75 CENTS

TAKING TIME FOR A TEST

Magic Valley kids learn the importance of keeping water clean

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

Plenty of researchers study water quality; not many members of the public look up the data they create.

But what if the public actively helped gather that information?

That's the premise behind World Water Monitoring Day. Officially scheduled for Sept. 18, groups can actually submit water samples taken from March to December to a related Web site to fill in a snapshot of the world's water quality.

On Wednesday afternoon, representatives of the company that runs Twin Falls' wastewater plant helped about 75 members of the Boys and Girls Clubs of

The kids, ranging from 9 years old to their teens, tested for four basic quality indicators: temperature, pH, the amount of oxygen dissolved in the water and turbidity — how cloudy the water is and how many particles float in it.

Employees of CH2M Hill OMI said they were more than happy to make time for the kids, and at the end of the afternoon encouraged them to study water science as a career.

"It's a handful," employee Jeff Lohr noted, looking around at the children filling the parks' pavilion. "But we're glad to help out."

Since the Snake River has recently flowed high and fast, CH2M Hill workers actually grabbed the samples, filling buckets with water to take to the park's main pavilion. There, club members used premade kits — the same ones distributed worldwide, Lohr said — to do their tests.

DeAntae Wilson, 10, was in charge of writing down the results for his table. He explained he was hoping for the water's acidity to measure between 6 and 8 on the pH scale. If it doesn't, he was asked?

"It's bad water, very bad water," he said.

A testing tablet was dissolved into the sample and another child shook the tube, producing a light blue guessed to be an 8.5. It was close enough to good — freeing DeAntae to flick water at his friends and warn them about the tablets.

Familiar face hired for CSI M-C center

Daughter of college president gets the job

Idaho Falls, which had an enrollment of 360 students in the 2007-08 school year.

When the College of Southern Idaho's Mini Cassia Center in Burley needed a new director, CSI attracted 59 applicants through a Web site posting and small newspaper ad — and hired the daughter of the college's president, Jerry Beck.

Kristin Beck

Kristin Beck, 26, will take over the center, which serves 1,500 to 2,000 students, on July 20. She comes to the $44,000-a-year job after working as a teacher and reading coach in the Twin Falls School District from December 2002 until 2008. For the past year she was an administrator and dean of students at White Pine Charter School near

The younger Beck's appointment was announced late Tuesday. On Wednesday, Jerry Beck said he played no role in the decision to hire his daughter and won't violate the school's nepotism policy because he will not directly supervise her.

"In all large organizations you have an HR system," he said. "We advertised for that particular position. She was the candidate, along with many other people."

Kristin Beck could not be reached for comment Wednesday.

Mikesell: Illegal bid was just a joke

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

JEROME — Twin Falls County Commissioner Tom Mikesell is no stand-up comedian, but his best effort to inject humor into government this week not only fell flat — it was nearly a crime.

Mikesell, chairman of the joint powers board that runs the Southern Idaho Regional Communications Center, earlier this month submitted a bid to buy a truck the agency is trying to sell.

When asked about the bid on Tuesday, Mikesell described it as "just a joke" and noted that it would be "illegal" for SIRCOMM to sell the surplus truck to its own governing board chairman.

"I could've left it (the bid envelope) empty had I thought the press was going to get there and make something about it," Mikesell said.

"It was probably stupid on my part. It would've been really funny if you

URA agrees to build downtown parking lot for St. Luke's

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

The Twin Falls Urban Renewal Agency unanimously agreed Monday to build a parking lot for St. Luke's Health System when it consolidates its offices, although it remains unclear just how much the agency will have to shell out for it.

St. Luke's hopes to consolidate two offices, one currently downtown, into the former Crum Electric Supply Co. building at 212 Third Ave. S. and bring together about 100 employees. The currently vacant building sits on one-quarter of the block, the rest of which is owned by the URA.

The URA agreed to a memorandum of understanding with St. Luke's and developer Joe Shelton, who owns the Crum building and will lease it to St. Luke's. The hospital wants 120 parking spaces. The quarter-block parking lot will provide 90, with Shelton providing 30 more.

