Gooding Co., sheriff, deputies sued

Family of inmate who committed suicide at jail alleges negligence

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

A new federal lawsuit accuses Gooding County Sheriff Shaun Gough of negligence for a jail inmate suicide two years ago.

Two county jail inmates have committed suicide using a telephone cord within the last decade, according to the civil rights suit, including Jeramie Scott Caster. Gough never reported Caster's suicide to the Times-News but on Friday denied the lawsuit's allegations. An official response has yet to be filed with the court.

According to the April 16 suit from Caster's mother, Penny Watson of Wendell, Caster fatally hanged himself with a telephone cord attached to a pay phone in his jail cell after Hagerman police arrested him for driving under the influence of alcohol.

As Caster was booked into the jail, Gooding County Deputy Justin Kimball allegedly injured him with physical force, possibly along with other unnamed people, the lawsuit states.

The sheriff's office never finished booking Caster, nor did they medically assess him, according to the lawsuit.

"While in the custody of the Gooding County sheriff, Jeramie Scott Caster made disclosures ... and acted in such a manner, as to make it known that there was a significant likelihood that Jeramie Scott Caster may injure himself, or seek to take his own life," according to the suit. "Jeramie Scott Caster's death was the result of wrongdoing, gross negligence, recklessness, and conduct that was an extreme deviation from the reasonable standards."

End unclear for Otter's roads fight

Governor yet to gain full support from conservative House

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

BOISE — If there's an end to the 2009 Legislature, perhaps it's standing on a highway, thumb up in the air, hoping to hitch a ride.

As Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter stays committed to keeping the second-longest Legislature ever going so legislators approve new revenue to fix Idaho's roads and bridges, it's unclear whether he will triumph over the conservative House. Despite explaining the benefits of passing his proposals and consequences of not — deferred maintenance will drive up future costs; fixing roads will ensure public safety; road projects will create jobs and spur the economy — Otter's routinely been swatted down by House members who say the recession is no time for tax hikes.

"It's the issue he's choosing. I don't think it's resonating with the public," said Jasper LiCalzi, professor of political economy at the College of Idaho.

Waiting for numbers

School districts need Legislature to set solid budget numbers so they can plan theirs

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

As the Legislature grinds its way to the finish line — whenever that may be — a less prominent group of budget planners is preparing to start its work: school districts.

Yet without solid budget numbers from the state for the next school year, school districts and negotiating teams for teachers cannot finalize agreements or bargain about financial details at length. School district officials are not in a serious time crunch yet, but remain aware that the Legislature's work must finish before negotiations can wrap up.

"We're waiting for the legislators to complete their work, so we can complete ours," said Superintendent Wiley Dobbs of Twin Falls School District.

Bargaining teams from the Twin Falls Education Association, which represents teachers, and the Twin Falls School District will meet Tuesday for the first time.

Additionally, the Twin Falls School District Board will meet Wednesday and weigh in on whether to declare a financial emergency. Under a law recently signed by Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter, districts making that declaration can negotiate with unions over items like pay reductions and furloughs.

The Tuesday meeting will happen regardless of what the Legislature does or doesn't do before then. That's because there's ground to cover that's not tied to budget dollars.

For example, the participants at the meeting need to complete training for negotiations, said David Gibson, president of the Twin Falls Education Association.

In the long run, though, the Legislature will need to approve a budget to work from, he said.

Injured soldier gets new face — and anonymity

By Sharon Cohen
Associated Press writer

SAN ANTONIO — His first glimpse in the mirror was largely a blur.

Sgt. Darron Mikeworth had just come out of a drug-induced coma — his mind was still in a fog and he was so weak he could barely stand.

Three weeks before, in Iraq, a suicide bomber had raced up to the right side of his Humvee, igniting a barrel of explosives that tore into the machine gunner's face. He nearly died.

Mikeworth awoke in a hospital bed, thousands of miles away.

He was relieved he still had his arms and legs. He was thrilled, too, his ears had survived. But he had wounds he could not see, life-changing wounds. His wife, Dea, helped break the news: His face was in bad shape. His left eye was useless.

And there was more. At first, Mikeworth was too groggy to absorb it all. He was caught up in

World gov'ts race to contain swine flu outbreak

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The world's governments raced to avoid both a pandemic and global hysteria Sunday as more possible swine flu cases surfaced from Canada to New Zealand and the United States declared a public health emergency. "It's not a time to panic," the White House said.

Mexico, the outbreak's epicenter with up to 86 suspected deaths, closed churches, markets and restaurants. Few people ventured onto the streets, and some wore face masks.

Los Angeles Times

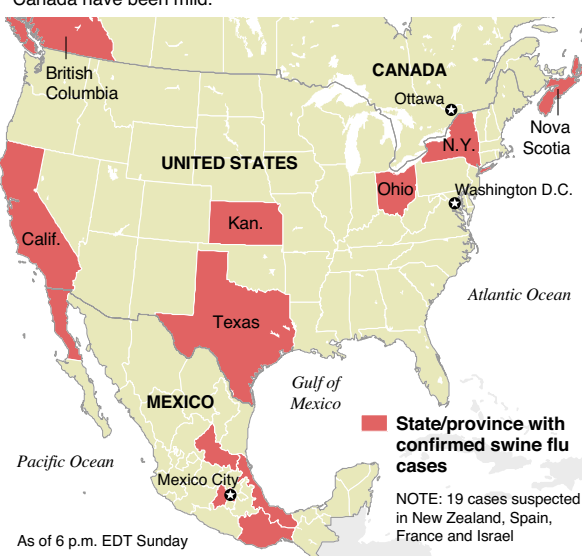

Q: What is swine flu?

A: Swine flu is a general term for influenza viruses adapted to pigs, causing a respiratory disease in the animals. There are many different strains. Swine flu can infect humans and in such cases most often is transmitted from a pig to someone handling pigs. Swine flu can pass from human to human through coughing, sneezing or touching infected

Pat's Picks

Three things to do today

Pat Marcantonio

• Take a ride into the Snake River Canyon to see all the fruit trees in bloom along River Road. In fact, the trees are gorgeous at Kelley Orchard, says Caryn Kelley. If you open your windows, you can smell them, but they won't last long. Go 10 miles west on Pole Line Road, then 6 miles down into the canyon.

• The "LiVe — This is Your Life!" production, sponsored by Intermountain Healthcare, is a touring theater show to help kids take charge of growing up healthy and fit. It starts at 1:30 p.m. at Burley Junior High School, 700 W. 16th St. Information: 878-6613.

• End the evening with a Harold Lloyd classic, "The Freshman," at 7 p.m. at the Burley Public Library's community room, 1300 Miller Ave. A film discussion follows with Rob Mayer, film and literature instructor at College of Southern Idaho. Admission is free.

found Caster hanging by the neck from a telephone cord. She was the only person on duty but "declined to enter the cell and provide aid," the lawsuit alleges.

Gough said Friday Velasquez has since left the department on good terms to pursue other work.

The lawsuit seeks an unspecified amount of money.

Gough said he found out he is being sued on Friday, when the Times-News inquired about it.

"The allegations are absolutely not true," he said, confirming that there have been only two suicides at the jail since he was elected sheriff in 1997.

The other suicide by telephone cord happened at the jail in March of 1998: Bonnie L. Morrow, 38.

Gough reported that suicide at the time of its occurrence to the Times-News, and he confirmed Friday that Morrow's family never sued him or the county in connection to her death.

The two suicides involved different telephone cords, and cords were shortened after Morrow's death, Gough said.

Gough said he is concerned about possible ethics issues related to the lawsuit filed by Joseph James of the Gooding-based law firm Brown, James and Swenson. He said the firm employs Phil Brown, who served as Gooding County prosecutor when Morrow died.

A call Friday to Brown, James and Swenson was not returned.

Caster's mother and plaintiff, Penny Watson, could not be reached for comment.

"In our case, we feel we can start later," Cobble said, adding that negotiations have gone well for the district in the past. "I think it's a challenge for any school district in that you're dealing with the unknown," he added later.

John Graham, superintendent of Filer School District, said that the Legislature's length has not been a significant delay yet, adding that negotiations usually start in May or June.

Roads

"That's what I find really strange. This is Butch Otter. This is Mr. Libertarian, anti-tax, anti-big government, and he wants to raise taxes."

Despite growing levels of frustration, stress and fatigue among lawmakers in the Capitol Annex, Otter has offered no signs of slowing down. He's pushing hard and vetoed 35 bills last week to apply pressure to the opposing legislators.

"I don't know what else I can possibly do," he said last week.

Securing new money to reduce Idaho's annual $240 million shortfall in funds to maintain roads and bridges was the top priority of Otter's first term. But after he rejected a $68 million package last year on the grounds it wasn't long-term, Otter's original $174 million transportation package was rejected by most of the 58 Republicans in the House who don't want to raise fees in a recession.

His subsequent efforts have been botched, thanks to anti-tax conservatives and Democrats pushing for reducing cuts to schools before raising transportation funding. Members in both parties have suggested Otter simply might not have appreciated the economic problems families began experiencing in the fall, after he had already conducted a statewide roadshow to hear from citizens.

Still, the governor took out the veto stamp, which House Republicans said thwarted any negotiations.

"A strong governor doesn't have to rely on a veto," LiCalzi said. "It's having to make this a public fight that shows weakness."

Not only are anti-tax conservatives crying foul about raising taxes during a recession, but they are also disputing roads even need repairing. Otter bounces back saying he views roads as a statewide service.

"We may not have problems in certain areas of the state," Otter said, "and we may be getting a lot of e-mails and letters from those folks saying, 'don't raise my taxes during this economic downturn.' I understand that. I'm sensitive to that. But I also know there are other areas of the state that we haven't paid attention to in the past."

The House has voted six times against raising the gas tax. Lawmakers have said existing money — the annual ITD budget, stimulus money and the "Connecting Idaho" bonding project — totals in the millions and will suffice for a year.

Otter counters most of it is already accounted for because transportation projects require long-term planning.

"It may show dollars and cents in the bank and it may show a fund balance but it's got obligations, contracts that are now hitting the street," he said.

He's also encountered a wall of young Republicans from eastern Idaho and the Treasure Valley, including Rep. Raul Labrador, R-Eagle, who's reportedly interested in running for Congress.

Many sit near each other on the House floor, go out for lunch together and are unified in opposing any increase in fees or taxes for transportation.

"The problem is his negotiations start at gas tax and mine end at gas tax," said Rep. Steve Kren, R-Nampa.

Such pushback to tax increases and fee hikes evoke images of the 1970s Otter who served in the House.

"It's anti-tax, libertarian and from Canyon County," LiCalzi said. "It's like he's fighting with himself. It's strange."

Still, there are signs of encouragement. Collectively, the various supporters to three rejected gas tax bills total 40 — enough to pass a bill if they voted at the same time.

"It means there are votes to be gotten," said Sen. Dean Cameron, R-Rupert, who supports Otter's campaign, like most senators.

But the 40 members would include House leaders who backed Otter's fuel tax bills until last week. After pitching a new package Thursday, in a 528-word statement Friday, the four-member leadership team told Otter to give up, end the session and let legislators go home.

"I am no longer willing to support a gas tax increase," House Majority Leader Mike Moyle, R-Star, said. "You can say 'the economy's stupid' or 'it's the economy, stupid.' Either way it's not the time to mess around with fuel tax. That's the caucus."

House leaders said they're simply staying with the other members in their party, not abandoning Otter.

But that description raises the eyebrows of some in the Senate, where many Republicans continue to back the governor's campaign.

"Were they insincere then or are they insincere now?" asked Cameron.

Soldier

hallucinations of basketball players in the hospital, of cars on the highway floating in air. He didn't know what was fantasy and what wasn't — until he shuffled into the physical therapy room and stood before a full-length mirror.

"I just had to keep telling myself I'm NOT going to wake up out of this one," he says. "THIS is not a dream. THIS is real."

His face — every bone has been shattered — was splattered with pinkish third-degree burns.

"I could have just flipped out," he says. "But I looked in the mirror and said, all right, there's no changing it. I just have to deal with it. This is me now."

Darron Mikeworth's face was his identity.

So, too, was his life as a soldier.

He was about to embark on a long journey to regain both.

Sgt. Mikeworth, the warrior, will tell you he is the same man he was before The Bomb.

The 32-year-old soldier who served two stints in Iraq (and two more in Kosovo and the Sinai) still wants to take down the bad guys, still thrives on being a cog in the big Army machine.

But Sgt. Mikeworth, the survivor, also knows that no matter how much he heals, he'll forever be defined, in some way, by what happened near Baghdad on April 29, 2005.

"I'm going to be 'the blown-

Sgt. Darron Mikeworth poses at home with his family in San Antonio on March 2. From left are his son Ryan, 7, son Connor, 6, and wife, Dea. Mikeworth lost an eye, his nose, and broke every bone in his face when he was attacked by a suicide bomber in 2005 in Iraq.

up guy' wherever I go," he says. "Anytime I walk into a room, I just know I'm going to be different-looking and I'm going to be perceived differently."

Mikeworth knew his wounds were so extensive there was no way doctors could turn back the clock. But he refused then — as he does now — to dwell on his losses.

"I have no reason to feel sorry for myself. I could be in a box underground somewhere," he says. "Every day above ground is a GOOD day."

But he needed to become himself again, so that he at least would recognize the face in the mirror and so that the people he encountered would see him as a man, not as a victim.

That's where Operation Mend came in.

A one-of-a-kind partnership between the UCLA Medical Center and Brooke Army Medical Center — the military's main hospital for burn patients — the program provides reconstructive surgery to members of the military who've been severely disfigured in Iraq and Afghanistan. So far, 24 men and women have been treated.

Mikeworth's road to recovery has been part medical marvel, part profile in courage — the stalwart soldier who rebuilds his confidence as doctors rebuild his face.

All along, as UCLA surgeons have tucked and trimmed, adding a bit of cartilage here, a flap of skin there, Mikeworth has yearned to return to the simple routines in life, dreaming of the day when he could:

Pick up his two sons without worrying he'd scare their classmates.

Walk around the mall without turning heads.

Be a face, not THE face, in the crowd.

Dea knew instantly what would bother Darron most: Half his vision was gone. His features were mangled. People would stare.

She knew, too, how hard that would be for her husband, an introvert who preferred the sidelines to the spotlight.

"I used to like to be able to stand in the back of the crowd and not be noticed," he explains. "I like to be anonymous."

Suddenly, he was the center of attention, and often not in a good way.

Weeks after his release, Mikeworth and his family visited Ripley's Believe It or Not museum. His legs were bandaged, his burned hands in gloves. He wore sunglasses, his nose was just a pair of slits.

As he stood, motionless, a young woman apparently thought he was a wax exhibit. When he moved, she was startled. Figuring he was an actor, she blurted: "What are you supposed to be?"

"I just looked at her and said, 'I'm a blown-up soldier.'"

Dea says they can laugh now but back then, she was filled with anger and pain, knowing how much that experience hurt her husband.

There were more awkward moments: people in the mall doing double takes, strangers who'd burst into tears or try to press money into his hands.

