Senate expected to settle dispute over transportation funding this week

By Jared S. Hopkins Times-News writer

BOISE — Sen. Tim Corder, R-Mountain Home, chided his colleagues in committee last week for not being straightforward when they explained why two transportation bills need to be amended. "As long as we're making stuff up..." he said. Then he tossed his papers on the table.

The spectacle over transportation had arrived in the Senate and more is expected this week.

As the 2009 Legislature – now the second-longest ever – reconvenes today, senators hope to settle the dispute over transportation funding once and for all.

For the House, the issue was decided more than a week ago when it again rejected a bill to increase the state's gas tax. Efforts to raise registration fees and tax rental cars stalled in committee.

Recall organizer Wayne Sayer doesn't buy that. In result she can't comment on paperwork submitted to it. Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loebs in March, Sayer alleged that the city of Kimberly meddled in the election, that Glascock changed the rules on him and that some voters to be processed before Kimberly voters were intimidated into not signing, among other charges.

One of Sayer's allegations that may have some substance to it involves city resident Troy Palmer, who signed an initial, smaller petition in October but then removed his name after it was filed with the city. A section of state law regarding recalls, Idaho Code 34-1713, seems to permit people to remove their names only before a petition is filed.

Both Palmer and Overacre said that Palmer — a longtime friend of the mayor's voluntarily offered to remove his name after the two spoke about it being on the list. City officials didn't mention anything about the state code, Palmer said, and Friday's interview was the first time anyone had asked him about it. Law Disorder...

... in Cassia County

Selected April 13 police reports: Disturbing the peace:

A Burley woman, 50, reported that her neighbor's dog has been barking "from sunup to sundown" for about three years.

Domestic battery: Police requested a warrant for the arrest of a 44-year-old Burley man. He will be charged with domestic battery, after allegedly beating his wife while they literally fought over their 3year-old daughter — each of them, according to a witness, holding part of the child during the dispute. Another witness reported seeing the man hit his wife "by holding her hand and striking her with her own hand."

Vandalism: An Albion man, 33, reported that the padlocks on the gates holding his livestock have been glued shut. While he suspects two people in their 50s of gluing the locks, there wasn't sufficient evidence to charge them.

A Burley man, 45, reported that someone entered his home and stole a small safe containing various items such as savings bonds for his kids, his wedding license, birth certificates, a stamp collection, and the titles to his four-wheelers.

A 17-year-old Burley male found an unloaded 9 mm handgun in a ditch. He turned it in to the sheriff's office.

Vandalism:

Someone scratched the words "(expletive) you" on the trunk of a vehicle belonging to an employee of the Mini-Cassia Criminal Justice Center.

Selected April 14 police reports: Harassment:

A 19-year-old Burley female, who recently witnessed two traffic crimes, reported that the suspect in one of the crimes has been coming into her place of work and harassing her. According to the police report, the male and his friends find "whatever isle (sic) she is in" and point at her. They then "walk up and down the isle" (sic) and laugh at her. The woman has been advised to obtain a protection order.

Racing:

In November of last year, two vehicles were pulled over when police discovered them racing on Overland Avenue in Burley after they drove away from a stop light driving in the opposite direction of an oncoming sheriff's deputy. "I considered them to be racing. By the revs of the engines and the rate of how fast they sped up, is how I determined they were racing," the report reads. Five months later, one of the drivers, 24, was arrested in Ada County for a failure-to-appear warrant. He called the Cassia County Sheriff's Office to inquire about the charge, which was for the November racing citation. Police discovered that the man originally cited had provided a false name, possibly his brother's. A summons has been requested for the real driver to answer for the racing charge, as well as a false-information charge.

Selected April 15 police reports: Information:

A 33-year-old Burley woman reported that she had been threatened by someone who attached a note to her mailbox that read: "This is a notice. If your cat is missing check the dog pound! Because as of today I am going to start trapping them and I will take them to the animal shelter. They dig in my garden and I'm always cleaning up cat poop ... Put them on a leash!" Police told her it was not a criminal threat and to let them know if she finds out who left the note.