Renovation, estimated at $500,000 to $600,000, will be done by St. Luke's in-house construction crew, said John Groesbeck, the hospital's chief financial officer and chief operating officer. Groesbeck declined to give a relocation target date, instead saying officials hope it's done as soon as possible.

Twin Falls Economic Development Director Melinda Anderson said there's no clear estimate yet on construction costs but noted all three parties have requirements. A memorandum of understanding (MOU) is not a legally binding document.

Shelton drew up a second MOU in which the URA would help pay for building facade upgrades, but it was not voted on. Groesbeck said if the URA doesn't participate in the improvements, the hospital's rent would go up and St. Luke's might seek alternatives for relocation.

Typically, the URA has paid 10 percent of the change in taxable value once buildings are improved.

"It brings a lot of quality jobs to the downtown sector,

MORNING BRIEFING

Pat's Picks

Three things to do today

Pat Marcantonio

It's a summer of theatre.

• Company of Fools presents "Welcome Home Jenny Sutter" at 7 p.m. at the Liberty Theatre, 110 N. Main St., Hailey. Tickets are $25 for adults, $18 for senior citizens and $10 for students. It's about a wounded and troubled Marine back from Iraq.

• Meanwhile the Oakley Valley Arts Council presents Alan Jay Lerner's "Paint Your Wagon," at 7:30 p.m. at Howells Opera House, 160 N. Blaine Ave., Oakley. This is a fun musical about California miners with very familiar songs. Reserved tickets are $8.

• And on another stage, the Twin Falls Municipal Band performs its outdoor concert, "Christmas in July," at 8 p.m. at the Twin Falls City Park. It's free admission and you get to hear "Jingle Bells" in the summer. If you haven't been to one of these, you'll like the combination of music, the park and a community of music lovers.

April, and also placed an ad in the Times-News on June 10 and June 14. The application deadline was June 17.

John Miller, CSI's instructional dean, said he oversaw the hiring process and led a committee that interviewed Beck and five other finalists.

"We followed lockstep the college's hiring policies," Miller said.

The committee also included the college's director of human resources and Cindy Bond, another instructional dean. Miller said that no one from the college president's office was involved.

Miller said that the college was looking for three things: a background in education, an understanding of the college's mission and management experience.

He said Kristin Beck fits the requirements with experience as a teacher, one year of experience in administration and a being born and raised in the Magic Valley.

"She presents a package that really fits a bill for the things that we were looking for," Miller said.

Though Beck worked at the charter school for just one year, Miller said her experience as a reading coach in Twin Falls schools was a "bit of a quasi-administrative supervisory position."

Additionally, Miller said it's important to look at more than years of experience.

"Everybody I know started out as a first-year administrator," Miller said. "When I approach the hiring process, I try to look at the best person we can find and not get caught up in the whole 'How long have you been an administrator?'"

Miller declined to release the names of the other finalists, saying that he couldn't do so without their written permission.

Jeff Fox, CSI's executive vice president and chief academic officer, echoed Miller's sentiment that the college president's office wasn't involved in the hiring process. He noted that Kristin Beck's administrative experience at a charter school included things like budgeting and working with a board and community — all of which are needed at CSI.

"We were simply impressed with her poise," he said.

She will report directly to Miller, who in turn reports to Fox, one of the college's three vice presidents who work below its president.

Beck received an associate's degree in liberal arts at CSI in 2001, and a bachelor's degree in elementary education from Idaho State University in 2002. In 2008, she received a master's degree in educational leadership from the University of Idaho.

LeRoy Craig, chairman of the CSI board of trustees, said he wasn't familiar with the college's nepotism policy but did not see any conflict in employing two Becks.

"I'm sure we have a policy," he said. "I wouldn't be familiar with it right now. I'm sure the individual is very well qualified."

Craig said he had heard that Mini-Cassia Center Director Annette Braegger was leaving. She retired in May after 17 years on the job.