Mikeworth was understanding, even empathetic.

"I was pretty gruesome in the beginning," he says. "I looked like I came out of some Halloween horror movie. I know that. Sometimes if I was having a bad day, I'd get mad at the situation I found myself in, but I would never get angry at the people."

But his appearance didn't faze his sons, Ryan, 7, and Connor, 6.

They brought laughter into the home when they returned from a two-month stay with Dea's parents in Illinois.

When Mikeworth had to wear round plastic devices called nasal trumpets — they act like fake nostrils — the boys dubbed it his Pig Nose.

When he got a latex wider-than-normal prosthetic nose attached with glue, they dubbed it his Big Nose. One day the glue wore away and the nose fell off while Mikeworth was napping. Their cat, Anastasia, snatched it, with Connor, Ryan and Dea in hot pursuit.

Those funny moments, though, were just a temporary distraction.

"When you're without a nose, with burns on your skin, without an eye, it's a hard thing to swallow," says Lisa Gustafson, his former case manager and Operation Mend coordinator at Brooke. "You don't know if you have a future, if you have a paycheck. That's pretty scary."

Dea has helped tremendously, Gustafson says, remaining at her husband's side from the start.

"We were kids together," Dea explains. "One eye, two eyes, one hand, two hands. It doesn't matter what he looks like. He's Darron."

They met at age 15 when Mikeworth's father retired from the Army, settling in the tiny farming town of Robinson, Ill. From high school to life partners, they are a study in contrasts.

Dea is animated and talkative; Darron is shy and sparing with his words. And yet, this ordeal has, not surprisingly, unified them.

"We're both pretty pragmatic people," she says. "Yeah, this sucks. But we need to deal with it and move forward."

ISU prof to speak on Constitution, presidential power

Times-News

Magic Valley political scholars should avoid making plans for Saturday evening. Idaho State University Professor David Adler will speak then on "Restoring a Constitutional Presidency," part of the League of Women Voters of Idaho's 30th biennial convention. The presentation is free to the public. Adler, a professor of political science at ISU since 1985, teaches courses on the Constitution, Bill of Rights and the presidency. He holds a bachelor's degree in political science from Michigan State University and received his doctorate from the University of Utah. He's an established constitutional and presidential scholar, whose books include "American Constitutional Law," "The Constitution and the Conduct of American Foreign Policy" and "The Presidency and the Law." He is also the author of more than 100 scholarly articles for leading political journals. In the past, Adler has criticized both the executive power that President George W. Bush amassed while in office and Congress for allowing him to grab such power. Convention chairwoman Marjorie Sloten said Sunday that she hasn't heard Adler give Saturday's speech before, but is excited to hear it. She also expects him to discuss the Electoral College and whether the U.S. should drop that in favor of a national popular vote. "It's something that I look forward to in that he has done a lot of research on this field," she said of the main topic. Adler's appearance is funded in part through the Idaho Humanities Council, and will start at 7 p.m. at the Red Lion Canyon Springs Hotel in Twin Falls. For a free program reservation, contact Sloten at marjslot@cableone.net or 208-733-2587.

Murphy Complex workshop registration due Thursday

Times-News

Thursday is the last day to register for a wildfire conference examining the lessons learned during three wildfires in the U.S. Bureau of Land Management's Jarbidge Field Office. The conference, organized by the BLM and the Idaho Rangeland Resource Commission, is planned for May 12 to 14 at the Canyon Crest Dining and Events Center in Twin Falls.

Presenters from a variety of state and federal agencies and the University of Idaho will discuss how they've responded to challenges caused by the Clover Fire of 2005, Sailor Cap Fire of 2006 and Murphy Complex Fire of 2007. The second day will be a field tour of the areas burned during those fires. For more details about the conference, visit <http://www.idrange.org> or call Heather Tiel-Nelson, 208-736-2352.

need them — although with 20 confirmed cases of people recovering easily, they don't appear to for now.

Make no mistake: There is not a global pandemic — at least not yet. It's not clear how many people truly have this particular strain, or why all countries but Mexico are seeing mild disease. Nor is it clear if the new virus spreads easily, one milestone that distinguishes a bad flu from a global crisis. But waiting to take protective steps until after a pandemic is declared would be too late.

"We do think this will continue to spread but we are taking aggressive actions to minimize the impact on people's health," said Dr. Richard Besser, acting chief of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

President Obama's administration sought to look both calm and in command, striking a balance between informing Americans without panicking them. Obama himself was playing golf while U.S. officials used a White House news conference to compare the emergency declaration with preparing for an approaching hurricane.

"Really that's what we're doing right now. We're preparing in an environment where we really don't know ultimately what the size or seriousness of this outbreak is going to be," Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano told reporters.

people or surfaces and then touching your mouth or nose. It is not contracted by eating thoroughly cooked pork.

Q: What are the symptoms of swine flu?

A: The symptoms are similar to regular types of flu seen every winter: fever, fatigue, sore throat, cough, poor appetite, body aches and chills. Some people also have nausea, vomiting and diarrhea. People who have other illnesses are at higher risk for developing complications from flu, such as pneumonia.

Q: Is it contagious?

A: The virus is contagious, but health officials cannot yet say how easily the current strain of swine flu spreads from person to person. People are usually contagious for as long as they are symptomatic, typically four to five days for adults and longer for children. Some children may be contagious for a few days even after recovering.

Q: How dangerous is this swine flu?

A: In Mexico, health officials have confirmed that 20 deaths were linked with swine flu; dozens more are suspected. But all known cases in the U.S. have been mild. Experts don't know how deadly swine flu is because they don't know how many people have been infected overall. The World Health Organization says that the mortality rate from swine flu is 1 percent to 4 percent.

Q: How is it diagnosed?

A: A respiratory specimen must be collected within the first four or five days of illness. The viral specimen is then sent to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention for testing.

Q: What is the incubation period?

A: Only a day or two.

Q: What is the treatment?

A: Of the four antiviral drugs, only two — oseltamivir or zanamivir — are thought to work against swine flu. These drugs may make the illness milder and work best if started within two days of getting sick. There is no other treatment other than rest.

Earlier, White House press secretary Robert Gibbs said the outbreak was serious, but that the public should know "it's not a time to panic." He told NBC's "Meet the Press" that Obama was getting updates "every few hours" on the situation.

In Mexico, soldiers handed out 6 million surgical-style masks to deal with a deadly flu strain that officials say may have sickened 1,400 people since April 13. Special laboratory tests to confirm how many died from it — 22 so far out of the 86 suspected deaths — and not something else is taking time.

The World Bank said it would send Mexico $25 million in loans for immediate aid and $180 million in long-term assistance to address the outbreak, plus advice on how other nations have dealt with similar crises.

The World Health Organization and U.S. were following a playbook of precautions developed over the past five years to prepare for the next super-flu. The WHO on Saturday asked all countries to step up detection of this strain of A/H1N1 swine flu and will reconsider on Tuesday whether to raise the pandemic threat level, in turn triggering additional actions.

A potential pandemic virus is defined, among other things, as a novel strain that's not easily treated. This new strain can be treated with Tamiflu and Relenza, but not two older flu drugs. Also, the WHO wants to know if it's easily spread from one person to a second who then spreads it again — something U.S. officials suspect and are investigating.

"Right now we have cases occurring in a couple of different countries and in multiple locations, but we also know that in the modern world that cases can simply move around from single locations and not really become established," cautioned WHO flu chief Dr. Keiji Fukuda.

There is no vaccine against swine flu, but the CDC has taken the initial step necessary for producing one — creating a seed stock of the virus — should authorities decide that's necessary. Last winter's flu shot offers no cross-protection to the new virus, although it's possible that older people exposed to various Type A flu strains in the past may have some immunity, CDC officials said Sunday.

Insect pest strikes central Idaho evergreens

Wood River Valley could see all its blue spruce trees wiped out

KETCHUM (AP) — A nonnative insect is attacking pine trees in the central Idaho resort area of Ketchum and could wipe out all the blue spruce trees in the Wood River Valley.

The small insects called pine needle scale appear as white dots on pine needles. The insects suck water and nutrients from the needles, causing the needles to turn brown and die.

"Pine needle scale is widespread here in the Wood River Valley," arborist Bill Josey, owner of Arbor Care Resources Inc., told the Idaho Mountain Express. "It is especially bad in the older, more established neighborhoods like Hulen Meadows, the Sun Valley Fairways and Elkhorn."

The insects mainly go after Colorado blue spruce, a nonnative plant brought to the region for landscaping. The nonnative insects came with the spruce, and have no natural parasitic wasps to control their population.

"In west Ketchum if this is not addressed, it could wipe out all the spruces in the valley," Josey said.

Jim Rineholt, forester with the Sawtooth National Recreation Area, said the insects have been hitting most evergreens in the area, not just blue spruce.

"We are definitely starting to get a lot more calls on the subject," he said.

Josey said the pine needle scale infestation has worsened as it has gone unnoticed and untreated for years, allowing the insects to reproduce. He also said additional development in the region has decreased open spaces between neighborhoods, making it easier for the insects to infest more trees.

The insects hibernate during the winter. In May and June, eggs hatch, and the insects move more actively, spreading in branches and moving to new trees. Female scales lay about 40 to 100 eggs.

Josey said trees can be saved with a series of treatments if the insects are spotted early.

"In west Ketchum if this is not addressed, it could wipe out all the spruces in the valley."

U.S. Bancorp takes over First Bank of Idaho

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — U.S. Bancorp has taken over the Ketchum-based First Bank of Idaho. The bank had operated in Wyoming and Idaho under the name First Bank of the Tetons.

U.S. Bancorp said late Friday it has acquired about $225 million worth of deposits previously held by First Bank of Idaho. Federal regulators shut down the bank on Friday.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. says First Bank of Idaho had about $488.9 million in assets and $374 million in deposits as of Dec. 31.

U.S. Bancorp says it will take control of seven company branches located in central Idaho and the Teton region. They will be rebranded soon under the U.S. Bancorp name.

All seven offices will reopen today as branches of U.S. Bank. Depositors of First Bank of Idaho will automatically become depositors of U.S. Bank.

FOUR CORNERS MONUMENT

X

MARKS the SPOT ... sort of

TEEC NOS POS, Ariz. (AP) — X only sort of marks the spot, but Four Corners Monument officials believe a slight miscalculation in where the corners of four states meet won't deter tourists who photograph each other sprawled across four states.

Park manager DeWayne Johnson said tourism to the monument has dropped steadily in the past decade, but recent media coverage exposing a surveying error has increased it.

"Overnight, we got more visitors after the media got this," Johnson said. "I think we might be getting a big rush this summer. Already we have more visitors per day than we did this time last year."

Park visitors peaked at about 260,000 people in 2004, Johnson said. Last year, it saw about 200,000 tourists.

The marker for the only location in the U.S. where four states come together was placed almost dead on in 1875, said Dave Doyle, chief geodetic surveyor for the National Geodetic Survey, which defines and manages a national coordinate system. However, it's a bit east of where it should be: 1,807.14 feet, or about the length of six football fields, he said.

Doyle said it doesn't matter because the marker's location for the intersection of Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico and Utah is now accepted.

"Even if it's 10 miles off, once it's adopted by the states, which it has been, the numerical errors are irrelevant. It becomes the legal definition" of the Four Corners, he said.

Johnson said the marker's placement has been questioned before, but he was startled this time because the news went around the globe and showed up on major Web sites.

"The majority of people who thought this was a big deal are non-natives," he said. "It appeared that the media broke this story, but we've known it."

The attention now focuses on the uniqueness of the monument, operated by the Navajo Nation Parks and Recreation Department, Johnson said.

"Visitors don't seem to care that we're not where we're supposed to be," he said.

Caldwell school district considering uniforms

CALDWELL (AP) — Caldwell School District officials in southwest Idaho are considering requiring elementary students wear a school uniform after a survey found 83 percent of parents supported the idea.

The parents of about 3,000 Caldwell elementary students took part in the survey earlier this month.

The district has formed a committee to look at how such a policy would be implemented. Principals, teachers, parents and community members are on the committee.

The committee plans to present its findings at a Caldwell School Board meeting on May 11.

If school uniforms are approved, it would apply to six elementary schools in the district and about 3,000 students. Jennifer Swindell, public information officer for the school district, said students would not be able to opt out of wearing a school uniform if the policy is adopted.

Backers say uniforms put all students on an equal footing, eliminating pressures on students to have the latest styles and designer brands.

Some parents who oppose uniforms say they are concerned about how much they might cost, and about problems finding locations to buy the uniforms.

Swindell said district officials expect school uniforms to be less expensive than what parents typically pay in back-to-school costs. But she said the uniform idea would likely be abandoned if it turns out uniforms are more expensive for parents.

The uniforms district officials have so far looked at are stain- and wrinkle-resistant, with double-knees.

Swindell also said Caldwell officials are discussing the idea with Vallivue Middle School, which required students to wear uniforms this school year.

Iowans unsure of benefits gay marriages will bring

By Amy Lorentzen
Associated Press writer

DES MOINES, Iowa — Iowa counties begin processing same-sex marriage applications today and the first gay weddings could happen within hours, but details of just what changes and benefits the ceremonies will bring are still being untangled.

However, any questions lingering under the Iowa Supreme Court's April 3 ruling that legalized same-sex marriage aren't expected to slow the initial rush to county recorder offices.

And while Iowa requires a three-day waiting period before marriages can occur, judges may waive that delay and allow immediate weddings. At least one pro-gay marriage group is counting on waivers and has announced its members will hand out bouquets to newly married couples today in five of Iowa's larger cities.

"There are people who may feel they have waited a long time and they want to do it as soon as possible, or they understand that life is uncertain and something could happen while you're waiting," said Jon Davidson, legal director for Lambda Legal, a New York-based gay rights organization.

Maryfrances Evans and Stephanie McFarland don't plan to marry today, but they're not waiting much longer. Evans, 46, and McFarland, 39, will have their ceremony Friday, performed by the same judge who finalized the adoptions of their two daughters, now age 5 and 3.

"It's all about me having the legal right to protect my family, and it's about my daughters being able to grow up knowing that their family is absolutely as valid as any other family," said Evans, who lives in the Des Moines suburb of Urbandale.

DETAILS ON SAME-SEX MARRIAGE IN IOWA

The Associated Press

Today, Iowa becomes the third state offering same-sex marriage, following Massachusetts and Connecticut. Vermont has passed a law that will take effect in September.

Here are some details on Iowa's process:

- Marriage requirements: Two people, over 18, not already legally married, not closely related and legally competent to enter into a civil contract.
- License: Applicants must show proof of identity, pay $35 fee, and have a witness sign the application. Three-day waiting period before wedding may be performed, although this may be waived by judge.
- Ceremony: Must be in Iowa, with both parties, an officiate (judge or leader of a religious faith) and two witnesses present.
- If a same-sex couple have been legally married elsewhere, their marriage is valid in Iowa as of today. It is not yet clear if civil unions from another state or registered domestic partnerships will be recognized in Iowa.
- For a divorce, one party must have been a resident of Iowa for at least one year.

