Downwinders still waiting for RECA coverage

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

A common fear among victims of radiation fallout caused by nuclear testing in Nevada during the 1950s and '60s is that they will not live long enough to see the government take accountability.

Ilene Hoisington expressed this sentiment when interviewed by the Times-News in June 2007. At 75, she had seen both her sons die of cancer and had her own larynx removed due to the same disease. Hoisington's sister also died of cancer.

"Maybe if senators and congressman were downwinders themselves, something would happen sooner and it would be different for the rest of us."

— Wendell resident Sarah Wolfe, 65

In June 2008, Hoisington lost her battle too, having died before Idaho fallout victims were included in the Radiation Exposure Compensation Act.

"I think (the government) is waiting until we all die and then there won't be anymore downwinders, problem solved," Hoisington said in 2007.

For the downwinders today who still hold that belief, a recent move by Idaho Republican Sens. Mike Crapo and Jim Risch and Montana Democratic Sens. Jon Tester and Max Baucus, is providing glimmers of hope.

The four senators are sponsoring legislation that would make residents of the two states eligible for a federal program that compensates people who lived in affected areas, downwind of the Nevada Test Site during periods of atmospheric nuclear testing. It is the third time such legislation has been introduced.

Under the legislation, introduced June 25, those victims are compensated up to $50,000 if they contract certain kinds of cancer and disease. Presently, fallout victims are compensated only in parts of Utah, Nevada and Arizona, although studies show Idaho and Montana received some of the highest doses of

T.F. dog park still in discussion

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

The Twin Falls Parks and Recreation Commission is discussing the possibility of creating a dog park within city limits, possibly in the new Oregon Trail Youth Complex.

The idea of a dog park, which has been batted around for several years, surfaced at the commission's May meeting. Parks and Recreation Director Dennis Bowyer said Thursday the scenario is still in discussion.

One suggestion is to use the north end of the new 20-acre Oregon Trail Youth Complex that was created when the LDS Softball Complex and another park were combined. Bowyer said only two to four acres would be needed for a dog park.

Another potential site is the water tower property on Hankins Road north of Kimberly Road. The restroom there was closed because of vandalism. The city's water department doesn't oppose that use, but has expressed concern about water system security, according to the commission's meeting minutes.

Actor Willis set to bring Soldier Mountain Lodge back from the ashes

ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News
An excavator sits idle at the site of the old Soldier Mountain resort near Fairfield. The lodge burned down in March. The lodge will be rebuilt by owner and actor Bruce Willis and his Hailey-based Valley Entertainment Group.

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

HAILEY — If all goes as planned, the lodge at the base of Soldier Mountain will rise from its ashes by the time the ski season begins.

The day lodge, destroyed March 31 in an accidental fire, will be rebuilt by owner and actor Bruce Willis and his Hailey-based Valley Entertainment Group, with an estimated reopen date of Dec. 15. The new lodge will go up on the site of the old, with similar amenities, said Valley Entertainment office manager Shelly Scott.

"The new lodge is probably not a huge departure from the old one, but it'll definitely be a lot nicer. It's a toned-down version of big lodges," she said.

Like the old lodge, a Fairfield landmark, the new one will have a grill and kitchen area, dining area, and lounge. Unlike the old, the new building will feature restrooms, as well as a ski rental shop, ski school and ticket booth, which were previously in separate structures. Outdoor restrooms for skiers will remain.

The lodge will have a Western

design, with large windows facing the ski hill to maximize solar gain and views. The deck is planned to be pavers rather than wooden planks, which will improve traction for those walking in ski boots and be easier to maintain.

To keep flexibility in the floor plan and budget, the new lodge will be one story rather than two, Scott said. Although the resort is permitted by the U.S. Forest Service on federal land, the structures belong to Willis, and the cost of the rebuild is not publicly available. Scott said the insurance on the old lodge was at least partially paying for the building of the new one.

"We're real supportive of the company, and recognize they're in a difficult situation, and we're trying to support them to get the lodge up and available for the next ski season," said Ann Frost, recreation program manager with the USFS Fairfield ranger district.

The Forest Service does have guidelines on materials and designs for structures on its land, and Frost said the new lodge fits those guidelines nicely.

"We certainly gave them feedback, and we were real happy with where it went," Frost said.

The site of the old lodge is

FBI notes: Saddam feared Iran more than U.S. attack

By Pamela Hess
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The farm where Saddam Hussein hid from U.S. forces before he was captured in December 2003 was familiar ground for the Iraqi dictator: It was the same place, he told an FBI agent, where he sought refuge 44 years earlier after taking part in a failed attempt to kill Iraq's president.

Saddam also told the U.S. official that he had used telephones only twice in the last 14 years, and moved his locations daily. With troops closing in on him, Saddam returned to the farm outside Tikrit where he hid in 1959 after joining in a failed bid to assassinate Iraqi president Abd Al-Karim Qassem.

Those details are among more than 100 pages of notes written by George Piro, an FBI special agent who interviewed Saddam after he was nabbed at the farm. The notes of the FBI interviews were made public by the National Security Archive, a non-governmental research institute.

Saddam told Piro that instead of relying on phones, he communicated by courier or met with his officials personally. "He was very aware of the United States' significant technological capabilities," the agent wrote in notes after one interview.

The former Iraqi dictator was captured nine months after the U.S. and its allies invaded Iraq in March 2003. Saddam was executed by hanging on orders of Iraq's successor government in December 2006.

Pat's Picks

Three things to do today

Pat Marcantonio

• Check out the "Idaho Landscape Different Point of View" display between 9:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. in the Jean B. King Gallery at the Herrett Center for the Arts and Science off of North College Road in Twin Falls. You can see the art for free.

• Take a road trip for a different kind of art. Check out the offerings of the 2009 Idaho Shakespeare Festival. It runs five plays, not all Shakespeare, from now until Oct. 3 at 5657 Warm Springs Ave., Boise. Schedule: www.ida-hoshakespeare.org.

• And while in the Boise area, visit the historically cool town of Idaho City. The old mining town is on the National Register of Historic Places. Idaho City is accessible via Idaho Highway 21 about 45 minutes northeast of Boise. It was the center of one of the richest gold strikes in North America during the 1860s. Among the attractions: the Pon Yam House and St. Joseph Catholic Church, the first Catholic church for Euro-Americans in Idaho established in 1863, plus lots of other great historic buildings.

radioactive fallout. Four of the top 10 counties in the nation for fallout doses are in Idaho.

"I think there is a lot more interest in getting hearings and getting RECA expanded," said J. Truman, leader of the activist group Downwinders.

Truman, of Malad, said the time is ripe for expanding RECA like other nations have including France and Russia, which compensated and continue to provide treatment to victims of their own nuclear testing programs within the same time period.

"Everybody but us is doing this across the board. But here? All we have is 22 counties covered," Truman said.

Truman, 57, said he was part of a thyroid health study conducted in 1964. The study was to be the most definitive test to follow a group of youngsters over 40 years time. Truman said halfway through the test results showed the direct link to nuclear testing and thyroid cancers, among other health problems.

"The government effectively pulled the plug on the study. It could have been the chance for us to effectively study what happened, so it would never happen again," he said. "It's insulting when even the Russians are doing studies and fessing up, but we can't even get studies going here.

"There is a lot of concern because these countries have signed and ratified the Comprehensive Test Ban, which tells the world 'never again.' We haven't ratified the Ban and that tells the world we are still in the mindset that these are weapons worth pursuing."

In February, Reps. Mike Simpson, R-Idaho, Walt Minnick, D-Idaho, and Rep. Jim Matheson, D-Utah, wrote to again request the House Judiciary Committee conduct a hearing on RECA.

"Pressure is building and maybe with the different leadership in the House and Senate something will happen this year, Truman said. "Justice is still needed."

Wendell resident Sarah Wolfe, 65, is hopeful but reserved about the so-called progress in Washington.

Wolfe, who lived west of Buhl in her youth and during the nuclear testing, said her life has been devastated by her deteriorating health.

Fifteen years ago she was diagnosed with thyroid cancer. The disease left her unable to work; the cost for surgery and ongoing treatment left her penniless, she said.

"I had a nice seven-and-a-half-acre farm but couldn't keep up and was forced to sell it," Wolfe said. "Now I live in a small rented trailer house and can hardly keep up on it."

She said $50,000 "wouldn't have covered the first month of care" following her surgery. What downwinders really need, Wolfe said, is acknowledgement.

"It seems like wildlife and their survival and throwing money, tax dollars, is more important than taking care of the taxpayers themselves," she said. "Wolves are more important than taking care of people effected by bomb testing done by the government, than the people. We are at the bottom of the chain.

"Maybe if senators and congressman were downwinders themselves, something would happen sooner and it would be different for the rest of us."

Like Hoisington, Wolfe hopes to see the day the government acknowledges the problems caused and the people hurt by nuclear testing fallout. On June 20, her older sister lost a fight against a rare bone cancer.

