professionals to assess or prune your trees, ensure they are certified by the International Society of Arboriculture. Visit isa-arbor.com for information about tree care and expert certification.

Also, don't be afraid to take down a tree that could be hazardous. “At some point you have to cut your losses and realize the risk is too great,” Smith said.

The fairest mirrors of them all can remake a room

By Kim Cook
For The Associated Press

When Louis XIV decided that the royal palace at Versailles should have a huge Hall of Mirrors, his minister of finance saw an opportunity.

Jean-Baptiste Colbert, a fierce nationalist, was determined that Paris be able to compete with Venice in producing luxury products like silk, lace and mirrors. He recruited Venetian artisans to come to Paris to craft all 357 of the hall's mirrors. They devised a method of pouring hot glass onto an iron table that allowed them for the first time to make really big mirrors.

With its elaborate ceiling art and solid silver tables, lamps and orange tree pots, the magnificent 17th-century hall was the setting for balls, births, even the signing of the Treaty of Versailles.

We don't live in glittering palaces, but many of us do tend to think of mirrors as a tad gaudy, a bit Vegas, and not a material we can decorate with easily.

None of which need be true.

We might consider mirrors the way feng shui practitioners do. They see mirrors as serving three purposes: expansion, reflection, deflection.

A well-placed mirror, particularly one that reflects an open doorway or window, can open up a small space. It doubles the feeling of space and, in feng shui, serves an even greater function: It's believed that when a mirror reflects something good — such as a family portrait, pleasing scenery or a symbolic object — its positive effects are doubled. Bagua mirrors, on the other hand, are seen in feng shui as bad-energy deflectors used on the outside of the home.

How to convert garage, basement space for living

DEAR JIM: We are older and have sold our car. For more living space, we plan to convert our garage into a home theater and may also finish the basement. How should we insulate the brick and concrete walls? — Jack H.

SENSIBLE HOME
James Dulley

DEAR JACK: With homes not selling well and construction costs still increasing, many families have decided to make major improvements to their homes instead of moving or building a new one. Converting a garage or a basement into additional living space is popular.

The methods to make the conversions and to insulate the walls of the basement or garage are basically similar. The direction of moisture movement is generally opposite though, making the placement of the vapor barrier different. For below-ground walls (basement foundation) moisture typically moves from outdoors to indoors. Concrete actually is porous.

One option for converting the rooms is to have a contractor install a predesigned room conversion system made specifically for this purpose.

These systems typically include wall mounting systems for insulated panels. Special materials are used to block moisture and minimize mold and mildew.

Champion offers a particularly nice room conversion system. A vinyl attachment system is connected to the walls, and fabric-covered insulated panels are snapped into place. They have R-13 insulation level, and the special fabric covering absorbs sound, making it good for home theaters.

The fabric panels can easily be snapped out to gain access to the walls.

If you decide to do the conversion yourself, there are several methods to insulate the walls. The simplest method is to build a 2-by-4 studded frame against the garage or basement walls. Insulate it with fiberglass batts, and cover the walls with drywall or paneling. A drawback to this method is you will lose floor space because the new walls are fairly thick.

This project requires only a minimum skill level, but there are some important details. Pay attention to the proper location of the vapor barrier depending upon your climate and whether it is below or above ground level. Repair any current or potential problems with the existing walls, because future access to them will require cutting through the new wall surface.

If you will not need high levels of insulation, several companies make rigid foam insulation panels designed to fit neatly over furring strips.

This makes the installation easy and provides a nailing base on 16- or 24-inch centers to attach drywall or paneling. Insulation values range from about R-3 to R-10.

Don't forget the floor, because it also loses heat — and carpet over concrete may not be comfortable. Consider installing a breathable resilient insulating board over the concrete floor.

DEAR JIM: I try to be as energy efficient as possible, so I keep one-gallon jugs of water around the house during winter for thermal mass. Should I keep them full next summer, or should I pour the water on the garden? — Bill H.

DEAR BILL: Having much thermal mass in your house can reduce your utility bills and keep your family more comfortable. With more thermal mass, temperature swings in your house are reduced, particularly if you try to use some passive solar heating.

Keep the jugs filled year-round. During the summer, thermal mass can slow down how fast your house heats up each morning. This should keep your air conditioner from coming on as early in the day.

Mirrors

A mirror clad in a pretty or unusual frame will enliven the most basic room.

"They're a focal point in bathrooms, functional in bedrooms and closets, can serve as accent pieces on dining room walls and in foyers, and add height and light to small, dark spaces. When designing a room, it's the one thing I almost always use," says designer and HGTV celebrity Will Smith.

Notes New York designer Geoffrey Bradfield, "mirrors give a room an illusion of infinity."

Round mirrors can be especially smart looking. Pottery Barn has an Art Deco-style beveled glass beauty that hangs on a faux leather strap. Another is wrapped in sustainably harvested cherry tree bark.

Uttermost has a stable of artists creating mirror designs, such as Grace Feyock's "Raindrops," a constellation of tiny mirrored circles orbiting a larger one. Her "Kellan" is a swirl of silver leaf around a beveled mirror, and "Tamryn" boasts a head-dress of woven palm tree fibers.

Horchow offers a hand-painted, wood-framed mirror designed by Janice Minor that looks like it's bristling with porcupine quills.

And mirrors don't have to be hung. Prop one on a dresser or console with a few favorite objects placed in front of it; you'll enjoy your things from two vantage points.

floor level in an entryway comes in handy. Horchow's version features a mirrored frame, which helps bounce the light around.

Sundance Catalog has a casement style framed in steel, reminiscent of old warehouse or country mill windows.

MirrorMate offers groupings of "Pizzazz" custom-framed mirrored squares, with a personalized look. Use them as artwork run up to the ceiling, or as a decorative headboard.

The company also custom frames existing "raw" mirrors, such as bathroom vanities. The frames attach directly to the mirror. Do the perimeter or, on an especially large mirror, frame just the area over the sink to add a dramatic, "finished" look.