Runaways:

Two Burley males, 13 and 15, will be charged with resisting and obstructing officers after one was reported as a runaway. They both ran away from officers, according to the police report, across various fields in Burley until they were arrested. One of them was found with an orange iPod that police, after talking to his mom, suspected was stolen. It was placed into evidence.

Blaine schools considering suicide screening program

By Karen Bossick Times-News correspondent

HAILEY - The Blaine County School District is considering a pilot program to screen older students for suicidal tendencies.

Two school social workers presented the proposal to the school board Tuesday night.

"As a school social worker, a lot of my work is in crisis intervention - once there's a problem," said Tod Gunter, Wood River Middle School social worker, following the meeting. "My goal is to be on the front end of things - in prevention. And I see this as a way to help identify problems without waiting for a refer-

Those who answer yes to a certain number of questions will be referred for a short interview with a mental health professional to determine whether the teen might benefit from more in-depth assessment.

Professionals who feel the child might benefit from treatment can suggest resources to parents. It's up to the parent to decide whether to pursue those resources.

All teens who go through the screening will get debriefed so no one will feel they've been singled out for special treatment, said Carney.

"The whole thing is about doing a better job identifying kids early who are at a risk for anxiety or eating disorders, depression or suicide. And it's a great way to educate the community about the issue of teen depression and suicide," said Carney. "Many times students fall through the cracks because they look fine on the surface."

causes combined.

Between 1999 and 2005 Idaho had 1,441 reported suicide attempts end in death - 85 percent of which were among youth ages 11 through 18.

TeenScreen is not without its critics. Some parents across the nation have charged that the test is just a way to put more people on prescription drugs or that the test puts suicidal ideas into teenagers' heads.

But one randomized controlled trial determined that such screening does not put ideas into the kids' heads, Gunter said.

"Research has clearly shown that talking about suicide doesn't make kids attempt suicide. Julie and I have done a suicide prevention classes for years," said Gunter. "And TeenScreen is not associated with the pharmaceutical industry."

School board trustee Mari offers students and their Beth Matthews suggested that the Silver Creek Alternative School be included in the pilot project if the school board approves

Gunter said after the meeting that the alternative school was not originally included because TeenScreen suggests a small population for a pilot project.

"But certainly that's a population that could benefit from screening like this so maybe we should consider it," he said.

Eames off to a fast start

By Diane Philbin Times-News writer

After two nights of action, District V concluded its opening weekend of high school rodeo in Glenns Ferry.

Looking at a few key stats, it's no secret why last year's all-around cowboy, Cy Eames from Gooding, sits in first place in the overall standings. On Friday night, Eames finished in first with Gooding teammate Justin Parke to win team roping; was second in calf-roping and third in steer wrestling. He was a double-winner on Saturday with the fastest time in calf-roping of 17.62 seconds and combined with Parke for a second win in team roping. Eames also picked up a second in steer wrestling.

Luke Hubert of Dietrich turned in the fastest run in steer wrestling with a 7.34 beating Eames time of 7.35 seconds.

"I really enjoy high school rodeo," said Hubert who also team ropes with Codee Roberts of Glenns Ferry. "This is my second year of steer wrestling but the first year I've really been into it. It's a toss up which of the two events is my favorite."

INTERMOUNTAIN PRO TRUCKS

Lou Andersen took over the lead at lap five from Ken Fortner and went on to win in the debut race of the season for the series.

Kenny Vanderham, 2007 and 2008 champion in the series, gave Andersen a run for his money and despite a bobble by Andersen late in the race, the driver of the No. 99 truck prevailed in the 40-lap main event.

Scott Luttmer, Jeff Pohlman and former Premier Series champion Rob Vest battled closely together for fourth position throughout most of the race which went caution free, while Fortner rode comfortably in third.

MAGIC VALLEY PIPE STREET STOCKS

Four changes for the lead took place in the 25-lap main event race but it was the No. 13 lighted atop the scoreboard as Stacey Jensen took the honors in the opening event of the season for the division.

