McElhiney gets 22 years to life in Dale Miller killing

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

After waiting 19 months, the parents of slain 18-year-old Dale Miller finally talked to their son's killer. "We'll never forget you," said Miller's father, Monte Miller, to defendant John McElhiney. "I may or may not forgive you." Miller's family filled a whole side of Judge G. Richard Bevan's Twin Falls courtroom on Friday, clinging to letters, tissue and stuffed animals as McElhiney was sentenced to at least 22 years prison for the crime. McElhiney, 32, was the last of two men sentenced for the killing. The other convicted killer, Cameron Watts, was sentenced in December to at least 20 years prison.

McElhiney

Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loeb got convictions for both men through plea agreements, where each faces up to life behind bars. Twin Falls police found Miller's body stuffed inside a barrel on Sept. 12, 2007, in a garage attached to an apartment at 322 Morningside Drive, where McElhiney's girlfriend, Rachel Madrid, lived. Madrid will be sentenced in May for burglarizing Miller's home with McElhiney. Law enforcement authorities say Miller owed a $250 drug debt to Watts. McElhiney decided to be the "muscle" and roughed Miller up at Madrid's house. The men wrapped Miller up with telephone cord like

Obama names former Idaho AG head of Bureau of Indian Affairs

By Mary Clare Jalonick
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — An American Indian who served as the attorney general of Idaho was nominated Friday to become the head of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. President Obama nominated Larry EchoHawk, a law professor at Brigham Young University and a member of the Pawnee tribe, to the post. As well as being the former attorney general, EchoHawk also ran for Idaho governor in 1994, losing to Republican Phil Batt by less than 35,000 votes. At the time, he would have been the nation's first American Indian governor. He became the first American Indian elected to a constitutional statewide office when he assumed the post of attorney general in the early 1990s, the White House said. The embattled Indian Affairs agency has been without a leader for some time. The most recent head, Carl Artman, took the post in March 2007 after it had been vacant for two years and then resigned about a year later. The agency, which manages 66 million acres of land and oversees Indian schools and other programs, has been embroiled in a lawsuit for 12 years over Indian trust land. The long-running suit claims the Indians were swindled out of billions of dollars in oil, gas, grazing, timber and other royalties overseen by the Interior Department since 1887. Obama last month nominated Yvette Roubideaux as director of the Indian Health Service, which is part of the Department of Health and Human Services. He promised during the campaign that he would appoint a senior policy adviser for Indian Affairs in the White House, but has not yet done so. EchoHawk, 60, served in the Idaho Legislature as a House member from Bannock County, and was later elected Bannock County prosecuting attorney. A member of the Pawnee tribe, he became general legal counsel for the Fort Hall Shoshone-Bannock tribe in 1977. As a professor at BYU he taught courses in criminal law, criminal procedure and federal Indian law.

Governor's liquor bill heads for House floor

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

BOISE — The House judiciary committee on Thursday voted 8-6 in favor of Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter's bill to modernize the state's liquor laws by removing the state's role in issuing liquor licenses and eliminating its decades-old quota system. The bill will transfer responsibility of granting liquor licenses at restaurants and counties while placing a cap on the approximate 1,000 licenses at bars. Currently, licenses are awarded by the state on a per-capita basis — a process that has created a waiting list and a black market with licenses selling for as much as $500,000. Most lawmakers agreed servers and bartenders should be required to pass state-approved training. But they were split on transferring responsibility for serving underage drinkers — punishable by a misdemeanor — from license holders to servers and bartenders. "They need to be held responsible for their mistakes," Rep. Darrell Bolz, R-Caldwell, who supported the measure, said at the conclusion of nearly 10 hours of testimony that spanned two days. The bill, which has already passed the Senate, heads for the full House floor, where its fate is uncertain. Under the bill — crafted over three years by an Otter-appointed committee — the sale of bar-only licenses would be overseen

House votes 39-29 to pass 'Connecting Idaho' bonds

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter scored a rare House transportation win on Friday when lawmakers voted 39-29 for the latest $82 million installment for his "Connecting Idaho" road building plan. Until now, Otter has struck out in the chamber on most of his efforts to raise money for roads. On Wednesday, his much-weakened proposal to boost the gas tax to 27 cents a gallon, from 25 cents, couldn't muster enough support. Rep. James Ruchti, the Democratic leader from Pocatello, voted Thursday against the 2 cent hike, as he did on earlier proposals from Otter to boost gas taxes by up to 7 cents per gallon. But Friday, Ruchti argued that another round of Connecting Idaho bond sales made sense, even if raising taxes in a recession did not. "It's appropriate, especially in these economic

Obama sees glimmers of economic hope

By Darlene Superville
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — President Obama declared Friday that the slumping economy has begun to show "glimmers of hope," but cautioned that it remains severely stressed and will require lots more work to turn it around. Once criticized for talking too pessimistically about the economy, Obama is highlighting the positive. "We're starting to see glimmers of hope across the economy," the president said after a White House meeting with his economic team, including Treasury Secretary

Timothy Geithner and top economic adviser Larry Summers. Federal Reserve

Chairman Ben Bernanke also participated in the session. Obama echoed Summers' prediction a day earlier that the "sense of a ball falling off a table" would end in a few months. The president highlighted signs of thawing in the credit markets, particularly for small businesses seeking loans, along with tax cuts he said workers will soon see in their paychecks and a jump in mortgage refinancings due to historically low interest rates. Obama said those positive moves as well as infrastructure work and other spending underwritten by his $787 billion stimulus program all point to welcome signs of long-anticipated economic improvement. "We're starting to see progress," Obama said. "And if we stick with it, if we don't flinch in the face of some difficulties, then I feel absolutely convinced that we are going to get this economy back on track." The president threw in a dose of sober reality, too. "Now, we have always been very cautious about prognosticating and that's not going to change just because it's Easter," Obama said. "The economy is still under severe stress."

a mummy, taped his nose and mouth and stuffed him in a trunk. Miller escaped, but was re-tied by McElhiney and placed again into the trunk until he suffocated to death, authorities said.

Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loebes said McElhiney confessed to the crime during an interview where police failed to fully read him his rights.

Loebes said he cannot prove McElhiney and Watts intended to kill Miller.

In the confession, though, Loebes said McElhiney admitted to searching the Internet for ways to dispose Miller's body. McElhiney and Watts ate a meal after buying the $30 barrel they stuffed Miller's body into, after McElhiney considered buying a $280 wood chipper, Loebes said.

McElhiney told authorities he planned to drop the barrel holding Miller's body into Dierkes Lake, Loebes said. Neighbors called police about the barrel and odors emanating from the garage and police discovered the body before that could happen, Loebes said.

McElhiney's thin, black goatee was new on Friday in Twin Falls 5th District Court, but he was still trying to get accommodations from the criminal justice system.

Earlier this year, he unsuccessfully attempted to withdraw his guilty plea, and on Friday for the second time in a year, McElhiney told the court he didn't want his newest public defender representing him.

"I do not feel comfortable with Mr. Lammers' representation," McElhiney said Friday.

He successfully argued for his current lawyer, Rockne Lammers, after previously being assigned the county's Chief Public Defender Marilyn Paul.

McElhiney said Friday he didn't want Lammers to represent him, because of a "conflict of interest" the attorney has by knowing some of Miller's family members.

Lammers firmly disagreed, saying he has no such conflict of interest, and 5th District Court Judge G. Richard Bevan refused to appoint McElhiney another lawyer.

McElhiney apologized to Miller's family on Friday. "I don't believe my life should belong to me anymore because of what happened," said McElhiney.

That might be all right for some of Miller's family.

"When you become eligible for parole," said Monte Miller, "you will be looking into these same eyes."

times, to stay with that commitment," he said before the vote. "His proposal to raise taxes didn't strike me as the right direction to go. But the (governor) still has responsibility to create jobs. People are losing jobs left and right. People in the construction industry are not back to work."

The Senate has already approved this year's Connecting Idaho bonds.

Since Connecting Idaho was first approved in 2005, lawmakers have signed off on $679 million of the projected $1 billion program started by then-Gov. Dirk Kempthorne on the argument that borrowing money road construction would help make Idaho roads safer more quickly and cheaply by avoiding skyrocketing construction-industry inflation.

The argument still makes sense, even if inflation has slowed with the recession, said Rep. George Eskridge, R-Dover.

In recent project bids, the state has saved about $38 million on Connecting Idaho projects, and that money is already being applied to this year's spending plan to reduce bond sales, Eskridge said.

"This is not money that's sitting around being wasted and not being used," he said. "There's nothing wrong with responsible borrowing. It's irresponsible borrowing that got this country into trouble. This state has undertaken bonding in a responsible fashion."

Foes, meanwhile, argued that Idaho's constitutional framers some 120 years ago warned against debt.

Always contentious Connecting Idaho does just that, said Rep. Lynn Luker, R-Boise, leaving the state's children and grandchildren unfairly on the hook at a time when Idaho is already getting more than $600 million in transportation funding, including from the federal stimulus package.

North Side conservation district seeks to expand projects, profile

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

To learn more about the North Side Soil and Water Conservation District, contact Terry Halbert at 208-324-2501 ext. 101 or Terry.Halbert@id.nacdnet.net

The North Side Soil and Water Conservation District was formed in 1946 to help farmers and Jerome County residents with soil and water issues.

It has been around so long you would think more people would know about the district.

"No one knows we exist," said Terry Halbert, formerly the district's administrative assistant.

Halbert and the district's five-member board are out to change that. The district, one of roughly 50 in the state, is embarking on an aggressive new series of projects meant to raise its profile and benefit the community at large.

Halbert, now district manager, plans to leave his office and represent the district at a variety of meetings and public events.

He's also tasked with writing and executing the district's annual work plan. This year's, already submitted to the Jerome County commissioners, calls for school activities, a community roundtable, various workshops and even a financial review of the district's past two years.

Halbert characterized the work as "more ambitious and detailed" than previous plans, but said he's excited to start on the agenda he's helped set. Already, the district is running its conservation-poster contest for fourth-graders and preparing to send trees home with third-grade students for Arbor Day.

Kids are a big focus for the district — youth education is one of four action areas outlined in the plan. Halbert said he teaches kids to think critically, not mindlessly repeat opinions, and that children can help nudge their parents to think about issues as well.

Many of the proposed events are things the district has done before, he said. But they're being revised and expanded to reach more of the community and include a wider swath of opinions, he said. The district will hold another environmental meeting this winter, following up on one last December that focused on land-use planning and Jerome County's comprehensive plan. This one may center on water issues, Halbert said, as will an annual water-forecast meeting proposed for next spring. The latter would be similar to a meeting of the district held a couple of years ago, as well as long-running annual presentations put on by the Twin Falls Soil and Water Conservation District.

Other workshops would educate producers and general community members about things like nutrient management plans. And an open house at the U.S. Department of Agriculture Service Center where Halbert is based could help hook people up with programs and services they need, he said.

Above all, this year's projects are aimed at helping the largely rural county adjust to its growing urban areas, a process that's caused clashes over water quality and other issues. Halbert said people on both sides of those debates need to work on communication and cooperation, but seemed optimistic about how things will turn out.

"It's fun to watch a small county go through this metamorphosis," he said.

by a new independent board. Restaurant licenses would be non-transferable, and currently licensed restaurants could decide whether to keep theirs or put them out on the market and receive a municipal license.

"The value of those licenses will move forward," said Ken Burgess, a lobbyist for the Idaho Licensed Beverage Association, where a majority of its 250 members support the bill. "They're not being obliterated; no one's losing the right to do business."

But other license holders argued the bill will deliver a financial blow to small businesses that won't be made up for decades.

"It would be worth a lawsuit to me to find out who's right and who's wrong," said Larry Jenkins, owner of Emmett's Gem Lounge.

A vote to kill the bill initially finished in a tie before a vote to send it to the House floor passed when Rep. Steve Kren, R-Nampa, switched sides to support the motion.

Kren initially told reporters that he wasn't sure why he changed votes. He later said, "It was important we have the decision made by the full House."

Legislators who opposed the bill said the changes are being rushed and are akin to eminent domain due to devaluing licenses.

"I can't place a vote today that will take someone's livelihood. I'm listening to what those people are saying," Rep. Janice McGeachin, R-Idaho Falls, said.

House panel OKs bill to expand online courses

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

BOISE — A measure to allow traditional public schools to contract with private companies offering online educational courses cleared a House panel Thursday on a party-line vote.

Currently, traditional schools offer online courses only through the Idaho Digital Learning Academy, the public online arm of the state department of education.

The bill, which passed 12-5 out of the House Education Committee, is designed to provide flexibility to school districts by giving them two options to spend money for staffing that, if gone unused, is returned to the state.

One option allows districts, for two years, to fund up to 2.63 percent of state-funded teaching positions with stimulus money.

But lawmakers differed on a change to allow up to 5 percent of the money the bill would provide to go toward virtual, or online, courses. The change would not sunset, but would offer districts increased flexibility, said the bill's sponsor, Jason Hancock, a senior official with the department of education.

Rep. Steven Thayne, R-Emmett, said the change will meet needs requested by school administrators in rural districts like his own. It would bring traditional schools in line with online charter schools, the only entity that may contract with private online companies.

"Right now the brick and mortar public schools are at a little bit of a disadvantage in offering programs that could be very beneficial for them," Thayne said.

But Democrats objected, arguing that the online component is being proposed late in the session without enough details on costs.

"If we turn our public school classrooms into virtual charter schools, they have an entirely different way of funding," said Rep. Donna Boe, D-Pocatello. "This is yet another occasion when this committee has been brought an excellent idea we want to support, but brought with some other issues some of us may not want to support."

They also didn't understand why schools couldn't simply use the IDLA, which offers courses to secondary education students, including those in traditional schools and home-schoolers, and is available across the state. Its budget was one of the few scheduled for an increase next year.

An IDLA official conceded during the meeting that the program might not be able to meet demands in the future but did not indicate whether she supported the bill.

Current law is unclear whether districts are allowed to offer online courses besides through IDLA, said Melissa McGrath, spokeswoman for the state department of education. There is no law that allows districts to count online course attendance — which helps determine state funding — so there's little incentive, she said.

The bill was supported by Idaho's school boards and administrator lobbying associations but opposed by the Idaho Education Association, the teachers' union.

"Does the IDLA already serve the function outlined in this bill?" asked Sherri Wood, President of the IEA.

Abatement district largely organized

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

Aside from a few loose ends, Twin Falls County's new pest-abatement district now has the space, the employees and the equipment it needs, just in time for spring.

The district was approved last year by voters and funded through $442,000 in taxpayer money. Its recently approved mission statement tasks it "to protect the health and socioeconomic well-being" of county residents while using "environmentally sound abatement practices."

For now, that means basically doing what county workers have done for the past couple of years, district board President John Snelling said Wednesday. The county ran a slimmed-down interim district that trapped mosquitoes, killed off larvae and helped landowners remove areas of standing water.

"Initially, we plan to continue the same activities," Snelling said.

The district's guiding document will be an abatement plan that the five board members finalized on Wednesday. A draft version will next be presented to county commissioners for approval.

The document doesn't stray too far from the established abatement work, board Secretary Tony Brand said before the meeting. Asked whether the board might expand to activities such as aerial spraying, Brand said members don't feel such actions are necessary at this time.

Besides the plan, the board has secured a building next to the county's weed department for its office and has hired a district manager, Kirk Tubbs, who starts work on Monday. Members are introducing themselves to state agencies, canal companies and other organizations the district might work with, Snelling said. The University of Idaho's extension office and South Central Public Health District now have ex-officio members on the board.

The district will rely largely on equipment used by the county for its work, and is hiring seasonal employees as well, board members said. County officials said shortly after the November vote that they hoped to be able to start abatement work this month.

"We'll have people in place and we have a plan to work with, and we're moving forward," Brand said.

The new district is technically separate from Twin Falls County, but does maintain some ties. Board members took time during their meeting to work out financial and employees issues with County Clerk Kristina Glascock.

"Being separate and together is difficult," board member Theresa Strolberg joked during the discussion.

Man pleads guilty to misdemeanor assault

GRANGEVILLE — A northern Idaho man accused of trying to kidnap a Michigan woman on a cross-country bicycle trip has pleaded guilty to misdemeanor assault.

Roy L. Lyons, 43, pleaded guilty Thursday and was sentenced by 2nd District Court Judge John H. Bradbury to 90 days in jail with 45 days suspended, plus a $300 fine and two years of probation.

His plea follows an October jury trial that ended in a mistrial. A new trial on the attempted kidnapping charge was scheduled to begin April 22.

"In light of the facts of this case, we believe this was an appropriate resolution," Idaho Attorney General Lawrence Wasden said in a news release. "By pleading guilty to this charge, Mr. Lyons has admitted to his criminal behavior."

Lyons was charged in 2007 with attempting to coerce Audrey A. Schilling, 22, of Eau Claire, Mich., into his pickup truck with the intent to rape her or force her to perform oral sex.

Schilling was biking up a long winding grade called White Bird Hill when she met Lyons, who was stopped along the road.

Deputy Attorney General Chris Topmiller said he offered Lyons the plea deal even though Schilling is "adamant" about what happened.

Lyons claimed Schilling had stolen his wallet and he was trying to retrieve it, but Bradbury said he doesn't believe that, the Lewiston Tribune reported.

"I am persuaded that (Schilling) was terrified," Bradbury said. "I do believe there was more involved than the wallet!"

Police: Landslide caused deaths

OROFINO — Authorities say two northern Idaho residents were killed when a tree fell from a hillside and landed on top of their vehicle.

Idaho State Police say Jessica N. Hosley, 25, and 33-year-old Lee Grant died

Thursday night at the scene of the accident, which was triggered by a landslide along U.S. Highway 12. Hosley and Grant are both from Orofino.