Park

Parks and Rec Commission Chairman John Bonnett said neither location is near homes, which was the obstacle in the past.

"We get the sense there are some folks in the community who think this would be a really good idea," Bonnett said. "I don't think anyone's necessarily opposed to it as long as it's not near a residential area. It's worth looking at."

Bowyer said the biggest cost would be in chain-link fencing around the dog area. No cost estimate has been made, and the expense is not in the current 2009 budget or scheduled for next year's proposal.

Any site would need City Council approval, and neighborhood meetings would be held, Bowyer said.

There has been little progress in establishing a dog park in the two years since animal enthusiasts and the city explored creating the concept. Nearby homeowners opposed a site north of Addison Avenue and behind Smith's Food &

Drug Centers.

As in other Idaho cities, Twin Falls has leash laws that require all domestic animals to be contained, or on leashes in public parks. The only exceptions are water dog training areas at Dierkes Lake.

currently a bit difficult to work on, as runoff from springs on the hill and the nearby creek make it boggy, Scott said. However, engineering of the site and construction are expected to begin soon. If weather or other issues slow construction, the company does have a contingency plan.

"We're making provisions that if for some reason the lodge isn't finished, for a portable kitchen and a couple of modular units for people to come in and warm up," she said.

One thing the fire did not change, Scott said, is the master plan for the site, which calls for an eventual second day lodge and second set of lifts at the far end of the parking lot when the skier count doubles what it has been in recent years. The plan does not currently include overnight accommodations.

The rebuild and the master plan are not expected to dramatically change the cost to ski at Soldier. Prices for food, beverages and lift tickets will be similar to what they were last year, Scott said.

"That's Soldier's mission statement, if they had one, is that we would always want to keep it affordable for families and beginning skiers."

Charters

"I think from a national perspective the thing that really drug Idaho down is that whole cap issue," said Ken Burgess, a lobbyist for the Coalition of Idaho Charter School Families.

Secretary of Education Arne Duncan has tied the issue charter school caps with the Race to the Top Fund and said that states must be open to charter schools.

"States that do not have public charter laws or put artificial caps on the growth of charter schools will jeopardize their applications under the Race to the Top Fund," Duncan said in a June conference call with reporters.

State Sen. John Goedde, R-Coeur d'Alene, said he's interested in seeing the six-school cap changed in the future.

"Of course there would always be the opportunity to look at totally eliminating the cap," he said. "The problem there could be a fiscal situation. Certainly that's the issue whether we have the funds to do that. The other side of that issue is whether we will lose our eligibility for our Race to the Top money."

Instead of eliminating the cap entirely, it's possible that the cap could be amended to allow more charter schools that serve special populations, such as children with autism, Goedde said, adding that discussions are preliminary.

"We're looking at options and the repercussions of those options on the federal grant," he said.

between February and June of 2004, Saddam also told Piro that he falsely let the world believe Iraq had weapons of mass destruction because he feared revealing his weakness to Iran, the hostile neighbor he considered a bigger threat than the U.S.

Saddam denied having unconventional weapons before the U.S. invasion of Iraq, but refused to let U.N. inspectors search his country from 1998 until 2002. The inspectors returned to the weapons hunt in November 2002 but still complained that Iraq wasn't cooperating.

"By God if I had such weapons I would have used them in the fight against the United States," he told Piro.

sion of Iraq in large part on the assertion that Saddam had weapons of mass destruction and could provide them to terrorists. Saddam had used chemical weapons previously and the Bush administration maintained that he was pursuing biological and nuclear weapons. No such weapons were found after the war.

In the interviews, Saddam dismissed Osama bin Laden as a "zealot," said he had never personally met the al-Qaida leader and that the Iraqi government didn't cooperate with the terrorist group against the U.S.

The institute obtained the FBI summaries through a Freedom of Information Act request and posted them on its Web site Wednesday. The New York Daily News also wrote about the Hussein files last week after similarly obtaining summaries of the interviews through a FOIA request.

Saddam also said that the United States used the Sept. 11 terrorist attack as a justification to attack Iraq and said the U.S. had "lost sight of the cause of 9/11." He claimed that he denounced the attack in a series of editorials.

Saddam denied using body doubles, something the U.S. government said he did to elude his captors.

Piro earlier had described their talks in an interview with CBS's "60 Minutes" last year. Saddam told him he had "miscalculated" former President George W. Bush's intentions and expected only a limited U.S. attack.

"Hussein stated Iraq could have absorbed another United States strike, for he viewed this as less of a threat than exposing themselves to Iran," according to a June 11, 2004, FBI interview report.

Wendell police chief introduces new juvenile curfew ordinance

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL — Does Wendell have a high rate of juvenile crime? A lot of kids out late at night?

No, said Police Chief Kurtus Gaston, but a curfew is still needed even after an Idaho appellate court in March struck down Wendell's curfew law.

"This is just something that is a tool for law enforcement and parental control," Gaston told the Times-News.

During a July 2 council meeting Gaston presented a new curfew ordinance for consideration, this time with language that should keep the curfew within constitutional parameters.

"This ordinance is modeled after one used by Dallas (and) Fort Worth that has already been challenged and upheld by the court," said Gaston. City Councilman Jon Irace was still concerned if the curfew would again be challenged.

"Is a judge going to fight us on it?" Irace asked.

City Attorney Calvin Campbell told the council the ordinance provides better definitions for exemptions and "appropriate Constitutional behaviors" and should adequately address concerns raised by the court.

The curfew would be in effect from 12:01 a.m. to 5 a.m. and makes exemptions for emergencies, minors accompanied by parent or guardian, employment, errands or attending an official school, religious or recreational activities sponsored by the city, civic organization or other organization providing adult supervision of children under 18 years.

Curfew exemptions are also made for married or emancipated minors and youth exercising their First Amendment rights to free speech, assembly or practice of religion.

Failure to provide exemptions for exercise of constitutionally protected activities led to the court ruling that threw out Wendell's previous ordinance.

Even though Gaston said juveniles aren't wrecking havoc in the city and a large 1999 study on the effectiveness of curfews, conducted by Michael Males of the University of California at Irvine and Don McCallair of San Francisco State University, found that curfews don't reduce youth crime, Wendell city leaders are expected to pass the ordinance at the next council meeting.

The council was prepared to read the ordinance by title and take a vote on the law but decided to clean up some minor language before doing so.

"I'd like to see it (passed) as soon as possible," Gaston said.

According to the ordinance youth found in violation of the curfew will be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Idaho board to oversee deaf and blind school

By Jessie L. Bonner
Associated Press writer

BOISE — The century-old school for the deaf and blind children in Idaho will be eligible to tap into an education reserve fund and potentially soften the blow of deeper cuts in state spending next year.

Public schools under the state Department of Education used the fund to cover about $85 million in losses last year, but deaf and blind programs were supervised under the state Board of Education and could not access the reserve.

The school was forced to cancel summer programs for blind and deaf students, among other measures, to trim $503,700 from its budget after Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter ordered state agencies to cut 6 percent during the last fiscal year.

But legislation passed in the 2009 Legislature moved the school out from under the education board and created the Idaho Bureau of Educational Services for the Deaf and the Blind to oversee it instead, starting July 1.

The shift is part of a reorganization plan Idaho Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter unveiled earlier this year as part of his proposal to revamp the agency. The plan included a slew of changes for the board, shuffling things like education programs for inmates and jobs rehabilitation for people with mental or physical disabilities away from the agency.

The board supervises public schools, colleges and universities and tracks testing and grants. Otter wants the agency to steer away from managing programs and focus on policy.

Legislation passed earlier this year turned the deaf and blind school into an independent agency, supervised by a board of directors that includes trustees from the state Board of Education and

Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna.

The school is now funded as a line item in the public schools budget, allowing access to the education stabilization fund in case of further cuts in state spending next year, state Department of Education spokeswoman Melissa McGrath said.

The fund, which lawmakers created in 2003 to avoid harming the Idaho's K-12 system with cuts during the middle of the school year, was drained by about $85 million amid holdbacks in state funding last year. Lawmakers were able to restore the reserves after using federal stimulus dollars to bolster Idaho's public schools budget.

The fund now holds about $114 million.

At the deaf and blind school in the rural farming town of Gooding, the money could help provide a safety net administrators have been without while bearing the brunt of statewide holdbacks.

"I don't know how we could cut back anything more without decreasing the services we provide, either here on campus or through outreach programs," said Jeff Woods, director of finance for the Idaho School for the Deaf and the Blind.

The school operates with a yearly budget of about $8.8 million, with nearly 80 students in Gooding and another 1,000 taught through outreach programs at school districts.

The school was forced to cancel summer programs, reduce heating bills down by lowering thermostats on nights and weekend, shut-down cooling systems more frequently, cut down on office supplies and travel, leave vacant positions unfilled and decreased salaries to balance the budget for this fiscal year, which began July 1.

