A Wal-Mart welcome

T.F. Supercenter opens its doors

By Nichole Carnell Times-News writer

After nearly four years of planning and building, an assortment of Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce members, cheerleaders, veterans, U.S. Army Reserve members, and even Miss Magic Valley welcomed the new Wal-Mart to Twin Falls Wednesday morning.

A presentation of colors by the Army Reserves, a rendition of the national anthem by Twin Falls vocalist Burt Huish, followed by a Wal-Martinspired routine by Planet Cheer kept a crowd of more than 100 who waited outside the store for more than 30 minutes during the 7:30 a.m. ceremony.

Why Blue Lakes work won't work at night

State didn't require night work on busy boulevard

By Jared S. Hopkins Times-News writer

The Idaho Transportation Department said Wednesday there's a simple reason why crews doing the roadwork on Blue Lakes Boulevard don't work more than 40 hours a week, aren't seen out at night and aren't obligated to pave 24 hours a day.

They weren't asked to.

ITD spokesman Nathan Jerke said the state didn't require the project to be worked on at night or for workers to work around the clock. The only requirement for night work was for the intersection at Pole Line Road and Blue Lakes to be done at night, according to a copy of the project's specifications reviewed by the Times-News.

Blue Lakes

"It was never asked for from the beginning," Jerke said of work on Blue Lakes being preformed at night. "It was never required so they never estimated how much it would cost."

Questions about crews not working Fridays, at night or even continuously throughout days are among the loudest gripes from impacted businesses and motorists. The rumblings are vet another example of ITD coming under fire, but officials and businesses point to months of opportunities for public input that went unanswered.

According to Jerke, the bid process for the project broke down the following:

- The state's internal engineer estimate for the project came in at $6 million and didn't consider the work being done anytime other than the daytime. He said work in the evening is generally more expensive.
- The bid was awarded much lower, at $4.6 million to Western Construction of Boise, because of the economic downturn and decreased costs for materials. Bids were submitted by six other companies including two in the Magic Valley. But at that point, no changes could be made to the contract.
- The funding comes from a lump sum of federal transportation funding and the state uses other funds more than the $6 million – for night work, for example - would divert funds from elsewhere. He said the company is obligated to work 40-hour work weeks, which don't necessarily have to be done Monday through Friday.

"If you decide to put that much more money into the Blue Lakes project, then it's two or three more projects that can't be addressed elsewhere," he said.

Additionally, even if the project finishes early - ITD said recently it was ahead of schedule – no money is saved and the contractor merely profits more. But last week, businesses met with the contractor and ITD officials to vent their frustrations, including concerns over paving schedules, access and whether night work was possible. Those concerns continue.

Jason Shumway, whose wife owns a hair salon in the Centre Point shopping center, said Wednesday the only way to access the businesses was through the back lot through a neighborhood customers weren't used to. He said the roadwork has driven down business tremendously.

"We're going to have to go into debt or our savings to make the bills this month," he said.

Jim Paxton, who owns Snake River Pool & Spa and sits on the ITD business advisory committee, said for projects elsewhere in he understands frustrations Idaho. But Jerke said using but people have had plenty of chances to offer input.

her business ordered $800,000 worth of yarn from Malaysia. "The yarn was originally sent to her Oakley address, but was more than likely diverted after the order to some other destination because she never received the yarn," the report reads.

Information:

A Burley woman, 31, reported that a man pulled into her driveway and started talking to her 7-yearold daughter while the girl and her friends were jumping on the trampoline in the front yard. A few days later, she said, the same man drove by her house "very slowly." was a sex offender, followed him and called the police. "I advised (the woman) that it is a public road and the male can drive on it but I would go and speak with the male," Deputy Doug Welch's report reads. The man, 52, has a suspended driver's license. "I advised (the man) not to drive anymore ... and to stay off of (the woman's) property. (The man) stated he would never drive that way again," the report concludes.

Kimberly lab prepares to track dairy water use

By Nate Poppino Times-News writer

KIMBERLY Researchers at Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Research Service lab near Kimberly are gearing up to study just how much groundwater dairies consume, they announced Wednesday morning. The study was prompted by discussions about a Dairymen's Association drew up in 2007, when the Idaho Department of Water Resources threatened to shut off Magic Valley wells taking water away from Thousand Springs-area fish farms. The state and dairies names of the participatcame up with widely different estimates of how much water a cow uses data. It would be hard, per day - the dairymen they said, to specifically said 29 gallons; IDWR said closer to 70.

It's now up to David Bjorneberg, the ARS lab's research leader, to shed light on the matter, with results due by Jan. 1, 2011. release the names in order Dairymen are covering to bring the dairies on the cost of the research — as much as $225,000 and IDWR is providing rights and other issues said oversight, Executive Director Bob Naerebout. Job shuffling at the lab delayed the work by a year, Bjorneberg said. But help from consultants at Ag Tech, the study should soon get underway at six Magic Valley dairies. Participating facilities were picked from 129 that responded to a water-use survey Naerebout sent to all dairies in Idaho. The at whether wastewater responses covered 21 percent of the dairies, a good response rate, Bjorneberg noted. The study will track groundwater, precipitation and wastewater flow at the dairies, calculating other figures such as how much water goes to domestic uses or evaporates from ponds. Ideally, researchers would like to study 12 dairies for at least the next year, Bjorneberg said. But he plans to move ahead with the six before recruiting more.

Check out what's new online at magicvalley.com

The challenge for IDWR will be pulling a usable figure out of the study results. Bjorneberg and the dairy representatives noted that even 12 dairies won't be enough to produce a statistically valid figure. But they said the research will still be worthwhile.

"I think the results are going to get us a better understanding" of the water use, but not a nummitigation plan the Idaho ber defensible in court, said Michael Creamer, a Boise attorney who represents the dairy association.

> IDWR representatives had their own concerns, including whether a decision to withhold the ing dairies will hamper later efforts to analyze the determine how their agency's numbers differ without a direct comparison of the dairies.

Bjorneberg said he agreed not to voluntarily board — they were concerned about privacy IDA but acknowledged that public records requests probably still could reveal the information. Creamer and other issues have compared releasing the names to conducting a study on driving habits with some preliminary and then releasing the information to police. "I don't know how we will get to the bottom of this unless we compare data to data," said local watermaster Cindy Yenter. The study will also look from milk-processing plants can be used for irrigation or to recharge the aquifer — helping ease the effects of pumping either way. Speakers said at least two local cheese plants end up with about 500,000 gallons a day each that could possibly be used.

Idaho Power partners with Western utilities for power-scheduling program

By Nate Poppino Times-News writer

Idaho Power Co. is working with other Western electric utilities to develop a dynamic scheduling system making it easier to shift electricity among them all.