QUALE'S ELECTRONICS JR. STINGERS

Just three contenders were on hand for the evening's events, but put on a great show for their first race in the division for the season.

Andy Brennen took over the lead on lap three soon and began to pull away from Taylor Patrick and Ryan Luttmer. Patrick and Luttmer introduced their vehicles to each other a couple of times during the event but Luttmer would wind up in the runner-up position.

Franchitti drives off with Long Beach win

Florida Volstad Penn

LONG BEACH, Calif. – Dario Franchitti used fuel strategy and a very fast car Sunday to win the Toyota Grand Prix of Long Beach. Franchitti said he felt as if the seaside circuit in downtown Long Beach owed him after finishing second to Alex Zanardi and Juan Pablo Montoya during his days in the now-defunct CART series. But he dominated this time, beating runner-up Will Power, the pole-winner, by 3.318 seconds – half of the final straightaway.

"That was a lot of fun," said Franchitti, who dedicated his ninth IndyCar victory to actress wife Ashley Judd, who celebrated her 41st birthday watching the race from the Target Chip Ganassi Racing

Now tax-shift critics can say 'we told you so' hirty-two months ago, legislative leaders gathered around then-Gov. Jim Risch's desk as he proclaimed the end of onerous property taxation in Idaho.

In a special session, the Legislature had just passed and Risch signed a $250 million bill that lowered property taxes while raising the state sales tax from 5 percent to 6 percent.

The legislation eliminated the public school maintenance and operations levy.

"Today is truly a historic day for Idahoans," Risch proclaimed. "I really don't believe any Legislature will ever turn back to using property taxes as a system to fund public schools."

He spoke too soon. On April 1, voters in the Jerome School District passed a $650,000 supplemental levy to help continue programs in the district threatened by deep cuts in state support. It will be the first of many such elections in the 22 school districts of south-central Idaho.

Last year, there were supplemental levies in 63 districts statewide enrolling a majority of Idaho students. Those levies totaled $108 million, up $7 million from the previous year.

So property taxes are going up, but nobody in Boise is volunteering to take that penny of sales

And that's the problem with a public school system overly dependent on state support: What happens when that support erodes?

Risch and the Republican majority that approved the massive tax shift of 2006 should have seen it coming.

"Public schools always get taken care of by the Legislature," Risch said. "No Legislature in the history of the state of Idaho has ever given public schools less than they got the year before."

They have now. Last month the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee cut state funding by

The genius of Idaho's tax structure — as a result of the sales tax then-Gov. Robert Smylie pushed through in 1966 – is that it spreads the burden of financing state government among sales tax, property tax and income tax in a balanced way. The famous "three-legged stool" is the single biggest reason for Idaho's economic booms of the 1970s and '90s and earlier in this decade.

Altering that formula means the state is more dependent on one or another of those tax sources — in this case the sales and income taxes, whose revenue withers in tough economic times.

So the schools will take their sole option: ask patrons to raise property taxes.

That's a problem because in recent years millions of dollars in property taxes have been shifted to residential property, benefiting commercial, industrial and utility property. Since 1998, total residential property taxes increased 97 percent while total taxes on commercial, industrial and utility property went up 31 percent.

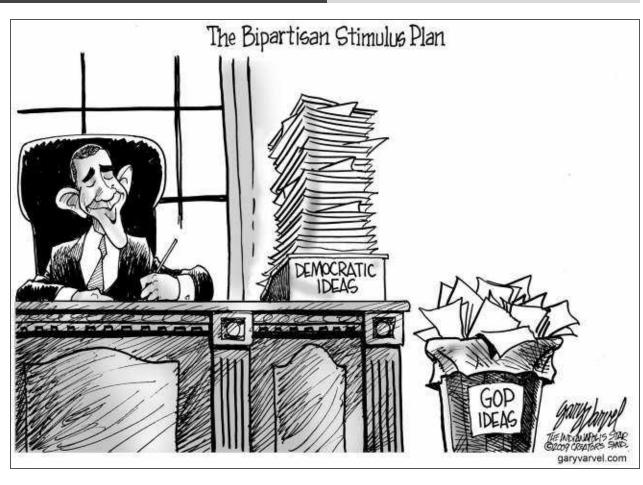

In fact, homeowners paid 84 percent of the $509 million increase in Idaho property taxes in the past decade.

