Police: vulnerable patient abused by sex offender

St. Luke's Canyon View slow to report alleged assault to police

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

A patient at St. Luke's Canyon View Behavioral Health Services claimed she was sexually abused in January by a registered sex offender staying at the Twin Falls facility, in a case that police say was not reported for six days after Canyon View officials learned of it, according to 5th District Court records.

Registered sex offender David Aaron Knutsen, 28, of Filer, was indicted March 25 on four counts of sexual abuse of a vulnerable adult for acts allegedly committed Jan. 30. Court records show the alleged victim was a 21-year-old female patient at Canyon View.

He was supposed to enter a plea earlier this week, but that was postponed until June 22.

Knutsen and the developmentally delayed woman were allegedly left together at the facility without staff supervision when the sexual abuse occurred, according to court records.

"I also relayed the concern that I had that the Canyon View staff knew that (victim) is a vulnerable adult from the minute she was admitted and it is noted in her chart," police said in a Feb. 5 report filed with the court. "They also had knowledge that Mr. Knutsen is a sex offender. Apparently, their only mediation in regards to keeping (her) and Mr. Knutsen from having contact with one another was to check on them every 15 minutes."

Officials with the hospital declined comment Thursday, but St. Luke's Magic Valley spokeswoman Jody Tremblay said they may offer a release today.

Idaho Department of Health and Welfare authorities on Thursday would not say if they knew about the allegations involving Canyon View. Spokeswoman Emily Simmitt cited patient confidentiality and the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act.

BLM firefighters train for fire season

By Nichole Carnell

Conditions are tough for the men and women who spend their summers fighting fires in Idaho.

To ensure safety for themselves and their fellow crew members, the U.S. Bureau of Land Management tests every firefighter before the season begins in what is known as the "pack test."

fighters are required to take the annual physical test to gauge their fitness and endurance levels, and prepare for the rough conditions they're sure to face throughout the fire season.

For the first time, all firefighters took the yearly test at the same time on the College of Southern Idaho campus Thursday afternoon in what was deemed the "Pack Test Fest."

More than 100 men and women of all ages, from graduating high school seniors who have never taken the test to career firefighters, lined the CSI sidewalks for testing. The test was given in three heats ranging from 30 to 40 people each heat.

In order to pass, every firefighter must walk three miles in at least 45 minutes with a 45-pound pack strapped to their back. The pack has a similar weight to the equipment firefighters must carry for fires.

Obama says health care reform a must this year — or never

By Philip Elliott
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — President Obama warned Thursday that if Congress doesn't deliver health care legislation by the end of the year the opportunity will be lost, a plea to political supporters to pressure lawmakers to act.

"If we don't get it done this year, we're not going to get it done," Obama

"The election in November, it didn't bring about change. It gave us an opportunity for change."

Obama's political organization, Organizing for America, invited campaign volunteers to a midday conference call to describe a June 6 kickoff for

Water managers, others tour Hagerman area

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

TUTTLE — When it comes to declining spring levels, Bill Hazen said, the problem is there isn't any one person to blame.

"Probably the best thing to do if we're going to point fingers is everybody needs to be standing in front of a mirror," Hazen told a group of roughly 50 canal managers, state legislators and other people involved in water issues on Thursday morning.

Hazen, a retired

University of Idaho Extension agent, was speaking in his role as a member of the Idaho Water Alliance. His audience was about to embark on a daylong tour meant to help them understand more about the problems faced by water users on the Eastern Snake Plain Aquifer — including spring levels between Hagerman and Twin Falls that have declined for the past 50 years.

They saw a variety of projects — developed both in response to court orders and by people acting on their own — aimed at cleaning up "tail water" from ditches and canals and allowing more spring water to eventually make morning.

Twin Falls rolls back City Park fees

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

The Twin Falls City Council voted last month to roll back rental fees at City Park. Councilmen said Thursday they were concerned that event organizers couldn't cover the new costs or if the fees were sound policy.

The April 27 vote maintains most fees that were passed by a 5-2 council vote last October. But it erased new City Park fees — the largest source for new revenue for parks maintenance. Instead of $600 for a full-day rental and $300 for a half-day, the council restored previous rates: no rental fee and only $50 a day, plus utilities, for the band shell.

"We just need to vet this out a little more," said Councilman Don Hall. "I know we have to raise fees sometimes but I keep going back to how these are city parks and they're funded by taxpayers ... and then we're charging taxpayers to use them again. That just doesn't add up."

The decision came at the end of a regularly-scheduled meeting but wasn't that a counselor with Canyon View allegedly told police six days after the incident that she couldn't locate the victim's mother or guardian. Police assert the counselor told them "the staff was not familiar with the requirements under Idaho code but they were going to have a rules change and employee training in the matter due to this incident and after consultation with their attorneys."

Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loeb said earlier this week that Knutsen was allowed to be around adults, but wouldn't comment about the case. "He can be with adults in many different settings and not violate probation."

Twin Falls police are concerned, though, that the hospital allegedly took six days to report the allegations. "I was concerned about the failure to report this incident," an officer wrote in his report filed to the court.

Twin Falls Police Capt. Matt Hicks added on Thursday, "The investigation has not revealed that there are any other victims."

The female patient allegedly told Canyon View staff that Knutsen led her to an area outside camera surveillance to molest her, according to court records. "(The victim) indicates to the staff that Mr. Knutsen walked her to the corner near the coffee maker by an inside door where the camera could not see."

Police say the female patient was depressed, not eating and suicidal in the days after Knutsen allegedly abused her, before the hospital alerted law enforcement, according to court records. "(The victim) was fearful that Mr. Knutsen would be readmitted to Canyon View and would have access to her again."

Then, Knutsen called Canyon View on at least three days in January to talk after he was released, with some of the calls happening before police were alerted. "Ultimately, the staff took control of the phone calls and advised Mr. Knutsen that he was not allowed to call any further."

Knutsen, a probationer receiving sex offender treatment at the time of the alleged crime, was convicted of a 1999 lewd conduct

"It is not surprising that Mr. Knutsen has offended again. We do not think that Mr. Knutsen has been serious in pursuing treatment."

crime against a 7-year-old family member, according to court records.

Knutsen was removed from his sex offender treatment program on Feb. 18, according to a letter filed in court from Gary Horton, psychologist with Behavioral Reform Inc.

"It is not surprising that Mr. Knutsen has offended again," Horton said in the letter. "We do not think that Mr. Knutsen has been serious in pursuing treatment."

Horton said in his letter that the state's Sex Offender Classification Board should have designated Knutsen as a violent sexual predator. "This designation may have prevented the addition of another victim to the rolls. At the very least, it could have provided more saturated supervision in the community and have caught the attention of mental health personnel which may have prevented the unfortunate situation in which the victim found herself."

Knutsen is now lodged at the Twin Falls County Jail on $500,000 bond.

The victim was arrested May 18 for two counts of misdemeanor battery against family members, who allegedly tried to stop her from cutting herself with a broken glass.

She only went to jail, though, because police couldn't find her a secure bed in a mental health facility, according to Minidoka County 5th District Court records.

"After they exhausted all possible ways of getting her into an appropriate facility, I placed her under arrest," according to the court record, which also says a recent medication change "may have contributed to her behavior."

Tests

According to a recent study, more than 50 percent of firefighting accidents or fatalities have been linked to a lack of physical fitness, said spokeswoman Sky Buffat. "This test tells us that they are physically capable of dealing with everything firefighting will exert of them."

Firefighters rarely fail the test, but when they do they are given a second chance, said Buffat. Most firefighters seemed to have no problem with the test.

"This situation is different because you have a lot more going on at a fire," said seven-year veteran Samantha German. "Usually we are on a lot more difficult terrain with different gear, but this gives everyone a good idea of where they are physically."

First-year firefighter Elizabeth Gamera said the test wasn't anything more than she had expected.

Firefighters are also required to train before and during the fire season. Physical training is incorporated throughout the season, but intensive skills training sessions are held before the fire season is in full swing.

Area BLM firefighters were briefed this week in safety regulations and leadership expectations. First-year firefighters will train next week at the Methodist Camp in the Sawtooth Mountain area to learn basic fire suppression tactics and safety procedure. All other upper-level firefighters must train in specialties that include additional safety procedures, chain saw operation, water use, engine operation and other skills.

"This week we have been making sure our engines are up-to-date and making sure our equipment is up to standards. Just a lot of maintenance and safety," said Shoshone engine captain Grant Hanchey. "I think we are going to have a safe season and with appropriate training we will be helpful to our district."

The firefighters will continue training for the next three weeks before being placed at their guard stations. Although firefighters will not be stationed until mid-June, according to Buffat, they are prepared to fight wildfires right now.

Fees

placed on the agenda. The city didn't issue a public announcement, and city officials said they informed the groups likely affected. The council also made a subcommittee to study the issue more.

Councilmen said Thursday the decision had less to do with the economic downturn and rested more on whether organizers of the dozen or so special events held at the park could even pay the new fees.

Among the events that were a concern was Western Days, which hadn't paid its security bill from last year and originally was cancelled for this year due to a lack of funds.

The city planned on about $10,000 of new revenue from the fees but instead will see just $3,000 to $4,000, according to last year's estimates. Other fees such as rental fees for other city parks or reserving tennis courts remain intact.

Parks and Recreation Director Dennis Bowyer said last year the money was needed to offset rising costs. City Manager Tom Courtney said Thursday that since the new revenue wasn't included in this year's budget, the lack of funding will be minimal.

Councilman David E. Johnson commended the city's parks and recreation commission for drafting the fees but said the city doesn't want to lose out on popular events such as Western Days.

"It's just a temporary rollback until we know what we're doing," he said.

Johnson and Hall, who sits on the committee of the Hispanic Heritage Fiesta, both said that event held in August was considering going elsewhere.

Meanwhile, councilmen said it's unclear how often the city should require groups to pay for security provided by police. Last year, the council decided to have groups pay for police working the events but Hall said it's not clearly defined.

"If it's an organized special event in the park, then it would make sense to have the event pay for that (police) security," he said, noting the police analyze how many officers are needed.

Johnson, however, disagrees.

"I'm a little concerned being a conservative of sorts that you require someone to use your services and that you charge them to use your services," he said. "Sounds a little unfair."

The Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce puts on just one event at the park — its Hot August Nite — but works with others. President and CEO Shawn Barigar said his group still supports higher fees to maintain parks.

"I have not heard any complaints," he said. "No one's complained to me."

Water

its way to the Snake River. And before embarking on their tour, they heard updates from a variety of state scientists about the behavior of the springs and a project to track how groundwater flows through Malad Gorge State Park.

Some factors draining the springs are easy to think of — the move away from flood irrigation, for example, or the effects of groundwater pumping that have prompted several water delivery calls over the years.

But, pointing to records from the 1900s and before kept by the U.S. Geological Survey, Hazen argued that a greater problem seems to exist.

USGS hydrologist Greg Clark said some springs monitored by his agency have seen a slight rebound in the past couple years, but still face a downward trend. It's still hard to tell what path the water that feeds them takes through the ground, he said.

"If you put a drop of water here, where does it end up?" he asked.

That's something Neal Farmer with the Idaho Department of Water Resources hopes to answer. Perched by the edge of Malad Gorge, he filled the crowd in on a study using fluorescent dye to trace where water flowing past a well at the park comes out of the gorge wall.

While the dye has been used in connection with at least one aquifer-recharge project, he said, his study is the first general one in the lower ESPA, he said.

It, and the many similar studies Farmer would like to conduct, could hold great value for scientists and even the state's agricultural industry. Steve Hines, an ag economist with the University of Idaho's Extension Office and president of the water alliance, used figures derived by Hazen and others in 2002 to demonstrate the harm water shortages can do to the Magic Valley. Taking 40 farm acres out of production may cut one job somewhere in the region, he said; 300 acres will directly cut one agricultural job.

Ideally, Hazen said, various agencies and user groups will collaborate to come up with long-term ways to heal the springs, possibly complementing a plan to repair the aquifer formally adopted this spring by the Idaho Legislature.

"It's going to be imperative for our economy ... that we figure this out," Hines said.

Cassia sheriff looking for cabin burglars

The Cassia County Sheriff's Office is looking for information that leads to the arrest of the person or people responsible for breaking into two cabins south of Oakley.

Both cabins were heavily burglarized. The first incident occurred on May 7. The second occurred on May 11.

A cash reward of $1,000 is offered from the owners, plus an additional $1,000 reward from Crime Stoppers.

T.F. asks residents to control weeds

Twin Falls city residents who don't control the growth of weeds on their property will be subject to warnings and fines, city officials announced Thursday.

Initially, city staff will issue a warning to property owners or renters if a property is out of regulation, and set a date for compliance. If the weed problem persists beyond that time, the occupant could receive fines of up to $300.

Owners or occupants are responsible for weeds growing from the middle of the street in front of their properties to the middle of the alley, in addition to driveways. The city also has the authority to cut and remove weeds and assign the cost of removal to the owner's property taxes.

If you are troubled by uncontrolled weeds on a neighboring property or undeveloped subdivision, call City Code Officer Sean Standley, 735-7278 or City Sanitation Supervisor Sherry Jeff, 735-7264.

Minidoka Ranger District starts burn today

Idaho Power ordered to sell Green Tags

Reversing an earlier decision, the Idaho Public Utilities Commission last week ordered Idaho Power Co. to sell its 2007 and 2008 Green Tags and use the proceeds — between $1.6 million and $1.9 million — to benefit ratepayers.

The tags are issued to utilities for every megawatt-hour of electricity generated by an eligible renewable energy resource, including Idaho Power's Elkhorn wind project in Oregon and Raft River geothermal project.

The electric utility had asked to retire or "bank" the tags in case federal or state legislation is passed requiring utilities to generate a certain amount of energy from such sources. But a group of industrial customers asked the PUC to reconsider its initial approval, and the commission decided selling the tags would be best.

Historic park opens in warehouse district

By Nichole Carnell
Times-News writer

Preservation Twin Falls, a nonprofit group committed to the education and preservation of Twin Falls historical sites, opened its first project Thursday in the Warehouse Historic District.

The historical park, which has yet to be named by the group's three members — Tom Gilbertson, Russ Tremayne and Paul Smith — has been an ongoing project for the past couple years.

On Wednesday morning, the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce Beautification Committee presented a $10,000 check to Preservation Twin Falls to go toward efforts in restoring and creating the site located in front of the silos in the Warehouse Historic District.

"This is a worthwhile project that is helping to preserve the quality of life in the community," said Shawn Barigar, Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce president.

The space was purchased by Preservation Twin Falls for $10, but a great deal more time and money have gone into the project, said Gilbertson.

The group has been dependent on contributions from various area donors and volunteers. "This is not an easy project and it takes a lot of people, otherwise it doesn't work," said Gilbertson.

Preservation Twin Falls was born out of this park project and Tremayne is enthusiastic about the future of the site and other projects.

"We just now have the skeleton of the park. We have other plans," said Tremayne.

Preservation Twin Falls members hope the park will evolve to an interpretative center focusing on the history that surrounds the area.

A gay rights group in Twin Falls announced this week it plans to hold a pride week beginning June 22.

The Southern Idaho Gay Lesbian Bisexual and Transgender Community Center said it will host its first pride week with a theme of "Building Bridges" in an effort to work with the community.

"We think it's time," said spokeswoman Nicki Abraham.

Similar events are held in Salt Lake City and Boise.

Activities include a legislative breakfast, a screening of the film "The Fall of '55," a barbecue, a candlelight vigil and a reception at Pandora's.

Abraham said the group understands the political and social climate of the Magic Valley but wants to have a positive impact and work with the community.

"We're aware we live in a conservative area, of course, but we're going to keep being as positive as we can," she said.

"We're here to contribute."

The group decided not to enter a float in this year's Western Days parade because it's investing its time and resources into the pride week. Two years ago, the group was denied entry and last year was prohibited from displaying its name during the parade.

Instead, this year the group volunteered to help clean up City Park.

"We want to lend a helping hand," Abraham said.

Twin Falls principals voice concerns over math training

By Nichole Carnell
Times-News writer

Principals from two Twin Falls elementary schools voiced their concerns about the availability of training resources for a new statewide math initiative at Wednesday evening's school board meeting.

Chris Gillette of Harrison Elementary School and Bill Brulotte of I.B. Perrine Elementary School presented to the board the challenges associated with training accessibility for the recently adopted Idaho Math Initiative. The goal of IMI is to train teachers in a new teaching style of math skills that incorporates group work and multiple methods of problem solving.

Brulotte described this new style as completely different from the "kill and drill" that teachers have utilized in the past.

According to the Idaho State Department of Education, all elementary teachers, secondary math teachers and administrators are required to complete three credits of mathematics professional development by 2015 in order to receive recertification.