"I think it was mentioned the individual who had been there a long time had retired; that's about all I know," Craig said. "We hire the president and the president hires everyone else, and we're very happy with what he's done so far."

Trustee Charles Lehrman said he wasn't aware that the center's new director is related to Jerry Beck.

"I did not know that was his daughter," he said. "I just didn't make that connection. I can't say that it surprises me."

He said he didn't have any problems with the process.

"I would not have objected to it," he said. "I don't see any conflict if the person is qualified."

Trustee Allan R. Frost agreed.

"I'm assuming and I believe it's true that there are procedures to make sure there's no undue influence or even necessarily contact with the relative," he said. "Presumably, this was done in that fashion."

As for the college's president, he's glad that a daughter is following in his footsteps and joining CSI.

"I'm proud of her and happy that she's joining the college," Beck said. "I'm excited for her as any father would be."

Trustees Donna Brizee and H. Thad Scholes, whose son Scott Scholes is the college's dean of student services, could not be reached for comment Wednesday.

July deadly for U.S.-led forces in Afghanistan

By Robert H. Reid
Associated Press writer

KABUL — July is shaping up as the deadliest month of the Afghan war for U.S.-led international forces, with the number killed already matching the highest full-month toll of the nearly eight-year conflict, according to figures compiled by The Associated Press.

As of Wednesday, at least

46 international troops, including 24 Americans, had been killed in Afghanistan this month, according to statements by the U.S. military and the NATO command.

That matches the tolls for the two previous deadliest months — June and August of 2008.

The rate of deaths in July — about three a day — is approaching some of the highest levels of the Iraq war.

The latest deaths occurred Tuesday. They include an American soldier who was killed by a roadside bomb in eastern Afghanistan and two Turks, including a colonel, who died in a traffic accident in the north part of the country.

In addition, six Ukrainian civilians and a 6-year-old Afghan were killed Tuesday.

hadn't been there."

The SIRCOMM board on Tuesday opened two sealed bids for the 2001 Ford F-150 pickup truck valued at around $8,000. One, for $2,250, was from Mikesell. The other was for $4,500 from the Jerome County Sheriff's Office, though it arrived after the deadline.

The truck, with around 90,000 miles on it, was assigned to John Moore, the former SIRCOMM technical coordinator who was promoted to center director last month. As director, he'll have use of one of two vehicles — one for communication techs; the other for training purposes.

The bidding process was not open to the public. Only emergency service agencies that share the four-county dispatch center were allowed to participate.

Mikesell voted on Tuesday against a proposal from Lincoln County Commissioner Charlie Ritter to reject both bids because they were too low. Ultimately, the board contacted Jerome County Sheriff Doug McFall and asked him to up his offer to $6,000, which he said he'd pay if his budget allows.

Though Mikesell promised to provide copies of the two written bids Tuesday, the Times-News hadn't received them by Wednesday evening. He said he's convinced the board would've rejected his bid if it had been the only one because it's against state law for a public official in most cases to use his position for pecuniary benefit.

Mikesell also offered alternative reasons for tendering a bid, including a desire to help boost the confidence of Moore, the new director. He said that he put in his bid at 9 a.m. on July 1 — the moment that the bid period closed — after seeing that no authorized agency had shown interest.

"I didn't think about how it looked. I was trying to do a favor for a guy who was struggling to get into his new position. He called me up and said, 'hey we got a bid, hey, we got a bid,'" Mikesell said.

While Mikesell's bid was the only one received by the deadline, board members decided to negotiate a deal with McFall because the point of selling the truck was to help SIRCOMM's member agencies, not SIRCOMM itself.

Gooding County Commissioner Tom Faulkner, another SIRCOMM board member, said he didn't have a problem with accepting the late bid because the process wasn't too stringent.

"I don't think we're held to any legal standard," he said. "This isn't an official bidding process."

So, if Mikesell can submit his own bids and the board simply called up McFall for more negotiations, why even bother with bids?

Mikesell said he wasn't sure about the law. In an unrelated matter, the SIRCOMM board on Tuesday authorized Moore to search for an attorney to represent the center.