"We took a look at everything and made hard decisions," Woods said.

Biden: Israel free to set own course on Iran

By Robert Burns
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Vice President Joe Biden signaled that the Obama administration would not stand in the way if Israel chose to attack Iran's nuclear facilities, even as the top U.S. military officer said any attack on Iran would be destabilizing.

Biden's remarks suggested a tougher U.S. stance against Iran's nuclear ambitions. Nonetheless, administration officials insisted his televised remarks Sunday reflected the U.S. view that Israel has a right to defend itself and make its own decisions on national security.

In an interview on ABC's "This Week," Biden also said the U.S. offer to negotiate with Tehran on its nuclear program still stands. Some thought the administration's approach might change in light of the Iranian government's harsh crackdown on protesters after the June 12 presidential election.

Opponents of the ruling authorities claimed the vote was rigged against them.

"If the Iranians respond to the offer of engagement, we will engage," Biden said.

It was after meeting Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu at the White House on May 18 that President Barack Obama said it should be clear by year's end whether Iran was open to direct negotiations. Obama told The Associated Press last Thursday that persuading Iran to forego nuclear weapons has been made more difficult by the crackdown after the disputed re-election of President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad.

Biden was asked whether Netanyahu was taking the right approach by indicating that Israel would take matters into its own hands if Iran did not show a willingness to negotiate by the end of the year.

"Look, Israel can determine for itself — it's a sovereign nation — what's in their interest and what they decide to do relative to Iran and anyone else," Biden replied. He added that this was the case, "whether we agree or not" with the Israeli view.

Biden was then asked more pointedly whether the U.S.

would stand in the way if the Israelis, viewing the prospect of an Iranian nuclear bomb as a threat to the existence of the Jewish state, decided to launch a military attack against Iranian nuclear facilities.

"Look, we cannot dictate to another sovereign nation what they can and cannot do," he said.

Pressed further on this point with a reminder that the U.S. could impede an Israeli strike on Iran by prohibiting it from using Iraqi air space, Biden said he was "not going to speculate" beyond saying that Israel, like the U.S., has a right to "determine what is in its interests."

Navy Adm. Mike Mullen, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said Sunday that he has been concerned "for some time concerned about any strike on Iran." He also said military action should not be ruled out and that a nuclear-armed Iran is a highly troubling prospect.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli government had no comment on Biden's remarks.

White House spokesman Tommy Vietor said Biden was not signaling any change of approach on Iran or Israel.

"The vice president refused to engage hypotheticals, and he made clear that our policy has not changed," Vietor said. "Our friends and allies, including Israel, know that the president believes that now is the time to explore direct diplomatic options."

Observers: Palin resignation cuts losses in Alaska

By Mark Thiessen
Associated Press writer

JUNEAU, Alaska — Ever since Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin returned from the presidential campaign trail, many Alaskans felt her heart wasn't in the job.

Lawmakers complained she didn't take an interest in the state's politics, and she limited her access to Alaska's media. One lawmaker quipped after her state of the state address in January that the only person in the legislative chamber she made eye contact with was the television camera.

In Alaska, Palin has become a polarizing figure, and the focus of multiple ethics complaints filed against her with the state personnel board. She has taken a beating from Senate Democrats over many of her recent appointments, including an attorney general candidate who became the first Cabinet appointment ever rejected by the Alaska Legislature.

And things weren't likely to improve, if she stayed in office. She faces a veto override of nearly $29 million in federal stimulus funds for energy efficiency programs. She rejected the funds, fearing there were strings attached to the money that could bind the state to federal building mandates. Legislators said they could find no such strings.

In this Oct. 26, 2008, photo, Republican vice presidential candidate Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin blows a kiss to supporters after speaking at a rally at the Silver Spurs Arena, in Kissimmee, Fla. A day after abruptly announcing she would soon give up her job as governor, Palin on Saturday, indicated on a social networking site that she would take on a larger, national role, citing a 'higher calling' to unite the country along conservative lines.

It's easy to govern in Alaska when oil prices are high, but they are down from last year's historic highs and the budget is much tighter. And this year, Palin's signature project, getting a natural gas pipeline, moves into a critical phase: whether North Slope leaseholders will commit to shipping gas in the pipeline, which is still at least a decade away.

Palin has said stepping down as governor was about doing the right thing for Alaska — not wanting to be a lame duck governor if she knew she wasn't running for re-election in 2010. She also has hinted that her decision was a strategic move aimed at gearing up for a run for president.

But with all the thorny issues enveloping her in Alaska, Palin's quitting may be more about something simpler: cutting her losses.

"The drumbeat of adverse news coverage from Alaska would likely have continued and intensified had she remained governor. It would have become an increasing liability to her national campaign," said Juneau economist and longtime Alaska political watcher Gregg Erickson.

He added that while Palin has received an adulatory reception from social conservatives in the Lower 48, in Alaska she's become a lightning rod for criticism and controversy.

Many political observers in Alaska say the governor was a disengaged presence around the state Capitol since she returned from the presidential campaign trail, and it was obvious her heart wasn't in the job.

Palin no longer delivered bagels to lawmakers. She limited her access to the media when she did hold news conferences, and she relied on notes and her commissioners for backup.

"She had a surprising amount of disinterest in state government after November," said state Rep. Les Gara, D-Anchorage. "This state has a lot of problems, and she showed a complete lack of interest in solving them."

Tucson rainwater harvesting law drawing interest

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Long dependent on wellwater and supplies sent hundreds of miles by canal from the Colorado River, this desert city will soon harvest some of its 12 inches of annual rainfall to help bolster its water resources.

Under the nation's first municipal rainwater harvesting ordinance for commercial projects, Tucson developers building new business, corporate or commercial structures will have to supply half of the water needed for landscaping from harvested rainwater starting next year.

Already, the idea has become so popular that at least a half-dozen other Arizona communities are looking to emulate Tucson's approach.

"What we learned frankly is that we're wasting a lot of water. It's been our tradition here to shove it into the streets and get rid of it as soon as possible," said David Pittman, southern Arizona director of the Arizona Builders' Alliance.

Rainwater harvesting is also catching on nationwide, with Georgia, Colorado and other states legislating to allow or expand use of various types.

From Portland, Ore., and Seattle to San Francisco and Austin, Texas, voluntary rainwater harvesting is irrigating plants or being used in other ways instead of merely falling onto roofs, parking lots or pavement and being drained into sewers as wastewater.

"There's only so much water. Unfortunately, Americans are terribly, terribly wasteful with water, and we're running out," said Tim Pope, who builds harvesting systems in the San Juan Islands near Seattle and heads the American Rainwater Catchment Systems Association.

Water supplies from the Colorado River are likely to diminish from effects of global warming and increasing demands from other states in the West. And groundwater is carefully managed to prevent over-pumping the water that supplies the 1 million people who live in growing metropolitan Tucson.

That makes conservation and rainwater harvesting all the more important.

Largely rural Santa Fe County in New Mexico has required harvesting using cisterns or similar water-collection structures, pumps and drip irrigation for commercial and residential development since last year.

It had allowed passive harvesting, by which runoff is channeled into soil from rooftops, parking lots and the like.

That's the approach Tucson's commercial ordinance takes, though active harvesting is allowed too.

Landscaping needs account for about 40 percent of water use in commercial development and for about 45 percent of household water consumption, "so there is huge potential," said Tucson City Council member Rodney Glassman, who spearheaded efforts to achieve the ordinance.

Federer beats Roddick for 15th Grand Slam

By Stephen Wilson
Associated Press writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Roger Federer hoisted the trophy and celebrated making Grand Slam history, a year removed from an epic five-set final when he left Wimbledon a broken man, his title ripped away and his aura of invincibility shattered.

Federer waged another five-set marathon Sunday, and left as the holder of the most prestigious record in tennis. This time, the winner's trophy belonged to him, with the No. 1 ranking in his grasp again and his reputation enhanced as perhaps the greatest player in history.

Federer won his record 15th Grand Slam title, outlasting Andy Roddick for his sixth Wimbledon championship in match that went to 30 games in the final set.

Federer served a career-high 50 aces and overcame the resilient American 5-7, 7-6 (6), 7-6 (5), 3-6, 16-14 to break the record of major titles he shared with Pete Sampras.

"I'm happy I broke the record here because this is always the tournament that meant the most to me," Federer said. "It definitely feels like coming full circle, starting it here and ending it here."

The match finally ended after 4 hours, 16 minutes when Federer broke for the first time all day, with Roddick missing on a forehand.

Federer jumped high in celebration, punched the air and whacked the net with his racket. Roddick tossed his racket to the side and the two men shared a hug at the net. Federer kissed the trophy and brought it close to his chest.