Ron Schellberg, a consulting engineer with the company, said the system will shorten the time it takes to buy and sell energy on the market, collapsing a process that can now take months into only a couple of minutes. The result, he said, will be greater flexibility to changes in the power grid targeted especially resources such as wind and solar power that don't always provide consistent output. In all, 17 utilities are currently signed on to the project, Schellberg said. A core group including Idaho Power, Bonneville Power Administration and Seattle City Light started develop-

Courts launch pilot project in T.F. County

By Jared S. Hopkins Times-News writer

Twin Falls County has been selected by the state to participate in a pilot project aimed at securing court fees violators haven't paid.

The project, administered by the Idaho Court Services, began this week and applies to anyone who is late paying money to the courts - including court fines, court costs and victim restitution.

The deadline is set by the judge and payment is typically due within 45 davs.

information is transmitted daily to the state tax commission. Using it, the county would inform violators and the money would then be collected through tax returns.

"It's another means of collecting," said Twin Falls County Kristina Glascock.

But violators would be allowed to object to the measure before a court, Glascock said at a recent county staff meeting.

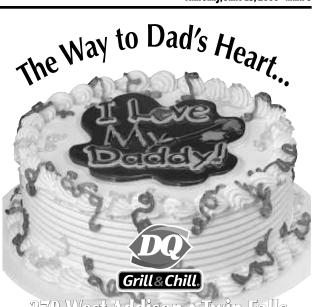

That prompted Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loebs to question the project, and said details are lacking.

"Well I think before the pilot project takes off, someone should figure out how we're gonna fly it." Loebs said, noting all the violators will object to it. "It kind of sounds like a pilotless program."

He said without knowing the rules, he's not going to participate and get in the "middle of tax refunds."

"I'm not sending anybody from my office down to the courtroom until somebody tells me what the rules to this game are," he said.

The other county participating is Payette County, and the state hopes to implement the project statewide in November.

Shoshone Falls to rise again this weekend

Times-News

Flows at Shoshone Falls are about to swell again, though the waterfall won't quite put on the show it did earlier this spring, Idaho Power Co. officials said this

Flood-control releases from farther up the Snake River should add at least 2,000 or 3,000 cubic feet per second to the water rushing over the falls, the company estimates. Recent rains have slightly blunted irrigation demand, at the same time that provisional data from the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation showed that all major upper Snake River reservoirs were near or at capacity on Wednesday.

The water had already started to arrive on Wednesday, with at least 3,500 cfs passing over Milner Dam. Idaho Power expects flows could approach 10,000 cfs by this weekend; that's 74,800 gallons every second. The falls reached 17,000 cfs earlier this year.

ern Camas County, why wouldn't the Friedman Memorial Airport Authority (FMAA) at least consider partnering with the actor on the project?

The Idaho Mountain Express of Ketchum reported Wednesday that a public notice calling for comment on the project was published June 11 by the Federal Aviation Administration's Northwest Mountain Region office. Although the applicant on the notice was Century Holding Corp., FAA regional environmental specialist Cayla Morgan identified Willis as the principal involved, the paper said.

FMAA and Blaine County elected officials have been adamant that the new airport be built in Blaine County. But one of the three locations being studied is a site just east of the Blaine-Camas boundary.

It's less than 10 miles from Willis' property.

Considering that a new airport will cost FMAA between $150 million and $200 million and taking into account the shaky state of the Wood River Valley economy, doesn't it make sense to examine all the alternatives?

Willis wants the Camas airport to serve his Soldier Mountain Ski Area, which is in the process of building a new lodge. The Federal Aviation Administration doesn't require privately-owned airports to have control towers and firefighting equipment.

But with some investment by FMAA, it could become a full-service commercial airport.

A similar partnership has happened before. In 1982, billionaire Ross Perot signed an agreement with the FAA and the city of Fort Worth to build the world's first purely industrial airport north of Fort Worth. The city owns the facility and one of Perot's companies manages it.

Fort Worth Alliance Airport has been an unqualified success, averaging 220 takeoffs and landings a day. Three-fourths of flights are general aviation, 11 percent are commercial airlines, 8 percent are military and 7 percent are air taxis. And it's just 15 miles from the massive Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, the third-busiest in the world.

From the Magic Valley's standpoint, we'd prefer that the new Friedman Airport be built south of Timmerman Hill and next to U.S. Highway 75. (A third proposed site is in the Bellevue Triangle, north of Timmerman Hill.) But the world has changed in the past year, so what's most convenient might not be the most feasible.

The Blaine County line is not sacrosanct. It's time FMAA and the wider community joined the conversation about alternatives.

As an explosion of pixels hits our TV screens, with the digital and high-def revolution, my unscientific survey shows women are less excited about high-def than men.

I prefer life and TV to be a little gauzy. I don't want to see every blemish in a harsh light.

Joel Brinkley, the author of "Defining Vision," says HDTV technology was developed totally by men. Alfred Poor, author of the HDTV Almanac, says men drove its success, too. "Men are all about the bigger, better, more," he said. "And sports are infinitely better in high definition."

The advent of sleek flat screens began to shrink the gender gap. "Women went, 'Ah, now it's not just highdef, it's a stylish piece of furniture," said Phillip Swann, founder of the Web site TVPredictions.com, which features lists of HDTV "horribles" (Cameron) and "honeys" (Angelina).

Everywhere I look, products are being pitched for a world in keener focus.

At my eye exam last week,

Dr. Jay Klessman used "Wavefront" technology, which he said could "make sort of like high-def glasses, with sharper, crisper vision." (It was originally used to fix blurry images from the Hubble Space Telescope in 1993 and has also led to more precise Lasik.) At the Georgetown Sephora, a big sign in the window hawks high-def makeup to use with the Sephora High Definition Air Brush. The point, said a Sephora "product expert," Jei Spatola, is to look "like you literally have nothing

"People who thought they looked younger on camera than in real life see themselves in high-def and say, 'Oh my God!'" he said. "We can't use the heavy makeup that used to cover flaws like a drinker's broken capillaries any more."

He said that television actresses in their 40s and over are starting to insist that their contracts say they have to be shot slightly out of focus.

"It's getting rarer to see tight shots of a woman's face," he said. "Now the camera guys shoot from the waist up."

He said that "sadly" women are going to their doctors for more cosmetic fixes and gallons of Botox. but that high-def acts almost like an X-ray to show the slightly bluish tinge of some fillers or the lumpy bumps and ripples from fillers and surgery.

As the CBS White House reporter Bill Plante said, "You go in knowing every mole and random facial hair will be visible to somebody watching closely."

I didn't get the high-def glasses. I don't want more acuity. I'm keeping it fuzzy.