And just when they've had enough, they'll be asked to do more.

A country held together by an argument

EL AVIV, Israel — On my 12th visit to Israel, I finally had my baptism by traffic accident. I was sitting at a red light, when a bus turning the corner honked at me to back up. When I did, I scraped the fender of the car behind me.

The driver - a young, hip-looking, alt-rocker dude – came running out of the car in a fury. He ran up to the bus driver and got into a ferocious screaming match. Then he came up to me graciously and kindly. We were brothers in the war against bus drivers. Then, as we were filling out our paperwork, another bus happened by and honked. The rocker ran out into the street and got into another ferocious screaming match with this driver. Then he came back to me all smiles and warmth.

Israel is a country held together by argument. Public culture is one long cacophony of criticism. The politicians go at each other with a fury we can't even fathom in the United States. At news conferences, Israeli journalists ridicule and abuse their national leaders. Subordinates in companies feel free to correct their superiors. People who move here from Britain or the United States talk about going through a period of adjustment as they learn to toughen up and talk back.

Ethan Bronner, The New York Times' Jerusalem bureau chief, notes that Israelis don't observe the distinction between the public and private realms. They treat strangers as if they were their brothersin-law and feel perfectly comfortable giving them advice on how to live.

One Israeli acquaintance recounts the time he was depositing money into his savings account and everybody else behind him in line got into an argument about whether he should really be putting his money somewhere else. Another friend tells of the time he called directory assistance to get a phone number for a restaurant. The operator responded, "You don't want to eat there," and proceeded to give him the numbers of some other restaurants she thought were better.

We can all think of reasons that Israeli culture should have evolved into a reticence-free zone, and that the average behavior should be different here. This is a tough, scrappy country, perpetually fighting for survival. The most emotionally intense experiences are national ones, so the public-private distinction was bound to erode. Moreover, the status system doesn't really revolve around money. It consists of trying to prove you are that above all you are nobody's patsy.

As an American Jew, I was taught to go all gooeyeyed at the thought of Israel, but I have to confess, I find the place by turns exhausting, admirable, annoying, impressive and foreign.

Israel's enemies claim the country is an outpost of Western colonialism. That's not true. Israel is, in large measure, a Middle Eastern country, and the Israeli-Arab dispute is in part an intra-Mideast conflict.

This culture of disputatiousness does yield some essential fruits. First, it gives the country a special vividness. There is no bar on earth quite so vibrant as a bar filled with Israelis. Second, it explains the genuine national unity. Israel is the most diverse small country imaginable. Nonetheless, I may be interviewing a left-wing artist in Tel Aviv or a rightwing settler in Hebron, and I can be highly confident that they will have a few things in common: an intense sense of national mission, a hunger for emotionally significant moments, an inability to read social signals when I try to suggest that I really don't want them to harangue me about moving here and adopting their lifestyle.

Most important, this argumentative culture nurtures a sense of responsibility. The other countries in savvier than everybody else, this region are more gracious, but often there is a communal unwillingness to accept responsibility for national problems. The Israelis, on the other hand, blame themselves for everything and work hard to get the most out of each person.

> From that wail of criticism things really do change. I come here nearly annually, and while the peace process is always the same, there is always something unrecognizable about the national scene whether it is the structure of the political parties, the absorption of immigrants or the new engines of economic growth.

Today, Israel is stuck in a period of frustrating stasis. Iran poses an existential threat that is too big for Israel to deal with alone. Hamas and Hezbollah will frustrate peace plans, even if the Israelis magically do everything right.