Lisa Huntting, the creative brain behind the concept, says it was her own move to a new home in Charlotte, N.C., that sparked the idea.

"Though I was decorating the bathrooms with accessories and pictures, they just never looked 'done' because that huge mirror remained naked!" she says.

The frames also help solve issues like edge-silvering, or unattractive mirror clips, she says. They run about $100-$200, depending on size and style.

Mirrored finishes also are turning up on dressers, shelving, backsplashes, candlesticks, even fireplaces as a relatively inexpensive way to add glamour and lightplay to a space.

Panel discussion on soil preparation trees nearby a few years before they will need to take down an old one they love. "That eases the hurt and the pain, and it works," he said.

Minimize the effects of people

Urban trees face challenges that those in the wilderness do not — pollution, crowding by buildings, insufficient fertilization or watering.

And people do stupid things, like backing cars into them, nailing signs to them or using poles to prop up dying, leaning trees. In her office, Smith has a segment of trunk she cut from a tree that was strangled by Christmas lights wrapped around it for two years, with ridges deeply embedded in an irregular spiral.

She said that since she was hired in Ketchum about five years ago, she has spent much of her time educating people about their tree mistakes, and advising them how to nurture happy, healthy trees. She recommends that urbanites with trees consult an arborist — some cities offer the service for free — to keep from making mistakes and keep those trees in great shape for years to come.

Man land ‘Cave’ men create male havens in garage, basement

By Jennifer Forker
For The Associated Press

Is it a refuge? A clubhouse? What is this thing, this man cave? And is it dangerous?

This is what the women folk may want to know. For some men, it's all too clear: The man cave is sanctuary.

"When we're married, we have to give up a lot of territory, then when we have kids, we give up more territory," said Joe Stone, 40, a minister in Thornton, Colo. "We have this tiny area of territory that we'll defend to the death."

That's the cave. It's often in the basement but sometimes in the garage among the garden tools. And it's trendy. Turn on the television: DIY Network airs "Man Caves," hosted by Jason Cameron and ex-NFL player Tony "The Goose" Siragusa, and HGTV will launch "Man Land" in June.

Reach out to friends, asking to speak with their friends who have a man cave, and wait for the responses to roll in:

From Columbia, S.C.: "I have one of those! TV with cable. Refrigerator. Pingpong table. Hockey equipment. We haven't had a car in that garage in years."

From Dubuque, Iowa: The man cave is where "my decorations or sports memorabilia actually get to be on display where no one else sees it, since it doesn't go with the rest of the house's decor."

From Anchorage, Alaska: "It's where I go to unwind (to watch movies). It's mostly subterranean; no light gets in or gets out. It's the 'war room' — we pay our taxes from down there."

From Overland Park, Kan.: "We built a sports basement a few years ago that is the ultimate 'man cave,' especially during football season. It is outfitted with a big screen, full bar, fireplace, pool table, pingpong table, book shelves, Wii and autographed footballs. A buddy of mine has nicknamed it 'Nirvana.' My 17-year old son has friends over nearly every weekend and they immediately head for the basement."

Then there was the young man at the Arvada, Colo., liquor store who said his cave is the Barcalounger in his garage. He doesn't have a wife, but he does have roommates. The need for his own domain was the same.

"The man cave is a place where they don't have any ... social demands on them," said Mark L. Held, a clinical psychologist in Greenwood Village, Colo.

The cave is where men are free from relating to people, from the "honey-do" list, from talking about their day with their wives. It's neither

Design tips for a masculine-charged space

By Jennifer Forker
For The Associated Press

For Jason Cameron, host of DIY Network's "Man Caves," the bare-bones man space just won't do. Testosterone must seep out of every corner.

"It's got to speak to you that this is a man cave when you walk in," said Cameron.

Cameron, and co-host Tony "The Goose" Siragusa, a former NFL defensive lineman, have created two dozen man caves in the nearly two seasons they've been on the air. Most are sports-related, with memorabilia, but they've built at least one cigar lounge and a wine-tasting room.

The man caves they like have two things in common: There's a bar, often with a Kegerator, and a flatscreen TV, the bigger, the better.

Some things that cannot go into the man cave: scented candles, potpourri, tchotchkes, doilies, baby toys, neon paint colors and plants ("guys usually kill them anyway," Cameron said). The list grows longer with every new episode of "Man Caves."

Cameron recommends earth-tone paint colors, or as he puts it, "earthy man colors," and hard surfaces, such as rock, brick and steel.

"It's back to the cave thing," he said.

Comfortable seating is a must, and the lights can't glare on that giant TV.

Monica Pedersen, a designer on HGTV's "Designed to Sell," is creating her husband's cave in their suburban Chicago home and also has design tips for this masculine-charged space.

She recommends wall units that fit all of a man's stereo, TV and gaming components, with room to spare for future purchases. IKEA and JCPenney, for example, sell good media walls that start in the $300 range, she said.

"If your man falls more and more in love with his space, he'll need more storage," Pedersen said.

If the cave has windows or doors to outside, Pedersen suggests protecting electronics in cabinets behind glass doors.

For seating, she recommends something sectional that can be added to later, preferably in leather because it holds up well and cleans up easily. When it comes to furniture, "look for options," said Pedersen. "Your guy might want this right now, but you might want to add to it or change it" later.

Caves don't have to have that dark, 1970s feel, she said. "We have this idea in our head of the man cave and how it's going to look, but it can be clean and sleek looking," she said.

For a guy with a lot of opinions about the cave, you'd think Cameron would have one of his own. You'd be mistaken. He and his wife live in a 1,000-square-foot condo in Hoboken, N.J. — there's not an inch to spare.

Does this concern Cameron? Not in the slightest.

"I've built so many now, so when it comes time to build my man cave, I'll know exactly what I want," he said.

bare-bones variety that includes a sofa and a TV, to the high-end one that boasts flatscreens and framed art. Stone, the minister, is a staunch believer in "less is more." A well-heeled man cave misses the point of getting back to basics to lessen the stress load.

"If I could have a campfire in my basement, a spit and a good dog, I would be content for the rest of my life."