Watching from the front row of the Royal Box was Sampras, a seven-time Wimbledon champion who flew in from California, his first appearance at the All England Club since playing this tournament for the last time in 2002. Also on hand were Bjorn Borg and Rod Laver.

"It's not really one of those goals you set as a little boy, but man, it's been quite a career and quite a month," said Federer, who saved four set points in the second-set tiebreaker to avoid falling behind 2-0 in sets. "It feels amazing, but this is not why I'm playing tennis to break all sort of different records. But it's definitely one of the greatest ones to have."

Turning to Sampras, Federer said: "Thanks very much for coming. I know it's a long way, but you're a member, man, we like to see you here. It's such a pleasure to play in front of such great legends."

Roddick said: "Sorry Pete, I tried to hold him off."

The historic impact of the match hit home when Sampras arrived after the third game of the first set. Accompanied by his wife, Bridgette Wilson, he sat next to Spanish great Manolo Santana and a few seats from Laver and Borg. He wore sunglasses, a gray suit and light blue shirt and tie.

"In a way, I still feel like we share (the record) because he was such a wonderful champion," Federer said, referring to Sampras. "He still has one up against me

Twin Falls, Centennial leave things undecided

By John Derr
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It will just go unsettled.

The lone two undefeated teams in the Cowboy Classic Wood Bat tournament, Centennial and Twin Falls, were set to meet on Sunday afternoon to settle things on the field.

Just as they were starting to battle, with the Cannons up 1-0 in the top of the first with two outs, the rain that had stayed away for a day and a half, came back with a furry.

While it pounded the field, Heath Stewart entertained the brave ones that stayed by sliding his way to second and third in mud.

After it stopped the Twin Falls players and coaches tried to prepare the field, but the forecast didn't show much hope. After an hour and a half delay, the decision was made to call the game.

Both coaches agreed. "With the puddles we had it was going to take at least 90 more minutes to get it close to being ready. With no lights we were going to be in trouble," said Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeier.

It was a long day for the Cowboys.

The task at hand as the day began was to earn the top seed after pool play. It would not be easy as it would take a shut out of Mountain View. With a Torros run in the first inning that goal disappeared, but Twin Falls held on for a 5-4 victory. That left the Cowboys with the second seed and a rematch with Walla Walla Wash., a team they defeated 3-2 with a run in the bottom of the seventh, in the first semifinal.

Cowboys' Jared Jordan high fives his teammate after crossing home plate against the Walla Walla Bears during the 2009 Cowboy Classic Sunday, at Bill Ingrams Field in Twin Falls, Idaho. The Cowboys won the game 11-1.

It didn't take long to see that it wouldn't be a close game as Twin Falls scored four early on the way to an 11-1 run-ruled victory.

In the other semifinal, Centennial topped Triple Play 4-0.

"I am really proud of the players. They are here all day working the field and chasing foul balls. They have a great attitude. We played well and hopefully we can keep that momentum with us," Stadelmeier added.

TWIN FALLS 11, WALLA WALLA 1

Michael Williams pitched a gem, allowing just three hits and a single run.

"I kept getting ahead on the count, tried to not waste pitches and keep them off balance," said Williams, who also added an RBI and scored a run to aide his own cause.

It didn't take long for the Cowboys to stake the lead. Williams belted an RBI single after Remington Pullin was hit by a pitch. A double steal plated Zeb Sneed for the 2-0 lead after one.

Police rule McNair's death a homicide

By Teresa Walker
Associated Press writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Former NFL quarterback Steve McNair's shooting death was a homicide, police said Sunday, but authorities stopped short of saying it was a murder-suicide committed by the 20-year-old girlfriend found dead by his side.

McNair, 36, was shot four times, twice in the head, by a semiautomatic pistol, Nashville police spokesman Don Aaron said. The woman, Sahel Kazemi, was killed by a single gunshot wound and the pistol was found under her body, Aaron said.

Aaron said the two had been in a "dating relationship for past several months."

Asked if the deaths could have caused by a lover's quarrel, Aaron said, "That's a very important part of the investigation as we work to ultimately classify Miss Kazemi's death."

Police said they need to do more interviews with friends of Kazemi and McNair before they rule on whether her death was a suicide, Aaron said.

McNair, a four-time Pro Bowl selection, was married with four children. He and Kazemi were found dead Saturday afternoon at a Nashville condominium he shared with a friend, and police said Sunday that it appears the two died in the early morning.

Cavendish wins Tour stage; Armstrong plays it safe

By Jamey Keaten
Associated Press writer

BRIGNOLLES, France — Lance Armstrong just wanted to stay out of trouble on a scorching day one rider felt was better suited for baking bread.

British sprinter Mark Cavendish won the second stage of the Tour de France on Sunday, with Armstrong finishing safely in the pack and Fabian Cancellara of Switzerland keeping the leader's yellow jersey. Cancellara captured the opening time trial a day earlier.

Cancellara has an 18-second lead over 2007 Tour winner Alberto Contador of Spain. Bradley Wiggins of Britain is third, 19 seconds behind. Armstrong, the seven-time champion, is 10th, 40 seconds back.

Tyler Farrar of the United States finished second and Romain Feillu of France was third in the 116-mile route from Monaco to Brignolles.

Armstrong is making a comeback to the Tour four years after retiring. The 37-year-old Texan said his strategy for this leg was "just avoid trouble and get in the rhythm of the race."

The Tour rolls across the rim of the Mediterranean for mostly flat stages the next few days, with a challenging team time trial Tuesday. Three days in the demanding Pyrenees start in Stage 7.

"Yesterday was not really a normal stage," Armstrong said as he headed toward his Astana team bus. "These start to be the more normal stages."

The heat, however, was anything but normal.

"St(age) 2 done. Hot, hot, hot," Armstrong tweeted later. "Up/down/left/right but pretty uneventful," he wrote, before hailing a big fan turnout on the roadsides and congratulating Cavendish.

Many riders groaned about the weather.

"The heat was like you were baking bread. ... It was terrible," Cancellara said on French TV. He recounted how with about an hour left of riding his team manager said the temperature hit 104 degrees. "I haven't seen heat like that in years."

NEW YORK — Derek Jeter had four hits including the a go-ahead two-run homer, Hideki Matsui homered and drove in four runs, and the New York Yankees rallied from a four-run hole to beat the Toronto Blue Jays 10-8 on Sunday.

It was New York's fifth straight win over the Blue Jays, whose five-run fourth inning gave them an 8-4 lead that never appeared safe on a day in which balls were again flying out of Yankee Stadium. There were four homers hit — all of them to right field — to raise the total to 139 at the new ballpark midway through the season.

Tiger Woods celebrates after winning the AT&T National golf tournament at Congressional Country Club, Sunday, in Bethesda, Md.

Woods wins with birdie

BETHESDA, Md. — Tiger Woods made it a hat trick of victories in tournaments hosted by PGA Tour stars, this one the most meaningful of all because it was his own.

Woods lived up to his hopes of being a "greedy host" Sunday, leaving Anthony Kim in his wake and then making a 20-foot birdie putt on the 16th hole to overtake hard-charging Hunter Mahan for a one-shot victory in his AT&T National.

Woods closed with a 3-under 67 at Congressional for his third victory of the year, the others coming at the Arnold Palmer Invitational at Bay Hill and Jack Nicklaus' Memorial Tournament.

The challenge came from a rising star, just not the Californian anyone expected.

Mahan made six birdies on the back nine for a 62, tying the course record that Kim set Thursday. The final birdie on the 18th gave Mahan a share of the lead, and he had to wait more than an hour to see if Woods could top him.

Woods twice scrambled for par to stay tied for the lead, then looked as though he squandered a good birdie chance on the par-5 16th when his chip from the rough came out heavy and stopped 20 feet from the hole. Backing off once, he rolled in it, then walked stoically to the hole, nodding his head.

He closed with routine pars to finish at 13-under 267. The 68th victory of his PGA Tour career moved him to the top of the money list and the FedEx Cup standings for the first time this year.

Whether it gives him any momentum will be determined in two weeks at Turnberry.

All three of Woods' victories this year have come in his final start before a major, and he finished four shots behind in both the Masters and the U.S. Open at Bethpage Black two weeks ago.

YI GETS FIRST LPGA TITLE

SYLVANIA, Ohio — South Korea's Eunjung Yi holed a 10-foot birdie putt on the first hole of a playoff with Morgan Pressel to win the Jamie Farr Owens Corning Classic for her first LPGA Tour title.

The 21-year-old Yi, four strokes ahead at the start of the day and six in front after three holes, finished with an even-par 71 to match Pressel (67) at 18-under 266 on the Highland Meadows course. Pressel, chasing her third career victory, holed a wedge for eagle on the par-5 17th hole to tie Yi.

Michelle Wie (64), Seon Hwa Lee (67) and Song-Hee Kim (69) tied for third at 16 under. Top-ranked Lorena Ochoa (68) tied for eighth at 14 under.

