CONTECH Construction Projects Inc. worker Doug Brown is comforted by his wife, Amy, as his daughter, Rylee, looks over the scene of an accident that left Brown's Twin Falls workspace inside a small metal shop ruined Tuesday. Brown had just stepped outside to answer the phone when an SUV struck the shop after smashing into a power pole. He could only shake his head at the thought of what would've happened had he still been inside.

Forest Service: $228M to fix roads, bridges

Idaho to get $44 million under plan, the most of any state

By Matthew Daly
 Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — National forest roads and bridges in 31 states will get long-needed repairs under an economic stimulus spending plan announced by the Obama administration.

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said Tuesday that $228 million in economic stimulus money will be used for road maintenance and decommissioning and watershed restoration in dozens of national forests.

A total of 106 projects in 31 states will be paid for as part of the $1.15 billion in economic stimulus funding awarded to the Forest Service, Vilsack said, adding that the projects should improve access to forest lands, boost public health and safety and preserve natural resources throughout the country.

More than half the money goes to five Western states — Idaho, Oregon, Montana, California and Washington — where the need is greatest, officials said. Alaska, Arizona, Colorado and Michigan also receive significant funding.

SUV knocks down power pole, crashes into T.F. business

By Nate Poppino
 Times-News writer

A Twin Falls driver mysteriously swerved into a power pole before crashing his SUV into a Kimberly Road business on Tuesday afternoon.

The crash shut down the road between Locust Drive and Eastland Drive for about an hour and 40 minutes, but resulted in no more than minor injuries to the driver, police said. An employee at CONTECH Construction Projects Inc. narrowly escaped injury, leaving the building just one minute before the vehicle tore it up.

According to Twin Falls police, Kenneth M. Simmons, 45, was headed west on Kimberly in a Chevrolet Tahoe at about 1:39 p.m. when he veered south into a wooden power pole next to Carquest Auto Parts, at the corner of Kimberly and Madrona Street. The Tahoe knocked over the pole and broke a water line in Carquest's front landscaping before crossing Madrona, where it narrowly avoided another power pole. It then ruptured a natural-gas line before plowing into the CONTECH shop.

The accident ruptured both a gas line and water line, and left a loose power line dangling across the busy street.

Otter signs order on worker documentation

The Associated Press

BOISE — Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter has signed an executive order requiring state agencies to prove they are employing only legally documented workers if they want a share of the state's $1.24 billion in federal economic stimulus money.

Otter

The order also requires contractors and subcontractors on state projects to prove their employees are legal.

"The bottom line is it's protecting the taxpayers of Idaho because they are the ones who will have to pay this money back," Otter spokesman Jon Hanian told the Coeur d'Alene Press. "Taxpayer money should go to the benefit of taxpayers."

The order signed Friday applies to all state agencies, but not the Department of Education, Legislature or courts.

Most of the state's federal stimulus money is going to education and health and welfare programs.

Sen. Mike Jorgenson, R-Hayden Lake, helped write the order.

"In this economy, with 53,000 people unemployed around the state, we have to eliminate the possibility of illegals getting

Suspected Sun Valley pipe bomb may have been 'holistic healing item'

By Ariel Hansen
 Times-News writer

When construction workers at the Sun Valley White Clouds subdivision found on an open area of ground a piece of PVC pipe capped on both ends with what looked like a fuse this morning, they thought they'd found a pipe bomb.

And rightly so — that's what it looked like, said Staff Sgt. Dan Lewin of the Twin Falls Hazardous Devices Unit.

What it turned out to be was something more innocent, but a lot weirder, Lewin believes.

"It was found to be a length of iron rod, wrapped with copper wire and tinfoil," he said.

Other bomb squads across the country have found similar items over the years and discovered they were placed on the ground by people intending to heal the environment.

"They believe wrapping the iron rod with the copper wire has something to do with magnetic north; it's almost a holistic healing item," Lewin said. "I'm going to do a little more research when I get home but I don't think it was a (bomb) hoax."

Sun Valley Police Chief Cam Daggett is skeptical of any potential positive effect such a device might have, instead emphasizing that leaving plastic

Crash

The incident is under investigation, Staff Sgt. Dennis Pullin said later that afternoon, and police aren't quite sure what caused Simmons to leave the road. It's not clear yet if he will be cited for the incident, Pullin said.

Simmons' Tahoe came to rest right where Doug Brown had been working on a welding project minutes before.

Staring at the wreckage of his shop, Brown said he stepped out to answer a phone call just half a minute to a minute before the SUV slammed through the wall.

"I'd just be pieces over there," Brown said.

Simmons himself received only minor physical injuries. As emergency medical workers examined him at the site of the crash, police said they expected him to be able to leave with family.

"Everybody's pretty lucky with this one," Pullin said, noting the lack of injuries.

Police, firefighters and utility workers all responded to the crash, and the broken gas line was shut off right away, Pullin said. Police diverted traffic around the area, and workers started clearing off Kimberly Road at about 3:18 p.m.

Idaho Power Co. spokesman Russ Jones said the broken power pole only affected one customer, most likely the CONTECH building.

Businesses around the gas leak were not evacuated, largely because the leak was so brief, Pullin said. Police rely on information from the gas company and fire department when deciding whether evacuations are necessary, he said.

Workers were able to pull the Tahoe out of the CONTECH building without tearing more of it up, Pullin said. But he noted that the building still seemed totaled. Police do not have a dollar estimate of the damage caused, he said.

officers some space to work in county digs, which are also being leased partly to St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center.

County investigators, some of them undercover, poured out of a room Tuesday that was off-limits to visitors in the basement of 660 Shoshone St.

But this new official lair for county sleuths still has about 18 empty desks.

And the city may have some officers to fill them, said Twin Falls Police Capt. Matt Hicks.

"There appears to be some potential benefits," said Hicks about the proposal to share office space. "The lack of sufficient space here ... That's something we've identified several years ago as an immediate need. That's obviously another possible benefit of this, along with working closely with the sheriff's office."

Hicks said the city could move 15 staff members in the criminal investigation division out of the Twin Falls Police Department at 356 Third Ave., though potential costs, such as rent, utilities and moving expenses, are still being discussed.

"It's in the conceptual stage," Hicks said, adding that "having all of it under one roof has proven beneficial for over 100 years."

It would be unprecedented for that many officers to work outside of the city police department's main building, Hicks said. "We're trying to capture having a new sheriff and the enthusiasm there ... To start that information sharing now."

Sheriff's office authorities said they want city police to move in soon, as only five of 22 cubicles are filled right now.

"There's a lot of empty space," said Sheriff's Lt. Brent Hilliard during a tour Tuesday of the roomy office space. "That's usually not the case. We're looking forward to hopefully getting the city over here."

Schroeder adjusts, upholds A&B opinion

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

The hearing officer for a water call made by a Rupert-based irrigation district has revised some parts of an opinion he issued on the call after the district requested him to review the matter again.

A&B Irrigation District, which irrigates 62,600 acres, made a water delivery call on other groundwater pumpers in March 2007, alleging in part that the state had failed to follow through on a 1994 promise to manage the aquifer that both the district and pumpers get their water from.

Idaho Department of Water Resources Director Dave Tuthill denied the call in January 2008, writing that the district had failed to show actual material injury caused by the other pumpers. A&B officials then requested a review of his decision.

Hearing officer and former Idaho Chief Justice Gerald Schroeder wrote in his late-March opinion that A&B should do more to improve its own wells before seeking mitigation water from nearby groundwater pumpers.

But the district petitioned him to reconsider that opinion, arguing that it ignored state law and damage done by the pumpers.

In an order signed Friday, Schroeder clarified a couple of issues raised by A&B. He deleted "misleading" references to "catastrophic loss" that A&B attorneys worried set a new benchmark for proving injury to a water right. He also wrote that it was not his intent to imply that the district's right was reduced or readjudicated, and clarified that he believes Tuthill should review new evidence and findings from his opinion that were not in the original call denial as Tuthill prepares his own final order on the case.

But Schroeder did not reverse his main finding that the pumpers owe nothing as of yet to the district.

"...(A)t this point when A&B has not been required to exceed reasonable pumping levels to obtain the amount of the decreed right the burden of curtailment or mitigation has not passed to the junior ground water users," he wrote.

Travis Thompson, one of the attorneys representing A&B, declined to comment on Schroeder's order on Tuesday, saying that the district plans to pursue further administrative remedies available to it.

The recommended opinion serves as advice to Tuthill as he forms his final order.

around is littering and that responding to the call this morning cost the city of Sun Valley, Sun Valley Co. and the Twin Falls bomb squad money and time.

But it wasn't a crime, and if someone comes forward with an innocent explanation for the device, they won't be in criminal trouble.

"We would hope that if somebody did make this for a legitimate purpose, they would call," Lewin said.

Police and fire personnel cleared the area by 10 a.m., including two holes of the nearby golf course and hikers from neighboring hills, until the bomb squad arrived. Although the squad has remote equipment that can approach suspected explosive devices, in this case a squad member went to the pipe and used a tool to break it open, finding the rod, wire and foil inside. The scene was cleared by about 3 p.m.

"They had this thing that they shot at it that opened it, but there was no explosion, thank goodness," said Jeff Carnes, Sun Valley fire chief, describing the procedure as a remote detonation. He said that in his 36 years on the force in town, there have only been three explosive-device scares. The previous one, 10 years ago, was a hoax.

squad, on the other hand,

has had a busy spring, responding to a cell phone under an egg carton left outside a dialysis center in Twin Falls, an actual pipe bomb found during a Hailey drug raid, and three other incidents this year.

"We always caution people that if they find anything that's out of the norm, don't touch it and contact the authorities," Lewin said. "That's what we're here for."

Rex Leland Highway near Wendell to open this week

Reconstruction on a major commerce and commuting route in southern Gooding County is complete and the route is ready to reopen, according to the Idaho Transportation Department.

A portion of the Rex Leland Highway, 1950 East Road south from Wendell, will open to traffic beginning Thursday after a closure of more than two months for improvements.

Following several rock blasts, more than 17,000 cubic yards of material were hauled and placed to rebuild the hazardous one-mile section. The reconstruction effort included rebuilding two lateral canal crossings and changing the road profile to increase sight distance.

The road is the main route south from Wendell to the Bob Barton Highway and southern travel toward Buhl. The federally-funded $1.1 million project was sponsored by the Wendell Highway District and administered by ITD.

BLM proposes removing sick trees

The U.S. Bureau of Land Management's Shoshone Field Office has asked for public comment on a plan to remove diseased trees from a 250-acre area of the agency's land.

The project would target Douglas fir trees infected with a species of dwarf mistletoe and obstructing the agency's land-management goals in portions of High Five and Sharps canyons south of Bell Mountain in Blaine County. The mistletoe, a common disease, robs its host trees of needed water and nutrients, makes them more susceptible to insect attacks and drought and often prevents trees from reaching maturity.

Options to remove the trees include salvaging some through timber operations and using prescribed fires to clear out the rest. Areas less likely to successfully recover on their own would be hand-planted with seedlings after the work.

Comments are requested by June 15. Information: <http://www.blm.gov/id/st/en/info/nepa.html> or 208-732-7204.

Blaine Housing Authority back on budget

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

KETCHUM — It's been quite a year for the Blaine County Housing Authority. Since the city of Ketchum rejected the group's budget, describing it as practically bankrupt, the agency has gotten a new director and now is within a percent or two of both projected expenses and income.

"This is a real success story," said Ketchum City Councilman Larry Helzel after hearing the BCHA's semiannual report to the city.

The BCHA has about $14 million in physical assets and has recently sold seven new units to home buyers that likely would not otherwise have been able to buy a home. There are 12 homes available to qualified buyers right now, and a pool of 200 applicants who are somewhere in the qualification process.

As part of the agency's reorganization, the applicant database was updated. About 160 households left the list — 25 percent moved out of the county, 29 percent asked to be removed, 25 percent couldn't be reached, and nine percent lost their jobs.

On the positive side, 12 percent bought a home at market rates, and no longer required the help of the BCHA.

The agency hopes to use this updated database to help homeowners weather the recession, and begin to plan for the economy's recovery.

"We are doing everything we can to be responsive to the change in the financial market," said Linda Thorson, BCHA secretary.

Ketchum Mayor Randy Hall said he hopes to see the agency extend its outreach efforts, to emphasize the financial benefits to the community and local businesses when lower-income households find permanent homes.

"We're always talking about cost, the funding side of the equation," Hall said.

"There are still people out there who see this as a subsidy."

He requested that the BCHA calculate the actual impact to the community, using multiplier equations so the city can effectively argue that the benefits outweigh the costs of supporting the agency.

Warm Springs Road reopened to local traffic after mudslides

Times-News

The end of Warm Springs Road outside of Ketchum was reopened to local traffic at 12:30 p.m. Tuesday, after mudslides closed it Monday afternoon, according to the Blaine County Web site.

"We'll see what the next storm brings," said Blaine County Disaster Services Coordinator Chuck Turner.

There have been no new slides, but the mud is difficult to remove due to its thin consistency and the fact that all low spots are already filled. Blaine County road and bridge crews continue to attempt removal, said Turner.

Elmore Co. to consider nuke-plant rezone Monday

Times-News

The Elmore County commissioners have chosen Monday to start debating whether to rezone about 1,300 acres of farmland for industrial use for a proposed nuclear power plant.

Rezoning the land near Mountain Home for industrial use is a first vital step in Alternate Energy Holdings Inc.'s plans to build the 1,600-megawatt Idaho Energy Complex. The county's Planning and Zoning Commission voted 4-2 not to recommend the rezoning in November, and commissioners heard several hours of heated testimony from people on both sides of the issue at a public hearing in April.

Barb Steele, assistant to the commissioners, confirmed that commissioners will discuss the issue from 9 to 11 a.m. at their chambers, 150 S. Fourth E. in Mountain Home. As with the April hearing, the commissioners will restrain their discussion solely to the rezoning and avoid any talk of nuclear power, she said.