— Joe Stone, 40, from Thornton, Colo.

"They shine too much," he said. "There's too much welcome in there."

Stone speaks of "defensive perimeters" to maintain his sanctuary. (He also plays a lot of the interactive war game "Call of Duty" in there.)

"You have to learn the relative balance of filth," Stone explained. "If it's too dirty it will affect your relationship with your kids and your wife."

He keeps cereal bowls, a few empty beer bottles and some clothes lying around his basement cave — nothing too offensive. He also tries to clean it weekly "so I don't get sick."

His wife, Laura Stone, 38, has come to terms with the unkempt room, he said.

"She navigates through it," Stone said. "I keep a trail open for her."

Stone laughs at himself and what he believes is some primordial need.

"There is something, definitely, to this," he said. "After a long day of hunting and gathering, we want to go back to the safety of our cave."

"If I could have a campfire in my basement, a spit and a good dog, I would be content for the rest of my life. As long as the fire would also power my TV, my gaming computer, my surround sound and my ESPN Game Zone."

Like Stone, others allow family into their caves. Todd Moshier, 39, an account manager at a graphics design business in Columbia, S.C., keeps a pink lawn chair in his garage-based man cave so he can watch "SpongeBob" cartoons with his 5-year-old daughter, Laura Claire. But he's also got speakers so large they could double as furniture.

"I have the speakers that I wasn't 'allowed' to bring in the house wired up out there, too," Moshier said. "I can rock out."

Yes, the man cave may also be a response to women's tendency to do the nesting and decorating in the rest of the house.

"It goes back to the tree house, the clubhouse, the 'no girls allowed,'" said Monica Pedersen, a designer on HGTV's "Designed to Sell." "I think it's their adult version of that, and I don't blame them for that."

Lawn & Garden Services

Conditioning Your Garden Soil

The ideal garden soil is deep, friable, well-drained, and is high in organic matter. Proper soil preparation provides the basis for good seed germination and subsequent growth of plants. Managing soils for optimal plant growth is an ongoing process and consists of proper tillage, improvement through addition of amendments, fertilization, and irrigation.

Soils in Idaho vary widely due to topography, climate, and origin. In southern Idaho, most soils are high in pH (alkaline) and have very little organic matter. These soils may need extra applications of phosphorus and micronutrient fertilizers and should never be amended with lime or wood ash. The pH of your soil is important in determining which nutrients will be readily available to your plants (see illustration at left). Sandy soils need constant addition of organic matter, frequent and light applications of water, and constant fertilization. Clay soils may need to be amended with organic matter and/or soil additions to improve water penetration. It is important to know the characteristics of your soil in order to design an appropriate management plan.

Regardless of soil type, careful use of various amendments can improve soil and provide the best possible starting situation for your plants. The best amendments provide organic matter and consist of manures, composts, peat moss, crop residues, grass clippings, green manures, bark, wood chips, straw, or any number of other materials. The type of amendment chosen is dictated by availability and cost.

Before fertilizing or tilling, it is best to get the soil tested for nutrients, pH, and organic matter. There are simple soil test kits available at nurseries that can do an adequate job. There are also several labs, both university and private, that will be happy to test your soil for a fee. Once you determine fertilizer needs, broadcast evenly on the soil surface and till it in. Make sure the soil is not too wet during cultivation to avoid compaction.

It is important to understand that most plants needs are supplied by the soil. Consequently, proper soil preparation will go a long way toward achieving a successful garden.

USDA and Treasury to fight payment fraud

Data provided by IRS will be used by agency to validate payment eligibility

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack announced that the U.S. Department of Agriculture and Internal Revenue Service have combined efforts to combat farm program payment fraud. Department officials say the joint effort will ensure that high-income individuals and entities who request

USDA payments meet income limits set forth in the 2008 Farm Bill. The move comes in response to the discovery of nearly $50 million in payments to ineligible farmers during 2008.

“One of the goals of this Administration is to make certain that USDA payments are not issued to individuals and entities that exceed income eligibility limits established by law,” Vilsack said in a written statement to USDA state offices. “Once this verification system is fully operational, high-income individuals and entities will be identified by USDA before farm program payments are actually disbursed to them.” In order to be eligible for USDA payments in 2009 and following years, all recipients will be required to sign a form that grants the IRS the authority to provide income information to USDA for verification purposes. Failure to obtain such form will make the producer ineligible for program benefits. A written release from each producer or payment recipient will be required for this process. The Farm Service Agency will not receive actual tax data for the producers. In October 2008, the U.S. Government Accountability Office released a report stating that because the USDA does not have the management controls — such as reviewing tax returns — it

Ethanol’s by-product raises concerns over food safety

Cows congregate on a farm. Several studies have linked distillers grain to elevated rates of E. coli in cattle, while ethanol producers try to kill bacteria with antibiotics.

Some worry antibiotics could enter food chain

By Mark Steil
Associated Press writer

WORTHINGTON, Minn. — Ethanol’s main by-product, which is sold as livestock feed, has raised potential food safety concerns.

Several studies have linked the byproduct, known as distillers grain, to elevated rates of E. coli in cattle. And now, distillers grain is facing further scrutiny because the Food and Drug Administration has found that it often contains antibiotics left over from making ethanol. Ethanol production relies on enzymes, yeast and sugar to convert corn into fuel. And just as the wrong bacteria in the body can sicken people, it can also cause a variety of ailments in a batch of ethanol. Mark von Keitz with the University of Minnesota’s Biotechnology Institute said in ethanol production, the main enemy is a bacterial bug that makes lactic acid. “What these organisms do is they also compete with the yeast for the sugar,” said von Keitz. “But instead of making alcohol, they make primarily lactic acid.”

Ethanol producers use penicillin and a popular antibiotic called virginiamycin to kill bacteria.