Investigators say Grant was driving the sport utility vehicle west when the tree rolled down the hill and crushed the cab.

Police have not released any other details of the accident.

Appointee defends 'drag' remark

COEUR D'ALENE — A northern Idaho Republican reconfirmed to the nine-member Commission on Human Rights after overcoming opposition by Democrats says she doesn't discriminate against anyone.

Ruthie Johnson said comments she made earlier this month at her confirmation hearing about firing workers for wearing clothing meant for the opposite sex were taken out of context.

At her April 3 confirmation hearing, she was asked if gays should be protected from workplace discrimination.

She responded, "If someone comes to work dressed in drag, they should be able to fire them," according to meeting minutes.

Johnson said she meant that employers should be able to enforce dress codes.

"I've always said I don't care what anyone does in the privacy of their own bedroom, I just don't want to know about it," the 85-year-old Johnson told the Coeur d'Alene Press.

Minnick moves to save backcountry postal service

BOISE — Rep. Walt Minnick is asking the U.S. Postmaster to rethink plans to sever the contract that pays a pilot to deliver mail to residents living deep Idaho's wilderness.

The Idaho Statesman reports that Minnick, a Democrat, sent a letter to the postal service Friday making the case to keep the service.

For the last 34 years,

Cascade-based pilot Ray Arnold has made flights once a week, delivering mail, packages and other necessities to more than 20 ranches in the Frank Church-River of No Return wilderness.

The Postal Service, facing mounting financial losses, announced earlier this month its intention to end the $46,000 contract with Arnold.

Minnick, who has flown with Arnold, says he offers a vital service to the remote residents and in the past has saved lives by flying residents to hospitals or delivering groceries.

Senate panel OKs Idaho redistricting reform bill

BOISE — Senate State Affairs Committee Republicans passed a plan to revamp how Idaho redraws its 35 legislative districts following each U.S. Census, over objections from Democrats.

Senate President Pro Tem Bob Geddes said Friday his bill's requirement newly drawn districts be connected by roads will preserve "communities of interest" he contends were neglected during the 2001 effort.

Geddes said southeastern Idaho districts drawn about a decade ago are unwieldy, forcing lawmakers like him to drive outside Idaho just to reach some constituents.

Agency seeks increase in Idaho timber harvest

BOISE (AP) — The director of the Idaho Department of Lands plans to ask the state Board of Land Commissioners to approve an additional 18 million board-feet of timber be offered for sale on state-owned lands in fiscal year 2010.

Director George Bacon, meeting with the House Resources Committee on Thursday, said the department will ask next month to increase the timber sales from 212 million board-feet to 230 million board-feet.

He said the increase is sustainable based on new computer models, and that the department eventually wants to increase the harvest to about 247 million board-feet per year, the Lewiston Tribune reported.

The computer models show an excess inventory of 2 billion board-feet on state-owned land, Bacon said. It takes about 10,000 board feet to build a two-bedroom home.

"We're overcrowded," Bacon told the committee. "We can capture the (annual) growth, plus the surplus, and actually increase the growth rate for the remaining trees."

The board is made up of five elected state officials: Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter, Secretary of State Ben Ysursa, Attorney General Lawrence Wasden, Controller Donna Jones and Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna.

Idaho received 3.6 million acres from the federal government in 1890 when it became a state as endowment land intended to be used to support state institutions. About 90 percent of that money goes to public schools, and state officials are obligated under state law to maximize profits over time from the land. The state produces profits from the land with timber sales.

QUOTABLE

"All we need, first, is a safe route to escape with the captain, and then (negotiate) ransom later."
 — Badow, a pirate, involved in a standoff involving a U.S. sea captain held hostage aboard a drifting lifeboat

If we can't afford roadwork, why buy it on credit?

JEERS: To the Legislature, for putting Idaho further in hock by approving $82 million in highway funding bonds.

The House of Representatives voted Friday to issue Grant Anticipation Revenue Vehicle bonds, as the Senate did earlier. The bill now goes to the governor.

GARVEE is a special type of bond that lets the state borrow against future federal highway allocations. The proceeds from the bonds approved this week will be spent in just three counties: Ada, Canyon and Gem.

"Where are the jobs in Lemhi County, where are the jobs in Idaho County, where are the jobs in Power County, where are the jobs in Madison County?" asked Rep. JoAnn Wood, R-Rigby, chairwoman of the House Transportation Committee.

Good questions, especially since Idaho has run up quite a debt on its GARVEE credit card.

There are only three states with higher GARVEE obligations, according to Rep. Leon Smith, R-Twin Falls, an opponent of the bill.

"We are the highest leveraged," Smith said. "We have become a borrowing state. We are asking our fellow Idahoans to tighten their belts, and yet we're going to jump into the pool on an $82 million borrowing program."

The House had, just the day before, refused to pass a 2-cent-a-gallon increase in the gasoline tax to pay for repairing our roads because of the sour economy.

But we can, evidently, afford to buy on credit. The legislators' logic escapes us.

CHEERS: To Rep. Fred

Wood, R-Burley, for brokering a compromise that will prevent cystic fibrosis patients from being cut off from medication they need — and which the state now pays for.

The Legislature's Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee Wednesday unanimously backed Wood's bill directing the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare to develop eligibility rules for the program, including stopping people from other states from coming to Idaho just to take advantage of the system.

The plan foresees using Idaho's high-risk insurance plan to help cover Idahoans who are uninsured.

Sixty-three adults, both insured and uninsured, rely on the state now to help pay for a dozen or more drugs that cost as much as $1,400 a month, but lawmakers have been debating whether to end the funding.

The plan passed by budget-writers this week would set aside $205,000 in fiscal year 2010 for those with the illness, which clogs the lungs and leads to life-threatening lung infections.

Wood, a retired physician, may have saved some more lives.

JEERS: To some citizens of Sun Valley and Ketchum, for letting the discussion about possible consolidation of the two cities become personal.

Their differences turned emotional at a hearing by the Senate State Affairs Committee last week as it considered a proposal by Sen. John Thorson, D-Sun Valley, that would allow residents of consolidating cities to name the new town instead of basing the name on the city with the larger population — in this case, Ketchum.

The committee wisely declined to get involved, and voted down the bill.

Ketchum and Sun Valley are following the venerable, tedious example of south-central Idaho school districts that have discussed consolidation in the past. The merits and disadvantages of a merger get lost in parochial passions and long-simmering grudges.

This is too important a decision for both communities to be derailed by name-calling.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Simple solutions to complex problems

Well, even with Obama, spring has finally come to Idaho and birds are singing, so I'm in an outgoing mood. Therefore, I say let's all give our undying support to present plans to bring peace to the world. We'll send troops to protect the Pakistan-Indian-Afghanistan borders. Let's see that Africa is fed, clothed and educated. Let's solve the ethnic dispute between Jews and Arabs. Let's share our nuclear missile technology with North Korea. Let's turn General Motors and Chrysler over to the Japanese, tear down our borders between Mexico and let China take over our airline industry. That's the way things are headed anyway; why fight it?

See, in the midst of winter doldrums, I'd have said send the U.S. Navy to blow the pirate ships out of the water, give Obama a sword and let him charge Cuba just like Teddy did. If any military men claim to be Christian, they should not be forced (allowed) into combat, thereby confirming the separation of church and state called for by so many disillusioned individuals. We could fill their vacated ranks with convicted governors, congressmen and other political hacks. Induct Joe Arpaio as commanding general. Cancel the bailout checks of companies who continue to pay astronomical amounts to executives in reward for failure and let them sue to try and get it back. That will keep them tied up trying to get to court for years. Use the confiscated estates of convicted billion-dollar scam artists to run the country.

Yeah, I know, these are simplistic solutions to complicated problems, but trying to solve them with complicated solutions is what got us in this mess in the first place.

An invitation to a tax day tea party

This letter has nothing to do with actions of the Times-News or any law-abiding citizen of this valley — it is about the president of the United States.

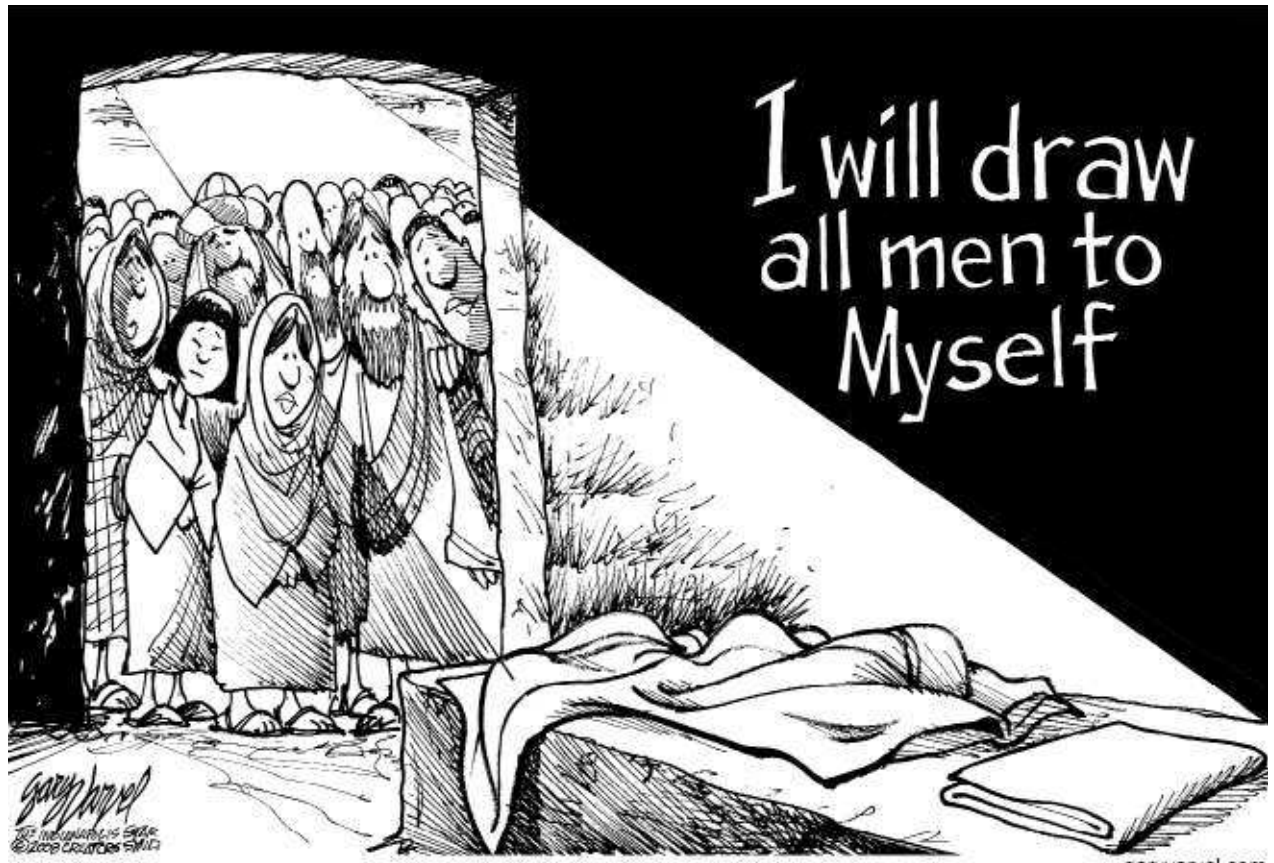

President Obama, on his recent trip to Europe, accused the United States of America of being arrogant and (my words) self-centered. In short, he intimated that America was almost nothing compared to Europe during the last 30 years or so.

For too long, the silent majority has been too silent, taking our freedoms for granted! It is time for us to wake up and think seriously about what is happening in Washington. We need to take our government back!

I hope that every red-blooded citizen of this valley on tax day, April 15, will show their displeasure with the present administration's policies by joining us for a tea party day in Twin Falls.

By the way, the United States of America is a Christian nation in spite of what some may say!

Ignore Easter: Celebrate Jesus' life instead

God may have struck down Paul of Tarsus on the road to Damascus and turned him into the world's first Christian. But unlike the "conversion experience," I have found that losing faith is not a cataclysmic event. It's more like watching mist rise off a river in the morning. You can't say exactly when it disappeared, but you know it is gone for good.

My father and grandfather were Baptist preachers. I spent the first 18 years of my life in the compulsory service of the church, and the next 18 years trying to extract myself from its long tentacles. After that, I spent a few more years writing a book about losing faith, and searching for something to replace it.

Growing up, I had been too sensitive to the fundamentalist message of guilt and sin. It did not, let us say, have the intended effect on me. Whereas my well-adjusted mother believes that the sacrificial blood of Christ "set us free," all I could see in Christianity was dogmatism, intolerance and an unhealthy hatred of the flesh.

My father and grandfather have since passed away. And my mother has patiently, with some understanding, watched me drift away from the church that still means much to her. But when my book, "An American Gospel," came out last week, she still seemed startled by how far I had drifted.

The basic premise of "An American Gospel" is that the kingdom of God lies all around us, not waiting in the sweet hereafter. Therefore, we must conduct our lives in ways that honor — and will make more manifest — this immanent kingdom through stewardship, empathy and a very real sense of the just.

My mother could, for the most part, sign on to that program.

"But you still believe in the resurrection don't you?" she asked. An uncomfortable silence followed. How was I to put this? I could have taken the route of many New Testament scholars and said that I believe in the symbolism of the resurrection. But that wouldn't have satisfied her anymore than it does most Christians. Finally, mercifully, she said, "Well, we can talk about it all later."

The fact is, American Christianity has historically been focused so obsessively on the Nicene Creed — which says Jesus was the son of God, who was crucified for our sins and rose from the grave three days later — that it never made much room for the actual teachings of this radical Jewish street preacher.

This is why I'm against Easter. It celebrates the death of Jesus nearly to the exclusion of his life. If the Easter miracle can save us from this life, then why bother with the harder work of enacting the kingdom of God here? It is, after all, much harder.

Which brings me back to that word faith. I believe it plays such a disproportionate role in mainstream American Christianity, be it in the rock and roll megachurches or the humbler places where I worshiped as a child, because it is a belief in what one cannot see. But that belief — that faith in a salvational Christ — is what will guarantee everlasting life. But when such faith is lost, as in my case, what am I left with?

I'm left with the teachings of Jesus — words so radical, they got him killed, words so radical, they might still bring about the end of empire and the beginning of the kingdom of God.

Law-abiding voters don't mind showing IDs

In the last November election in Ada County, there were thousands of new registered voters in the month prior to the election — which may seem encouraging in the interest of increasing voter turnouts.

But there were a high number of abuses that threaten the integrity of Idaho's elections. One way to fix this problem is to require photo identification when registering to vote. That's not too much to ask considering what's at stake. It will help ensure that people are who they say they are and live where they say they live.

In samplings conducted by volunteers, a high percentage of these new registered voters gave addresses that could not be verified. In door-to-door conversations with residents, many were shocked to find the names of strange people registered to vote from their addresses. Even more shocking is that these new registered voters actually cast votes in the November election. Who are these people?

READER COMMENT
Rep. Lawrence Denney
Sen. Bob Geddes

Behavior like this is unfair to those law-abiding citizens who followed the rules in casting their votes.

It also has the smell of identity theft when one realizes a stranger has registered and voted from their address.

Let's show our ID. Most people would not hesitate to comply. Opposition would come from those who give false addresses or otherwise take advantage of the election process.

High instances of voter fraud is an insult to our election process — particularly in the last election where a few thousand, or a few hundred votes, could have changed the outcome in some races.

Checking a photo ID is no imposition to voters. People have to show photo identification before checking bags at an airport, boarding a plane, withdrawing cash from their bank account and a number of other reasons. Showing a photo ID during registration is not too much to ask in the interest of protecting the integrity of elections.

Our motivation is not to exclude people from voting — far from it. We were inspired by the high level of interest in the last election and the large number of people throughout Idaho who voted for the first time.

But large turnouts are of little value without integrity in the election process. Showing a photo ID at the time of registration, and at the polls, is one way to preserve that integrity.

A boy living in a wrecked car

CAP HAITIEN, Haiti — As America's unemployment rate rises, those paying the severest price aren't necessarily in Detroit or Miami. One of the newest street children here in this northern Haitian city is a 10-year-old boy whose father was working in Florida but lost his job and can no longer send money home. As a result, the family here was evicted, the mother and children went separate ways to improve their odds of finding shelter, and the boy found refuge in an abandoned wreck of a car.

The boy is one of 46 million people in the developing world — more than double the New York state population — who will be driven into poverty in 2009, according to a World Bank estimate.

In Haiti's largest slum, Cite Soleil, in the capital, Port-au-Prince, I stumbled upon a one-room public school. The principal, Claude Lafaille, lamented that enrollment had dropped from 150 at the start of the year to 60 today. "Haitians in America stopped sending money back, and so their family members can't pay fees," he said.

The school used to provide free breakfasts to ensure students got at least one solid meal a day. But in January, the charity that provided the food had to stop because its donations were dropping, so now the remaining children are often too hungry to concentrate.

In the St. Catherine Labour hospital in Port-au-Prince, the number of children admitted for malnutrition has approximately doubled since September, said a pediatrician, Dr. Armide Jeanty.

It's natural in an economic crisis to look inward, to focus on America's own needs, but it's worth remembering that the consequence of a deep recession in a poor country isn't just a lost job but also a lost child.

In Cite Soleil, a woman named Chantal Dorlus told me that her 5-year-old daughter, Nasson, starved to death last month, and neighbors confirmed the account. Dorlus said her three other children would have starved as well if not for the generosity of her neighbors, who share their meager food supplies.

If slum-dwelling Haitians can share what little they have, I hope we can be equally generous during this downturn when needs are greatest.

On this trip, I met a couple

of American women, Sasha Kramer and Sarah Brownell, both in their early 30s, who offer an example of outward commitment at a time when most of us are retrenching and focusing on ourselves. Sasha and Sarah run a hand-to-mouth aid group, called SOIL.