No teachers from Harrison Elementary have been accepted into these training courses, while all but two at Perrine have taken or been accepted into the required courses. Both principals suggested that the board contact the state Department of Education to voice their concerns about course availability and teacher selection.

Additionally, Twin Falls Superintendent Wiley Dobbs announced that estimates from preliminary data on the Idaho Standards Achievement Tests, which will be verified in July, are "pretty good numbers."

Scores indicate that a number of grades and schools have increased in proficiency in all areas.

In other business, the board approved the purchase of exercise equipment for the new Canyon Ridge High School.

Thirty-six items were purchased from three different vendors for a total of $51,785. The items include cardiovascular equipment, dumbbells, yoga mats and various weight training machines.

Health care

Washington would drag its feet and nothing would change.

"The election in November, it didn't bring about change. It gave us an opportunity for change," Obama said.

The presidential plea came as lawmakers prepare for an aggressive schedule of work aimed at producing comprehensive health care overhaul bills in the House and Senate by August.

Committee hearings — and soon thereafter votes — will start next week, as soon as lawmakers return to Washington from a weeklong recess. Many members of Congress spent the break holding town hall meetings and other forums with their constituents about health care, even as opponents and supporters of Obama's plans ramped up television and radio ads for and against.

"I think the status quo is unacceptable and that we've got to get it done this year," Obama repeated, but ginning up his supporters for a door-to-door and phone-to-phone canvass similar to his presidential campaign.

Obama's top aides, including former campaign manager David Plouffe, told the supporters that they have a challenge ahead of them.

"If the country stands with the president and if the country is demanding health care reform than we'll get it done; Washington will not have any option but to follow us," Plouffe said on the call, which was not announced on the White House's official schedule.

The president's conversation with his supporters was part pep talk and part a nod to political reality. Obama is looking to use his network of supporters to deliver a campaign promise, and if he seeks a second term in 2012 — an almost certainty — he hopes to keep many of those volunteers engaged in person and online.

The president said the costs of the nation's $2.5 trillion health care system are crushing families and businesses and pose the largest threat to the economy.

The White House is leaving it to lawmakers to work out the details of a health care plan, but Obama has said it should ensure choice and lower costs, while extending coverage to the 50 million Americans now uninsured. The cost of accomplishing that has been estimated around $1.5 trillion, and figuring out how to pay is emerging as a major challenge for Congress and the White House.

The Republican National Committee said Obama's approach was not the right path, arguing that Democrats are pushing for a government-run health care system that will take away individual choice.

Lincoln Co. turns to Jaquet for memorial aid

By John Plestina
Times-News correspondent

SHOSHONE — The proposed Lincoln County Veterans Memorial came a step closer to placement on the courthouse lawn when county commissioners agreed Tuesday to seek state funding from Rep. Wendy Jaquet, D-Ketchum.

Commission Chairman Jerry Nance called Jaquet when Dan Larson, chairman of the Lincoln County Veterans Project and post commander of Little Wood Veterans of Foreign Wars in Shoshone, asked the commission for financial support for the project.

Encircled by the flags of the five services, the memorial near the courthouse entrance on North B Street would include a circular concrete area and a marble veneer stone with a depiction of the Vietnam

Veterans Memorial in Washington D.C., commonly known as "The Wall."

When Jaquet meets with the commission June 8, the board will make a formal request for her to sponsor legislation for state funding for the project.

"I grew up in Dietrich and all of my roots are here (in Lincoln County)," said Larson, who said he served two tours of duty in Vietnam. "There were several kids I grew up with here in Lincoln County that didn't come home from Vietnam."

Larson is seeking donations from the county, the city councils of Shoshone, Dietrich and Richfield, veterans' organizations, businesses and individuals in his quest to raise about $20,000 needed for the project. He is also seeking donations of materials and labor.

"Maybe we can challenge the cities," Nance said.

While construction and completion of the memorial could take a year or more, Larson said completion could come as early as this year if all funding is secured quickly.

In other business, the county's extension educator, Christi Falen, asked the commission for guidance with the budget for the new community center at the county fairgrounds in Shoshone. She said she was uncertain about utilities and other operating expenses.

Falen said she has a monthly income figure of $625 based on an average derived from $1,250 in rental income earned during April and May.

The community center is likely to be a separate line item in the budget for the next fiscal year.

Aviator hopes military gay ban will end soon enough to save career

By Jessie L. Bonner
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Barack Obama's campaign promise to scrap the military's "don't ask, don't tell" policy gave Lt. Col. Victor Fehrenbach hope. Now the aviator is wondering if the president will deliver in time to save his 18-year Air Force career.

The winner of nine air medals for distinguished service in flight, including one for heroism the night U.S. forces captured Baghdad International Airport in 2003, Fehrenbach is in the process of getting kicked out of the military a year after an acquaintance told his bosses he was gay.

He thought he could hang on until the government eliminated the military's policy forcing gays and lesbians to keep their sexual orientation secret, but now he isn't so sure.

Obama "was someone who had experienced discrimination firsthand and that's why I had a lot of faith," Fehrenbach said. "I thought, OK I can fight this, and maybe by January Obama could be inaugurated and this won't matter."

"That hasn't happened." The Servicemembers Legal Defense Network, an advocacy group seeking equal treatment of gays in the military, estimates that more than 200 service members have been discharged under "don't ask, don't tell" since Obama was sworn into office.

The White House insists officials are working to overturn the policy, but when that will happen is unclear. The reassurances mean little to Fehrenbach, who has flown on missions in Afghanistan and Iraq and is about to lose the only way of life he's ever known just two years before he would be eligible to retire.

Fehrenbach, 39, is the son of Air Force veterans — his father was a lieutenant colonel who died when he was 9 and his mother is a former military nurse who lives in Ohio. Last week he told his relatives he is gay, was being discharged from the Air Force and was going on national television to talk about it.

"Now, I'm not hiding anything," said Fehrenbach, who has appeared on Rachel Maddow's MSNBC's talk show and remains on active duty at the Mountain Home Air Force Base. "For 18 years, I played by the rules and I kept my private life private."

Most of the estimated 13,000 service members discharged under "don't ask, don't tell" since the law was enacted in 1993 have opted to leave quietly and close the final chapter of their military careers in private.

Groups calling for the repeal of the ban, however, say Fehrenbach is among a growing number who are going public with a newfound sense of urgency.

In September, Fehrenbach had decided to accept an honorable discharge and waive his right to a military hearing, where he would have to lie about being gay in order to stay in the Air Force. He refused.

"I just wanted this to go away, I didn't tell anyone, I didn't want anyone to know," Fehrenbach said.

He quickly changed his mind and with encouragement from five close friends, one a fellow service member, he rescinded the waiver and tried to stall the hearing that would determine his military fate.

The military hearing was delayed until April, when Fehrenbach was told he had been recommended for an honorable discharge. The process could take about five months to complete because of his record and rank, he said; he doesn't know whether he'll be able to stay in the Air Force if "don't ask, don't tell" is repealed before then.

Lt. Col. Victor Fehrenbach, a pilot with the U.S. Air Force 389th Fighter Squadron, walks through a downtown plaza Tuesday in Boise. After 18-years of active duty in the USAF, Fehrenbach is being discharged because of his sexual orientation in accordance with the military's 'don't ask, don't tell' policy.

"I will fight this in uniform and I'll fight it without," Fehrenbach said. "I swore an oath to defend and support the Constitution, I'm going to speak out and fight this until the law is repealed because it is not constitutional."

He said "don't ask, don't tell" denies American service members their constitutional right to privacy, due process and equal protection, and forces them to lie about who they are when honesty is part of the code they serve under.

The Servicemembers Legal Defense Network, which is representing Fehrenbach while he explores his legal options, wants Obama to begin working with Congress to repeal the law.

"He said he was going to fix it," said Aubrey Sarvis, the group's executive director. "We need a plan and a timeline from the White House on how we're going to get this done?"

A bill that would allow gays to serve openly has been introduced in Congress.

Obama's top advisers want the president to move more slowly in overturning the policy than many gay-rights activists would like, citing other priorities including the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. "We have a lot on our plate right now," retired Marine Gen. James Jones, the White House's national security adviser, said this month.

Nez Perce Tribe pulling out of bighorn work group

LEWISTON (AP) — The Nez Perce Tribe is pulling out of Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter's collaborative bighorn sheep panel because legislation passed by Idaho lawmakers undermines the process, the tribe's chairman says.

Samuel N. Penney said the legislation ends any collaborative effort and the tribe will no longer take part in the Idaho Bighorn/Domestic Sheep Working Group.

The goal of the group — made up of state officials, sheep ranchers, sportsmen and environmental organizations — had been to protect the sheep ranching industry while seeking a way for bighorn sheep to avoid contacting domestic sheep, which have been blamed for spreading deadly diseases to bighorns.

But Republican state Sen. Jeff Siddoway, a sheep rancher from Terreton, introduced a series of bills during the last legislative session aimed at protecting sheep producers.

Otter signed into law a bill to require the Idaho Department of Fish and Game to work with producers to develop a plan to keep bighorns away from domestic sheep while preserving domestic sheep grazing on federal land.

The law requires the plan and methods to be completed by Aug. 6. It also calls for Fish and Game to certify as acceptable any risk of disease transfer to bighorns remaining after the plan is put in place.

"We appreciated Gov. Otter's efforts to convene the Idaho Collaborative," Penney told the Lewiston Tribune. "But we are frustrated that Sen. Siddoway's legislation has undermined the governor's effort by legislating a political fix instead of allowing the collaborative process an opportunity to work."

Otter spokesman Jon Hanian did not immediately return a call from The Associated Press on Thursday.

Grazing on federal land is not controlled by the state, but bighorn sheep are managed by the state.

Some plans put forward by members of the working group called for killing bighorns that entered domestic grazing areas.

The passing of the law also led, last week, to the working group's meetings being called off to give the state time to come up with the plan required by the law.

"We felt the collaboration had come to a standstill," said Brooklyn Baptiste, vice chairman of the tribe's executive committee.

“The ... invasion scheme by the U.S. and South Korea ... has exceeded the alarming level.”
 – North Korea’s Rodong Sinmun newspaper, in a commentary carried by the official Korean Central News Agency

EDITORIAL

Idaho’s royal road to crowded, potholed streets

It’s nice to win the Lottery, but you’d better not plan the family budget around it. Same with the city of Twin Falls — along with dozens of other local governments across Idaho — and the local-option tax.

Local-option taxes allow communities to tax goods or services and keep the revenue — if voters approve. But the Republican leadership of Idaho House of Representatives won’t touch it, unless it’s part of a constitutional amendment. And a constitutional amendment will never get through the Senate Local Government and Taxation Committee as long as Rexburg Republican Brent Hill is its chairman.

Trouble is, Twin Falls developed its newly minted Capital Improvement Plan in part with the expectation that one day it would have some local-option tax revenue to help pay for roads.

So those projects will have to be handled in the time-honored way Idaho municipalities have coped with a Legislature afraid of local control: delay, scrimp and make do.

That worked fine when growth was limited, but Twin Falls is a growing crossroads town whose transportation infrastructure is already stressed. And with the opening of the Highway 30/93 Bypass in a couple of years, more traffic is headed our way — a lot more.

One of the few alternatives to a local-option tax is the impact fee, which Twin Falls adopted recently. Impact fees — for parks, streets, police and fire — require builders to pay some of the cost of growth and can cover some of the Capital Improvement Plan.

In February the City Council agreed to implement the fees, starting in August. But the city exempted that revenue from going to street upgrades. That likely will have to change.

Even so, the council — and its impact fee advisory committee — will be wary of more impact fees in a moribund real estate market.

The only consolation is that legislators — who spent 118 days in Boise this year without even considering ways for local governments to pay for growth — will have to drive on the same congested, potholed streets as the rest of us.

Our view: Idaho’s cities can’t adequately cope with growth because the Legislature won’t give them the one tool they need to handle it.

Recovery may depend on spending that money in our mattresses

There is a reason people say to beware what you wish for because you may get it.

DAVID M. SMICK

For years, the world has wanted Americans to consume less and to save more. They are getting their wish. The U.S. savings rate, near zero less than a year ago, has soared to nearly 5 percent of income and could go higher. Total personal savings jumped from $20 billion in the first quarter of 2008 to a whopping $453 billion during the same period of 2009. The real danger is if the savings rate goes to 7 or 8 percent. If that happens, economic recovery could be seriously delayed.

When financial markets are working efficiently, saving is a good thing. At this point, however, with major U.S. industries at risk of complete meltdown, Americans desperately need to consume. Yet households are in a totally defensive mode because the meltdown to date has destroyed $14 trillion of their wealth. They have been saving like never before.

Consumption comprises 70 percent of our economy. While the reckless, over-leveraged consumption habits of the past hardly made sense, the fear now is that American consumption patterns are on a long-term decline. That means potential economic growth in years ahead could be stunningly low.

The role of upper-income earners has become crucial to savings. There is an undeniable “trickle down” aspect to the workings of our economy. Like it or not, those making more than $100,000 a year are responsible for half of retail sales and 70 percent of the profit margins at retail, according to a study by American Express Publishing and the Harrison Group marketing and research firm.

Nobody likes the rich, yet there are serious policy questions about whether Washington’s latest political fad of class warfare is on a collision course with the goal of economic recovery.

Suddenly, because of the economic meltdown, this group has become highly cautious about spending. Their savings rate has soared, the study reported.

The question is whether Washington is politically capable of leading us out of the recession. Affluent Americans have become the new political whipping boy. They are perceived as the illegitimate recipients of the ill-gotten proceeds of financial liberalization and are about to face stiff increases in taxation.

Nobody likes the rich, yet there are serious policy questions about whether Washington’s latest political fad of class warfare is on a collision course with the goal of economic recovery. The annual affluence study by Ipsos Mendelsohn found that while the economy and climate change are of primary importance to average-income earners, taxes have become a major concern to suddenly cautious high-income earners. Moreover, this group, according to the data, is ironically finding pleasure in their new “be more like my neighbors” mentality as they draw their purse strings tighter.

A related question centers on the degree to which upper-income earners are worried about today’s ballooning national debt. Federal spending next year will reach 28 percent of gross domestic product. It has exceeded 25 percent of GDP only four times in U.S. history. When economic historians look back at this period, it will be enlightening to see whether today’s debt explosion was responsible for high-income earners significantly increasing their saving in anticipation of potential tax and inflationary changes resulting from the debt.

American consumers are retrenching and saving frantically, with high-income earners leading the way. The banks are barely lending and exports have collapsed. That leaves one option for stimulating demand in the event that the economy fails to fully recover: more fiscal stimulus. With congressional midterm elections less than a year away, a second fiscal stimulus in early 2010 hardly seems out of the question.

This is where our policy-makers could face a tough choice. Would even a $1 trillion additional stimulus package be enough to impress consumers who have lost 14 times as much? Moreover, would a serious negative wealth effect result among high-income earners if the national debt rises to even higher levels?

Policy-makers need to ask themselves which development over the past few months enjoys the greater potential to revive the economy: (a) the $800 billion stimulus package that produced millions of rebate checks worth several hundred dollars; or (b) the $3 trillion stock market jump, which has relatively cash-rich, traditionally big-spending Americans looking at their 401(k) retirement accounts with some relief for the first time in a while.

Ultimately, the factor determining the success of the Obama economy will be the level of private demand for durable goods by the end of 2010. Success will require a lot of spending by a lot of high-income earners the president probably doesn’t like and who probably don’t like him.

Joe Mama’s is biggest show in Idaho, period

On May 15, the Times-News had a nice feature regarding the 11th Annual NAPA Auto Parts Joe Mama’s Jerome Car Show, which will be held on Saturday, August 22.

The article was certainly appreciated and was appropriate because of the magnitude of the event.

But there are a couple of corrections that should be pointed out regarding the show. Special guest Stacey David hosts a weekly show on the SPEED channel, not ESPN TV. Yes, David had a successful show on ESPN TV but switched to the SPEED channel a couple of years ago. David will travel from Nashville, Tenn., to be a part of the Joe Mama’s Show, an event that David has called “the best car show in the nation.”

Also, the Times-News stated the car show is the largest one-day car show in Idaho. Actually, it is the largest car show in Idaho, no matter how many days any other car show may be. The Joe Mama’s event is double the size of the well-known Boise Roadster Show, a quality show in its own right. As for the size of events, the Joe Mama’s show is the largest one-day event of ANY kind in the entire Magic Valley.

Come to Jerome on Aug. 22 and join 16,000 spectators to see a special event that will include a live appearance by the genuine Spiderman from the Marvel Comic Book Series.

We need to stand apart from our enemies

Regarding the torture scandal currently going on with the former administration: Appoint a special prosecutor to take care of this case. We need to be a shining light in the world and stand apart from our enemies. Throw these men who have broken international law into prison and let them feel what it’s like to be incarcerated.