If enough of the bacteria are present, von Keitz said fermentation can be ruined. “It gets acidified to the point that the yeast is no longer able to properly produce ethanol, and then you’re stuck with a big batch of corn mash,” said von Keitz. If that happens, there’s no ethanol and no profit. To prevent the problem, producers rely on medicine. “What people operating these plants are trying to do is to keep these lactic acid bacteria in check,” said von Keitz. “And one way of doing that is with the help of antibiotics.” Ethanol producers use penicillin and a popular antibiotic called virginiamycin to kill bacteria. And that raises two potential concerns.

One is that these treatments might promote the growth of bacteria that are resistant to antibiotics. The development of these “superbugs” is a major concern in health care because they reduce the effectiveness of medicines. Von Keitz found some bacteria that were, in fact, resistant when he sampled bacteria at four Midwest ethanol plants several years ago. The second concern is that the antibiotics could find their way to humans through the food chain.

Biotech seed bill tabled in Montana

Committee attends dinner attended by Monsanto reps

By Kahrin Deines
Associated Press writer

HELENA, Mont. — A Montana Senate committee has sidelined a bill that sought standards for how biotech companies test crops for patent infringement, burying the measure after members attended a private dinner also attended by biotech giant Monsanto Co. representatives. The Senate Agriculture Committee’s action on Tuesday provoked charges of unfairness after news emerged of the dinner, which was attended by most of the committee at a private club in Helena. The bill would have required Monsanto and other companies to get permission from a farmer before taking a sample from their crops. If the farmer denied permission, the company could seek a court order. Under the measure, either the farmer or the company could also ask the state Department of Agriculture to oversee the sampling. The bill was tabled on a 6-3 vote. The St. Louis-based Monsanto did not offer public testimony about the bill but did express its opposition in private at the dinner, according to committee chairman state Sen. Donald Steinbeisser, R-

Sidney. Five of nine committee members attended the dinner, paid for by another bill opponent. “The lobbyists wanted to inform the committee of their concerns, and that’s all it was about,” Steinbeisser said. A nonprofit North Dakota-based group known as Growers for Biotechnology said it picked up the tab and sent out the invitations. Democratic Rep. Betsy Hands, the bill’s sponsor, blasted the private meeting, saying “the cards were stacked” by the time the committee met for the bill’s actual hearing. Committee dinners are not illegal in Montana, but veteran lawmakers and lobbyists both said hosting such an event prior to a bill hearing is highly unusual. The controversial measure discussed at the dinner split the state’s farm lobby. It would have set rules for how companies such as Monsanto can test farmers’ fields for what is known as seed piracy. When farmers buy genetically engineered seeds, they must agree not to harvest and reuse them from year to year. Some farmers, however, argue that pollen can drift with wind and water, exposing small growers to expensive legal tussles with big biotech companies even when they are innocent. “After the death penalty and horse slaughter bills, this is the largest number of communications I’ve had, and these are from farmers,” said Sen. Cliff Larsen, D-Missoula, before voting in favor of the measure.

Oakley man to represent Idaho on potato board

Times-News

Ryan Cranney, of Oakley, was seated as a Board Member on the United States Potato Board at the organization’s annual meeting earlier this month. He was selected to serve on the Board by former Agriculture Secretary Ed Schafer and formally begins his three-year term that will end in Feb. 2012. Cranney grows russet potatoes — Rangers, Westerns and Burbanks — for the food processing industry. He has farmed with his father, Mike Cranney, for the past 15 years. They also grow sugar beets, wheat, barley and alfalfa. “I am a fifth generation farmer,” Ryan Cranney said. “Our company, Cranney Farms, just celebrated its 100th year of operations in 2007.” Cranney graduated from Utah State University in Logan, Utah with degrees in political science and finance. He has served on the NPC Board, is a board member on his irrigation district and a PAC member on the Idaho Crop Improvement Association.

New Mexico gets split status for bovine TB; state relieved of reduced status

By Sue Major Homes
Associated Press writer

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — The U.S. Department of Agriculture has given New Mexico “split status” for bovine tuberculosis — meaning only two counties in the state will be under strict requirements for moving and testing cattle. The status, announced Friday, will require bovine TB tests only for cattle shipped from eastern New Mexico’s Curry and Roosevelt counties, said Sens. Jeff Bingaman and Tom Udall, D-N.M. “Good news. We’re quite pleased here. This will relieve most of the state from the burden of the reduced status,” New Mexico Livestock Board executive director Myles Culbertson said. Culbertson cautioned, however, that the decision has not been published in the Federal Register, so details weren’t known. He expects it to be published soon. The livestock industry is New Mexico’s single most important agricultural commodity with total annual sales of dairy and beef cattle totaling almost $2 billion. Last September, the USDA removed New Mexico from a list of bovine tuberculosis-free states. New Mexico officials complained that action was excessive and could cost ranching and dairy operations unnecessary tests — particularly for those far from the site of bovine TB. Caren Cowan, executive director of the New Mexico Cattle Growers’ Association, called the decision “draconian” and the state’s congressional delegation asked the USDA to reconsider, saying the downgrade could cost producers more than $4 million a year.

FUEL REPORT

Fuel prices in south-central Idaho increased slightly compared to the previous week.

The average price for a gallon of regular-grade gasoline in the region increased 4 cents to $1.85, while price for a gallon of diesel increased about 5 cents to $2.04.

The average price for a gallon of gas in Idaho was $1.90, while the national average was $2.04.

Oil prices tumbled below $49 Monday as unease about the economy — from Asia to Wall Street — raised doubts about the global appetite for energy. Gasoline futures plunged more than a dime a gallon.

AGRIBUSINESS BRIEFS

'Pork' dollars for hog farm raises stink

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Taxpayer watchdog groups say something smells about $250,000 in federal funding earmarked for a factory farm in northwestern Missouri: Why is it coming from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development?

But Missouri Sen. Kit Bond and the company involved, Premium Standard

Farms, defend the spending, pointing out that HUD has programs for rural economic development, too.

The earmark was set in 2006 while Bond, a Republican, was chairman of an appropriations subcommittee that handled the money.

Bond designated it to help Premium Standard Farms, a subsidiary of Smithfield, Va.-based Smithfield Foods Inc., come up with technology to better manage hog waste, a major challenge on farms that house thousands of animals, said Shana Marchio, Bond's spokeswoman.