KAYMER WINS FRENCH OPEN

SAINT-QUENTIN-EN-YVELINES, France — Germany's Martin Kaymer won the French Open, beating England's Lee Westwood with an 18-foot par putt on the first hole of a playoff.

The 24-year-old Kaymer, a three-time winner on the European tour, closed with a 3-under 68 to match Westwood (65) at 13-under 271 on Le Golf National's Albatross Course. In the playoff on the par-4 18th, Kaymer's approach shot barely cleared the greenside lake, while Westwood's ball found the water. Westwood finished with a double bogey.

Loyal leads Guadeloupe past Panama

OAKLAND, Calif. — Loic Loyal had a goal and an assist and David Fleurival also scored to lead Guadeloupe past Panama 2-1 on Sunday in the Gold Cup opener for both clubs.

Both Guadeloupe goals came in the first half, with Loyal getting his team on the board in the 33rd minute. Panama defender Armando Gun tried to chest the ball back to goalkeeper Jaime Penedo, but Loyal intercepted the ball and one-touched it into the net from about six yards out. His assist came 10 minutes later on a pretty goal by Fleurival in which he lofted the ball from about 35 yards over Penedo's head into the top right-hand corner of the net.

Nelson Barahona scored for Panama in the 68th minute, getting the rebound after teammate Blas Perez missed a bicycle kick.

Marius Fausta made seven saves for Guadeloupe, a surprise semifinalist in the last Gold Cup tournament two years ago before losing to Mexico. The Gwada Boys were the first Caribbean team to reach the semis since Trinidad & Tobago in 2000.

Fausta replaced the injured Franck Grandel, the tournament's top goalie in 2007 who left the team Saturday.

MEXICO 2, NICARAGUA 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Luis Miguel Noriega scored his first international goal on a penalty kick in the 45th minute of his national team debut, and Mexico defeated Nicaragua 2-0 on Sunday in the first round of Gold Cup play in Group C.

Pablo Barrera, a second-half substitute, added a goal for El Tri in the 86th minute. He one-touched the ball into the net from 7 yards after a perfect cross from Alberto Medina on the right flank.

Noriega's goal came after Nicaragua midfielder Armando Reyes was whistled for a foul from behind against Israel Martinez. This marked Noriega's first official match with the national team after he was on the roster for a pair of friendlies late last month.

weren't looking for any suspects and do not believe McNair's wife was involved. Mechelle McNair, mother of two of his four sons, was expected to collect her husband's belongings from authorities. Funeral arrangements were not expected to be finalized until this afternoon at the earliest.

"She's still very upset, very distraught," agent Bus Cook said.

McNair led the famous Tennessee Titans' drive that came a yard short of forcing overtime in the 2000 Super Bowl, before the Titans traded him to the Baltimore Ravens in 2006. "On the field, there isn't a player that was as tough as him," the Ravens' Derrick Mason said.

McNair retired last year and had recently opened a restaurant in Nashville, where he shared a condo with a friend.

A man who answered the door at a house in the Jacksonville, Fla., suburb of Orange Park said it was the home of Kazemi's family, but said her relatives did not want to comment.

"We don't have anything to say, please leave us alone," he said.

A Nashville neighbor saw McNair, 36, at Kazemi's Nashville apartment so often — two to three times a week — that she thought McNair had moved in. McNair never tried to hide his presence but kept to himself.

infield.

"We knew we were going to have to execute the short game. It worked for us so we stuck with it," Stadelmeier said.

Braden Box bunted in a run while a bloop down the right field line by Jared Jordan scored another.

Three walks in the third brought a pitching change for Walla Walla, but it didn't stop the Cowboys.

TJ Ellis singled in a pair while Box added yet another RBI.

Reminton Pullin double in a pair while two passed balls signaled an early end to the day.

TWIN FALLS 5, MOUNTAIN VIEW 4

Another one run victory.

Twice in pool play the Cowboys got the hits when needed to escape with close victories. While the first game of the day was different, the result was the same.

Cassidy Gaines earned the victory on the mound while Williams went 2-3 and brought home a pair of runs to lead Twin Falls to the victory over Mountain View and a perfect record in pool play.

"We have been trying to stay behind and drive the ball," added Williams.

The Cowboys took the lead in the third as Williams smacked a two-run double. Box chipped in an RBI single in the fourth giving Twin Falls the 5-2 advantage.

The Torros mounted a comeback late. They loaded the bases in the fifth, but the Cowboy defense came through with an inning ending double play. Mountain View's Chase Miller scored a pair and pulled Mt. View within a run. Box came on in relief to end the threat.

"Mountain View is a good team. We had timely hitting and a great start for Cassidy on the mound and Braden came in and did well," added Stadelmeier.

here at Wimbledon. It's nice that he shows appreciation for what I'm doing."

Federer is the third player to win six Wimbledon championships — Sampras and William Renshaw each won seven.

Sampras considers Federer the greatest ever.

"I have to give it to him," he said. "The critics say Laver, and (Rafael) Nadal has beaten him a few times at majors. He's won 15 now, he's going to win a few more here. So in my book he is."

"He's a stud," Sampras added. "He's only 27. He'll contend here for many years, and the U.S.

Open, and all the majors. If he just keeps it going and stays healthy, he could go to 18, 19, potentially. The guy, he's a legend. Now he's an icon."

Federer reclaimed the No. 1 ranking he lost last year to Nadal, the Spaniard who beat him in the classic 2008 final that finished in near darkness at 9-7 in the fifth but missed this year's tournament because of knee problems.

"I'm aware that Rafa didn't play here," Federer said. "Injuries are part of the game, unfortunately, but I'm happy I became No. 1 in the world by winning this title because this is the biggest one there is out there. I love playing here."

Are small Idaho towns dying? Not just yet

Ironic as it may seem, the recession is a blessing for south-central Idaho's small communities. And not even a blessing in disguise.

That's because the economic downturn has slowed migration from rural Idaho to the state's population centers to a trickle.

Communities such as Rupert, which lost 8 percent of its population between 1980 and 2004, actually grew last year — bolstered by an influx of new jobs to Minidoka County and neighboring Cassia County.

So did Gooding, which had shrunk by 6 percent between 2000 and 2007.

Jerome — now south-central Idaho's second-largest city, surpassing Burley — has flourished, expanding by 4 percent last year and by 7 percent since 2006, and there was strong growth in the bedroom communities of Twin Falls County: Kimberly (up 4 percent last year, 12 percent since 2006), Filer (3 percent last year, 7 percent since '06), Hansen (7 percent in the past two years) and Murtaugh (4 percent in 2008, 7 percent since '06).

To be sure, some small towns in the Magic Valley are getting smaller. Shoshone lost population last year, probably because of the depressed Wood River Valley tourist economy, and Glenns Ferry — which was deprived its major employer, the potato processor North American Foods, in 2008 — saw a modest exodus.

But seven south-central Idaho communities had stronger growth rates last year than Twin Falls, the area's population center.

It's likely that trend will continue this year — and perhaps next — as Idaho's largest cities shed jobs. So what should small towns do with their window of opportunity?

If they're wise, they'll reinvent themselves along the lines of the communities of Minidoka and Cassia counties — places where workers in the new food processing businesses live.

Housing is affordable, the cost of living modest and taxes low.

Or they'll emulate Jerome, which has managed to attract light industry and welcomed commuters who work across the Perrine Bridge.

South-central Idaho's small towns have been on the decline for 40 years.

Now, finally, some of them have a real chance to reverse that trend.

The job market's brutal, and it's only getting worse

One of the great stories you'll be hearing over the next couple of years will be about the large number of Americans who were forced out of work in this recession and remained unable to find gainful employment after the recession ended. We're basically in denial about this.

BOB HERBERT

There are now more than five unemployed workers for every job opening in the United States. The ranks of the poor are growing, welfare rolls are rising and young American men on a broad front are falling into an abyss of joblessness.

Some months ago, the Obama administration and various mainstream economists forecast a peak unemployment rate of roughly 8 percent this year. It has already reached 9.4 percent, and most analysts now expect it to hit 10 percent or higher. Economists are currently spreading the word that the recession may end sometime this year, but the unemployment rate will continue to climb. That's not a recovery. That's mumbo jumbo.

Why this rampant joblessness is not viewed as a crisis and approached with the sense of urgency and commitment that a crisis warrants, is beyond me. The Obama administration has committed a great deal of money to keep the economy from collapsing entirely, but that is not enough to cope with the scope of the jobless crisis.

There were roughly 7 million people officially counted as unemployed in November 2007, a month before the recession began. Now there are about 14 million. If you add to these unemployed the individuals those who are working part time but would like to work full time, and those who want jobs but have become discouraged and stopped looking, you get an underutilization rate that is truly alarming.