The commissioners are likely to extend their discussion to other days, she said, and probably won't make a decision on the rezoning on Monday.

"It was just like heavy pea soup," Turner said. He warned that weather conditions could lead to additional slides or other difficulties.

"With this rain coming in, it could come down at any time. The next quarter-inch of rain could be the last straw."

A flash flood warning was issued Tuesday morning by the National Weather Service for the Big Wood and Little Wood River region, warning of flooding due to heavy rainfall over the past few days, especially in recent burn areas, steep terrain or where water is already pooling.

The hills around Warm Springs Road were part of the Castle Rock Fire burn area, and the lack of undergrowth has made the soil more susceptible to slides.

The flash flood warning was in effect through Tuesday evening, with the National Weather Service advising drivers not to cross any flooded roads.

Steve Crump is on vacation. His column will return later this week.

Burley man to be arraigned for vehicular manslaughter, DUI

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — A Burley man charged with felony vehicular manslaughter and aggravated driving under the influence will be arraigned in district court later this month.

Jamie M. Petersen, 30, was charged after a one-vehicle crash last fall killed Maria F. Romo, 27, of Heyburn.

Petersen is slated to be arraigned in front of Cassia County 5th District Judge Michael Crabtree at 9 a.m. June 23.

The charges stem from a crash that occurred Oct. 15, 2008, in southeast Cassia County.

According to the Cassia County sheriff's report, Petersen was driving his 1999 Ford pickup northbound when he allegedly lost control, causing the vehicle to leave the road and careen down a 60-foot embankment. Romo was ejected from the pickup about 20-feet from the road as the vehicle started to roll. Romo later died from her injuries at McKay Dee Hospital in Ogden, Utah, according to court records.

State laboratory results showed Petersen's blood-alcohol content after the crash was .12, according to court records. The legal blood-alcohol content for a person over 21 years-old is .08.

A Cassia County Sheriff's deputy affidavit said after responding to the scene he found Petersen in the cab of the truck being attended to by emergency medical technicians. The deputy noted that he thought it was odd that Petersen did not have any pants on due to the fact Petersen had climbed out of a sagebrush field. The deputy said Romo's garments were also in disarray.

If convicted of the vehicular manslaughter charge, Petersen faces up to 15 years in prison, a $15,000 fine and a driver's license suspension for a length of time to be determined by the court. On the charge of aggravated driving under the influence, he could spend up to 10 years in prison, face a $5,000 fine and a driver's license suspension from one to five years.

Crapo names new regional director

Times-News

Sen. Mike Crapo appointed AJ Church as new regional director for his south-central office located in Twin Falls on Monday. Church is a Magic Valley native, graduate of Twin Falls High School and recent graduate of Boise State University.

Church has served multiple internships for Crapo and Congressman Mike Simpson, as well as holding the regional director position in Crapo's southwestern office in Caldwell last year. Bryan Ricker of Nampa will take over Church's position in Caldwell.

"Having Idaho natives with extensive knowledge of their areas and Idaho issues is important and I encourage Idahoans to meet AJ and Bryan as they contact my regional offices for assistance, to leave a comment or ask questions," said Crapo.

Crapo's Twin Falls office is located at 202 Falls Ave., Suite 2, across from the College of Southern Idaho.

Idaho officials leave Snake River flows out of talk of collaboration

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

U.S. Sen. Mike Crapo called Friday for a collaborative effort to solve the problems plaguing Pacific Northwest salmon and said involved parties need to be flexible and explore all possible solutions.

As an example, he suggested discussing the pros and cons of breaching four lower Snake River dams — an idea that grabbed recent headlines, but one that Crapo has used in the past few years.

But Crapo and other Idaho officials have made it clear that one proposed salmon solution isn't negotiable: running more water from the Snake River out of the state to improve river conditions farther downriver.

The idea, one that has constantly worried Idaho water officials, showed up as one of several options that U.S. District Judge James Redden urged the federal government to consider in a May 18 letter regarding a pending court case over salmon recovery.

As expected, Idaho officials don't see it as necessary.

Speaking Monday to the Times-News, Crapo said Idaho's sovereignty over the allocation and use of its water must be protected. He said he would "strongly defend" the 2004 Nez Perce Agreement providing water from the upper Snake, itself the product of the type of negotiations he'd like to apply to the greater salmon debate.

"I personally believe that this issue is resolved," Crapo said.

In the same conversation, Crapo said a return to the negotiating table — a similar attempt to solve salmon issues fell apart soon after it started in 2003 — would produce better and more solid solutions for everyone in the long term.

But, he said, for that to be successful, all parties have to be willing to allow their ideas to be examined. That means, for example, exploring both breaching and not breaching the dams.

"The point is that when you collaborate, you must truly be willing to not only defend your ideas, but let others put their ideas on the table and defend theirs," he said.

Despite Redden's reference to "additional flow," water in the upper Snake doesn't seem immediately threatened.

Norm Semanko, executive director of the Idaho Water Users Association and spokesman for the Coalition for Idaho Water, noted that filings from environmental groups seeking more water from the Snake have stated any flows should be consistent with the Nez Perce Agreement.

But that hasn't kept officials from speaking out about protecting it — even Semanko said the arrangement is "very high" on his group's current priorities. Even if water is provided from below Hells Canyon, outside the area of the agreement, it's possible that such a demand could have some effect on the rest of the river system.

Idaho Lt. Gov. Brad Little told Obama administration officials last week that Idaho has already made a strong commitment to salmon recovery, citing the 487,000 acre-feet provided annually through the Nez Perce Agreement and an additional 2 million acre-feet provided through Dworshak Dam.

"This has a major impact on the economy of our state," Little said according to his prepared remarks. "Supporting (the latest federal salmon plan) comes with a price tag we are willing to pay because all of the region's sovereigns must sacrifice if we are to recover salmon and steelhead."

Assuming Crapo does assemble enough interests to debate the matter, flows would be but one possible topic of discussion. Both Little and Semanko tabbed reducing the number of fish harvested from the Columbia River as a possible way to improve salmon numbers.

And of course, the dams would come up. Idaho Rivers United, a group that backs breaching the dams, has already offered to support the talks.

Asked about Redden's mention of flows, group spokesman Greg Stahl said removing the dams may be one way to avoid a court demand for more Idaho water.

"Idaho water is one of the things that could be resolved by taking dams out of the river," Stahl said.

Crapo made it clear that he's committed to holding talks — whether it happens this year or years from now.

"I hope that there will be a willingness now to move forward," he said. "If not, I'll keep working."

BLM Helipad almost done at Twin Falls airport

Five people apply for advisory board

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

Construction of a new, modern helipad at the Bureau of Land Management's Twin Falls District aviation office is scheduled to be finished by the end of the month.

The new pad will be about 210 feet by 320 feet — enough for two medium helicopters — and is located near the general landing area at Joslin Field, Magic Valley Regional Airport. The current pad is north of the BLM offices, and officials also use a pad near the western part, said airport Manager Bill Carberry.

The pad will consist of concrete and asphalt, and include utility hookups and a communications system with an intercom.

Officials have said they need the new pad to make operations safer and more efficient.

In related news, the airport's ramp is scheduled to be rebuilt with new gravel and pavement. The $1.6 million project will begin in several weeks and last about two months, Carberry said. Nearly all the costs will be covered by the federal government.

Magicvalley.com

READ Capitol Confidential, a political blog by reporter Jared S. Hopkins.

Meanwhile, five people have applied to fill a vacancy on the airport advisory board, Carberry said. They are John Magnusson; Dan Olmstead; James Carr; Steven (Lande) L. Lambert; and Lori Schouten.

The position opened up after Ron Kondracki resigned nearly two months ago because the city of Twin Falls required all of its commissions meet in city council chambers. The city plans to eventually record all commission meetings. But the airport board opposed the measure.

Kondracki said if the board meets at the airport it allows employees and people involved in aviation to attend meetings. But meeting in the council chambers eliminates that kind of input, which he said hurts the process.

Burley modifies industrial-park lease

By Damon Hunzeker
Times-News writer

BURLEY — It wasn't nearly as contentious as most votes that require tie-breaking action, but Mayor Jon Anderson had to break a knotted-up vote at Tuesday night's Burley City Council meeting to approve the final draft of the agreement between the city and the Boyer Company at the Burley

Industrial Park.

The modification of the lease essentially allows Boyer, which manages the park in Heyburn, to comply with a request from J.R. Simplot Co. to install $1.2 million worth of racks in the park's 150,000 square-foot freezing facility. The improvements would increase Simplot's ability to move products in and out of the area at the most efficient level.

The council was split because those who opposed the agreement — Vaughn Egan, Steve McGill, and Jay Lenkersdorfer — wanted to table the item until the next meeting.

Councilmen Dennis Dexter, Dennis Curtis and Gordon Hansen voted in favor of the agreement.

City Attorney Randy Stone was satisfied with the agreement, pending minor adjustments that he presented to the council. Anderson agreed and voted accordingly.

When Simplot donated the park in Heyburn to Burley five years ago, a contract was established that allowed the use of the freezer building, as well as a couple of other buildings, to be retained by Simplot for a fee of $1 per year.

Tuesday's agreement allows Boyer to upgrade the freezer facility, and Simplot pays the company for use. Theoretically, the city benefits in the long run.

Simplot will continue to pay $1 per year to the city of Burley. In 2013, Boyer can lease the space to whoever it wants — maybe Simplot, maybe another company — from which the city will continue to receive 10 percent of the gross revenue from tenants managed by Boyer.

Law & Disorder...

... in Cassia County

From May 24 police reports:

Information:

A 34-year-old woman reported that a 17-year-old male, who was about to jump off the Overland Bridge near Lex Kuneau Park in Burley, yelled at someone fishing below and said, "You better not catch me with that hook or I will slit your throat." The juvenile, according to the report, "said he was joking and just giving (the fisherman) a bad time." He was told not to assault people or jump off of bridges.

Domestic battery:

A 50-year-old man called 911 and reported that he had been beaten up by his 30-year-old ex-girlfriend while he was visiting their child at her apartment.

According to the report, she "had thrown him around the apartment. He said that she then took his money from his wallet and said that he didn't have any left. He told me that all he wanted to do was leave and that she wouldn't let him. He showed me his wallet and there was a $20 bill inside. I could also see a line on his forehead that appeared to be from running into a fixed object such as a wall."

The man didn't press charges. The woman kicked him out. "He said he wanted us to come back with him tomorrow to pick up his things," Deputy Mark Merrill's report reads. "I told him that we would not do that and that (the woman) wanted him to leave. He again said that he wanted to leave. I escorted him out of the apartment and he left. Case closed."

Area nursing providers wary of Medicare changes

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Area nursing providers say that the Medicare system isn't the path to riches and fat profit margins.

And for the next fiscal year, it's looking like Medicare payments to nursing facilities will be reduced. The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services has proposed adjustments that would reduce Medicare payments for skilled nursing facilities by 1.2 percent.

CMS is proposing the change to offset an increase in costs that developed in 2006 when more patients than anticipated were classified into newly created groups that required additional Medicare funding.

Nationwide, it's expected to be a reduction of $390 million. Stephanie Magill, a spokeswoman for CMS, did not have the breakdown for how much of the reduction is headed to Idaho.

It's not a reduction that local providers are looking forward to, though.

"When the nursing facilities are getting cut, it certainly appears there is a disconnect between what the government expects the facilities to provide and what they want to pay the facilities," said Rick Holloway, president of Western Health Care Corporation, which owns Parke View Care and Rehab Center in Burley.

Nursing facilities face more costs to provide services that are not included parts of the reimbursement, Holloway said.

"In the small rural communities that we have spread throughout Idaho, the Medicare reimbursement is adequate, but nobody's getting rich off it," he said.

A reduction in revenue forces nursing care facilities to evaluate their overall operations, including areas like maintenance and house-keeping while also preserving the quality of care, said Roy Prescott, chairman of the board of Helping Hands of Gooding, a nursing home.

"The margins to maintain the quality of care are very, very narrow in long-term care so the reduction then of the income will have an impact," said Prescott, also president of BRP Health Management Systems which has facilities in Shoshone, Buhl, Kimberly and Burley.

The federal government will take public comment about the changes until June 30.

Magill said CMS has had meetings during which providers and the public can make comments.

"We kind of have our ear to the ground listening to what is going on," she said.

Roads

improve water quality by reducing sediments in nearby streams and help to restore natural resources and habitats for fish in areas impacted by deterioration and erosion of road surfaces," he said.

The projects announced Tuesday comprise a small fraction of the estimated $10 billion road maintenance backlog the agency faces.

Rep. Norm Dicks, D-Wash., chairman of a House appropriations subcommittee that oversees the Forest Service, called the projects wise investments and good stewardship.

A spokesman for Rep. Walt Minnick, D-Idaho, also hailed the announcement. Idaho will get $44 million under the plan, by far the largest amount for any state. Oregon is next with $32 million. Montana receives $31.5 million.

"We hope this helps put Idahoans back to work in communities hard hit by the economic recession, and that the improvements made to Forest Service roads make it easier to harvest timber from Idaho forests and will improve access for hunting and recreation," said John Foster, a spokesman for Minnick.

Minnick voted against the stimulus plan, one of the few Democrats to do so.

Choked by tight budgets and the increasing costs of the fighting wildfires, the Forest Service has struggled for years to find money to keep up its 400,000 miles of road that crisscross national forest land.

Sotomayor visits Senate to address bias suspicions

By Julie Hirschfeld Davis
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Judge Sonia Sotomayor on Tuesday countered Republican charges that she would let her background dictate her rulings as Americans signaled a favorable first impression of President Barack Obama's first Supreme Court choice.

A new Associated Press-GfK poll suggested that Americans have a more positive view of her than they did of any of former President George W. Bush's nominees to the high court. Half backed her confirmation.