Source: Lambda Legal

The Williams Institute at the UCLA School of Law estimated Iowa had 5,800 same-sex couples in 2005, and said U.S. Census figures reported about 19 percent of gay and lesbian couples in Iowa were raising children.

The institute predicted in an April 2008 study that more than 2,900 of Iowa's same-sex couples would marry in the first three years if gay marriage became legal. And based on experiences of other states that allow same-sex union, the institute estimated about 55,000 gay and lesbian couples would travel to Iowa to marry during that period.

Just what tangible benefits those couples will gain from marriage remains uncertain.

Gay marriage advocates said some advantages are clear, including shared employer benefits, streamlined life and other insurance policies, and the ability for couples to make health care and end-of-life decisions for one another.

Evans noted that if she died before her Friday wedding, McFarland would have to pay taxes on their house and whatever else she inherited. Once they are married, "there will be a clear-cut legal line connecting Stephanie and I, period."

Sharon Malheiro, a Des Moines attorney and board chairwoman of One Iowa, a gay advocacy organization, said other issues may require legal untangling, such as the ability to file wrongful death lawsuits or apply for workers compensation benefits if a same-sex spouse is killed or injured.

She said same-sex couples probably will be denied some benefits under the Defense of Marriage Act, the 1996 law barring federal recognition of same-sex marriages. For example, spouses in same-sex marriages may not be able to pay health care plan premiums with pretax federal dollars and may not get reimbursed for their spouse's expenditures from flexible spending accounts for health care.

While health care decision-making rights are anticipated under Iowa's ruling, Malheiro noted that she and her fiancé will continue to carry their legal records with them when they travel outside the state, and she advises her clients to do the same.

Iowa state agencies are still trying to determine how their programs will be affected.

Department of Human Services officials said there won't be noticeable changes in the child welfare system, which screens prospective parents by safety issues, not sexual preference. Unmarried people can already adopt or foster children so long as they have the proper training.

Other states have different requirements for adoption, and many foreign governments and international adoption agencies refuse to place children with same-sex married couples.

Human Services spokesman Roger Munns said the marriage ruling's impact is less clear on programs such as Medicaid, food assistance and subsidized health care, since those programs are federally funded.

Stroeibel powers out win at Magic Valley Speedway

By Linda Brittsan
Times-News correspondent

Shelby Stroeibel doubled his wins for the 2009 season after he narrowly crossed the finish line just ahead of Rick Fowble Saturday night at Magic Valley Speedway.

Rookie Dustin Miller held the lead for all but one of the first 14 laps of the main event but soon found opening night's victor Stroeibel along side his door. Stroeibel then took over for the next 10 laps.

The pair then ran side-by-side each lap with Fowble taking the outside groove while Stroeibel held his line on the low side. Fowble narrowly held the lead through lap 24, but unfortunately for Fowble it was a 25-lap race. In the end, the driver of the No. 24 car edged out an ironic .24 seconds margin of victory over Fowble.

"I don't know how I won that race," Stroeibel said. "Rickie's (Fowble) car was good. As I went by the 26 car I looked at the scoreboard and saw his (Fowble's) number pop into second and I knew I was in trouble."

PITZ WINS NAPA PONY STOCKS

The division had just four entrants for the night but Josh Pitz put on an exciting last minute surge going for the win in the 15-lap main event. The fans had to look to the scoreboard to see which number car crossed the line first, but Wade Henslee ended up hanging on for the victory by just .023 seconds for his first win of the season.

JENSEN TAKES MAGIC VALLEY PIPE STREET STOCKS

Stacey Jensen ran away with the show in the 20-lap main event crossing the finish line 7.25 seconds ahead of runner-up in the race Steve Edens. It was Jensen's second win of the season in as many races.

Jets deal for top pick of third round; Idaho's Eddie Williams to Redskins

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — If there's an NFL executive Jets general manager Mike Tannenbaum hasn't approached with an offer to trade up in the draft, he should be ready for a call next year.

With Brett Favre retired and Thomas Jones threatening to stay away without a renegotiated contract, Tannenbaum was super active at the beginning of both days of the draft this weekend. His aggressiveness landed quarterback Mark Sanchez in the fifth overall spot.

After Tannenbaum caught his breath — his team had no more picks in the first two rounds — he began Sunday's session by dealing with Detroit to start things off. The Jets filled a potential hole with Iowa running back Shonn Greene, who merely rushed for at least 100 yards in all 13 games last year, his only season as a regular.

"I won't get into any specifics, but to say that our phone bill was pretty significant over the last couple days would be fair," Tannenbaum said. "But we had to assess what was best for the Jets and those were hard judgment calls to make."

At least Tannenbaum is consistent. In the last four drafts, he's traded up to get key players: in 2006, quarterback Kellen Clemens; in 2007 cornerback Darrelle Revis and linebacker David Harris; and last year, tight end Dustin Keller.

The Jets sent a third-rounder, a fourth-rounder and a seventh-rounder to the Lions to get the All-American Greene.

"I think they really believe in my talent and my potential to trade up and get me," Greene said. "I'm just going to work my hardest to satisfy ... and help the team win."

Former BSU players Ian Johnson and Vinny Perretta reached free-agent agreements with the Minnesota

Gordon, Bulls top Celtics 121-118 in 2 OT

By Andrew Seligman
Associated Press writer

CHICAGO — Another playoff thriller between Chicago and Boston, and this one went to the Bulls.

If the Celtics want to advance, they're going to have to earn it.

Ben Gordon scored 22 points, hitting the tying 3-pointer in the first overtime, and the Bulls beat the defending champions 121-118 in double overtime Sunday to tie their first-round series at two games apiece.

The teams split two tight games in Boston, before the Celtics blew out the Bulls in Game 3. This time, they stretched the drama into a second overtime.

"Everybody I'm talking to is saying this is the most exciting series that they're watching right now," Gordon said.

It's tough to argue. Derrick Rose added 23 points, 11 rebounds and nine assists. John Salmons scored 20 points after a slow start, hitting four free throws in the final 26 seconds of the game and blocking Paul Pierce's tying 3-pointer.

Boston's Ray Allen buried a 3-pointer with 9.8 seconds left in regulation to tie it at 96 before Rose missed a potential winning fadeaway in the closing seconds. Gordon came through with 4.5 seconds left in the first overtime, hitting a 3-pointer over Pierce to tie it at 110, and the Bulls never trailed in the second OT.

Salmons hit two free throws with 26 seconds left and, after a 3-pointer by Pierce, he hit two more at the line. After a timeout, Pierce got the ball on the left side but couldn't shake Salmons, who deflected his 3-pointer.

It was a dramatic end to another dramatic game. The series goes back

"It's 2-2 and we're in a fight," Boston's Rajon Rondo said. "Give them a lot of credit. They stuck with it. They fought back. They executed down the stretch very well and we didn't."

Pierce led Boston with 29 points, although he was just 9-for-24. Allen added 28, and Rajon Rondo again hounded the Bulls, finishing with 25 points, 11 rebounds and 11 assists — his second triple-double of the series.

Rose, who was outplayed by Rondo in the previous two games, again had trouble hanging onto the ball. He

Keselowski steals Talladega

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press writer

TALLADEGA, Ala. — Brad Keselowski won his first Sprint Cup Series race Sunday after a dramatic final lap at Talladega Superspeedway when Carl Edwards' airborne car sailed into the fence near the finish line.

Edwards later warned that restrictor-plate racing is eventually going to kill someone.

Keselowski, racing in just his fifth career Cup race, hooked onto the rear of Edwards' bumper on the last lap to push him past Ryan Newman and Dale Earnhardt Jr. Once clear of them, Keselowski peeked around Edwards to make a move for the lead.

Edwards tried to block the move by darting low, but Keselowski was too close to his bumper and the contact sent Edwards sailing up the track. His spinning car shot over Newman's hood and into the safety fence near on the front stretch.

The fence swelled toward the race fans but held, and Edwards' car landed back on the track. He climbed from the crumpled metal and ran on foot across the finish line.

"We'll race like this until we kill somebody," Edwards said afterward. "Then they will change it."

Edwards was referring to the high speeds at NASCAR's fastest track, which are combated by horsepower-sapping restrictor plates. The plates typically keep the field bunched tightly together, and one wrong move by a driver can cause a massive accident.

In addition to Edwards' frightening flight into the fence, Sunday's race was also marred by a 13-car crash on the seventh lap and another 10-car accident with nine to go.

"Talladega is short for 'We're going to crash, we just don't know when,'" said Newman, the third-place finisher, who also recalled Matt Kenseth's fiery tumble in the Nationwide Series race on Saturday.

"We saw that two times this weekend, so maybe we need to look at things that keep the car down on the ground."

An outstanding barrel run of 16.736 seconds by Samantha Logan of Jerome highlighted the Saturday night performance of the District V high school rodeo in Shoshone at the Lincoln County Fairgrounds.

Rough stock cowboys made quite an impression early as bareback riders came out firing making three qualifying rides. A 62-point ride by J2 Bridges of Valley on Daisy stood up as the winner. Bridges continued his winning ways in bull riding with an impressive ride of 75 points on Smash Mouth.

Gooding cowboys Justin Parke and Cy Eames had a good Saturday with Parke winning first place in calf roping and Eames taking first in steer wrestling. The two also teamed for their third win in team roping with a Dwight Howard had 18 points and 18 rebounds, and every Magic starter scored in double figures. Turkoglu and Rashard Lewis each added 17.

Andre Miller led the Sixers with 17 and Young had 15.

Game 5 of the best-of-seven series is Tuesday night in Orlando. The teams have alternated wins so far.

Cap-sized: Washington forces Game 7 vs. Rangers

NEW YORK — Tom Poti had a goal and two assists and the Washington Capitals won 5-3 Sunday in Game 6 against the New York Rangers, who were playing without suspended coach John Tortorella.

Rangers goalie Henrik Lundqvist didn't make it to the third period for the second straight game, and Poti torched his former team as the Capitals tied the first-round playoff series and set up a decisive Game 7 on Tuesday night in Washington.

The Capitals had trailed the series 3-1 before a pair of routs.

Tortorella served a one-game suspension following a confrontation with a fan Friday during New York's 4-0 loss in Game 5 that sent the series back to Madison Square Garden. Tortorella squirted water into the crowd and threw a water bottle over the glass and into the stands.

HURRICANES 4, DEVILS 0

RALEIGH, N.C. — Eric Staal scored two goals less than 3 minutes apart, Cam Ward made 28 saves in his third career playoff shutout to help Carolina force Game 7.

Ray Whitney had a goal and three assists, Jussi Jokinen scored Carolina's first power-play goal since Game 2, Chad LaRose had two assists and Staal added an assist for the Hurricanes.

GOLF ROUNDUP

Jerry Kelly wins Zurich Classic by 1 stroke

AVONDALE, La. — Jerry Kelly rallied with a pair of birdies on the back nine Sunday, showing steady nerves to win the Zurich Classic for his first PGA Tour title since 2002.

Kelly birdied the fifth before bogeys on No. 8 and No. 10 brought him back to the pack. He then birdied the 11th and 14th to shoot 71 and finish 14 under for the tournament, one shot clear of Charles Howell, Rory Sabbatini and Charlie Wi.

Howell took advantage of Kelly's mid-round stumble with one of his six birdies at 11 that gave him a two stroke lead. But bogeys at the 15th and 17th left him with a 68 on the day.

Steve Marino, playing with Kelly, stayed within one shot of the lead until the 18th, when he went into a bunker and ended up with a bogey for a round of 70. He finished tied for fifth.

OCHOA WINS CORONA

MORELIA, Mexico — Mexican star Lorena Ochoa shot a 5-under 68 on Sunday to hold off Norway's Suzann Pettersen by a stroke in a dramatic final round and win the Corona Championship for the second straight year.

Ochoa, who also won the tournament in 2006, had back-to-back birdies on the 15th and 16th holes to break a tie with Pettersen and finish at 25-under 267.

The charismatic star played without regular caddy Dave Booker, who got hurt playing a soccer match on Saturday and was unable to help the 27-year-old Ochoa around Tres Marias Residential Country Club. She ended up calling on childhood coach Rafael Alarcon to caddy for her.

South Korea's Na Yeon Choi finished third at 18 under, Wendy Ward was another shot back and Christie Kerr and Yani Tseng tied for fifth at 16-under par.

LEHMAN WINS ON CHAMPIONS TOUR

SAVANNAH, Ga. — Tom Lehman made a par putt on the second playoff hole to become the 13th player to win his Champions Tour debut, teaming with Bernhard Langer to fend off Craig Stadler and Jeff Sluman in the Liberty Mutual Legends of Golf.

Each team finished at 27-under 189 in the better-ball event.

Stadler bogeyed the second playoff hole and Langer's approach landed in a greenside bunker, where he blasted out to 5 feet but missed his putt. After Sluman missed his par putt from 4 feet, Lehman rolled in his from about the same distance for the win.

committed seven turnovers for the second straight time, but made up for it with 13 points in the fourth quarter.

Gordon also came through late even though he strained his left hamstring in the second quarter and is scheduled for an MRI on Monday.

Kirk Hinrich added 18 points while containing Pierce. Tyrus Thomas had 14 points and 10 rebounds, and Joakim Noah scored 12 while grabbing 10 boards. The Bulls prevailed despite missing some key free throws down the stretch and were 26 of 35 overall.

WILLIAMS WINS BUDWEISER SUPER STOCKS

Allen Williams started the main event race in the lead and maintained the position until the checkered flag fell at lap 25.

It was no cakewalk for Williams however, as Norm Hatke, Rick Fowble, Kris McKean and Jerry McKean constantly kept up the pressure. Lap traffic at lap 16 gave the pack some concerns, but all made it through without incident and Williams wound up finishing .449 seconds ahead of Hatke for his first win.

LOPEZ WINS QUALE'S ELECTRONICS HORNETS

As a field of 15 cars took the green flag for the 20-lap main event, the Hornets Division quickly took on the look of a demolition derby.

Frank Potter had the early lead but Jenna Quale was soon in contention for the spot. At lap five Potter and Quale tangled in Turn 4, sending both drivers into the barrier tires. While Potter was able to make it back for the restart, Quale had her ride towed to the pits.

Two more cautions soon followed, with the latter for a hard hit to the No. 1 car of Stephanie Ford as she sat sideways between turns three and four. The ambulance crew was called to the scene and Ford was taken out of the car on a stretcher. Fortunately, later that evening

Ford was able to walk to her personal vehicle with some assistance.

Once the race got back underway, it was Rodney Lopez who finally captured the win.

BRENNAN GETS SECOND WIN IN JR. STINGERS

Andy Brennan also made it two wins in a row after making the pass for the lead on lap three. Brennan also was the victor in the heat race, getting by Taylor Patrick late in the event.

Vikings as of Sunday evening.

The Washington Redskins have selected Idaho's Eddie Williams with the first of their two seventh-round picks in the NFL draft.