"By May 2009," according to the Center for Labor Market Studies at Northeastern University in Boston, "the total number of underutilized workers had increased dramatically from 15.63 million to 29.37 million — a rise 88 percent. Nearly 30 million working-age individuals were underutilized in May, the largest number in our nation's history. The overall labor underutilization rate in May 2009 had risen to 18.2 percent, its highest value in 26 years."

If it were true that the recession is approaching its end and that these startlingly high numbers were about to begin a steady and substantial decline, there would be much less reason for alarm. But while there is evidence the recession is easing, hardly anyone believes a big-time employment turnaround is in the offing.

Three-quarters of the workers let go over the past year were permanently displaced, as opposed to temporarily laid off. They won't be going back to their jobs when economic conditions improve. And many of those who were permanently displaced were in fields like construction and manufacturing in which the odds of finding work, even after a recovery takes hold, are not good.

Another startling aspect of this economic downturn is the toll it has taken on men, especially young men. Men accounted for nearly 80 percent of the loss in employment in this recession. As the labor market center reported, "The unemployment rate for males in April was 10 percent, versus only 7.2 percent for women, the largest absolute and relative gender gap in unemployment rates in the post-World War II period."

Workers under 30 have sustained nearly half the net job losses since November 2007.

This is not a recipe for a strong economic recovery once the recession officially ends, or for a healthy society. Young males are being clobbered at an age when, typically, they would be thinking about getting married, setting up new households and starting families. Moreover, work habits and experience developed in one's 20s often establishes the foundation for decades of employment and earnings.

We've seen what happens when you rely on debt and inflated assets to keep the economy afloat. The economy can't be re-established on a sound basis without aggressive efforts to put people back to work in jobs with decent wages.

We also need to consider the suffering that is being endured by these high levels of joblessness, including the profound negative effect on the families of the unemployed.

Lawrence Mishel, president of the Economic Policy Institute, warned about the consequences for children. "What does it mean when kids are under stress because there is no money in the household, or people have to move more, or are combining households, or lose their health insurance? I believe this is going to leave a permanent scar on a generation of kids."

This is not a problem that will evaporate when the gross domestic product finally begins to creep into positive territory.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

People need to wake up, hold elected officials accountable

If people don't wake up and flood Washington with protests like you did a couple of years ago over the immigration issue, we are going to lose this country and freedoms. We have to stop "Cap and Trade," "Universal Health Care," "Amnesty, health care, welfare for illegals" and other assaults on our constitutional representative republic.

Our elected officials have been spending us into oblivion for years. They have taken oaths to protect and defend the Constitution and have ignored it completely. Our founders despised the idea of a strong, large central government. They gave us the framework for a weak central government, except for defense of the country, and strong state and local governments, which were closer to the people and easier for the people to control. Over the last 100 years, and more, we have evolved into the opposite. Socialists, so-called progressives, have insinuated themselves into our school systems and replicated themselves into our culture and society. We are very close to Germany in the 1930s. Our news media is impotent in exposing the hypocrisies of our elected officials. We have been betrayed by both major parties in this. We have few real patriots in our government. We have seen, if we paid attention, many in Washington are corrupt. It's like an iceberg, you only see the tip. If you see one spider in the house you can bet there are a lot more you don't see. Our elected officials have created our economic crisis, global warming, our health care crisis, and even the Social Security crisis (they put SS into the general fund so they could raid it). Why is it so difficult to see their deceitfulness, guile and trickery? And why don't you people in the media expose the dismantling of America? You are acting duplicitously.

There should be alternatives considered for power lines

I attended the public county commissioner's meeting at City Hall on Monday, June 15 with representatives from Idaho Power, Bureau of Land Management and commissioners from neighboring counties. The mindset of Idaho Power was to receive input and collectively solve problems rather than focusing on opposition.

I was very impressed with our Cassia County commissioners. Our commissioners are well informed of the issues pertaining to the high-voltage transmission lines that could pass through Cassia County and stand to protect the citizens of our county. Our commissioners presented alternatives to Idaho Power and addressed the concerns of agriculture land users.

Idaho Power was willing to listen to all concerns presented, but I felt the bottom line in their decision of the route chosen for the high-voltage transmission lines would be completely based on cost of installation, not taking into consideration the health and safety of the citizens of each of the counties involved. Research has been done to support the concerns of many health related issues such as cancer, depression, leukemia, Lou Gehrig's disease and learning disabilities. I feel the financial burden on Cassia County of health-related problems resulting from residents living in close proximity to the lines and farm workers working under the lines would be a hardship on our county.

Since there are alternative routes in placing the high-voltage lines we need to stand united in persuading Idaho Power to place the lines outside of residential and agricultural areas and closer to BLM ground.

President Zelaya's plane circles Honduran runway, can't land

The Associated Press

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — Ousted President Manuel Zelaya was kept from landing at the main Honduras airport Sunday because the runway was blocked by military vehicles and groups of soldiers, some of them clashing with a crowd of thousands outside.

His Venezuelan pilots circled around the airport and decided not to risk a crash.

Zelaya instead headed for El Salvador, and vowed to try again Monday or Tuesday in his high-stakes effort to return to power in a country where all branches of government have lined up against him.

"I am the commander of the armed forces, elected by the people, and I ask the armed forces to comply with the order to open the airport so that there is no problem in landing and embracing my people," Zelaya said from the plane. "Today I feel like I have sufficient spiritual strength, blessed with the blood of Christ, to be able to arrive there and raise the crucifix."

But interim President Roberto Micheletti insisted on keeping him out, and said he won't negotiate until "things return to normal."

Thousands of supporters of Honduras' ousted President Manuel Zelaya march towards the international airport in Tegucigalpa, Sunday.

"We will be here until the country calms down," Micheletti said. "We are the authentic representatives of the people."

Micheletti also accused Nicaragua of moving troops in an attempt at psychological intimidation, and warned them not to cross into Honduras, "because we're ready to defend our border." Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega called the allegation "totally false."

Violence broke out among the huge crowd surrounding the airport, with at least one man killed — shot in the head from inside the airport as people tried to break through a security fence, according to an Associated Press photographer at the scene. At least 30 people were treated for injuries, the Red Cross said, after security forces fired warning shots and tear gas.

When Zelaya's plane was turned away, his supporters began chanting "We want blue helmets!" — a reference to U.N. peacekeepers.

Karin Antunez, 27, was in tears.

"We're scared. We feel sad because these coup soldiers won't let Mel return, but we're not going to back down," she said. "We're the people and we're going to keep marching so that our president comes home!"

Zelaya called on the United Nations, the OAS, the United States and European countries to "do something with this repressive regime."

"We should look for an immediate solution," Zelaya told Venezuela's Telesur network. He landed in Nicaragua and met briefly with Ortega before leaving for consultations in El Salvador with the presidents of Argentina, Paraguay and Ecuador and the secretary-general of the Organization of American States, Jose Miguel Insulza, who flew there from Washington.

Zelaya won wide international support after his military ouster, but the presidents decided it was too dangerous to fly on Zelaya's plane, which carried only his close advisers and staff, two journalists from the Venezuela-based network Telesur and U.N. General Assembly President Miguel D'Escoto Brockmann, a leftist Nicaraguan priest and former foreign minister.

Honduras' new government has vowed to arrest Zelaya for 18 alleged criminal acts including treason and failing to implement more than 80 laws approved by Congress since taking office in 2006. Zelaya also refused to comply with a Supreme Court ruling against his planned referendum on whether to hold an assembly to consider changing the constitution.

Walt Disney World monorail crash kills one employee

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Two monorail trains crashed early Sunday morning in the Magic Kingdom section of Walt Disney World, killing one train's operator, emergency officials said.

The transit system, which shuttles thousands of visitors around the sprawling resort each day, was shut down while authorities investigated the holiday weekend wreck.

The monorail operator died at the scene of the crash, which happened around 2 a.m., said Bo Jones, deputy chief for Reedy Creek Fire Department. The other train operator was not injured, but was taken to a hospital because he was emotionally shaken. Five park guests were treated at the scene.

Disney Vice President of Communications Michael Griffin identified the driver as 21-year-old Austin Wuennenberg.

"It doesn't matter what the cost is when you can hear the people you love again."

John Struthers, Twin Falls

"I could've gotten in-the-ear or behind-the-ear hearing aids. I chose the behind-the-ear aid, and I just love them. I love that my Widex Elan digital aids adjust on their own."

When I fly, they block out most of the noise you usually hear on an airplane. It's truly a natural sound. They're so comfortable that I've actually forgotten to take them out when I go to bed.

My wife loves them, too. Now I'm not saying, "Huh?" all the time. I realize that it doesn't matter what the cost is when you can hear the people you love again.

1.6M Jackson fans learn who won memorial tickets

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Who's getting the tickets?

Like a modern-day Willy Wonka tale, more than 1.6 million fans waited to learn Sunday whether they were among the lucky few to win access to Michael Jackson's memorial service at Staples Center on Tuesday.