I was interested in their work because it addresses two of the developing world's greatest but least glamorous challenges. One is sanitation, for human waste in poor countries routinely spreads disease and parasites. The second is agriculture, for poor countries must increase crop yields if they are to overcome poverty and hunger.

Sasha and Sarah create dry composting toilets that turn human waste into fertilizer. They say the yearlong composting process kills the pathogens in the waste, making it safe to use the fertilizer.

Frankly, I was taken aback when, 10 minutes after they had met me, they pulled out a Ziploc bag and proudly declared it was compost made from their own toilet. They were so impressed with what they had accomplished that I felt obliged to take a whiff and hold it in my fingers; it simply felt and smelled like rich potting soil, and I would never have guessed its origins.

Haitian farmers use virtually no fertilizer and soils are severely depleted. But Sasha calculates that if half of Haitians' human waste could be used as fertilizer, that would amount to a 17-fold increase in fertilizer use, more than doubling the country's agricultural production. Sasha and Sarah have deployed 45 of their toilets, and now they are trying to introduce a municipal composting system in Cap Haitien.

I don't know if this is feasible. But I love the idea that even when the needs of the United States are so immense, a couple of young Americans aren't complaining or finger-pointing, but are hard at work to assist others whose distress is incomparably greater than our own.

Will the chicken pave the road?

AUSTIN, Texas — The city of Austin may or may not be one of 14 U.S. cities that have requested funds from Kentucky Fried Chicken to fill up potholes.

A KFC spokesman in Louisville, Ky., named Austin as one of the places that applied for the money. But Sara Hartley, spokeswoman for Austin's Public Works Department, didn't seem to think the city had actually done that.

"We just submitted kind of a biography of our street and bridge department," Hartley said. "It was a very informal process. (KFC) sent out an e-mail with very little detail.

"The conditions of that grant may be something that we don't want to agree with," she added.

The conditions: In exchange for $3,000 for pothole repairs in each city selected for the marketing program, KFC will get to put a chalk KFC logo on top of each fixed pothole. I can understand the city's reluctance. A measly $3,000 seems like a poultry sum — make that a paltry sum — for street work in exchange for having a company's name plastered on the road all over town.

The logo says, "Re-Freshed by KFC." KFC says the logo — part of a KFC marketing campaign — will wash away in a couple of days. In this drought? I don't think so.

I just hope that if Austin takes the money, KFC doesn't use original recipe to fill up our potholes or we'll have grease-related fender-benders all over town. I think extra crispy would provide better traction.

This all started March 25 when Roger Eaton, KFC president up in Louisville, sent out a letter to U.S. mayors coast to coast telling them about the chicken chain's new pothole offer.

Hartley says Mayor Will Wynn's office forwarded the letter to Public Works. The letter doesn't mention the logo part of the deal specifically. It says, "Every patched pothole comes with the Colonel's very own stamp of approval." Isn't that enough of a clue, though?

"It is estimated that U.S. roads are riddled with more than 350 million potholes nationwide — that's one for every man, woman and child in America!" Eaton's letter says.

The letter added that "because of the financially tough times" that KFC is "here to help!"

"In honor of our 'Fresh Tastes Best' campaign, we want to come and 'Re-Fresh' your roads!" Apparently KFC headquarters is suffering from an exclamation point glut.

To kick off the program, KFC filled about 500 potholes in Louisville, said Rick Maynard, a KFC spokesman. He added that four other cities will be picked to get $3,000 each from KFC for pothole repairs. Maynard said Austin was one of 14 cities that asked for the money. Hartley is hedging on that.

"We just sent 'em basically a one-pager and thought, 'We'll see what happens,'" Hartley said. Wynn could not be reached for comment. Maybe he eats at Burger King.

So what would the KFC potholes be filled with?

"We're experts in frying chicken, we're not experts in filling potholes," Maynard said. "So we leave that to the individual cities. We just provide the funding. And the city crews fill the potholes."

I'd suggest filling the potholes with several cubic yards of Wolf Brand chili. That stuff holds up like cement. Or a dump truck full of McRib sandwiches from McDonald's. Talk about a lab experiment gone bad.

Federal budget deficit sets March record

Cost of financial bailouts, recession mounts

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The Treasury Department said Friday that the budget deficit increased by $192.3 billion in March, and is near $1 trillion just halfway through the budget year, as costs of the financial bailout and recession mount.

Last month's deficit, a record for March, was significantly higher than the $150 billion that economists expected.

The deficit already totals $956.8 billion for the first six months of the budget year, also a record for that period. The Obama administration projects the deficit for the entire year will hit $1.75 trillion.

A deficit at that level would nearly quadruple the previous annual record of $454.8 billion set last year. The March deficit was nearly four times the size of the imbalance in the same month last year.

Nearly $300 billion provided to the nation's banks and other companies to cope with the most severe financial crisis in seven decades has pushed government spending higher.

The Treasury report said that through the end of March, $293.4 billion had been provided to support companies through the $700 billion bailout fund Congress passed last October. That support has been provided primarily to banks, although insurance giant American International Group Inc. and auto companies General Motors Corp. and Chrysler LLC also have received assistance.

Besides the bailout fund, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac received $46 billion last month, bringing the total assistance provided to the mortgage finance companies to $59.8 billion since October. The government took control of both last September after they had suffered billions of dollars in losses on mortgage loans.

Through the first six months of the budget year that began Oct. 1, tax revenues have totaled $98.8 billion, down 13.6 percent from the year-ago period. The government's receipts have been reduced sharply by the recession, which is shaping up to be the longest of the post World War II period. The downturn began in December 2007.

Government outlays totaled $1.95 trillion through March, 33.4 percent higher than the year-ago period.

Besides higher payments for the financial rescue, the government is paying more in such areas as unemployment benefits and food stamps.

PIRATE DRAMA ESCALATES

Reinforcements rushed to scene

By Katharine Houreld and Anne Gearan
Associated Press writers

NAIROBI, Kenya — An American skipper held hostage by pirates tried to swim to freedom Friday but was recaptured seconds later when the bandits opened fire within view of a U.S. destroyer.

Four Somali pirates, who are demanding a ransom, were ready to kill Capt. Richard Phillips if they are attacked, according to a Somali in contact with the captors.

The high seas drama turned more complex and potentially deadly in its third day as both pirates and American forces rushed reinforcements to the scene several hundred miles off the coast of Somalia. The crisis stemmed from a thwarted attempt to take over the U.S.-flagged Maersk Alabama freighter and is testing the new Obama administration.

The pirates summoned reinforcements, calling in four commandeered ships with hostages from a variety of nations including the Philippines, Russia and Germany, according to the Somali in touch with the pirates.

The U.S. was also bolstering its force by dispatching other warships to the scene several hundred miles off the Somali coast, which already was under watch by the destroyer USS Bainbridge — named after William Bainbridge, an American naval officer who fought pirates off the Barbary Coast in the early 19th century.

Piracy along the anarchic and impoverished Somali coast, the longest in Africa, has risen in recent years. Somali pirates hold about a dozen ships with more than 200 crew members, according to the International Maritime Bureau, a piracy watchdog group based in Malaysia. The bureau lists 66 attacks since January, not including the Alabama.

Underscoring the high stakes involved, France's navy freed a sailboat seized off Somalia last week by other pirates, but one of the hostages was killed, along with two of the bandits. Three pirates were captured. In Paris, Armed Forces Chief of Staff Jean-Louis Georgelin dismissed the notion that there was any coordination between the French and Americans on the two incidents.

Phillips, of Underhill, Vt., was seized Wednesday after he thwarted the pirates' bid to hijack the Alabama, which was carrying food aid for hungry people in Somalia, Rwanda and Uganda.

local time, Phillips jumped off the covered lifeboat where he was being held and began swimming, said Defense Department officials, speaking on condition of anonymity because they are not authorized to talk about sensitive, unfolding operations.

One of the pirates then fired an automatic weapon, the officials said, although it was not clear if shots were fired at Phillips or into the air, and he returned to the lifeboat.

He was in the water only a matter of seconds — not enough time for sailors aboard the Bainbridge to do much to help him, the defense officials said. Because both the lifeboat and the Bainbridge are moving, no swimmers or divers could have been standing by in the water, the officials said.

The Bainbridge stays a minimum of 200 yards away — too far to send its own lifeboat to pick up the captain in just a few seconds, and it has no helicopter on board, they said.

Its sailors were able to see Phillips moving around and talking after his return to the lifeboat, and the Defense Department officials believed he was unharmed.

Tom Coggio, Phillips' brother-in-law, said word of the escape attempt and his captivity has stressed his family.

"Now this is just really taking a toll on all of us," Coggio said in Richmond, Vt.

In a statement from the Maersk Line Ltd. shipping company, Phillips' wife, Andrea, thanked "our neighbors, our community, and the nation for the outpouring of support. ... My husband is a strong man and we will remain strong for him. We ask that you do the same."

The Somali in contact with the pirates holding Phillips said they are trying to link up with colleagues who are holding Russian, German, Filipino and other hostages in ships near the coast. Their goal is to get Phillips to Somalia, where they could hide him in the lawless country and make a rescue difficult, the Somali said.

That would give the pirates a stronger negotiating position to discuss a ransom.

The Somali, who helped negotiate a ransom last year to pirates who seized a Ukrainian ship carrying tanks, spoke on condition of anonymity for fear of reprisals. He said he has talked with a pirate leader in Somalia who helped coordinate the failed effort to seize the Alabama.

5 U.S. soldiers, 2 Iraqis killed

BAGHDAD (AP) — A suicide truck driver detonated a ton of explosives near a police headquarters in the northern city of Mosul on Friday, killing five American soldiers in the deadliest attack against U.S. troops in more than a year.

The U.S. military said Iraqi police were the bomber's target and that the Americans were caught up as bystanders.

The horrific blast, believed to have been carried out by Sunni extremists, is likely to increase pressure on Iraq's prime minister to ask American combat troops to stay in Mosul after the June 30 deadline for them to pull out of Iraqi cities.

America's top commander suggested in an interview this week that even as U.S. troops pull out of other cities, he may have to send reinforcements to Mosul, about 225 miles northwest of Baghdad, and to volatile Diyala province, northeast of the capital.

Of the 31 U.S. troops killed in combat in the Iraq war this year, more than a third — 11 — have been in Mosul, an angry, impoverished city where efforts to obliterate al-Qaida and other Sunni militants have failed over the years.

Besides the five Americans, two Iraqi policemen also died in the mid-morning blast Friday near the Iraqi National Police headquarters in the southwest of the city, a U.S. statement said. At least 62 people, including one American soldier and 27 civilians, were wounded, U.S. and Iraqi officials said.

A policeman, who identified himself by his nickname Abu Mohammed, said he saw the truck driving behind two U.S. Humvees on the street leading to the police headquarters.

The Humvees entered the compound and stopped. Within seconds, the driver rammed through a metal barrier, slammed into a sandbagged wall near the Humvees and triggered the blast as Iraqi guards sprayed the vehicle with gunfire, he said.

Economy may contribute to rise in family violence

Shaken baby cases, calls to hotlines increase

By Frank Eltman
Associated Press writer

GARDEN CITY, N.Y. — Some hospitals report seeing more than twice as many shaken babies as a year ago. Deaths from domestic violence have increased sharply in some areas.

Calls to domestic-violence hotlines have risen too, and more than half the callers said their families' financial situation has changed recently.

Across the country, these and other signs point to another troubling effect of the recession: The American home is becoming more violent, and the ailing economy could be at least partially to blame.

"Our children and families are suffering," said Alane Fagin, who runs a Long Island nonprofit group called Child Abuse Prevention Services. "With more layoffs expected, the threat of foreclosure looming over so many and our savings disappearing, even the best parents can feel stressed out and overwhelmed."

Nationwide government data will not be compiled for months, so the evidence suggesting an uptick in child abuse and domestic violence has been largely anecdotal.

But the Child Welfare League of America, a coalition of public and private agencies, has been surveying state child welfare agencies to determine whether the numbers reflect a spike in violence.

"I think a lot of people are

Tears, tributes as Italy mourns its quake dead

L'AQUILA, Italy (AP) — It was a scene that moved a nation: mourners clinging to one another and sobbing over neat rows of more than 200 coffins, some with the tiny caskets of children resting on top.

Italians joined in an outpouring of grief on Good Friday as victims of Italy's most devastating earthquake in a generation were remembered at an open-air funeral Mass in the hard-hit city L'Aquila.

In Rome, Pope Benedict XVI urged survivors not to give up, praying at the end of the Good Friday torch-led Way of the Cross procession at the Colosseum that they may see the "star of hope." And Premier Silvio Berlusconi captured the pathos that swept the country, wondering aloud: "How can one not be moved by so much pain?"

The 6.3-magnitude tremor — which killed at least 290 people and left nearly 40,000 homeless — struck

Monday at the start of Holy Week, heightening the suffering in this deeply Roman Catholic country.

On Friday evening, hours after the funeral, rescue crews started digging in the rubble of an apartment building in L'Aquila after dogs trained to look for survivors indicated that some life might be in the debris, Civil Protection spokesman Luca Spoletini said.

But officials cautioned against concluding there was a survivor.

"We will continue to dig until we have absolute certainty" that no one is alive, said Fire Cmdr. Antonio Gambardella, "but we have no illusions."

"We heard a ticking, a steady noise, but it could be water, or noise from a refrigerator," he said. Or the dogs might have sniffed out an odor left by people who had already been found.

Gambardella said rescuers were told that a cleaning woman occasionally came to the house, and she could have been a victim.

Engineers and geologists have said buildings constructed to seismic-safety standards should not have collapsed, raising the possibility that building codes weren't followed or that shoddy materials were used.

L'Aquila Prosecutor Alfredo Rossini said he had opened a probe into possible criminal blame for the collapses, the Italian news agency ANSA reported.

Firefighters picking through rubble told state TV Friday night that some of the reinforced concrete pillars they had removed seemed to have been made poorly, possibly with sand. Instead of cutting cleanly with a saw, in some buildings in L'Aquila, the pillars crumbled into dust, indicating that a lot of sand might have been mixed into the cement, they said.

Twenty children and teenagers were among the dead. The youngest victim would have turned 5 months on Easter Sunday.

Amid the rows of simple wood coffins, five small white caskets of children rested on those of their parents. On them lay mementos of lives cut short: a teddy bear, a toy motorcycle, a tiny T-shirt with a Tweetie Bird design.

Killing shakes La. town

Racial tensions rise

By Michael Kunzelman and Mary Foster
Associated Press writers

HOMER, La. — For 73 years before his killing by a white police officer, Bernard Monroe led a life in this northern Louisiana town as peaceful as they come — five kids with his wife of five decades, all raised in the same house, supported by the same job.

The black man's shooting death is attracting far more attention than he ever did, raising racial tensions between the black community and Homer's police department.

The Rev. Al Sharpton, who helped organize a massive 2007 civil rights demonstration in Jena after six black teenagers were charged with attempted murder in the beating of a white classmate, led a peaceful march Friday afternoon in Homer to protest the killing.

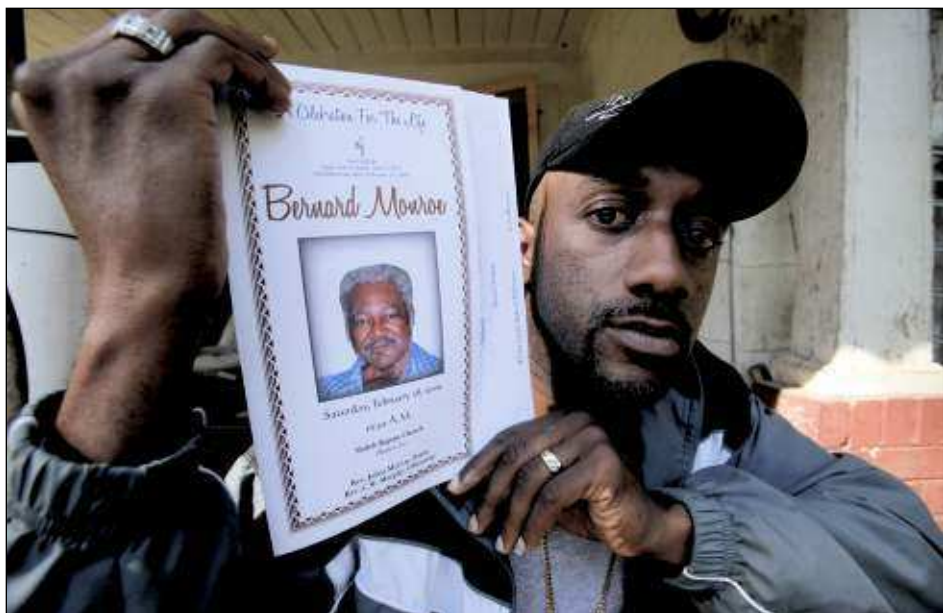

"No justice, no peace!" demonstrators chanted. "We shall overcome!"

About 150 demonstrators marched near the neighborhood where Monroe, a 73-year-old retired power company lineman, was gunned down by police last February outside his home during a family cookout.

The half-mile march ended without incident at a park where the longtime civil rights activist told an even larger crowd of almost 400 people that "to shoot an unarmed, innocent man ... is a disgrace!"

"We didn't come to the city to start trouble. We came to the city to stop trouble," Sharpton told the crowd. "Let (police) explain why they broke the peace and took the life of this innocent man."

Some white Homer residents said they feared Sharpton's visit would deepen tensions.

Linda Volentine, whose 1971 graduating class at Homer High School was the first to be fully integrated, said the town's race relations have had "ups and downs" in recent years.

"I'm hoping Rev. Sharpton can unite us again," said Volentine, who is white. "But if it's something that is supposed to drive a wedge, it will be harmful to the community, which we don't need."