As Sotomayor made her Senate debut with a series of private meetings, Republicans said they would prefer holding hearings on her nomination in September, which could cloud the speedy summertime confirmation Obama wants.

Sotomayor, who would be the high court's first Hispanic and its third woman, told senators she would follow the law as a judge without letting her life experiences inappropriately influence her decisions.

"Ultimately and completely, a judge has to follow the law no matter what their upbringing has been," Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., the Judiciary Committee chairman, quoted the nominee as saying in their closed-door session.

Republicans are questioning how she would apply the law, noting her remark in 2001 that she hoped her decisions as a "wise Latina" would be better than those of a white male who hadn't had the same experiences. Obama has said she misspoke; some Republicans have called the comment racist.

Leahy, hoping to shepherd a smooth and quick confirmation for Sotomayor, asked her what she meant by her 2001 comment and said the judge told him: "Of course one's life experience shapes who you are, but ... as a judge, you follow the law."

Sen. Jeff Sessions of Alabama, the top Republican on the committee, said Sotomayor used similar words with him as well, but he appeared to come away from the meetings unconvinced about her approach and whether she would be an "activist" who tried to set policy from the bench.

"We talked about the idea and the concept of personal feelings and ... how that influences a decision, and how it should not," Sessions said, declining to elaborate on the private discussion. Sessions, who is to meet Wednesday with Leahy to discuss scheduling Sotomayor's confirmation proceedings, said he thought hearings should wait until September — more than a month after Obama and Senate Democrats had hoped to have Sotomayor confirmed.

Tragic trail in Atlantic

Debris confirms crash of Air France Flight 447

By Federico Escher and Bradley Brooks
Associated Press writers

FERNANDO DE NORONHA, Brazil — An airplane seat, a fuel slick and pieces of white debris scattered over three miles of open ocean marked the site in the mid-Atlantic on Tuesday where Air France Flight 447 plunged to its doom, Brazil's defense minister said.

Brazilian military pilots spotted the wreckage, sad reminders bobbing on waves, in the ocean 400 miles northeast of these islands off Brazil's coast. The plane carrying 228 people vanished Sunday about four hours into its flight from Rio de Janeiro to Paris.

"I can confirm that the five kilometers of debris are those of the Air France plane," Defense Minister Nelson Jobim told reporters at a hushed news conference in Rio. He said no bodies had been found and there was no sign of life.

The effort to recover the debris and locate the all-important black box recorders, which emit signals for only 30 days, is expected to be exceedingly challenging.

"We are in a race against the clock in extremely difficult weather conditions and in a zone where depths reach up to 7,000 meters (22,966 feet)," French Prime Minister Francois Fillon told lawmakers in parliament Tuesday.

Brazilian military pilots first spotted the floating debris early Tuesday in two areas about 35 miles apart, said Air Force spokesman Jorge Amaral. The area is not far off the flight path of Flight 447.

Jobim said the main debris field was found near where the initial signs were spotted.

The cause of the crash will not be known until the black boxes are recovered — which could take days or weeks. But weather and aviation experts are focusing on the possibility of a collision with a brutal storm that sent winds of 100 mph straight into the airliner's path.

"The airplane was flying at 500 mph northeast and the air is coming at them at 100 mph," said AccuWeather.com senior meteorologist Henry Margusity. "That probably started the process that ended up in some catastrophic failure of the airplane."

Towering Atlantic storms are common this time of year near the equator — an area known as the intertropical convergence zone. "That's where the northeast trade winds meet the southeast trade winds — it's the meeting place of the southern hemisphere and the northern hemisphere's weather," Margusity said.

But several veteran pilots of big airliners said it was extremely unlikely that Flight 447's crew intended to punch through a killer storm.

"Nobody in their right mind would ever go through a thunderstorm," said Tim Meldahl, a captain for a major U.S. airline who has flown internationally for 26 years, including more than 3,000 hours on the same A330 jetliner.

Pilots often work their way through bands of storms, watching for lightning flashing through clouds ahead and maneuvering around them, he said.

"They may have been sitting there thinking we can weave our way through this stuff," Meldahl said. "If they were trying to lace their way in and out of these things, they could have been caught by an updraft."

The same violent weather that might have led to the crash also could impede recovery efforts.

"Anyone who is going there to try to salvage this airplane within the next couple of months will have to deal with these big thunderstorms coming through on an almost daily basis," Margusity said. "You're talking about a monumental salvage effort."

Remotely controlled submersible crafts will have to be used to recover wreckage settling so far beneath the ocean's surface. France dispatched a research ship equipped with unmanned submarines that can explore as deeply as 19,600 feet.

A U.S. Navy P-3C Orion surveillance plane — which can fly low over the ocean for 12 hours at a time and has radar and sonar designed to track submarines underwater — and a French AWACS radar plane are joining the operation.

The Brazilian military found debris and signs of fuel in the path Air France Flight 447 took after leaving Rio de Janeiro with 228 people on board and en route to Paris.

Suspect charged in slaying of abortion provider

By Roxana Hegeman
Associated Press writer

WICHITA, Kan. — An activist abortion opponent was charged Tuesday with first-degree murder in the death of late-term abortion provider Dr. George Tiller, and the prosecutor said the evidence in the case ruled out the death penalty.

Scott Roeder, 51, was shown via a video link from the Sedgwick County Jail. He fiddled with the charging documents on a podium in front of him, and said "OK" three times as Judge Ben Burgess read the charges and explained the court process.

Burgess ordered Roeder to be held without bond and said he was not allowed to communicate with Tiller's family or two witnesses he allegedly assaulted. The judge told Roeder that he would be assigned a public defender.

"And I'll obviously be hearing from one of those lawyers between now — or do you know how long it will be before I hear from one of those lawyers?" Roeder said.

Within two days, the judge answered to Roeder's only question in the brief appearance. A preliminary hearing is set for June 16.

Attorney Mark Orr with the Sedgwick County public defender's office said it had just been assigned the case and had not had a chance to talk to Roeder yet.

If convicted on the murder charge, Roeder would face a mandatory life sentence and would not be eligible for parole for at least 25 years.

Sedgwick County District Attorney Nola Foulston would not release any details of the crime at a news conference after the hearing, but said evidence against Roeder ruled out the death penalty.

Kansas law requires that special circumstances exist for a defendant to be eligible for the death penalty.

National D-Day Memorial on brink of financial ruin

By Sue Lindsey
Associated Press writer

BEDFORD, Va. — On the eve of the 65th anniversary of D-Day, the foundation that runs the National D-Day Memorial is on the brink of financial ruin.

Donations are down in the poor economy. The primary base of support — World War II veterans — is dying off. And the privately funded memorial is struggling to draw visitors because it's hundreds of miles from a major city.

Facing the prospect of cutting staff and hours, the memorial's president believes its only hope for long-term survival is to be taken over by the National Park Service or by a college or university.

So far, he's found no takers.

"All institutions are in various states of privation of one kind or another," foundation President William McIntosh said. "Everybody's endowment has been slapped around pretty badly by the economy."

But by contrast, the National World War II Museum in New Orleans, which opened as a D-Day museum in 2000, is thriving with an $8 million budget supported largely by 120,000 memberships.

The Bedford memorial opened eight years ago at a ceremony attended by President George W. Bush. It was built in Bedford because the community about 115 miles west of Richmond suffered among the nation's highest per-capita losses on D-Day.

Several thousand visitors are expected at the memorial Saturday to mark the anniversary.

Members of Congress were to be reminded of the memorial when they attended a special screening Tuesday night of a new documentary about Bedford's role at Normandy titled "Bedford: The Town They Left Behind," hosted by Sen. Mark Warner (D-Va.).

The outdoor museum tells the story of the Normandy invasion in sculptures of soldiers and their leaders. Air jets shoot mini-geysers of water to mimic enemy gunfire as bronze figures of soldiers struggle for shore in a reflecting pool. Some 10,000 Allied troops were killed or wounded in the costly landing.

The memorial's attention to detail evokes an emotional response for those who lived through D-Day, said James A.

"The whole idea is well done," said Huston, retired dean of nearby Lynchburg College. "It tells the story."

Chile police find suitcases made of coke

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Police say two suitcases carried by a woman who was about to fly from Chile to Spain were made of cocaine.

Detective Leandro Morales at the Santiago airport says the drug "was not hidden in the luggage. This time the suitcases were the drug."

Morales tells The Associated Press that the suitcases were made of a substance combining cocaine with resin and glass fiber.

He said Tuesday a "chemical process" could be used to separate out the drug.

The officer says the suitcases were heavier than their contents.

The 26-year-old Argentine woman was arrested.

Haven was born June 17, 1919, in Burley, to William R. and Annie Kramer Gierisch. He spent his childhood growing up on the family farm south of Burley, where he enjoyed working the land with his brothers and sisters growing and harvesting various crops. Haven attended schools in Burley, graduating from Burley High School in 1938. He then headed off to college at Utah State University, enrolling in radio engineering.

On Oct. 3, 1940, Haven entered the United States Army, where he was assigned to the 176th Signal Repair Company stationed in the South Pacific. He was honorably discharged on July 21, 1945. He met the love of his life, Valerie Mary Gow, on Sept. 17, 1942, while on leave in Sydney, Australia. He thought Valerie was a very nice girl and a great dancer. Upon coming back stateside, he and Valerie continued to correspond through letters. Haven asked Valerie to come to the United States for a visit, and it took two years to get her here. Haven and Valerie were married on Feb. 16, 1947, in Burley, and they began their life together. To this union, four children were born, Terry, Raoul, Lawrence and Vince.

Haven was a member of the LDS Church, VFW, DAV, Civil Air Patrol and a lifetime member of the Elks. In later years, Haven joined Val as a volunteer for the Cassia Regional Medical Center. Haven and Val enjoyed trips to Mexico, Arizona, Wyoming, Montana and California, visiting family and friends.

Haven was self-employed as a television repairman, where he brought this wonderful technology into the homes of many people in the community. He was an avid HAM radio operator and immensely enjoyed teaching his nephew, Billy, all about it and getting him started in this hobby. Haven was also an avid vegetable gardener and enjoyed sharing the fruits of his labors with friends and neighbors for many, many years.

Killer bugs from dairies? Let's get the facts first

The ongoing battle over "pathogen drift" reached a new stage last week, when the Idaho Rural Council petitioned the Idaho State Department of Agriculture for new rules regarding wastewater used in pressurized irrigation.

The IRC, a Bliss-based rural public-interest group, was previously turned down by the Idaho Board of Environmental Quality, which said it didn't have jurisdiction over the matter.

The dairy industry has long criticized the concept of pathogen drift — the concept that particles of livestock waste run through sprinklers can float off the property from which they came. But drift is a major concern to the IRC, which wants liquid waste from confined-animal feeding operations to be treated just like human wastewater before it is used for irrigation.

Both sides say the science supports their position. But the evidence is sketchy, inconclusive and of limited value because there's never been a comprehensive, independent study of pathogen drift performed in conditions like those at southern Idaho dairies.

So the ISDA is exactly where this issue belongs. We hope Director Celia Gould will take advantage to two valuable assets — the University of Idaho College of Agriculture and the communicable diseases office of the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare — in making a decision about the IRC petition.

ISDA is often criticized for its perceived pro-ag industry bias, but so far the agency has taken this issue seriously. Gould's department has already modified its list of penalties to include a minimum $1,000 fine every time waste run through a sprinkler leaves a dairy.

We don't know if pathogen drift is a clear and present danger to the neighbors of dairies, and frankly neither does the dairy industry nor the IRC. But in an era when humankind is slowly losing the battle against antibiotic-resistant bacteria, we'd better find out.

Our view:
 The state Department of Agriculture is where the issue of 'pathogen drift' from dairies belongs.

What do you think?
 We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

How to succeed in business? Be dull

Should CEOs read novels?

The question seems to answer itself. After all, CEOs work with people all day. Novel-reading should give them greater psychological insight, a feel for human relationships, a greater sensitivity toward their own emotional chords.

Sadly, recent research suggests that these are not the most important talents for a person who is trying to run a company. Steven Kaplan, Mark Klebanov and Morten Sorensen recently completed a study called "Which CEO Characteristics and Abilities Matter?"

They relied on detailed personality assessments of 316 CEOs and measured their companies' performances. They found that strong people skills correlate loosely or not at all with being a good CEO. Traits like being a good listener, a good team builder, an enthusiastic colleague, a great communicator do not seem to be very important when it comes to leading successful companies.

What mattered, it turned out, were execution and organizational skills. The traits that correlated most powerfully with success were attention to detail, persistence, efficiency, analytic thoroughness and the ability to work long hours.

In other words, warm, flexible, team-oriented and empathetic people are less likely to thrive as CEOs. Organized, dogged, analretentive and slightly boring people are more likely to thrive.

These results are consistent with a lot of work that's been done over the past few decades. In 2001, Jim Collins published a best-selling study called "Good to Great." He found that the best CEOs were not the flamboyant visionaries. They were humble, self-effacing, diligent and resolute souls who found one thing they were really good at and did it over and over again.

That same year Murray Barrick, Michael Mount and Timothy Judge surveyed a century's worth of research into business leadership. They, too, found that extroversion, agreeableness and openness to new experience did not correlate well with CEO success. Instead, what mattered was emotional stability and, most of all, conscientiousness.

All this work is a reminder that, while it's important to be a sensitive, well-rounded person for the sake of your inner fulfillment, the market doesn't really care. The market wants you to fill an organizational role.

The market seems to want CEOs to offer a clear direction for their companies. There's a tension between being resolute and being flexible. The research suggests it's more important to be resolute, even at the cost of some flexibility.

The second thing the market seems to want from leaders is a relentless and somewhat mind-numbing commitment to incremental efficiency gains. Charismatic CEOs and politicians always want the exciting new breakthrough — whether it is the SUV or a revolutionary new car. The methodical executives at successful companies just make the same old four-door sedan, but they make it better and better.