Fans registered online for free in the random drawing of only 8,750 names. Each person selected will receive two tickets.

Ticket winners were in the process of being notified Sunday afternoon, according to Michael Roth, a spokesman for Staples Center owner AEG Live. The odds of getting a ticket were about 1 in 183.

The tickets will admit 11,000 people to the Staples Center plus 6,500 in the Nokia Theater overflow section next door. The streets around the stadium will be closed to prevent those without tickets from trying to attend, police said Sunday.

Assistant Police Chief Jim McDonnell warned people without tickets to stay away: "You'll be standing in the hot sun on a city street with a lot of other people ... but not within eyeshot of Staples."

Jackson died at age 50 on June 25 after going into cardiac arrest in the bedroom of his rented mansion. The cause of Jackson's death has not been determined. Autopsy results are not expected for several weeks.

Jackson's family was planning a private ceremony at the Forest Lawn cemetery in the Hollywood Hills, McDonnell said. He did not provide further details.

More than a week after his death, tributes and accolades keep coming. Madonna had a Jackson impersonator dance to "Wanna Be Starting Something" at her concert Saturday in the same London arena where he was to stage his comeback.

Colin Powell said in an interview aired Sunday that Jackson had controversy in his life, but in death his art should be celebrated.

"Yes, there were some challenges in his life," the former secretary of state told CNN's "State of the Union." "Yes, there was a great deal of controversy about him. But he's now passed on. Let's celebrate his art."

The memorial service will be broadcast on five television networks.

Changes for life

'I started eating whenever I was stressed, sad or lonely and the extra pounds followed,' Marnie Schmitt of Buhl wrote, recalling the days before participating in a body-transformation challenge.

Buhl woman's body transformation wins honor

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

Marnie Schmitt needed a change.

In 2008, the Buhl woman struggled with her image. She had put on extra pounds and no longer enjoyed her workouts at the gym.

After getting fed up with her situation, she joined the EAS Body for Life competition, and ended up transforming her body and her life.

Illinois-based sports nutrition company EAS — which stands for Energy, Athletics, Strength — holds an annual competition that measures body transformations with body fat percentages and weight lost. Schmitt, 42, is the 2008 champion for women ages 30 to 45. During the 12-week program, she lost 15.5

pounds and decreased her body fat by 10.6 percent, according to Robyn Ettinger of Catalyst Public Relations, which works with EAS.

Before the challenge, Schmitt ate healthy food and exercised almost daily, but still wasn't seeing the results she wanted, she said. A "before" picture on the EAS Web site (<http://bodyfor->

Buhl resident Marnie Schmitt walks around Twin Falls' Centennial Park on June 29. Schmitt won $10,000 and other prizes as champion of the EAS Body for Life challenge in her age group.

'I'm so much healthier. I sleep better. My posture is better. I don't procrastinate as much,' says Marnie Schmitt, after following an exercise-and-nutrition program designed by sports nutrition company EAS.

life.com/challenge/champions/2008champions.asp) shows Schmitt with more weight on her belly, thighs and arms.

"I had become tired, depressed and lazy," Schmitt wrote in an essay posted on the EAS Web site. "I started eating whenever I was stressed, sad or lonely and the extra pounds followed."

So she signed up for the 2008 EAS Body For Life challenge and saw dramatic results.

"It's based on healthy-living principles, so there was a change in how I exercised, how I ate," Schmitt said in an interview.

The difference is in the technique. Instead of doing 40 minutes of medium-level cardio at one time, she does 20 minutes with intense intervals. And instead of just eating healthy foods, she ate with a purpose — six small meals a day, formed from nutrition guidelines by EAS.

The basic principles behind the diet are simple: Eat a balanced amount of carbohydrates and protein and reduce or eliminate sweets and unhealthy fats, like cheese and whole milk. Meal plans allow for flexibility — either follow the plans strictly and use provided recipes, or be creative and substitute equivalents. After six days, the plan allows for a free day, when Marnie could eat a piece of pizza or drink soda if she wanted to.

"You're giving your body what it needs to make the changes," Schmitt said. "So I ate a lot more on this program than I normally ate,

As cowboys have known for centuries, hats with wide brims are a great way to keep yourself out of the sun in even the hottest conditions. Find one with UPF protection in the fabric, or one with a flap in back to keep sun off your neck.

Right: The more sunburns you get, the more likely you are to eventually get melanoma or other skin cancers. So avoid them by using sunscreen and wearing protective clothing — and get regular checkups by a doctor.

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

With spring's showers a distant memory, it's time to buy a new bottle of sunscreen. Think about going a little further this year, though, and try a few products recommended by area experts and retailers that are designed to increase your protection from the sun and its potentially harmful rays.

"It's dumb to not go out(side), but it's equally dumb to not do the things that protect you," said Chris Scholes, a Twin Falls dermatologist.

What's new under the sun

Local experts tout recent developments in sun protection

He's excited that protective ingredients are being incorporated into more consumer items, from makeup and lotions to clothing itself. "It's very easy to convince most people to put on a lotion if they're already using it, or, for women, to convince them to look at a foundation that has a sunscreen in it. It's not an extra step in their day."

In recent years, each season has brought more clothing infused with UPF, ultra-violet protection factor, that are light in hot weather but also prevent sun damage. "They're popular; people are very conscientious," said Elizabeth Hendrix, owner of outdoors store Ketchum on the Fly. She said that while people don't often come in looking for UPF clothing, when they learn it's available, they often buy it. "It's something we would use as a selling point."

Ryan Kober, owner of Twin Falls' Elevation Sports, said he carries a number of lines of UPF clothing, with a lot more coming into the store next year. The items don't cost much extra, either — about $10 to $20 more than clothes without UPF, he said.

"We're getting more people who are more conscious about sun damage. They'll want a hiking shirt with a long sleeve that rolls and buttons," he said. Wide-brimmed hats, like those worn by river rafting guides, are also becoming more popular among all outdoor enthusiasts.

And, Scholes said, these clothes have gotten a lot more attractive recently.

"It was not that many years ago when the only UV-protective clothing that was out there looked like it was made by a cockeyed tentmaker. It was uncomfortable, it was hot," the dermatologist said. "It used to be that anything designed for sun protection made you look like a dork, and that's really not the case anymore."

He prescribes the clothing for people with sun-sensitive conditions, and recommends it for just about anyone.

Comfort and appearance are also factors when it comes to sunscreens, and Scholes said manufacturers have adjusted formulas recently to make them more appealing, creating sprays and gels as well as lighter, more absorbable lotions. He always recommends using an SPF, or sun protective factor, higher than 30, partly because it's rare for people to put on enough.

"The appropriate amount of sunscreen if you're wearing shorts and tank top is a shot glass worth, it's a full ounce," he said. If you use a higher SPF sunscreen, you're more likely to get sufficient protection even if you don't apply enough.

If you do get a burn, Scholes said, make sure you do three things: Get out of the sun as soon as you can, apply lotions, and take aspirin to reduce the inflammation.

Tom Crais, a Hailey aesthetic plastic surgeon, highly recommends another product that he says has been on the market for a while but isn't well known: Cellex-C.

"It is not a sun blocker, nor a sunscreen, but it's an anti-inflammatory," Crais said. "With a first-degree burn, it can reverse the inflammatory process within several hours. To me, Cellex-C is a mainstay of protection for the skin, and it reverses a lot of the damage."

Although Crais sells the product, he said he has no additional financial interest in its success. The surgeon, who sees lots of melanomas in his practice, recommends Cellex-C highly. "It makes (skin) look healthier. It truly is a rejuvenative product, without question in my mind at all."

Scholes said he's less impressed with Cellex-C, describing it as an antioxidant about which he has not seen convincing evidence. However, he doesn't advise against using it, and doesn't believe it would cause any harm.

Crais said that in addition to protecting yourself from future damage, it's important to monitor the consequences of any past damage. He recommends annual full-body checks for those 30 and older by a doctor who knows what to look for, as melanomas can be unusual in appearance and location.

So, get out there and enjoy the summer — just make sure you're protected from the sun, with products old and new.

Study: Exercise can relieve back pain

JAY L. CLENDENIN/Los Angeles Times
Los Aa strength-training program reduced back pain for participants in a recent study.

By Jeannine Stein
Los Angeles Times

More is better when it comes to alleviating lower back pain — more exercise, that is.

Although many people who suffer from back pain don't exercise, fearing it will exacerbate the problem, a recent study found that exercising four days a week gave people greater relief from back pain than working out fewer times a week or not at all.

In the study, 120 people were randomly assigned to one of four groups for 12 weeks: One did a strength-training program two days a week, one did it three days a week, and one did it four days a week. A control group did no exercise but participated in a two-week exercise familiarization program. Exercises in the program included bench presses and leg presses.