Sharpton said afterward that he wants a thorough investigation of the killing. The FBI and State Police are investigating.

"We're going to keep coming to Homer until we get justice," Sharpton said without elaborating.

Rendered mute after losing his larynx to cancer, Monroe was outside his home on mild Friday afternoon in February when events unfolded during a cookout. A barbecue cooker smoked beside a picnic table in the yard. A dozen or so family members talked and played nearby.

All seemed calm, until two Homer police officers drove up.

In a report to state authorities, Homer police said Officer Tim Cox and another officer they have refused to identify chased Monroe's son, Shaun, 38, from a suspected drug deal blocks away to his father's house.

Witnesses dispute that account, saying the younger Monroe was talking to his sister-in-law in a truck outside the house when officers arrived.

All agree Shaun Monroe, who had an arrest record for assault and battery but no current warrants, drove up the driveway and went into the house. Two white police officers followed him. Within minutes, he ran back outside, followed by an unidentified officer who Tasered him in the front yard.

Seeing the commotion, Bernard Monroe confronted the officer. Police said that he advanced on them with a pistol and that Cox, who was still inside the house, shot at him through a screen door.

Monroe fell dead. How many shots were fired isn't clear; the coroner has refused to release an autopsy report, citing the active investigation.

Police said Monroe was shot after he pointed a gun at them, though no one claims Monroe fired shots. Friends and family said he was holding a bottle of sports water. They accuse police of planting a gun he owned next to his body.

"Mr. Ben didn't have a gun," said 32-year-old neighbor Marcus Frazier, who was there that day. "I saw that other officer pick up the gun from out of a chair on the porch and put it by him."

Frazier said Monroe was known to keep a gun for protection because of local drug activity.

Despite the chase and Taser, Shaun Monroe was not arrested.

Monroe's gun is being DNA-tested by state police. The findings of their investigation will be given to District Attorney Jonathan Stewart, who would decide whether to file charges.

China's birth limits create gender gap

BEIJING (AP) — China has 32 million more young men than young women — a gender gap that could lead to increasing crime — because parents facing strict birth limits abort female fetuses to have a son, a study released Friday said.

The imbalance is expected to steadily worsen among people of childbearing age over the next two decades and could trigger a slew of social problems, including a possible spike in crime by young men unable to find female partners, said an author of the report published in the BMJ, formerly known as the British Medical Journal.

"If you've got highly sexed young men, there is a concern that they will all get together and, with high levels of testosterone, there may be a real risk, that they will go out and commit crimes," said Therese Hesketh, a lecturer at the Centre for International Health and Development at University College London. She did not specify what kinds of crimes.

The study said analysis of China's 2005 census data extrapolated that males under age 20 exceeded their female counterparts by a whopping 32 million. The study found that China has 119 male births for every 100 girls, compared with 107 to 100 for industrialized countries.

"Nothing can be done now to prevent this imminent generation of excess men," said the report by Hesketh and two professors from eastern China's Zhejiang province.

The study found that the biggest boy-girl gaps are in the 1 to 4-year-old group — meaning that China will have to grapple with the effects of that imbalance when those children reach reproductive age in 15 to 20 years.

China imposed strict birth controls in the 1970s to limit growth of its huge population, noting that resources, especially land, were increasingly strained and that changes were needed in its new push to modernize. The government says the controls have prevented an additional 400 million births in the world's most populous country of 1.3 billion.

But families, especially rural ones, cling to traditional preferences for a male heir, and infanticide of baby girls became a problem.

Abuse

very concerned that we are in the early phases of this," said Linda Spears, vice president for policy and public affairs.

Eighty-eight percent of law enforcement officials surveyed nationwide believe the economic crisis has led, or will lead, to more child abuse and neglect, according to top police officials from Los Angeles, Boston, Milwaukee and Philadelphia who recently held a news conference in Washington.

"Those of us on the front lines of law enforcement know that there is a correlation between economic distress and increased child abuse and neglect," said Los Angeles Police Chief William Bratton. "We have to get in front of this problem now."

Just as the need appears to be growing, the recession is drying up funding to many agencies that fight domestic violence.

"This period of time may well be our perfect storm: a struggling economy, an increase in stress and a decrease in funding of programs," said Fagin, the Long Island child abuse prevention advocate.

Not everyone is convinced domestic violence and child abuse are increasing.

"So far from what I've read there is no evidence that is the case," said Ben Tanzer of Chicago-based Prevent Child Abuse. "Certainly we're concerned that certain communities may be in crisis, but we just don't know."

Earlier this month, the U.S. Administration for Children's Services released its annual report on child abuse, which found the number of children being maltreated actually fell in recent years, from 904,000 victims nationwide in 2006 to 794,000 the following year.

But those figures do not include the worst of the recession, which began in late 2007. Still, additional signs abound that violence is rising:

- The National Domestic Violence Hotline reported calls were up 21 percent in the third quarter of 2008 compared with a year earlier. A six-week survey found 54 percent of callers answering "yes" when asked if there had been a change in the family's financial situation in the past year.

- Workers at Children's Hospital Boston and Massachusetts General Hospital reported seeing nine infants with shaken baby syndrome in three months, compared with four in the same period last year. The chairman of pediatrics at Schneider Children's Hospital on Long Island said his facility has had five cases in the past six months; only one or two cases arose during the previous year.

- Milwaukee reported a 40 percent increase in homicides related to domestic violence in the first three months of 2009. Police Chief Edward Flynn cannot say for sure whether the increase was caused by the recession, but he believes the two are related.

Face transplants gaining ground

Seventh surgery performed in U.S.

By Marilynn Marchione
The Associated Press

Five years ago, it was the stuff of science fiction: Replace someone's face with one from a dead donor. But on Thursday, Boston doctors performed the world's seventh such transplant — less than a week after one in France — and plans are in the works for more.

"Society is allowing us to do this. I think you're going to see more and more," especially in soldiers disfigured in recent wars, said Dr. Frank Papay, a surgeon who helped perform the nation's first face transplant, in December at the Cleveland Clinic.

Some of the successes have been dazzling. People who couldn't eat, speak normally, or go out in public now can walk the streets without being recognized as someone who got a new face.

Even so, face transplants are likely to remain uncommon, used on only the most severely disfigured, because of the big risks and lifelong need to take medicines to prevent rejection.

"It's not going to be like some people imagine — routine, like people getting a facelift, or cosmetic surgery," said Stuart Finder, director of the Center for Healthcare Ethics at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles.

Plastic surgeon Dr. Bohdan Pomahac, center, smiles while facing reporters along with other medical staff, during a news conference Friday at Brigham and Women's Hospital, in Boston. Pomahac led a surgical team that performed the nation's second partial face transplant on a man who suffered traumatic facial injuries.

"We have what appears to be success," he noted, but there is always the chance that some patients may experience serious rejection problems or refuse to stay on the required lifetime of drugs.

Boston doctors stressed the care and psychological screening they required before performing the nation's second face transplant on Thursday. The operation, at Harvard-affiliated Brigham and Women's Hospital, was on a man who suffered traumatic facial injuries from a freak accident.

Face transplants go far beyond the transfer of skin and facial features, using things like bone and cartilage for reconstruction. The team led by plastic surgeon Dr. Bohdan Pomahac replaced the man's nose, palate, upper lip, and some skin, muscles and nerves with those of a dead donor.

The hospital would not identify the recipient or donor, but the donor's family members released a statement saying they hope the procedure convinces others to donate.

"The fact that we are able to give this gift was a tremendous comfort in our time of grief," the statement said.

At a news conference on Friday, Pomahac said: "There is no risk of recognizing the donor on the new patient. There's a 60 percent chance the patient will look how he used to look."

In a phone interview earlier Friday, Pomahac (pronounced POE-ma-hawk) said the man's injury occurred some years ago, and it left him with "no teeth, no palate, no nose, no lip."

"It was difficult for him to speak, to eat, to drink. It certainly caused a lot of social problems," Pomahac said.

The man had been Pomahac's patient for a long time, and doctors decided to pursue a face transplant because previous attempts to treat him left him still badly deformed. It took three months to find a suitable donor, who also provided some organs for transplant in other patients, Pomahac said.

The 17-hour operation began at 1:15 a.m. Thursday, with the recipient and the donor in operating rooms across the hall from each other. The patient was still recovering from anesthesia on Friday.

Judge: Investors can force bankruptcy

NEW YORK (AP) — A Manhattan judge has given investors a green light to go after Bernard Madoff's personal property by forcing the disgraced financier into bankruptcy.

In a ruling in federal court on Friday, U.S. District Judge Louis L. Stanton lifted a temporary order barring involuntary bankruptcy for Madoff while the government continues its pursuit of his ill-gotten gains.

Victims of the massive fraud would benefit from a bankruptcy court's "orderly and equitable administration of his individual estate," the judge wrote.

Madoff, 70, pleaded guilty last month to federal charges that he cheated investors of billions of dollars over several decades with a gigantic Ponzi scheme that paid longtime investors with money from new investors.

He is jailed, awaiting a June sentencing.

Pope presides over Way of the Cross

ROME — Pope Benedict XVI presided over a torch-lit Way of the Cross procession at the Colosseum on Good Friday and said he was praying so that people who suffered losses in Italy's devastating quake can see the light of hope in their dark hour.

Pope Benedict XVI

Tens of thousands of faithful, clutching prayer books and candles in paper lanterns, turned out for the traditional Holy Week appointment at the ancient Roman arena.

"Let us pray for all those who feel sorrow, above all for those suffering in the quake-stricken area of L'Aquila," Benedict urged, speaking at the end of the procession about the Apennine mountain town near the epicenter.

Suffering and hope were the motif of the meditations read aloud as faithful carried the slender, lightweight cross in the shadows cast by the Colosseum's massive stones.

The ritual commemorates Jesus' suffering in the hours before his crucifixion and his death on the cross.

WASHINGTON

Fed to banks: Keep mum on stress test

WASHINGTON — Federal regulators have told the nation's largest banks to keep quiet about their performance on government stress tests. They fear investors could punish companies with nothing to brag about.

In letters to the 19 banks undergoing tests of their financial strength, regulators told the companies not to disclose their performance during upcoming earnings announcements, according to industry and government officials who requested anonymity because they are not authorized to discuss the process.

The order was the latest in a series of government moves designed to keep good news about strong banks from dooming others to a downward spiral of falling share prices and financial weakness. If banks receiving the highest marks trumpet their results, the fear is investors might push down share prices of those companies that make no such announcements.

Government officials want to announce the results all at once, at the end of the month.

NEW YORK

2 more banks fail, tally now 23

NEW YORK — Federal regulators shut down two more banks Friday, raising the number of bank failures so far this year to 23.

The first bank was Cape Fear Bank in Wilmington, N.C., the first North Carolina bank to fail in nearly 16 years. The other bank was New Frontier Bank of Greeley, Colo., the second Colorado bank this year to collapse.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. took over both banks Friday after their respective state regulators closed them down.

ILLINOIS

Hundreds of Ill. patients possibly exposed to TB

CHICAGO — Hundreds of patients and staff at three Chicago-area hospitals may have been exposed to tuberculosis by a contagious health care worker, officials said Friday.

About 300 staff and 150 patients may have been exposed at Children's Memorial Hospital, said Dr. Stan Shulman, the hospital's chief of pediatric infectious disease.

Seventeen patients may have been affected at Northwestern Memorial Hospital, officials said. The facility was evaluating another 100 patients with whom the health care worker, a doctor-in-training, might have had contact in November at its Prentice Women's Hospital.

CALIFORNIA

Teen says man was at pond where girl's body found

TRACY — A police cadet said Friday that he saw someone "acting real strange" at an irrigation pond three days before an 8-year-old girl's body was found in a suitcase pulled from the water.

Stephen Memory, a 19-year-old who lives near the pond where Sandra Cantu's body was found, said he spoke to the FBI about what he saw.

Memory said that he thought it was odd to see a beige Chevrolet Silverado truck parked on the shoulder of the road facing in the wrong direction on the afternoon of April 3. Sandra's body was found April 6.

GREGG MIDDLEKAUFF'S QUOTE OF THE DAY
 If you don't like change, you're going to like irrelevance a lot less.

Tornado kills 2, injures 41 in Tenn.

MURFREESBORO, Tenn. (AP) — A tornado killed a woman and her 9-week-old infant and also injured dozens Friday in central Tennessee as a line of storms lifted homes, ripped off roofs and dumped hail in the Southeast.

Elsewhere, a tornado touched down in southwestern Kentucky, injuring two people and destroying homes. A possible tornado was reported in northeast Alabama. And large hail fell in North Carolina.

At least 41 people were hurt in Rutherford County, Tenn., four of them critically, in the aftermath of a storm system that killed three in western Arkansas a day earlier.

"I think we're right in the middle of tornado alley these days," said Dan Goodwin of the Rutherford County Sheriff's Department.

Dispatchers at the Rutherford County Emergency Management Agency said the area was "heavily impacted" after several eyewitness reports of a tornado on the ground around 12:30 p.m.

In Murfreesboro, 30 miles southeast of Nashville, at least three dozen homes were destroyed. Roofs were ripped away from at least a dozen homes, and some trees were blown down. A bulldozer was clearing tree limbs and other debris from streets.

Kori Bryant, in her mid-20s, and 9-week-old Olivia Bryant were identified as the dead. They apparently were trying to get in a car — both were found outside, and the infant was in a car seat, rescue official Randy White said.

Amy Jones, 32, was at work at State Farm Insurance when she heard that her house had been leveled. She was stunned when she got to the scene and saw that the 1,800-square-foot home with a garage was lifted completely off the foundation and dropped on her neighbor's home.

Kenny Perry reacts after making birdie on the No. 15 hole during the second round of the Masters golf tournament at the Augusta National Golf Club in Augusta, Ga., Friday.

Perry grabs share of lead at Masters

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press writer

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Kenny Perry thought he had a storybook ending to his career when he helped the Americans to a Ryder Cup victory on his native Kentucky soil and shared an emotional embrace with his father.

But that triumphant ride toward retirement is taking a stunning detour down Magnolia Lane.

With one last birdie to cap off what he called one of the best rounds he ever played, Perry shot a 5-under 67 on a blustery Friday at the Masters to share the lead with Chad Campbell going into the weekend.

About the only thing Perry hasn't done is win a major, however, the 48-year-old could be golf's oldest major champion if he pulls this off.

"I've had a great career, and I'd be very satisfied if it ended today," Perry said. "The Ryder Cup, I can't express to you all how much that meant to me. That was the ultimate of anything I have ever, ever been a part of or accomplished, be it any of my 13 wins."

"But Dad has always said, 'You need to win that green jacket! He always calls me and tells me.'"

Augusta National was tougher than the opening round, but even with tougher pins and a gusts that swirled through Amen Corner and lasted deep into the afternoon, the fireworks were just as endless.

Campbell got off to another solid start and finished with a 25-foot birdie for a 70, sharing the lead with Perry at 9-under 135. They had a one-shot lead over

Wolff's walk-off homer lifts CSI to sweep of rival

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

The College of Southern Idaho had its pitching hero for Friday's doubleheader with Salt Lake Community College all sorted out, in the person of newly-minted closer Tyler Curtis.

But with leading hitters Tyler Chism and Victor Spencer held to just a pair of hits between them — both from Spencer, more specifically — the offense was crying out for a hero.

It wasn't exactly a Carlton Fisk moment, but third baseman Garrett Wolff answered the call heartily.

Wolff took the second pitch he saw from Phil Lowe in the bottom of the 10th inning and hooked it over the left-field wall and just inside the foul pole for a walk-off solo home run to give CSI a 3-2 victory over its visitors and complete a doubleheader sweep after a 5-3 win in the opener.

"I knew I got enough to hit it out, it was just a matter of if it was fair or foul. I didn't see it (go over the fence), I was just hoping and praying it stayed fair and when I heard the Pitcher McKensy Hillstead couldn't do much wrong Friday.

The No. 11 College of Southern Idaho softball team earned a 1-0 extra-inning victory over the No. 19 North Idaho College Cardinals on the strength of her seven strikeouts and no walked batters to open the Scenic West Athletic Conference doubleheader, and she homered twice during Game 2 for three RBIs.

Brie Dimond had allowed three base hits and one run when Hillstead was brought back to close it in the top of the seventh of the nightcap. The Eagles were up by two runs and just needed one out to complete a sweep.

But one bad pitch cost the No. 11 Eagles the game as Brigggett Plenger hit Hillstead for a three-run homer, giving NIC a 7-6 win.

"It was a good day," Hillstead said, "just one bad pitch. I wish I could get a pitch back."

The split put CSI at 26-10 in region play (33-15-2 overall) and NIC at 24-12 (28-17 overall), with the Eagles still in second place. Head coach Nick Baumert said he was pleased with how his players battled through the doubleheader as they won and lost each game by a lone run.

"You kind of feel for the kids," he said. "They battled hard all day. With the exception of one pitch and the way we threw to a couple of hitters, it was a good day. I don't know that they have any reason to hang their heads. They're competitors, and they'll bounce back."

The Eagles and Cardinals played a scoreless opener to force the eighth inning. With one out and two runners on base, right fielder Erin Olander doubled to left field and scored Ashley Chappel. It was CSI's fourth hit of the game, by far the most timely hit. The Eagles struggled all day to string together enough to score runs as they left 10 runners stranded.

BUHL MIDSEASON CLASSIC 3A teams battle at annual tourney

Filer's Jordan Brown pitches against South Fremont Friday in Filer.

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

FILER — Jordan Brown has only been back in uniform a few days since getting hit by a car on Feb. 8. Some aspects of his game are still in development, as evidenced Friday in the Wildcats' 15-2, five-inning defeat to South Fremont.