Funds to go toward organic farming

LINCOLN, Neb. — There's good news for Nebraska's organic farming industry.

The state Department of Agriculture has announced that it will receive funding for certified organic producers and processors through the USDA's cost-share program.

Producers and processors can receive reimbursement for up to 75 percent of the costs of obtaining or renewing organic certification, up to $750.

could not ensure that payments are made only to qualified individuals.

The GAO report also found that of the 1.8 million individuals receiving farm payments over a three year period ending in 2006, more than 2,500 had an average adjusted gross income that made them ineligible for farm payments.

Because of the inability of USDA to verify income, more than $49 million was paid to ineligible individuals.

The 2008 Farm Bill mandates that recipients of many Farm Bill payments, including direct payments, are not eligible for these payments if their gross non-farm income average for the previous three taxable years is greater than $500,000.

Additionally, direct payments cannot be paid to participants whose average adjusted gross farm income for the three-year period exceeds $750,000.

Participants are ineligible for conservation payments if their nonfarm average gross income for the three-year period exceeds $1 million, unless at least two-thirds of their total average adjusted gross income is derived from farming.

The state immediately applied for split status.

Erik Ness, a spokesman for the New Mexico Farm and Livestock Bureau in Las Cruces, said the USDA's latest decision was "a big win for the livestock industry."

"We have a saying around here: You don't need a sledge hammer to tune a piano. That's kind of what was happening," he said.

Cowan said the Cattle Growers' Association was pleased by the split status, which she said will save millions of dollars in testing and handling fees for livestock producers throughout the state.

She said, however, her organization plans to try

"We have a saying around here: You don't need a sledge hammer to tune a piano. That's kind of what was happening."

— Erik Ness, a spokesman for the New Mexico Farm and Livestock Bureau to change the USDA's TB testing rule, which "has clearly proven unworkable for thousands of cattle producers in the U.S."

States that accept cattle from New Mexico also make their own rules. Culbertson said he expects receiving states to acknowledge the TB-free status for most of New Mexico.

Safety

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has taken a mostly hands-off approach to the use of antibiotics in the ethanol industry. But amid increasing concerns over food safety in recent years, the agency is taking a closer look.

"A year ago we put a survey out to the FDA field people to collect samples of those distillers grains, and start analyzing for antibiotic residues," said Linda Benjamin, a chemist with the FDA's Center of Veterinary Medicine.

At this point the story gets murky. Benjamin won't say if any of the antibiotics exceeded federal guidelines.

Those guidelines are part of the problem; they're a patchwork and far from definitive on what levels of antibiotics in distillers grain are safe.

If the FDA decides to restrict antibiotics in the ethanol industry, it could have far-reaching consequences.

Distillers grain is a major source of low-cost livestock feed. Any restrictions on its sale and use as feed will hurt the profit-scarce ethanol industry and the livestock farmers who rely on it.

Charlie Staff, executive director of the Distillers Grain Technology Council, said distillers grain is one of the few dependable mon-eismakers left for the ethanol industry.

"If they didn't have distillers grain as a revenue, many more of them wouldn't be able to operate," said Staff.

Use of corporal punishment sparks passionate debate

DEAR ABBY: I am writing about your response to "John in Savannah" (Feb. 1), the 24-year-old man who is unsure how to explain to people that using a belt to discipline his three little girls is different from abuse.

Sometimes, in order to teach that actions or behaviors are inappropriate, some form of punishment, whether it's a spanking or a time-out, becomes necessary. I give my children three chances when they misbehave. If they continue, they are punished. They know that there will be consequences if they do wrong. Like John's children, mine are also frequently praised for being courteous and well-behaved.

Small children do not understand long-term punishment like grounding, taking away toys, etc. By the time the duration of that kind of discipline has passed, the child has forgotten the reason for it. For young children to understand the consequences of wrong behavior, the measures must be swift and short-term.

John should answer those who ask by saying he uses "consistent discipline accompanied by corporal punishment when necessary." If more parents did the same as John and me, we'd have fewer behavior problems in schools.

— MOM IN CONTROL IN GAINESVILLE
DEAR MOM IN CONTROL: Thank you for commenting. However, I stand

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

by my position that there are more effective ways to discipline a child than by using physical punishment. After printing "John in Savannah's" letter, I was flooded with mail from parents and adult children across the country.

Read on:
DEAR ABBY: Are John's children obeying because they are making good choices or because they are afraid of the belt? Also, does he realize how badly he is hurting his children, both physically and emotionally? When you strike someone with an object, you have no idea how hard you are really hitting. Also, the humiliation of being beaten could last those kids a lifetime.

Honestly, it takes more effort to come up with corrections other than spanking, but it is well worth it. We post our family rules and their consequences in plain view. Part of my son's allowance depends upon making good choices at home and at school. And yes — it does work. My son just brought home his report card with excellent marks for conduct.

— POSITIVELY REINFORCING IN MICHIGAN

DEAR ABBY: I think a little "old-fashioned discipline" is in order. I am a pre-school teacher, and I am appalled at what the 2- and 3-year-olds do and say. Swearing, hitting and disrespect are only a sampling of the things that have made my jaw drop. Time-outs, revocations of privileges and "talks" are laughed at, and the bad behavior is not curbed.

Parents allow their children to get away with things my mom would have screamed at me for, and we teachers get the fallout. My experiences as a baby sitter for older kids were much the same. Should we be "nice" to our children so they can grow up without boundaries? I think not.

— SACRAMENTO EDUCATOR

DEAR ABBY: My father used a leather slipper on me instead of a belt. He also used his hand and his impressive vocabulary to keep me in line. Was I afraid of him? Absolutely! Did I love him? I am still not sure. I grew up to be a woman who is afraid of men, afraid of making a mistake, afraid to share myself and my ideas, and generally timid about life.