I have nothing against protecting our country, and I feel strongly that we should do exactly that. Pursue our enemies to the ends of the earth if need be, but do it in a moral and upright way. I am appalled at these tactics.

I wrote to my congressman. I’d recommend everyone do the same.

DEREK THOMAS

All men created equal? Not in the real world

I’ve always considered myself a Jeffersonian Democratic-Republican. Never considered any difference between my moral beliefs and Jefferson’s. But I must take exception to his wording of “... all men are created equal.” I’m not as tall as Dennis Rodman, as strong as Sylvester Stallone; I can’t swim as fast as Michael Phelps, run as fast as Jessie Owens, sing like Frank Sinatra, skate as good as Scott Hamilton, shoot as good as Sgt. Alvin York or had the war experiences of Audie Murphy or Richard Bong, and I don’t think many of you have either. So where does the equal come in?

I think the proper term should be “All men should have equal opportunity and responsibility under the law.” so why do I persist in wanting Obama to, as did George Washington and Teddy Roosevelt, precede his troops into any battle he’s committed them to? Why do I expect to pay less tax than the head of a major bank or oil company making multimillion-dollar bonuses? I continue to hope our local elected officials, spending the budgeted amount in schools and roads, will give us properly educated children and unpockmarked roads. Am I wrong in wanting the right to pray, to express my moral beliefs or that our borders be controlled and the war on crime be won? Is it Pollyanna to assume that congressmen pay their taxes, not hire illegal aliens, not abuse their interns, refuse under-the-counter bribes and pay for their own vacations instead of accepting junkets to exotic foreign destinations in the guise of fact-gathering missions?

But I guess we outlanders here in Idaho are expected to just keep our dumb mouths shut and accept what our betters decide for us.

School financial contingency law a collaborative effort

The Idaho School Boards Association read with interest your editorial of May 13 concerning school districts declaring financial emergencies. The ISBA was intricately involved in the drafting of House Bill 252, the legislation that enabled school districts to declare financial emergencies. We would like to clarify who was involved, the purpose of the legislation, and how it is currently playing out across the state of Idaho.

The Legislature, Rep. Nonini, and the State Department of Education were not solely responsible for this legislation. The House of Representatives formed an ad hoc committee that was chaired by Rep. Rich Wills, R-Glenns Ferry. Along with the ISBA, the Idaho Education Association, the Idaho

READER COMMENT
Brian Duncan and Karen Echeverria

Association of School Administrators, the Parent and Teachers Association and several legislators negotiated for four weeks to draft this legislation.

Wills was the driving force behind this historic compromise. Without his velvet-hammer leadership, this bill would probably not have been produced. In this process, the ISBA was represented by 14 volunteer trustees. Those members reside all throughout the state, including some from the Magic Valley.

The purpose of the legislation was to provide school districts with a much-needed tool to deal with budgets in financial crisis. Teachers' salaries and benefits make up 80 percent or 90 percent of the total budget. When districts are faced with cutbacks at the state level, it is difficult to balance a budget without decreasing teachers' salaries or length of contract. It was our belief that this legislation could offer the softest possible landing to school districts and teachers alike. A scalpel approach in lieu of a hatchet.

Now that HB252 has been signed into law, once a local school district declares a financial emergency, the school board can confer with the local teachers' union to possibly reduce salaries and contract days. Other options may now be available without the draconian cuts mandated before HB252.

This legislation is not a mandate from the Legislature. This new law is actually all about local control, giving the trustees in each district the ability to decide what is best for their community. Without the ability to negotiate contracts with the local unions, and reduced funding from the state, the only option left to trustees is to lay off teachers. ISBA's mantra throughout the session was that any budget cuts should have as little impact on students as possible.

None of the stakeholders believed there would be a huge number of districts that would declare financial emergencies. Our survey indicated that about 15 percent of districts would declare this year with a larger number declaring next year. That is exactly what is occurring.

The infusion of federal stimulus dollars and the fact that school districts have done a superb job of managing their budgets will allow them to work through this year without declaring a financial emergency. However, there are several districts in the state that will be unable to balance their budgets without declaring financial emergencies.

We believe that even more school districts will declare financial emergencies next year. The following years, with stimulus dollars no longer available to school districts, there may still be even more.

ISBA is proud to have been a part of the passage of this historic piece of legislation. We are thankful the Legislature was willing to work with us to give school districts the local control they need to balance their budgets. Without ISBA's participation in the passage of this law, school districts would simply not have the ability to declare financial emergencies, teachers in many districts would be losing their jobs right now and the students of Idaho would suffer the consequences.

Is Sotomayor auditioning to be Oprah's fill-in host?

Since when did securing a Supreme Court seat become a high hurdles contest? The White House and Democrats have turned Second Circuit Judge Sonia Sotomayor's nomination into a personal Olympic event. Pay no attention to her jurisprudence. She grew up in a Bronx public housing project. She was diagnosed with childhood diabetes at 8. Her father died a year later.

And, oh, by the way, did you hear that she was poor?

It's a "compelling personal story," as we heard 20,956 times on Tuesday. Sotomayor's a "real" person. Why, she even read Nancy Drew as a young girl, President Obama told us. She's "faced down barriers, overcome the odds and lived out the American dream that brought her parents here so long ago," Obama said.

If Sotomayor were auditioning to be Oprah Winfrey's fill-in host, I'd understand the over-the-top hyping of her life narrative. But isn't anybody on Sotomayor's side the least bit embarrassed by all this liberal condescension?

Republicans are not allowed to mention Sotomayor's ethnicity lest they be branded bigots, but every Democrat on cable television harped on her multicultural "diversity" and "obstacle"-climbing. Obama made sure to roll his r's when noting that her parents came from Puerrrrrrrrrrico. New York Sen. Charles Schumer stated outright: "It's long overdue that a Latino sit on the United States Supreme Court." Color-coded tokenism dominated the headlines, with blaring references to Sotomayor as the high court's potential "first Hispanic."

Missouri Sen. Claire McCaskill carried the "compelling personal story" talking points to the tokenist extreme in an interview on Fox News:

"If you look at what this woman has been through, and the obstacles that she has had to overcome, I think she does have a richly, uniquely American experience that makes her incredibly qualified to pass judgment on some of the most important cases in our country," McCaskill asserted.

Clever. Challenging Sotomayor's credentials and extreme views on race and the law is not merely anti-Hispanic. It's anti-American!

More significantly, McCaskill waved the high-hurdle card after being asked to defend Sotomayor's infamous statement at a 2001 University of California at Berkeley speech asserting brown-skin moral authority: "I would hope that a wise Latina woman with the richness of her experiences would more often than not reach a better conclusion than a white male who hasn't lived that life." McCaskill actually denied that Sotomayor had made the remarks, then argued the words were taken out of context.

You want context? It's even worse than that sound bite. As National Journal legal analyst Stuart Taylor reported, "Sotomayor also referred to the cardinal duty of judges to be impartial as a mere 'aspiration because it denies the fact that we are by our experiences making different choices than others.' And she suggested that 'inherent physiological or cultural differences' may help explain why 'our gender and national origins may and will make a difference in our judging.'" The full speech was reprinted in something called the Berkeley La Raza Law Journal. "La Raza" is Spanish for "The Race." Imagine if a white male Republican court nominee had published in a law review called "The Race."

The selective elevation of hardship as primary qualification demeans the entire judiciary. If personal turmoil makes one "incredibly qualified to pass judgment on some of the most important cases in our country," let's put reality-show couple Jon and Kate Gosselin on the bench. Millions of viewers tune in to watch their "compelling personal story" of life with eight children on television. It's a "richly, uniquely American experience" of facing obstacles and overcoming the odds. Get them robes and gavels, stat.

The lesson is that not all compelling personal stories are equal. McCaskill's assertion that "overcoming incredible odds" is "new to the courts" is ridiculous.

Democrats are eager to celebrate diversity, you see, as long as the diversely pigmented pledge allegiance to the Left for life.

Watching a child starve to death

BISSAU, Guinea-Bissau — The most heartbreaking thing about starving children is their equanimity.

They don't cry. They don't smile. They don't move. They don't show a flicker of fear, pain or interest. Tiny, wizened zombies, they shut down all nonessential operations to employ every last calorie to stay alive.

We in the West misunderstand starvation — especially the increasing hunger caused by the global economic crisis — and so along with Paul Bowers, the student winner of my "win-a-trip" contest, I've been traveling across five countries in West Africa, meeting the malnourished.

At the extreme, they were like Maximiano Camara, a 15-month-old boy here in Bissau, who was so emaciated that he risked failure of major organs. His ribs protruded, his eyes were glassy, his skin was stretched taut over tiny bones.

(Doctors try to help but are overwhelmed: One was showing me Maximiano when a nurse rushed in from another room carrying a baby who had stopped breathing. The doctor paused, revived that child on the next bed, handed her back to the nurse, and then calmly resumed his discussion of Maximiano.)

Even if Maximiano survives, hunger may leave him physically stunted. Or poor nutrition may have already withered the development of his brain.

It's impossible to know if Maximiano was starving because of the economic crisis or because of chronic malnutrition here, but the hardships in the developing world have been exacerbated by elevated food prices and declining remittances from workers abroad.

The World Bank has estimated that U.N. goals for overcoming global poverty have been set back seven years by the global crisis. It calculates that increased malnutrition last year may have caused an additional 44 million children to suffer permanent physical or mental impairment.

Yet one of the great Western misconceptions is that severe malnutrition is simply about not getting enough to eat. Often it's about not getting the right micronutrients — iron, zinc, vitamin A, iodine — and one of the most cost-effective ways outsiders can combat poverty is to fight this "hidden hunger."

Malnutrition is not a glamorous field, and so it's routinely neglected by everybody — donor governments, poor countries and, yes, journalists. But malnutrition is implicated in one-third to one-half of all child deaths each year; the immediate cause may be diarrhea, but lurking behind it is a deficiency of zinc.

"That image of a starving child in a famine doesn't represent the magnitude of the problem," notes Shawn Baker of Helen Keller International, a New York-based aid group working in this area. "For every child who is like that, you have 10 who are somewhat malnourished and many more who are deficient in micronutrients."

"Lack of iron is the most widespread nutrition deficiency in the world, and yet you can't really see it," he added.

In my column last Sunday, I wrote about women dying in childbirth. One reason so many die of hemorrhages is that 42 percent of pregnant women worldwide have anemia, according to the World Health Organization. And here in Guinea-Bissau, 83 percent of youngsters under age 5 suffer from iron deficiency.

An American or European typically has a hemoglobin, or Hb, level of 13, while anemic women and children in Africa are sometimes at 5 or below.

"In Europe, we get worried when Hb drops to 9, and then we consider a transfusion," said Dr. Annette Kroeber, a German working at a Doctors Without Borders clinic for malnourished children in Sierra Leone. "Here, when we get Hb up to 6, we're very happy."

The general rise in food prices (in part because of American use of corn for ethanol) is leading to more micronutrient deficiencies. One study found that a 50 percent rise in food prices in poor countries leads to a 30 percent drop in iron intake.

One solution is to distribute supplements to vulnerable people, or to fortify foods with micronutrients. A panel of prominent economists produced the "Copenhagen Consensus" on which forms of aid are most cost-effective, and it ranked micronutrient supplements as No. 1 (malaria prevention was No. 12, sanitation No. 20, and microfinance No. 22).

Americans typically get micronutrients from fortified foods, and the same strategy is possible in Africa. Helen Keller International is helping Guinea's leading flour mill fortify its products with iron, folic acid and vitamin B (zinc is coming soon). We visited the mill, and managers said that the fortification costs virtually nothing — a tiny fraction of a penny per loaf of bread — yet it will reduce anemia, maternal mortality and cognitive impairments around the country.

None of this is glamorous, but it's hugely needed — and truly a bargain.

Obama moves to curb road-building in national forests

By David A. Fahrenthold
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack on Thursday issued a temporary order governing development in "roadless" areas of national forests, requiring all new projects to be approved by him personally.

Vilsack's order, which will be in effect for a year, is the latest turn in an eight-year-old battle over 58.5 million acres of pristine woods. President Bill Clinton made these areas off-limits in 2001, but President George W. Bush effectively reopened some in 2005. That led to a series of court cases that ultimately replaced the national policy with a patchwork of regional rules.

Vilsack, whose purview includes the U.S. Forest Service, did Thursday what environmental groups had been urging: call a "time-out."

Agriculture Department officials said that while the temporary order is in effect, the Obama administration and Congress would try to create a permanent policy on roadless regions. They said Vilsack's caseload is not expected to be large: Over the past eight years, one official estimated, 30 to 40 projects have been proposed in these areas.

"We're raising the level of scrutiny," said Chris Mather, a spokeswoman for Vilsack. "From this moment ... we are going to make sure that our forests are protected in all projects we approve."

USDA officials said the order is not an outright ban: One said projects aimed at protecting watersheds, planting trees or stopping forest fires might be allowed. The official said it was unclear whether projects with a strictly commercial aim, such as logging or mining, would be allowed.

The order does not apply to national forests in Idaho, which recently developed its own policy on roadless areas.

The Forest Service's inventory of roadless regions includes about a third of the country's national forests. About 97 percent of them — often never-logged old-growth forests — are in the West. The ones in the East include small pockets of New Hampshire and the Appalachians that in most cases have regrown after being logged in past centuries.

Environmental groups say these areas serve as crucial natural filters for rivers and streams, key habitats for fish and animals such as grizzly bears, and "sinks" that take carbon dioxide out of the atmosphere. Several applauded Vilsack's decision Thursday.

"It seems sort of process-y, but it's important because it gets us back to a national treatment of roadless areas," said Kristen Boyles, a staff lawyer for the group Earthjustice. Obama officials "were handed a mess, and this will give them time to sort it out."

The Bush administration replaced Clinton's rule with one that allowed governors to decide which roadless areas in their states should continue to get protection. Environmental groups challenged that in various courts, which issued sometimes contradictory rulings.

In most of the country, USDA officials said, managers of individual forests have been deciding where to allow development. They did not permit much: One official said that about 70 miles of road had been built in these areas over the past eight years. During that time, the official said, more miles of road were eliminated in these areas.

Land trust buys central Idaho property

KETCHUM (AP) — The Wood River Land Trust has bought 100 acres in the Pioneer Mountains in central Idaho to protect wildlife habitat while assuring public access to surrounding public lands.

The land is near the headwaters of the Little Wood River along Porcupine Creek.

The Hailey-based land trust said the parcel is the last piece of private ground that must be crossed before visitors enter public land.

"We purchased the Porcupine Creek property to conserve wildlife habitat and maintain public access to surrounding public lands," Nathan Welch, planning coordinator with the land trust, told the Idaho Mountain Express. "For generations this has been an important area for recreational access, especially for hiking and hunting, and access for trailing livestock."

The trust said it bought the land, part of the Little Wood Headwaters Ranch, at less than full-market value from Beartooth Capital, which made a charitable donation of the remaining value.

Beartooth Capital is an investment group that specializes in acquiring and then reselling ecologically important lands.

"It has been a pleasure to work with the land trust to ensure the public will forever have access to the Porcupine Creek trailhead and the National Forest lands beyond," said Carl Palmer of Beartooth Capital. "That part of the Pioneers is remarkably wild and beautiful."

The land trust said the purchase was made possible by donations from individuals and foundations to the group's open space fund.

Unemployment holding steady in rural areas

Struggling dairy industry could push jobless numbers higher

By John Plestina
Times-News correspondent

SHOSHONE — While a state economist is saying unemployment in the counties north of Twin Falls is not as bleak as some people are saying, it could be a calm before the storm with a possible loss of jobs looming for the dairy industry.

Idaho Department of Labor economist Jan Roeser said Jerome, Lincoln, Gooding and Blaine counties typically enjoy lower unemployment than Idaho as a whole or the nation.

While that's the good news, small changes in the numbers of people unemployed in rural counties result in high numbers skewing the impact of local unemployment.

Lincoln County's unemployment rate dropped from 8.3 percent in March to 7.6 percent in April.

That, however, is less significant than it appears. It means five fewer people were unemployed.

The 2009 unemployment numbers are about double the 2007 figures, largely due to construction jobs in Blaine County.

"Lincoln County is a feeder county for Blaine County. The wages are higher there typically but you can't afford to live there. So consequently people tend to live in "The region looks good when you do a weighted average."

— Jan Roeser, Idaho Department of Labor economist

Lincoln County or Gooding County," Roeser said.

Jerome County's unemployment rate dropped from 5.44 to 4.9 percent from March to April.

The state figure was 7 percent for both months while the national rate increased from 8.5 to 8.9 percent for the same period.