These sorts of dogged but diffident traits do not correlate well with education levels. CEOs with law or M.B.A. degrees do not perform better than CEOs with college degrees. These traits do not correlate with salary or compensation packages. Nor do they correlate with fame and recognition. On the contrary, a study by Ulrike Malmendier and Geoffrey Tate found that CEOs get less effective as they become more famous and receive more awards.

What these traits do add up to is a certain ideal personality type. The CEOs that are most likely to succeed are humble, diffident, relentless and a bit unidimensional. They are often not the most exciting people to be around.

For this reason, people in the literary, academic and media worlds rarely understand business. It is nearly impossible to think of a novel that accurately portrays business success. That's because the virtues that writers tend to admire are not the ones that lead to corporate excellence.

For the same reason, business and politics do not blend well. Business leaders tend to perform poorly in Washington, while political leaders possess precisely those talents — charisma, charm, personal skills — that are of such limited value when it comes to corporate execution.

Fortunately, America is a big place. Literary culture has thrived in Boston, New York and on campuses. Political culture has thrived in Washington. Until recently, corporate culture has been free to thrive in such unlikely places as Bentonville, Omaha and Redmond.

Of course, that's changing. We now have an administration freely interposing itself in the management culture of industry after industry. It won't be the regulations that will be costly, but the revolution in values. When Washington is a profit center, CEOs are forced to adopt the traits of politicians. That is the insidious way that other nations have lost their competitive edge.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Welfare bomb may be on Idaho's horizon

During the 1978 anti-tax rebellion in California, prominent business owners and prosperous residents fled a crushing tax code to relocate across America. Some came to Idaho and their lifestyles clashed with the people that made their living from smelly cow farms, early-morning crop dusters and late-night field-tending with loud tractors. They also brought political views that the native people were not willing to accept but, in the end, this is still a beautiful state that is run by its elected officials in a manner that is mostly in her best interests. However, I see a possible mushroom cloud on the horizon from a potential 2.5 million megaton welfare bomb.

In 1991, the California governor planned to cut out welfare to help with a $14.5 billion deficit, but it never came to fruition. Today, Arnold's tax hike hopes went down in flames because voters can no longer carry the state's burdens and care for their own families while facing a $24.3 billion deficit. Again, welfare is on the chopping block.

Relocating is the only viable option if welfare goes belly up and the rumored bailout money would only be a temporary blood transfusion for the ticks on an already dying dog.

A lack of pocket money would dictate that their travel will be limited to the closest host state that can provide jobs or a new welfare check, which puts Idaho in the outer ring of the damage path from that welfare bomb.

California has 2.5 million-plus on the government teat and it's safe to say that even a small fraction of the populous from the inevitable trail of tears would have a devastating impact on our state.

What will Idaho do if this theory transpires? Ben Franklin said, "To help the poor, you must make them uncomfortable in their poverty," but such an event would surely test our threshold of pain, too.

Why haven't property taxes dropped?

For some strange reason, it appears our county, state and federal officials seem to have forgotten that the economy is in crisis. The commissioners have authorized $500,000 for some remodeling of the courthouse as well as what is to be done at the old clinic building. Thanks to Commissioner Urie for his opposition; as for the other two, shame on you!

The legislators, governor and the Fish and Game Department seem to have no concern for trying to keep things status quo so far as taxing, raising fees and licenses and being prudent concerning the economy.

There has been no concrete plan for spending the stimulus funds that I've seen disclosed.

Speaking of the stimulus, the only thing that will stimulate the economy is to put people to work. Stop the outsourcing of jobs and work to foreign countries. Stop immigration into this country and stop all welfare for illegal immigrants.

Our property has been devalued by 30 percent, so why haven't our taxes, fees and licenses been treated to the same devaluation as our property.

For those of us that are receiving Social Security and those that are coming up to receive it, I urge you to write our senators and congressmen to have all the other governmental departments and agencies that have borrowed from Social Security reserves, which we have paid into, repay every penny.

This would make Social Security very solvent. This borrowing is out and out theft from our private accounts.

Talk about taxation without representation. Come on!

Iraq takes a psychic toll on America's warrior class

I couldn't have been less surprised to read last month that an American GI had been charged with gunning down five of his fellow service members in Iraq. That this occurred at a mental health counseling center in the war zone just served to add an extra layer of poignancy and a chilling ironic element to the fundamental tragedy.

The psychic toll of this foolish and apparently endless war has been profound since day one. And the nation's denial of that toll has been just as profound.

According to authorities, John Russell, a 44-year-old Army sergeant who had been recognized as deeply troubled and was on his third tour in Iraq, went into the counseling center on the afternoon of May 11 and opened fire — killing an Army officer, a Navy officer and three enlisted soldiers. The three enlistees were 19, 20 and 25 years old.

BOB HERBERT

This is what happens in wars. Wars are about killing, and once the killing is unleashed it takes many, many forms. Which is why it's so sick to fight unnecessary wars, and so immoral to send other people's children off to wars — psychic as well as physical — from which one's own children are carefully protected.

The fallout from the psychic stress of the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan has been vast, but there was no reason for its destructive effects to have surprised anyone. There was plenty of evidence that this would be an enormous problem. Speaking of Iraq back in 2004, Dr. Stephen C. Joseph, who had been an assistant secretary of defense during the Clinton administration, said, "I have a very strong sense that the mental health consequences are going to be the medical story of this war."

I remember writing a column about Jeffrey Lucey, a 23-year-old Marine who was deeply depressed and suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder, or PTSD, when he returned from Iraq after serving in the earliest months of the war. He described gruesome events that he had encountered and was harshly critical of himself. He drank to excess, had nightmares, withdrew from friends and wrecked the family car.

On June 22, 2004, he wrote a note that said, "It's 4:35 p.m. and I am near completing my death." He then hanged himself with a garden hose in the basement of his parents' home.

Because we have chosen not to share the sacrifices of the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, the terrible burden of these conflicts is being shouldered by an obscenely small portion of the population. Since this warrior class is so small, the same troops have to be sent into the war zones for tour after harrowing tour.

As the tours mount, so do the mental health problems. Combat is crazy-making to start with. Multiple tours are recipes for complete meltdowns.

As RAND Corp. reported in a study released last year: "Not only is a higher proportion of the armed forces being deployed, but deployments have been longer, redeployment to combat has been common, and breaks between deployments have been infrequent."

Recent attempts by the military to deal with some of the most egregious aspects of its deployment policies have amounted to much too little, much too late. The RAND study found that approximately 300,000 men and women who had served in Iraq and Afghanistan were already suffering from PTSD or major depression. That's nearly one in every five returning veterans.

The mass-produced tragedies of war go far beyond combat deaths. Behind the abstract wall of RAND's statistics is the suffering of very real people. The toll includes the victims of violence and drunkenness and broken homes and suicides. Most of the stories never make their way into print. The public that professes such admiration and support for our fighting men and women are not interested.

Other studies have paralleled RAND's in spotlighting the psychic toll of these wars. A CBS News survey found that veterans aged 20 to 24 were two to four times as likely to commit suicide as nonveterans the same age. A

Time magazine cover story last year disclosed that "for the first time in history, a sizable and growing number of U.S. combat troops are taking daily doses of antidepressants to calm nerves strained by repeated and lengthy tours in Iraq and Afghanistan."

We're brutally and cold-bloodedly sacrificing the psychological well-being of these men and women, which should be a scandal. If these wars are so important to our national security, we should all be engaging in some form of serious sacrifice, and many more of us should be serving.

But the country soothes its conscience and tamps down its guilt with the cowardly invocation: "Oh, they're volunteers. They knew what they were getting into."

Cap-and-trade system will not be free, nor will it be a market

The law isn't even final yet, and already the system is being manipulated.

About a year ago, I wrote that using a cap-and-trade process to corral carbon emissions would create a false market easily manipulated to benefit a few at the expense of the many.

The many, of course, would be all of us consumers who would pay more for everything from electricity to plastics to cement. That hasn't changed.

I thought the few would be the trading firms that would exploit the volatility and lack of liquidity to line their own pockets, much as Enron did in the California power markets. Turns out the traders are getting beat to the punch by the politicians writing the law.

Although the bill was set to be voted out of committee last month, a lengthy floor debate is ahead, and things still could change.

But the basic concept for cap-and-trade remains the same: The government sets a limit on the country's total carbon output, then issues permits that allow companies to emit a certain amount of carbon. Those whose emissions exceed their permits have to buy more. Companies that emit less can sell their extra permits. Over time, the government reduces the number of permits, which in theory would force carbon emitters to cut back.

To kick this off, the government would dole out somewhere between half and three-quarters of all the permits. The rest would be sold on the open market.

It's in granting those initial permits, though, that the games begin. The bill would shift much of the cost burden for consumer carbon emissions, primarily from cars and trucks, to refiners.

ConocoPhillips, for example, says U.S. refiners would bear the cost for one-third of all carbon emissions, while the American Petroleum Institute, an industry trade group, estimates closer to 44 percent.

The government would allocate just 2 percent of the emission allowance permits to the refining industry. The cost of buying all those extra permits would get passed on to motorists, making cap-and-trade a thinly disguised gasoline tax.

Manufacturers would get about 15 percent of the permit allocations, and electric utilities would get 35 percent.

Utilities account for about 40 percent of all U.S. carbon emissions, so it may seem reasonable to grant more than a third of the permits to them. But not all utilities are alike. Companies that use coal to produce electricity would need more permits than companies that rely on generation fuels that emit less carbon, such as natural gas or nuclear energy.

Of course, most have a mix, but utilities with more hydroelectric, nuclear and wind generation would likely have excess permits, which they could sell for pure profit, courtesy of the federal government.

Meanwhile, coal-dependent utilities would be left to scrounge in the open market for more permits to comply with the new emissions standards.

As with gasoline, the result would be higher prices, but it would also mean that consumers of coal-generated electricity would, in effect, be paying the stock dividends for investors in utilities with fewer coal-fired plants.

In other words, cap-and-trade is marinated in political favoritism, steeped with biases against certain industries and skewed against certain regions of the country.

In its budget proposal, the Obama administration slated $650 billion in new revenue from cap-and-trade between 2012 and 2019, with $80 billion a year used to fund a middle-class tax cut and $15 billion going to promote alternative energy.

The closer we get to cap-and-trade becoming law, the more its true picture comes into focus.

It's been portrayed as a free-market solution, but with all the manipulation before the first permit has even traded, it doesn't resemble anything close to a market. And it darn sure won't be free.

Auditors: Wrong company got $659K contract

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — State officials awarded a two-year contract worth nearly $659,000 to run the Idaho Peace Officer Standards and Training Academy cafeteria in Meridian to the wrong bidder after “significant irregularities” in how they chose the winner, state auditors found.

Shird's Inc., of Meridian, which has run the academy's cafeteria since 1994, won the contract over Philadelphia-based Aramark Corp. in January 2008.

The two-year contract is worth $329,306 annually. That's 23 percent, or $61,500 more than the previous contract.

Among the problems state auditors discovered, three Idaho State Police employees changed their original scoring during a meeting, a move that raises “questions concerning potential biases,” according to the report. Scoring of bids also didn't follow point values set out when the Idaho State Police sought proposals from food service providers.

“Significant irregularities exist in the bid evaluation process for the cafeteria meal services contract,” Legislative Services Office auditors wrote in the report released Tuesday. “We recalculated the scores and concluded the contract would have been awarded to the competing bidder if these point values had been correctly applied.”

The academy pays most of the contract, with 10 percent coming from the Idaho State Police.

Big contracts for the academy are overseen by the Idaho State Police and Division of Purchasing, part of the Department of Administration.

Auditors recommended that Idaho State Police consider whether to rebid the contract.

They found that errors were made in scoring for years of experience. What's more, Shird's was given 30 points for having six full-time workers and five part-time employees, while Aramark received only 18 points for its more than 4,000 full-time employees.

“The scoring for this factor appears inconsistent, given the nature of the responses,” auditors wrote.

They also took issue with provisions they said seemed aimed at helping the local company prevail.

For instance, bidders had to submit resumes of the business owner, contract manager, chief cook/chef and shift leaders, and include their names and years of experience. Shird's, which could readily provide the information, received the full 50 points; Aramark got just 14 points, after it provided only the business owner's and its contract manager's names.

“The requirement to identify specific staff in each position appears unnecessary and favors the existing contractor,” auditors wrote.

Marsi Woody, a state police financial officer, didn't immediately respond to questions about the irregularities or whether the contract was written to favor the local bidder.

Nobody answered an Associated Press phone call placed Tuesday to Edward J. Bird, listed on the Idaho secretary of state's Web site as a contact at Shird's.

Wolf-hunt lawsuits filed in Mont., Wyo.

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — A pair of federal judges will decide which states in the Northern Rockies have enough gray wolves to allow public hunting, as the bitter debate over the region's wolves heads to courts in Wyoming and Montana.

Environmentalists filed a lawsuit in Missoula on Tuesday seeking to restore protections for more than 1,300 wolves in Montana and Idaho. The Obama administration in April upheld a Bush-era decision to take wolves off the endangered species list in those two states.

The lawsuit could block regulated wolf hunts slated to begin this fall and scuttle a plan to remove all the predators from part of north central Idaho.

Gray wolves remain on the endangered species list in Wyoming, but in another lawsuit, Wyoming attorney General Bruce Salzburg on Tuesday asked a federal judge in Cheyenne to clear the way for hunts in his state. Salzburg rejected claims by federal officials that local laws were too weak to protect Wyoming's 300 wolves.

Gray wolves were listed as endangered in 1974, after they had been wiped out across the lower 48 states in the early 20th century by hunting and government-sponsored poisoning. Following an intensive reintroduction program, there are now an estimated 1,645 wolves in the Northern Rockies, not including this year's pups.