This conflict will go on for a generation or more. Israelis will keep up their insufferable and necessary barrage of self-assertion. And yet we still dream of peace and the day when I am standing in line at an Israeli cash register and an Israeli shopper sees a chance to butt in front of me, and - miracle of miracles – she will not try to take it.

Not satisfied with Buhl response to request

On April 13, I appeared before the Buhl City Council representing 33 users (all city residents) of a community irrigation ditch that starts on Main Street at Hayes Construction, runs down to the alley of 14th Avenue, turns north where it is piped under the park. This ditch runs approximately three-fifths of a mile from Lateral 53, Gate 4 before it ever reaches a user. Once the canal company releases the water (76 shares), any problems encountered on this ditch is the responsibility of the users.

For 20-plus years, we have been provided with onsite fire equipment for the protection of this residential area when it is burned in the spring. Estimated time we need is two hours. The mayor and city council listened with closed ears. They did not even take a yea or nay vote on the matter. They just said "no" to this request.

I spoke to 17 residents, whose properties lie in this area, I asked if they thought onsite fire equipment should be present when the ditch was burned. They replied yes. None of these residents have a share of water in the ditch.

I would say to these city residents that Mayor Sheridan and City Council

Obama and the art of strategic detachment

ASHINGTON — Barack Obama tied down a series of big legislative victories in his first few months in office — an expanded health-care program for kids, massive economic stimulus legislation, and substantially increased funding for this year's federal budget.

Yet ironically these notches in his accomplishment belt are due in part to his legislative aloofness. He gave Congress plenty of rope with which to wrap up these achievements -and they used it.

Call it strategic detachment. This president leaves many of the details up to his party in Congress – an approach that pleases Democrats but rankles Republicans. Obama chooses this course not out of weakness, but because he believes it's the strongest tactical approach.

But every decision includes trade offs. His method of chalking up legislative wins transforms his bipartisan goals into a pipedream, and risks turning a lot of big decisions over to less popular Democratic leaders in Congress.

Of course, all presidents are formal partners in the lawmaking process with Congress whether the chief executive likes it or not. Every new law requires deliberate White House action. The Constitution gives the president 10 days (not including Sundays) to approve or disapprove legislation. If he signs it or ignores it, the bill becomes a law. The rare pocket veto is an exception to this practice, when Congress adjourns within the 10-day window after passing legislation and the president fails

The president can also articulate his objections and return the legislation without his approval, in which case Congress can pass the legislation again — this time, by a two-thirds vote notwithstanding the president's objections, and override his veto.

But modern White Houses engage with lawmakers in a variety of ways beyond these formal constitutional requirements. And this involvement can include very prescriptive advice. For example, in 1993 President Bill Clinton told a joint session of Congress that if they sent him a health care bill that did not include universal coverage for all Americans, he would veto it.

Yet this president is pursuing a different path, at least based on early indications. On the major legislative accomplishments to date – stimulus, children's health and spending legislation —the White House left most of the details up to Congress. Moreover, when Moreover, institutional conditions are ripe for President Obama to use his pattern of aloofness to his advantage. With large majorities of his party running Congress, chances are the end product won't be too much at odds with White House wishes.

But Obama needs to make sure he doesn't turn too much of his agenda over to a less popular branch of government. While the president's job performance levels are still strong, linking his agenda too closely to far less popular Democratic leaders in Congress could be a mistake.

The big losers in the process are Republicans and prospects for bipartisanship. Obama can talk about a "new politics," but leaving the legislative details up to his party in Congress guarantees a partisan process.

"Bipartisanship only slows things down," a former Clinton White House aide told me. "These guys (Democrats])didn't fight hard and win the majority only to share power with Republicans, unless and until the public decidedly demands it."

So expect Obama to give his Democratic allies a lot of running room when it comes to his big legislative initiatives. But that same rope he offers his party in Congress to tie down more legislative victories will also strangle bipartisanship and could drag down the president's approval ratings in the process.