Why Obama's health care 'reform' is wrong

t's hard to know whether President Obama's health care "reform" is naive, hypocritical or simply dishonest. Probably all three.

The president keeps saying it's imperative to control runaway health spending. He's right. The trouble is that what's being promoted as health care "reform" almost certainly won't suppress spending and, quite probably, will do the opposite.

A new report from Obama's own Council of Economic Advisers shows why controlling health costs is so important. Since 1975, annual health spending per person, adjusted for inflation, has grown 2.1 percentage points faster than overall economic growth per person. Should this trend continue, the CEA projects that:

 Health spending, which was 5 percent of the economy (gross domestic product, GDP) in 1960 and is reckoned at almost 18 percent today, would grow to 34 percent of GDP by 2040 - a third of the economy.

 Medicare and Medicaid, the government insurance programs for the elderly and poor, would increase from 6 percent of GDP now to 15 percent in 2040 — roughly equal to three-quarters of present federal spending.

• Employer-paid insurance premiums for family coverage, which grew 85 percent in inflationadjusted terms from 1996 to $11,941 in 2006, would increase to $25,200 by 2025 and $45,000 in 2040 (all figures in "constant 2008 dollars"). The huge costs would force employers to reduce take-home pay.

The message in these dismal figures is that uncontrolled health spending is almost singlehandedly determining national priorities. It's reducing discretionary income, raising taxes, widening budget deficits and squeezing other government programs. Worse, much medical spending is wasted, the CEA report says. It doesn't improve Americans' health; some care is unneeded or ineffective.

The Obama administration's response is to talk endlessly about restraining health spending - "bending the curve" is the buzz as if talk would suffice. The president summoned the heads of major health care trade groups representing doctors, hospitals, drug companies and medical device firms to the White House. All pledged to bend the curve. This is mostly public relations.

Does anyone believe that the American Medical Association can control the nation's 800,000 doctors or that the American Hospital Association can command the 5,700 hospi-The central cause of runaway health spending is clear. Hospitals and doctors are paid mostly on a fee-for-service basis and reimbursed by insurance. either private or governmental. The open-ended payment system encourages doctors and hospitals to provide more services – and patients to expect them. It also favors new medical technologies, which are made profitable by heavy use. Unfortunately, what pleases providers and patients individually hurts the

That's the crux of the health care dilemma, and Obama hasn't confronted it. His emphasis on controlling costs is cosmetic. The main aim of health care "reform" now being fashioned in Congress is to provide insurance to most of the 46 million uncovered Americans. This is popular and seems the moral thing to do. After all, hardly anyone wants to be without insurance. But the extra coverage might actually worsen the spending nation as a whole.

How much healthier today's uninsured would be with that coverage is unclear. They already

receive health care - $116 billion worth in 2008, estimates Families USA, an advocacy group. Some is paid by the uninsured themselves (37 percent), some by government and charities (26 percent). The remaining "uncompensated care" is either absorbed by doctors and hospitals or shifted to higher private insurance premiums. Some uninsured would benefit from coverage, but others wouldn't. Either they're healthy (40 percent are between ages 18 and 34) or would receive ineffective care.

What's needed is a fundamental remaking of the health care sector -asweeping "restructuring" that would overhaul feefor-service payment and reduce the fragmentation of care.

The place to start would be costly Medicare, the nation's largest insurance program serving 45 million elderly and disabled. Of course, this would be unpopular, because it would disrupt delivery patterns and reimbursement practices. It's easier to pretend to be curbing health spending while expanding coverage and spending. Presidents have done that for decades, and it's why most health industries see "reform" as a good deal.

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF POLITICS

Doonesbury

It's much too soon to give up on economic stimulus plan

¬ he debate over economic policy has taken a predictable yet ominous turn: The crisis seems to be easing, and a chorus of critics is already demanding that the Federal Reserve and the Obama administration abandon their rescue efforts. For those who know their history, it's deja vu all over again literally.

For this is the third time in history that a major economy has found itself in a liquidity trap, a situation in which interest-rate cuts, the conventional way to perk up the economy, have reached their limit. When this happens, unconventional measures are the only way to fight recession.

Yet such unconventional measures make the conventionally minded uncomfortable, and they keep pushing for a return to normalcy. In previous liquidity-trap episodes, policymakers gave in to these pressures far too soon, plunging the economy back into crisis. And if the critics have their way, we'll do the same thing this time. The first example of policy in a liquidity trap comes from the 1930s. The U.S. economy grew rapidly from 1933 to 1937, helped along by New Deal policies. America, however, remained well short of full employment.

Yet policymakers stopped worrying about depression and started worrying about inflation. The Federal Reserve tightened monetary policy, while FDR tried to balance the federal budget. Sure enough, the economy slumped again, and full recovery had to wait for World War II.

The second example is Japan in the 1990s. After slumping early in the decade, Japan experienced a partial recovery, with the economy growing almost 3 percent in 1996.

Policymakers responded by shifting their focus to the budget deficit, raising taxes and cutting spending. Japan proceeded to slide back into recession.

And here we go again.

On one side, the inflation worriers are harassing the Fed. The latest example: Arthur Laffer, he of the curve, warns that the Fed's policies will cause devastating inflation. He recommends, among other things, possibly raising banks' reserve requirements, which happens to be exactly what the Fed did in 1936 and 1937 — a move that none other than Milton Friedman condemned as helping to strangle economic recovery. Meanwhile, there are demands from several directions that President Barack Obama's fiscal stimulus plan be canceled.

Some, especially in Europe, argue that stimulus isn't needed, because the economy is already turning around.

Others claim that government borrowing is driving up interest rates, and that this will derail recovery.

And Republicans, providing a bit of comic relief, are saying that the stimulus has failed, because the enabling legislation was passed four months ago - wow, four whole months! - yet unemployment is still rising. This suggests an interesting comparison with the economic record of Ronald Reagan, whose 1981 tax cut was followed by no less than 16 months of rising unemployment.

OK, time for some reality

checks: First of all, while stock markets have been celebrating the economy's "green shoots," the fact is that unemployment is very high and still rising. That is, we're not even experiencing the kind of growth that led to the big mistakes of 1937 and 1997. It's way too soon to declare victory.

What about the claim that the Fed is risking inflation? It isn't. Laffer seems panicked by a rapid rise in the monetary base, the sum of currency in circulation and the reserves of banks. But a rising monetary base isn't inflationary when you're in a liquidity trap. America's monetary base doubled between 1929 and 1939; prices fell 19 percent. Japan's monetary base rose 85 percent between 1997 and 2003; deflation continued apace.

Well then, what about all that government borrowing? All it's doing is offsetting a plunge in private borrowing – total borrowing is down, not up.