“There's absolutely no question this population is fully recovered. There's wolves moving all over the place,” said Ed Bangs, wolf recovery coordinator for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

“The Wyoming plan folded like a house of cards the first time anybody took a hard look at it.”

— Ed Bangs, wolf recovery coordinator for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Wolves were returned to Wyoming, Idaho and parts of Montana in the mid-1990s over strong objections from ranchers and many politicians. The effort has cost the government $30 million to date.

In Wyoming, the complaints have grown as wolves take a bloody toll on livestock and big game herds. Ranchers say the number of wolves shot by federal wildlife agents — 264 last year alone — has not been enough to curb livestock killings that hit a record high in 2008.

Wyoming law declares almost 90 percent of the state a “predator zone” where wolves can be shot on sight. For now, however, that law is superseded by federal protections.

“We have to attempt to protect our wildlife and our livestock in the face of really no help from the federal government,” said Wyoming House Speaker Colin Simpson. “If the only way to do that is through litigation, then that's how we'll have to proceed.”

Bangs said the agency had no choice but to reject Wyoming's wolf management plan. Last summer, U.S. District Judge Donald Molloy in Missoula pointed to the state's predator zone as a prime reason for throwing out an earlier federal proposal to take wolves off the endangered list.

“The Wyoming plan folded like a house of cards the first time anybody took a hard look at it,” Bangs said.

For Montana and Idaho, federal officials say the threat of extinction has passed and the population is large enough to survive on its own. But the environmental groups and the Humane Society of the United States argue that the wolves' biological success could quickly be reversed absent federal oversight.

“Idaho in particular has shown an eagerness to aggressively reduce its wolf population,” said Jenny Harbine, an attorney with Earthjustice who helped write the environmentalists' lawsuit. “Until states commit to managing their wolf populations in a responsible and sustainable manner, federal protections remain crucial.”

Idaho justices uphold decision against Rammell

By Todd Dvorak
Associated Press writer

BOISE — The Idaho Supreme Court has dealt another legal blow to Rex Rammell, a gubernatorial hopeful who was fined by the state five years ago when he operated a domestic elk farm and breeding ranch in eastern Idaho.

In a ruling issued Monday, the justices affirmed a lower court ruling upholding fines levied against Rammell by the state Department of Agriculture for one statutory violation and eight regulatory infractions discovered at his breeding ranch in 2004.

After the inspection, state officials cited Rammell for having gaps and holes in fencing, failing to submit annual reports and not filing proper paperwork before transporting live elk. He was also cited for not paying a statutory $5 per head fee for at least 140 domestic elk. The agency fined Rammell $29,000 for the violations.

Rammell has been challenging the case for years. A former veterinarian who last year ran for the U.S. Senate as an Independent, Rammell contended he was denied due process in the earliest phase of his case when an administrative judge barred him from presenting certain evidence.

During a Supreme Court hearing last month, Rammell also argued that the state's regulations are unreasonable and beyond the scope of the Agriculture Department's authority.

But the justices rejected most of his contentions, refused to consider the merits of the department's regulations and upheld the $29,000 fine.

Rammell was “afforded adequate due process,” Justice Jim Jones wrote in the unanimous opinion.

“This is just more proof of how corrupt the government is,” Rammell told The Associated Press on Tuesday. “I'm just really disappointed. It's just more of the same. The system is not set up for the lay man to be able to object to anything in government.”

The court ruled in Rammell's favor on one point, deciding he doesn't have to pay more than $14,000 in state legal fees and costs.

On other fronts, Rammell last month sought Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection for his development business and is trying to sell properties in neighboring Wyoming to cover debts. Bankruptcy Court documents filed May 27 show that Rammell's company, Chief Joseph, Idaho LLC, is trying to sell one “spec home” for $1.3 million and an unfinished four-unit condominium for the $1 million. The home and the condominiums are located in Jackson, Wyo.

Rammell, whose elk business also included a pay-to-hunt operation, announced in May his intention to seek the GOP nomination to be Idaho's next governor, challenging incumbent Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter.

Rammell sold his domestic hunting ranch after about 110 of his elk escaped through a hole in the fence in 2006. The escape prompted then-Gov. Jim Risch to order an emergency hunt to reduce the chances that the escaped elk could spread inferior genes or disease to wild herds near Yellowstone National Park.

Source: GM to sell Hummer to Chinese company

Several suitors also lined up to purchase Saturn and Saab brands as company tries to downsize

By Tom Krisher and Bree Fowler
Associated Press writers

DETROIT — General Motors Corp. took a key step toward its downsizing on Tuesday, striking a tentative deal to sell its Hummer brand to a Chinese manufacturer, while also revealing that it has potential buyers for its Saturn and Saab brands.

GM has an agreement to sell its Hummer brand to Sichuan Tengzhong Heavy Industrial Machinery Co. of China, said a person briefed on the deal.

The Detroit automaker announced Tuesday morning that it had a memorandum of understanding to sell the brand of rugged SUVs, but it didn't identify the buyer. A formal announcement of the buyer was to be made Tuesday afternoon, said the person briefed on the deal. The person spoke on condition of anonymity because the details have not been made public.

Sichuan Tengzhong deals in road construction, plastics, resins and other industrial products, but Hummer would be its first step into the automotive business.

GM said the sale will likely save more than 3,000 U.S. jobs in manufacturing, engineering and at various Hummer dealerships.

As part of the proposed transaction, Hummer will continue to contract vehicle manufacturing and business

John Clemente plays Tetris, a puzzle video game, at Barcade in Brooklyn, New York, on May 22. Tetris is perhaps the world's most recognized video game. Still played by millions around the world, on Facebook, the iPhone, on computers and gaming consoles, the casual game pioneer celebrates its 25th birthday this week.

After quarter-century, game drops into place as icon

By Barbara Ortutay
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — With its scratches and sticky brown beer stains, the "Tetris" arcade machine near the back of a Brooklyn bar called Barcade has seen better days. Which makes sense, given that the machine was made in the 1980s.

Even today, though, it's not hard to find 20- and 30-somethings plucking away at its ancient controls, flipping shapes made up of four connected squares and fitting them into orderly patterns as they descend, faster and faster as the game goes on.

"You could just play infinitely," said Michael Pierce, 28, who was playing against Dan Rothfarb, also 28. Both have been fans since they — and the game — were young. "Tetris" has its 25th birthday this week.

Pierce recalls playing "Tetris" on a Nintendo Game Boy that was on display in a department store when his family couldn't afford the unit. Rothfarb played on his Nintendo until the game wouldn't go any faster.

Completed by a Soviet programmer in 1984, "Tetris" has come a long way from its square roots. It's played by millions, not just on computers and gaming consoles but now on Facebook and the iPhone as well.

"Tetris" stands out as one of the rare cultural products to come West from the Soviet Union during the Cold War. And the addictive rhythm of its task-by-task race against time was an early sign of our inbox-clearing, Twitter-updating, BlackBerry-thumbing world to come.

In her book "Hamlet on the Holodeck," Georgia Tech professor Janet Murray called "Tetris" the "perfect enactment of the overtaken lives of Americans." The game, she wrote, shows the "constant bombardment of tasks that demand our attention and that we must somehow fit into our overcrowded schedules and clear off our desks in order to make room for the next onslaught."

Many people who grew up with "Tetris" haven't stopped playing.

"I'd stay up, wait for my parents to go to bed, smuggle my Nintendo into my bedroom, hook it up to my television and play this game until all hours of the morning," said John Clemente, another player at Barcade. "Tetris," he says, was the only game to drive him "to the point of insanity." As a child, he once kicked his Nintendo across the room.

"It was a very love-hate relationship," he said.

Council questions SV/Ketchum chamber's online marketing plan

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

KETCHUM — The Sun Valley/Ketchum Chamber & Visitors Bureau has been delving deeper into the Internet in its latest round of marketing, launching social networking sites and partnering with portals to get more eyeballs on its ads.

However, as several Ketchum City Council members noted during the chamber's recent visit to that group on Monday, the effectiveness of some of these advertising dollars is questionable.

For example, the chamber spent about $40,000 on spec ads that ran on several online sites, which returned millions of "impressions" (people who saw the ad) but only a few thousand actual click-throughs to the chamber's site, Visitsunvalley.com. That means each click-through visit cost the chamber about $12 in advertising funds. And of those click-throughs, it's unknown how many decided to travel to the Wood River Valley.

"It sounds like a lot, and it is," said Councilman Charles Conn, who earned his fortune developing the Web site CitySearch. He said the chamber needs an accurate conversion rate from visits to its site to actual visits to the valley.

Carrie Westergard, marketing director for the chamber, agreed that a conversion study might be useful.

Conn and the others applauded the chamber's use of free social networking sites such as Facebook and Twitter, noting that

Pending home sales up 6.7 percent in April

By Alan Zibel

WASHINGTON — The number of U.S. homebuyers who agreed to buy a previously occupied home took the largest monthly jump in nearly eight years in April, but there are still plenty of danger signs for the U.S. housing market.

Home sales appear likely to head upward this summer, potentially to levels not seen since the stock market collapsed last autumn, but prices are expected to keep falling well into next year. Layoffs, which are causing foreclosures to soar, coupled with rising mortgage rates could dampen any real estate recovery.

The National Association of Realtors said Tuesday its seasonally adjusted index of sales contracts signed in April surged 6.7 percent to 90.3, far exceeding analysts' forecasts. It was the biggest monthly jump since October 2001, when pending sales rose 9.2 percent.

The big boost likely reflects the impact of a new $8,000 tax credit for first-time homebuyers that was included in the economic stimulus bill signed by Obama in February. Since buyers need to complete their purchases by Nov. 30 to claim the credit, "we expect greater activity in the months ahead," Lawrence Yun, the

India rebukes Pakistan's release of bombing suspect

By Alex Rodriguez and Mark Magnier
 Los Angeles Times

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — A Pakistani court on Tuesday ordered the release of a firebrand Islamic cleric with alleged links to the attacks in the Indian city of Mumbai last year, sparking an angry rebuke from Indian officials that Pakistan is not committed to meting out justice for militants.

Hafiz Saeed, head of a charity that international organizations have said is tied to the militant group Lashkar-e-Taiba, had been held under house arrest since Dec. 11, though he had not been publicly charged or indicted. Lashkar-e-Taiba has been accused by Indian officials of engineering and carrying out the attacks on Mumbai that killed 166 people in November.

The United Nations regards Saeed's charity, Jamaat-ud-Dawa, as a front for Lashkar-e-Taiba, which was formed 20 years ago to fight Indian rule in the Himalayan region of Kashmir. Saeed founded Lashkar-e-Taiba in 1990 with what has been widely reported as support from Pakistan's intelligence agency, Inter-Services Intelligence.

The court ruling could worsen relations between Pakistan and India, nuclear armed countries that regard each other as archenemies and have fought three wars in more than a half-century. After the attacks in Mumbai, India accused Pakistan of dragging its feet in tracking down Lashkar-e-Taiba members involved in the rampage on India's commercial and entertainment capital.

After intense pressure from Washington, Pakistani authorities arrested several members of the militant group, including Zaki-ur-Rehman Lakhvi and Zarrar Shah, both of whom India asserts engineered the Mumbai attacks. Both men are still being held by Pakistani authorities.

Guantanamo prisoner found dead in cell

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — A Yemeni detainee at Guantanamo Bay has died of an apparent suicide, U.S. military officials said Tuesday. His is the fifth apparent suicide at the off-shore U.S. prison, which President Obama hopes to close by January.

The Joint Task Force that runs the U.S. prison in Cuba said guards conducting a routine check found Muhammad Ahmad Abdallah Salih unresponsive and not breathing in his cell Monday night.

In a statement issued from Miami, the U.S. military said the detainee was pronounced dead by a doctor after "extensive lifesaving measures had been exhausted."

The Yemeni prisoner, also known as Mohammad Ahmed Abdullah Saleh Al-Hanashi, had been held without charge at Guantanamo since February 2002, a month after the isolated U.S. base started taking prisoners. Military records show the alleged Taliban fighter was about 31.

The apparent suicide happened late Monday, but it was not revealed by the military until after a dozen journalists who were covering a military tribunal session left the base about midday Tuesday. A Defense Department official said the reason was that the Yemeni government had not yet been notified.

Medical records previously released by the military in response to a Freedom of Information Act lawsuit filed by The Associated Press showed that the prisoner's weight had dropped to about 86 pounds in December 2005 — an indication that he may have joined a long-running hunger strike among prisoners. He weighed 124 pounds when he was first taken to Guantanamo in February 2002.

The military won't identify hunger strikers, citing privacy rules and a desire to keep detainees from trying to become martyrs.

Attorney David Remes identified the Yemeni as are being force-fed from bed," Remes said, adding that he didn't think the Yemeni had any legal representation until two lawyers arrived in February.

"They were due to see him for the first time in a couple of weeks," he said.

Remes said the death serves to refute a Pentagon report prepared for Obama saying Guantanamo's prison meets the standard for humane treatment laid out in the Geneva Conventions. The February report was written in response to Obama's order to close the prison within a year.

"Despite small improvements since President Obama took office, conditions there remain appalling," he said from Washington. "I hope this tragedy will prompt the president to take another look at the conditions at the prison, and focus his attention on the human consequences of his delay in closing (it)."

N.Y. Republican McHugh tabbed to be Army secretary

By Chris Cillizza
 The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Obama announced his intention to nominate New York GOP Rep. John McHugh as secretary of the army Tuesday, saying his 16-years of service on the House Armed Services Committee "uniquely qualifies him to help lead America's Army."

If confirmed, McHugh would be the third Republican appointed to a senior position in the Obama Administration. Former Illinois Rep. Ray LaHood is the Transportation Secretary while Utah Gov. Jon Huntsman Jr. was recently named as ambassador to China. Another Republican, Defense Secretary Robert Gates, is a holdover from the Bush administration.