Praising staff and students at Robert Stuart Junior High

At Robert Stuart Junior High, there are many beautiful students (of varying skin tones) that caring administrators, teachers and staff try very hard to educate in a safe environment and provide nutritious meals that some may not even get at home. When "red flags" go up, it is their responsibility to respond in a quick manner. Sometimes students seem to be made an example. If this prevents future incidents, then it is worth the small embarrassment caused to those involved.

Two-year-olds throw food; 13- and 14-year-old students are being taught to act in a respectful manner that does not cause work or worse harm to others. Here's to all the great kids who have voiced their concern and apologies for bad behavior.

In closing, I'd like to add that if it were possible to identify the "children" who have been walking across the cars in the parking lot leaving their footprints and denting at least two cars, there would probably be more charges brought. Better now than when they think it is OK to throw bricks or take said cars on a dangerous joy ride!

I did some research into the topic of the American white pelican. These birds eat four or more pounds of fish every day. Going by that, the pelicans at Lake Walcott eat more than 16,000 pounds of fish every day. That is a lot of fish.

Of course, many people are going to be against this course of action. But really, plenty of pelicans will still be there, and there won't be anything stopping their population from skyrocketing again.

Don't be a boor

How gym etiquette keeps you out of trouble

By Melissa Davlin Times-News writer

Ever had your workout ruined by foulmouthed weight lifters or chatty folks hogging the equipment?

You're not alone.

We spoke to three local trainers — Lesley Martin of Twin Falls YMCA, Robin Smith of Kimberly Fitness Center and Jeff Bolton of Gold's Gym in Twin Falls to see what gym member habits are the worst.

They all agreed on one thing: The majority of gym members are fantastic.

"It's a fun business." Martin said.

But when someone breaks etiquette, other members are inconvenienced at best, and offended at worst. Here are the trainers' tips to make everyone's workout as comfortable as possible.

Hygiene, hygiene, hygiene

See those spray bottles the weight room? Those are to wipe down your machine after you're done using it.

Most people get that, Smith said. But sometimes, people forget, or they just don't know about the courtesy.

Think of it this way, Bolton said: People sweat a lot while working out, especially on the cardio machines. Who wants to work out on equipment covered in someone else's perspiration?

Speaking of sweat, don't forget to use deodorant. And after your postworkout shower, Bolton said, please, please, please don't stand around naked and strike up a conversation in the locker room. At least put a towel on.

Weighty issues

Once you're done with your reps, unrack your weights.

That's especially pertinent when you're using 50pound plates that smaller gym members won't be able to move, Martin said.

"That's one of the biggest things. Just please, unrack," she said. Also, don't let your weights drop to the floor. At YMCA's Canyon Rim center, Martin's office is directly below the second-floor weight room. When someone drops weights, it rattles

Wear appropriate attire

Although you're trying to and cloths off to the side of enhance your body, the gym is not a place to show off your goods.

"We had this lady who came in in a bikini. In a bikini!" Martin said. "And a pair of sandals that laced up her leg." "She was definitely not there for the workout," she added. Bolton has seen the same at Gold's Gym. He said working out in skimpy clothes is common in big cities, but in Twin Falls? Not so much. he said.

And ladies, remember your sports bra. Martin recalled another woman who tried to bench press bra-less and ended up flashing the entire weight room. Martin had to approach the patron and ask her to come back with a little more support.

Instead, think sweat pants or shorts and a tank top or T shirt. And no flip-flops, and offended at worst.

Keep it to yourself

You've heard it all before: the grunts, the swearing, the rude remarks that would make your grandmother blush.

It doesn't have to be that way, Martin said. In fact, it shouldn't.

"Grunting and foul language, it's just not appreciated." Martin said.

She especially gets a kick out of weight lifters who "Yeeeeaaarrrgh," she imitated. "You'd think they're dving."

Bolton said he understands grunting when lifters have huge amounts of weight, but laughs at those who grunt when they're lifting light.

"Just doing it to do it, for attention, that's annoying,"

Remember why you're there (Hint: It's not to gossip.)