Indeed, if the government weren't running a big deficit right now, the economy would probably be well on its way to a full-fledged depression.

To sum up: A few months ago the U.S. economy was in danger of falling into depression. Aggressive monetary policy and deficit spending have, for the time being, averted that danger. And suddenly critics are demanding that we call the whole thing off, and revert to business as usual.

Those demands should be ignored. It's much too soon to give up on policies that have, at most, pulled us a few inches back from the edge of the abyss.

other agencies are doing the same thing. They'll tell their legislators the same thing.

The UI and state police haven't considered how their actions play with people in Rupert or Mountain Home, Orofino or Post Falls.

In those communities, it reads like more government extravagance.

And these folks vote.

... Teton be dammed

Post Register, Idaho Falls

Jeers to the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation for coming up with $400,000 to look at ways to improve water storage in the Teton Basin.

Because the feds came up with the cash, Idaho is now empowered to spend $400,000 of its own to "look at all the options," including resurrection of Teton Dam.

This bad idea just won't go

Construction costs would be immense, some say $1 billion. Court battles would be expensive and protracted. More importantly, nobody in these parts has forgotten the Teton Dam disaster that claimed 11 lives in 1976.

Sure, more storage is needed. And Idaho is on the right track in emphasizing aquifer recharge and conservation. But flushing $400,000 the state could use any number of other places makes no sense.

State to streamline process for economic growth

Jerome commissioner says county has land ready for development

By John Plestina

Times-News correspondent

JEROME - Gov. C.L. 'Butch' Otter gave Kelly Pearce his marching orders to spread the word that the state wants to spur economic development and job creation. That march took Pearce through Jerome County Tuesday.

The bad news that the administrator of the Idaho Division of Building Safety conveyed to the Jerome County Commission is that construction is down just like the economy. The good news is that the future looks better.

Pearce told the commission that Otter gave him a challenge to visit as many local governments as possible to see how stimulus money could help with economic development. He said the governor considers a new business anywhere in Idaho a success.

"We can speed up the process of getting permitting and a plant up and going," Pearce said.

He explained that state government wants to help Jerome County and all local governments in Idaho with a program called Rapid Response. It speeds the plan review process for industrial and other commercial developments that have the potential to reduce unemployment. Concerns relating to building plans and inspections are transmitted electronically and responses are transmitted the same way to thwart construction delays.

Pearce used the example of the February 2007 fire that destroyed the high school in Middleton. His agency expedited the process for plan review and subsequently a new school was completed and ready for the next school year.

"The governor has said that could be applied to other entities besides schools," he said.

When Pearce asked commissioners if Jerome County has future projects, Commissioner Joe Davidson responded that he was reluctant to divulge the information because of competition from other parts of the state.

"We are here to do business. We want to do business. We have ground ready to go and we're very actively pursuing business," Davidson said.

He referred to the water and sewer pipelines extending from the city of Jerome to the west side of U.S. Highway 93 near the

Coors recognizes southern Idaho barley growers

Pete Coors, of Coors Brewing Company in Colorado, signs a hat for Miriam Garrison after a luncheon held at the Idaho distribution site in Burley. Tom and Miriam Garrison, of Buhl, were awarded the company's top honor for barley growers for last year's crop. 'We can't make good beer without good barley,' Coors said Wednesday during a speech to growers and other leaders in the company.

what grapes are to wine. And for more than 50 years barley producers in southern Idaho have played a significant role in growing the essential ingredient for the nation's largest brew-

Jane's Paper closes doors after 25 years

Owner to become director of Wood River Economic Partnership

By Karen Bossick Times-News correspondent

Jane's Paper in Ketchum closed over the weekend after 25 years of supplying the Wood River Valley's stationary and other needs.

Owner Doug Brown said he is taking over as executive director Wood River Economic Partnership, a valley-wide organization set up to advocate on behalf of businesses and to monitor economic, political and civil issues that affect businesses.

businesses, I will know of what I for multiple reasons, including increased competition from the Internet and big box stores, the national economic downturn, bank financing problems with his Small Business Administration loan and even the temporary loss of business in the wake of the Castle Rock Fire in August 2007.

"Jane's is probably a good example of where a lot of businesses are right now," he said. "There's always been a problem of seasonality here, but now we've also got to deal with our customers turning to the Internet and big box stores. I don't blame anybody, though. I'm sure I made mistakes along the way."

Jane Drussel, for whom the store was named, said she was "completely heartbroken" over the store's closure.

She and her husband Ken, a Wood River Valley native and Brown said he closed the store builder, opened the store in 1985, starting off with a few photo

Tax incentives for new or expanding businesses

What incentives does Idaho offer for businesses looking to expand or relocate here?

Every region of the state has its own particular assets, whether it's Coeur d'Alene's beautiful resort atmosphere, Salmon's hilltop business incubator, or one of Idaho's universities or colleges. Every business has its own unique needs and there is not a one-sizefits-all solution to attract new industry to a commu-

That is why the state of Idaho has a variety of tax incentives and infrastructure improvement grants that have as broad an appeal as possible. Our incentives are limited compared to many states since the philosophy here is that limiting governmental red tape and providing a balanced budget environment creates a more robust business climate overall.

Some businesses say they move here because of our labor force and because their employees can afford to buy homes.

Some of the tax breaks Idaho does offer for businesses include incentives for new jobs, employee training and capital investments. There is a sales tax incentive for pollution control equipment purchases and a 5 percent research and development income tax credit.

Senate off to a rocky start on health care reform

By Ricardo Alonso-Zaldivar Associated Press writer

Hoping to make history, the Senate set off on its major overhaul of the nation's health care system Wednesday, but its first steps were quickly overtaken by fresh cost concerns and partisan anger.

Ensign's admission damages his image

By Kathleen Hennessey Associated Press writer

LAS VEGAS — For much of his public career, Sen. John Ensign has appeared a model of the religious right. By this week, he had become just another politician diminished by scandal.

Rattled, humbled and alone at the podium, Ensign acknowledged to reporters an extramarital affair, the sort of moral failing he's criticized in the past.

The Nevada Republican once called on President Bill Clinton to resign, declaring "the truth must come out." In October 2007, he was sharply critical of former Sen. Larry Craig, of Idaho, calling the Republican's arrest in an airport bathroom sex sting "embarrassing for Senate:"

His own admission Tuesday came at a time when the two-term Nevada Republican was building his national profile and assuming leadership in his party. He had recently traveled to Iowa, fueling speculation about his White House ambitions.

The senator has said the Republican Party was in need of new leadership. He hoped to be among the fresh faces. and he built his resume by serving as the GOP's top Senate candidate recruiter in 2008 and as chairman of the Republican Policy Committee in the Senate, the fourthranking leadership post. On Wednesday, he resigned from the position on the policy committee.