"The region looks good when you do a weighted average. It's (fluctuations) are at the mercy of the math. When you're looking at such a small labor force it really causes tidal waves," said the Twin Falls-based economist.

While Roeser explained that the overall picture is not as bad as it appears, she expressed concern that big trouble might loom for the dairy industry.

"Milk prices are low and eating away at some dairies equity. Some could close. Typically they don't anticipate the large dairies (could close) but the medium size dairies might not be able to cut it," Roeser said. "There will probably be a smattering (of closings) across Twin Falls, Jerome, Lincoln, Gooding, Minidoka and Cassia counties."

"June is a crucial month to watch," Roeser said.

BIOFUEL BUSINESS HEATS UP

Spurred by government incentives, biofuel companies pop up across the nation

Energy still significant component of Idaho economy

Industry employs more than 7 percent of workforce

By Timothy B. Wheeler
The Baltimore Sun

BALTIMORE — The thick, milky white liquid looks like Elmer's glue, but it's greasy to the touch. It has a sweet, alcohol smell. It's not your father's heating oil, to be sure. But it will do the job, says Cary J. Claiborne, and a lot more cleanly.

Claiborne is president and chief executive of New Generation Biofuels, a Florida-based start-up that's producing fuel from vegetable and soybean oil at a small production plant in southern Baltimore.

"It's very biodegradable," Claiborne says as he dips his finger into a small sample from a recent batch. "If it didn't have certain additives, you could drink it."

Spurred by government incentives, companies like New Generation Biofuels are popping up across the United States to angle for a piece of a growing market for clean, renewable alternatives to coal, gas and oil.

New Generation, which has its headquarters near Orlando, Fla., has a handful of deals to supply its Baltimore-produced fuel to Maryland businesses, including a contract announced this month to sell up to 1 million gallons in the next year to a gas and oil marketing company on the Eastern Shore. The firm also inked deals recently with a chemical company in South Baltimore and with a greenhouse in Western Maryland.

This week, the firm's bio-fuel was to have a tryout in an East Baltimore health clinic as part of a pilot program to investigate alternative fuels for heating city buildings.

READ THE REPORT

The full report, "Energy Careers In Idaho," can be found online at <http://labor.idaho.gov>.

The volatile international computer chip market and the housing crash slowed the expansion of Idaho's energy sector in 2008, but it remains a large component of the state economy.

A staple of the state economy since the recovery from the double-dip recessions of the 1980s, energy accounted for 7.5 percent of total employment in Idaho and nearly 12 percent of total wages in 2008.

A fifth of the energy sector occupations are among the 100 jobs that will be the fastest growing, in the highest demand and best paying in Idaho over the next decade.

During 2008, Idaho identified over 4,100 energy sector businesses paying almost 49,200 workers more than $2.6 billion in wages. Compared to 5.8 percent of jobs nationally, energy at 7.5 percent of total jobs in Idaho has more influence on the state economy even after the fallout from the 2001 recession. Since the sector peaked before 2001 at nearly 9 percent of jobs and 16 percent of wages, it has steadily declined. The job share in 2008 was the lowest in over 20 years, and the sector's contribution to total state payroll dropped below 12 percent for the first time.

The average wage in the energy components of Idaho's economy during 2008 was more than $53,000 compared to the average wage for all jobs of just under $34,000.

At its peak in 2000, the average wage in the energy sector was 80 percent higher than the average for all jobs. The average energy wage has consistently run 50 percent or higher than the overall average wage in Idaho.

The Idaho assessment is based on a method developed by Indiana and Purdue universities in 2007 to gauge the economic competitiveness of rural communities. As part of that effort, the schools identified 76 industries components and 98 occupations that together comprise the energy sector of the economy.

Initial jobless claims drop unexpectedly

By Christopher S. Rugaber
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The tally of newly laid-off Americans requesting jobless benefits fell last week, the government said Thursday, a sign that companies are cutting fewer workers.

But the number of workers continuing to receive unemployment benefits rose to 6.78 million — the largest total on records dating back to 1967 and the 17th straight record week. The figures for continuing claims lag behind initial claims by one week.

Small businesses hire unpaid interns this summer

The idea of hiring unpaid interns this summer has become very appealing to small business owners contending with a difficult economy.

An extra worker, even an inexperienced one, can be a big help to a company that can't afford to hire a regular staffer. But business owners need to be sure they don't take on interns only to save money. Federal labor laws are fairly direct in saying that internships should be for the benefit of the interns, not their employers.

Paula Slotkin knew back in January she couldn't afford to pay an intern as she has in the past.

SMALL TALK
Joyce M. Rosenberg

"We're having the same issues our clients are," said Slotkin, a partner in Topaz Partners, a Woburn, Mass.-based public relations firm. "I can't take on someone for $350 a week in the summer."

But Slotkin started getting resumes from would-be interns who were happy to work for nothing, just so they could get the experience of being at a PR agency. She hired a young woman who will be earning college credit for her work this summer.

Summer interns are common at public relations firms. Interns who are in school want hands-on experience before they graduate, while recent grads are looking to build their resumes.

Company owners often look at internships as try-outs for a permanent job in the future.

"I would never hire someone who wasn't first an intern," said Kellee Johnson, a principal with The Ballast Group, a PR firm in Chicago. Her company is doing well this year, and will have three paid interns who have finished school. A fourth intern who's still in school won't be paid.

Johnson also likes having interns because "I've been mentored very well in my career and I believe it's time to give back."

O'Connell & Goldberg, a PR firm in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., hasn't been able to hire full-time staffers the past few months, so having two unpaid interns this summer will help fill the gap. If the interns do well, "when the economy turns around, obviously they'll be my first

Twin Falls boy helps mom in emergency

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

Logan Muff-Eckles may be a mere 7-year-old but he reacted to a recent emergency with the calm of a trained professional.

On May 5 the youngster made a phone call that arguably saved the life of his mom, Stacie Muff, 34, who suffered a diabetic seizure and fell down a flight of stairs.

Muff has managed her diabetes since her early teens but on that Saturday morning she was unable to.

"I was going for orange juice and heading up the stairs when I remembered about the juice I kept downstairs. I turned around to go back down but ended up falling down," she said.

The commotion awoke Logan; the scene was one he won't soon forget. Either by the fall or from the seizure, Muff had bitten her tongue and there was a lot of blood, he said.

"She was bleeding, had hit her tongue, I think from falling down the stairs," he said. "I tried to give her orange juice but she wouldn't take it so I called Grandma."

While waiting the 15 or so minutes it took for Muff's parents to arrive on the scene, Logan remained close to his mom and even rolled her onto her side.

"I could have choked from the blood but Logan rolled me over," Muff said. "It's hard to say what could have happened if Logan hadn't called because there was a lot that could have happened."

While Muff is extremely proud of her son, she said lessons from karate likely kicked in during the situation. Logan has been a student of Success Martial Arts since November 2007.

When his martial arts instructor, Brian Higgins, heard how the event was handled, he gave Logan a special award in class.

"When Stacie, Logan's mom, told me her story, it seemed to me that this was a very little boy who did some very responsible and level-headed things in a very scary situation," Higgins said. "We talk about concepts like self-control and courage in martial arts all time and here was this little guy, in what any of us can imagine had to be a very scary situation, and yet he did all the right things. He didn't panic. He didn't do anything foolish."

Not helping his mom wasn't an option, said Logan.

Buhl students end yearlong project with fishing trip

Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

HAGERMAN — As Idaho Fish and Game Reservist Barry Meyers wraps a fresh earthworm around and through a silvery, shining hook, he explains the art to a group of seventh-grade girls from Buhl Middle School.

Eyes roll and petrified looks abound as the girls are given fishing poles of their own and instructed to bait their own hooks in hopes of catching trout at Oster Lakes in Hagerman on Wednesday.

"I already know how to do this," said student Erna Schaeffer, 13.

She has the war wounds to prove it. The weekend before her class' field trip to the lakes and nearby fish hatchery, Schaeffer's finger was caught by the hook from her brother's casting line.

For others the trip was a first. As indicated by the number of hands raised, roughly 10 percent had never cast a line or felt the aggressive tug from a hungry trout.

The day trip marked the end of the classes' yearlong Trout in the Classroom curricula, said teacher Lani Schofield, and included the release of about 30 rainbow trout raised by the seventh-graders into the lake.

In order to keep the number of kids fishing the lakes manageable, the boys participated in an identical event on Tuesday, Schofield said.

"The whole idea is to return what we're going to take out," Schofield said.

Insurance information leads to delayed billing woes

DEAR DR. GOTT: My husband recently received a collection letter for a doctor bill that is almost three years old. I tried calling the office but could only leave a voice-mail message. In the meantime, I found an e-mail address and requested they contact me. A few days later, I got a phone call and was told they did not have any insurance information on file. I gave the woman what was required, and she said she would file it but thought it would be denied because the bill was so old. Later that day, I received an e-mail stating the claim was originally filed as a workers' -compensation case but was denied. They then filed with Blue Cross Blue Shield (BCBS). Supposedly, they didn't get a reply.

To give a brief background, my husband went to the emergency room in April 2005 by ambulance. Looking back in the records, I saw the hospital and ambulance both filed with BCBS and were paid. I really don't know why the doctor is saying they have it as a workers' -comp case. I called BCBS, which said if the doctor produces the paperwork and the claim was denied by comp, they would process it. The doctor's office is now being very rude, just saying it is in collection and there is nothing they can do.

We are very angry. We have excellent credit, and now they are trying to ruin it. Can you offer some advice on how to handle this? I know we can pay it, but that is what we have insurance for. Please help.

DEAR READER: The only piece of the puzzle I see missing is why your husband was sent to the emergency room via ambulance. Was he injured while working, or was he retired at the time? It may have been difficult for the physician to obtain the Valerie Welch, Americorp volunteer, is working with Fish and Game to bring Trout in the Classroom to area schools. She said the broader message of the program is "stewardship."

"Rainbow trout are a native Idaho resource and we hope to educate the kids about our resources and the ethics behind them ... to instill a sense of stewardship and responsibility in taking care of those resources," Welch said.

Welch said the program also hopes to increase the number of anglers and hunters in the state.

"We want these kids to have an appreciation for nature," she said.

In addition to watching the fish grow from fry to young adults, students learned the trout's life cycles, biologic makeup and even how they breathe underwater, Schaeffer said.

"We learned about the gills," said Schaeffer. "When we were (dissecting) it we got to see the inside of the fish. The gills are slimy."

As the fish grew bigger so did student's affection for them.

Maria Silva, 13, said the hardest part of the project was experiencing the fact that everyone doesn't live into adulthood.

"Some of them didn't make it and that was kind of sad," said Silva. "I really liked going in and seeing that they grew ... it's good that they are now in the lake. Where they should be."

Next year's BMS seventh-graders will get to experience the same lesson, thanks to donations by the Buhl's Kiwanis Club and Avid Sportsman's. The service club and business split the cost (roughly $4,000) to purchase equipment, like coolers and aquariums, for the school.

correct insurance information in an ER setting. Who provided the workers' compensation information to the doctor at the base of all this?

It's my guess his office staff filed the claim and were directed by what appeared on the ER sheet sent to the office. However, if it had been done in a timely manner, they would have had adequate time to file a second time with BCBS once the comp denial was received. If the second carrier also denied the claim, then you should have been contacted. As a general rule, a physician has 18 months in which to file a claim. Thus, I feel the fault lies with the office personnel. I'm unsure if they can legally write off the charge at this stage, but I would think that if the information you provided is correct, they should work out an amicable arrangement of resolution.

Try a cordial but firm note with a copy to the collection agency. Send it certified, return receipt requested so you have a record. Then sit back and see what happens.

Terry Scott Lee

BOUNTIFUL, Utah — Terry Scott Lee, age 66, passed away peacefully Monday, May 25, 2009, surrounded by his children.

Terry was born in Wendell on March 7, 1943, to Ross and Mildred Lee. He was raised in Jerome, where he enjoyed a wonderful childhood. He loved to reminisce and share stories of his youth. The Magic Valley of Idaho always held a very special place in his heart, and even after moving to Utah 10 years ago, he still considered Idaho his home. Terry married Patricia Ann Brown on Jan. 12, 1968. Though they later divorced, they spent 23 wonderful years together and raised four children.

After graduating from Jerome High School, he joined his father and brother in the family car business. Together, they owned and operated car dealerships in the Magic Valley for many years. Terry enjoyed a very strong bond with his father and brother and looked forward to the day they would all be reunited. Terry was a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He loved the gospel and had a very strong testimony.

He is survived by his children, Shauna Cameron of Delaware, Ohio, Debbi (David) Young of West Bountiful, Utah, Tricia (Cesar) Jouvin of Woods Cross, Utah, and Michael Lee, currently stationed at Kunsan Air Base, Korea; siblings, Kay (Gordon) Peters of Provo, Utah; Jim (Marisela) Lee of Twin Falls, Marsha (Don) Sparhawk of Rexburg and Connie (Bill) Snyder of Salem, Ore. He is also survived by his five grandchildren, Carson Young, Courtney Young, Madelyn Jouvin, Michael Jouvin and Baby Jouvin on the way who will greatly miss him. He also leaves behind many nieces and nephews. Terry was predeceased in death by his parents and many friends and family members who are now rejoicing with him.

The funeral will be held at 1 p.m. Saturday, May 30, at the LDS Chapel, 1540 N. 400 E. in Bountiful, Utah, where friends may call one hour prior to the service. Interment will be at the Bountiful City Cemetery under the direction of Russon Brothers Mortuary in Bountiful, Utah. The online guestbook is available at www.russonmortuary.com.

The family would like to thank Good Shepherd Hospice for the loving care and friendship they showed to Dad, as well as his dedicated friend and home teacher, Dr. Mark Blaisdell. You are truly angels.

Wilma Coupe

JEROME — Wilma Coupe, 91, of Jerome, passed away on Memorial Day, May 25, 2009, at her daughter's house south of Jerome.

Wilma "Sugar" Coupe — better known as Shug, passed peacefully in her sleep. As she used to say when an older friend or acquaintance would pass away, "That old lady just died of old age." Shug's life was dedicated to kind and unselfish caring for other people. To anyone who knew her, the first thing that would probably come to mind was her genuine loving and unselfish character. She wanted to make other people happy and had little or no thought of herself.

Shug had the rare trait of leaving her own well-being behind and always thinking first of her friends and family. Although she worked hard for everything she had, her friends and children were constantly gifted with money, new clothes or shoes, and frequent restaurant and home-cooked meals. "Let's go out to dinner" was one of her favorite sayings. She would always pay. She would never ask for a dime at these meals and would become upset if someone tried to chip in.

Shug would throw herself a birthday party every year from about the time she was 65. The family would go out for a big-time-whoop-it-up restaurant meal and drinks and Shug would always foot the tab. One time her sister paid for her share of the drinks at one of these parties and it took Shug two weeks to get over this indiscretion. Her generosity never flagged. If she had $2 to her name, one of those dollars was yours.

She did not care much for acquiring material things. She had a big heart and was never happier than when spending time in her home with her friends and family. She never complained and had the ability to be at peace with the moment. If you want everything to be perfect, if your personality makes you look for the negative in things, if you're on the lookout for trouble, you'll find it. That's when most people start to pick at the stuff but this wasn't Shug. She didn't let the small stuff bug her and even if something did, she would never let you know. She didn't complain and she didn't find fault. Her life was dedicated, absolutely, to caring and sharing. She accepted most things the way they were and didn't worry about stuff she couldn't control. Most people can't do this. She was one who honestly could. She didn't worry too much and consequently lived a long life enjoying people and most things, including her pets. They were always animals at the Coupe household and her most favorite being Pug dogs. She was the last living member of her immediate family and was preceded in death by three brothers and two sisters. She was the second oldest child in this family of six.

Now for some history: Shug came from a long line of people who lived in the south plains states. Her maiden name was Ballew, and she was born in 1917 in Newkirk, Okla. Her mother's maiden name was Butler. Her father was a deputy sheriff in Newkirk and, apparently in those days when the sheriff was defeated in election, the newly elected sheriff would call all the existing deputies and bring in his own people. This is what happened to Shug's dad. So in 1939, the Ballews loaded up their car and headed for the promised land of Jerome. Shug's father had never been in the Rocky Mountains and along the route to Idaho, he kept seeing signs that said, "Watch for Rolling Rock." Although he seldom cursed, he finally said, "Where in the hell is Rolling Rock!"

Wilma "Sugar" Ballew was a cute young woman and landed a job right away at Wood's Café, which at the time was the hub and social spot of Jerome. Soon she met a cute young soldier boy named Bert Coupe. Bert would come into Wood's Café to hear the new girl's Oakie Southern drawl. They had been married only two months when Bert was shipped to Europe to take part in World War II. It was nearly two years before they met again.