"Do not eat them. They're poisonous," he announced.

The results of Wednesday's work will be added to an online database and the river will be sampled annually to create an easily accessible database over time, Lohr said. And the kids, organizers hope, walked away with at least a better idea of how important water is across the world.

The afternoon's event will be tied in with other activities for the club's "going green" week this week, said program director Rachel Dawson.

"And we like protecting the earth, don't we, at the Boys and Girls Club?" Dawson reminded her kids.

renovates a building that deserves a renovation," said Shelton.

The building, at the intersection of Third Avenue South and Hansen Street, is within the four-block area the URA and city of Twin Falls has focused on through an ambitious plan to redevelop downtown into a modernized mixed-use area with retail, housing and offices.

The board also voted 4-1 to pay nearly $9,000 to EHM Engineers of Twin Falls to design the parking lot.

There was no official bidding process. Anderson said she checked with city officials, who assured the process was legal, and sought groups she is familiar with. Anderson said she has spoken with landscapers who can help out, too.

Quigley developer pulls controversial part of Hailey development plan

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

HAILEY — In a surprise move, the developers of the proposed Quigley Canyon project on Tuesday withdrew the most controversial portion of their annexation request.

"We've tried to remove as many obstacles as possible," said developer representative Dave Hennessy. The biggest obstacle, as identified during public comment by both the public and the Hailey City Council, was development in two areas deep in Quigley Canyon — above Quigley Pond and in Deadman's Gulch.

Among the concerns: Both sites are outside the Area of City Impact set in a 1994 agreement between Hailey and Blaine County, and they are environmentally sensitive wildlife areas. Hennessy indicated the developer intends to propose these areas for development under county regulations instead. "We'll have to deal with those concerns when we submit to the county," Hennessy said. "We've had a lot of discussion about what the density would be in the county."

The change drew support from some who had expressed concern about the areas above the pond and in Deadman's Gulch.

"The developer really knew that's where the community wanted them to go," said Vanessa Crossgrove Fry, executive director of Citizens for Smarth Growth. "They've really made some great measures. We're much more pleased with the application in its current state."

Hailey City Council members appeared taken off-guard by the developer's move, indicating they had been prepared to consider the number of lots in the areas.

Water rights, currently under adjudication, were taken up by the council on Tuesday. The developer has agreed to irrigate only to the extent that surface water rights are awarded to the property, meaning that later phases may not be irrigated. The public golf course, as a community asset, would be the last area to go dry in the event of a drought, though because it will be irrigated with reused water, shortages are less likely to affect it.

"I have been concerned all along to protect habitat and protect game, and to put two roads into a narrow canyon hopelessly overrides that," said Councilwoman Carol Brown. The council may require that secondary access to the site be blocked off to all motorized traffic except emergency vehicles, preserving the existing footpath that many locals use to exercise or walk dogs.

The next hearing on the annexation proposal is scheduled for July 21.

Jerome prosecutor may be out for 2-3 months

By John Plestina
Times-News writer

JEROME — A deputy prosecuting attorney told the Jerome County Commission Wednesday that the staff of three attorneys can handle the workload in the absence of Prosecuting Attorney John Horgan, who suffered an apparent stroke eight days ago.

Horgan's condition is listed as fair, Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center spokeswoman Jennifer Krajnik said Wednesday. Horgan was in critical condition when he was flown to Boise on July 8.

On Saturday his condition was reported as serious.

Commissioners discussed the situation with Deputy Prosecutor Mike Seib, a former county prosecuting attorney.

"We asked him if the Prosecuting Attorney's Office needs another deputy prosecutor," said County Commission Chairman Charlie Howell.

He said Seib told the commission that the office's three lawyers are trying to absorb the full caseload while Horgan recovers.

"The stance of the board is John's an elected official. He gets his pay whether he's there or not. Having said that part, we are expecting him to be gone two to three months," Howell said, adding that his assessment isn't official.

"We're trying to give John some time for Mike (Seib) or somebody to have a conversation with him and see what he wants to do," he said.