A little bit of socializing is great, Martin said. The gym is a community place. But don't hold up other people by sitting on the machines and gabbing, she said.

"Gym etiquette says don't interrupt someone while they're doing a set," Bolton said. If they have headphones on or are in the middle of lifting 400 pounds, it's probably not a good time to ask how the wife and kids are.

Talking during classes is another no-no.

"Most people want to listen" to the class instructor,

When someone breaks etiquette, other Bolton said. But when two people start gabbing, it distracts the whole group.

Carrie Edlund wipes down the treadmill after her workout Friday afternoon at Gold's Gym in Twin Falls. 'There's a lot of big sweaty men

"That makes me more mad than anvthing, probably," he said. And for heaven's sake, leave the cell phone at home. Bolton constantly sees people on the cardio machines who are talking on their phones, indicating two things: They're not working as hard as they could, and they're not considering other gym patrons. "It pisses me off so bad," he said.

How to deal

Someone hogging the machines or using R-rated language?

Whatever you do, don't start a confrontation, Martin said. Come get a gym employee. Often, Martin can diffuse a situation with humor and respect.

"It's just about educating and patience," Martin said.

Most of the time, gym members have no idea they're offending others with their behavior and are quick to change their ways.

Leave your grudges at home, too. In March, two women began fighting at Impact Athletics in Burley over personal problems that had nothing to do with working out.

If you have a problem with the gym itself, don't accost the trainers, Bolton said. The employees work to keep everything clean and running smoothly, but sometimes, especially during busy morning hours, it's hard to keep up. Be patient, he said. Your problems will be addressed.

"There's always something wrong with the gym, always? he said. "We do what we can to fix the problems."

INSOMNIA

A wide-awake look at beating worry-based sleeplessness

By Kathleen Megan

The Hartford Courant

It's 1 a.m. You have to get up at 6. You're exhausted, but you can't sleep. What do you do?

You may find yourself slurping a spoonful of NyQuil or taking a Tylenol PM. Is that the best approach?

It all depends on how often you are in this situation, experts say. Lynelle Schneeberg, a psychologist and director of the behavioral sleep medicine program at Gaylord Hospital in Wallingford, Conn., says that "if you're talking short-term insomnia during a short-term stressful situation," then taking a pill can be OK. But

"chronic insomnia, when you are talking six months or longer, is a different animal." For many, worries about jobs and the economy have been interfering with sleep. Almost onethird of Americans say their sleep has been disturbed at least a few nights a week in the past month because of personal financial concerns, the U.S. economy or employment worries, according to a survey by the National Sleep Foundation.

Taken once in a while, those over-the-counter medications might be just the push you need to shove off into dreamland, but there are downsides. For starters, the sedating effects caused by the antihistamine in such products as NyQuil and Tylenol PM may not end when you wake up. And if you take them frequently, they might even be associated with occasional memory problems.

Edward O'Malley, a sleep expert and owner of Optimal

Sleep LLC in Easton, Conn., says that antihistamines can continue to affect people six to eight hours after inges-

Dr. Amarish Dave, a neurologist in Crystal Lake, Ill., says that many of these sedating medications can "slow cognitive performance." Whenever he sees patients complaining of not feeling "sharp mentally," he looks at what medications they have been using.

Taking sedatives can also cause problems for people with breathing disorders and occasionally can have cardiac effects in elderly people, O'Malley says.

Experts have varying opinions on herbal remedies. O'Malley says they may be preferable to overthe-counter sleeping medications, but he suggests that people use only synthetically made melatonin rather than any made from animal brain tissue.

Melatonin is the hormone secreted when the body is naturally preparing itself for sleep. O'Malley says it is most appropriate when used to address jet lag.

Schneeberg tells patients about the "every third night" rule when they ask about taking medications that may enhance sleep, whether the over-thecounter variety or prescription medications such as Lunesta or Ambien.