Earlier this year, Republican New Hampshire Sen. Judd Gregg was chosen by Obama to be commerce secretary only to pull his name from consideration citing irreconcilable differences with the administration.

McHugh's appointment marks the second consecutive time a president has gone outside of his party to choose an Army secretary. In 2007, President George W. Bush appointed Democrat Peter Geren to the post after a scandal involving the treatment of veterans at Walter Reed Army Medical Center.

"John understands personally and deeply the sacrifices that our soldiers and their families make every day," Obama said in a statement praising McHugh's qualifications.

He added: "As Secretary of the Army, he will ensure that our soldiers are trained and equipped to meet the full spectrum of challenges and threats of our time — the conventional, the unconventional, the nation state and the terrorist network."

Particular about produce?

Guide tells pesticide-averse shoppers when to spend money on organic

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

When Allison Miniacci shops for produce, she looks at more than the price per pound.

The Twin Falls mother keeps an eye out for pesticides on produce and growth hormones in milk.

"If we can afford it, we try to buy organic," Miniacci said. And when she can't afford to buy entirely organic, she prioritizes.

Miniacci bases her organic produce purchases on a shopping guide put out by the Environmental Working Group, a nonprofit organization based in Washington, D.C.

The EWG reviewed conventionally grown produce and found that some fruits and vegetables — like peaches, peppers and apples — retain pesticides more than others, like onions, avocados and pineapple. It put 44 fruits and vegetables in order from dirtiest to cleanest and published the list as a shopper's guide to organic shopping.

The list works for Miniacci.

"I buy my pears, my apples, my peaches, grapes, spinach ... all organic. It's based on the list," she said Saturday while shopping for tomato plants at the Twin Falls Farmers Market. Her garden and lawn are all organic, too. She is especially concerned about her 2-year-old daughter Angel's exposure to pesticides.

But consumers shouldn't lose sleep about pesticides, said Steve Hines, extension educator at University of Idaho's Twin Falls County Extension Office. Chemical companies put herbicides and pesticides through rigorous testing, he said, and the results are independently verified to comply with Environmental Protection Agency and Food and Drug Administration standards.

"I know that there's kind of this fear that these fruits and vegetables are just drenched in these pesticides, but that's not really the case," Hines said. Most produce sees only two or three applications of a pesticide during the growing season.

Still, for consumers who choose to avoid pesticides but can't afford all-organic, the list can help make the decision easier.

THE FRUIT AND VEGGIE RANKINGS

According to the Environmental Working Group, some conventionally grown produce retains pesticides more than others. Here is its list of produce, in order from the most "dirty" to the most "clean."

Tests conducted from 2000 to 2007 by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Food and Drug Administration measured pesticide levels on fruits and vegetables in six ways, including percent of samples tested with detectable pesticide levels, percent of samples with two or more pesticides present, and the average number of pesticides found on a sample. The EWG ranked the crops based on a composite score from all six categories.

The group's list:

Taste culinary travel, close to home

SUN VALLEY — Ken Pratt never calls in sick on a powder day.

That's because as chef at Seattle Ridge Lodge on Bald Mountain, he has to ski the newly fallen snow to get to work.

Next weekend Pratt will be on Baldy's junior sister mountain, Dollar, where the snow has all but melted. But he's as excited as if it were midwinter, because he gets to share his love of ribs and marinades with foodies at the third annual Sun Valley Food and Wine Festival.

"Ribs are a large part of our business here at Sun Valley, especially during the summer season. But I've noticed that people don't often cook ribs because they're confused about how to do it," he said. "I'll be talking about the differences between Texas ribs and Louisiana barbecue, and I'll share some of the sauces we've concocted."

The Sun Valley Food and Wine Festival, June 12-14, is set to tap into Americans' increasing appetite for culinary travel, regional cuisine, cooking demonstrations and wine pairings.

It will bring in top chefs from around the country, including John Tesar, the new executive chef of Fishtail by David Burke in New York City, and Cory Schreiber, who founded Portland's Wildwood restaurant. The guest chefs will show attendees how to cook such things as Oregon Dungeness crab, tenderloin steak with Stilton sauce flambe, fresh strawberry

How to 'shop at home' more often

Last week I introduced you to the concept of stockpiling groceries and spilled the beans on what's hiding in my basement: a small-scale "grocery store" at home. Like many people, I'm always on the lookout for great deals. But unlike the typical shopper, I think nothing of buying 5, 10 or perhaps even 15 of an item when it is on sale.

To really save money at the grocery store, shoppers need to break the habit of buying what they need each week and instead look beyond the current week's needs. If shampoo is on sale for $2 and you have six $1.50 coupons, how many bottles should you buy? Six! While you might only need one bottle now, shampoo is an excellent item to stockpile. It has a long shelf life and is easy to store. Six bottles of shampoo will probably last your household the better portion of a year. At 50 cents each, a very low price, they're a great deal.

What if you decided to buy just two bottles? Not only would you miss out on the opportunity to save in the long run on this item, but you also would essentially be throwing money away in the form of the four coupons you chose not to use. Think ahead: After you use up your second bottle of shampoo, what will happen? You'll head to the store when you need more. The chance is slim that it will be at its lowest sale price on the day you need to buy it. Your next bottle of shampoo may cost you $3.50 when it could have cost just 50 cents. And, instead of simply going to your stockpile and "shopping at home" for the next bottle, you might also have to make a special trip to the store.

COUPON QUEEN
Jill Cataldo

While we'll always need to go to the store for fresh produce, dairy and bread, a large portion of the groceries we buy are easily stockpiled for later. Boxed foods, snack foods, canned foods and bottled beverages all store easily and have expiration dates almost a year out from the time of purchase. Personal care products — such as shampoo, toothpaste, deodorant and shaving cream — have an even longer shelf life. And don't forget household cleaners and paper products, both of which can be stored indefinitely.

You don't have to devote a special area of your house to stockpiling. And you don't need to stockpile on a large scale. If toothpaste is on sale, buy several tubes and store them under the sink. If trash bags and paper towels are on sale, store them in the garage on a shelf. I enjoy having a corner of my basement devoted to my pantry, but you can stockpile wherever you have the space.

A friend of mine once confessed she stored cereal boxes in her son's bedroom closet once when it went on sale. She purchased 15 boxes, got them home and realized there wasn't room in the kitchen! But again, what's the harm? A little cereal in the closet never hurt anybody. And she paid less than 25 cents per box during that sale, so buying in quantity made sense.

And remember, too, that while your stockpile grows, it's also constantly in rotation. Old things come off the shelves as quickly as you add new items, just as they do at the regular grocery store.

At one time I had 40 boxes of granola bars in my basement pantry, which elicited lots of jokes and comments from friends. But what they don't realize is that my children are quite aware of Mom's home pantry and they run downstairs and help themselves whenever they'd like a snack. So as the granola bars start to disappear into hungry little mouths, Mom may be bringing home cans of soup to take their place. And my stockpile continues to rotate and evolve.

Culinary

The festival will also feature local chefs as Pratt and il Naso's Doug Jensen demonstrate how to cook such delicacies as wild mushroom strudel, gelato di limoncello con fragole, and herb-pan smoked quail with a huckleberry vodka sauce.

"I love to the opportunity to use fresh, local food, and that's what Italian fare allows me to do," said Jensen, who will showcase Quick and Easy Summer Bruschetta.

All the food demonstrations will take place under a festival tent at Carol's Dollar Mountain lodge beginning at 9 a.m. June 13 and 14 and ending at 6 p.m. each day.

Participants will be able to sample the foods while the chefs prepare them. Several of the chefs have books, including Schreiber and Julie Richardson, who just co-authored a new cookbook titled "Rustic Fruit Desserts: Crumbles, Buckles, Cobblers, Pandowdies and More."

And there will be an array of wines to sample each afternoon, culminating in a Sunday-afternoon presentation titled "Taste the Place: Idaho and the World of Northwest Wine" by Cole Danehower, editor of Northwest Palate Magazine.

Couple's love life reawakens long after children are grown

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne
Phillips

DEAR ABBY: After my wife had our sixth child, our love life fizzled out. But at age 80, we have suddenly discovered that we aren't THAT old!
How do we tactfully deflect kids and grandkids who enter without ringing the bell? I realize that lots of people would love to have this problem, but it's a problem all the same.

— BACK IN THE SADDLE AGAIN
DEAR ABBY: Your letter made me smile. I'm pleased to hear there's still plenty of "hi-ho" in the old Silver.

If you haven't told your children and grandchildren that you would prefer they not enter your home without ringing the bell, my first suggestion is to speak up now. If you have, and your request is being ignored, then I have two more suggestions.

The first is to put a chain or double lock on the doors to your house; the second is to hang a "Please Do Not Disturb, the Old Folks Are Napping" sign on your doors when you're feeling amorous. I'll bet you $20 that because of entrenched misconceptions about sexuality in the over-70 generation, none of your children or grandchildren will question it.

DEAR ABBY: Boy, do I need your opinion. My wife's youngest daughter has moved in with us, along with her three children: ages 3, 4 and 5. We are having a disagreement about allowing the kids up on the counter-tops.

My wife and her daughter think it's fine for them to pull a chair over and hop up on the counter. I have seen them on both sides of a stove full of pots filled with hot food. Because this has been allowed, the kids constantly crawl up to the cabinets to help themselves to treats and other things.

I have told them both countless times that this is the worst habit I have ever seen taught to children. I feel it's extremely dangerous and a bad idea. Please help me win this battle, or if you think it's fine, shut me up for good.

— GRANDPA DENNIS
DEAR GRANDPA DENNIS: I'm on your side. Allowing a child to climb up on a counter is inviting an accident — and to allow a child to do so when the counter is adjacent to a hot stove is child endangerment.

Your wife and her daughter are being far too permissive. Children that young should ask for treats, not be allowed to forage. Rules have to be set and enforced. What is to stop those children from dragging a chair up to a bathroom medicine cabinet and helping themselves to the pills?

DEAR ABBY: I am a single, independent, educated 26-year-old female. I recently bought my first house and enjoy living alone. My problem is, whenever I run into someone I haven't seen in a while and they learn where I am living, often the first thing he or she asks is, "Oh, you got married?"

I find it offensive that people automatically assume that because I bought a house I am married. How do I deal with a question like that and not hurt feelings in the process?

— CONTENT IN VIRGINIA

DEAR CONTENT: You deal with it by not becoming defensive. Keep your sense of humor. The next time you are asked if you got married, smile at the person and say, "Did you get an invitation to the wedding?" When the person tells you no, end the discussion by saying, "Well, then, I guess I'm not married!"

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine
Saunders

20: Zip your lips. Be discreet and avoid saying anything that could be taken out of context. If you offer any suggestions, make sure the other person doesn't interpret what you say as barking orders.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Put your nose to the grindstone and grind away. If you stay busy as a beaver, then the person overseeing your work won't have a reason to criticize. Don't volunteer to add extra tasks to your schedule.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): This isn't the time to play "Truth or Dare." Someone's motivations may escape your understanding, so it isn't appropriate to challenge someone to a duel of words. Wait patiently for your turn to shine.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): There is no rhyme or reason to your isolation. If you intend to build a wall, you must know how high and how wide before you begin. You may be stirred to block someone by unfathomable emotions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Diplomatic skills will help you make headway. When the boss seems out of sorts you can find a way to sort it out. Remain noncommittal if at all possible if faced by a decision or final assessment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Revenge may be a dish best served cold, but it's unsuitable for a potluck dinner. Although you may be irritated by someone or something, don't take advantage of an opportunity to retaliate under these stars.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Know when and whom to ask for help. Any ordinary household emergency may require that you hire professional help. Admit that you aren't qualified to fix the hot water heater, furnace or car.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Too little, too late is just too bad. Once the floodgates are open, it doesn't matter if you press your finger on the leak and call for help. Do not wrestle with issues bigger than you are.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Care enough to send the very best. A special someone may seem to be just going through the motions but still deserves your consideration.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Pay attention to the rules of the sea lanes. In the midst of many good, bad and indifferent currents, you can paddle your own canoe with a great deal of independence. Don't ignore troubled waters.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

"Beyond the obvious facts that you are a bachelor, a solicitor, a Freemason, and an asthmatic, I know nothing whatever about you."
 — Sir Arthur Conan Doyle

Leading a singleton against a suit contract can work well, but sometimes it sets up a lot of tricks for declarer, and even though you get your ruff, it can let home the contract. It is important to think about all the defensive tricks that are needed, not just the ruff.

Cover up the West and South hands here and see if you can work out the best defense for East after West has led the diamond jack against four spades. The lead is obviously a singleton. Why? With North having shown a decent diamond suit in the bidding, West would surely have tried to establish tricks in hearts or clubs rather than lead top of a double-ton diamond.

The jack is covered by the king, ace and five. How do you defend as East?

In one room East cashed the diamond queen (South following) and continued with the eight. However, South ruffed high and soon claimed the remainder of the tricks.

In the other room East was not so optimistic about West being able to overruff. He returned the diamond six immediately, asking for a club. West ruffed and switched obediently to the four of clubs. Declarer won with the ace and played a heart to his king and a second heart. East took the trick and played a trump, and now declarer had to go one down, losing two hearts, the diamond ace and a diamond ruff.

It was important for the defenders to avoid setting up dummy's diamond suit while there was still an entry to reach it.

ANSWER: Your action here should be dependent on the form of scoring and the vulnerability. Nonvulnerable, I'd be inclined to bid two diamonds, trying to make it hard for my opponents to judge their major-suit fits. If vulnerable, I might risk two diamonds at pairs, but at rubber or teams my partner would expect a better suit for that action. I'd settle for a simple overcall of one diamond.

“ Compared to all the amazing athletes that get to go to those big D-I schools, I wasn't quite caught up with them, so I decided to develop something special and see how far it can take me.”