For Nevadans, he was known as a polished probusiness Republican and well-spoken ally of the state's religious conservatives. He was a member of Promise Keepers, a men's Christian group that espoused devotion to family and marriage.

He talked openly about his biological father's failing, calling himself the child of a deadbeat dad who never "told me once he loved me." At a "Fatherhood Summit" in Reno in 2004, Ensign - himself a father of three - said fathers have been the biggest letdown in society.

Ensign was adopted at age 15 by his mother's second husband, a Las Vegas casino mogul. He went on to veterinary school, ran an animal clinic and worked the family business as a casino executive before entering politics.

Woman in Ensign affair steps forward

By Paul Kane The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - A Las Vegas area woman who once worked for Sen. John Ensign acknowledged Wednesday that she was the Nevada senator's mistress in an extramarital affair that has cost the onetime emerging GOP star his spot at the leadership table with Senate Republicans.

Cynthia L. Hampton, who was treasurer for Ensign's political committees, acknowledged an affair with the senator that lasted more than eight months in a statement issued by an attorney retained by her and her husband, Douglas D. Hampton, who also served as one of Ensign's most senior advisers.

that Mrs. Hampton is the woman who he did not identify during his Tuesday press conference revealing the affair. His office declined to answer questions about why the senator chose this week to make public the affair, which ended last year.

Ensign remained in Las Vegas Wednesday, after flying home to make the announcement, and is expected to remain there at least through the weekend. The Senate is currently debating a tourism promotion bill considered key to his state's casino industry. and later this week the chamber will begin debate on a $106 billion spending bill providing funding for Ensign's office confirmed hibited same-sex marriages, while he also has called on other political figures caught in sex scandals to resign. Three weeks ago, he visited Iowa and openly stoked speculation he was considering a presidential run in 2012.

early June, I ran the 10K as Mountain Challenge, a four-event race series.

At the start line, I pocketed a single energy gel - a $4 Enervit Enervitene Cheerpack – and laced up my Teva X-1 Evolution trailrunning shoes. With four major climbs, the precipitous course dispersed the race pack in a hurry. The elite runners galloped uphill like mountain goats. People at the back of the pack walked on the initial ascent.

Earth's nearest neighbors are visible in the morning sky

f you're an early riser, you've probably noticed Venus shining brightly in the eastern pre-dawn sky. Less obvious are the planets accompanying it, the nearest worlds in our solar system.

SKYWATCH Chris Anderson

Venus, perpetually covered in white, reflective clouds, easily outshines every other celestial body except the sun and moon. Even the brightest star is thirteen times dimmer.

Just above Venus and a little to the left is Mars, the next planet out from the sun. Venus and Mars are only two degrees (a thumb's width at arm's length) apart. Mars is darker and smaller than Venus, and more than twice as far away, which is why it shines more than 100 times fainter. Tomorrow morning, the waning crescent moon stands directly above Venus and Mars before dawn.

With clear skies and an unobstructed view of the east-northeast horizon you can also catch sight of Mercury. The smallest planet rises just before 5 a.m., but wait until 5:15 when it's high enough to shine through the thick atmosphere low on the horizon. The sky won't be dark, so Mercury will struggle to cut through the twilight.

Venus passed between the Earth and Sun at the end of March, and is now receding. Meanwhile, we are steadily gaining on the Red Planet, and will pass it in January. Swift Mercury will zip behind the sun by mid-July, but will be lost in the glare well before then.

After Venus, Mercury and Mars, Jupiter is the next closest planet. It's bright and easy to spot, sitting due south at the start of morning twilight. Break out the binoculars, point them at Jupiter, and you may just glimpse Neptune, looking like a tiny, faint bluish star in the same field of view, to Jupiter's upper right.

Next week: Crashing space probes for fun and

Hunters, time to take a stand

ilitary planners, basketball coaches and hunters have long understood the benefits of having the height advantage over their opponents or quarry. It's known as the "vantage advantage."

By taking to the high ground, experienced hunters put themselves in a position to view a larger section of country encompassing more game. By spotting game at greater distances, they have more time to judge the quality of the animals and plan a stalk.

In our wide-open western lands, this usually means driving, riding or hiking to the top of a ridge or saddle long before sunup, settling into position and waiting for the late-arriving hunters and animals natural daily movements to bring them vour way.

Nowadays, however, with increasing hunting pressure and ever-decreasing public access, many savvy sportsmen have started to hunt small woodlots or patches of thick timber generally ignored by the florescentcoated hordes. And the one tool that I believe will help you most efficiently hunt these tight little niches of cover is the tree stand.

As mentioned previously by elevating your viewing position, you gain a bird's eye perspective of your hunting area and capitalize on prey animals' natural tendency to look for danger at ground level. Deer, elk and bear primarily experience their world through sense of smell. By taking to the trees, you place yourself not only out of animals' normal line of sight but, more importantly, out of the reach of their noses!

If you take precautions to control the scent trail you leave moving to your stand, rising thermals should carry much of your scary human odor "up and away" from nasal radar during the day.

I literally have had deer feeding completely unaware directly below my toes. Now if you've ever had to harvest oodles of butter the unpleasant experience of catching a whiff of my feet, you'll realize that this is a miraculous occurrence.

You can immediately see the advantage for bow hunters, who must take their game up close and personal. Game biologists, wildlife photographers and mountain lions have exploited this weakness for a long time.

Sporting goods stores and online catalogs offer the modern hunter an unbelievable array of elevated stands. They basically fall into five categories. Depending on your hunting conditions and the size of vour wallet, vou can choose from the sizable semi-permanent box stand or the more compact, portable and affordable hang-on, tripod, climbing or ladder stands. Pictured are a pair of back-to-back ladder stands my brother Dave and his daughter have used fat whitetail from a tiny strip of river bottom ground near Great Falls, Mont.

Perhaps a few words of caution are advisable: Every year a number of hunters are seriously and even fatally injured falling from their stands. This is completely unnecessary, because there are a number of affordable and easilyworn safety harnesses available. If you plan on hunting from an elevated stand, please do yourself and your loved ones a favor: strap yourself in!

So if I've piqued your curiosity, why not surrender to our primal urge to take to the trees this hunting season. You might gain a whole new perspective on the sport we love so dearly. Good shooting!

cover a vast portion of the region, but the showcase is and always will be the phenomenal mountain range known as The Grand Tetons. Travelers who visit the Jackson area in the late spring and early summer months are often privy to a transformation of the glorious Teton Range. The peaks, which reach 13,770 feet, evolve from frozen spectacles into masterpieces. The wildflowers that fill the valley floor slowly creep upward onto the face of the mountain. Trees are once again clothed with foliage, and the 220 miles of trails are often swarming with visitors in search of the majestic views available only to those who dare to climb these awe-inspiring peaks.