The theory is that if you sleep poorly on Monday night, you probably will have a sound sleep on Tuesday night. But sometimes that doesn't happen partly because people lie awake consumed with worry. ... But if you know that on the third night, Wednesday night, you'll allow yourself to take a sleep medication, Schneeberg says, sometimes that's all you need to ease yourself to sleep on Tuesday

"If you know that every third night is a rescue night, it lowers your anxiety," she says. "You really will never get into too much trouble if you take it every third night?"

If you take sleep-enhancing medications every night, you "can become psychologically and physically dependent on them," Schneeberg says, and even your ability to get to sleep without taking something.

In general, however, sleep experts agree that the best way to address sleep problems is through behavior changes. Schneeberg teaches people how to behave when they can't sleep.

"They do all the wrong things with the right intentions," she says. "They lie in bed trying really hard to sleep. They will tell me, 'At least I'm resting; but what they are doing instead: They are conditioning their bed to be a place associated with worry and frustration.... We don't want bed to be associated with anything but drowsiness and sleep."

After 20 minutes of wakefulness, it's best to leave bed and do something quiet and relaxing, like reading, she says. It's best if this is done as near to the bedroom as possible without disturbing a partner. "Sometime the act of climbing the stairs wakes you up," she says.

Good sleep habits also involve going to bed and getting up at about the same time every day.

"The body loves routine,"

Other tips: A light snack before bedtime is OK, but not a heavy meal; exercise during the day to make you physically tired at night; avoid naps; and take whatever action you can to address your worries.

Should I have stopped and let the person in the door? Or should he have gone back to get his access card?

- CARDIO CARRIE IN GEORGIA

DEAR CARRIE: While it would have been nice of you to let the man in, it could also have been dangerous because you were alone and the person was a stranger. The security door was put there for a reason, and I find it interesting that the man did not go after his entry card and return. He was gung-ho about our nuptials until a few days ago, when he requested that we wait. I'm confused because all he talked about was getting married and now it's a sore subject.

DEAR ABBY: We recently celebrated my stepdaughter's 40th birthday. After dinner I placed the birthday cake, along with the knife, cake server, plates and forks, in front of her. We sang "Happy Birthday," and she blew out the candles.

Shortly afterward, I realized she was not cutting and serving the cake, so I asked if she wanted her father or me to do it.

I was raised with the idea that the person whose birthday it is should serve the cake to those celebrating with her (or him). Now I have begun to wonder, what is the proper custom regarding who should cut and serve the birthday cake?

DEAR CURIOUS: I'm not sure there is a rule of etiquette regarding who should serve the birthday cake. It's really up to the individuals involved, and the custom can vary from family to family. In your case, when you saw that your stepdaughter wasn't cutting the birthday cake, you did the right thing in asking her if she would like you to. That's what I would

"Time present and time past Are both perhaps present in time future,

And time future contained in time past."

— T.S. Eliot

In today's deal, North does not have quite enough to drive to game, but does have enough for a limit raise, suggesting four trumps and about 10-11 points. South may be minimum in high cards, but he has decent controls and a singleton. It is generally good strategy to bid game here unless you are both minimum and balanced.

Now you must consider the play on a top-heart lead. Between the two hands there is one diamond loser and three potential club losers. What South discards on the second top heart might appear to be irrelevant; not so.

The third club loser can be eliminated if the opponents can be forced to lead clubs for you. To accomplish this, declarer must hope for a 2-2 spade break, and thus be able to strip both his hand and dummy's of all hearts and diamonds. The best line is to discard a diamond on dummy's second high heart, then ruff a low heart. Now he can draw two rounds of trumps and ruff another low heart, so long as the trumps split. Then he can endplay either opponent by leading ace and another diamond. Whichever opponent wins the diamond lead must lead a club or yield a ruff-sluff.

If the trumps do not split, South can always lead clubs himself, hoping for a favorable position (ace-king in one hand, or a singleton or doubleton honor in clubs, most likely in the hand long in spades).

ANSWER: On an auction of this sort, East has suggested spade length by bidding two spades as a game-try. So it is actually more, not less, attractive to lead a spade, and your spade sequence should not discourage you from making the natural lead of the queen.