Shug and Bert's three children, Judi Halverson of Jerome, Mary Janice Greer of Boise and Jeffrey Coupe of Hailey, all have children of their own. Judi's children are Candace Burnikel of Seattle and John Halverson of Jerome; Mary Janice's son is Aaron Moore of Tokyo, Japan; and Jeffrey's son is Christopher Robert Coupe of Hailey and Moscow.

The funeral for Shug will be at 1 p.m. Sunday, May 31, at Hove-Robertson Funeral Chapel in Jerome. A social gathering following the service for friends and family will be hosted in the convention room at the Best Western Sawtooth Inn on South Lincoln (across from Walmart) in Jerome.

Mary Etta Hatch

Mary Etta Hatch, 73, of Twin Falls, passed away Wednesday, May 6, 2009, in Seattle of an extended illness.

She was born in Twin Falls, the daughter of Nellie and Earl Hatch. Prior to her retirement in 2002, Mary worked for Costco Wholesale in Seattle. She also worked for Greyhound Bus and before that worked for NBC Studios managing the commissary, which catered to the rich and famous, such as Bob Hope and Johnny Carson, also catering to their personal holidays as well. After her retirement, Mary sold her home and traveled full time in her motorhome, enjoying time with family and friends and visiting places she had always dreamed of. She had a tremendous love for her four brothers and daughter, spending every chance she could with them, talking to some or all of them every day. She also loved her sisters-in-law, but refused to call them that; to her they were her sisters.

Mary is survived by four brothers, Merlin, Robert (Bobby), Marion and Mike Hatch; daughter, Rhonda Foreman; grandson, Trevor Foreman; numerous nieces and nephews; and the "sisters," Glenna, Mary, Hope and Sheila.

A graveside service will be held at a time to be announced in August at the Twin Falls Cemetery.

Jane Randolph, star of inventive horror film 'Cat People,' dies at 93

The Washington Post

Jane Randolph, a willowy beauty who was memorably terrorized by shadow and sound in one of the great suspense films of all time, the original "Cat People," died May 4 at a hospital near Gstaad, Switzerland, after breaking her hip. She was 93.

Randolph appeared in more than 20 films and starred in low-budget fare such as "Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein" (1948), in which she was an insurance investigator opposite the popular comic duo. In one sequence, she danced with former "Dracula" star Bela Lugosi at a masquerade ball. "He was dressed in full vampire costume, but he moved very well," she recalled many years later.

"Cat People" (1942), a movie revered by film enthusiasts for its high artistry under a strained budget, brought Randolph her greatest public renown. Its acclaimed atmospheric — dimly lit swimming pools and city streets that act as shadows — were matters of necessity by filmmakers who could not afford better sets.

7.1 earthquake topples homes, kills 6 in Honduras

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — A powerful earthquake toppled dozens of homes in Honduras and Belize early Thursday, killing at least six people and injuring 40 as terrified residents spilled from their homes across much of Central America.

The magnitude-7.1 quake struck at 2:24 a.m. off the Caribbean coast of Honduras, 80 miles northeast of the beach town of La Ceiba, according to the U.S. Geological Survey in Golden, Colorado.

"People were running for the door," Alfredo Cedeno said from the reception desk at the Gran Hotel Paris in La Ceiba. "You could really feel it and you could see it — the water came out of the pool!"

Reynaldo Funez, 15, was buried in his house in Pineda de la Lima, 120 miles north of the capital, Tegucigalpa, and 6-year-old Deily Yazmin Santos was killed when her house collapsed in the beach town of Morazan, national fire commander Col. Carlos Cordero said.

Ana Maria Rivera, spokeswoman for Honduras' Permanent Emergency Commission, said Jose Vicente Maradiaga died of a heart attack during the earthquake in the seaside town of Tela, and a 3-year-old boy was crushed when his roof collapsed in Mapulaca near the Salvadoran border. She didn't have Maradiaga's age or the boy's name.

"It was an earthquake of great proportions," she said. Two other people were killed in home collapses, according to the commission's chief, Marcos Burgos, who didn't have details. At least 40 people were injured, most along the Caribbean coast.

The earthquake destroyed at least 57 homes and damaged another 65, the commission said. It said 14 schools were damaged, as were two Roman Catholic churches and three bridges.

Democracy Bridge, which spans the country's largest river, the Ulua, collapsed in the town of El Progreso, Cordero said. The bridge is one of two connecting the northern city of San Pedro Sula, Honduras' second-largest, with the rest of the country. The second bridge was deemed safe.

FUTURE OF THE ARTS

Plans for a development at Federation Point have been revised since last year, but the structure will still include the new Twin Falls Center for the Arts.

Twin Falls Arts Center plans move forward again

By Melissa Davlin

Times-News writer

Hang in there, art fans. The Twin Falls Center for the Arts is within a year of opening. Probably.

Development at the future arts center, to be located at Federation Point, was delayed last year after major changes to architectural plans. Magic Valley Arts Center, which had hoped to debut its new center in January 2010, now says it will probably open in late spring 2010.

As a tenant, the arts center will occupy portions of two floors in a planned three-floor commercial complex.

Original plans included an additional two floors for residential space, but developers scaled back the plans from five floors to three. The new design eliminates residential areas and focuses entirely on commercial space.

The change came after developers realized the Twin Falls market couldn't support the planned high-end residential units, said developer Fran Florence of Westerra Real Estate Group.

"We judged the market conditions and we looked forward, and that's when we made the decision not to move forward with the residential component," Florence said.

The decision, which came in late August, sparked a period of silence from Magic Valley Arts Council concerning the new center. It halted fundraising efforts while architects redrew designs, said council director Stacy Madsen, because it didn't want to approach potential donors without knowing everything about the new plans.

"We had to regroup," Florence said. "We had to completely start over on the architecture and the engineering."

The development's downsizing doesn't affect the arts center's plans, Madsen said. It still has almost the same layout, and even came out with more room in the end. The space will include a small theater with moveable seats for dinner theater and traditional performances, an outdoor stage, classrooms and exhibit areas. Along with the arts center, the three-story development will have a courtyard, restaurant and private offices.

The Times-News in 2007 reported the project would cost the Magic Valley Arts Council $1.25 million, but later stories said the council hoped to raise $1.4 million. The cost for the art center hasn't changed, Madsen said, but the second figure includes an endowment fund that will help pay for facility costs in the first years of operation. So far, the center has raised $980,000.

Funds are coming from private donations from citizens and companies — including the Times-News — as well as grants from private foundations. Twin Falls Rotary Club provided $113,000, raised through fundraising events like Jazz in the Canyon. Some grants from private organizations are delegated to specific expenses, like a grand piano or classroom furniture. Other expenses, like lighting and sound systems, are still being tallied, said Allan Frost, a member of the Magic Valley Arts Council fundraising committee.

As soon as the center opens, new community art programs — which arts council leaders are still developing with the help of age-specific surveys — will be in place and ready to go. And Madsen is already looking for exhibits for the grand opening.

The arts center plans to rent out areas of its space for private parties, like weddings or business meetings, to bring in more income. The arts council also hopes to work with nearby Canyon Crest Dining and Event Center to plan community events.

"This has been designed as a multipurpose facility, particularly the auditorium," Frost said.

Madsen is confident the council can raise the remaining funds, although she and Frost acknowledged that the economy and competing fundraisers from College of Southern Idaho and St. Luke's Magic Valley might affect donations.

But the national recession isn't hurting them as much as it might in other areas, Frost said.

"While the economy may be suffering in some places, we are really fortunate that it hasn't impacted us as much here," he said.

Musicians unplug in Sun Valley next weekend

By Karen Bossick

Times-News correspondent

SUN VALLEY — You can leave your earplugs at home when Sun Valley Resort presents an Acoustic Weekend of music featuring such acts as Marcus Eaton and Keb' Mo'.

The two-day music festival, June 5 and 6 in the Sun Valley Pavilion, will feature a variety of music from Appalachian style to folk and the blues. And it's all unplugged.

"I wanted to do something during the late slack season that we can build as a yearly tradition. And acoustic music provides a great atmosphere," said John Mauldin, the resort's entertainment director. "There are actually acoustic groupies who go from one acoustic festival to another."

The weekend will offer a festival-type atmosphere with band merchandise and hamburgers and other food for sale on the lawn outside the Pavilion.

Concert seating will be under cover, nixing the need for sunscreen or umbrellas.

Three shows will be offered each night:

4 p.m. June 5 — Emiko jump-starts the concert with a variety of ballads, and high-energy vocals backed by piano, bass guitar and drums. The New York singer, who performed at Sun Valley during February's 2009 World Winter Special Olympics Games, was a classical musical prodigy who switched gears to rock 'n' roll and released her first album at age 16.

6 p.m. June 5 — Colors performs high-energy folksy harmony with intricate guitar and bongo backup. The group has recorded five albums.

8 p.m. June 5 — The Duhks (pronounced "ducks") of Winnipeg, Manitoba, headline the evening with their neo-bluegrass music that includes jigs, as well as original music with Afro-Cuban jazz and other influences.

"Everybody in the band listens to so many different things it was bound to happen that we'd spread our wings and offer a sampling of a variety of music," said banjo player Leonard Podolak.

The quintet offers food for thought with its banjo, fiddle and guitar picking, Podolak said. "Fast-paced World," for instance, is a commentary about today's materialism that encourages environmental stewardship.

The group has won a Juno Award — the Canadian equivalent of a Grammy — and been nominated for a Grammy.

4 p.m. June 6 — Rebecca Scott brings her folk-rock blend all the way from Boise. A performer at Lilith Fair and other Northwest music festivals, she has four albums under her belt.

6 p.m. June 6 — Marcus Eaton, another Idaho musician, accents lyrics about Idaho with rock, reggae, flamenco, classical, jazz and folk. Eaton and his band recently released a new album, "Story of Now."

"This was no small feat," he said. "The recording actually began in September 2004, but we had so many setbacks with equipment and other problems. But it was worth it. The CD absolutely rocks, with such songs as 'Candle to the Sun,' 'Stranger in My Homeland,' 'End This War' and 'Story of Now.' One of the many highlights was the mastering by the Grammy Award-nominated Vic Anesini."

8 p.m. June 6 — Keb' Mo' goes acoustic with his contemporary take on the seminal Delta Blues that flooded America from its origins in the Mississippi.

Keb' Mo' — whose identity evolved from his given name, Kevin Moore — has won three Grammy Awards for his blues making. His repertoire includes everything from Robert Johnson covers to Obama songs to a moving "America," used for the inauguration ceremony on the TV series "West Wing."

Concertgoers can attend one evening or both. And a cocktail party has been arranged each evening for those who would like to meet the artists.

General admission is $50 for one night or $80 for both. Premium seating, which includes the meet-and-greet cocktail parties, is $85 for one night or $150 for both. Tickets: sunvalleyavilion.com, 1-888-622-2108 or 208-622-2135.

Sun Valley Resort is also offering Acoustic Weekend hotel-concert packages. One night's lodging with one concert ticket costs $98 per person. Two nights' lodging with two tickets is $176 per person. Premier seating and lodging is $133 for one night and $246 per person for two nights. Lodging information: 1-800-786-8259.

'We're all really brothers and sisters'

Explore your connections in Ketchum theater

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM — It's been called the human web. Or chain links. But the concept became known as "Six Degrees of Separation" when an award-winning play and movie by that title popularized the notion that everybody on this planet is separated by only six other people.

Now Laughing Stock Theatre is exploring the concept on its stage as it presents John Guare's play "Six Degrees of Separation," opening Thursday.

"The idea is that we're all a little closer than we know. If one person is one step away from each person they know and two steps away from each person that person knows, then everyone is at most six steps away from any other person on Earth," said director Bruce Hostetler.

"Knowing me, for instance, connects you to everyone I went to school with in South Africa, to everyone I taught English to in the People's Republic of China and to everyone I've worked with at Laughing Stock Theatre and the Shakespeare Festival in Ashland, Ore."

Guare based his play on an actual incident — that of a young African-American who gained access to the homes of upperclass New Yorkers by pretending to be the son of actor Sidney Poitier.

The young man, who claims to be a Harvard classmate of the couple's son,

KAREN BOSSICK/For the Times-News

Paul (actor Brandon Saunders), who claims to be the son of actor Sidney Poitier, describes his childhood apartment overlooking Central Park to 'Six Degrees of Separation' cast members Jessica Rice and Jeff Maxwell, whom he meets in the park.

tells a couple in the play that he was mugged in Central Park and needs money until he can get some from his famous father. Eventually, the man is exposed as a con. But even then the couple can't shuck their fascination with him or with the new theory of six degrees of separation.

"It's a terrifying thought that there are six steps between me and anyone, including a beggar in Calcutta," says the wife of the art dealer who took the young man into his home. At the same time, she says, "It's a profound thought ... how every person is a new door, opening up into other worlds."

The play is both a tragedy and a comedy — witty and biting, yet ultimately moving as it explores what drives people, from their desire for fame and money to prestige and relationships.

"It's an amazing play. It shows how we feel so far away from others, yet how much we're interconnected," said Brandon Saunders, who portrays the young man who shakes up everyone's day-to-day routine.

"It's an absolutely fascinating play as it deals with relationships and what we need from one another," said Hostetler. "How, for instance, does an Upper East Side art dealer and his wife get so attached to this man even after learning he's not who he claims to be?"

Laughing Stock Theatre brought in Saunders, a professional actor from Chicago, to portray the young African-American. Keith Moore stars as the art dealer and Patsy Wygle as his wife.

Other cast members are MacKenzie Harbaugh, Jeff Maxwell, Jessica Rice, Jamey Reynolds, Dana Dugan, Bostin Mitchell, Doug Neft, Chris Campbell, Kaley Pruitt, Jared Levassuer and James Wells.

The 90-minute, one-act play received critical acclaim when it opened in New York in 1990, winning the New York Critic Circle Award for Best Play of the Year, in addition to nominations for a Pulitzer Prize and a Tony Award. A 1993 film followed, starring Will Smith, Stockyard Channing and Donald Sutherland.

In the end, it offers some very practical implications, Reynolds said.

"It shows the humanity of our interconnectedness," he said. "Six degrees of separation makes all the -isms ridiculous because if that's true then we're all really brothers and sisters."

Watch the wings this weekend

By Coreen Hart
Times-News correspondent

HEYBURN — Berry Spalding has an exciting date for Saturday morning, and his wife doesn't mind a bit. He's taking his scale model radio-controlled airplanes to an exciting competition in Hazelton.

"I'm just going to have some fun," he said.

He isn't a serious competitor, despite lots of experience. He has been flying the planes since 1993. He built them (and a helicopter) from kits or from scratch, and they are authentic in every detail.

"They are exactly like a full-sized plane, except the pilot is on the ground," he said.

He gets a thrill out of seeing a large aircraft streak down the airstrip and take to the sky. Then he puts it through a series of 10 maneuvers called a pattern. The competitor who completes his pattern in the best form earns the most points. There is a 2.5-minute time limit for assorted loops, hammerheads, rolls and inverted flights.

Berry's wife, Celia, supports his hobby.

"We get to go a lot of places for these meets," she said with a cheerful grin. "We've mostly gone to Las Vegas, but there is a meet in Tucson this year, and we might get to go there."

The couple's favorite event is the freestyle. Planes fly patterns in time to music, some trailing smoke. They can fly any

The Snake River Flyers contest in Hazelton on Saturday and Sunday runs from 10 a.m. to about 4 or 5 p.m. — whenever the competition runs down. There is no charge to the public.

To reach the airfield, take the Greenwood exit from Interstate 84, and get onto the frontage road. At the east end of the Hazelton airport, turn right; then take the first left. It will look as though you are driving into the hangars, but the road continues behind the hangars to the airstrip owned by Snake River Flyers.

Saturday is reserved for known (pre-rehearsed) patterns. On Sunday, flyers present unknown (surprise) patterns that they have not had a chance to practice.

There will be food vending and portable toilets. One caution: Stay as far back as possible. The planes are powerful devices and can inflict injury if they malfunction.

The competition is sanctioned by the International Miniature Aerobatic Club, a national organization for devotees of model aerobatic planes.

pattern they choose.

Mike Verzyvelt of Twin Falls is director for this weekend's contest. He's also the Northwest regional director for the International Miniature Aerobatic Club. He is a serious hobbyist.

"These planes do the same maneuvers as the real airplanes," he said. "We have some people coming from as far away as Seattle for the weekend."

He said rules and judging are carefully laid out by the parent organization.

"Judges are people who fly planes, so they know and understand what we are striving for," Verzyvelt said.

He's been flying since he was 12. Verzyvelt, now 44, talks about being able to "hang that airplane from its propeller" in a vertical position near the ground, and then make it take off straight up.