Those in the four-day-a-week program had the most reduction in pain — 28 percent — compared with 14 percent for those who exercised two days a week. The four-day group also reported having a better quality of life and less disability than those who exercised less. In addition, it showed the greatest strength gains. The control group showed insignificant change in all areas.

but my choices were completely different."

And those changes weren't just in her appearance. Schmitt now has more energy and concentration throughout the day, she said.

"I'm so much healthier. I sleep better. My posture is better. I don't procrastinate as much," Schmitt said. "There's just so many other benefits that I didn't expect from this program that were just a nice surprise."

Another bonus: the prizes. For winning in her age group, Schmitt received $10,000, a leather jacket, reimbursement for the EAS products she purchased during the competition, and a home gym. She also won her first 5-kilometer race, and ran the Rim to Rim.

Even after winning the

A financial myth? "I can't afford professional advice."

It's true that many people have seen their assets decrease; some may even be suffering from other economic distress. The short-term cost of professional advice, however, may be minimal compared with the long-term cost of not attaining the assistance you need to take action and stay on track. It's reasonable to assume that people who already had financial plans in place before the markets started to fall are feeling more comfortable during these tough times because they know that they've taken action. You can feel that same way. The choice is yours.

Woman chafes under demands of her overprotective mother

DEAR ABBY: I am a 35-year-old married woman who, unfortunately, has an overprotective mother. Mom was always clingy. When I was young I was rarely allowed to go anywhere without her, including visits to nearby homes of friends or family. She always had to come along, too.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

Now, Mom is insisting I call her every night "so she can hear the sound of my voice" and I can let her know I'm all right. It's driving me insane. We live in the same town. If I go over to visit, she expects me to call her the minute I get home so she knows I'm OK. I finally put my foot down on that one. But still she pouts.

beyond you. You have my sympathy, too, but at her age, it is unrealistic to expect her to change a pattern that was set 35 years ago.

I don't know how involved these nightly conversations with her are, but I recommend you make them very short. "Hi, Mom - I'm home. Goodbye!" Alternatively, you could agree upon a signal such as one ring of the phone so she'll know you are safe. Even then, she probably won't be satisfied, so be prepared.

Mom is 70. If I tell her I won't call, she lays a guilt trip on me. The nightly phone conversation is always the same, and it has become a chore. I don't enjoy it, and needless to say, my husband isn't thrilled with it either.

DEAR ABBY: I recently spent a few days with my 64-year-old brother, "Austen." His wife divorced him several years ago, and his latest girlfriend recently broke up with him. I suspect I know why. He has turned into a crashing bore.

I know of no one my age who calls her mother every night. Talking once a week to catch up on things would be better - we could have an enjoyable conversation. How can I stop this without feeling horrible? Am I wrong?

My brother used to be interested in the people around him, but now it seems like he doesn't care about anyone but himself. He spends hours on end telling me - and anyone else who will listen - about the minutiae of his daily life. He talks about his chores, his

- CONFLICTED IN SOUTH CAROLINA
DEAR CONFLICTED: I feel sorry for your mother. She apparently has no other life, no other interests

IF JULY 6 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: This summer you will be at your best when surrounded by likeminded individuals who share your passion and interests.

Concentrate on networking and making friends. You'll have the best success and chance to climb higher on the ladder of success during November. That is a time when your business judgment is sound and your business strategies will land you on the top of the heap.

Next March you can put your most important plans into motion successfully or could be given a beneficial opportunity that will ensure a successful future.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your overconfidence can crumble like pie crust. You are shaping something now that might prove insubstantial. Avoid confrontations.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You could be the victim of "much ado about nothing." Don't begin an argument, challenge rules or make mountains out of molehills.

Today is Monday, July 6, the 187th day of 2009. There are 178 days left in the year.
Today's Highlight:
On July 6, 1944, an estimated 168 people died in a fire that broke out during a performance in the main tent of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus in Hartford, Conn. (Among the survivors was future actor Charles Nelson Reilly, then age 13.)

On this date:
In 1535, St. Thomas More was executed in England for high treason.

In 1777, during the American Revolution, British forces captured Fort Ticonderoga in New York.

In 1809, French troops arrested Pope Pius VII, who had excommunicated Emperor Napoleon I.

In 1885, French scientist Louis Pasteur successfully tested an anti-rabies vaccine on a boy who had been bitten by an infected dog.

In 1917, during World War I, Arab forces led by T.E. Lawrence and Auda

Jeraldine Saunders

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Jump from the frying pan and you will only land in the fire. Friends don't require that you put money on the line or dip into savings.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): What we remember is a key to what we forget. You may end up running into more than one "absent-minded professor" today.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A relationship could change suddenly. You will need to stay on your toes to avoid unsavory undercurrents that cause hidden friction.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A compromise can put you in a compromising position. The scales of justice will never balance as long as you're on a seesaw.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may be tempted to explain the unexplainable.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Abu Tayi captured the port of Aqaba from the Turks.
In 1928, the first all-talking feature, "Lights of New York," had its gala premiere in New York.

In 1945, President Harry S. Truman signed an executive order establishing the Medal of Freedom.

In 1957, Althea Gibson became the first black tennis player to win a Wimbledon singles title, defeating fellow American Darlene Hard 6-3, 6-2.

In 1988, 167 North Sea oil workers were killed when a series of explosions and fires destroyed a drilling platform.

In 1989, the U.S. Army destroyed its last Pershing IA missiles at an ammunition plant in Karnack, Texas, under terms of the 1987 Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces Treaty.

He never once asked about me or the rest of the family, about our interests or activities unless it was a setup so he could deliver another monologue about something.

Austen wants to start dating again. Would I be doing him a favor by saying something about his self-centeredness? Or would I be hurting his feelings? I miss the way my brother used to be.

- SILENT SISTER IN ARIZONA

DEAR SILENT SISTER: When did this personality change in your brother occur? Was it sudden, or has it been coming on for a long time? He may be depressed over the failure of his marriage and his latest romance. Or there may be an underlying physical cause.

As a loving sister, suggest that your brother have a checkup with his doctor if it has been some time since he's had one. If he wants to know why, it would not be out of line to tell him that when you visited him it seemed that his horizons are no longer as broad as they used to be, and you are worried that he may be depressed. But do not tell him you think he has turned into a self-centered bore because it would be both unkind and unhelpful.

Don't get sidetracked by those who challenge beliefs or disagree about principle.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Focus on the big picture. Associating with those from a different background or culture can trigger temporary squabbles.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Ignore a gauntlet thrown your way. A competitive situation can get under your skin and cause you to take foolhardy risks.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The more you stretch muscles, the more flexible you become. But be mindful that you don't stretch your imagination too far.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Don't bite off more than you can chew. A temporary case of insincerity or inadvertent misdirection can cause trouble within relationships.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Wrap your money in a waterproof bag. Your liquid assets might leak away without innate caution and common sense.

of Israel, pledging to seek peace with neighboring Arab countries.

Five years ago: Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry chose former rival John Edwards to be his running mate. A U.S. fighter pilot who'd mistakenly bombed Canadian soldiers in Afghanistan in 2002, killing four, was found guilty in New Orleans of dereliction of duty; Maj. Harry Schmidt was reprimanded and docked a month's pay.

One year ago: The U.S. launched an airstrike at combatants in Afghanistan's Nuristan province; the Afghan government later said 47 civilians died. President George W. Bush arrived in Japan for his eighth and final G8 summit, where he emphasized the urgency of providing aid to Africa. Rafael Nadal won a riveting five-set Wimbledon final, 6-4, 6-4, 6-7 (5), 6-7 (8), 9-7, denying Roger Federer a sixth straight title in a match that lasted 4 hours, 48 minutes.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

"A thought that does not result in an action is nothing much, and an action that does not proceed from a thought is nothing at all." — Georges Bernanos

Today's six-spade contract requires just a modicum of care. And that is all the more true because when dummy comes down, you might imagine that you missed a grand slam.

The auction is somewhat old-fashioned — South's jump to two spades is strong rather than weak. After the opponents intervene, it is difficult to develop the hand scientifically, so at the end South closes his eyes and jumps to what he thinks he can make.

South must win the opening club lead in hand with the ace, thus protecting the side entry to dummy's diamonds. At this point the natural and correct play is to draw trump. You cash the three top trumps, in the process finding out you must lose a spade trick to West, and now you must establish dummy's diamond suit for club discards.

By leading to dummy's diamond ace, returning to hand by ruffing a heart, and leading a second diamond toward dummy, you can establish the diamond suit against any 2-2 or 3-1 division. Assuming West does not trump the second diamond (if he does trump, the suit is automatically established), declarer wins dummy's diamond king and ruffs a low diamond in his hand. If West does not overruff, declarer gives up a spade to the jack and claims the rest of the tricks.

Note that you must drive out West's master trump so that you can run the diamonds at your leisure.