John's daughters are learning that the way men in their lives show love is to beat them. He is setting his girls up to marry an abuser because they think abuse is normal behavior. I hope John realizes soon that fear and love cannot share the same space in a child's heart.

marked path to achieve your greatest hopes and dreams. Today is a day to organize your workspace and to get those cluttered files into order.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Don't start what you can't finish. A mild flirtation could lead you down an unhealthy path and make you blind to the ultimate consequences. Stick to your principals and remain cool under pressure.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Don't put the cart before the horse. A new romantic interest could have you considering commitment but it really was just a moment of pleasure. Focus on realistic goals rather than a passing fancy.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Truth can remedy a nasty situation. Keep the books balanced and focus on organizational tasks today. Center yourself on the old routine and stay carefully attuned to your financial well-being.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Passions can be confusing. The flames of lust are heating up, but what comes up must come down. Keep your feet on the ground and play hard to get to avoid involvement with a casual hookup.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): If you've got it, flaunt it. Others may be drawn to your physical magnetism or dazzled by an aura of power. You and that special someone may find yourselves climbing to new heights of intimacy.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Temptation can lead down the road to ruin. You can find true love with a steady partner but a casual fling could turn to disaster. You are oozing attractiveness but you should be wary of who responds.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): As an intellectual, you are quite conservative about most matters. As much as you would like to give into the tugs on your heartstrings, your attentions and talents are better suited to other endeavors.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A lesson lived is a lesson learned. Listen attentively with both ears and a kind heart to get to the essence of the matter at hand. A wise lover may show their affections rather than discussing them.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Look beneath the surface. Soothing conversations can strengthen bonds of affection if confusion is avoided. Words of encouragement may come, but you will need to read between the lines to find them.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"It is normal to give away a little of one's life in order not to lose it all."

— Albert Camus

Today's deal is from Eddie Kantar's "Take Your Tricks," a series of helpful tips supported by deals that show you how to implement the advice he has given you.

Before you read today's tip, consider the contract of four spades on a trump lead. Then read Kantar's advice to see if you spotted declarer's potential problem.

Kantar says, paraphrasing Gertrude Stein: a finesse is a finesse, but not when there is a shortage of entries. With three red-suit losers staring at you, you must work with those clubs. Don't finesse! If the finesse loses and a trump is returned, the clubs are blocked with no way to untangle them. You will be left with a club loser and three inevitable red-suit losers, while dummy's club winner withers on the vine.

Once you see the problem, your urge to finesse will vanish. Simply play the club ace and a second club at once, unblocking the clubs and establishing your 10th trick in clubs with the spade king as your entry.

If the club finesse is right and the clubs are 6-2, so that the defenders ruff away your second club winner, then please ask for a refund ... but do not hold your breath!

(Incidentally, on an initial heart lead, win and lead a LOW club from hand. When you win the return, unblock the clubs and cash both spades; then try to take the third club winner.

ANSWER: It may be tempting to bid no-trump, but this is not the time. First raise diamonds — your hand may actually be very suitable for play in that suit, especially facing short hearts. As the auction progresses, you will have a better feel about whether to play in no-trump.

Kael Pope considers open doors

Wendell grad ponders future after helping Salt Lake win NJCAA title

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

The choices are plentiful for Kael Pope these days. That's what happens when you're a NJCAA national champion. "Winning the national tournament opens a lot of doors for you," Pope said in a recent phone interview.

The 2004 Wendell High graduate helped his Salt Lake Community College Bruins claim their first-ever junior college national title on March 21, rallying past Midland (Texas) College in the championship game.

The big question now: Which open door will Pope choose?

Not even he is certain. When the celebration in Hutchinson, Kan., died down, Pope found himself staring down a tough question.

"Now that I've won it, what do I work for?" he wondered.

Throughout his career, there's always been a challenge ahead. At Wendell High, he helped the Trojan football team claim the Class 2A title in 2003, catching a touchdown pass in the 24-14 win over Grangeville. His 17-point, 12-rebound average as a senior keyed the Wendell basketball team to a 25-0 record, including a 79-46 shellacking of Ririe in the 2A title game in 2004.

SPARTAN COUNTRY

Though technically an 'away' team at Final Four, Michigan State playing 90 miles from campus

By Andrew Bagnato
Associated Press writer

As the higher seed, the Connecticut Huskies will wear their white home uniforms against Michigan State in the national semifinals Saturday.

The rest of Ford Field will probably be awash in Spartans green.

This spring, there's nothing neutral about the Final Four.

The Huskies' third trip to the Final Four is a virtual road game: Michigan State's East Lansing campus is 90 miles from Detroit, and many in the expected record crowd of 70,000-plus will be Spartans fans.

"We'll have the white uniforms on. That's as close we'll get to being a home team, I think," UConn coach Jim Calhoun said on a Final Four coaches teleconference Monday. "I'm very aware ... that there will be a little bit of noise for the guys in green. No question."

Ford Field, the domed home of the Detroit Lions, is expected to set the record for the largest Final Four attendance in the 71-year history of the event. Last spring, the stadium drew 114,591 to the two sessions of the Midwest regional, another record.

The larger configuration opened up more seats to local fans, a goal of the tournament committee, and NCAA organizers say about one in seven spectators will be Michigan residents.

That can only work to Michigan State's advantage, although playing in Ford Field didn't help the Spartans much in a hideous 98-63 loss to North Carolina on Dec. 3.

And the Huskies (31-4) hardly shrink when they venture out of Connecticut.

UConn went 9-1 on the road this year, its only loss coming at then-No. 3 Pittsburgh on March 7, and the Huskies are 8-1 in neutral-site games, losing only to Syracuse in six overtimes in the Big East tourney in Madison Square Garden.

Though they're a No. 2 seed and finished first in the rough-and-tumble Big Ten, the Spartans (30-6) are being portrayed as gritty underdogs carrying the hopes of a depressed region.

"We've always stated our team's a blue-collar team ever since I came here," Michigan State coach Tom Izzo said. "And there's no better blue-collar city than Detroit, and all the things they go through."

Michigan State hopes to fare better on this visit to Ford Field. But there may be an upside to the Spartans' 35-point loss to Carolina, which was part of a rugged nonconference schedule that included games against Kansas, Oklahoma State and Maryland and trips to Texas and Wichita State.