— Burley High School graduate Steven Patterson, on walking on at the University of Oregon to be a long snapper

IT'S A SNAP

RYAN HOWE/Times-News

Recent Burley High School graduate Steven Patterson has been invited to join the University of Oregon football team as a walk-on long snapper.

Burley grad Patterson invited to walk on at Oregon as long snapper

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

Two years ago the Burley high football team needed a long snapper. Steven Patterson volunteered, seeing it as an opportunity to get more playing time.

Since then, Steven Patterson's world has been literally flipped upside down.

When he raised his hand and offered to give long snapping a try, he never dreamed that chucking a pigskin through his legs would take him this far.

Patterson began playing football in the seventh grade, and like most young players dreamed of someday playing Division I college football. But major programs rarely recruit southern Idaho.

“It's had little dreams. I think everybody wants to play some college ball,” Patterson said. “I didn't know if it was ever going to come true. Compared to all the amazing athletes that get to go to those big D-I schools, I wasn't quite caught up with them, so I decided to develop something special and see how far it can take me.”

Now it appears it will take him at least as far as the Oregon Ducks of the Pac-10.

The Skill

As the center who snaps the ball to punters, as well as holders on field goals and extra-point attempts, long snappers are an integral part of a football team's success. Teams covet good, consistent snappers. Colleges award them with scholarships and NFL teams award them with paychecks.

Patterson was naturally skilled at the position, but he needed proper training. He scoured the Internet for tips to improve. He began to really excel in January after attending a Chris Sailer camp in Las Vegas.

In recent years long snapping, kicking and punting have become a specialized niche, and Chris Sailer Kicking camps are one of the most highly-regarded in the country for developing young talent.

Chris Rubio is in charge of Sailer's long snapping instruction. Rubio snapped for UCLA from 1994-1998. Seven years ago, Sailer, an old Bruin teammate, called and Rubio's been teaching long snappers across the country ever since.

The Times-News caught up with Rubio via telephone while he was preparing to run camps for Les Miles at LSU and Nick Saban at Alabama.

“The best thing about Steven is you tell him what to do and he does it. He wants to get better, and that's a big positive,” Rubio said.

At the camp in January, Patterson was one of 135 snappers from 38 states. His hard work and determination helped him stand out.

“It was a much bigger stage than he was used to,” Rubio said. “He needed to work on blocking and speed. He kept improving and came to our camp in May and did very well. Everything I asked him to work on, he did.”

It's not as easy as it looks. The long snapper must be able to throw the football at a small target 15 yards away. He does so while upside down and with 280-pound defenders bearing down on him.

Players who do it well reap the rewards. One of Rubio's pupils got the long-snapping job at Duke Pittsburgh Penguins defenseman Kris Letang celebrates after scoring a goal against the Detroit Red Wings in the first period of Game 3 of the NHL hockey Stanley Cup finals in Pittsburgh, Tuesday.

Gonchar, Penguins top Wings

By Alan Robinson
Associated Press writer

PITTSBURGH — Sergei Gonchar said it once, then repeated it again a few seconds later as he tried pumping some confidence into some discouraged teammates: It's not over.

Thanks to Gonchar's power-play goal midway through the third period that revived the Penguins after the Detroit Red Wings pressed for lead, the Stanley Cup finals are far from over for Pittsburgh following a 4-2 victory in Game 3 on Tuesday night.

Game 4, which could have been an elimination game for Pittsburgh, will be Thursday night. Either the defending champion Red Wings can take a stranglehold 3-1 advantage or the Penguins can make the finals a best-of-three after losing the first two in Detroit.

Gonchar's slap shot from center point off Evgeni Malkin's pass sailed past Chris Osgood as Bill Guerin and Sidney Crosby screened the goalie.

“The power play was an unbelievable job by a handful of guys out there, keeping the play alive and giving Gonch a chance,” Penguins coach Dan Bylsma said.

The Penguins prevented the Red Wings from moving to within one victory of their fifth Stanley Cup since 1997.

Malkin assisted on the first three Penguins goals, giving him 33 points in 20 games, the most in the play-offs since Joe Sakic's 34 in 22 games for Stanley Cup champion Colorado in 1996.

Gonchar and first-period scores by Max Talbot and Kris Letang gave the Penguins hope again, just as they did by winning Game 3 by 3-2 on a pair of Crosby goals in last year's finals. The Red Wings went on to win that one in six.

The sweet story of Lamar Odom's love of candy

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Lamar Odom just can't help himself when it comes to the sweet stuff. He loves candy.

He even credits his consumption of sugary treats for fueling his double-double performances in Games 5 and 6 of the Western Conference finals that helped the Los Angeles Lakers close out Denver and reach the NBA finals.

“It's funny because the games I played well were the games where I ate candy for breakfast,” he said, grinning.

Odom

“It's the reason why I got double digits in points and rebounds. I guess I'm going to have to eat candy for breakfast in order to play well.”

That idea is appalling to Dr. Daniel Amen, a child and adult psychiatrist in Newport Beach who wrote an essay tying together Odom's candy consumption and erratic play in the postseason.

“This is bad news for the Lakers,” wrote Amen, an admitted Lakers fan. “I've been telling my patients for years that sugar acts like a drug in the brain. It causes blood sugar levels to spike and then crash, leaving you feeling tired, irritable, foggy and stupid. Eating too much sugar impairs

Magic players: point guard Nelson will play in finals

The Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — Orlando Magic players say Jameer Nelson will play in the NBA finals, even though the All-Star point guard and his coach remain publicly pessimistic.

Nelson participated in a full team practice Tuesday for the first time since tearing the labrum in his right shoulder Feb. 2. While Nelson said coach Stan Van Gundy still said the point guard's status won't be determined until game day, players said Nelson looked “terrific” and expect him to be on the court against the Los Angeles Lakers.

Nelson

“I expect to see him out there at some point in the series,” backup point guard Anthony Johnson said.

Nelson had what was then called season-ending surgery Feb. 19. Nelson's rehabilitation was supposed to take at least another two months.

Game 1 of the finals is Thursday night in Los Angeles, and healed or not, Nelson wants to play.

“I'm not saying I'm any tougher or stronger than anybody, but I've been known to do some amazing things sometimes,” Nelson said Tuesday, again lobbying for playing time.

Halladay fans 14 in win over Angels

TORONTO — Roy Halladay struck out a career-high 14 to win his major league-leading ninth game, Alex Rios backed him with a home run and the Toronto Blue Jays beat the Los Angeles Angels 6-4 on Tuesday night.

Halladay (9-1) threw his second complete game of the season, allowing four runs, no walks and seven hits to win his sixth straight decision. Working on an extra day of rest, he threw a season-high 133 pitches.

The right-hander, whose only defeat this season was an April 21 loss to Texas, moved ahead of Kansas City's Zack Greinke for the major league lead in wins.

RAYS 6, ROYALS 2

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Matt Joyce hit a tiebreaking two-run double and added a two-run homer, and Andy Sonnanstine allowed two runs in 6 2-3 innings to lead the Rays past the Royals.

Joyce made it 4-2 on his two-out double during the sixth off reliever Horacio Ramirez. He extended the Tampa Bay advantage to 6-2 on his third homer of the season in the eighth.

YANKEES 12, RANGERS 3

NEW YORK — Mark Teixeira sparked the Yankees with a takeout slide at second base after being hit with pitches twice, Hideki Matsui and Jorge Posada hit three-run homers and New York beat the Rangers to take over best record in the American League.

Derek Jeter became the fourth active player with 1,500 runs — and just the fourth in Yankees history — when Teixeira sent rookie shortstop Elvis Andrus tumbling on Alex Rodriguez's fourth-inning grounder.

RED SOX 5, TIGERS 1

DETROIT — Daisuke Matsuzaka pitched five strong innings to win for the first time this season and manager Terry Francona earned his 500th victory as the Red Sox beat the Tigers.

Francona became the third Boston manager to reach that plateau with the Red Sox, joining Joe Cronin (1,071) and Mike Higgins (560).

TWINS 4, INDIANS 3

MINNEAPOLIS — Joe Mauer homered and had three RBIs to help Kevin Slowey win again in the Twins' victory over the Indians.

Slowey (8-1) won his fourth consecutive start pitching six strong innings.

ATHLETICS 5, WHITE SOX 0

CHICAGO — Vin Mazzaro pitched into the seventh inning to win his major league debut and Matt Holliday hit a three-run double to lead the Athletics to a victory over the White Sox.

Mazzaro allowed three hits, walked four and struck one in 6 1-3 innings. Jack Cust homered for Oakland, which won for just the second time in seven games.

NATIONAL LEAGUE PIRATES 3, METS 1

PITTSBURGH — Zach Duke pitched seven effective innings and Pittsburgh beat Johan Santana and the

New York Mets.

Jason Jaramillo hit his first major league homer for the Pirates, who have won three of four. Freddy Sanchez and Nate McLouth each had two hits.

MARLINS 10, BREWERS 3

MIAMI — Cody Ross hit a grand slam and Dan Uggla belted a milestone home run to help the Marlins beat the Brewers.

Uggla became the fastest second baseman to reach 100 career homers with a two-run shot in the second. It came in his 502nd game as a second baseman, beating Alfonso Soriano by 34 games.

NATIONALS 10, GIANTS 6

WASHINGTON — Christian Guzman hit a tiebreaking RBI single in Washington's six-run eighth inning, helping the Nationals beat the Giants.

Guzman was in a 7-for-45 skid before his hit off Merkin Valdez gave the Nationals a 6-5 lead.

BRAVES 6, CUBS 5, 12 INNINGS

ATLANTA — Jeff Francoeur hit a tying two-run homer with two outs in the ninth and Chipper Jones drove in the winning run with a 12th-inning single, helping the Braves rally for a victory over the Cubs.

The Cubs wasted a brilliant performance by rookie starter Randy Wells. Filling in for suspended Carlos Zambrano, he didn't allow a hit until Jones singled with two outs in the seventh.

CARDINALS 5, REDS 2

ST. LOUIS — Rookie Nick Stavinoha gave St. Louis another key hit with a two-run, go-ahead double in the sixth inning and stand-in starter Brad Thompson (1-1) worked five effective innings for the Cardinals in a victory over the Reds.

Stavinoha has 12 RBIs in only 45 at-bats for the Cardinals, who beat the Reds for the sixth time in seven games at Busch Stadium since last season. Albert Pujols had two RBIs.

ASTROS 3, ROCKIES 2, 11 INNINGS

HOUSTON — Miguel Tejada hit a game-winning homer off Josh Fogg in the 11th inning to cap a three-RBI night and lift the Houston Astros to a 3-2 win over the Colorado Rockies on Tuesday night.

Tejada, the NL's leading hitter coming in with a .353 average, tied the game in the ninth with an RBI single off Huston Street. He also had an RBI single in the fifth against Rockies starter Ubaldo Jimenez.

Penguins

Talbot added an empty-net score in the final minute.

The way they played for much of Game 3, it looked like Detroit was trying to win this one in three.

They outshot the Penguins 26-11 following a furious first two periods that featured five-minute stretches of continuous up-and-down play, numerous scoring chances at both ends — and, the way the Red Wings kept pressuring, plenty of tentativeness by towel-waving Penguins fans nervous they might see the Penguins' season effectively end.

"We talked after the second, we didn't have a very good second period. We needed to calm down and get back to our game," Bylsma said.

They did and Gonchar turned out to be right.

One of the few Penguins players at the rink on a day off Monday, he constantly repeated that the Penguins did enough right during their twin 3-1 losses in Detroit to encourage them. Guerin also downplayed the fact 31 of the previous 32 teams to win the first two games at home went on to win the series, saying that meant nothing in these finals.

Patterson

University and received a full-ride estimated at over $300,000.

"A lot of times snappers are the smarter kids, and I say, 'Relax. You're not solving world hunger here. You're snapping a dead animal 15 yards. Snap it fast and snap it accurate, that's what you need to do,'" said Rubio.

Despite its importance, long snapping is a thankless job. A snapper's name is usually only mentioned during game broadcasts when he messes up. Everyone remembers Adam Vinatieri kicked the game-winning field goal for the New England Patriots in Super Bowl XXXVIII, but how many people remember Brian Kinchen, the long snapper?

Duck Call

Since January, Patterson has worked tirelessly to become a Division-I-worthy long snapper. He works out more than three hours every day, lifting weights, running and practicing snaps. At the Chris Sailer Camp in May, he ranked among the top 40 snappers in the nation. Rankings are based on speed, accuracy, consistency, size, athletic ability and blocking.

Patterson, a 6-foot-1, 215-pound All-Great Basin West offensive tackle and linebacker, sent videos to almost every college in the country.

"We didn't have any idea who was going to like it," Patterson said. "We didn't know how good I was."

About 10 schools showed solid interest. The most intriguing call came from the University of Oregon, and Patterson visited last month.

"It was amazing," he said. "They have crazy facilities. NFL pro scouts come along and they say 'We don't even have stuff like this.'"

Since Patterson was a late find for Oregon, he's had to rush the NCAA Clearinghouse and school admissions process. This fall, Patterson will walk on, and then work to earn the starting long snapper job and a scholarship. He said the Oregon coaches have hinted he might have a chance to play in his first year.

"The game is so much bigger and faster (at the college level)," Rubio said, "but I think he does have the ability, I really do. He's improved so much, and he's going to keep improving. He's a hard worker."

Patterson could make his college football debut back home in Idaho, as Oregon opens the season at Boise State on Sept. 3, a game slated to be broadcast nationally on ESPN. If that's not a big enough stage for a kid from small-town Burley, how about Oct. 10 when the Ducks travel to Los Angeles to play UCLA inside the Rose Bowl? Or the Ducks' home game with perennial power USC on Oct. 31?

Right now, it's all pretty surreal for Patterson

"That's pretty crazy to think about. Big powerhouse USC. It's going to be on TV, too, so that's pretty nerve-wracking."