The 6-foot-1, 239-pound Williams was an H-back in college and appeared suited to contend for a fullback position for the Redskins. First, however, he must recover from a torn ACL in his left knee, suffered late last season. He became the first offensive player taken by Washington this weekend. Earlier Sunday, the Redskins chose Maryland cornerback Kevin Barnes in the third round, Nebraska linebacker Cody Glenn in the fifth round and TCU linebacker Robert Henson in the sixth round.

Chicago and Dallas finally made their first picks, in the 68th and 69th slots. The Bears went for defensive tackle Jarron Gilbert of San Jose State, and the Cowboys selected Western Illinois linebacker Jason Williams.

Rodeo

5.82-second run. Kolton Hubert had a productive rodeo placing in four events. The Dietrich cowboy finished third in steer wrestling, fifth in calf roping and fourth in team roping with Dietrich teammate Whit Bingham.

The top cowgirls in the overall standings and top rookies, No. 1 Haillie Taylor of Wood River and No. 2 Valene Lickley of Valley continued to add to their season point total. The two were one-two in poles with Taylor winning with the fastest time of 20.877 seconds and Lickley second at 21.182. Taylor also finished second in barrels and fifth in goats. Lickley grabbed the top spot in breakaway posting a time of 3.30 seconds. She and partner Jori Fleming of Wendell teamed for their first catch of the season in team roping (16.32) to finish third. Mattie MacGregor of Jerome recorded her first win with a winning time of 10.56 seconds in goats.

Fleming competes in five events and says breakaway is her favorite and strongest event because "I like roping and because of my horse, Super Dave. I don't practice roping a lot off Super Dave because I never worry about him doing what he should. I have confidence in him."

What does Fleming think of this year's rookie girls?

"They are making us older girls work harder."

After years of competing in high school rodeo and basketball, Glens Ferry senior Laramie Fox "is ready to move on."

"I'll miss hanging out with my family and riding my horse," said Fox who competes in goats, poles and barrels.

The next level for Fox will be at Washington State University in the fall where she plans to major in agriculture.

The District V moves into Jerome this weekend.

Nellis’ challenge: Make sure the U of I still matters

Kansas State University Provost Duane Nellis held out for more money before he agreed to become the University of Idaho’s 17th president last week.

That’s good. He’ll earn every nickel of it. Idaho’s land-grant college is an institution under siege, financially and competitively. It’s a traditional university in a non-traditional age, saddled with massive infrastructure, charged with statewide responsibilities and located 325 miles from Idaho’s major population center.

Thirty years ago, if you were an academically talented student in, say, Twin Falls, chances are you went to Moscow, if not out-of-state. Nowadays, for the same student, the U of I is merely one pinprick of light in a constellation of higher education choices.

Moreover, the university’s once-legendary political influence continues to dwindle. The governor of Idaho and three of its four congressmen went to college somewhere else. So did the chairmen of the Idaho House and Senate education committees, five of the six current members of the State Board of Education, the Idaho superintendent of public instruction, and 15 of the 20 members of the Legislature’s budget committee.

Meanwhile, the university has lost more than 9 percent of its student body in five years. The spring 2009 headcount of 11,192 is lower than the school’s enrollment was in 2001.

The university is facing budget cuts of $8.4 million for the 2010-11 academic year, and student fees — that’s Idahospeak for tuition — are going up 6.5 percent next year.

So Nellis, in addition to becoming a master promoter, will have to be a conciliator and a politician as well.

The Magic Valley has a big stake in his success. Still in limbo is a planned dairy research center, a joint venture with the dairy industry, which awaits more funding. U of I’s participation is critical to the College of Southern Idaho’s agricultural program; to the Kimberly Research and Education Center; and the Potato Storage Research Facility in Kimberly and the Fish Culture Experiment Station in Hagerman. All are important to the south-central Idaho economy.

Idaho is a small enough state that a strong university president can make a difference. William E. “Bud” Davis, who ran Idaho State University from 1965-75, put ISU on the map and ran for the U.S. Senate for good measure. Former Illinois Lt. Gov. Bob Kustra, Boise State University’s president since 2003, has become an important political figure in Idaho because of BSU’s growth and importance to Idaho’s economy.

But the U of I hasn’t had a comparable figure for more than a generation. The University Place scandal and then-President Robert Hoover’s role in it diminished the job. Since Hoover resigned in 2003, the university has had four presidents.

Can Nellis, a 54-year-old Spokane native who earned his academic reputation in neighboring Montana, change the U of I’s fortunes? Everybody in the state who cares about higher education — Vandal or otherwise — hopes so.

Our view: New University of Idaho President Duane Nellis must restore the school’s self-confidence — and its luster in the rest of Idaho.
What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Guess what? Waterboarding worked

In releasing highly classified documents on the CIA interrogation program earlier this month, President Obama declared that the techniques used to question captured terrorists “did not make us safer.” This is patently false. The proof is in the memos Obama made public — in sections that have gone virtually unreported in the media.

MARC A. THIESSEN

Consider the Justice Department memo of May 30, 2005. It notes that “the CIA believes ‘the intelligence acquired from these interrogations has been a key reason why al-Qaida has failed to launch a spectacular attack in the West since 11 September 2001.’ ... In particular, the CIA believes that it would have been unable to obtain critical information from numerous detainees, including (Khalid Sheik Mohammed) and Abu Zubaydah, without these enhanced techniques.” The memo continues: “Before the CIA used enhanced techniques ... KSM resisted giving any answers to questions about future attacks, simply noting, ‘Soon you will find out.’” Once the techniques were applied, “interrogations have led to specific, actionable intelligence, as well as a general increase in the amount of intelligence regarding al-Qaida and its affiliates.”

Specifically, interrogation with enhanced techniques “led to the discovery of a KSM plot, the ‘Second Wave,’ ‘to use East Asian operatives to crash a hijacked airliner into’ a building in Los Angeles.” KSM later acknowledged before a military commission at Guantanamo Bay that the target was the Library Tower, the tallest building on the West Coast. The memo explains that “information obtained from KSM also led to the capture of Riduan bin Isomuddin, better known as Hambali, and the discovery of the Guraba Cell, a 17-member Jemmah Islamiyah cell tasked with executing the ‘Second Wave.’” In other words, without enhanced interrogations, there could be a hole in the ground in Los Angeles to match the one in New York.

The memo notes that “(i)nterrogations of (Abu) Zubaydah — again, once enhanced techniques were employed — furnished detailed information regarding al-Qaida’s ‘organizational structure, key operatives, and modus operandi’ and identified KSM as the mastermind of the Sept. 11 attacks.” This information helped the intelligence community plan the operation that captured KSM. It went on: “Zubaydah and KSM also supplied important information about al-Zarqawi and his network” in Iraq, which helped our operations against al-Qaida in that country.

All this confirms information that I and others have described publicly. But just as the memo begins to describe previously undisclosed details of what enhanced interrogations achieved, the page is almost entirely blacked out. The Obama administration released pages of unredacted classified information on the techniques used to question captured terrorist leaders but pulled out its black marker when it came to the details of what those interrogations achieved.

Why didn’t Obama officials release this information? Because they know that if the public could see the details of the techniques side by side with evidence that the program saved American lives, the vast majority would support continuing it.

Critics claim that enhanced techniques do not produce good intelligence because people will say anything to get the techniques to stop. But the memos note that, “as Abu Zubaydah himself explained with respect to enhanced techniques, ‘brothers who are captured and interrogated are permitted by Allah to provide information when they believe they have reached the limit of their ability to withhold it in the face of psychological and physical hardship.’” The job of the interrogator is to safely help the terrorist do his duty to Allah, so he then feels liberated to speak freely.

This is the secret to the program’s success. And the Obama administration’s decision to share this secret with the terrorists threatens our national security. Al-Qaida will use this information and other details in the memos to train its operatives to resist questioning and withhold information on planned attacks. CIA Director Leon Panetta said during his confirmation hearings that even the Obama administration might use some of the enhanced techniques in a “ticking time bomb” scenario. What will the administration do now that it has shared the limits of our interrogation techniques with the enemy? President Obama’s decision to release these documents is one of the most dangerous and irresponsible acts ever by an American president during a time of war — and Americans may die as a result.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Driving schools bill is bad legislation

Maybe I am naive, but I have always believed that we elect our legislators to represent us in our state Legislatures. Today I have become officially disillusioned with politics.

Today (April 22) in the Idaho House, S1133, a bill to move oversight of commercial driving schools who train teens to drive from the State Department of Education to the Department of Occupational Licensing was passed overwhelmingly. No other state in the country allows the driver education industry to be self-governing.

This bill will see an increase in licensing fees for commercial driving schools of 1,700 percent. Yes that is right, 1,700 percent. Not one licensed commercial driving school in the greater Magic Valley is in support of this legislation. The schools have been vocal in their concern over this bill.

Yet the majority of the greater Magic Valley legislators voted in favor of this bill and against their constituents.

For the businesses who are able to remain open, to whom will this increase in licensing fees eventually be passed on? Yes, the consumer.

People in the Magic Valley and all over the state whose pocketbooks are already stretched much too thin. Economics alone makes this a bad bill. But our local legislators saw fit to vote with Boise, not with the Magic Valley.

As I said, I am pretty disillusioned. Thank you to Donna Pence, Wendy Jaquet, Fred Wood and Richard Wills for listening to their constituents. Sometimes doing the right thing isn’t always the easiest.

Teacher who abused student must serve time

Mr. Burgess would like a little leniency from state prosecutors for the boy-hunting teacher Anna Bettencourt. I’m going to guess that he would ask the same if it was his 16-year-old daughter telling him a story about her new handsome teacher. Maybe he takes her out to dinner and treats her like a real lady, they go dancing like the grownups do; they like the same music. Well, she’s almost 18 and he’s only 12 years older. He takes her to a cheap motel but he pays for everything. They’re almost consenting adults; let the teacher pay a fine or something but not three years of prison.

It just sounds different if you use a girl instead of a boy doesn’t it?

Don’t let your idea of a boy becoming a man cloud your judgment of a law.

The fact is, these lady teachers that use young boys for sex are typically married with their own children and are either unsatisfied or unable to function in their own relationships. Most are emotionally ill-equipped to handle the loss of their younger glory days so they hit the sack with your kid to find the fountain of youth. Is this San Andreas Fault line of mental instability the one you want leaving a lasting impression on your child? What is the cutoff age where she stops hunting boys to feel better about herself? 15? 13? 12? The penalty phase of a trial is for the protection of the victims and a debt owed to society, losing a career and a little embarrassment is never considered time served, she must do her time. It’s a new world when the people inside prison have more contempt for pedophiles than the people walking the streets.

Day 105 and counting: What Idaho papers are saying ...

Post Register, Idaho Falls

Like cartoon character Wile E. Coyote, Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter now finds himself occupying the smallest section of a collapsing bridge — the part in the middle.

Otter sawed off Democratic support by cutting school budgets. Tough times demanded it, he said.

Then he sliced off conservative Republicans by seeking highway tax boosts in the middle of a recession.

Now as he careens down the political abyss, Otter has turned to the Acme Corp. for another device — the constitutional show-down.

Miffed at the House's refusal to pay for highways repairs, Otter started vetoing bills. (Last) Monday, he killed 10, including appropriations for Fish and Game, the State Board of Education, the state police and the public employee pension system.

On Tuesday, the House turned thumbs down 55-15 against the latest fuel tax boost. Out went the governor's veto stamp. He attacked 25 more, including Water Resources, the Industrial Commission, the liquor dispensary and public television.

Sure, the House has provoked him. Idaho is running between $140 million and $240 million short every year of maintaining its transportation system. One of every five miles of roadway is deficient. Eventually, it will cost far more to repair than it does today.

Otter's tried diplomacy. He held town hall and Capital for a Day sessions. When House members insisted on yet another audit of the Idaho Transportation Department, he agreed. The audit surprised nobody — it says Idaho needs more money for its roads.

But the governor's record here is one of over-reaching and compounding his errors. Last year, Otter wanted to raise everybody's auto registration fees by $150 a year. When legislators offered a $68 million package, the governor impulsively rejected it.

This year, he has offered compromise after compromise. But Otter won't form a coalition with House Democrats, who would help him in exchange for less severe public school cuts.

Because Otter's staff can't count noses before a floor vote, the governor's been leading with his chin.

Now he's emulating former Gov. Dirk Kempthorne. In 2003, Kempthorne's veto compelled the House to accept a temporary sales tax increase to pay for schools. Two years later, he targeted the pet bills of lawmakers to force their support for his massive highway bonding program.

But Kempthorne drew a line in the sand. Otter seems prepared to wage World War I-style trench warfare. By vetoing appropriations, Otter is holding state government hostage. Assuming the state Senate backs his play, Otter may force weary House members to cut a deal so they can return to their real jobs sometime before Memorial Day.

But this governor's betting it all. If things don't go his way, House members will see him as inconsequential. Then, as the saying goes: "Th-Th-Th-That's all, folks!"

Idaho Press-Tribune, Nampa

On Feb. 13, the Press-Tribune published an editorial supporting the elimination of the Idaho Women's Commission. One of the reasons our editorial board endorsed the idea was that it would save some money — about $30,000.

Coincidentally, that's the amount of money we as taxpayers spend every day the Legislature is in session. And that $30,000 that would have been saved had the Women's Commission proposal passed has been blown by just one single day of the standoff between Gov. Butch Otter and lawmakers.

Idaho isn't alone in struggling through how it is going to deal with one of the worst economies and budget crunches in decades. But it's not every day a governor pounds the veto stamp on dozens of pieces of legislation he would otherwise sign because he didn't get what he felt was desperately needed funding for roads.

Otter believes many of the state's roads are in such disrepair that waiting for the economy to get better simply isn't an option. He has been very consistent in saying so.

Legislators say their constituents are telling them, in overwhelming numbers, that they don't want any additional tax burden placed on them in a down economy. But it's also true that people who would reluctantly support paying a couple pennies extra per gallon of gas to shore up a crumbling road system aren't nearly as likely to call a legislator as someone who's adamantly opposed to doing so. It's not a very representative sample.

Other proposals to generate the money needed to address this issue have included higher vehicle registration fees and rental car taxes.

Otter's use of the veto to get lawmakers' attention seems harsh, but sometimes you have to take drastic measures to get things done. That's what leaders do.

It's not something that's going to win him a lot of love from a lot of voters.

But we elect people to lead, not to follow. We elect them to make difficult decisions that may seem questionable at the time, but ultimately will be in the best long-term interest of the state.

This is a good time to have road work done because construction costs are very reasonable. It's an industry that has been hit particularly hard by the recession, and workers are eager to work. We'll get good value for our money and put people to work.

A tax increase of 1 cent per gallon for someone who drives 20,000 miles per year in a vehicle that averages 20 miles to the gallon would cost that driver an extra $10 a year. Many people don't drive anywhere near that many miles, and a lot of us have vehicles that get better gas mileage. And a few extra bucks a year won't kill us.

Lawmakers should be more concerned with addressing our vital transportation system than they should their own re-election. We've waited too long already to address this problem.

Otter has shown the willingness to compromise on the issue. It's time lawmakers sit down and do the same. Every day they don't, it's costing us $30,000. Imagine how many miles you'd have to drive to pay that much in a gas tax increase of two pennies per gallon.