There are five levels of competition, with a senior class in each level. Flyers will compete for trophies, plaques and gift certificates and products from sponsoring manufacturers of model plane kits. The planes are not the foot-wide toys of the 1970s. They have up to a 140-inch wingspan and powerful engines.

"They aren't cheap," Verzyvelt said. "They can run anywhere from $1,500 to $10,000, although you can get a beginner's model for around $300. But it is a great family sport."

Fresh insights into the rural and ordinary

Times-News

We've driven past them, or maybe grew up in one: those places that are overlooked or dismissed because they are so ordinary. Using the iconic photographs of Walker Evans as a starting point, a new exhibition at the Sun Valley Center for the Arts looks at people and places outside the urban mainstream.

Titled "The Rural Vernacular," the exhibition includes large digital images by John Hill of Evans' classic Farm Security Administration pictures; photos of bars, billiard parlors and corner shops by Jim Dow; and an installation by Brittany Powell that will recreate (in contact paper) a small town backyard that both evokes life in the 1940s and pertains to rural life today.

"Evans has been such a major, major influence on photographers that we forget that his pictures were intended for newspapers and periodicals, not gallery walls," the center's Kristin Poole said in a press release. "What John Hill is doing is fascinating — he starts with the original photo but recreates it in digital format and enlarges it so that all kinds of previously unseen details become visible. Hill knows Evans' work and intentions as well as anyone — he taught with him at Yale, is the executor of his estate and is the author of several books about Evans.

"But he's not just replicating Evans' work; he's interpreting it so that it becomes something new."

Dow also has a connection to Evans: He printed Evans' photos for a retrospective at the Museum of Modern Art in 1971 and considers Evans a mentor, calling his photos "razor sharp ... pictures that seemingly read like paragraphs." Dow's work on exhibit includes color images of North Dakota storefronts, barbershops, cafes and drive-ins.

Poole said that Dow, "like Evans, delights in finding the profound in the ordinary."

Powell literally finds the profound in the ordinary. She covers walls with contact paper, then carefully cuts away the paper, exposing parts of the walls beneath to create images of life-size spaces. She has used this technique to recreate her childhood bedroom, a doughnut shop, a Mexican restaurant and scenes of horses.

Exhibition dates are June 5 through Aug. 8. Free exhibition tours are at 2 p.m. July 7 and Aug. 4; docents will offer visitors new insight into the artwork on display. A free evening exhibition tour is set for 5:30 p.m. July 9; enjoy a glass of wine while touring the exhibition with the curator.

Regular exhibition hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays-Fridays, plus 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturdays in July and August.

The center will serve drinks and appetizers and stay open until 8 p.m. for Gallery Walk on July 3 and Aug. 7.

A related exhibition, "Idaho's Fences," will be on display at The Center in Hailey, from June 5 through Aug. 31. In addition, art historian Clark Worswick, an expert on Evans, will give a free public lecture at The Center on June 18.

Novelist Brady Udall reads from new polygamy novel in Ketchum June 11

Times-News

Brady Udall, author of "The Miracle Life of Edgar Mint," will read from his soon-to-be-published novel at 7 p.m. June 11 at the Sun Valley Center for the Arts in Ketchum.

Udall received an MFA from the Iowa Writers' Workshop and teaches at Boise State University. His widely anthologized stories and non-fiction have been published in journals and magazines such as Esquire, GQ, Story and The Paris Review.

In addition to "Edgar Mint," he is the author of a short story collection, "Letting Loose the Hounds."

Published in 2001, "Edgar Mint" was an international bestseller and has been translated into more than 20 languages. The book garnered favorable comparisons to the work of John Irving and Charles Dickens, the Sun Valley Center said in a press release, although Udall said his biggest influence is Mark Twain: "There has never been a funnier writer, and yet very few have possessed a darker view of human existence."

Newsweek described the book as "extraordinary," "fall-down funny" and "like nothing you've ever read." A film adaptation is in production.

Udall's new novel, "The Lonely Polygamist," is slated to be published later this year. Although the book is fiction, it is rooted in Udall's curiosity about his family history. Udall is a descendant of a prominent

Udall

"It's not a sociological treatise about polygamy, but more a glimpse into what it would be like to live in such an extreme family situation," he said in the center's release.

"As I see it, it's a story about the American family writ large. I am the descendant of polygamists and would not exist if it weren't for polygamy; my great-great-grandmother was the second wife of my great-great-grandfather."

Udall will be in the Wood River Valley for a week teaching a fiction-writing workshop for the Sun Valley Center for the Arts. Students attending Udall's workshop will read from their work at 6 p.m. June 12 at The Center in Hailey.

There is no charge to attend either reading.

SUNDAY IN FAMILY LIFE

Romance novels thriving in tough economy

By Megan K. Scott
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — With an out-of-work husband and two children to support, Christine Mead needs a cheap — and uplifting — break from life.

So lately she's been escaping into sweet and heartening stories of love and passion, where heroines overcome insurmountable obstacles to find their happiness.

"I am left with a satisfied feeling at the end of a good book, a feeling of hope that all can, and will, be OK," said Mead, who lives in the small town of Festus, Mo., and suffers from fibromyalgia and osteoarthritis.

Mead, 41, rarely goes anywhere because of the price of gas, and the family has been relying on a food pantry. Romance novels, she said, are "a distraction from not knowing what's going to happen next."

Love may not conquer all in real life, but its power in relatively inexpensive books is quite a comfort in this economy. Publishers are seeing strong sales in the romance genre as other categories decline and consumers cut back on spending.

Harlequin Enterprises Ltd., a global giant in women's fiction, reported fourth-quarter earnings up 32 percent over the same period a year earlier, with U.S. retail sales up 9 percent in 2008.

For the week of May 10, romance book sales overall were up nearly 2.4 percent compared with the same week last year, according to Nielsen BookScan, which covers 75 percent of retail sales. Travel book sales were down 16 percent, detective/mystery and self-help were each down 17 percent and adult fiction overall, of which romance is a subgenre, was up 1 percent.

Jennifer Enderlin, associate publisher for St. Martin's Press, said romance is doing so well, the publisher is releasing 32 titles this year (more could be added), compared with 26 last year.

Books from notable authors, including Lora Leigh, Lisa Kleypas and Sherrilyn Kenyon, are experiencing healthy sales, she said.

Enderlin and other publishers said they're not surprised by the genre's success.

"If you really think about it, there is a little romance in virtually every book," said Laurie Parkin, vice president and publisher of Kensington Publishing Corp. Kensington has seen a 5 percent increase in sales for mass market paperback romances for its fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, she said.

"But especially when business is bad or business is down, people want to escape a little bit," Parkin added. "I think romance offers that in a wonderful, wonderful way."

When life is more stressful, people need that escape even more, said Nancy Molitor, a clinical psychologist in Wilmette, Ill. She said movie attendance and alcohol sales are also up. Romance novels are affordable and you can easily get them from the library or purchase them used.

"It's a healthy and positive coping mechanism," said Judith Orloff, a medical doctor and author of "Emotional Freedom." She said the stories help people find an oasis of calm.

Christine Dionne, 38, of Cloverdale, Ore., said romance was the soothing balm after one of her two sons died playing an asphyxiation game in 2004 at age 10. Now, she's reaching for more lighthearted fun romances as a distraction from financial and family troubles. Her husband, a truck driver, has had his hours cut and the farm where she works has taken a hit.

She said the books make her feel like she's something bigger than her tiny town and the small house that she rarely leaves. With little money to go out (she doesn't drive), she shops at Goodwill. Ramen has become a staple in the house.

"It's my connection to the world and I can visit other places and be somebody else — for just a little while," said Dionne, whose surviving son is 12.

But escapism is only part of the attraction, said best-selling author Janet Evanovich, who started out writing romance and then morphed into mystery. She likes romance because the characters are quirky, vibrant women who take charge, are tenacious and are able to overcome crises in their lives — characters women can identify with.

The books are a feel-good read, Enderlin said.

The endings may be predictable, but there's solace in knowing that things are going to turn out like they should.

For Diane Pershing, president of Romance Writers of America, the recession-proof romance is a no-brainer.

Romance novels offer "rich, complex stories about good people overcoming obstacles to achieve intimacy and an eventual joining of their lives," she said.

"Along the way, they have great sex," she said. "What's not to like?"

Things are looking 'Up' for Pixar, film

By Kenneth Turan
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — As success follows success for animation powerhouse Pixar, the pressure to maintain the streak must be phenomenal. Will the next film be the one that stumbles, the one that breaks stride? No one need worry, however, about "Up," Pixar's 10th and latest effort. It's not only good, it's one of Pixar's best. Some films are an obligation to write about; "Up" is the purest pleasure.

Although films such as "Toy Story," "A Bug's Life," "Toy Story 2," "Monsters, Inc." and "Wall-E" are tough to compete with, director and co-screenwriter Pete Docter, a Pixar veteran who had a credit on all those films, was able to push "Up" into the pantheon. He did it by letting his imagination fly away. Working with co-director and co-writer Bob Peterson, Docter came up with the idea of cranky 78-year-old Carl (voiced by Ed Asner) floating off to parts unknown when his house gets hoisted into the air by exactly 20,622 helium balloons. Try pitching that idea to your agent.

But what makes "Up" stand out is not just that core concept, but what the Pixar team has been able to do with it. Rarely has any film, let alone an animated one powered by the logic of dream and fantasy, been able to move so successfully — and so effortlessly — through so many different kinds of cinematic territory.

Because "Up" is a Pixar film, it's a given that it's going to be clever and playful. But "Up" also has the high excitement of an adventure story and enough genuine menace to make it only the second Pixar product (after "The Incredibles") to be rated PG instead of G.

There's also the wordless visual magic of that floating balloon-powered house as well as a truly wacky sense of humor involving a pack of dogs equipped with high-tech collars that turn their classically canine thoughts into words.

As if all this wasn't enough, "Up" also generates genuine emotion, and it does so by dealing unapologetically with one of Hollywood's last and most persistent taboos: old people.

Instead of a Clint Eastwood-type senior citizen who is fitter than people half his age, "Up" gives us a man who uses a walker and can't handle stairs but still manages to be heroic when it counts. And "Up's" multi-minute montage of the long married life of Carl and his wife, Ellie, is a small gem that will stay with you for a lifetime.

Although "Up" does so many things so well, the quality that stays with you longest is its fearlessness in the face of emotion.

This is a film that is heartfelt enough to restore your faith in whatever needs restoration.

— Monica Bloedel, choir member and artist

"It's so exciting because you incorporate this great music into one of the nicest galleries in the state," said Monica Bloedel, both a choir member and an artist.

The elite choir, which normally sings difficult requiems and Masses, will sing Abba's "Dancing Queen" and "Fernando," selections from "The Producers," "All That Jazz," "Jeekyll and Hyde" and "The Song That Goes Like This" from "Spamalot," as well as others.

"We did this for the first time last year and it was standing room only — people loved it," said choir member Rae DeVito.

"The gallery's acoustics are very good, what with its high ceilings, and it's very intimate because the seating is limited to 150 and the choir stands right in front of the audience."

Choir Director Dick Brown said the proceeds from the tickets will help the Caritas Chorale pay orchestra members for the Beethoven choral piece it plans to later this year.

Multidisciplinary: Closing ceremony for Sun Valley Center for the Arts' 'Farming in the 21st Century' exhibit

Held May 23 at Sun Valley Center in Ketchum

It was a little odd to go to a gallery and start opening canning jars to taste, but Blaine County canners proved fruit, jam and pickles are an art. Also engaging were the other artists' works, including preserved, worn Carhartts; wax shovel impressions; and giant photographic portraits of farmers.

James scores 37 as Cavs stay alive

By Tom Withers
Associated Press writer

CLEVELAND — LeBron James made a new guarantee: Game 6.

With Cleveland's wondrous season on the line, James had 37 points, 14 rebounds and 12 assists, and Mo Williams, who boldly predicted his team would come back and win this tight-as-can-be series, added 24 points in the Cavaliers' 112-102 victory over the Orlando Magic in Game 5 on Thursday night.

It's back to Florida for Game 6 on Saturday night at amped-up Amway Arena.

You expected anything else?

"I mean this was a big game for us," James said. "You never want to disappoint the home crowd by not coming out and play as hard as you can. It was win or go home."

The Magic overcame a 22-point deficit but missed their first opportunity to close out the Cavaliers, who are trying to become just the ninth team since 1947 to rally and win a series after being down 3-1. Orlando will have two more tries to reach the NBA finals for the first time since 1995.

For Cleveland, a city banking on James to deliver a championship after a 45-year drought, the MVP was again in a league of his own.

James scored 21 points in the second half — 17 in the fourth quarter — and had a hand in 29 of Cleveland's 34 points in the final 12 minutes.

Hedo Turkoglu scored 29 for Orlando, and Dwight Howard had 24 points and 10 rebounds before fouling out with 2:22 remaining when he was called for his sixth personal foul while trying to stop James on a drive.

2009 TIMES-NEWS SOFTBALL ATHLETE OF THE YEAR

KIMBERLY'S MAKINGS IS AREA'S QUEEN OF THE DIAMOND

ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News

Kimberly sophomore Nellie Makings is the 2009 Times-News Softball Athlete of the Year.

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

KIMBERLY — Two years ago, I wrote a story on the Magic Valley Sooners U-14 traveling summer softball team and talked to a shy eighth grader credited as the ace pitcher. The lead of the story was that these girls were the future of District IV softball, and it wasn't far off. The future is here, and that eighth grader is now a state champion in her sophomore season.

Following her seasonlong domination from the chalk circle,

Kimberly pitcher Nellie Makings is the 2009 Times-News Softball Athlete of the Year. With her in the circle and in the lineup, the Bulldogs were able to claim their second Class 3A state championship since 2007, going 27-3 through the season. She completed a 20-win season with only one loss, recording an ERA of 0.44 through 126 innings and allowing 15 runs, eight earned runs and striking out 200.

Makings said of the season: "We started out slow. We didn't really have our bats going. As the season went on, we got better, and toward the end we showed who we really were."

While many girls her age are about to make the leap from junior varsity to varsity, Makings was ready as a freshman, leading her team to a Class 3A state runner-up trophy. Her Sooners coach, Jamie Carlton, said that when she expressed an interest in pitching as an 8-year-old, she stood out instantly. Makings had the three things Carlton was looking for. She was coachable, had mental toughness and focus, and an ability to learn quickly.

"She's been phenomenal,"

Carlton said.

This year, she added a new pitch, a dropball, to her arsenal and built confidence through the season to use it to effect along with that devastating change-up of hers. Next, she'll further hone her accuracy. By her senior year, she could be as complete a high school pitcher as possible.

But have she and the Bulldogs peaked too early? Not according to them. For Makings and her teammates, every year is another test, another opportunity to find a weak spot and enforce it, another chance to earn a state trophy.

Women's Premier Soccer League hopes to aid soccer growth in T.F.

Players will take to Bruin Stadium tonight, chasing a ball from end to end with precious little time for a breather.

But it won't be the Twin Falls Bruins, and the players won't be chasing a football. At least, not that kind of football.

Instead, Boise Blitz FC will play host to Sparta United Salt Lake in the opening games of their Women's Premier Soccer League division campaigns. The division season starts with a weekend series tonight and Saturday for the club that bills itself as "Idaho's Team," and it begins at Bruin Stadium in Twin Falls.

Two Golden Eagles named to NJCAA softball All-American list

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

Then there were three.

Two Golden Eagles were named to the NJCAA Softball All-American Second Team with the addition of Megan Zimmerman and Cassi Merrill. They join Rachel Evans, who was tapped for third-team honors in 2008 to become the College of Southern Idaho's first softball All-American.

"It's a great honor for those two and for the program as a whole," CSI head coach Nick Baumert said.

"They put a lot of time and effort into their softball careers at CSI."

Zimmerman was a force of nature at the plate, leading the nation and the Scenic West Athletic Conference in home runs with 24. She ended 2009 with a .434 average for a new individual season record along with highest slugging percentage (.882), most at bats (221), runs scored (90), hits (96), doubles (21), home runs (24), runs batted in (85), total bases (195) and stolen base attempts (35). She paced the SWAC in runs scored, hits,

Merrill

Zimmerman

RBI's, home runs, total bases, total plate appearances and at bats.

She struck out only five times in 221 at bats.

As the starting catcher and later shortstop, Zimmerman recorded a .946 fielding percentage with 216 putouts and 16 errors.

"It's one of the biggest things that can happen," Zimmerman said. "It's awesome that both of us could make it. Our hard work paid off."

Merrill hit .369 as the lefty leadoff batter, smacking 10 home runs and driving in 54 runs. She stole 22 bases on 24 attempts and contributed 61 putouts and only five errors as the starting left fielder for a .923 fielding percentage.