It was nearly a repeat of Filer's earlier game of the 14th Annual Buhl Midseason Classic, a 15-0, five-inning blast by Spring Creek.

"We ran into two good teams," said Filer coach James Madson. "We threw well, they just hit the baseball. Nothing we could do."

Brown, a freshman pitcher, gave up a bevy of hits while Filer couldn't match South Fremont's firepower in the afternoon game.

"Some things are coming back," said Brown, who says he suffered a broken

KIMBERLY — After losing to Spring Creek 6-0 on Friday morning, Kimberly pitcher Nellie Makings wasn't about to let her second opportunity slip away.

Makings struck out eight and gave up zero walks in the Bulldogs' 2-0 win over Homedale in the afternoon to earn a split in the opening day of the Second Annual Lady Dawg Classic.

"I was just hoping we could get a win because of the loss we had earlier," Makings said. "I was out there just throwing, having fun."

TFHS baseball extends win streak to 14

Times-News

Jacob Coats and Cy Sneed helped pitch Twin Falls to a sweep over visiting Madison on Friday, with Coats and Zeb Sneed doing the work at the plate.

Coats singled, doubled and tripled in the 7-6 Game 1 victory, scoring in the bottom of the seventh on Jared Jordan's single to deep left field. Coats struck out seven in a complete-game effort on the mound to pick up the win.

In Game 2, Zeb Sneed doubled and hit a three-run homer, and little brother Cy tossed a four-hitter, striking out six in a 10-0, five-inning win.

The Bruins (17-2, 4-0 Region Four-Five-Six) have now won 14 games in a row, but head coach Tim Stadelmeir said the streak would be put to its stiffest test today when Twin Falls welcomes the Vauxhall Academy of Baseball (Vauxhall, Alberta) for a double-dip today.

MINICO SWEEPS POCATELLO

Solid pitching and an offensive barrage lifted Minico to an easy sweep of visiting Pocatello on Friday.

The Spartans (8-9) got a strong outing from Landon Barnes in Game 1, an 11-1 win in five innings, and they hit 11 of their 12 hits for singles to manufacture some runs.

Game 2 ended 11-0 for Minico, also in five innings, behind a two-hit shutout from Alex Moon. Chris Joyce doubled twice in the game for the Spartans.

Minico is at Mountain Home on Monday.

TWIN FALLS 12, IDAHO FALLS 7

The Twin Falls softball squad hoped to open Region Four-Five-Six play with a pair of wins over Idaho Falls Saturday, but one will have to do for now.

The Bruins won the opener 12-7 and were ahead 3-2 in the second game, but it was suspended before a fifth inning could be played and does not count as a game.

Katelyn Fjeld, Sunshine Martinez and Kelsie Bryant each connected for three hits in the complete game, and Fjeld struck out 11 Tiger batters from the circle.

"In the first game, we swung pretty good," Twin Falls coach Ken Johnson said. "I was really happy with that - 16 hits and a ton of them hit hard. On the flip side, we gave up too many hits. Next time we face them, we'll have to defensively be a little tighter than we were."

Fjeld hit a 2-run bomb in the bottom of the fourth to regain the lead, but the game was called due to weather. It does not count as a full game, and Johnson said it was unknown if it will be resumed at a later date.

The Bruins (12-6, 1-0) will travel to Rexburg Thursday to face Madison.

T.F. GIRLS WIN THREE RELAYS IN BOISE

The Twin Falls girls took first-place honors in three relay events at the 40th Annual Boise Relays/Peter Beiter Invitational on Thursday at Bronco Stadium in Boise.

The foursome of Danielle Bowcut, Madi Worst, Mercedes Blackwood and Brook Wagner won the 4x100-meter relay in 50.57 seconds. Blackwood, Brianna Bowcut, Madi Worst and Wagner teamed up to win the 4x200 in 45.2 seconds, while Blackwood, Brianna Bowcut, Danille Bowcut and Wagner won the 4x400 in 4 minutes, 2.64 seconds.

The Bruin boys got a second-place showing from Austin Lynch in the 110 hurdles.

Athletes from Minico, Jerome and Kimberly also competed in Boise, with Minico's boys winning the 4x200 relay. The foursome of Justin Martinez, Colton Mickelsen, Fernando Navarrete and David Griffin clocked a time of 1:32.09. Minico's Chelsea Hepworth won the girls high jump, while teammate Kelcy Hamilton was second in the 200 meters.

Tinley Garey of Jerome was third in the shot put and fourth in the discus. For Kimberly, Keegan Brady took second in the boys 100, while the Bulldogs got third-place efforts from Eric Marvin in the boys 200 and Kaitlin Keller in the girls triple jump.

errors allowed three more runs. Not that it would have mattered, since the Bulldogs could only generate two hits while striking out 12 times.

"I wasn't disappointed with the loss, I was more disappointed with our competitiveness at the plate," said Kimberly coach Rich Bishop. "Right now our mental approach at the plate is not where it needs to be, and it's showing."

Kimberly's bats weren't much better in its win over Homedale. Makings and Baylee Allsop had RBIs in the first inning. That was enough for Makings, who pitched a complete-game shutout. "We didn't show up (against Spring Creek)," Makings said. "We have our ups and downs. We have days where we do really good then other times errors add up and we get down on ourselves, like this morning."

With three sophomores and two freshman in the Bulldogs' starting lineup, Bishop admits his club is young, but he doesn't allow that to be an excuse.

"They've played a lot of ball. They should know how to make adjustments and hit for us," Bishop said. "It's something we're working on, to get a different mental

Marlins keep hot start intact

MIAMI — Jorge Cantu singled with two out in the ninth to score Emilio Bonifacio, and the Florida Marlins remained unbeaten by defeating the New York Mets 5-4 on Friday night.

The Mets left 14 runners on base, stranding at least one in every inning.

The one-run margin was the first this season for the Marlins, the only unbeaten team in the majors. They're 4-0 for the first time in franchise history.

CARDINALS 5, ASTROS 3

ST. LOUIS — Ryan Ludwick homered and drove in two runs, Skip Schumaker had three hits and the Cardinals survived another shaky ninth inning to beat Houston.

Ludwick finished 2-for-3 and extended his career-best hitting streak to 15 games, including the last 11 of 2008. Chris Duncan and Yadier Molina also drove in runs for the Cardinals, while Joel Pineiro (1-0) allowed two runs and eight hits over 6 2-3 innings to earn the win.

Kyle McClellan got the final two outs for his second career save.

BREWERS 4, CUBS 3

MILWAUKEE — Ryan Braun's grounder to shortstop scored Rickie Weeks on a close play at the plate, and the Brewers rallied for two runs in the ninth inning.

It was the first blown save this season for new Cubs closer Kevin Gregg (0-1).

Gregg walked Chris Duffy with one out and Weeks hit a line drive that sailed over the head of left fielder Alfonso Soriano for an RBI double that tied it at 3. Weeks went to third on a wild pitch, and Corey Hart walked to bring up Braun.

ROCKIES 10, PHILLIES 3

DENVER — Cole Hamels was roughed up and chased early by the Rockies in his debut after some spring training elbow trouble pushed back his start.

Jason Marquis pitched seven strong innings in his Rockies debut, before a crowd of 49,427 — the highest paid attendance in a regular-season game at Coors Field, which opened in 1995.

Marquis (1-0), acquired from the Cubs in the offseason, improved to 4-0 at Coors Field by allowing two runs and five hits. He also went 2-for-3 at the plate.

AMERICAN LEAGUE YANKEES 4, ROYALS 1

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Andy Pettitte gave up three hits in seven strong innings and Jorge Posada hit a two-run single to carry the Yankees.

Pettitte (1-0) struck out six and walked one while allowing one run against a team he has long dominated. The left-hander beat the Royals for the 13th time in 16 career decisions and improved to 8-0 against Kansas City in his last 12 starts.

TIGERS 15, RANGERS 2

DETROIT — Miguel Cabrera hit a grand slam and matched his career high with six RBIs, leading Armando Galarraga and the Tigers over the Rangers.

Texas had started 3-0 for the first time since 1996 and led the majors in runs before the Tigers roughed Kris Benson (0-1) in his return to the majors. Benson allowed seven earned

Los Angeles Angels center fielder Torii Hunter, left, and starting pitcher John Lackey pay respect during a moment of silence for Los Angeles Angels rookie pitcher Nick Adenhardt who was killed early Thursday in an auto accident in Fullerton, Calif., before their baseball game with the Boston Red Sox in Anaheim, Calif., Friday.

Angels return to play with Adenhardt on their minds

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Torii Hunter and John Lackey stood on the pitcher's mound at Angel Stadium, each holding Nick Adenhardt's jersey, their caps off and heads bowed.

The rest of the Los Angeles Angels took their places along the third-base line, while the Boston Red Sox lined up on the first-base side. The pregame music went quiet and a hush fell over the red-clad crowd.

The Angels paid tribute Friday night with a moment of silence for Adenhardt and two of his friends who were killed about 36 hours earlier in a car crash after being broadsided by a suspected drunk driver.

Andrew Thomas Gallo, a 22-year-old from San Gabriel, was charged with three counts of murder by the Orange County district attorney on Friday. He ran a red light in his minivan and hit the car carrying Adenhardt and his friends, police said.

Hours later, Adenhardt's smiling face appeared on the stadium's video board, followed by clips of him pitching six scoreless innings Wednesday against Oakland in the best game of his brief major league career.

Cameras flashed in the stands as the teams and crowd stood silently. Then Lackey and Hunter hugged before Lackey carried Adenhardt's jersey back to the dugout.

Hunter jogged slowly toward center field, headed to the black-and-white picture of Adenhardt on the wall. Hunter touched the photo next to No. 34 and Adenhardt's name in a black circle, then took his usual position to start the game.

Angels players wore a No. 34 patch on their uniforms. Adenhardt's number also was painted in red on the back slope of the pitcher's mound, where he had struck out opposing batters two nights earlier.

He was at his locker that night when teammate Joe Saunders leaned over, patted the rookie on the back and said, "Great job."

Saunders now wishes he had said so much more. But at the time those simple words let Adenhardt know what he had longed to hear — that he finally belonged in the big leagues with the Angels after trying to get there for nearly five years.

runs and 10 hits in five innings, in his first game since Sept. 27, 2006.

ORIOLES 5, RAYS 4

BALTIMORE — Melvin Mora drove in three runs, Mark Hendrickson won in his Baltimore debut and the Orioles ended a run of 12 straight losses to the Rays.

Evan Longoria hit two homers and drove in three runs for Tampa Bay. The 2008 Rookie of the Year has four home runs and at least one RBI in all four of the Rays' games this season.

Adam Jones had two hits and scored twice for the Orioles, who went 3-15 against the Rays last year.

TWINS 12, WHITE SOX 5

CHICAGO — Joe Crede homered against his former team, Justin Morneau also went deep and the Twins spoiled Jose Contreras' comeback from a season-ending Achilles' injury.

Minnesota was leading 4-3 when Morneau homered off Clayton Richard to start a seven-run seventh, sending the Twins to a lopsided win in the first meeting since Chicago's 1-0 victory last year in a tiebreaker for the AL Central title.

BLUE JAYS 13, INDIANS 7

CLEVELAND — Marco Scutaro's bloop RBI single brought home the go-ahead run in Toronto's six-run eighth inning and the Blue Jays overcame a bullpen meltdown following a nearly four-hour rain delay to beat the Indians, who are 0-4 for the first time since 1985.

Utah Jazz guard Deron Williams (8) is defended by San Antonio Spurs forward Matt Bonner, right, during the first quarter in San Antonio, Friday.

Parker sparks Spurs past slumping Jazz

SAN ANTONIO — Tony Parker scored 31 points and the San Antonio Spurs shook off their funk long enough to bury the Utah Jazz further back in the playoff race with a 105-99 victory Friday.

Tim Duncan scored 14 points in an effort more typical for the sore All-Star, who is "playing on one leg," according to Parker. But it was enough to help San Antonio win for just the third time in seven games.

The Jazz, meanwhile, have lost five of six and slipped closer to having to face the dominant Los Angeles Lakers in the first round of the playoffs. Utah has just three games left to climb out of the No. 8 seed and secure a more favorable matchup.

Deron Williams had 25 points and 10 assists for the Jazz, whose misery in San Antonio continues. The Jazz haven't won here since 1999, a streak spanning 23 games.

Roger Mason scored 16 points for the Spurs, who are trying to climb back into position for home-court advantage in the first round. They'll finish the season at Sacramento and Golden State before a home finale against New Orleans.

The Spurs are locked in a back-and-forth race with Houston for the Southwest Division. San Antonio had sat atop the division for much of the season before weathering a rocky stretch, going 12-10 since March and losing Manu Ginobili this week to a season-ending ankle injury.

MAVERICKS 100, HORNETS 92

DALLAS — Josh Howard and Dirk Nowitzki each scored 25 points and the Dallas Mavericks held off a late rally led by Chris Paul for a win that ties the teams for the sixth seed in the Western Conference.

It won't stay that way for long — they meet again Sunday in New Orleans.

Dallas led by 10 after a few minutes and was up 42-21 midway through the second quarter. With 3 minutes left until halftime, the Hornets still had fewer points than the 30 the Mavericks scored in the first quarter. New Orleans was still down by 12 with 3:54 left, but Paul got them within four in the final minute.

CELTICS 105, HEAT 98

BOSTON — Paul Pierce scored 21 of his 28 points in the second half, including the go-ahead free throws with 97 seconds left to lead the Celtics.

Rajon Rondo had seven points, 10 rebounds and 12 assists for Boston, and Glen "Big Baby" Davis scored 22 points with eight rebounds.

CAVALIERS 102, 76ERS 92

PHILADELPHIA — LeBron James had 27 points and 10 assists, Wally Szczerbiak scored a season-high 18 and the Cavaliers clinched the No. 1 playoff seed and home-court advantage in the Eastern Conference.

The Cavaliers improved to 38-1 at Quicken Loans Arena, with the only loss coming against the Los Angeles Lakers on Feb. 8. Cleveland (64-15) entered with a half-game lead over the Lakers for the best record in the league.

KNICKS 105, MAGIC 95

ORLANDO, Fla. — Al Harrington scored 27 points, Wilson Chandler had 22 and the New York dealt a crushing blow to Orlando's hopes of getting the Eastern Conference's second seed.

David Lee added 20 points and 16 rebounds to help the Knicks avoid a season sweep by the Magic, who won the first three games against New York this season.

HAWKS 122, PACERS 118

ATLANTA — Josh Smith scored 30 points and Joe Johnson had 24 to help the Hawks clinch the fourth spot in the Eastern Conference.

Al Horford finished with 22 points and 15 rebounds as the Hawks earned home-court advantage in the first round of the playoffs. Atlanta needed either a win or a loss by Miami, which fell by seven in Boston, to wrap up the No. 4 spot.

PISTONS 100, NETS 93

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Will Bynum scored 20 points and Rasheed Wallace added 15 as Detroit clinched a playoff spot.

Detroit (39-40) will be in the postseason for the eighth straight year, but still needs two wins in its final three games to finish with a .500 record.

GRIZZLIES 106, SUNS 89

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Rudy Gay and O.J. Mayo scored 20 points apiece, and the Memphis Grizzlies snapped a 10-game losing streak against Phoenix.

While shooting 47 percent, Phoenix committed 22 turnovers, only three short of its season high.

THUNDER 84, BOBCATS 81

OKLAHOMA CITY — Kevin Durant had 20 points and 10 rebounds, and the Thunder knocked Charlotte out of playoff contention in the home finale of their first season in Oklahoma City.

Nenad Krstic added 19 points, Jeff Green had 10 points and 11 rebounds and Russell Westbrook had 10 points and 11 assists for the Thunder.

WIZARDS 100, RAPTORS 98

TORONTO — Caron Butler made a jumper at the buzzer to give Washington a victory.

Antawn Jamison had 24 points and 12 rebounds and Butler added 21 points for the Wizards, who nearly blew a six-point lead in the final minute.

Student warned over Facebook group wooing prospect

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — College sports fans, be careful of the company you keep on Facebook.

You might get yourself — and the program you support — in trouble.

That was the lesson this week for Taylor Moseley, a North Carolina State freshman who expressed a common-enough opinion on campus when he started the Facebook group called "John Wall PLEASE come to NC STATE!!!!"

More than 700 people signed up for the group encouraging Wall — a local standout and the nation's No. 1 basketball recruit — to pick the Wolfpack by national signing day next week.

But the NCAA says such sites, and dozens more like them wooing Wall and other top recruits, violate its rules. More than just cheerleading boards, the NCAA says the sites are an attempt to influence the college choice of a recruit.

Moseley got a cease and desist letter from N.C. State's compliance director, Michelle Lee, warning of "further action" if he failed to comply. In an interview Friday, Lee said that people who act as boosters but fail to follow recruiting guidelines could face penalties such as being denied tickets or even being formally "disassociated" from the athletic program.

Adam Kissel, director of the Individual Rights Defense Program at the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education, said the NCAA can impose rules on its member colleges. But universities — especially public ones — can't enforce them if it means punishing students in any way for expressing an opinion.

"A student doesn't lose First Amendment rights because of a contract the university signs with (the NCAA)," he said.

Moseley, the student, didn't respond to a request for comment, but the group has been renamed "Bring a National Title back to NC STATE!" and features a photo of Wall.

Though Lee sent Moseley the tough warning, even she finds the rule exasperating. The NCAA, she says, simply isn't keeping up with the technology reality.

"I think nationally the NCAA needs to address further Facebook and how these groups play a part in recruiting," she said. "Is it realistic for us to be able to monitor them? What harm is a group like this causing? But as the legislation stands right now, this is the position we have to take."

NCAA spokesman Erik

Christianson said the group considers its rules "technology neutral." A Facebook page is simply a high-tech way to try to influence recruits.