Lincoln Co. sends rezone back to P&Z

By John Plestina
Times-News writer

SHOSHONE — The Lincoln County Commission sent a rezone request back to the Planning and Zoning Commission Monday after P&Z recommended against its approval.

Lawrence Sweet sought rezoning of 80- and 160-acre rural parcels near Shoshone to a residential designation that would permit two-acre building lots.

P&Z recommended in May that the county commission reject the request. Monday, commissioners couldn't agree on a course of action except to send the proposal back to P&Z to consider rezoning a portion of the property.

Sweet said P&Z denied the rezoning based on a technicality he considers "highly questionable," and asked the county commission for a detailed copy of the P&Z meeting transcript.

Sweet said he is seeking rezoning so he could develop a two-acre residential lot for his grandson, explaining that he is taking care of his bequest to his grandson now rather than in a last will and testament.

While rezoning could open the door to a large housing development in the future, Sweet said he has "no plans for further development."

A comprehensive plan shows that area as a possible location for future residential development if Shoshone expands in the coming years.

A few people spoke for and against the request Monday at a public hearing.

Bobbie Guthrie is a neighbor of Sweet. She expressed concern about too many wells extracting water if lots smaller than five acres are permitted. "That's a lot of water pulled from the ground which means a lot to us all," she said.

County Commission Chairman Jerry Nance explained that only a rezone request was before the commission Monday. He said rezoning is not a subdivision approval.

"Anything after that, he has to go through the subdivision process," Nance said.

"I have no intention of coming back in my lifetime with a request to put a development there," Sweet said.

However, Sweet added, "Economic times being what they are, if I should lose my income for any reason, I might be coming back to you."

Ritter then questioned why Sweet doesn't give his grandson a single five-acre parcel, as allowed by current zoning, rather than rezone the entire parcel.

Sweet said change is coming whether they like it or not.

Castleford mulls need for water operator

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

CASTLEFORD — The city of Castleford will soon need a new water operator.

Come Sept. 1 the city's arrangement with Buhl to share the cost for a certified water distributor and water treatment technician will expire. The city is required to have a certified operator per Idaho Department of Environmental Quality regulations.

Jeff Huntington, a class three water distributor and water treatment technician, is Buhl's operator and works in Castleford as well. Castleford paid Buhl $22,000 for the 2009 fiscal year and hoped to keep the arrangement.

Huntington had been instrumental in Castleford's new arsenic treatment facility going online earlier this year.

However, Huntington is going to be too busy to serve both cities once Buhl gets its own arsenic treatment facility up and running, expected by year's end.

Wednesday, Castleford received official word that Buhl would not renew its contract with the city when it expires at the end of August.

Castleford Mayor Richard Schlund said he wasn't surprised. "They're overloaded with their own problems and something had to give," he said. "They're working Jeff hard and something had to give. Unfortunately, it was Castleford ... but we understand," Schlund said.

Both cities were mandated by the federal government to build the facilities to lower arsenic levels in their potable water to less than 10 parts per billion, per Environmental Protection Agency rules.

"There are only so many hours in the day and I can't kill him working," said Buhl Mayor Charles Sheridan. "We had hoped to keep the arrangement but he's just so busy here and he's going to be busier real soon."

Buhl isn't canceling the current contract, Sheridan said, but the city isn't renewing it once it expires.

During Castleford's July 8 council meeting the matter was discussed, raising several concerns with city officials.

At the time, Castleford was waiting to hear back from Buhl about renewing the contract.

Without knowing what a new operator will cost, Castleford's city council cannot yet create next year's budget, and utility rates may need to increase to cover an increased operational cost for the arsenic treatment.

Schlund said he doesn't know how much the city can afford to pay a new operator without raising the current user fees.

Currently, Castleford residents pay a minimum of $75 a month for city services, including water, sewer and sanitation.

"I hate to speculate and don't want to get the community upset but raising the rates is always an option," Schlund said.

Council President Twila Crawford said that while Castleford needs to find an operator quickly, it isn't alone.