Zimmerman and Merrill, along with infielder Ashley Chappel, were also named to the 2009 Louisville Sluggers/National Fastpitch Coaches Association NJCAA Division I All-West Region first team.

CSI finished 47-17-2 and second in both the regular-season conference race and the Region 18 Tournament. Zimmerman will move on to play with Utah Valley University, but Merrill's career has come to an end as she decided to finish schooling in Arizona.

SWAC regular-season and Region 18 Tournament champion Salt Lake Community College also saw two players make the list. Hayley Atiyeh was picked to the second team, while pitcher Sarah Clark made the third team. Atiyeh batted .404 with 11 home runs and 66 RBIs, while Clark served as the Bruins' ace, recording a 23-2 record. She had a 1.75 ERA and 161 strikeouts.

Salt Lake (49-9) qualified for the NJCAA National Tournament but was eliminated on the second day.

Calipari in wrong place at wrong time – twice

Freshly minted Kentucky basketball coach John Calipari hasn't been accused of wrongdoing, just being in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Twice. First at UMass, and now Memphis, Calipari walked out on programs ahead of allegations of major NCAA violations. Also coincidentally, both cases involved the best players he ever coached.

JIM LITKE

At UMass, it was Marcus Camby, who left for the NBA after his junior season in 1996 and later admitted he'd accepted money, jewelry, rental cars and prostitutes supplied by two agents while he was still in school. The NCAA vacated the Minutemen's Final Four appearance, but not before Calipari had vacated the premises for the greener pastures of the NBA.

At Memphis, the player in question was almost certainly Derrick Rose, who left after his freshman year and justified most of the hype during a sometimes-spectacular rookie season with the Chicago Bulls. Though Rose wasn't identified in a letter from the NCAA to the school alleging that someone took the SAT for a player who only played on the 2007-08 team, he was the only member of that Final Four squad who played just that one season.

Like UMass, Memphis is facing the possibility that the NCAA will decide to erase what arguably had been its finest performance to date. And just like at UMass, where he was cleared of any involvement with the mess, Calipari won't be around to find out how things turn out.

He skipped town in April for an eight-year, $31.65-million, perks-laden deal at Kentucky that made him the highest-paid college basketball coach in the land. Such is the state of the game, of course, that what happened to Calipari could happen to anybody.

Not the part about the stratospheric pay package, because only a handful of his colleagues could demand that kind of money with a straight face. Instead, we're talking about kids taking money under the table from agents or having a pal take their entrance or course exams without too many people being any the wiser.

The first sin has been occurring since "sports agent" became a job description, the second since the NCAA drew up rules about athletes' eligibility. Whether kids cheat more now than in the past remains anyone's guess. What isn't in doubt, though, is how much more Memphis coach John Calipari talks with Memphis guard Derrick Rose in the first half of the NCAA South Regional basketball final, in Houston. Rose, who led Memphis to the 2008 national title game, appears to be at the center of an NCAA investigation of major violations during that season.

UK countersues ex-coach Gillispie

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — The University of Kentucky countersued fired men's basketball coach Billy Gillispie on Thursday, claiming it doesn't owe him pay because he never signed a contract.

The employment dispute escalated when the university filed a lawsuit in Franklin Circuit Court in Kentucky, one day after Gillispie filed his own claim in Dallas, asking for $6 million in lost salary and undisclosed punitive damages, attorneys' fees and court costs.

Gillispie, who was fired March 27, was working under a seven-year memorandum of understanding but hadn't signed a formal contract during the two years he coached the Wildcats.

A call to Gillispie's attorney, Demetrios Anaipakos, was not immediately returned.

UK's lawyers are asking the court to rule that the two-page memorandum of understanding Gillispie signed after his hiring in 2007 was not the equivalent of a full contract.

money is at stake. The people at Kentucky who hired Calipari just two months ago hardly need reminding of that.

On Wednesday, Billy Gillispie, the coach Kentucky hired two years ago — after considering Calipari, according to reports at the time — sued the school claiming breach of contract and asked for at least $6 million in pay, punitive damages, attor-

Gillispie says it is and that he is entitled to $1.5 million a year for four of the five years left on the deal.

"UK contends that the (memorandum of understanding) is not an enforceable long-term contract of employment, and that it owes no damages to Gillispie, having paid him for each basketball season in which he coached," the lawsuit says.

Gillispie's claim accuses the school of fraud and breach of contract, saying it never intended to sign him long-term. However, the school claims the coach turned down at least six versions of a full employment contract, quibbling over the language involving what actions would constitute dismissal without pay.

University attorneys also argue that Kentucky, not Texas, is the proper place for any litigation between the two sides. They also claim that Gillispie's lawsuit wrongly targets the UK Athletics Association, which the school says is a "nonprofit supporting foundation that was not his employer."

neys' fees and court costs. Kentucky countersued Thursday, even while it waged a counteroffensive on another front, rebuffing critics who suggested they hadn't performed due diligence in hiring Calipari.

In a statement, Kentucky said it knew all along that Memphis might face violations because Calipari was "forthcoming" during the interview process about "issues under investigation"

Hard to say whether that bit of diligence made Calipari's hiring more cynical than it originally seemed. Either way, it helped explain why Kentucky athletic director Mitch Barnhart made a point of boasting at the time about how his own "compliance folks talked with the NCAA and checked records and facts" relating to Calipari, and how people at the highest levels of that organization "assured us how much they enjoyed working with John in that process."

No doubt.

Calipari can be charming when he wants, as evidenced by his bank account and the steady stream of talented recruits who flow to wherever he sets up shop. On short notice, he's already assembled in Lexington what some scouts consider the best freshman class in the past decade, including John Wall, the consensus No. 1 prep point guard in the nation.

Wall pleaded guilty Wednesday to a misdemeanor charge of breaking and entering, and entered a program for first offenders that could eventually clear his record. The charge came about after police in Wall's hometown of Raleigh, N.C., found him walking out of a vacant house, apparently little more than being in the wrong place at the wrong time.

And as Calipari can attest, it can happen to anyone.

Varitek's homers lift Sox over Twins

MINNEAPOLIS — Jason Varitek hit two home runs, then was one of four people ejected by young umpire Todd Tichenor during separate arguments in the seventh inning of Boston's 3-1 victory over the Minnesota Twins on Thursday.

The 32-year-old Tichenor, up from the Triple-A Pacific Coast League, gave the boot to both catchers and both managers during a wild seventh inning that ended with Red Sox starter Josh Beckett giving a dismissive wave toward home plate in disgust.

INDIANS 2, RAYS 1

CLEVELAND — Rookie David Huff and four relievers combined to stifle the Tampa Bay Rays and Victor Martinez drove in both runs for the Indians, who completed a four-game sweep of the defending American League champions.

It's the first four-game sweep for the Indians since they did it to the Rays last July 10-13 at Progressive Field. The Rays have lost 17 in a row in Cleveland and five in a row overall.

ORIOLES 5, TIGERS 1

BALTIMORE — Luke Scott homered twice and had four RBIs, David Hernandez pitched into the sixth inning to win his major league debut, and the Orioles beat Detroit for their season-high fourth straight victory.

Boston Red Sox batter Jason Varitek celebrates his second home run of the game as Minnesota Twins catcher Mike Redmond looks on in the seventh inning Thursday in Minneapolis.

Nolan Reimold also homered for the Orioles. The rookie has connected in three straight games and has five in 14 games since he was recalled from Triple-A Norfolk on May 14.

NATIONAL LEAGUE DODGERS 2, CUBS 1

CHICAGO — Randy Wolf pitched impressively into the eighth inning and Ramon Troncoso wriggled out of a bases-loaded jam in the ninth, giving the Los Angeles Dodgers a victory over the Chicago Cubs for their fourth straight win.

Juan Pierre had two hits and scored a run for the Dodgers, who have the best record in baseball at 34-15.

The Cubs have now lost nine of 11.

Nuggets look to get over the hump to force Game 7

Game 6

Lakers at Nuggets
7 p.m., ESPN

DENVER (AP) — To make the NBA Finals for the first time — and bring their tattoos, athleticism and exuberance to the biggest stage of all — the upstart Denver Nuggets must win two games in a 48-hour span against a savvy Los Angeles Lakers team that is shooting for its 30th Finals appearance.

Oh, and L.A. hasn't lost back-to-back games since March.

The Nuggets might very well be the better team in the Western Conference finals, with a deeper bench, more muscle and better health than the tired, injured and often disjointed Lakers. But they also tend to implode at the worst times.

There's the taunting after big shots, the complaining after calls and the botched inbounds passes that cost them Games 1 and 3 and a chance at brooming the Lakers right out of the playoffs.

Now, they're one loss away from summer vacation.

"For most of the series, we outplayed them for most stretches of the game," Chauncey Billups said. "We just couldn't get over the hump in the fourth quarter in a few different situations."

Nor can they get out of their own way at times.

Denver has committed 11 technical fouls in this series and defensive stud Dahntay Jones is one more flagrant-1 foul away from a suspension.

Coach George Karl said he won't rein in his players for Game 6 tonight in Denver, however.

"You guys are almost saying you've got to have savvy and poise to be a championship team," Karl told reporters Thursday. "I mean, you think the Detroit Pistons have the poise that the San Antonio Spurs have? No, I mean there's a different way of handling emotional, passionate, intense players. We have some guys who are emotional. Maybe a little too emotional. But for me, I'm not going to tell them to stop that because I think that stops them from becoming a competitor."

"Right now, we're competing on the best stage on a pretty good level. I think the Lakers know we're there."

The Lakers have plenty of their own problems, inconsistency among them, but in Game 5, they showed they're not always so soft in the middle and they don't have to be a one-man band, either.

The Lakers finally discovered ways to get more balanced play, especially from their bigs.

"That's what the conversation has been about this entire postseason, our team, our potential and our capabilities," Derek Fisher said.

Year off builds Brady's love of football

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. (AP) — In the almost nine months since Tom Brady was last seen on a football field, he's added a wife, a few pounds and a knee brace that won't let him forget the injury that cost him all of last season.

"The reality is, in this sport, you really never know. Any day could be your last day in football," the New England Patriots quarterback told a crush of reporters after practice on Thursday. "I don't think about the end too often. Hopefully this is still, relatively, in the early part of my career."

In his first news conference since torn knee ligaments finished his 2008 season in the opening game, Brady said he has moved on from the injury. But his comments showed that he's used some of his time off to think about the role football plays in his life.

Having married supermodel Gisele Bundchen and spent some extra time with his 21-month-old son, Jack, Brady said he's grown more appreciative of the things that are important to him.

New England Patriots quarterback Tom Brady at a media availability after football practice in Foxborough, Mass. Thursday.

One of them is football.

"I think when you sit on the sidelines for an entire year you realize how much you love it. ... You experience things in a much different way, and a way that I never experienced as an athlete," he said. "I love being out here. I love participating and being around these guys."

A two-time Super Bowl Most Valuable Player and the NFL MVP in 2007, Brady crumpled to the ground last September when he was tackled in the pocket by Kansas City Chiefs safety Bernard Pollard. He had surgery in October and then another to clear up an infection, and he wore a knee brace under his long sweat pants on Thursday.

"You wake up the next day and think, 'Was that a dream? Because that's not really how I thought it was going to go,'" Brady said. "I think I felt bad for myself that night, and I think I moved on after that. Since then, it's about trying to get better."

On other topics, Brady said:

- He is a few pounds over his playing weight.

- He would rather not wear the brace, but he acceded to the demands of the team's trainer.

- He hasn't talked to other quarterbacks who have had reconstructive knee surgery, though he has talked to teammates who went through the same thing.

- He is looking forward to the team's game against the Buccaneers in London this year: "I'd much rather play in London than at Tampa's stadium."

- The team will find a way to replace offensive coordinator Josh McDaniels, who left to become the head coach of the Denver Broncos.

add to that," said Boise Blitz general manager and head coach Trish Mabe. "We also feel like we're Idaho's team so we really want help grow the game here in the state."

Boise Blitz is part of the top women's amateur soccer league in the nation, playing in the league's Big Sky North Division. Most of the players on the roster are playing collegiately somewhere, Mabe said, and take the summer to play for the Blitz to hone their craft.

While furthering their own skills is a part of the equation, Mabe said that a larger goal exists, one that would see the game grow on a grassroots level by reaching people who might not otherwise turn their heads toward "the beautiful game."

Through a free skills clinic available for ages 8-12 before each of the matches at Bruin Stadium, Mabe hopes that connections will be made and the love for soccer will be kindled anew.

"Ultimately these girls are role models, and instead of watching someone on TV and cheering for them, they can really connect with these girls," Mabe said. "Having those experiences before the games really help create those connections, and then they can say they're cheering for college players. It gives them a lot of motivation, energy and hope to different young kids that they can do the same thing."

Kickoff is at 6:35 tonight, with the second game to be played at 1:05 p.m., Saturday.

Federer struggles in 2nd round at French Open

PARIS (AP) — Close doesn't count. Roger Federer knows that as well as anyone.

Still, even Federer had to acknowledge he found himself in a much tighter and tougher match than he would have expected — or is used to — in the French Open's second round Thursday before producing a 7-6 (8), 5-7, 7-6 (2), 6-2 victory over Jose Acasuso of Argentina.

How near did the 45th-ranked Acasuso come to a startling upset — in straight sets, no less? On four occasions, the Argentine was a point from taking the first set. After winning the second, he held a set point in the third.

Federer, whose season hasn't been up to his high standards, was up to the task each time, though.

"Mentally, I've always been very strong, but I'm not being put in a position like this very often, you know," Federer said. Then, moments later, as if to make sure everyone understood him, Federer added: "Coming through such a match is always a great feeling. Like I said, I'm not part of such close matches that often."

Particularly at this stage of a Grand Slam tournament. And particularly against anyone other than Rafael Roger Federer reacts after winning a point against Jose Acasuso during their second-round match at the Roland Garros stadium in Paris on Thursday.

Nadal, who supplanted Federer at No. 1 in the rankings last year and edged him in five-set Wimbledon and Australian Open finals.

"I thought," Acasuso said, "I could have won this match."

But this has not been a French Open for underdogs or upsets, and no seeded men lost Thursday, when the winner included No. 5 Juan Martin del Potro, No. 6 Andy Roddick, No. 9 Jo-Wilfried Tsonga, No. 10 Nikolay Davydenko, No. 11 Gael Monfils and No. 16 Tommy Robredo.

Four seeded women went home, though none higher than No. 13 Marion Bartoli. Those moving into the third round included both Williams sisters — Venus needed three sets, Serena two — No. 5 Jelena Jankovic, No. 7 Svetlana Kuznetsova and No. 4 Elena Dementieva, who advanced when Jelena Dokic stopped playing because of a bad back while leading 6-2, 3-4.

"I really don't deserve to win today because of the way I was playing," Dementieva said.

The biggest surprise Thursday might have been how well Roddick played, given that he hadn't made the third round at Roland Garros since his 2001 tournament debut.

"There's a lot of work to go," said Roddick, the only U.S. man remaining of the nine who entered the tournament. "By no means have I accomplished anything yet."

In his 6-2, 6-2, 7-6 (2) victory over 85th-ranked Ivo Minar of the Czech Republic, Roddick hit 15 aces, saved all four break points he faced and won the point on 23 of 26 trips to the net.

"I'm not going to sit here and jump up on a soap box like I'm really good on this stuff now because I won two matches. I think that's what you need to guard against," Roddick said. "Today I felt pretty good, and I felt pretty in control of what I was doing."

Singh 1 shot back in return to Colonial

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Vijay Singh stopped playing at the Colonial Country Club when Annika Sorenstam showed up in 2003. He's finally back — and among the leaders.

Singh shot a 6-under 64 on Thursday, leaving him a stroke behind Woody Austin, Tim Clark and Steve Stricker after the first round of the Crowne Plaza Invitational.

"This is a good way to start a tournament," Singh said.

Singh played the event all but once from 1996-2002. He was scheduled to return in '03, then withdrew after making comments critical of the decision to allow a woman into the field. The gallery mocked his absence that week (his name on the side of chicken hats, T-shirts that read, "Singh a different tune, Vijay"), but folks seemed to have forgiven and forgotten on Thursday.

He heard cheers when he birdied five straight holes in the middle of his round and people groaned along with him when he hit the flagstick on his 15th hole. The good vibe likely was aided by his pairing with Kenny Perry, a two-time champion, and Brian Gay, who was born in Fort Worth and considers this his favorite course.

Singh described the support from the gallery as "no more than I had last week."

"I haven't been playing this well so they've been very quiet," he said, laughing. "Maybe they're going to start making noise here soon."

Earnhardt's crew chief out

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt Jr. will have a new crew chief starting with this weekend's race at Dover because of a slump that has dragged deep into the season.