Spokesman-Review, Spokane, Wash.

Idaho Gov. Butch Otter isn't taking a "my way or the highway" approach to transportation funding, but he is demanding that a substantive bill on road maintenance be passed this session. And he has the worn out veto stamp to prove it. It's an impressive display of backbone in a state where tax increases are about as welcome as milfoil.

Otter nixed 25 bills Tuesday and 10 on Monday to protest the Legislature's failure to come up with transportation dollars. He said, "I think the public ought to start calling the Legislature tonight and say, 'Pass those transportation bills, and get out of town.'"

The House has rejected six gas-tax-increase bills this session, but if it wants the money it needs to run state vital agencies, it had better find some transportation dollars. Among the victims have been budget bills for the Department of Water Resources, the Industrial Commission, the Commerce Department, the Military Division, the Arts Commission, the Division of Human Resources, Idaho Public TV and the Blind Commission.

Idaho is trying to finance today's road maintenance with 1996 dollars. It's been 13 years since the state gas tax was raised, but time and inflation haven't cooperated. The roads have taken on more traffic. The cost of materials and labor has risen significantly.

The Legislature needs to find a comprehensive approach, and it made the wise decision to pass another GARVEE bill, which means the state can borrow against future federal highway dollars for large projects. But that won't be enough to whittle the $250 million maintenance backlog.

To keep roads and bridges in good repair, it will need to raise taxes and motor vehicle fees. But lawmakers have turned down every plan proposed. They won't even give local governments the authority to raise taxes in their jurisdictions.

Lawmakers realize they can't adjourn without their budget bills. So they're pondering a plan that would raise transportation funds with a combination of higher motor-vehicle and car-registration fees, a repeal of the tax exemption for ethanol, and a scheme that shifts part of the growth in general funds to roadwork. That could be financed, in part, with taxes on tires, auto parts and other items.

It's not certain that a gas-tax increase is off the table, but lawmakers seem intent on avoiding that at all costs. A mere 2-cent bump per gallon, which would have kept the tax 10.5 cents lower than Washington state's, was even shot down.

The Legislature has displayed an irrational fear of gas-tax hikes for several years.

Perhaps lawmakers can tap some of the courage Otter has shown and do the right thing.

It's not as bad out there as you keep hearing

It has been with great interest to watch the national media portray the doom-and-gloom of the current economic climate we are all dealing with. After almost a year, it appears the national outlets have tired of reporting the next bad-news story on the economy. Even negative news stories have a shelf life. There has been some glimmer of light lately with stories ranging from the stock market to real estate.

Wells Fargo Bank recently held a "cine-meeting" in Twin Falls where more than 125 local Realtors and title company representatives heard a message that has been missing in any recent recession story. Just how bad is it in relation to past recessions? Should we be stuffing our mattresses with money or burying our money in the back yard like many pundits want us to believe? Let's look at the real facts:

• 1929-39 — The true Depression era. Unemployment was recorded at 25 percent, that did not include women who at the time were not considered in employment statistics. The Dow Jones dropped 89 percent and our GDP dropped 11 percent to $103 billion.

READER COMMENT
Jeff Duggan

• 1973-75 — The time period when the nation ran out of gas to sell. We complained last summer for $4 gas, but at least we could still purchase it. Inflation was 21 percent. Dow Jones dropped 45 percent and our GDP rose 18 percent to $1.4 trillion.

• 1981-82 — The amazing '80s where everyone wanted to be like the "Material Girl." The prime rate was 18.87 percent, the Dow Jones dropped 24 percent and our GDP rose again 4 percent to $3.1 trillion.

• 1990-91 — The period when having possessions we couldn't afford to impress the people we didn't know was very important. Six hundred-fifty-three banks and savings and loans failed. The Dow

Jones dropped 21 percent and our GDP rose 3 percent to $5.8 trillion.

• 2008 — We all survived the rough 2008 period when every day we heard horror stories of the stock market and the housing bubble bursting. Six trillion dollars were lost in the stock market with a 42 percent drop on the Dow Jones while our GDP rose 1 percent to $11.6 trillion.

• 2009 — Here are some true hard facts: Thirty percent of homes are owned free and clear, 96.7 percent of homes with a mortgage are not in foreclosure, the U.S. GDP is more than that of the next three countries combined, and housing affordability is the best it's been in 20 years.

Annual change in median income has now risen above the annual median change of the price of homes sold. It is truly one of the best home-buying opportunities many consumers have every experienced.

Jeff Duggan of Twin Falls is the CEO of the Greater Twin Falls Association of Realtors.

Do you remember immigration reform? It's making a comeback

The Obama administration recently signaled interest in beginning a discussion on comprehensive immigration reform before year's end. It might seem that a severe economic downturn is the best time for a major legislative initiative on immigration. But starting this conversation now makes sense for several reasons.

First, the level of undocumented migration into the United States has dropped because of the downturn; consider the significant reduction in the number of would-be crossers apprehended at the Southwest border. Second, one of the major issues that served as an obstacle in 2007, the last time Congress debated comprehensive reform, appears to have been removed. The 2007 legislation included a large-scale temporary worker program, which most labor unions opposed. But immigrant advocacy groups have tabled these proposals, recognizing the difficulty of pushing such a program with unemployment approaching double digits.

The most difficult part of a discussion on immigration reform is what to do about the 10 million to 12 million undocumented workers and their families living in the United States. Republican opposition to an "amnesty" program was a major reason for the defeat of the 2007 reform proposal. The economic crisis is sure to fuel that same opposition: Why, it will be asked, should we give undocumented workers a legal status that permits them to compete for jobs with unemployed Americans?

A good answer focuses

on the longer term. Comprehensive immigration reform should seek to accomplish two major goals: providing some form of legal status to undocumented workers who meet certain conditions (knowledge of English, payment of taxes, absence of a criminal record) and ensuring that we don't immediately see the build-up of a new undocumented population — due to continued lax enforcement and the perceived likelihood of a future legalization program. It is clear that we cannot credibly deter the hiring of unauthorized immigrants unless the government implements a system that can accurately verify the authenticity of documents that are presented to employers. Some members of Congress are urging the extension of the voluntary verification system — called E-Verify — to all U.S. employers.

But it is far too soon for this. E-Verify cannot, at this point, adequately protect against "false negatives" (when the electronic system, due to inaccurate information in government databases, fails to verify the status of a lawful worker). Even if E-Verify is correct 99 percent of the time, imposing the system nationwide on a workforce of 150 million means that hundreds of thousands of workers could still be denied jobs because of errors in the databases.

Nor are federal agencies prepared for a massive legalization. A program that could provide legal status to 10 million or more people would require the hiring of a large number of federal employees; the forging of public-private partnerships; and the development of technology for online applications, systems of document verification and recordkeeping.

Immigration reform legislation could link these two goals, authorizing the start of a legalization program once a reliable verification system has been developed. Ultimately, that could result in a dramatic decrease in the undocumented population in the United States and fair reason to believe that future undocumented entry could be deterred.

The substantial lead time needed for creating a credible verification system and an effective legalization program provides another argument for beginning the conversation on comprehensive immigration legislation soon. And by the time these new programs would come into force, improvement in the economy would probably make legalization efforts less controversial.

T. Alexander Aleinikoff is dean of Georgetown University Law Center. He wrote this commentary for The Washington Post.

Louise F. Skidmore

GOODING — Louise F. Skidmore, 93, died Thursday, April 23, 2009, in Gooding after a brief illness.

She was born on April 2, 1916, in St. Joseph, Ill., the first of six and the last surviving child of Erma and William Fenwick. The family moved to Filer when she was 4 years old, where Louise and her siblings had the run of a 40-acre farm.

Louise attended college at Gooding College and Albion Normal School and in later years studied at San Jose State University. She taught elementary school in Ashton and Fairfield. During World War II, she worked as a telegraph operator for the Union Pacific R.R. At the end of the war, she took a job with Idaho Power Co. in Twin Falls, where she met the love of her life, Earl O. Skidmore. Earl and Louise married and moved to Gooding where Louise worked at the Idaho State School, teaching arts and crafts to the deaf and blind.

She was interested in everything and everyone and was widely known for having never met a stranger. Louise was active in the Gooding Hospital Auxiliary and was involved in the initial startup of the Thrift Shop. Louise was also a member of the Gooding

Methodist Church and the Order of the Eastern Star. She was an accomplished artist in several mediums and loved sharing her gift with her students and others.

She is survived by her son Wayne Skidmore (Megan Poulson) of Anchorage, Alaska, daughter Jeanne Belleau of Pickerington, Ohio, and grandchildren Lynda (Kurt) Petterson, Lisa Nelsen, Danielle (Edward) Banks, their mother Dixie Miyake, David (Sharon) Skidmore, Brenna Poulson, Susan (Mark) Geist, David (Stacie) Belleau, Bill (Deborah) Belleau, Kelly (Deborah) Belleau and James (Diana) Belleau as well as several nieces, nephews, great-grandchildren and great-great-grandchildren. Louise was also very close to her neighbors, the Legarretas, and countless special friends.

Memorial services will be held at 10:30 a.m. on Tuesday, April 28, at the Demaray's Gooding Chapel in Gooding. Graveside inurnment will follow on a later date at the Canyon Hills Cemetery in Caldwell.

The family asks that in lieu of flowers, donations be made to the Gooding County Hospital Foundation at 1120 Montana St., Gooding, ID 83330.

Merintha May Blacker Garner

RUPERT — Merintha May Blacker Garner, 88, of Rupert, passed away on Saturday, April 25, 2009, at her home surrounded by her family.

She was born Dec. 8, 1920, in Rupert, the daughter of Thomas Blacker and Hettie Mae Wilkes Blacker. Merintha was the ninth of 12 children. She was raised in Rupert, attended Pioneer School and graduated from Rupert High School.

She married Carl Beazer Garner on Dec. 4, 1940, in the Salt Lake City LDS Temple. She enjoyed working with her husband on their farm northwest of Rupert. Merintha loved spending time with her family fishing, cooking and being with them.

She has been an active member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. She served in many positions including Primary President, Young Women's President and Relief Society President. Merintha loved serving with her husband in the Singles Ward, and supporting her husband while he served as the Rupert West Stake President.

Merintha is survived by her children: Karlene

McBride, Terry (Cathryn) Garner, Dennis (Amelia) Garner, Doyle (Karen) Garner and Shanna (David) Hollan; 32 grandchildren and 34 great-grandchildren. She is preceded in death by her husband; an infant son, Lonnie Ray; one great-grandson, Austin Terry Garner, and her parents and siblings.

Funeral services will be held at 11 a.m. on April 29, at the Rupert West Stake Center, 26 S. 100 W. in Rupert with Bishop Max Garner officiating. Burial will be at the Rupert Cemetery. Friends may call from 6 until 8 p.m. Tuesday at the Rupert West Stake Center and one hour prior to the service on Wednesday. Funeral arrangements are under the direction of Hansen Mortuary.

Security problems uncovered at U.S. bases in Iraq

By Rirchard Lardner
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — A commission investigating waste and fraud in wartime spending has found serious deficiencies in training and equipment for hundreds of Ugandan guards hired to protect U.S. military bases in Iraq, The Associated Press has learned.

The problems at Forward Operating Bases Delta and Hammer include a lack of vehicles used to properly protect the two posts, a shortage of weapons and night vision gear, and poorly trained guards. Both bases house several thousand U.S. military personnel.

Concerned the shortages leave the bases vulnerable, the Commission on Wartime Contracting alerted military officials in Iraq and at U.S. Central Command in Tampa, Fla. "Incidents such as this are a concern in their own right, but they are a particular concern to the commission if they prove to be indicators of broader, systemic problems that impede the delivery of critical services to American military forces in a war zone," said Bob Dickson, the commission's executive director.

Army Lt. Col. Brian Maka, a spokesman for Multi-National Force-Iraq, said contracting officials have taken the commission's findings seriously. "Security contractors at both sites have corrected or are in the process of correcting deficiencies," he said Saturday.

The military relies on hired guards at bases in Iraq so troops are available for combat duties. Overall, there are five companies providing security at bases in Iraq under contracts with an estimated value of $250 million.

A majority of the guards are from Uganda and other East African countries. Guard salaries are about $700 a month on average.

Triple Canopy of Herndon, Va., holds the $35 million security contract at Base Delta. Sabre International Security, based in Baghdad, has a $42 million contract to provide security at Base Hammer. Under the terms of both contracts, awarded in September 2007, the companies are required to provide all labor, weapons and other equipment that the guards need.

Swiss heartland voters ban nude hiking

APPENZELL, Switzerland (AP) — Voters in the heart of the Swiss Alps on Sunday passed legislation banning naked hiking after dozens of mostly German nudists started rambling through their picturesque region.

By a show of hands citizens of the tiny canton (state) of Appenzell Inner Rhodes voted overwhelmingly at their traditional open-air annual assembly to impose a 200 Swiss franc ($176) fine on violators.

Only a scattering of people on Sunday opposed the ban on the back-to-nature activity that took off last autumn when naked hikers — primarily Germans — started showing up in eastern Switzerland.

The cantonal government recommended the ban after citizens objected to encountering walkers wearing nothing but hiking boots and socks.

"The reactions of the population have shown that such appearances over a large area are perceived as thoroughly disturbing and irritating," the government said in a statement.

A similar legal move is expected in neighboring Appenzell Outer Rhodes with legislation being prepared against "this shameless behavior."

German Web sites promoting the activity describe it as "a special experience of nature, free and healthy" and said nude walking in the Alps has roots in antiquity.

Changing times in Berlin as 'The Producers' to debut

By Patrick McGroarty
Associated Press writer

BERLIN — A musical in Berlin with swastikas, goose-stepping and a catchy tune called "Springtime for Hitler" might be expected to draw outrage from a German public sensitive to playing the Nazi past for comedy.

But on May 15, the German-language version of the Broadway hit "The Producers" is opening at the Admiralspalast theater, and so far no one seems to be complaining.

Three years ago, a Hebrew-language production played in Tel Aviv to packed and laughing audiences. Then a German production was staged in Austria, Adolf Hitler's birthplace. Now the same troupe is bringing the show to the German capital.

It all suggests that even in the countries most closely associated with the Holocaust, as perpetrators or as victims, new generations are managing to take their darkest hour in stride and laugh at a tale of two New York Jewish rascals who devise the ultimate in bad taste-for-big bucks — a musical comedy about Hitler.

"Berliners, and Germans in general, have processed and reprocessed the Third Reich," said Michaela Ronzoni, who translated the show into German. "I think it's possible to make jokes about it."

Demographics are bolstering the trend: Even the youngest victims and perpetrators are getting old, and multiple generations now have no memory of the war.

Older people in the audience may "quarrel with the whole idea of having fun with what they thought was the most serious part of their lives," Mel Brooks, the musical's co-author, told The Associated Press.

But for people aged 35 or 40, "I don't think there's any problem at all...They're hip, they're bright, and Berlin has always been a great theater town. They've always broken ground."