The NCAA's concern is "intrusions into a high school student's life when they're trying to decide where to go to college," he said. He said the NCAA is keeping up with technology, noting new rules on text-messaging from coaches.

Christianson said the NCAA expects institutions to act as N.C. State did, reaching out to the creators of such groups to "educate" them about the rules. He added he was not aware the NCAA had ever initiated any action related to a Facebook group or notified an institution about one.

But dozens of Facebook groups are still up in plain sight for current recruits, including Wall, and other top undecided basketball players such as Xavier Henry and Lance Stephenson.

cheer from the dugout I knew," Wolff said of his first ever walk-off homer at any level. "It didn't really sink in until I rounded third and saw my teammates waiting at home (plate) ... it's an awesome feeling."

CSI (22-18, 15-11 Scenic West Athletic Conference) scored its first two runs in the second inning on a two-run single from Justin Jensen. SLCC's Stephen Nelson hit a two-run single off Curtis in the top of the seventh to tie the game.

Curtis picked up the win in relief of Tyler Barrett, who was on his way to an absolute gem before the wheels came off in the seventh. Curtis also nailed down the save in the opener, going 1 1-3 innings to lock down the win for Sam Armstrong, after Andy Fox's two-run double in the bottom of third put CSI ahead for good.

An imposing and hard-throwing right-hander from West Jordan, Utah, Curtis had started pretty much every weekend until Friday. But the need for a lock-down reliever became too great to ignore any longer, and the move to the bullpen paid immediate dividends.

"Tyler's a kid that's always been more comfortable out of the bullpen, and I think he enjoys that role too," said CSI head coach Boomer Walker. "We knew from the early part of the season that Tyler would probably be our closer at regionals."

Said Curtis: "I didn't know what to do at first, but I like (the role) and it gives our team a better chance to win. Obviously we've found a pretty good thing (so far), because if the starters can go five or six innings we've got a had thrown me inside all day, so I was looking for it," Olander said of the at bat.

CSI swung somewhat better in the second game and was able to put more runs on the board with big hits. Hillstead homered twice for three RBIs, while Ashley Chappel's three-run home run in the sixth put CSI up 6-3. Chappel, who is now tied with Megan Zimmerman for the school's home run record, said the team could have done more at the plate.

"Most of us, we were looking for our pitch, and we were letting a lot of pitches go by," she said. "We need to be more aggressive. We had some good hits in there. We could have pulled it off."

The Eagles and Cardinals will meet at noon today for another doubleheader.

Masters

former U.S. Open champion Angel Cabrera, who had a 68.

Anthony Kim set a tournament record with 11 birdies on his way to a 65 - 10 shots better than his first round - to get into contention in his Master debut. Phil Mickelson was on the verge of missing the cut until he played his last seven holes in 5 under for a 68. Sergio Garcia shot a 67, the first time he has broken par at the Masters in five years.

There were a record 17 eagles in the second round, breaking by two the mark set in 1997.

Tiger Woods couldn't join this parade of birdies and eagles for the second straight day. All three of his birdies were followed by bogeys, and his 72 left him seven shots behind.

Woods has never won a major when trailing by more than six shots after 36 holes.

"It was just tough all round," said Woods, who headed straight for the practice range.

Maybe for him, but not for the 25 players who managed to break par.

It was tough on Gary Player, Fuzzy Zoeller and Greg Norman for other reasons.

Player completed his remarkable career at the Masters by competing for the 52nd and final time. The 73-year-old South African, who won three green jackets, knelt before reaching the 18th green and clasped his hands to thank the gallery.

Zoeller also is calling it quits after an Augusta National career remembered for winning the first sudden-death playoff at the Masters in 1979, and for his racially insensitive comments after Woods won in 1997.

The return of the Shark lasted only two days. Norman shot 40 on the back nine for a 77 to miss the cut by two shots in what likely will be his last time playing the Masters, 22 years without ever getting upstairs to the champions' locker room.

Is there room up there for a 48-year-old from Kentucky?

"Everything is a bonus now, it really is," Perry said. "I'm just going through each and every day enjoying life a little bit. I think I can win. I'm not going out there very casually. I'm burning inside, wanting to kick everybody's butt."

Jack Nicklaus was 46 when he became the oldest Masters champion in 1986. The oldest to win any major was Julius Boros, who was 48 when he won the 1968 PGA Championship. Perry is four months older.

Despite his paltry record at the Masters - five missed cuts in eight appearances - a victory would not be all that surprising. Perry won earlier this year in Phoenix and is No. 11 in the world ranking.

He has a new driver that makes him feel as though he will hit every fairway, a 64-degree sand wedge that has helped take the edge off the scary chips around the green, and he is putting better than ever. No wonder he made it through Friday without a single bogey.

"That was probably one of the greatest rounds I've ever played," Perry said. "I just didn't have any nerves. I was so comfortable out there today. I don't know how to explain it. But it was just easy?"

Eviction may be best option for dealing with deadbeat son

Q: My elderly mother lives in the home that she and my dad, who passed away last spring, remodeled. At that time my brother and his girlfriend were living on the property with them, on the terms that when they both got on their feet they would move out.

The girlfriend left but my brother still lives there and doesn't help with rent, utilities or any chores like he had previously agreed to. What are my mother's legal options?

A: One of the best things would be to find a real estate attorney to draw out plans for rent at one time he may have established enough residency to have to be evicted from the house, even if he quit paying rent.

An Idaho tenant must be given notice by a landlord prior to eviction. The notice can be a 3- or 30-day notice. Once a tenant receives a legal notice, a landlord may commence a legal proceeding called an "unlawful detainer" action to regain possession of the premises and/or collect the rent due.

POLICEMAN
DAN

If you get an attorney involved and your brother still refuses to leave, a judge could order him out. If he refused to leave, he could be charged with contempt of court and/or trespassing. Your mother can always trespass the ex-girlfriend off the property if she comes back, unless your mother accepts rent from her.

The simplest rule with anybody is if they stay at your home, don't tell them they can stay as long as they want, because they just might do it.

Q: I bought an old police car and was stopped while driving it. The officer told me that I could go to jail for impersonating a police officer. The car does not have any police symbols anywhere. Did I break the law?

A: No, unless you were trying to stop people and tell them you were a police officer. The key to being charged for impersonating a police officer is that you present yourself under the guise that you are with the police.

The officer could have been in hot water if he stopped you just because of your car and then arrested you. The resulting lawsuit could have enabled you to own many more police cars. I would contact the officer's supervisor, however, and make him or her aware of the incident so that a future lawsuit could be avoided. You can keep driving your car — it is perfectly legal.

Officer down

Please put these officers, killed in the line of duty, and their families in your prayers. God bless these heroes.

- Sgt. Randy White, Bridgeport Police, Texas.
- Officers Eric Kelly, Stephen Mayhle and Paul Sciallo III Pittsburgh Police.
- Det. Allen Pearson, Lenoir County Sheriff, North Carolina.

Be safe, I'll talk to you next week.

Declo Council sets budget hearing

By Brian W. Clayton
Times-News correspondent

DECLO — Declo Mayor Jay Darrington at Wednesday's City Council meeting said more than half the city's budget has been spent for fiscal year 2009. However, "We still have money and we didn't get a bailout." The council set a budget hearing for 7 p.m. Aug. 12.

Councilman Mark Payne reported that he spoke with Bonneville Power Administration representative Larry King about the city's electric load usage. Payne said that King said Declo's load was less in 2008 and inquired about steps the city took to cut back on power consumption.

Darrington attributed the decreased usage to the city's upgraded power system. Payne said "Larry King will come out to Declo in the fall of 2009," as the load limit for electricity is going to be cut back.

Darrington drew attention to Sunday's Centennial Declo Day Celebration and a motorcycle fun run through Mini-Cassia, scheduled to start at 9 a.m. May 30 at the Rupert Square. Vikingman Triathlon director Brent Stoker informed the council that the event, held June 6, has changed its course after a 2008 participant was struck by an oncoming car near Murtaugh. He said athletes will be in the Declo area between 8:30 and 9 a.m., and 10:30 a.m. to noon the day of the race.

In other news, Darrington said he'd like some new street signs installed in the summer with "steel posts, not handmade, and not made out of wood."

Declo Boy Scout Troop 127 attended with 10 scouts and two parent leaders for their introduction to the council. Darrington thanked them and suggested a potential Eagle Scout project to any of them willing to create a frame to hang a commemorative quilt on the council room's wall.

Dementia patient given inappropriate medication

DEAR DR. GOTT: I am writing to thank you from the bottom of my heart for writing the article about Seroquel being risky for elderly patients.

My wife is 82 years old and has had dementia for many years. She was diagnosed with Alzheimer's and given many different medications to try, but nothing worked. When she started getting worse, her physician prescribed Seroquel.

About four or five weeks into taking the medication, she became really confused. She would wake up at night and want to go home without realizing that she already was home. It scared me so much that I was afraid to go to sleep in case I didn't hear her get up.

After reading your column, I took my wife off the Seroquel and noticed a dramatic change within a week. She has told me that she is feeling better than ever. She now takes 3 milligrams of melatonin, which helps her sleep all night, and she has no more confusion during the day.

DEAR READER: I am glad to hear that my column helped your wife; however, if she has dementia, she should never have been prescribed the medication.

Seroquel is an antipsychotic medication used to treat conditions such as bipolar disorder, not Alzheimer's. There is even a black-box warning stating that it should not be used in elderly dementia patients. Assuming your wife really has Alzheimer's, her physician made a potentially dangerous error.

You say that your wife is feeling better, no longer confused and sleeping all night thanks to stopping the Seroquel and starting melatonin. If she is no longer having symptoms of dementia, perhaps she

TRICARE network not expected to shrink

TRICARE assures providers and beneficiaries that the provider network will continue to be strong and growing as Congress approved legislation that maintains current Medicare reimbursement rates to health care providers.

A decrease in Medicare reimbursement rates was to have gone into effect July 1, 2008. Because TRICARE reimbursement rates are tied by statute to Medicare, some beneficiaries have expressed concerns that a rate decrease could hurt their access to providers.

"We hope the actions taken maintaining Medicare rates will help alleviate provider or beneficiary concerns," said Army MG Elder Granger, deputy director of TRICARE management activity. "The TRICARE provider network is strong and growing and we expect that trend to continue. Since last year, outreach efforts have resulted in the addition of more than 115,000 providers who accept TRICARE, a 9 percent increase nationwide since 2007."

More than 325,000 providers are in the TRICARE network with more than one million providers accepting TRICARE beneficiaries.

VA accepting online claims applications

The U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs is accepting online applications from veterans, survivors and other claimants filing initial applications for disability compensation, pension, education and vocational rehabilitation and employment benefits without the additional requirement to submit a signed paper copy of the application.

VA is processing applications received through its online application Web site (<http://www.va.gov/onlin-eapps.htm>) without the claimant's signature. The electronic application is sufficient authorization of the claimants for benefits. Normal development procedures and rules of evidence will still apply to all VONAPP applications.

VONAPP benefits both internal and external users. Those seeking compensation, pension, education or vocational rehabilitation benefits can apply electronically without the constraints of location, postage, costs and time delays in mail delivery. VONAPP reduces the number of incomplete applications received by VA claim processes.

The online application also provides a link to apply for VA benefits.

DEMARY MEMORIAL LIBRARY BOOK NOTES

Here are the most recent book notes from the DeMary Memorial Library in Rupert

Fiction: "Second Opinion" by Michael Palmer

Dr. Thea Sperelakis left the United States to work with the poor, embattled patients of Doctors Without Borders. A sudden accident that puts her father into a coma brings her back to Boston. Amongst the conflicts with siblings and doubts about the accident, the truth is unknown until her father looks at her and begins slowly to blink a terrifying message

Fiction: "Under the Radar" by Fern Michaels

The sisters have barely caught their breath from their last mission when Charles and Myra disappear in the dead of night. An urgent call to help 14 pregnant teenagers has them up against a very secretive and controversial polygamy sect. The sisters are without their mentor this time, and everything is on the line.

Fiction: "All the Colors of Darkness" by Peter Robinson

Detective Inspector Annie Cabbot is given an apparent suicide case, but she can't understand why such a successful and well-liked man would take his own life.

Another shattering discovery gets Detective Chief Inspector Alan Banks on the case. Banks finds himself plunged into a shadow world where nothing is what it seems, where secrets and deceit are the norm, and where murder is often the solution.

Fiction: "Aunt Dimity Slays the Dragon" by Nancy Atherton

Lori loves her English village of Finch, but she's wishing for something exciting to spice up her routine.

King Wilfred's Faire opens nearby, granting Lori her wish. Wizards, wenches, magicians, and minstrels cajole the fairgoers while lords quaff, jesters joke, and knights battle in the joust arena. But Lori discovers that it's not all pageantry and play. Lori races to save her dear village and risks her neck to keep the medieval revelry from ending in tragedy.

There are several disorders that can cause dementia and other neurological changes. Vitamin deficiencies, normal pressure hydrocephalus, Alzheimer's, even depression or sleeping abnormalities and more are possible culprits. Some are reversible and others are treatable, but until there is a positive diagnosis, there is no way of knowing what will help her.

I urge your wife to undergo testing to determine the cause of her dementia. She should also be under the care of a neurologist if she isn't already. If she is seeing such a specialist, ask for a referral for a second opinion. If it was her primary-care physician who prescribed the Seroquel, perhaps it would be appropriate to find another, since he or she has already shown disregard for medication warning labels.

If symptoms persist but are mild, she may be fine without medication, but be sure to speak with her specialist about this. It is also important that you take proper care of yourself. Providing full-time care for a dementia patient can be incredibly difficult. You may find it easier and more rewarding if you bring in occasional help from a local visiting-nurse association. This type of organization can provide assistance to the caretaker as well as the patient.

T.F. man appointed to office in Mormon church

By John E. Swayze
Times-News correspondent

Family relationships and their connection with the Mormon church are cornerstones for Brent Nielson.

"The church is everything," Nielson said. "My wife (Marcia) and I share very strong feelings about serving, because of what Jesus Christ did for us?"

The 54-year-old Twin Falls attorney was officially called to a place of service in the First Quorum of Seventy of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints during last weekend's 179th Annual General Conference in Salt Lake City.

Born and raised in Burley, Nielson graduated from Brigham Young University with a bachelor's degree in English. He went on to earn a law degree from the University of Utah and opened a law practice in Twin Falls in 1981.

The responsibilities that come with his new church appointment, however, will leave little time for practice. Over the next 16 years, his energies will be focused on traveling the world, overseeing the administrative and faith activities conducted by church stake and temple facilities and mission outreaches.

"This means I'll be leaving my practice and moving to Salt Lake in June for a year of training," he said. "I'm not sure where we'll go from there, but my new duties will begin one year later in August."

In his life-long support of the church Nielson has also served a full-time mission to Finland, served as bishop, stake president and has been a member of the Fifth Quorum of the Seventy since 2005. Nielson also assisted church President Gordon B. Hinckley in selecting the Twin Falls Temple site in 2004 and then served a two-and-a-half-year term as chairman of the construction committee.

"My wife and I received a phone call one evening saying the president would be in the area and asking for help considering eight possible sites in Twin Falls for the temple," he said. "The construction committee was responsible for everything from ground breaking to the dedication last August. That was actually pretty easy, because they basically told us what needed to be done and we just did it."

The couple has six grown children who have continued in their faith and the family tradition of service. The youngest is now preparing for a mission to Japan.

"We're certainly going to miss the Twin Falls area," Nielson said, "but I think this will definitely be a fun and exciting experience."

Other church leaders with Magic Valley ties include church apostle David B. Haight from Oakley, and Second Quorum of the Seventy member D. Rex Gerratt from Heyburn. Gerratt is current president of the Twin Falls Temple.

Passover and Easter

Hannah Thrasher of Bible Times Center, background center, stands next to what she says the table at the 'last Supper' would have looked like in biblical times as Swiss tourists eat during a tour at the center in the Jerusalem neighborhood of Ein Kerem, in this picture taken April 6. The links between Passover and Easter — both celebrated this week — are one example of the parallels between Jewish and Christian traditions that Thrasher seeks to show visitors to the Bible Times Center in Ein Kerem, a historic neighborhood of Jerusalem believed to be the birthplace of John the Baptist.

Center highlights Jewish context of Easter story

JERUSALEM — The Christian visitors watch their host, a Jewish woman in green robe, orange turban and leather sandals, lift the wine and unleavened bread of Passover, representing the biblical exodus of the Israelites from slavery in Egypt.

Then, holding the same symbols, she invokes the "new covenant" offered by Jesus to his disciples at the Last Supper — showing the Jewish roots of the Easter week event.

Baptist.

Thrasher said she hopes to build inter-religious understanding by teaching Christians about the Jewish context of Bible stories and by showing Jews how the stories of Jesus and his disciples — Jews living in the Holy Land — illuminate their own history.

"The purpose here is to bring these things to life and show that there are some principles that transcend all religions," she said, citing justice, compassion and loving your neighbor as yourself.

Christian interest in Jewish tradition has been growing for decades as many realize it enriches their understanding of scripture, said Daniel Rossing, director of the Jerusalem Center for Jewish-Christian Relations.

"It can enlighten your reading of biblical texts when you are more familiar with the social, religious and cultural context in which the events took place," he said.

Former Filer resident writes children's devotional

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

As darkness enveloped her 650 feet underground, Jackie Alley's life began to change.

The former Filer resident, now driving a 40-ton truck in the coal mines of Kentucky, claims to have heard the voice of God, telling her to finish her book so that others might see by its light.

The experience happened as she sat in her truck on a lunch break during her usual graveyard shift. The voice told her to turn off the truck and its lights. She did and was immediately plunged into a pitch-black world.