"We're not the only little town in the same position," Crawford said.

City of Twin Falls searches for new finance director

Times-News

The city of Twin Falls has reignited its search to replace City Finance Director Gary Evans, who is retiring in August, officials said last week.

The city interviewed several candidates but found one problem was the position's salary wasn't competitive enough. That's one reason they are planning to have a comprehensive salary survey.

"We are starting all over on our search for a finance director," said Assistant City Manager Travis Rothweiler.

Interested parties should contact City Hall.

Leaders tout Northwest's energy potential

BOISE (AP) — Government and energy experts say the Pacific Northwest is a region rich in energy resources with the potential to provide the United States and Canada with a significant portion of its energy needs.

The challenge, they say, is finding the right balance between fossil fuels and nuclear power, and the greener technologies like biofuels, wind power and geothermal.

"We are tremendously blessed with energy resources of all kinds here in the Pacific Northwest region. The question is how will we decide to optimize those," Roger Woodworth, vice president of Avista Corp., said during this week's Pacific Northwest Economic Region's annual conference.

Energy issues are the focus of this year's four-day summit, attended by more than 500 government officials, energy experts and researchers from Idaho, Montana, Washington, Oregon, Alaska and four Canadian provinces. For decades, the region has been a hub for energy sources like oil, natural gas, coal, uranium and hydropower.

Experts also say the region is rich in potential for alternative sources, like geothermal, wind, solar and biofuels.

John Grossenbacher, director of the Idaho National Laboratory, warned against romanticizing renewables and overlooking some of their shortcomings, like the natural variables that limit consistent wind power generation.

Grossenbacher, who dubbed the region "The Middle East of North America," contends the region's wide array of energy resources and potential could be used to power much of North America. But he said that potential has never been fully explored in the past simply because they weren't needed.

"The history of our energy use is that there's been really cheap fossil fuels available elsewhere, and we decided to utilize that," Grossenbacher said.

"We're now rethinking that. The other thing that's changed is the sensitivity to environmental impact. Twenty years ago, that wasn't a priority."

Canadian officials also encouraged lawmakers from the U.S. to work more closely with Canada on global warming issues.

Gary Lunn, a Cabinet minister for Canadian Prime Minister Stephen

Harper, suggested leaders develop one regional system of regulating greenhouse gases. But he said whatever system is developed must allow the two countries to use the bounty of fossil fuels.

"We have to be upfront about how dependent we are on fossil fuels and recognize we will continue to be dependent for years," Lunn said.

Actor Robert Redford, left, and fiancée Sibylle Szaggars are seen during the Sundance Institute celebration fundraiser in New York in October 2008. The German daily 'Hamburger Abendblatt' reported Wednesday that the couple were married in Hamburg, Germany, on Saturday.

Robert Redford marries German girlfriend

HAMBURG (AP) — Robert Redford married his partner, a 51-year-old German artist, over the weekend, a German church said Wednesday.

Renate Massfeller of the St. Catherine Church in Hamburg said that Pastor Frank Engelbrecht presided over the wedding of the 72-year-old U.S. actor and artist Sibylle Szaggars at the luxury Louis C. Jacob Hotel.

The Hamburger Abendblatt newspaper said 30 friends and family members attended the service.

Szaggars, born in Hamburg, is an abstract artist whose work has been exhibited in Britain, Germany, the United States and elsewhere. She moved to Sundance, Utah — where Redford's Sundance Institute is based — in the 1990s, according to her Web site.

A message seeking comment from Redford's publicist in New York was not immediately returned.

Redford has starred in dozens of films, including "The Sting" and "The Natural." He won the Academy Award for best director for the 1980 film "Ordinary People."

In 1981 he founded the Sundance Institute to create what its Web site called "an environment designed to foster independence, discovery and new voices in American film."

Since then, it has grown to encompass the Sundance Film Festival, one of the world's premier film festivals that focuses on independent film but also has become known for its parties and celebrities.