Tony Eury Jr. was removed as crew chief of Earnhardt's No. 88 team Thursday. The two are cousins and have worked together during Earnhardt's entire career.

"It seemed the harder we pushed, the more it unraveled," team owner Rick Hendrick told The Associated Press. "We need a new reason to get up and go to the track each morning, and the chemistry had broken down between them to the point where we just needed a fresh start."

Team manager Brian Whitesell will be the crew chief this weekend. Lance McGrew will take over in two weeks on an interim basis as Hendrick decides on a long-term plan for NASCAR's most popular driver.

As tensions rise, fishing boats leave Korean sea

By Siyoung Lee
Associated Press writer

YEONPYEONG, South Korea — Chinese fishing boats were pulling out of the Yellow Sea possibly because of fears of military clashes between the Koreas, a media report said Friday, a day after North Korea renounced a truce keeping the peace on the peninsula.

It was not clear if the vessels — in the area for the crabbing season — were directed by the North to leave or if they were doing so of their own volition.

The disputed waters off the Koreas' western coast were the site of two deadly clashes during previous times of high tension in 1999 and 2002. Tensions were high again this week after the North conducted its second nuclear test, fired several short-range missiles and then announced the 1953 truce that ended the Korea War was void.

About a dozen Chinese ships could be seen pulling out of port from Yeonpyeong, the closest South Korean island to the North, and heading elsewhere, the Yonhap news agency reported. The agency said that more than 280 Chinese vessels were fishing in the area earlier this week, but the number has dropped to about 140.

South Korean and U.S. troops facing North Korea raised their surveillance on Thursday to its highest level since 2006, when North Korea tested its first nuclear device.

North Korea, whose 1.2-million strong military is one of the world's largest, says that it is merely preparing to defend itself against what it says are plans by the United States to launch a pre-emptive strike to overthrow its communist government.

It has been especially critical of Washington's decision to deploy a squadron of F-22 fighter jets — the most advanced in the Air Force — to the southern Japan island of Okinawa. The 12 fighters are to arrive on Okinawa on Saturday, according to a statement issued by Kadena Air Base.

In Washington, the Army's top officer, Gen. George Casey, expressed confidence that the U.S. could fight a conventional war against North Korea if necessary, despite continuing conflicts elsewhere.

But U.S. Defense Secretary Robert Gates, who is traveling to Singapore for regional defense talks, tried to lower the temperature.

"I don't think that anybody in the (Obama) administration thinks there is a crisis," Gates told reporters aboard his military jet early this morning.

AROUND THE NATION

WASHINGTON

Obama presses for Middle East peace

Gingerly trying to advance Mideast peace, President Obama on Thursday challenged Israel to stop settlement construction in the West Bank on the same day the Israelis rejected that demand. Obama pushed Palestinians for progress, too, deepening his personal involvement.

"I am confident that we can move this process forward," Obama said after meeting with Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas at the White House. The president said that means both sides must "meet the obligations that they've already committed to" — an element of the peace effort that has proved elusive for years.

Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas told The Associated Press after the session with Obama that no meetings with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu are on the horizon. He said there are no preconditions for such a meeting but "obligations" on Israel through the so-called road map for ending the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Multiracial people are fastest-growing group

Multiracial Americans have become the fastest growing demographic group, having an impact on minority growth that challenges traditional notions of race.

The number of multiracial people rose 3.4 percent last year to about 5.2 million, according to the latest census estimates. First given the option in 2000, Americans who check more than one box for race on census surveys have jumped by 33 percent and now make up 5 percent of the minority population — with millions more believed to be uncounted.

Demographers attributed the recent population growth to more social acceptance and slowing immigration. They cited in particular the high public profiles of Tiger Woods and President Barack Obama, a self-described "mutt," who are having an effect on those who might self-identify as multiracial.

Population figures as of July 2008 show that California, Texas, New York and Florida had the most multiracial people, due partly to higher numbers of second- and later-generation immigrants who are more likely to "marry out." Measured by percentages, Hawaii ranked first with nearly 1 in 5 residents who were multiracial, followed by Alaska and Oklahoma, both at roughly 4 percent.

Kansas girl wins National Spelling Bee

Cool and collected, Kavya Shivashankar wrote out every word on her palm and always ended with a smile. The 13-year-old Kansas girl saved the biggest smile for last, when she rattled off the letters to "Laodicean" to become the nation's spelling champion.

The budding neurosurgeon from Olathe, Kan., outlasted 11 finalists Thursday night to win the Scripps National Spelling Bee, taking home more than $40,000 in cash and prizes and, of course, the huge champion's trophy.

After spelling the winning word, which means lukewarm or indifferent in religion or politics, Kavya got huge hugs from father Mirle, mother Sandy and little sister Vanya.

$232M lottery ticket sold in ranch town

WINNER — It's been 100 years since this South Dakota ranch town lived up to its name, but it has done so in a big way for whoever bought a Powerball ticket worth $232.1 million.

Word spread quickly that the winning ticket had been sold this community of about 3,000 people.

Friends and neighbors greeted each other Thursday with one question: Who won?

"How often does something like this happen — a winner in Winner, S.D.?" said Norm Lingle, executive director of the South Dakota Lottery.

Sotomayor's views on abortion still unknown

By Julie Hirschfeld Davis
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — One of the few things conservatives and liberals agree on when it comes to Sonia Sotomayor is that her views on abortion rights are a mystery — and one that must be solved before she can be confirmed as a Supreme Court justice.

Sotomayor's nomination has reopened a politically and emotionally charged debate over abortion that's energized interest groups on the left and right — all working to draw members, money and attention by ensuring the issue features prominently in the judge's confirmation hearings.

Unlike many liberal organizations that came out swiftly and enthusiastically to back Sotomayor, abortion-rights groups are withholding their support until she answers questions on the court's 1973 legalization decision and the principles behind it.

NARAL Pro Choice America has praised her experience and background but has stopped well short of endorsing her. "We look forward to learning more about Judge Sotomayor's views on the right to privacy and the landmark Roe v. Wade decision as the Senate's hearing process moves forward," the group's president, Nancy Keenan, said Tuesday, the day the nomination was announced.

She declined through a spokesman Thursday to comment further on the subject. The group is asking supporters to urge senators to ask Sotomayor about Roe and the right to privacy.

Neither abortion rights advocates nor foes take any comfort from the abortion-related cases on which Sotomayor has ruled as a federal judge — none of which were decided based on the principles or precedents underlying Roe v. Wade.

"I don't think anybody can draw a conclusion," said

Charmaine Yoest, the president of Americans United for Life, which opposes abortion rights. "Given the fact that she has been so outspoken about the view that her personal opinions and personal characteristics come into play at the bar, that's very troubling to us."

On the opposite side, Vicki Saporta, president of the National Abortion Federation, said: "We don't have enough information to take a position at this time. We're waiting to learn more about Judge Sotomayor's views on the constitutional right to privacy, including the right to choose."

The White House edged carefully around the issue Thursday in an animated question-and-answer session in which reporters pressed to know whether President Barack Obama had ascertained Sotomayor's views before nominating her.

Robert Gibbs, the White

House spokesman, said the two discussed Sotomayor's "views on unenumerated rights in the Constitution and the theory of settled law" — both of which have been buzz-phrases for backers of the 1973 decision. In Roe, the court recognized a right to privacy even though it's not spelled out in the Constitution. Abortion-rights backers consider the decision "settled law" — a kind of super-precedent that has survived long enough without major challenge that it shouldn't be reconsidered.

Obama was "very comfortable with her interpretation of the interpretation being similar to that of his," Gibbs said, declining to provide more specifics.

The White House says Obama didn't ask Sotomayor specifically about her view of Roe v. Wade or privacy rights, even though as a presidential candidate in 2007, he said, "I would not appoint somebody who doesn't believe in the right to privacy."

2009 SUBARU TRIBECA CROSSOVER SUV

ELEGANT MOTORING!

RoadWorthy!
By Ken Chester, Jr.
Motor News Media
Corporation

Last year, Subaru's flagship crossover SUV was completely redesigned with more power, more styling, more safety, more comfort and convenience features. Inside and out, this versatile, all-wheel drive vehicle is stunning—especially the redesigned cockpit.

Crisp, elegant exterior design gives Tribeca a strong road presence without relying on overbearing styling elements. The grille, integrated into the front bumper, features a chrome spread-wing design, with the Subaru star cluster badge as the focal point. The side profile features powerful fender and wheel forms that enhance the signature rising character line.

For 2009, a new Special Edition model adds leather seating, heated front seats, 2-position memory driver's seat, 160-watt 6-CD audio system, upgraded speakers, rear sub-woofer and headliner-mounted rear tweeters, and rear air conditioning to the base models at a special price. In addition, a new Ruby

Red metallic exterior paint color was added to the color palette.

Available in Base, Special Edition and Limited trim levels and five- or seven-passenger configurations, the Tribeca is powered by a 3.6L horizontally opposed six-cylinder Boxer engine mated to a five-speed automatic transmission with SPORTSHIFT.

The Subaru Tribeca delivers a highly engaging driving experience and top safety performance with Subaru quality. Vehicle Dynamics Control (VDC) and a four-wheel traction control system (TCS) enhance the capabilities of the standard Variable Torque Distribution (VTD) version of Subaru Symmetrical All-Wheel Drive.

Subaru's Symmetrical All-Wheel Drive system incorporates variable torque distribution with vehicle dynamics control stability and four-wheel traction control to provide enhanced handling and traction in all types of driving conditions. It also features 8.4 inches of ground clearance, yet has a low center of gravity and a very comfortable, car-like step-in height not normally associated with an SUV. Ride and handling is very impressive as is occupant comfort in the modern cabin. It also provides plenty of room for cargo. Standard features include 18-inch wheels, 100-watt audio system with CD player and MP3 capability, 8-way power driver's seat, cruise control, dual-zone climate control system with air filtration, four 12-volt power outlets, leather-wrapped steering wheel with audio controls, multifunctional display with information system, fog lights, power door locks, power mirrors with integrated LED turn signals, power windows and remote keyless entry, to name just a few.

Gal pal dreams of being more than just a friend

DEAR ABBY: I am a 30-year-old woman who is deeply smitten with a close friend I'll call "Andy." He often tells me about other women he's interested in. As his friend, I am more than happy to listen to his troubles and offer advice. At the same time, it's not always easy to hear about these women because of my feelings for him.

Do you think that once someone is in the "friend zone" it's possible to move beyond that? Or am I doomed to a lifetime of being "the friend"?

— WANTING MORE
IN NEW YORK

DEAR WANTING MORE: You are not "doomed to a lifetime of being the friend" unless you aid and abet the "perp." Your problem is you are making yourself too available. It's time to start developing other interests and other relationships. What Andy needs is a chance to miss you. And if that doesn't happen, you will have already moved on.

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter is 33 and living in another state. We haven't seen her in three years. Her life has been going steadily downhill since high school, her periods of employment are becoming shorter and less frequent.

IF MAY 29 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: By now you have learned your lessons well and realize it is best to see which way the wind blows before acting. A special spark of inspiration will light the way so that you can achieve important business or career goals in August or next March. In October, just when you need a break from dull routine, you could be swept away by a romantic relationship or enjoy a glamorous vacation. In November, new contacts can widen your horizons, perhaps because you are invited to join an organization filled with people who share your interests.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): There may be an urge to take someone to the woodshed. However, those primitive feelings can be tamed. Don't slip back into bad habits. You will be much happier if household tasks are completed.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Knowing that you prefer blue, a loved one could deliberately choose red just to demonstrate there is a choice. A small difference of opinion or temporary shift of attention will not harm a solid relationship.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Let worries fall away like water off the duck's back. You may be hard pressed to remain civil when forced to defend yourself, and may be tempted to tell a white lie to cover your embarrassment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You could be temporarily between a rock and a hard place. Circumstances beyond your control may place you in a defensive position, but defending your position could create dissension with others.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are spinning your wheels and not getting anywhere. Numerous distractions may interfere with your concentration. Things will run more smoothly in your love life than with business or investments.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be as generous and cooperative with others as possible and avoid conflicts. You do not need to act defensively or provoke others because things will work out if you allow others to do their own thing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Going to extremes can be extremely challenging. You are apt to splurge on some extravagant entertainments and may be in for a big surprise when your muscles ache after unaccustomed activities.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You can get a lot accomplished by working from home. You may be tempted to throw your weight around. People may be somewhat irritated if you insist on taking your place at the head of the line.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may prefer to stand out in the crowd and receive all the applause, but being a part of a community of like-minded people and giving credit where it is due will get you further in the end.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Those who shine the brightest make the easiest targets. Don't let your competitive spirit get in the way of peaceful cooperation with brilliant companions. Exercise patience in the face of argument.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The upcoming weekend will provide you with plenty of opportunities to rise and shine. Plan to show off your sparkling personality by entertaining a significant other within the privacy of your own nest.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Serenity and orderliness are important to you, so create an atmosphere in which you can relax and feel comfortable. Clean up and de-clutter your surroundings and set the stage for romantic pleasures.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

She calls more often than before because she needs money.

We have urged her to get therapy (we have no idea what her problems are) and have offered to pay for it.

My wife and I know we can't influence our daughter to change her life, but we agonize when we think about her wasted life. We have mourned loved ones who have died and have been able to move on, but every morning I think about my daughter, and my heart breaks a little more each time. Is there help for parents like us who need to let go?

— ANGUISHED DAD
IN VIRGINIA

DEAR DAD: My heart goes out to you. Yes, there is help, and it is the same kind of help you offered to your daughter. As much as you love her, until she is ready to accept that she needs professional help to get back on track there is nothing you or anyone can do.

Alcoholics Anonymous meetings close with some-tempted to tell a white lie to cover your embarrassment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You could be temporarily between a rock and a hard place. Circumstances beyond your control may place you in a defensive position, but defending your position could create dissension with others.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are spinning your wheels and not getting anywhere. Numerous distractions may interfere with your concentration. Things will run more smoothly in your love life than with business or investments.

tempted to tell a white lie to cover your embarrassment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You could be temporarily between a rock and a hard place. Circumstances beyond your control may place you in a defensive position, but defending your position could create dissension with others.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are spinning your wheels and not getting anywhere. Numerous distractions may interfere with your concentration. Things will run more smoothly in your love life than with business or investments.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be as generous and cooperative with others as possible and avoid conflicts. You do not need to act defensively or provoke others because things will work out if you allow others to do their own thing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Going to extremes can be extremely challenging. You are apt to splurge on some extravagant entertainments and may be in for a big surprise when your muscles ache after unaccustomed activities.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You can get a lot accomplished by working from home. You may be tempted to throw your weight around. People may be somewhat irritated if you insist on taking your place at the head of the line.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may prefer to stand out in the crowd and receive all the applause, but being a part of a community of like-minded people and giving credit where it is due will get you further in the end.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Those who shine the brightest make the easiest targets. Don't let your competitive spirit get in the way of peaceful cooperation with brilliant companions. Exercise patience in the face of argument.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The upcoming weekend will provide you with plenty of opportunities to rise and shine. Plan to show off your sparkling personality by entertaining a significant other within the privacy of your own nest.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Serenity and orderliness are important to you, so create an atmosphere in which you can relax and feel comfortable. Clean up and de-clutter your surroundings and set the stage for romantic pleasures.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

"It's them that take advantage of this world that get advantage in this world."
— George Eliot

What do you think declarer's chances are in today's four spades? You might say "not good," but if you knew that declarer was the redoubtable Boris Schapiro, you might adjust your thinking.

The scandal in Buenos Aires has tended to cloud people's recollection of him as a player, but you had to get up very early in the morning to outfox Boris!

The deal occurred in the European Championships held in Ireland 50 years ago.

Against four spades (reached after an old-fashioned but reasonable auction), West led the diamond three to East's king and South's ace. It looks as if declarer must lose a diamond and three spades, but watch the master at work.

Schapiro led the club jack, covered by the king and ace, and then the heart queen, also covered by the king and ace. He now cashed the heart jack and led the eight. West understandably (but wrongly) played low, so Schapiro discarded dummy's remaining diamond. Note that this was a no-cost play — at worst he was swapping one loser for another.

Now declarer ruffed a diamond in dummy, ruffed a club in hand, and ruffed his last diamond in dummy. This brought his trick total up to eight. He now played dummy's club queen and discarded his last heart. West ruffed, but Schapiro's last four cards were the K-Q-9-6 of trumps and he could not be prevented from making two more tricks.

ANSWER: You might guess which major to bid at the one-level and hope you were lucky. Alternatively, you might cue-bid two clubs. Since you are a passed hand, this suggests values, but not necessarily a game-force. So if partner now bids a major at the two-level, you can simply pass the response, assuming he has no extras. With a good hand, he should do more than make a minimum response.