While he's come a long way, Patterson knows he still has a long way to go.

"I don't know how far I can take it, if I can even take it to the pros because it's such a special ability," Patterson said. "Or if I can just pay for my education, that's good enough. That will be well worth the while. We've put a lot of work into it. If it can pay for my education, that will be great."

College of Southern Idaho sophomore outfielder Tyler Chism was named a first team NJCAA Division I All American. He is one of only 12 players to earn the distinction.

Chism led the Golden Eagles in batting average (.398), hits (78), RBIs (53) and home runs (six), while recording a .941 fielding percentage. He helped CSI to a 33-24 record and a second-place finish at the Region 18 Tournament.

Sharapova loses at French, barely avoids shutout

PARIS (AP) — The final score of Maria Sharapova's stunning loss in the French Open quarterfinals Tuesday did not look quite as embarrassing as it nearly did: Her opponent led 6-0, 5-0.

That Sharapova saved a match point in the 12th game and wound up delaying her defeat for 15 minutes was of no consolation, of course. All that mattered was that her bid to complete a career Grand Slam this year ended when she was beaten 6-0, 6-2 by 20th-seeded Dominika Cibulkova.

"I don't really care about numbers. It's either a 'W' or an 'L,'" Sharapova said, "and I prefer 'W.'"

All of that time on court at the French Open, and all of that time away before it, finally caught up to her, resulting in her most lopsided loss at a major tournament.

"You can only ask your body to do so much," said Sharapova, who had right shoulder surgery in October and had played four three-set matches at Roland Garros in her first major tournament in nearly a year. "Everything fell a little short today. The pace wasn't there on my strokes, and, you know, I was five steps slower."

Her absence from the tour dropped her ranking outside the top 100. Still, as a former No. 1 and a three-time major champion, Sharapova was expected to beat Cibulkova, a 20-year-old Slovak who was making her Grand Slam quarterfinal debut and whose chief financial backer is not a shoe company or a racket manufacturer but, instead, a friend of her coach from back home in Bratislava.

Now the 5-foot-3 Cibulkova — 11 inches shorter than Sharapova — faces the current No. 1, Dinara Safina, who overcame a shaky start to defeat No. 9 Victoria Azarenka of Belarus 1-6, 6-4, 6-2.

"I'm not really happy with my game today," Safina said.

Cibulkova would feel exactly the opposite about her own performance, but neither she nor her coach, Vladimir Platenik, thought she played perfectly. "Regular," was the word Platenik used when they huddled in the hallway outside the locker room at Court Suzanne Lenglen.

"I told you!" Platenik said. "I told you if you played regular, you could do it!"

would stop Nadal's 31-match winning streak in Paris, and given that accomplishment, there should be no doubting how far the Swede can go.

The 23rd-seeded Soderling stretched his career-best winning streak to eight matches by easily handling two-time French Open semifinalist Nikolay Davydenko 6-1, 6-3, 6-1. Never before a Grand Slam semifinalist — or quarterfinalist or even fourth-round participant — Soderling will be a French Open finalist if he can beat No. 12 Fernando Gonzalez of Chile.

"I always knew that I could play really, really good tennis," Soderling said.

Gonzalez, the 2007 Australian Open runner-up, reached his first semifinal at Roland Garros with a 6-3, 3-6, 6-0, 6-4 victory over No. 3 Andy Murray.

Was Gonzalez surprised to have taken a set 6-0 from Murray?

"Playing Andy? I would have never dreamed it," Gonzalez said, "even playing table tennis."

Memphis finds no proof former player cheated

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Memphis says it should keep the victories from the 2007-08 season which ended in the national title game after an internal investigation turned up no proof that a former men's basketball player cheated on his SAT exam.

"Certainly, the University of Memphis should not suffer a financial penalty or vacation of records for the 2008 NCAA tournament as a result of this allegation," according to a report detailing the school's investigation into NCAA allegations.

The report, released to The Associated Press and other news outlets Tuesday under a public records request, details Memphis' internal probe into accusations that a former player allowed a stand-in to take his SAT. The report also looked into charges of grade tampering on behalf of the player.

Most names in the report were redacted by the school because of privacy concerns, but an attorney for former Memphis star Derrick Rose has acknowledged that Rose cooperated with an investigation of similar allegations while still a student.

Rose, the overall No. 1 pick in the 2008 NBA draft and the rookie of the year, was the point guard for the Memphis team that lost to Kansas in the title game.

School officials argue that even if the NCAA's Committee on Infractions believes a former player cheated, the program should not be penalized because the school was unaware of any wrongdoing.

"At this point, there is not sufficient evidence on which to conclude that (the player) knew or should have known that he was ineligible at the time of his participation in the NCAA championship," the report says.

Memphis will present its findings to the Committee on Infractions on Saturday in Indianapolis. Former coach John Calipari, now with Kentucky, is expected to participate by phone.

The report released Tuesday says school officials have encouraged the player — whose name was blacked out — to cooperate with the NCAA investigation, but his "consistent response" is that he took the test and he already answered the same questions in 2007.

Rose's attorney, Daniel E. Reidy, did not immediately return a message left Tuesday at his office.

The report also says the school had no proof the SAT was fraudulent until notified by the Educational Testing Service that the player's score had been canceled. That letter came May 5, 2008, after Rose's only season at Memphis.

When asked directly about the tests he was reported to have taken, the report says the player responded that he took each of them himself. The player "did not pursue any of the opportunities made available to him by ETS to attempt to validate his scores. The first notice of these opportunities was sent very late in the basketball season. ... At this point, there is not sufficient evidence on which to conclude that he knew or should have known that he was ineligible at the time of his participation in the NCAA championship."

"The university ... took all reasonable steps to confirm that (name redacted) had met eligibility requirements," the report states.

Position-by-position breakdown of finals matchup between superstar Kobe's L.A. Lakers and rising star Howard's Orlando Magic

BY BRIAN MAHONEY/ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

CENTER

ANDREW BYNUM VS. DWIGHT HOWARD

The Lakers sorely missed Bynum last year against Boston, and they need him to play well now against Howard, because having to double-team Orlando's All-Star means leaving one of its 3-point shooters open. But Bynum hasn't regained his full mobility after returning from a knee injury and that puts him at a severe disadvantage against Howard, who scored 40 points in the Magic's clinching victory over Cleveland and authored a 25-point, 20-rebound masterpiece last time he visited the Lakers. EDGE: MAGIC.

POWER FORWARD

PAU GASOL VS. RASHARD LEWIS

Intriguing matchup of All-Stars who hurt teams in different ways, Gasol from inside and Lewis from the perimeter. Gasol was a disappointment against Orlando in the regular season, averaging just 12 points and 8.0 rebounds, but a repeat of those struggles seems unlikely the way he is playing now. Lewis will continue to cause matchup problems with his 3-point shooting, as he did against Cleveland's big forwards, so the Lakers may often use Lamar Odom to defend him away from the basket. EDGE: EVEN.

SMALL FORWARD

TREVOR ARIZA VS. HEDO TURKOGLU

Ariza, a former Magic forward, is no longer just a slasher, shooting 50 percent from 3-point range in the postseason. He made two key steals on inbounds passes against Denver that helped the Lakers pull out victories, and his athleticism is a key to their defense. Turkoglu had awful shooting efforts in three of the final four nights in the conference finals, but still finds ways to impact games with his passing and rebounding. EDGE: MAGIC.

SHOOTING GUARD

KOBE BRYANT VS. COURTNEY LEE

Bryant will likely be guarded often by Mickael Pietrus, the Magic's best perimeter defender. Bryant had a 41-point game and a 28-point, 13-rebound, 11-assist effort against Orlando during the regular season, and he's desperate to come through in the finals after Boston's defensive schemes made life miserable for him last June. EDGE: LAKERS.

POINT GUARD

DEREK FISHER VS. RAFAEL ALSTON

Both will get open shots when their defenders have to help on other players, but neither has consistently made them in the playoffs. Alston is shooting 38 percent and Fisher only 36 percent — 23.5 percent from behind the arc. Still, Alston has had a few strong performances, more of them than Fisher. EDGE: MAGIC.

RESERVES

LAMAR ODOM, LUKE WALTON, SHANNON BROWN, JORDAN FARMAR, SASHA VUJACIC AND JOSH POWELL VS. MICKAEAL PIETRUS, ANTHONY JOHNSON, MARCIN GORTAT, TONY BATTIE AND J.J. REDICK

Orlando doesn't go as deep but has received reliable play from the guys it calls on, winning games when Johnson and Gortat had to start after suspensions to Alston and Howard. The Lakers' bench was supposed to give them an edge against Boston and instead was a disappointment, but with Odom looking sharp at the end of the conference finals, this is their chance for redemption. EDGE: LAKERS.

COACHES

PHIL JACKSON VS. STAN VAN GUNDY

Van Gundy has been criticized by his former center (Shaquille O'Neal) and his current one (Howard) this season, but hard to find any fault with him these days after leading his team to consecutive series victories over higher-seeded opponents. Jackson tries again for a 10th title, which would move him ahead of Red Auerbach, and his experience and calm on this stage remain one of the Lakers' biggest assets. To win it, he'll need to find a way to solve the matchup problems the Magic created for their opponents in the East. EDGE: EVEN.

Borel is confident of ride into record book

NEW YORK (AP) — Calvin Borel grinned at the question: Would Mine That Bird have passed Rachel Alexandra if the Preakness were 1½ miles?

"I have no comment," he said.

Borel has been all tangled up in the drama involving the two horses. And now because of it he has a chance to make history: the first jockey to capture the three legs of the Triple Crown on two horses.

Borel won the Kentucky Derby on 50-1 long shot Mine That Bird. When Rachel Alexandra entered the Preakness, Borel switched horses to the filly he had ridden to five straight victories. Rachel Alexandra then edged Mine That Bird to thwart the gelding's shot at a Triple Crown.

Now Rachel Alexandra is skipping the Belmont, and Borel is back aboard Mine That Bird.

Those twists and turns created the possibility of another kind of Triple Crown. Winning all three races in one year is what Borel has fantasized since he was a kid.

"I never dreamed I'd have to do it on a different horse," he said.

Borel was at Madison Square Garden on Tuesday, and not backing down from his guarantee of victory a day earlier.

"I'm sticking with it," he declared.

Just as he boasted about Rachel Alexandra before the Preakness, Borel quickly shifted his proclamations to Mine That Bird. He said his latest prediction was natural after seeing how the gelding responded during Monday's workout at Churchill Downs.

"When you run them two races and come back so fresh like he did — I mean, he was bouncing," he said. "And that does not happen."

Borel, who won his first Kentucky Derby aboard Street Sense in 2007, will be making his first Belmont Stakes start. He plans to follow the same patient strategy that worked so well in the Derby, when Mine That Bird rallied from last to first.

"One reason we picked Calvin to ride the horse is he likes that style," trainer Chip Woolley said.

It's a style that may be a natural for the 1½-mile Belmont. The Derby is 1¼ miles, the Preakness 13-16.

"The mile-and-a-half is a question for a lot of us," Dunkirk jockey John Velazquez said. "It seems suited for Mine That Bird better than everyone else."

No wonder Borel is so confident in Mine That Bird.

"He's a grinder," the jockey said. "The race will fit him perfect."

Odom

cognitive function, which may explain why Odom doesn't always make the smartest decisions on the court."

Odom's performances had been up-and-down until the final two games against the Nuggets. Of course, he was bothered by an aching back, which might have had something to do with it.

"I guess he's wrong, even though he's a doctor," Odom said.

He said he consumed "a whole plate of jellybean Starbursts" to start off those two game days last week.

"If I told anyone, the first four games I didn't eat candy, the last two I did, what would you tell me to do?" he said before supplying his own answer. "Keep eating candy."

Kobe Bryant seemingly endorsed the idea, too, saying, "Whatever works."

Odom's personal assistant procures his candy stash, shopping for Twizzler bites, Gummy Bears, Hershey's white chocolate cookies and cream (Odom's favorite), Lifesavers, and something the star forward refers to as "peachy sugarcoated rings," among other goodies.

Needless to say, the treats are a huge hit with the 29-year-old player's two young children, who probably think every day is Halloween at their house.

"If your dad always has candy, how cool is he?" Odom said. "Coolest dude in the world. My kids think I'm cool."

Lakers coach Phil Jackson, the father of five grown children, knows the effects of candy on kids.

"Halloween is one of the worst nights of a year as a parent," he said.

With Game 1 of the NBA finals beginning Thursday against Orlando, Jackson is getting plenty of reaction to Odom's vice mixed in with the usual coaching suggestions.

Nelson

Nelson will not play again this season. But he recanted his comments Monday and said a quicker recovery and the chance of winning a championship has forced him to at least take a look at Nelson.

"It's still no in my mind," Smith said. "There's a very smidgen of a chance he can play."

That "smidgen" seems to be growing.

Nelson has been playing full-court games and practicing in non-contact drills for the last two weeks. Tuesday, he participated in every drill.

Players said Nelson wasn't in his All-Star form, but even not completely healthy, he was better than most NBA point guards.

"He was terrific," Magic forward Mickael Pietrus said. "Hopefully, he will play and can help us win."

Starting point guard Rafer Alston expressed similar optimism.

"I was going to try to run him ragged out there, but I didn't want to cross him over," Alston said. "He did cross me over a couple times."

Orlando was 2-0 against the Lakers this season. Nelson was Orlando's leading scorer in both those games, averaging 27.5 points. He has been trying to convince the Magic for a chance at playing since the playoffs began, with each round the team advances the idea — and the talk — of him returning growing.

"I'm a competitor. I want to play," Nelson said Tuesday.

The Magic's title hopes took a major hit after he was injured. A trade-deadline deal that brought Alston from Houston largely saved the Magic's season, allowing the rotation to remain the same and Johnson to continue to provide solid play as Alston's backup.

The Magic are hoping Nelson can only add to that success.