Listening to the silence of the tunnel that seemed almost as obscene as the darkness itself — her fingers wrapped tight around a peanut butter and jelly sandwich — the voice in her head said, among other things, she claims: "Unwrap the gifts I placed in you. ... Finish your book."

As she turned on her miner's light, the symbolism struck: her gifts were as a small light penetrating a dark world. They could help others find their way to God.

"I bawled for three days after that," Jackie says.

Then she set out to finish her first book, a children's devotional entitled "Nana's Tomato Patch."

Now, two years later, the book is published and will soon hit a national market.

If sales go well — she has to sell 5,000 copies before her publisher will accept her next book — she plans to write 11 other devotionals.

"One for each month of the year," she says.

The 5x7 book has 24 pages of story text; the rest of the "Nana's Tomato Patch" by Jackie Alley is available at Crowley's Quad in the Magic Valley Mall, and come April 28 will be available at Barnes & Noble bookstores. Readers may also purchase the book from Nana's Book Builders by calling 606-882-3262.

volume is filled with songs and illustrations by Jackie and her two daughters, Shawna Lippert and Kalli Dow — whom she calls "Nana's Book Builders."

The book profiles Trevor and Tyneisha, who become bug-size and lost in a vegetable garden. While there, they experience adventure, fear, and faith as they forge friendships with Matthey the praying mantis and Walleye the walking stick. Eventually, the insects help the children to find their way back home.

"Mom says God knows our needs before we even ask," Tyneisha says to the bugs in the book. "Do you see how true that is? You bugs, our help, were already there; we just couldn't see you."

"Yeah," Trevor adds, "it's like the Lord, you can't see Him, but He's there and He wants to help us, too!"

RELIGION LETTERS

A challenge for Mormons

Numerous comments have been published criticizing those who find fault with the LDS doctrine and question the legitimacy of the LDS Church being called Christian.

Flavius Josephus was commissioned by the Roman government to write and preserve Jewish history. Josephus writes of Abraham that Abraham heard that the Syrians had certain ideas of God. Abraham then journeyed to Syria to inquire of the Syrians to see if their ideas of God were more noble than his and, if so, he would learn from them. If his ideas were more noble than the Syrians, Abraham wanted to teach the Syrians. The Syrians were so impressed with Abraham that they named a city after Abraham.

The LDS claim that they are the only true church. Are they right? Due to that position, the LDS claims that all other churches are wrong. We have so many people defending the Mormons and calling them Christian even though the Mormons call all other churches wrong. What is the answer?

The Bereans in Acts 7 searched the scriptures daily to see if things were true. In Acts 3:15, we are told to be ready always to give every man that asks you the reason of the hope that lieth in you.

Therefore, I challenge, by suppling no less than three persons using the Bible for our authority, a calm, public debate with any president, elder or other representative or several representatives of the Mormon faith with the Mormons using the Bible, the Book of Mormon, The Pearl of Great Price and the Doctrine and Covenants, to study, compare or challenge the Mormon faith compared to the Christian faith.

CARTER KILLINGER
Twin Falls

Why are Mormons so insistent?

Why are Mormons so insistent on being called Christian when they obviously are not Christian? Mormons often sound like Christians until you realize that though they use Christian terms, their meaning, to them, is quite different.

Christians believe that the Bible is the inspired, infallible and the only word of God. In Revelation, it says that anyone who adds or subtracts from its teaching will suffer grave consequences.

Mormons believe the Bible (as they properly interpret it), the Book of Mormon and the book of Covenants and Doctrines are the word of God. The book of Doctrine and Covenants has had more than 2,000 changes from its original text. Who is properly interpreting it?

Christians believe there is one God who is and always has been a spirit made up of three parts. Mormons reject the Trinity. Joseph Smith referred to the council of the gods and referred to god as an exalted man of flesh and bones.

Christians believe we are saved by grace through faith in Jesus as our Savior and that only Jesus' death on the cross was sufficient to remove all sins. He will return on Judgment Day and everyone will see him. Upon death, the fate of everyone is sealed permanently. Mormons believe salvation comes from faith in Christ, baptism by immersion, obedience to Mormon teaching, good works, keeping the commandments of God and polygamy. Do not forget that polygamy was taught as the way for people to become gods. This belief was only dropped "officially" so that Utah could become a state. Mormons also teach baptism of the dead so that people get a second chance after they die. Brigham Young stated that Jesus' death on the cross was ineffective for cleansing some sins.

The stands of the two beliefs speak for themselves.

Passover and Easter: Both a promise of the season

For my friend, Ben, this time of year is awash in miracles.

Never mind that spring is taking its own sweet time this year in working its annual miracle on our lawns and gardens. The promise is the same every year: warm sunshine is coming, and not just because Poor Richard says so. Soon our apple trees will blossom, our lilies will bloom and our teenage son, Jon, will begin adding to his already impressive litany of reasons why he shouldn't mow the lawn today (last year, for example, he cited empirical evidence from — he swears — a former vice president of these United States suggesting that it throws off the earth's ecological equilibrium if you mow the lawn on days ending with "y" Who knew?)

For Ben, the miracles of the season that are uppermost in his mind this week are thousands of years old. They begin with a baby in a basket being rescued from a river and continue through a familiar assortment of miraculous occurrences: the voice of God speaking through a burning bush, one of the world's greatest rivers being turned to blood and a mighty nation being brought to its collective knees by the divine imposition of plague and pestilence.

"Mostly," I told Ben in a feeble attempt to prove my understanding of his Jewish tradition, "Passover is about — you know — that night when God sent this smoky, gassy stuff throughout Egypt that sort of killed the first-born from all the Egyptian families, including Yul Brynner's son, but it passed over the houses of the Jews, who had painted their doors with lamb's blood. Hence the name — you know — Passover." Ben smiled patiently.

"Well, yes," he said. "Passover is about the miracle of deliverance, although I'm not exactly sure about the smoky, gassy stuff or Yul Brynner's son — I think that's more Cecil B. DeMille than Old Testament. But for me, it's more about what that miracle represented."

"Freedom?" I asked. "You know — for the children of Israel?"

"Well, yes," Ben said. "That's an important part of it. But eventually the children of Israel turned their backs on God and ended up in captivity again."

I guess I hadn't really thought about that. "So the deliverance from Egypt was sort of — pointless," I observed.

Ben smiled patiently. Again. "Not pointless," he said. "It just wasn't permanent. But all of the Passover miracles culminated in something that has endured through the years — miraculously?" I thought for a moment.

"Charlton Heston?" I asked.

His patient smile didn't wane — but it did waver a little.

"Close," he said. "The Ten Commandments. Not the movie. The Law. That is the great, enduring miracle that was the end result of all of the Passover miracles. God miraculously gave His law, which has become the foundation of all law throughout most of the world."

My religious orientation is different from Ben's, but it embraces the miracles of Passover and it cherishes the Ten Commandments. While there are many today who view these simple, basic rules for living as archaic and obsolete, I have never known anyone who got into trouble — morally, legally or otherwise — by living life in harmony with these guidelines.

The Ten Commandments aren't about limitations, they're about choices. Choosing to live them leads us toward loving, honoring and respecting God, our families and our fellow travelers on this planet. Whether this week you are celebrating Passover, Easter or the eventual arrival of spring, they are part of the promise of the season. And certainly part of the miracle.

LDS church among fastest-growing religions

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — An editor of a yearbook of church demographics says year-to-year membership statistics for the Mormon church place the Utah-based faith among the fastest-growing religious traditions in the U.S. and Canada.

Eileen Lindner, of the Yearbook of American and Canadian Churches, says it's hard to compare data among faiths because counting methods vary. But annual data provide a good roadmap of growth within an individual church.

Data released Saturday by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints place its worldwide membership at 13.5 million as of Dec. 31, 2008. That's up from 13.1 million in 2007. Growth is occurring fastest outside of North America.

The yearbook uses figures provided by the church and Lindner says Mormon data are considered reliable because the church employs professional demographers.

Amish builder takes skills to Bolivar Peninsula

By Sarah Moore
Beaumont Enterprise

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Construction is not an unusual sight along the Texas Gulf Coast these days, but recently on Bolivar Peninsula, residents were seeing something a little different at one site.

Bearded men in broad-brimmed hats and suspenders were building what likely is the region's first beach house that uses a frame traditional to Amish barns.

Missouri resident Danny Schwartz, a member of the Old Order Amish sect, came to Texas in hopes of bringing his building skills to the monumental task of rebuilding the Gulf Coast — and building it back stronger than it was before.

He found out about the need from a neighbor who returned from Bolivar after helping with the debris cleanup.

"He said, 'What they need is what we've got,'" the 54-year-old Schwartz said.

Schwartz' first clients were Blake and Bunny Rising, a couple who had lived in Lafitte's Landing for several years. They returned from evacuation to find nothing but a few timbers where their beloved home had been.

They will never forget the desolation of that day.

"It's like a hole in your heart," Bunny Rising said.

And they loved their beach life too much not to rebuild.

"This is home for us," said Blake Rising, a district manager for Spec's liquor stores. "I moved a thousand miles to be on this spot. For the people who live here, this is a lifestyle most people would envy."

But this time around, they are doing their best to make the house as strong and high off the ground as possible.

They raised it from 18 feet to 22 feet above sea level, and decided to go with the Amish style frame for practical as well as aesthetic reasons.

They first heard about the

After checking the level of one of the beams, Danny Schwartz, left, an Amish builder from Missouri, gives additional directions to the crew working up high aligning other beams March 4 in Crystal Beach, Texas. Schwartz visited Crystal Beach to help rebuild the two-story beach home of Blake Rising using traditional Amish-style framing.

benefits of the Amish building style from the Missouri man who had come down for the cleanup.

The Risings did a little research and by November, Schwartz had come to Texas and met them. He started working with engineers and other Southeast Texas contractors to adapt his frame design to Gulf Coast standards.

The frame was engineered to withstand wind speeds of 185 mph, 25 mph above the 160 mph required by Texas code, said Chris Waters of Boumans Construction.

Another Gulf Coast requirement was additional tie-downs.

Using a binder containing examples of his work, Schwartz showed photos of a home whose frame he had built that subsequently was hit by a F5 tornado.

On the Fujita scale, F5 is ranked as an "incredible tornado" with wind speeds of 261 to 318 mph.

Siding and shingles had been torn away, but the frame stayed intact.

The mortise-and-tenon style is the way Amish barns traditionally were constructed, using heavy timber beams carved to fit together to hold the building up. The mortise is the cavity hollowed to fit the tenon, which is the end of the interlocking beam, shaped to fit smoothly into the mortise. The two are held in place with pegs.

In the beach house, the beams are made of Douglas fir and are held together with ash pegs, Schwartz said.

"We're hoping to build a lot of them," Schwartz said. "We don't want to intrude — we want to use local people. My wish is to help out, not hinder."

Learning this type of building simply was part of his upbringing, Schwartz said. He became a general contractor when he was 20 and discovered that an interest in the exposed beam style was becoming fashionable.

He was amazed to see builders looking for ways to support the beams, when of course the purpose of beams is to support buildings.

Schwartz oversaw the work from floor level, assisting at such tasks as he could from there while three of his sons worked up on the beams of the rising structure.

More than 30 feet above the ground, Emanuel, Jonas and Pete Schwartz moved about comfortably on the frame, guiding preassembled parts made at home in Schwartz's shop into place and hammering in the pegs to hold them there.

Soon the graceful lines of the simple structure began to emerge.

The couple agreed their new house will be better than the one lost in Hurricane Ike's surge.

While the exposed beams will give the inside of the house a distinctive appearance, the outer finish does not appear ostentatious among the beach houses around it.

A deck on the front of the house shows off some detail of the exposed beams.

"To me it looks beachy," Blake Rising said.

Schwartz said he and his family — his wife and one of his son's wives came along — excited some curiosity among Southeast Texans, who have a lot of questions about what being Amish means. Their clothing is noticeably different, and as is common among Old Order Amish, the house his family lives in has no electricity or running water.

However, for business reasons, Schwartz has had to begin using a cell phone. He explained that doing business in the cellular age requires the very prompt return of phone calls to clients in order to keep their business.

Similarly, although he and his sons work only with hand tools, a crane operator is hired to help hoist the preassembled parts of the frame into place.

It's something that would be done by hand at a traditional Amish barn raising, but isn't always possible at construction sites.

The Amish don't avoid technology for its own sake, but because of the way it tends to splinter families and communities.

For example, owning a car makes it possible for spouses and children to easily leave the home. However, the mere act of riding in a car, depending on the purpose, is not necessarily wrong.

And, it would not have been practical for Schwartz and his family to travel by horse and buggy to Texas.

"The network is like it is," Schwartz said. "We're part of society — I always tell people we dress funny, but we're part of society."

who moved to Israel in 2006, focuses on cultural context, with connections between Passover and Easter being most relevant.

"This is not from the da Vinci picture" of the Last Supper, Thrasher recently told a group of Swiss Christians in the center's "upper room."

Instead of the rectangular table from the famous painting, carpets covered the floor. Jesus and his disciples would have likely reclined while eating, Thrasher said.

She said the Last Supper was a seder, the dinner during which Jews commemorate the biblical account of their ancestors' passage from slavery in Egypt to what is today Israel.

After someone recited Passover prayers in Hebrew, Thrasher summarized the New Testament account of Jesus leading the disciples in communion and saying he would become the sacrifice to forgive their sins.

Thrasher, an amateur historian trained as a fashion designer, said the center aims for authenticity, but also hopes to be "a great place for storytelling."

Stephen Pfann, president of the University of the Holy Land, said scholars disagree about whether the Last Supper was a seder, though it was held during Passover week. Evidence suggests the disciples reclined on low couches and ate off low tables, he said.

Thrasher said she realized how little many Christians know about the Jewish roots of their faith more than 30 years ago, when a church in Wellesley, Mass., asked her to demonstrate a seder.

She did demonstrations at other churches and took study trips to the Holy Land before moving from Tulsa, Okla., to Israel in 2006. She opened the center a year later, she said.

A simple tour costs 20 shekels ($5), she said. A longer tour with a meal in the "upper room" costs $25.

Some of the displays have been designed so all visitors will be comfortable, Thrasher said.

the story — was inspired to write the book for her 15 grandchildren, she says.

"I wanted to do a devotional to remind people that it's not what you have but who you are that counts, and who you share it with," Jackie says. Even in a depressed economy some families seem to be tearing apart instead of pulling together, she continues. "I wanted to help remind people to bring back family time and faith."

Though it took her a year to write, after her experience in the tunnel Jackie believes the book was inspired and approved by God.

"I think it's just wonderful, a gift from heaven," Clara Alley says about her daughter's book. Clara, who still lives in Filer, says she did not know Jackie had written a book until after it was accepted for publication.

"It's a precious book for little children, but moms and dads can read it too," Clara says, noting the book is meant for parents to read to their children as well as for children to read on their own.

The book, published by Tate Publishing & Enterprises of Mustang, Okla., will be released to a national audience April 28. Buyers may also download a free audio version.

Though she's already held book signings at churches and small bookshops in Kentucky, Jackie says she might one day return to the Magic Valley to sign books. She graduated from Filer High School in 1974 and left the Magic Valley for Wyoming in 1979. Later, she secured her current job in Kentucky.

"It's been a while since I've been back (to the Magic Valley)," she says.

Fredrick Arthur Thompson

GOODING — Fredrick Arthur Thompson, known as Art, passed quietly and peacefully from this life on April 3, 2009, at his home in Gooding, Idaho.

Art was born Nov. 13, 1936, in Burley, Idaho, to Herbert Earl Thompson Sr., and Emma Bruveleit Thompson. While growing up in Burley, his father died. At age 14 he ran the family farm while still attending High School.

Art graduated from the University of Arizona Tucson with a Bachelor of Science degree in Electrical Engineering and a minor in Geology.

Art was hired immediately after graduating by Lockheed Missile and Space Co. in Sunnyvale, Calif. He worked as an aerospace engineer on radar systems and microwave communications throughout the world. He traveled often to England and lived there for several years before returning to Sunnyvale. He enjoyed his career for 30 years before retiring.

Upon retirement, Art moved to Fairfield, where he owned a farm. Later he purchased his home in Gooding. He lived out his life working his land, and enjoying his avocation, building and flying radio controlled aircraft. He operated them from a landing field that he built.

Art's passing was preceded by his mother and father, and brother, Richard "Dick" Thompson.

Art is survived by his sisters, Marjorie Miller and Carol Powe; and brother, Herbert Earl Thompson Jr.; as well as his niece, Beverly Wallace, and nephews, Dan Miller and William and Edward Thompson.

Funeral services will be held at 2 p.m. Tuesday, April 14, 2009, at Demaray's Gooding Chapel in Gooding. Burial will follow in the Elmwood Cemetery in Gooding.

Dungeons & Dragons co-creator dies at 61

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Dave Arneson, one of the co-creators of the Dungeons & Dragons fantasy game and a pioneer of role-playing entertainment, died after a two-year battle with cancer, his family said Thursday. He was 61.

Arneson's daughter, Malia Weinlagen of Maplewood, said her father died peacefully Tuesday in hospice care in St. Paul.

Arneson and Gary Gygax developed Dungeons & Dragons in 1974 using medieval characters and mythical creatures. The game known for its oddly shaped dice became a hit, particularly among teenage boys. It eventually was turned into video games, books and movies. Gygax died in March 2008.

"The biggest thing about my dad's world is he wanted people to have fun in life," Weinlagen said. "I think we get distracted by the everyday things you have to do in life and we forget to enjoy life and have fun."

"But my dad never did," she said. "He just wanted people to have fun."

Dungeons & Dragons players create fictional characters and carry out their adventures with the help of complicated rules. The quintessential geek pastime, it spawned copycat games and later inspired a whole genre of computer games that's still growing in popularity. "(Arneson) developed many of the fundamental ideas of role-playing: that each player controls just one hero, that heroes gain power through adventures, and that personality is as important as combat prowess," according to a statement from Wizards of the Coast, a subsidiary of Hasbro, Inc. that produces Dungeons & Dragons.