The Tetons draw the crowds, but Jackson Hole residents do their best to keep them.

"Over 2.5 million visitors come through the Grand Teton National Park each year to enjoy the beauty of this remarkable area," said Kate Foster, communication manager at the Jackson Chamber Hole Commerce. "There are so many events happening this summer, I could go on for ages."

The Aerial Tram, known as Big Red, has re-opened this summer and is up and running in Teton Village. The Alpine slides located at Snow King also are in operation, offering visitors an exhilarating ride. Another highlight is the shoot-out that takes place every day at 6 p.m. on the historic elk-antler square in downtown Jackson. For more than 50 years this lively reenactment has been portrayed by local thespians, telling stories of days gone by where lawlessness tried to get a foothold in Wyoming. The law always seems to come through in the end and save the day or the damsel in distress sometimes both.

Those eager to feel what it was like to ride in a stagecoach can jump aboard the stage at the corner of the square and enjoy a ride on the 90-year-old coach, which has been circling the square for more than five decades. Wooden sidewalks embellished with one-of-a-kind shopping and western galleries give guests a special atmosphere to enjoy.

Grand The Teton National Park draws huge crowds year-round. Hikers. bikers and scores of other outdoor enthusiasts flock to enjoy the majesty of the Tetons. Wildlife is an added bonus in the spring and summer months, as young moose, deer, bear and bison can be seen in and around the region.

Rivers are running high this year, offering rafters whitewater or scenic rides. Either choice will bring you home with an experience you are sure to remember. One of my favorite memories is from a night spent at the Million Dollar Cowboy Bar, where my husband and I danced the night away to "Ghost Riders in the Sky." Something about that song and the old legends that surround Jackson Hole made me feel the past, treasure the present, and look forward to many future visits to this special place.

in the Ultimate Mountain Challenge, the Fetzer Vineyards Road Bike Hill Climb, was held Sunday afternoon. I can't say I was fresh for this one, as I'd maxed my body on the morning's 10K.

But the time trial ride which included about 10 miles of distance and almost 2,000 vertical feet of elevation gain — started off fine.

I clipped into my borrowed bike, Giant's top-tier TCR Advanced SL, and pedaled hard out of the gate.

At mile three, the course started to climb. A man in a skin suit and an aerodynamic helmet passed me. I cranked and dropped to an easier gear, spinning up into the thin air.

Near the top, I was spent. I shouted out to a volunteer: "How much further?" It was only a quarter-mile to go, so I hit it hard.

Walking among wildlfowers

By Karen Bossick

Times-News correspondent

Bobbi Filbert smiled as she looked up a hillside in Adams Gulch, a popular hiking, mountain biking and dog walking area near Ketchum.

The hillside was black ground just 20 months ago, nearly every living plant on it burnt in the Castle Rock Fire that swept through Adams Gulch and threatened the Ketchum and Sun Vallev ski areas.

Now, the area was solid with 3-foot-tall aspen shoots, accented with sticky geranium, cinquefoil and yellow goosefoot violets.

"Lack of fire crowds out sun-loving plants like aspen and fire gives it a chance to re-sprout," Filbert told 15 curious adults and children gathered around her. "Initially, aspen sends up hightails it all the way to the 30,000 to 40,000 shoots per top of the ridge. And once acre. They thin out as they grow older."

The fire ecology walk, organized by the Sawtooth Botanical Garden as part of its Summer Wildflower on the other hand, starts Walks, may well have been ridge top fires, which are the first organized trip into Adam's Gulch to see the changes that the 2007 Castle ties." Rock Fire produced.

The U.S. Forest Service is shifting from its old policy of so it can succumb easier putting out every fire by 10 a.m., said Filbert.

Kearney has taken all the wildflower walks the Sawtooth Botanical Garden has offered this year in a new quest to learn the names of the area's wildflowers. Kearney said he was surprised at the number of different flower, he saw on each walk.

"We don't want people to start fire because they usually start it in the wrong placein a drainage where the fire you take the fire from the surface to the canopy of the trees, you just have to stand back. Woodpeckers love aspen because the soft wood is so easy to excavate, Filbert said.

The group continues down the trail past yellow groundsel, bluebells, Oregon grape with jelly berries and small forget-me-nots - tiny blue disk-shaped flowers that stand a half-foot tall.

Legend says the flowers got their name when a young A rat-ta-tat on a man slipped into the river

Sue Goodwin paused a moment, tuning into the scene around her.

"You hear a lot more songbirds in here than you used to," she said.

Indeed, Filbert acknowledged, the new growth that comes after a fire is conducive to animals from songbirds to deer that browse on the aspen. They can't browse when the aspen gets past 5 feet and they don't go for things that crowd out aspen like Douglas Fir.

Seeds of plants like fireweed, which sport tall spires of pink-purple flowers, may have been there a couple hundred years just waiting for a fire that would give them a chance to emerge, Filbert said.

"The seed bank is in the first couple inches of soil. That's why we have to be careful about disturbing soil even from grazing — after a fire," she added.

The court will approve reaffirmation unless it creates an undue financial hardship for you. If you are significantly behind in your mortgage payments, or in foreclosure, you can still keep the home by filing a chapter 13 bankruptcy. In a chapter 13 bankruptcy, you can "catch up" the back payments by making a monthly payment to the bankruptcy trustee in addition to your regular monthly mortgage payments. Your chapter 13 payments would be spread out over a period between 3 and 5 years and would include an additional amount, based on your ability to pay, that would be divided among your other creditors.

50 YEARS MISSING

Man bears striking resemblance to missing NY boy

KALKASKA, Mich. The same chubby cheeks. The same round face and bright, blue eyes. And, most important, the faint scar on his chin.

John Barnes does indeed bear a striking resemblance to photos of a 2-year-old boy who was snatched from outside a bakery on New York's Long Island in 1955. And he hopes DNA tests will confirm the suspicions he's harbored virtually his entire life — that the couple who raised him were not his biological parents.

"I'm really glad that I'm finally finding all of this out, finding out who I'm related to. Because I didn't want to get old and die and not know," Barnes, a laborer who is now in his 50s, told The Associated Press on Wednesday.

Back in 1955, Marilyn Damman came out of the bakery after 10 minutes but could not find her children. The stroller, with only her daughter inside, was found around the corner from the market a short time later. A flier at the time said the boy walked with his toes turned out and had a small scar under his chin.