Even today, however, Germans have to tread carefully when it comes to the Third Reich. Last July, a wax Adolf Hitler at Madame Tussaud's Berlin museum was beheaded by a 41-year-old man shouting "No more war!" And in January, a coffee shop chain recalled 700 placards that said "To Each His Own" because it was the slogan on the gates of Buchenwald concentration camp.

Yet two years ago, when a Swiss Jewish director portrayed Hitler as a comical idiot in "Mein Fuehrer: The Truly Truest Truth about Adolf Hitler," reviewers focused on the film's debatable cinematic merits rather than on the treatment of the Fuehrer as comedy.

Amid U.S. criticism, Pakistan again battles Taliban

By Nahal Toosi
Associated Press writer

ISLAMABAD — Pakistan sent helicopter gunships and troops to attack Taliban militants Sunday in a district covered by a peace deal after strong U.S. pressure on the nuclear-armed nation to confront insurgents advancing in its northwest.

At least 31 people were killed in the offensive, which sent some residents of Lower Dir district fleeing carrying small children and few belongings.

The operation appeared to endanger a peace pact struck with Taliban militants in neighboring Swat Valley, although a top official insisted the deal was "intact." Another official demanded the insurgents disarm, but a Taliban spokesman said the militants would not give up their weapons.

The Lower Dir offensive also came ahead of Pakistani President Asif Ali Zardari's scheduled meeting with President Barack Obama in early May, but Pakistani officials denied outside pressure influenced the move.

Television footage from the district showed at least two helicopter gunships heading toward the mountains. Troops guarded a road blocked with paramilitary trucks, while some families sat nearby. Another family headed away in a vehicle packed with luggage.

The operation killed at least 30 militants, including a commander, plus one paramilitary soldier, according to an army statement and Interior Ministry chief Rehman Malik. The statement said the operation was launched at the request of the provincial government and local residents, but did not detail its scope or expected duration.

The government agreed to impose Islamic law in Swat and surrounding districts that make up Malakand Division if the Taliban there would end their violent campaign in the one-time tourist haven. Critics labeled the deal a "surrender" to the militants and warned Swat could turn into a haven for allies of al-Qaida.

In recent days, Taliban forces from Swat began entering Buner, a neighboring district which lies just 60 miles from the Pakistani capital, Islamabad. Officials said most of the insurgents pulled out of Buner on Friday amid reports of possible military action, and threats that the government would scrap the deal.

SWINE FLU TOLL CLIMBS IN MEXICO

Developments on swine flu worldwide

The Associated Press

Key developments Sunday on swine flu outbreaks:

- Deaths: 86, all in Mexico. 22 confirmed as swine flu, 64 suspected.
- Sickened: 1,384 in Mexico, suspected or confirmed; 20 confirmed in U.S.; 6 confirmed in Canada; 13 suspected in New Zealand; 7 suspected in Spain; 1 suspected in France; 1 suspected in Israel; 1 suspected in Brazil.
- Locations in Mexico: 17 states, including Mexico City, Mexico State, Veracruz, Oaxaca, Baja California and San Luis Potosi. Some, including Oaxaca, Mexico City and Baja California, have tourist areas, but authorities have not said where in these states the outbreaks occurred.
- Locations in U.S.: California, Kansas, New York, Ohio and Texas.
- Safety measures in Mexico: In Mexico City, surgical masks being given away on the subway system, public events canceled, schools and public venues closed and church services postponed. President Felipe Calderon has assumed new powers to isolate infected people. World Bank is providing Mexico with more than $200 million in loans to help with the outbreak.
- Safety measures in U.S.: Roughly 12 million doses of Tamiflu being moved from federal stockpile to be delivered to states. Travelers at border being asked about travel to flu-stricken areas. St. Francis Preparatory School in New York, where eight cases are confirmed, will be closed Monday and Tuesday. St. Mel's Catholic School in Fair Oaks, Calif., closed until at least Thursday as officials investigate possible infection of seventh-grader.
- Safety measures worldwide: Airports screening travelers from Mexico for flu symptoms. China, Russia and Taiwan plan to put anyone with symptoms under quarantine. Hong Kong and South Korea warn against travel to Mexico City and three provinces. Italy, Poland and Venezuela advised citizens to postpone travel to affected areas of Mexico and the United States. Some countries increasing screening of pigs and pork imports or banning them outright.

A police officer wearing a surgical mask stands guard in front of Mexico's National Autonomous University soccer stadium, which was closed to the public, shortly before a game against Chivas in Mexico City, on Sunday. Public officials closed the stadiums to the public Sunday, and health workers screened airports and bus stations for people sickened by a new strain of swine flu that experts fear could become a global epidemic.

Mexico City streets empty as residents try to avoid catching or spreading swine flu

By David Koop

MEXICO CITY — Churches stood empty Sunday in predominantly Roman Catholic Mexico City after services were canceled, and health workers screened airports and bus stations for people sickened by a new strain of swine flu that experts fear could become a global epidemic.

Mayor Marcelo Ebrard said two more people died of swine flu overnight in the overcrowded capital, and three other deaths are suspected to have been caused by the strain. Another 73 people were hospitalized with influenza, possibly swine flu.

President Felipe Calderon has assumed new powers to isolate people infected with the deadly swine flu strain that health officials say has killed up to 86 people and likely sickened about 1,400 in the country since April 13. Six million masks have been handed out by soldiers, Calderon said, urging Mexicans to them use in public and take other precautions, such as avoiding traditional greetings with a handshake and a kiss on the cheek. If you have flu symptoms "and you don't go the doctor right away, it could have grave consequences," the president said.

Calderon also pledged to continuously update the public "with openness and truthful information," in an attempt to defuse public anger that authorities did not act soon enough to contain the epidemic.

The flu has spread far beyond Mexico's borders with 20 confirmed cases in five U.S. states and suspected cases as far away as New Zealand, Canada and France. The U.S. declared a public health emergency, providing for easier access to flu tests and medications, and enhanced surveillance along the U.S.-Mexico border.

In Mexico, soldiers and health workers patrolled the capital's subway system, looking for possible flu cases. People were advised to seek medical attention if they suffered from symptoms including a fever of more than 100 degrees, body aches, coughing, a sore throat, respiratory congestion and, in some cases, vomiting and diarrhea.

Markets and restaurants were nearly empty and all school-related activities were suspended in the capital and the states of Mexico and San Luis Potosi until May 6. Hundreds of public events from concerts to sports matches to were called off to keep people from congregating and spreading the virus in crowds. Zoos were closed and visits to juvenile correction centers were suspended.

Is swine flu 'the big one' or will it fizzle?

By Mike Stobbe
Associated Press writer

ATLANTA — As reports of a unique form of swine flu erupts around the world, the inevitable question arises: Is this the big one?

Is this the next big global flu epidemic that public health experts have long anticipated and worried about? Is this the novel virus that will kill millions around the world, as pandemics did in 1918, 1957 and 1968?

The short answer is it's too soon to tell.

"What makes this so difficult is we may be somewhere between an important but yet still uneventful public health occurrence here — with something that could literally die out over the next couple of weeks and never show up again — or this could be the opening act of a full-fledged influenza pandemic," said Michael Osterholm, a prominent expert on global flu outbreaks with the University of Minnesota.

"We have no clue right now where we are between those two extremes. That's the problem," he said.

Health officials want to take every step to prevent an outbreak from spiraling into mass casualties. Predicting influenza is a dicey endeavor, with the U.S. government famously guessing wrong in 1976 about a swine flu pandemic that never materialized.

"The first lesson is anyone who tries to predict influenza often goes down in flames," said Dr. Richard Wenzel, the immediate past president of the International Society for Infectious Diseases.

There's a historical cause for people to worry.

Flu pandemics have been occurring with some regularity since at least the 1500s, but the frame of reference for health officials is the catastrophe of 1918-19. That one killed an estimated 20 to 50 million people worldwide.

Disease testing and tracking were far less sophisticated then, but the virus appeared in humans and pigs at about the same time and it was known as both Spanish flu and swine flu. Experts since then have said the deadly germ actually originated in birds.

Ga. prof suspected in deadly shootings leaves no trail

By Russ Bynum
Associated Press writer

ATHENS, Ga. — A college professor suspected in the shooting deaths of his wife and two men outside a community theater hasn't used his cell phone or credit card, leaving few traces as authorities searched for him Sunday.

Zinkhan

George Zinkhan, a 57-year-old marketing professor at the University of Georgia, was last seen Saturday afternoon shortly after the shooting when he dropped his two young children off at his neighbor's house, police said.

Authorities initially described one of the victims, Marie Bruce, as Zinkhan's ex-wife, although police later said the couple was still married.

Investigators have received no tips about Zinkhan's whereabouts and urged people to call police if they see his 2005 red Jeep Liberty with Georgia license plate AIX1376.

State and federal authorities are assisting in the search. Investigators were monitoring airports in case Zinkhan tried to head to Amsterdam, where he owns a home, and speaking with law enforcement agencies in Austin, Texas, where he has relatives. But officials hope that Zinkhan will surface, said Athens-Clarke County Police Capt. Clarence Holeman.

"Criminals make mistakes. It doesn't matter if you've got a Ph.D., an M.D. or whatever," Holeman said.

Meanwhile, friends of the victims dropped off flowers and lit candles Sunday morning in front of the Athens Community Theater. The victims — Bruce, 47; Tom Tanner, 40; and Ben Teague, 63 — were members of Town & Gown Players, a local theater group that was staging a performance of "Sherlock Holmes: The Final Adventure" this weekend at the theater. Two others were hurt by shrapnel.

Iraq says U.S. raid a 'crime' that breaks security pact

By Brian Murphy
Associated Press writer

BAGHDAD — Iraq's prime minister denounced a deadly U.S. raid on Sunday as a "crime" that violated the security pact with Washington and demanded American commanders hand over those responsible to face possible trial in Iraqi courts.

The U.S. military, however, strongly denied that it overstepped its bounds and said it notified Iraqi authorities in advance — in accordance with the rules that took effect this year governing U.S. battlefield conduct.

The pre-dawn raid in the southern Shiite city of Kut ended with at least one woman dead after being caught in gunfire and six suspects arrested for alleged links to Shiite militia factions.

Richard Francey offered condolences to the family of the woman killed.

The fallout marks the most serious test of the security pact so far and could bring new strains during a critical transition period.

U.S. forces plan to move out of most major Iraqi cities by the end of June in the first phase of a promised withdrawal from the country by the end of 2011.

A statement from Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki — in his role as commander general of Iraqi forces — called the raid a "violation of the security pact."

He asked the U.S. military "to release the detainees and hand over those responsible for this crime to the courts," according to an Iraqi security official who read the statement to The Associated Press.

But efforts were quickly launched in an attempt to tone down the dispute.

The six detainees were released, said Major Gen. Read Shakir Jawdat, head of the provincial police that includes Kut. At the same news conference, U.S. Col.

Elsewhere in Iraq, gunmen stormed two Christian homes in separate attacks in the ethnically diverse city of Kirkuk, killing at least two Chaldean Christians and one Assyrian, said police Brig. Burham Taib.

Study links ADHD meds with better test scores

By Lindsey Tanner
Associated Press writer

CHICAGO — Children on medicine for attention deficit disorder scored higher on academic tests than their unmedicated peers in the first large, long-term study suggesting this kind of benefit from the widely used drugs.

The nationally representative study involved nearly 600 children with attention deficit hyperactivity disorder followed from kindergarten through fifth grade.

Children's scores on several standardized math and reading tests taken during those years were examined. Compared with unmedicated kids, average scores for medicated children were almost three points higher in math and more than five points higher in reading. The difference amounts to about three months ahead in reading and two months in math, the researchers said.

Both groups had lower scores on average than a separate group of children without ADHD. The researchers acknowledged that gap but said the benefits for medicated youngsters were still notable.

"We're not trying to say in this study that medication is the only answer," but the results suggest benefits that parents, educators and policy-makers shouldn't ignore, said Richard Scheffler, the lead author and professor at the University of California at Berkeley's School of Public Health.

Seasonal vaccine no help against swine flu

ATLANTA (AP) — U.S. health officials say they are "very pessimistic" that the seasonal flu vaccine protects against the unique swine flu infecting people in the United States, Mexico and other countries.

A U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention official said Sunday afternoon that tests of the seasonal vaccine and the new virus show no cross-reaction, suggesting that people who got the vaccine have no added protection against the new bug.

It's possible that people who have been exposed to flu viruses every year — especially older people, with a greater exposure history — may have some natural immunity, the CDC official said in a call with reporters.

Tips for containing spread of swine flu

The Associated Press

The Atlanta-based federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the New York City Department of Health are recommending several steps to prevent the spread of the swine flu virus.

- If you have flu symptoms, stay home from work or school to avoid spreading the disease. Do not return until two days after your symptoms are gone.
- Cover your nose and mouth when you cough or sneeze, and wash your hands frequently.

- Go to the hospital if you have severe symptoms such as difficulty breathing, but if your symptoms are mild stay home to avoid spreading the virus to others at the hospital.
- Masks may be recommended for health care workers, family members and others who come in close contact with swine flu patients, but there is no need for the general public to wear masks.
- It is safe to eat properly handled pork. Cook it to at least 160 degrees.

Weight loss the DIY way

Of course contestants on such television shows as "The Biggest Loser" can lose lots — whole lots — of weight. Why wouldn't they? They have an entire team of people constantly coaching, instructing and motivating them to shed pounds and get in shape.

If the rest of us had our own team of experts, we, too, might have a fighting chance at losing weight, getting fit and staying that way.

Amassing a cadre of experts is not only possible, it also can be affordable. No budget for weekly visits with a personal trainer? Work with one over the Internet to achieve those exercise goals. Can't afford one-on-one sessions with a registered dietitian? Get all the basics of healthful eating, along with practical advice, online. Need emotional support? Find people who understand your trials and tribulations at a nearby Weight Watchers meeting or on an Internet message board.

As for a doctor's guidance, first consider whether you need it. If so, make the most of that session and his or her input.

Ready? Here's how to round up your own team, most of it only a mouse click away.

Gain support to lose weight with buddy system

Weight-loss confidants can talk you down before you inhale the doughnuts in the break room, maybe cajoling you into going for a walk instead. They also can rejoice with you in another 5 pounds shed.

"The key is shared commitment of beliefs and values," says Daniel Stettner, director of psychology for UnaSource Health Center, a medical and surgical complex in Troy, Mich.

Group or professional therapy, which can be expensive, isn't always necessary. Sometimes having a few simpatico types in your corner who have been there and done that is enough. Stettner offers some guidelines for choosing a coterie that can make getting healthy less arduous:

- Don't assume family and existing friends are the best option. Major lifestyle changes require upheaval from normal routines such as going out for drinks or dinner — and that can create resentment. "You're going against the group at times,"

Stettner says, "and you're singling out yourself to be different — eating differently from the family, not eating snacks at work."

Friends might try to dissuade you from exercising in favor of some other activity, but support group buddies will go on a walk with you, changing old patterns for newer ones.