That competition helped steel the Spartans for the rigors of the NCAA tournament — and it may have paid off when they beat Big East champion Louisville in the Midwest regional final in Indianapolis, about 115 miles from the Cardinals' campus.

Oklahoma's Griffin leads AP All-America team

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press writer

Blake Griffin and Tyler Hansbrough spent a lot of time together on the court last weekend and were back together Monday as the top vote-getters on The Associated Press' All-America team.

Griffin, the sophomore forward from Oklahoma who led the nation in rebounding, was the only unanimous selection for the team. Hansbrough, the consensus player of the year last season as a junior, repeated as a first-teamer the day after his Tar Heels beat the Sooners 72-60 to advance to the Final Four.

Joining them on the team were players from schools with little All-America history, sophomores DeJuan Blair of Pittsburgh, James Harden of Arizona State and junior Stephen Curry of Davidson.

Former College of Southern Idaho center Artsiom Parakhouski was named the honorable mention team after averaging 16.2 points and 11.2 rebounds at Radford. Utah center Luke Nevill and Utah State big man Gary Wilkinson also made the honorable

T.F. golfers prepare for key 5A meet

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

The Class 5A state golf championship isn't until May, but a preview of the possible matchups is happening today at Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course. The Twin Falls Bruins will host Treasure Valley teams from Capital, Centennial, Boise, Timberline, Meridian, Eagle and Mountain View as well as Region Four-Five-Six opponents from Highland, Idaho Falls, Skyline and Madison for the Twin Falls Invitational.

"We haven't played any of the Boise schools yet, so we don't know what they've shot," said senior Sara Federico, who was part of last season's state championship team. "But we've played with Highland and I.F. a couple of times. We're waiting to see what the Boise schools have to bring. We haven't heard anything yet."

The Highland Rams, who placed third at state last season, were bested a few weeks ago at Blue Lakes Country Club by a Bruin squad that is largely unchanged this season. Hannah McNeley, who finished third as an individual medalist, alluded to the team makeup being a key part to their overall success.

"We're all really close, get along good," she said. "Playing-wise, our varsity team is close together."

Of course, a refined short game will play a huge part in matches, especially at a course like Highland, where the greens can be tough.

"(Coach Mike Hamblin) always harps on us on the short game," McNeley added. "It's always important. Anyone can hit the ball to the green, but from there on..."

The boys team, which finished third at state in 2008, will see the defending champion and runner-up in Eagle and Centennial, respectively. Jordan Hamblin placed second in the individual scores in 2008 and called Eagle a favorite to repeat. Teammate Casey Faught expressed confidence that the Mustangs are within reach.

"I've just heard that Eagle will be pretty good, same as last year," he said. "But I think we can beat them."

Both Faught and Hamblin said that course management will be a priority for the boys team, which also defeated Highland at Blue Lakes and previously won the March Madness event with the girls team earlier this month at the Muni.

Action begins today with a 9 a.m., shotgun start. Bruin coach Mike Hamblin said that overall, it should be a good meet to gauge the competition.

"All the best teams will be here," he said. "We'll get a good chance to see how we stack up against everybody."

Stanford women back in Final Four

BERKELEY, Calif. — The Big Appel is headed back to the Final Four after a low-post performance surpassing anything in Stanford's long, illustrious basketball history. Jayne Appel had a career-high 46 points and 16 rebounds in the third highest-scoring performance in NCAA tournament history, overwhelming Iowa State's helpless defense and securing Stanford's second straight Final Four appearance with a 74-53 victory in the Berkeley Regional final on Monday night. At the Final Four in St. Louis, the Cardinal will meet the winner of Connecticut's Trenton Regional final meeting with Arizona State. Stanford is the last team to beat the undefeated Huskies, doing it in last season's semi-final game in Tampa.

LOUISVILLE 77, MARYLAND 60
RALEIGH, N.C. — As the Louisville Cardinals circled around to cut down the nets for the first time, the scoreboard clock still showed one-tenth of a second remaining. Louisville is headed to the Final Four for the first time, after Angel McCoughtry finished with 21 points and 13 rebounds in a 77-60 upset of top-seeded Maryland in the Raleigh Regional final Monday night. Deseree Byrd added 17 points and nine assists and Candyce Bingham had 15 points for the third-seeded Cardinals (33-4).

ND showing Big East might in NIT

NEW YORK (AP) — The best indicator of how mighty the Big East was this season might not come from Detroit, where two of its teams are in the Final Four. It may be how well Notre Dame finishes in the NIT. After all, the Irish were expected to contend for a national championship this season. Luke Harangody and Kyle McAlarney formed one of the nation's best inside-outside tandems, and there was plenty of depth and experience with three seniors in the starting five. They didn't even finish in the top half of the league. "I've been in the Big East nine years, and I've never seen anything like it," coach Mike Brey said. "It was off the charts." After losing in the conference tournament to West Virginia, the NCAA tournament long ago removed from the picture, Brey stood before his guys in the locker room and said their new goal should be to return to Madison Square Garden two weeks later for the NIT title game. They're one step away, playing Penn State in the semifinals Tuesday night. San Diego State and Baylor play in the other semifinal. Notre Dame (21-14) got caught in the spin cycle of one of the toughest conference schedules anyone can recall, an 18-game grind where the Irish lost seven straight, all but one of them to teams ranked in the top 20. They didn't snap out of that funk until February, when they routed conference champ Louisville by 33. Penn State (25-11), one of the last teams bumped from the NCAA bubble, is playing its first postseason in three years. San Diego State (26-9) surpassed its Division I postseason win total (two) from the past 38 years in just one week with three wins in the NIT. Then there's Baylor (23-14), the once-downtrodden program that has overcome so much in the past four years. The Bears have never played a game in April and will be playing in New York for the first time since losing in the 1950 Final Four.