"Yeah, I do have a scar," Barnes told the AP as he pointed to a faint line, less than an inch, that runs below his chin and slightly up the right side of his face. "This story's really strange. I can't believe it myself sometimes."

Barnes said he was born in 1955 — the same year a 2year-old Stephen Damman disappeared – but only saw his birth certificate once and no longer has a copy. He said the FBI is looking into the discrepancy as part of its investigation.

Autopsies suggest Air France jet broke up in sky

SAO PAULO (AP) -Autopsies have revealed fractures in the legs, hips and arms of Air France disaster victims, injuries that - along with the large pieces of wreckage pulled from the Atlantic - strongly suggest the plane broke up in the air, experts said Wednesday.

With more than 400 bits of debris recovered from the ocean's surface, the top French investigator expressed optimism about discovering what brought down Flight 447, but he also called the conditions - far from land in very deep waters - "one of the worst situations ever known in an accident investigation."

French investigators are beginning to form "an image that is progressively less fuzzy," Paul-Louis Arslanian, who runs the French air accident investigation agency BEA, told a news conference outside Paris.

"We are in a situation that is a bit more favorable than the first days," Arslanian said. "We can say there is a little less uncertainty, so there is a little more optimism. ... (but) it is premature for the time being to say what happened?'

A spokesman for Brazilian medical examiners told The Associated Press on Wednesday that fractures were found in autopsies on an undisclosed number of the 50 bodies recovered so far. The official spoke on condition he not be named due to department rules.

"Typically, if you see intact bodies and multiple fractures - arm, leg, hip fractures - it's a good indicator of a midflight break up," said Frank Ciacco, a former forensic expert at the National Transportation Safety Board. "Especially if you're seeing large pieces of aircraft as well." The pattern of fractures was first reported Wednesday by Brazil's O Estado de S. Paulo newspaper, which cited unnamed investigators. The paper also reported that some victims were found with little or no clothing, and had no signs of burns.

That lack of clothing could be significant, said Jack Casey, an aviation safety consultant in Washington, D.C., who is a former accident investigator. "In an inair break up like we are supposing here, the clothes are just torn away."

Is bowel surgery the cause of uncontrollable diarrhea?

DEAR DR. GOTT: I am writing to find how my friend might be helped. At age 77, she underwent surgery to remove precancerous tissue in the upper intestine. Her father died of colon cancer and a brother also has the same diagnosis. The second day after the surgery, she was rushed into the operating room to remove more of the intes-surgery, she gets diarrhea immediately after starting to eat. It can happen at any time so she cannot leave the house. Her doctors have tested for cancer, but this was negative. She had recent surgery to explore the diarrhea problem and to determine if she needed a colostomy. Nothing was discovered, and the colostomy was found to be unnecessary. Her HMO referred her to an MD who is now starting her on yogurt that contains probiotics, which I think is great. In my opinion, her system no longer has the necessary components to process food appropriately. I'm not a doctor and believe in using natural methods of healing, but I know there is a limit. If you get hit by a truck, you don't take herbs for it.

Is there anything we can do to stop her uncontrollable diarrhea? She is now very depressed because she is normally a very active person.

DEAR READER:

Diarrhea following bowel surgery can be difficult to treat; it depends on what part of your friend's intestine was removed. If approximately half of her small intestine was removed, she may be suffering from Short Bowel Syndrome. This condition is a group of intestinal problems caused by poor absorption of nutrients in people who have had a Bacterial or viral infections, food allergies or sensitivities, parasite infections, adverse reactions to medication and several bowel disorders are possible culprits, and each has a different treatment plan.

While yogurt with probiotics may help, it is not the only treatment available. Your friend should be under the care of a gastroenterologist. She also needs to be careful with her diet. Fatty,

Zicam not alone in side effect reports

By Jeff Donn Associated Press writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. -The unsettling little secret of Zicam Cold Remedy finally spilled out this week. Though widely sold for years as a drug for colds, it was never tested by federal regulators for safety like other drugs. And that was perfectly legal — until scores of consumers lost their sense of smell.

One little word on Zicam's label explains all this: "homeopathic."

Zicam and hundreds of other homeopathic remedies - highly diluted drugs made from natural ingredients - are legally sold as treatments with explicit claims of medical benefit. Yet they don't require federal checks for safety, effectiveness or even the cold products. right ingredients.

They're somewhat similar to dietary supplements, which use many of the same natural ingredients and also aren't federally tested for safety or benefit.

Many scientists view homeopathic remedies as modern snake oil — ineffective but mostly harmless because the drugs in them are present in such tiny amounts.

In 1938, Congress passed a law granting homeopathic remedies the same legal status as regular pharmaceuticals. The law's principal author was Sen. Royal Copeland of New York, a trained homeopath. The explanation given by prosecutors rivals Hitchcock classic "Psycho": It was her son, in drag.

Thomas Parkin, 49, was charged Wednesday in the bizarre plot to impersonate his deceased mother so he could collect $117,000 in government benefits. He and the man accused of being his accomplice, Mhilton Rimolo, pleaded not guilty to grand larceny, criminal impersonation and other charges.

Both men were ordered held on $1 million bail. Their lawyers did not immediately respond to phone messages left on Wednesday.

District Attorney Charles Hynes said the scam was "unparalleled in its scope and brazenness."

Authorities claim that following his arrest, Parkin told them that because he held Prusik when she breathed her last breath, "I am my mother."

Parkin, who lived with his mother, was accused of hatching the scheme after she passed away in 2003 at age 73. He managed to conceal the death by falsifying her death certificate, then collected

Harper's impending arrival a win-win for SWAC

hen College of Southern Idaho head baseball coach Boomer Walker waxed about enhancing the Scenic West Athletic Conference's baseball profile before the 2009 season, it's pretty safe to say this wasn't exactly what he had in mind.

But eyes will be turned to the SWAC in a manner perhaps before unseen when the hype machine hits the College of Southern Nevada in the form of 16-year-old Bryce Harper, who dropped out of high school to fasttrack his baseball career.

The 6-foot-3 inch catcher hit .626 as a sophomore for Las Vegas High School this season, with 14 home runs, 55 RBIs and 36 stolen bases. He's been labeled by some as baseball's answer to LeBron James, and Sports Illustrated anointed him as baseball's "Chosen One" in its Iune 8 cover story.

T-N: What's the best part about growing baseball outside of North America?

Harper

already overwhelming favorites to win the SWAC next season. The challenge for the five rival schools will be steep, to put it mildly.