- Check out existing groups. Weight Watchers, Overeaters Anonymous and even nearby gyms are usually filled with people who are making similar lifestyle

First learn about food, then eat it

The road to diet hell is paved with books, all by authors firmly convinced of the inarguable perfection of their own eating plans.

And although detailed, customized menus may not be readily available at little or no cost, specific online examples can highlight what you need to look for in a meal. You'll also find primers on nutrient-dense foods, good vs. bad fats, portion sizes and food labels.

Further, sites such as CalorieKing.com and TheCalorieCounter.com provide nutritional information on thousands of fresh and prepared foods. Look for foods that are not greatly processed and that are high in proteins or other nutrients and low in calories and saturated fats.

And keep in mind that some health insurance plans do

Personal training, from a distance

Permanent weight loss is usually impossible without exercise, but — where to start? Weights? Cardio? How many days a week? For how long?

That's typically where a personal trainer enters the scene, designing fitness routines, making sure exercises are done correctly and offering motivation. Now there's training via Internet and the phone. Such coaching has become enormously popular in the past few years, spawning a mini-industry of tailored but flexible workouts. Some programs offer customized, downloadable regimens based on an online questionnaire, with little or no trainer interaction; others provide extensive one-on-one phone coaching.

Many online sites allow people to plug in information and track their workout and diet progress.

One of the more common coaching methods begins with one or two in-person sessions that include a fitness and health assessment, a discussion of goals and some training on proper form and technique.

After that, check-ins are done via e-mail and phone, with the trainer tweaking routines, monitoring progress toward goals and providing motivation. Some clients even send footage of their workouts to be tweaked, and trainers in turn send new video routines to follow.

In-person meetings can follow every few months.

A gym isn't even necessary, since a great workout can be done at home or at a park.

Another option is small-group training, in which two to five people work with a trainer at once. It's less expensive than one-on-one workouts and a good way to learn how to strength train properly.

When choosing a program, the key is to know thyself, says Margaret Moore, chief executive of the online coaching site Wellcoaches: "Some people want more of a relationship, while others are more into technology."

Ken Alan, a spokesman for the American Council on Exercise and a lecturer in kinesiology at California State University, Fullerton, offers a few other tips for making this hybrid form of

Start with a clean bill of health

If you don't have that much weight to lose, are relatively young, don't have a disability and are in overall good health, you probably can safely skip the doctor's visit. If you're severely overweight or have diabetes or a family history of heart disease, you should check in with a doctor before getting that heart rate too high.

A trip to see a general practitioner probably will result in tests of cholesterol, triglycerides, blood pressure and blood sugar — all linked to heart health, a key component of exercise. If the numbers are out of the normal range, medication might be in order. The ultimate goal is to manage conditions with exercise and diet, eventually lowering or getting off medication altogether.

A doctor might recommend mild to moderate workouts if your numbers aren't in a danger zone, but he or she also might want to stabilize some conditions before letting you lace up your sneakers. To be on the safe side, begin an exercise regimen slowly — maybe with a walk around the block, some light pool workouts, or low-resistance pedaling on a recumbent bike (best to do it with a buddy to be safe). If you experience shortness of breath, weakness, dizziness or chest pain, stop immediately and seek medical care.

To get the most out of a checkup, it's good to know what to expect, what to discuss and what questions to ask to fast-track you on your way to fitness. Dr. Adrienne Youdim, medical director of the Cedars-Sinai Center for Weight Loss, in Los Angeles, and Dr. Sasha Stiles of Tufts Medical Center-Weight and Wellness Center, in Boston, offer this advice:

- Don't feel compelled to go overboard, requesting every test under the sun. A doctor is likely to start with the basics: checking

Training

- Is the trainer certified? Make sure the trainer has current certification from a reputable organization such as the American College of Sports Medicine, the American Council on Exercise, the National Academy of Sports Medicine or the National Strength and Conditioning Association, even if you're referred by a friend or relative you trust. Besides referrals, trainers can be found in gyms and online, and certifications can be confirmed through the various organizations.

Some trainers specialize in working with the disabled or chronically ill, pregnant women and new mothers, or elderly people.

- Cheating gets you nowhere. Remember that you don't have license to cheat just because your trainer can't see you. You'll only be wasting your time if you don't give the process your all. Be fully committed to your fitness program, and be open to trying different things, such as cycling, dancing or hiking. "A trainer needs to find out what's necessary to get the client moving so that they'll enjoy exercising and it doesn't feel like work," Alan says.

- Make sure you click. Make sure you're comfortable with the trainer during the initial one-on-one sessions. A strained or uncomfortable relationship won't get better, even online. It might take a few tries before a good match is made. "You might start getting e-mails," Alan says, "and discover the trainer is a drill sergeant, when you really wanted someone more compassionate."

- Set parameters. Establish how often you want to interact with your trainer and by what means — e-mail, text messages, phone, snail mail, etc. Ask how progress will be measured, beyond shedding pounds. "If someone's goal is to lose 10 pounds and they only lost two, their trainer can show them other areas where they've had success and made improvements," Alan says. This ultimately will make it easier to stick to a plan.

- And check some more. When selecting an Internet-based training program (one that doesn't offer one-on-one training), check it out thoroughly to see if it meets your needs, is within your budget and has a qualified staff behind it.

cover visits with registered dietitians (individual consultations can be pricey), particularly if prescribed by a physician. They can not only outline daily eating plans, but also offer cooking tips and help you navigate food-laden social occasions. Beware of people who call themselves nutritionists — anyone can give themselves that title. Registered dietitians have extensive nutrition education and are credentialed.

Suzanne Bogert, a registered dietitian and project director of Network for a Healthy California, suggests this strategy for better nutrition: "When you lay your head on your pillow at night, ask yourself how many fruits and vegetables you ate, are you getting a wide variety of foods in your diet, are you connected with your hunger, and are you active? The 'no' answers are what you need to start working on."

Here are resources to check out:

- EatRight.org, sponsored by the American Dietetic Association, offers extensive resources under "Food & Nutrition Information," including tips for weight management (a tutorial on whole grains, 25 healthy snacks for kids), different eating plans for high blood pressure (emphasizing fresh fruits and vegetables and low- or nonfat dairy products) and an explanation of the differences among dietary fats.

- MyPyramid.gov, created by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, offers more than that trusty food pyramid; there's also a menu planner that allows you to calculate calories and fat and choose foods from various food groups. Choose a food, plug it into the planner, and you'll get a calorie count and be able to see whether you're meeting daily goals. You can also copy meal plans and send them to others.

- Rd411.com, created by Nancy Collins, a past president of the Florida Dietetic Association, is geared to registered dietitians but has a wealth of practical consumer information about nutrition, obesity and weight control. It even offers sample menus, including ones for before and after your workouts. (For the former, try a banana and a tablespoon of peanut butter; for the latter, consider 8 ounces of orange juice and two slices of bread.)

Why exercise is good for the eyes

By Jeannine Stein
Los Angeles Times

We all know that exercise makes for a stronger heart and reduces the risk of heart disease, diabetes and a number of other conditions. But now there's more to add to the list: Vigorous exercise also may help prevent age-related macular degeneration and cataracts, both of which can affect vision.

Two new studies looked at data from almost eight years of follow-up from the National Runners' Health Study. In one, 110 men and 42 women received a clinical diagnosis of age-related macular degeneration during the follow-up. The more the runners ran, the less risk they had for developing age-related macular degeneration. Running an average of two to four kilometers a day reduced the risk by 19 percent, and running more than four kilometers per day reduced the risk by 42 percent to 54 percent, compared with those who ran less than two kilometers a day. Running an extra kilometer per day was associated with a 10 percent decrease in relative risk. Numbers were adjusted for age, sex, diet and smoking history.

Another study examined the effects of running on developing cataracts. Among the same group of runners, 733 men and 179 women reported having cataracts during the follow-up. Men who ran had a lower risk of cataracts, even after adjusting for body mass index. Those who ran 64 or more kilometers a week had a 35 percent lower cataract risk than those who ran less than 16 kilometers per week. And those with better cardiovascular fitness were also at less risk than men who were less fit.

Although it's not fully known why a link exists between fitness and preventing these conditions, study author Paul T. Williams, a staff scientist with the Department of

The more the runners ran, the less risk they had for developing age-related macular degeneration.

Energy's Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory, believes that exercise could provide similar protective benefits for the eyes as it does for the heart and other systems.

"There are overlaps," he says. Higher levels of HDL (good) cholesterol are associated with a lower risk of age-related macular degeneration.

Also, C-reactive protein, which shows higher levels during inflammation, may contribute to cataracts. Exercise typically boosts levels of HDL cholesterol and lowers levels of C-reactive protein.

The study appeared in Investigative Ophthalmology & Visual Science.

changes. Like-minded folks can become workout partners or coffee pals who won't goad you into eating fattening treats. Online obesity and weight-loss forums are another option, but be aware that some are geared to those who have gone through, or are contemplating, gastric bypass surgery or medication. Some, like Pritikin, may charge a membership fee. Weight Watchers has its own online forum; others to check out include SparkPeople.com and Weight Loss Forum.

- Turn your regular friends and family into an adjunct support group.

"Tell them, 'This is what I want to do, and I'd like to talk to you about how we can do this together so you can be supportive of me but it won't cause issues for you,'" Stettner says. That might mean meeting for activities other than eating or asking family members to tuck chips out of sight.

- Realize that friends and support groups have their limits. For starters, they might not be the best sources for nutritional or fitness advice. If, despite your efforts, you still aren't achieving your goals, counseling may be in order.

Health

cholesterol and triglyceride levels, measuring blood pressure and body fat, and testing for diabetes. Some tests may be available at free or low-cost community health screenings, but if results are out of the normal range, you'll need to see a doctor to manage conditions with lifestyle changes or medication. More serious tests, such as a cardiac stress test done on a treadmill, usually are prescribed if coronary artery disease is suspected, to guard against severe exercise repercussions such as a heart attack.

- Be upfront with your doctor about the reason for your visit, explaining your weight gain as best you can — yo-yo dieting, stress, emotional eating, etc. If you can't account for the underlying cause, Youdim says, your physician may request additional tests for conditions such as low thyroid.

But don't expect your physician to outline a daily exercise routine or hand you a customized meal plan. Although some offer specifics, such as a list of heart-healthy foods, most probably will suggest a more generic route — change your diet and exercise regularly.

- When there's no end to the lose-gain-lose-gain rollercoaster, consider seeking more intensive help, such as at a comprehensive obesity center. "People come to a point," Stiles says, "where they say, 'I need to keep it off, and I need to know more about why I blow it when I blow it.' They need a program that's not only a nutritional plan but something that will help them with their triggers, so that they never have to do this again."

When you're not at your best, give it a rest

By Steven E. Levingston
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Man, did I feel lousy.

Coming down the stairs one frigid Monday morning recently, I was an unsteady, two-ton monster with a spike hammered into my skull. Gait, heavy. Head, foggy. I stood at the dining room window looking out at the yard. A light snow floated before my eyes, but its loveliness was lost on me. I was crushed under a late-season bug.

Bleary as I was, though, an inane question surfaced at the edge of my consciousness: What about my workouts?

I didn't have to be a virologist to know the gym was out for now. But for how long? Could I work out while sick, if I felt up to it? And when I was ready to sweat again without a fever, how hard could I push it? Getting into the gym or onto the road with good ol' rock music blasting in my ears takes me away from everything; I leave stress behind and obsess on the beat of Queen or the Traveling Wilburys and think only of my breathing, my heart rate and my survival.

But I'm no fanatic. I run about two to three miles two to three times a week, along with doing a couple of dozen push-ups at each session. That's it for this middle-aged hack. I just don't like breaking the pattern. I only feel worse for it, and then I have to build back up again.

So I began wondering, what do the experts say? What do the studies conclude about illness and fitness? Could exercising actually make me worse?

I was back at work within a day, but I was nursing a colleague-annoying cough. By week's end I had a relapse and slept most of Sunday. A nasty bug, it had attacked my son before me, throwing him under the covers for a day with a 104.5 fever.

During my active periods, I sought answers to my questions — and discovered they were far from clear-cut.

I shot off an e-mail to Todd Miller, an assistant professor of exercise science at George Washington University. Miller, who is a certified strength and conditioning specialist and a weightlifting coach, studies how muscles adapt to exercise. He replied that he wasn't aware of hard evidence behind any recommendations on working out after an illness. "I'm sure you can find people who will tell you what one should do ... but those opinions would be just that," he said.

Nothing but opinions? I found it hard to believe. How long have people been getting sick? How long

SUZANNE ALLARD LEVINGSTON/Washington Post

Personal trainer Mary Layne gives tips on exercising after an illness to Washington Post reporter Steven E. Levingston at Fitness First in Arlington, Va. Layne and other experts advise moderation and common sense.

have they been exercising? How many academics are out there looking for a study topic? Somebody had to have done a study. The American College of Sports Medicine pointed me to one — published 12 years ago.

The study, conducted by the School of Physical Education at Ball State University in Muncie, Ind., sought to determine whether exercising with a cold affects the severity and duration of the illness. The researchers claimed theirs was the first study to tackle the question.

They infected 50 student volunteers of moderate fitness ages 18 to 29 with a cold virus. All of the students came down with colds, and their symptoms, including runny nose, sneezing, sore throat, were measured over a 10-day period. During that time, 34 of the students exercised for 40 minutes every other day, while 16 in a non-exercise control group did nothing.

The study found that the students experienced no greater severity or duration of their symptoms whether they worked out or not.

In the same year, 1997, the Ball State team also looked at lung function among cold sufferers who work out. But few, if any, similar studies have followed, according to experts in the field. Despite the dearth of data, the American College of Sports Medicine, which published the Ball State investigations in its journal, distributes what it calls a "current comment" on exercise and the common cold. The comment offers recommendations from clinical authorities in immunology. Among the advice: If you have had a cold without a fever or body aches, intensive exercise can be safely undertaken a few days after the symptoms have disappeared; if you have had a fever, extreme tiredness, muscle aches or swollen lymph glands, you ought to wait two to four weeks before resuming intensive training.

The college also advises that mild to moderate exercise does not appear to be harmful while sick with a common cold, as long as the symptoms are minor.

Aaron Glatt, who specializes in infectious diseases and is a spokesman for the Infectious Disease Society of America, noted a possible reason for the paucity of studies on illness and fitness: It is difficult to assess exercisers with vague symptoms such as not feeling well. The opportunities to explore patients' reactions to and recovery from, say, hip replacement surgery are far greater, he said.

To advise ill exercisers, Glatt relies mostly on the wisdom of the ages. "Common sense is a great way to make medical decisions when you're not dealing with life-and-death situations," he said. "If a person feels well enough to do some exercise, it is probably a reasonable thing to do."

But Glatt, who is president and chief executive of New Island Hospital in Bethpage, N.Y., urges caution. As long as the exerciser has no serious issues such as pneumonia or a cardiac condition, a moderate workout should be fine, he said. But "if you're sick enough that you're going to faint, if you're lifting up your weights because you lift everyday weights and the weights are going to come down and kill you because you don't have the strength to lift them up, then that's not the day to break your own personal record. You don't need to do everything you did when you were perfectly healthy."