Blackmoor, a game Arneson was developing before D&D, was the "first-ever role-playing campaign and the prototype for all (role-playing game) campaigns since," the company said.

Arneson and Gygax were dedicated tabletop wargamers who recreated historical battles with painted miniature armies and fleets. They met in 1969 at a convention, and their first collaboration, along with Mike Carr, was a set of rules for sailing-ship battles called "Don't Give Up the Ship!"

In later years, Dave published other role-playing games and started his own game-publishing company and computer game company. He also taught classes in game design. He was inducted into the Academy of Adventure Gaming Arts and Design Hall of Fame in 1984.

Weinlagen said her father enjoyed teaching game design at Full Sail University in Winter Park, Fla., in recent years, where he taught students to make a solid set of rules for their games.

Low-tech tools take out phones in Silicon Valley

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Forget, for a moment, computer viruses and sophisticated cybercrimes. A hacksaw and a few other tools were probably all it took for someone to sever eight fiber-optic cables in Silicon Valley this week, knocking out cell phone, landline and Internet service.

The attack was a reminder of the fragility of the telecommunications networks that are increasingly important in our lives. Yet physical sabotage of the networks is extremely rare, and far overshadowed by natural disasters like hurricanes. Security experts were unable to recall a similar incident.

Cables were cut early Thursday in San Jose and nearby San Carlos, wiping out telecom service to tens of thousands of homes and businesses. Some people were still able to place local calls, but 911 service disappeared.

A woman in Gilroy was forced to flee her home during a robbery because she couldn't call 911. She rushed to a nearby firehouse to report the crime, city spokesman Joe Kline said.

Services returned later Thursday as repairs progressed.

Police in San Jose have received leads from potential witnesses, Sgt. Ronnie Lopez said, and FBI spokesman Brian Hale said the incident had no connection to terrorism. He did not elaborate on how that determination had been made.

Lopez said that whoever cut the cables knew how to use the proper tools to remove a heavy manhole cover and slice through the thick cables, which are protected by a heavy plastic sheath.

Still, it wasn't clearly an inside job. In San Carlos, where four fiber-optic cables were severed, Police Cmdr. Rich Cinfio cautioned people not to conclude that the crime required detailed knowledge of the system's workings.

"You can get the tools needed to do this at any local hardware store," Cinfio said.

AT&T Inc., which owns six of the severed cables, posted a $100,000 reward for information leading to an arrest, then raised that to $250,000 on Friday "as the full scope of the vandalism became clear."

Sprint Nextel Corp. said one of its cables, which provided Internet access for large business customers, was cut, too. Sprint was able to reroute traffic over other lines within a few hours of the cut.

A sign warns that buried communications cables are present next to the underground vault where police suspect vandals entered and cut several of the lines in San Jose, Calif., on Thursday.

Kalispel tribe, public utility agree on new dam license deal

By Nicholas K. Geranios
Associated Press writer

SPOKANE, Wash. — Box Canyon Dam will become friendlier to fish under a federally mediated deal that ends a decade of litigation over the structure's new operating license.

The agreement between the Kalispel Tribe of Indians and the Pend Oreille County Public Utility District will help repair environmental damage caused by the dam when it was built in the 1950s. It's the latest example of tribes using the dam relicensing process to correct wrongs of the past.

"The tribe is glad to have the settlement process completed," tribal Chairman Glen Nenema said in a news release. "We look forward to beginning the important work of restoring and enhancing natural resources that are such a central part of our heritage and culture."

A signing ceremony was held Friday at the tribe's reservation at Usk, about 45 miles north of Spokane.

The dam on the Pend Oreille River near Ione in northeastern Washington created a 55-mile-long reservoir that flooded one-tenth of the small Kalispel Reservation and inundated numerous cultural sites. It also submerged the rapids that halted explorer David Thompson's quest to find a route from Idaho's Lake Pend Oreille to the Columbia River.

Built without fish ladders, the dam caused a sharp decline in the bull trout that Indians ate. The tribe, which has more than 400 members, sought to restore those fisheries.

The utility applied for a new license in 2000, and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission relicensed the 67-megawatt dam in 2005. But FERC included environmental restoration conditions the utility estimated would cost $250 million and quadruple power rates.

The PUD challenged the license requirements, and a federal mediator was eventually used to strike the compromise. Negotiations also included Ponderay Newsprint, whose paper mill in Usk buys 90 percent of the dam's power; the U.S. Forest Service, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and Bureau of Indian Affairs.

While the new deal will cause power rates to rise, the PUD said, it was impossible to know how much at this time because the full costs of the work are not yet known.

"This was a team effort and we are glad that we were able to reach an agreement," said Bob Geddes, PUD general manager.

The agreement for the 50-year license, valid until 2055, must still be approved by FERC, which can take up to six months.

Under the new license, the utility district must:

—Spend more than $50 million on a fish passage facility. It must remove non-native fish and reintroduce desirable trout species.

—Restore trout habitat on 164 miles of rivers and streams that flow into the Pend Oreille River over the next 25 years.

—Develop a plan to improve recreation facilities on the reservoir, and provide money for the tribe to build recreation facilities at the Pow Wow Grounds, Kalispel Boat Launch and Manresa Grotto Beach.

The utility district provides power to about 8,500 customers in Pend Oreille County.

Other tribes have used the relicensing process to correct past damage. Avista Corp. of Spokane recently agreed to pay up to $168 million over the next 50 years to compensate the Coeur d'Alene Tribe for storing water for power generation on the tribe's submerged land in Lake Coeur d'Alene, Idaho.

Stimulus spending invested in volcanoes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Weeks after Mount Redoubt erupted in Alaska, the Interior Department is spending some of its first stimulus dollars to improve volcano monitoring.

Interior Secretary Ken Salazar on Friday said the department will use $15.2 million to modernize volcano warning systems in one of its first projects to be funded by the stimulus measure. It was part of $140 million in spending announced Friday.

Salazar said the monitoring will do a better job of warning the public and airlines of eruptions, as it did months before Mount Redoubt blew in March. The Alaska Volcano Observatory first started issuing warnings in late January, Salazar said.

"We know that we must warn the public of explosive eruptions. We need to alert aircraft of ash clouds and warn communities of ash falls and lava and mud flows," Salazar said in a conference call with reporters.

Salazar said the Alaska observatory's top priority is to avoid a repeat of what happened during Redoubt's eruption 19 years ago when a Boeing 747 strayed into an ash cloud and nearly crashed.

Republicans targeted the volcano monitoring as an example of wasteful spending in the stimulus plan. In a February speech, Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal said the rapid growth in federal spending should be monitored.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

"Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!"
— Alfred, Lord Tennyson

In the round robin match between Denmark and Italy in the 1999 World Junior Teams, a textbook hand in suit-preference signaling came along, with the hand on lead making the suit-preference signal, rather than the hand following suit.

Morten Madsen of Denmark as East thought long and hard before pushing his opponents with his call of two spades, and rightly so. The defense had seven tricks against that contract, but when North doubled a second time just to show cards, South rather illogically decided against trying to take the penalty. With such a balanced hand he might well have trusted his partner, since the delayed spade raise sounded as if it was based on only two trumps.

Against three hearts, the spade-queen opening lead held the trick. Now Kaspar Konow (West) deliberately set up dummy's spade 10 by leading a suit-preference jack at the second trick, since he could infer that his partner's delayed support was based on holding the doubleton ace. Hence, he had to prepare the way for a spade ruff. Madsen (East) won his ace perforce and duly led a diamond (the higher of the minor suits) to ensure he got his ruff. The diamond queen was the setting trick.

Notice that if East plays a club after winning his spade ace, declarer is able to draw trumps at once, and the defense loses their ruff. Any junior interested in finding out more about bridge should go to www.youthnabc.org.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

Hand analysis table showing North, West, East, and South holdings and the bidding sequence.

Vulnerable: Neither
Dealer: North

The bidding table showing the sequence of bids from South to East.

Opening lead: Spade queen

BID WITH THE ACES

South holds:

Hand analysis for South's position.

Hand analysis for West's position.

Hand analysis for North's position.

Hand analysis for East's position.

ANSWER: If you play (as I recommend) that partner's one diamond call DENIES a major (or if he has one, it will be in at least an invitational hand), then you should bid one no-trump now. You know either you do not have a heart fit, or partner will introduce hearts next. A bid of one heart now would promise real clubs as well as four hearts.

PUBLIC COMMENTS SOUGHT ON LOW-INCOME WEATHERIZATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

The State of Idaho will accept public comment on its American Recovery and Reinvestment Act funding plan for the U.S. Department of Energy's Low-Income Weatherization Assistance Program. The ARRA State Plan is available for review at Community Action Partnership Association of Idaho, located at 5400 W. Franklin Rd., Suite G in Boise, Idaho. A public hearing on the plan will be held from 9:00 - 12:00 pm on Wednesday April 22, 2009 in Boise at El Ada Community Action Partnership, 2250 Vista, Boise, Idaho.

The Weatherization Assistance Program assists low-income families through the installation of weatherization measures in their homes. The measures include insulation, air sealing, and heating systems improvements that enhance the energy efficiency of the homes. Program services help eligible families reduce their heating costs, promoting the health and safety of the family and conserving energy resources.

Summary of changes to the 2009 State Plan:

- Increase in the average allowable weatherization expenditure per unit as directed by DOE
- Development of Ramp Up plan to increase weatherization production statewide
- Development of standardized processes for program delivery and training
- Utilization of ARRA funds over a two year period

Public comments for written testimony on the State Plan will be accepted from April 12, 2009 - April 22, 2009. Send or deliver comments to:

Assistant District Manager

Times-News

magicvalley.com

The Times News is seeking an Assistant District Manager to join our Circulation Team. This position supports our interactions with customers and contractors of the daily newspaper.

Responsibilities include distributing newspapers to contractors and customers, redelivering shortages or missed papers, and providing exceptional customer service to assure timely and efficient delivery. This 20-25 hour per week position will include work in our production area, in the circulation office and in the field. This position requires regular lifting of newspaper bundles and must frequently lift and/or move up to 30 pounds.

Expectations include helping maintain delivery goals and deadlines; being available to work a flexible schedule that may include early mornings and weekends, and the ability to thrive in a fast-paced environment.

The successful candidate will demonstrate personable communication skills, have good organizational abilities, and be experienced working with computer programs such as Word and Excel. A valid Driver's License, vehicle with current insurance, and good driving record are required.

A typical work day will start at 4:30 am and starting pay is $8.50 an hour.

The Times News is a drug-free workplace.

Family feuds over passing of plate from bargain buffet

DEAR ABBY: We recently got together with extended family to celebrate a child's birthday at a family-oriented restaurant. One of the adults began bragging about how she had saved money because she paid for only one salad plate from the "all you can eat" salad bar.

DEAR ABBY
Jeane Phillips

When she finished eating her salad, she passed her plate to another family member, who then had his fill and passed the plate along until all their immediate family members had eaten.

We told her it was dishonest, that she's stealing food from the restaurant because she didn't pay for all the salads that were actually consumed by her family. She claimed that it wasn't dishonest because it's "all" you can eat. This has caused a huge disagreement within the family. What say you?

— STEAMED AT THE SALAD BAR IN COLORADO

DEAR STEAMED: Of course it's dishonest; it's stealing. The sign read, "All you can eat," not "All you and your family can eat — for the price of one."

I don't know what this person's financial status is, but from where I sit, she appears to be morally bankrupt, and she's passing along her lack of ethics to the next generation. Keep your distance. Folks like this are apt to help themselves to anything that isn't nailed down.

DEAR ABBY: I have a rare autoimmune disease that will end my life within a couple of years. After not dating for 15 years, I met a wonderful man. Even though I tried not to, we fell in love. I think I should break it off with him because he has lost two wives to cancer and I don't want him hurt again.

Right now my health is still halfway decent, and we can go out and have a great time together. But all that's going to happen is we will grow closer and closer, and he's the one who will lose in the long run.

He doesn't deserve to lose someone else he loves. It's not fair. Is it wrong to keep dating him, or should I break it off while we still have good memories?

— SLOWLY DYING IN TEXAS

DEAR SLOWLY DYING: Is this gentleman aware of your illness and the prognosis? If the answer is yes, then he is fully aware of what will eventually happen — and you should allow him to have a say in whether the relationship continues or not. No one is guaranteed tomorrow, next week or next year. My advice is to enjoy every precious minute you have together to the fullest, stop feeling guilty about it and live in the present.

DEAR ABBY: I am 6 feet, 5 inches tall and weigh 240. My wife is 5 feet, 8 inches and weighs 140. We sleep in a queen-sized bed and have always had a playful debate about "my" side of the bed.

She contends that she should have half the bed, but I say I deserve more space because I'm bigger — therefore, the bed should be divided 60/40. Marriage isn't always 50-50, right?

— GOING BY THE NUMBERS LAKE CHARLES, LA.

DEAR GOING BY THE NUMBERS: No, sometimes marriage is 90/10. While you may be "entitled" to only 50 percent of the bed, the fact is that the size differential between you and your wife is so great that you need some extra real estate. So ask her to be gracious and grant you an easement. Either that or invest in a larger bed.

IF APRIL 11 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Recent ups and downs will settle down soon and you can concentrate on achieving your career or business aspirations in the year ahead. Once you choose a path, be prepared to burn the candle at both ends — especially in August and September when you have your greatest opportunities but may also experience your greatest setbacks due to a lack of preparation. A romance might blossom into something stronger, but wait until December to make a commitment.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Eat heartily if someone offers you food for thought. A ringing phone signals an upswing in popularity. You might be wise to accept an attractive invitation. Curb a tendency to spend money too freely.

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20): Heat things up. The glowing embers of romantic desire can be fanned into warm, invigorating flames. You could get a nod of approval when you approach others with a business proposal or a romantic idea.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Get in touch with your best buddies. If a buddy happens to be a member of the opposite sex that is even better. The seeds that sprout from a lasting friendship can grow into a permanent relationship.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Paint a picture of passionate pastimes in your mind, then pick up a brush and make it a reality. Adventures of the amorous kind could be written in the stars for you during the next several days.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Don't be shy. A straightforward foot-in-the-door approach will work wonders. Don't be afraid to make commitments, as you have the ability to make things happen as planned. Light a fire under a romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your mind may be focused on filling in some tax forms or balancing the checkbook, but your heart is secretly centered on romance. Depend upon trusted friends to speak up on your behalf.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Melt hearts with warm glances. Offering genuine kindness will thaw even the frostiest social situation. Have faith that a nagging financial problem can be cured if you curtail unnecessary spending.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Get physical. A little exercise or participation in sports could be just what the doctor ordered. You might make a wise decision on major purchases or score a deal while on a shopping expedition.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): All's well that ends well. Use scientific thinking to overcome obstacles but don't be a couch potato. Head off on short outings or errands to refresh your enthusiasm; spend time with loved ones.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You might be easily wrapped around someone's beckoning finger. Come hither looks can draw a lover closer. You might be happily surprised by someone's interest and determined pursuit.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Toot your own horn. Don't let a lack of support from your less passionate companions slow you down. This could be a very good time to start a new project or enhance your public image.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Play fox and hounds. The scent of a serious flirtation spread in the right places can lead to an exhilarating chase. You might have to cross several hurdles in order to capture someone's very willing heart.

Today is Saturday, April 11, the 101st day of 2009. There are 264 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On April 11, 1970, Apollo 13 blasted off on its ill-fated mission to the moon. (The astronauts managed to return safely).

On this date:
In 1689, William III and Mary II were crowned as joint sovereigns of Britain.

In 1814, Napoleon Bonaparte abdicated as Emperor of the French and was banished to the island of Elba.

In 1898, as tensions with Spain continued to rise, President William McKinley asked Congress to authorize military intervention in Cuba.

In 1899, the treaty ending the Spanish-American War was declared in effect.

In 1945, during World War II, American soldiers liberated the notorious Nazi concentration camp Buchenwald in Germany.

In 1951, President Harry S. Truman relieved Gen. Douglas MacArthur of his commands in the Far East.

In 1979, Idi Amin was

TODAY IN HISTORY

deposed as president of Uganda as rebels and exiles backed by Tanzanian forces seized control.

In 1988, the hijackers of a Kuwait Airways jetliner killed a second hostage, dumping his body onto the ground in Larnaca, Cyprus.

In 1989, Mexican officials began unearthing the remains of victims of a drug-trafficking cult near Matamoros; one of the dead was University of Texas student Mark Kilroy, who had disappeared while on spring break. (Several cult members were later convicted of premeditated murder and sentenced to 50 years in prison.)

In 2001, ending a tense 11-day standoff, China agreed to free the 24 crew members of an American spy plane.

Ten years ago: The Justice Department reported that more than a third of the women in state prisons and jails said they were physically or sexually abused as children. Jose Maria Olazabal won the Masters by two shots over Davis Love III.

Five years ago: President George W. Bush defended his response to a briefing memo from August 2001 about possible terrorist plots against the United States, saying he was "satisfied that some of the matters were being looked into" and that there were no specific threats against New York and Washington. Pope John Paul II celebrated Easter Mass with calls for world leaders to resolve conflicts in Iraq, the Holy Land and Africa. Phil Mickelson's agonizing pursuit of a major ended at the Masters when he made an 18-foot birdie putt on the final hole.

One year ago: Group of Seven financial officials meeting in Washington pledged to strengthen their regulation of banks and other financial institutions while anxiously hoping the credit crisis in the United States would be a short one. French troops captured six pirates after the pirates released 30 hostages who were aboard the French luxury yacht Le Ponant when it was seized off Somalia's coast.

SUDOKU

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Concepts Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.