But even if Harper blows right through JUCO pitching as many expect he will, his involvement is a winwin proposition for the conference. The SWAC profile will be automatically enhanced with his inclusion, as it would arguably be the home for the single most hyped college baseball player ... well, ever. And if he turns out to be a great player, then other players in the league are bound to be more noticed as well. "I think it'll only be a good thing if he ends up being a great player. If not, I don't think it'll ever be a story. The kid's 16 years old, and that's going to be a pressure. He's obviously not going to roll into college and hit .600, but I assume he's got a lot of talent," Walker said of Harper. "I think everything's going to be based on him, to be real honest. I don't think you'd see some guy holding him to an O-for-3 and he's suddenly a first-round draft pick. It's not a game where you have a lot of success hitting all the time. But it brings a lot of attention to (CSN's) program," Walker added. "I think the whole hope for the league would be that it gives more attention to the other players in the league."

The only one who really stands to lose anything by this decision is Harper himself, but it's something for which he has certainly prepared.

As with probable NBA draftee Brandon Jennings' decision to skip college and play in Europe and with San Diego junior hoopster Jeremy Tyler's choice to forgo his senior year of high school to follow Jennings' path, there will be some who wish ill luck against Harper or just flat think he's making a mistake. Harper's family knows it, and doesn't particularly care.

"There are going to be critics. I can't worry about what people think. People are going to see what they want to see and say what they want to say," Harper's father, Ron Harper, told the Las Vegas Review-Journal. "I think this prepares him for life, playing the game of baseball. People question your parenting and what you're doing. Honestly, we don't think it's that big a deal. He's not leaving school to go work in a fastfood restaurant." If the can't-miss kid somehow misses in the SWAC, however, his father's words could prove more foreboding than intended.

Iowa prep pitchers nearly pull off perfect doubleheader

DES MOINES, Iowa — A perfect game is issued before a news conference, Kahn laudone thing. But Norwalk High pitchers Matt Dermody and Kole Klocko nearly pulled off a perfect doubleheader.

Dermody, a senior, struck out all 18 batters he faced in a six-inning perfect game Monday night. Klocko, a junior, closed the doubleheader against South Tama High with a fiveinning no-hitter, striking out 10 while issuing just one walk.

Dermody and Klocko, who are best friends, didn't stop there: Dermody hit home runs in each game and Klocko hit a pair of doubles.

Norwalk won both games 10-0. High schools in Iowa play baseball in the summer, and games are called if a team is ahead by 10 or more runs after five innings.

"I was just really focused that night," Dermody said. "I had really good control of my fastball."

Iowa High School Athletic Association spokesman Bud Legg said Dermody's effort is the first recorded instance of an Iowa pitcher striking out every batter he faced. Legg said the state's record books go back to 1929.

"Guy after guy after guy, they go down, and I'm just thinking to myself, I'm like 'This is crazy," 'Klocko said of Dermody's outing.

Employer obliged to give new mom a private space

DEAR ABBY: Please tell "Privacy Please in Santa Clara, Calif." (March 16) that she does not have to pump her breast milk in the bathroom! Depending on the laws in her state, she may be entitled to request that her employer create a dedicated pumping location for new moms.

Pumping in the restroom could endanger her baby's health. That new mom needs a clean, private space to pump and should ask her boss for help in establishing a special room.

"Privacy Kudos to Please" for doing the very best thing for her baby. Hopefully her employer will realize what a valuable, dedicated individual she is accommodate her needs so she can continue her high-quality work performance while also taking care of her little one.

NURSING MOM IN TEXAS

DEAR NURSING MOM: Thank you for raising the issue about the laws pertaining to new nursing moms. Several states have expanded their breast-feeding laws to include provisions that protect a mother's right to express milk in the workplace. California requires employers to provide break time for employees to do this and to make reasonable efforts to provide a location other than a toilet stall, with a penalty for non-compliabsenteeism rates IF JUNE 18 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Between now and the end of July, you labor under the misconception that you can spin straw into gold, or that a wild goose chase will turn out well. Your hard work and determination may pay off with increased recognition or improved circumstances in July and August. There is a possibility that you will be caught up in an impossible dream or to become involved in something that isn't quite what it seems in October and November, so hold off on beginning anything of importance during those months. Wait until January to put pet projects into motion or to make a final decision about a key relationship. Not only will you straightforward. Today is Thursday, June 18, the 169th day of 2009. There are 196 days left in the

DEAR ABBY: I, too, was the first new mom in my office who faced the challenges of pumping in order to continue providing my baby with breast milk. It makes me cringe to think that "Privacy" has to resort to using an unsanitary bathroom stall for this task.

There is legislation in her state that requires her employer to supply her with a room other than a toilet stall for privacy. The La Leche League Web site at www.lalecheleague.org is an excellent resource for breast-feeding moms and provides links to this legislation as well as laws in other

Department of Health and Human Services' Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) has put together a tool kit to help employers understand and take the necessary steps to breast-feeding support employees. Recent studies show that there are many advantages, including lower improved productivity. An information booklet titled, "Easy Steps to Supporting Breastfeeding Employees" can be accessed online at www.ask.hrsa.gov.

 HELEN IN CHICAGO DEAR ABBY: My employer suggested that I pump in the women's restroom. I replied that I would be happy to do that if the CEO would like to prepare his hunch there as well. It's ridiculous for a nursing mom to go through the process of sterilizing every part of the pumping apparatus and then have to finish the process in a public bathroom. I hope her company will change its policy because it has been proven that breast-fed babies are healthier - and as a result, parents are less likely to miss work to stay home caring for sick children.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"This is the hardest of all: to close the open hand out of love and keep modest as a giver.'

Friedrich Nietzsche

At the Dyspeptics Club, South's high opinion of his own declarerplay skills is matched only by North's low opinion. In today's deal North was a little concerned that he might have missed a slam. So he was less than pleased when his partner went down in game.

Against four spades West led the heart king, and without giving the matter much thought, South called for the ace from dummy. Declarer looked aggrieved when East ruffed, and even more so when the club jack was returned. The queen lost to the king, West cashed a heart, and eventually South lost a diamond to go one

Four hearts was a big bid for West to make, vulnerable, and South should have guarded against the bid being based on an eight-card suit. Declarer can afford to play low on the heart lead, and low again on the heart continuation. Should a third heart be played, East ruffs the ace, but South overruffs, pulls trumps, then runs the diamond 10. Although this loses to East's queen, there is now a diamond available on which to discard the club loser, and declarer's losses are held to two hearts and one diamond.

Nor does it help the defense if East trumps his partner's second heart lead and returns a club. South rises with the ace, then draws trumps, again losing just three tricks since a loser can be pitched on the heart ace.

ANSWER: Your partner's call. opposite your balanced raise to game suggesting 13-15 points, indicates he has slam interest and a good club suit. Your club support may be weak, but your controls are superb and you have a maximum in high cards. So cuebid four diamonds and be prepared to cooperate in any slam venture.