NIT semifinals

Utah University and served an LDS mission in Chihuahua, Mexico. When he returned from his church service, SUU had a new coaching staff and the assistant who encouraged Pope to come to Cedar City had joined the staff at SLCC. So Pope followed Russ Beck, now an assistant at CSI, to Salt Lake City. "When I was presented the chance to play for him, I jumped on board immediately," said Pope. Turned out to be a good decision. In two seasons, Pope helped the Bruins to a 63-10 record and two appearances in the NJCAA title game. But for the first time in his life, he is facing the prospect of not having a "next season" on his horizon. While the 6-foot-8 center has plenty of offers to continue his collegiate career at a four-year school, he said, "Part of me just wants to hang it up." Pope said some people may call him crazy for walking away from his playing days, but he has his reasons. "There's other goals in life," he said. "I have other dreams."

For starters, he and fiancée Ashley Swenson, a member of the SLCC dance team, plan to marry on May 8. Pope also feels a need to focus on school and said he has several prospects for coaching high school basketball in the Salt Lake area, something he feels would best use his basketball knowledge and ability. Whatever he does next, Pope plans to employ the attributes he's learned in basketball. Throughout his career, he's done whatever his coaches and his teams have required of him. This season, that meant taking on a smaller role as reserve. Pope missed the beginning of the season with a separated shoulder. When he returned, he found himself playing limited minutes behind all-region players D.J. Wright and Nate Bendall. "I'm not going to lie, it's always a tough transition when you have to change roles," said Pope, who averaged 3.9 points and 2.1 rebounds this season. But in the end, "it was all about winning," and that's something Pope has done all his life. And while winning the NJCAA title was certainly special, nothing can replace Pope's experiences at Wendell. "The emotion of a state championship was so much different," he said. "You spend your entire life working toward that one goal. As little kids on the playground we grew up talking about winning a state championship. There were so many days of life spent preparing for that. "It was a lot of hard work and a lot of dedication for years to do it." Whether Pope pursues another title at a new level as a player or tries to coach others to a crown, he'll never forget the triumphs of which he's had part. "They're memories that I'll always have," said Pope. "The ring for (the NJCAA title) will go with the rings from Wendell. I won't wear any of them, but they'll all sit right together in the safe. Maybe my kids will want to pull them out and look at them some day. If not, it's no big deal." That's the wisdom, the perspective of a true winner — one at a crossroads where all signs point to future success.

Mike Christensen may be reached at 208-735-3239 or sports@magicvalley.com.

Spartans

"I do think we became a little closer and a little tougher team," Izzo said. "I'd say the way we played the last two weeks, I think it helped it some, I really do." Duke is the last team to play in a Final Four in its home state, losing to Arkansas in the 1994 national final in Charlotte. Detroit is a long way from Chapel Hill, N.C., but the Tar Heels (32-4) ought to feel comfortable returning to the site of their romp past Michigan State. After Carolina coach Roy Williams finished his postgame news conference that night, someone said, "See you in April." "I'll be back, and I hope my team is with me," Williams replied. His hopes came true in a decisive victory over Oklahoma in the South regional final. North Carolina is seeking its fifth NCAA title. UConn and Michigan State have two apiece. Villanova (30-7) has one NCAA title — and it came in 1985, the last time the Wildcats made it to the Final Four. Villanova coach Jay Wright is making his first Final Four trip. This is Williams' seventh Final Four, the fifth for Izzo and the third for Calhoun — and all three have national titles on their resumes. 35.8 minutes. Curry averaged 28.6 points, 4.3 rebounds and 5.7 assists as the Wildcats won the Southern Conference regular season title but lost in the tournament and didn't make the NCAA field. Connecticut center Hasheem Thabeet led the second team with 238 points and was joined by three other juniors, Ty Lawson of North Carolina, Luke Harangody of Notre Dame and Jodie Meeks of Kentucky, along with senior Jerel McNeal of Marquette.

Big sixth lifts Wendell baseball past Buhl

Times-News
A six-run sixth inning lifted Wendell High School's baseball team to a 7-5 win over Buhl in Sawtooth Central Idaho Conference action on Monday. A two-run double by Keegan Anderson and a two-RBI single from Nolan Stouder keyed the pivotal inning. Buhl led 3-1 entering the bottom of the sixth, but walks, errors and hit batters added to Wendell's offensive explosion. The Trojans (2-2, 1-1 SCIC) got 11 strikeouts from Stouder. Wendell won the JV game 11-10. The Trojans host Filer today, while Buhl hosts the Twin Falls junior varsity on Thursday.

Williams, Jazz survive Knicks rally at home

SALT LAKE CITY — Deron Williams had 24 points and 13 assists and the Utah Jazz beat the New York Knicks 112-104 on Monday night, rallying after blowing a huge lead at home for the second straight game.

The Jazz led by 24 early in the third quarter, but fell behind by a point in the fourth before regrouping and closing the game on a 20-11 run.

Carlos Boozer added 21 points and 11 rebounds and Kyle Korver scored 16 as the Jazz won their 15th straight home game.

Al Harrington scored 24 to lead the Knicks before getting ejected with two technicals for arguing a foul call with 22 seconds left.

MAGIC 101, HEAT 95
MIAMI — On the night Miami retired Alonzo Mourning's number, Orlando's big man wrecked the party.

Dwight Howard scored 22 points and grabbed 18 rebounds, passing Wilt Chamberlain as the youngest NBA player to reach the 5,000-board mark, and the Magic kept their grip on the No. 2 spot in the Eastern Conference.

Rashard Lewis scored 21 points, including the go-ahead 3-pointer with 1:32 remaining for Orlando (55-18), which stayed five games behind Cleveland and percentage points ahead of defending champion Boston in the East race.

Dwyane Wade scored 13 of his 42 points in the fourth quarter for the Heat.

BUCKS 107, NETS 78
EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Richard Jefferson had 29 points and 10 rebounds against his former teammates and the Milwaukee Bucks snapped a season-high, five-game losing streak.

Charlie Villanueva added 20 points for the Bucks, who kept their slim hopes for a playoff berth alive by snapping a seven-game road losing streak and sending the Nets to their fifth straight loss, matching their season high.