For those exercising with a low-grade fever, it is important to drink fluids. A fever turns up the body's thermostat, causing you to burn more calories and water. Glatt said you don't have to stay in bed, but, again, you have to use your head. "You want to make sure you are adequately hydrated and nutritionally sound," he said. "If a person has a queasy stomach and a fever and hasn't eaten for two days and expects to burn off a couple hundred calories with a rigorous regime, they're probably going to faint or they're going to feel weak or uncomfortable. Don't overdo it."

Glatt also urges people to exercise a little common courtesy: "If you have a cold and you're sneezing all over the equipment, sneeze over your own equipment: Go exercise in your house on your own bicycle or treadmill. Walk around the block rather than going to the health club."

My own bug moved on after a week, and I was ready to give the gym a shot. I called Mary Layne, a certified personal trainer and owner of LifeStages Fitness in Reston, Va., and asked if she would take me through her recovery regime.

We met at a gym where one of Layne's first questions was: Did I feel at least at 75 percent of my normal level of health? I did, so she aimed to put me through a workout approximating 75 percent of what I might do in full health. This meant a total body workout of the muscles (legs, arms, chest, back, abdominals) with less tension and fewer repetitions than I might do if I were feeling 100 percent.

Layne advised the same rule for running: If I'm feeling 75 percent well, then a run at 75 percent of my usual distance and endurance would be good for starters.

With the muscles, she went easy on me. "Because you're coming back from a sickness," Layne said, "this is what I do with you: a light workout just to say to the muscles, 'OK, we're back in business again.'"

The topic: breast cancer

Thinking ability may not be altered by preventive drug

THE QUESTION

Should women who take anastrozole (Arimidex) to deter the growth of cancer cells worry that the medication might affect their mental abilities?

THIS STUDY

It analyzed data on 227 post-menopausal women, considered at high risk for developing breast cancer, who had been randomly assigned to take anastrozole or a placebo daily. After two years, few women in either group had reported changes in memory or attention span, and standardized tests of cognitive functioning showed virtually no differences between those who did and did not take the drug. About 30 percent of the women taking anastrozole complained of frequent hot flashes, compared with 15 percent of those taking the placebo.

WHO MAY BE AFFECTED?

Post-menopausal women, for whom aromatase inhibitors such as anastrozole have shown, in some studies, success in preventing breast cancer occurrence and recurrence.

CAVEATS

Some of the data came from the women's analysis of their cognitive capabilities. The effect of long-term use of anastrozole on cognitive ability was not determined. One of six authors of the study was a consultant for AstraZeneca, which makes Arimidex.

FIND THIS STUDY

It's in the Sept. 2 online issue of the Lancet Oncology.

Cycle among the mountains

Times-News

The Sawtooth Cycle Challenge Inc. and the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society of Idaho announced a new bicycling event in Idaho to benefit people with blood cancers.

The Sawtooth Cycle Challenge, featuring Olympic gold medalist Kristin Armstrong, is a three-day event based in Sun Valley, Oct. 2-4.

Highlights of the weekend: a Friday pasta party dinner with Armstrong; a choice of four beautiful bike rides on Saturday — a 30-mile fun ride to the top of Galena summit, a metric road ride over Galena and back to Sun Valley, a century ride over Galena and back to Sun Valley and a 150-mile extreme ride from Idaho City to Sun Valley — a post-ride dinner party and dance; and a Sunday-morning recovery ride.

Surgeons should do warm-up exercises

AL SEIB/Los Angeles Times

A surgical instrument that is attached to a robotic arm. The arm represents the surgeon's hand.

By Shari Roan
Los Angeles Times

The increasing use of robotic and minimally invasive surgery means doctors today need to have superb manual dexterity and fine-motor skills. These operations involve inserting a tiny camera and instruments into small openings in the body to cut, remove or mend tissues. A new study suggests that surgeons may benefit from pre-operative warm-up exercises to prepare them for the cognitive and physical challenges ahead.

The study, from researchers at Arizona State University, found that 15 to 20 minutes of simple exercises leads to a substantial increase in the proficiency of surgical skills by raising alertness and protecting against fatigue. The study involved 46 surgeons who practiced a series of standardized exercises involving such things as hand movement, tool movement and cognitive skills. The surgeons were then tested by performing a difficult procedure in a simulation. The study is published in the Journal of the American College of Surgeons.

"Warm-up exercises are a 'common sense' practice in many high-stakes professions, such as professional sports or dance," said the lead author of the study, Kanav Kahol, in a news release. "This study begins to lay a scientific foundation for adopting this approach in routine surgical practice, which has become increasingly rigorous and demanding."

ELKO DAILY FREE PRESS

www.elkodaily.com

Advertising Sales Director

The Elko Daily Free Press is seeking a focused, creative Advertising Sales Director with an affinity for numbers and a passion for investing in account executives that employ a relentless curiosity in discovering and meeting real customer needs. Ad Director candidates should have a track record of successful sales supervisory experience in a fast-paced business.

We need someone who will spend a significant portion of each week outside the office, calling on both current customers and non-advertisers with our account executives. The Advertising Sales Director will work to systematically increase the number of active advertisers in the Elko Daily Free Press and the frequency with which they advertise with us.

If you prefer to invest your time coaching account executives in the regular practice of "needs-analysis" rather than in the creation of short-term, product-focused revenue "fixes", we want to talk to you.

The Advertising Sales Director will oversee seven retail/classified account executives, as well as several graphic artists and an experienced support staff. They will be a vital contributor to creating the online future of the newspaper and will be a collegial member of the management team charged with setting the course for future success.

The Elko Daily Free Press provides a meaningful work environment for our employees, rewards innovation and risk-taking, and offers opportunities for career development. In addition to the Elko Daily Free Press, the Advertising Sales Director will oversee sales into The Finder, Northern Nevada Real Estate, Mining Quarterly, a variety of other niche publications and our online newspaper www.elkodaily.com.

Elko is a vibrant northern Nevada gold-mining town located along Interstate 80, with an established gaming/hospitality industry, a strong community college and a thriving retail and manufacturing base. Elko has over 300 days of sunshine annually and is in close proximity to unlimited four-season recreational opportunities.

The Advertising Sales Director position offers a competitive salary, excellent benefits package, and career progression possibilities within Lee Enterprises. If interested in this excellent opportunity, please apply online at <http://www.elkodaily.com/workhere/>

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"The events in our lives happen in a sequence in time, but in their significance to ourselves they find their own order, ... the continuous thread of revelation."

—Eudora Welty

Put yourself in South's shoes in this deal from a team game. Your partner's intelligent call of five hearts suggested good hearts and clubs, but no controls in the unbid suits. Your excellent spade and diamond values allowed you to bid the heart slam. But how do you plan to make the contract after West leads a trump?

One declarer drew trumps, cashed the top clubs, and when they failed to break 3-3, led a spade back to his king and West's ace. West now cashed the spade queen. South felt he had done his best by combining his chances in the black suits. However, at the score-up, he discovered he had lost a slam swing. Can you see why?

The declarer at the other table spotted an extra chance — namely, that the Q-J-x of diamonds would fall in three rounds. After drawing trumps, he cashed the A-K of diamonds, then crossed to dummy with a club to ruff the diamond seven. As you can see, dummy's diamond 10 was established for the 12th trick.

Of course, if the diamond play had failed, the second declarer would have tested the clubs, and only when they failed to break would he have led up to the spade king.

Plays of this sort are sometimes called echelon plays. If you can, you want to exploit all of your chances in order before falling back on the play that will commit you to success or failure.

ANSWER: In auctions of this sort, there is no clear-cut reason to despair; your spades appear to be lying well enough, and your partner's heart honors are over dummy. So simply lead a diamond (your long suit). Even if partner is not stacked in the suit, you may still be able to establish your long card.

Girl wants to turn sympathy for disabled into action

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I am a 13-year-old girl, soon to graduate from elementary school. Please don't judge me by my age because I have an important question.

Recently, I picked up the newspaper, glanced at the front page and an article caught my eye. It was about a disabled man who had been kidnapped and taken to an apartment where he was beaten. It was one of the most disgusting things I have ever read.

Not long after that, I saw another article. This time it was about a mentally challenged man who was lured from his bus stop to a deserted street, then beaten and robbed. Knowing these things happen makes me sad, angry and turns my stomach.

I want to do something to help stop these acts of violence, but I don't know what. Joining a group or donating doesn't seem to be enough. I would like to help the disabled directly. Do you have any ideas?

- CARES DEEPLY IN ONTARIO, CANADA

DEAR CARES DEEPLY: You are a sensitive, right-minded young lady, and for that I commend you. I do have some ideas you might find interesting. You could:

- 1. Collect gently used children's clothing and donate the garments to a homeless shelter.

2. Volunteer some time each month to befriend a developmentally disabled child. The special education department at your school might be able to help you with this.

3. Collect signatures for a petition to increase the penalties for those who commit crimes against mentally ill and homeless people. Talk about your feelings at school and at your place of worship and see if friends would be interested in joining you in your efforts. Remember, one small spark can start a prairie fire.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 31-year-old man. I have been seeing a wonderful woman for about seven months, and it's starting to get serious. I need advice, though, on how much we should tell each other about our sexual histories.

Seven years ago, the end of a romantic relationship sent me into a deep depression. I spiraled downward for a long time, during which I engaged the services of prostitutes. Finally, with the help of my family and a therapist, I was able to take medication and recover from the depression. I was later tested for STDs and was lucky not to have contracted any.

I am not implying that I'm not responsible for what I did at the time. I'm ashamed of the situations in which I placed myself. Abby, should I tell my girlfriend about this at some point as our relationship progresses, possibly toward marriage? If so, how much detail should I give her? I don't want to start a life with her based on lies.

- WANTS TO MAKE PEACE WITH THE PAST IN WISCONSIN

DEAR WANTS TO MAKE PEACE: Let me ask you this - how much detail do you want HER to give YOU? From my perspective, if you are considering marrying this woman, it is more important for her to know about your history of depression than that you turned to "professionals" for more than advice. You are STD-free and are no longer interested in pay-as-you-go flings.

If you are asked to name names - which I doubt you will be - tell the lady that there have been episodes in your life that you "are not proud of." If that's not enough information for her, then tell her the truth and let her deal with it.

IF APRIL 27 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY:

You like to be known as trustworthy and true blue, so don't worry because you will have plenty of opportunities to prove your merit in the coming year. Settle down to a pleasurable groove over the next several months. You may have fallen under the spell of an attractive person or become dazzled by a daring dream recently. The lights are green right now to pursue these matters. In July you can again successfully launch crucial projects, make a commitment, ask for favors or improve your life on several levels. Remember that whatever knocks on your door in July might not be what you want, but it will surely be exactly what you need.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Strike a happy balance. You're ready-for-action attitude makes you a shining example in executive circles. But too much aggression can be a detractor in social situations where gentle persuasion is needed.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Cull the herd. You should cut expenses that are a drain on your piggy bank just as you would remove critters that won't be profitable on a dairy farm. Make a wise appraisal of the domestic budget.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): No one is an island. You don't need to build bridges

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine Saunders

while others are eager to create a think tank and churn out valuable advice and answers. This is a good time to pool mental resources with others.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Play fair. You can take the high road or take the low road, but you'll beat the competition if you are honest and aboveboard. Seek valuable business advice that will keep you on the right track.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Eat humble pie. Someone may forget what you say or do, but never forget how you make them feel. Although it is admirable to come out on top, try to be generous and ask for forgiveness if you show off.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Honk if you are fond of driving down the information highway. Spend more time gathering knowledge so that you will be well prepared when you need the answers or if you run into a roadblock.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Woolgathering could be productive. If you hang around with the black sheep of your neighborhood, you will end up with the nursery rhyme quota of three bags full. A troublesome friendship can be useful.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Whet your appetite for competitive activities. A part of you prefers to sit there counting beans, but you will do much better in the long run if you contend with others on a well-run playing field.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be a good sport. Team up with others to handle routine tasks or invite a friend along on what might otherwise be a boring errand. Share your knowledge and mix fun in with business projects.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't beat around the bush. A "my way or the highway" outlook might actually solve a problem. There are times when being frank and earnest when defending your rights clears up misunderstanding.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Gather opinions from trusted companions before acting. Your current state of indecision may be a blessing in disguise. Delay decision-making or financial expenditures until all the facts are in hand.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Roll with the punches. You can handle a brief spate of turmoil or an upsetting situation with tolerance and diplomacy. Strive to be fair and open minded when faced with perverse people.

Today is Monday, April 27, the 117th day of 2009.

There are 248 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

Five hundred years ago, on April 27, 1509, Pope Julius II placed the Republic of Venice under an interdict following its refusal to give up lands claimed by the Papal States. (The pope lifted the sanction the following year.)

On this date:

In 1521, Portuguese explorer Ferdinand Magellan was killed by natives in the Philippines.

In 1570, Pope Pius V excommunicated Queen Elizabeth I.

In 1805, during the First Barbary War, an U.S.-led force of Marines and mercenaries captured the city of Derna, on the shores of Tripoli, Libya.

In 1822, the 18th president of the United States, Ulysses S. Grant, was born in Point Pleasant, Ohio.

In 1865, the steamer Sultana exploded on the Mississippi River near Memphis, Tenn., killing more than 1,400 people, mostly freed Union prisoners of war.

TODAY IN HISTORY

In 1932, American poet Hart Crane, 32, drowned after jumping from a steamer into the Gulf of Mexico while en route to New York.

In 1965, broadcast journalist Edward R. Murrow died in Pawling, N.Y., two days after turning 57.

In 1967, Expo '67 was officially opened in Montreal by Canadian Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson.

In 1973, acting FBI Director L. Patrick Gray resigned after it was revealed that he had handed over bureau files on the Watergate burglary to the Nixon White House.

In 1978, convicted Watergate defendant John D. Ehrlichman was released from an Arizona prison after serving 18 months. Fifty-one construction workers plunged to their deaths when a scaffold inside a cooling tower at the Pleasants Power Station site in West Virginia fell 168 feet to the ground.

Ten years ago: A week after the Columbine High School massacre, President Bill Clinton called for new gun control measures, saying, "People's lives are at stake here." Jazz trumpeter Al Hirt died in New Orleans at 76.

Five years ago: Iraqi police moved into the streets of the besieged city of Fallujah following hours of pounding by U.S. warplanes and artillery on Sunni insurgents. A ruptured pipeline began spilling 123,774 gallons of diesel fuel into Suisun Bay, east of San Francisco. Republican Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania beat back a tough primary threat, barely defeating conservative Congressman Pat Toomey.

One year ago: Afghan President Hamid Karzai escaped an attempt on his life during a ceremony in Kabul marking Afghanistan's victory over Soviet occupation in the 1980s; three other people were killed in the shooting. Ashley Force, 25, became the first woman to win a national Funny Car race. She beat her father, drag-racing icon John Force, in the final round of the 28th annual Summit Racing Equipment Southern Nationals in Commerce, Ga.