Insurance program may charge for families of disabled kids

By Rebecca Boone
Associated Press writer

BOISE — A state plan to charge premiums for disabled children who get government-covered health care under a special program has some families worried they'll have to sacrifice medical services to stay financially afloat.

"I figured something like this was coming," said Meridian resident Angela

Lindig, whose 13-year-old daughter is severely disabled and gets state-covered care under the Katie Beckett program. "I just didn't ever anticipate it would be this huge."

The proposed changes come under direction from the Legislature, which told the Department of Health and Welfare to establish cost-sharing for the Katie Beckett program.

"This will bring it in line with other Medicaid programs that do have premiums and copays. We feel it's good public policy that will make the program more equitable and, at the same time, ensure the state has the resources to ensure the most vulnerable have the care they need," said Health and Welfare spokeswoman Emily Simnit.

But Lindig contends the change will force families to choose between medical care and other bills.

Lindig, who is also the chairwoman of the state's Independent Living Council, has two daughters with disabilities as well as a healthy son.

Thirteen-year-old Amber — who has Rett syndrome, a condition that causes several cognitive and physical disabilities — is the only child who qualifies for the Katie Beckett waiver. Amber uses a wheelchair, has limited speech and requires care for nearly every aspect of daily life — from eating to using the toilet to getting dressed, said Lindig.

Her 10-year-old daughter, Elise, also has disabilities that require expensive care. She was adopted at the age of 3 1/2 from Romania, said Lindig, and is bipolar, has an attachment disorder and spina bifida. She requires psychiatric care and medications and used to get therapy from a behavioral specialist, Lindig said, but the family had to cut that therapy when they could no longer cover the expense.

To try to make up the gap, Lindig homeschools Elise, doing makeshift therapy at home and taking her to piano and horseback riding lessons to give her daughter confidence.

"Those are areas that build her self-worth and self-esteem and will hopefully help her develop into somebody who can care about herself and others. So now with these other premiums, we may have to quit those," Lindig said.

About 2,100 kids are on the Katie Beckett program, with the average cost coming in at $1,400 per month for each child, Simnit said. In all, the program costs about $36 million a year, with the government picking up the bulk of the tab and the state paying between roughly $7 and $11 million.

The money isn't spent in vain, Lindig said.

"Amber is a kid who was never supposed to be able to talk and she's got full-blown communication and verbal skills at this point. That didn't come by magic. That came through really intensive therapy," Lindig said. "When you look at a child with such big issues overcoming them and you see them making progress — the thought of that being taken away makes me ill."

The change would have families making more than 150 percent of the federal poverty level paying a premium of $15 per child on the waiver. Families earning between 185 percent and 300 percent of the federal poverty level will pay between about $85 and $137 a month per family, and those making more than 300 percent of the federal poverty level will pay 4.5 percent of their gross income.

Family wants damages after autistic child arrested

SANDPOINT (AP) — The family of an 8-year-old autistic girl who was arrested at school wants the school district and county to pay more than $500,000 in damages.

Charles and Spring Towry's third-grade daughter, Evelyn, has Asperger's syndrome, an autism spectrum disorder. She was arrested in January on suspicion of battery at Kootenai Elementary School after staffers said she spit on and inappropriately touched two instructors.

The child was handcuffed and taken to the county's juvenile lockup, where she was released to her parents. The county prosecutor later dropped the charge against the girl.

The family filed a negligence claim against Lake Pend Oreille School District and Bonner County. They have 180 days to settle the claim, or reject it and risk a lawsuit.

School Superintendent Dick Cvitanich did not respond to a request for comment. The county has a policy barring comment on pending tort claims.

When the episode occurred, Cvitanich said they had a safety plan that called for law enforcement to be summoned if the girl became aggressive with school staff.

But the parents say they were never told of such a plan and would have never agreed to that kind of response. They allege in their claim that the district acted to send a message and in doing so violated the Americans with Disabilities Act and state education guidelines.

"They told police they wanted to have charges pressed because they felt they were not getting their point across to Evelyn and her parents," according to the claim.

We shouldn't swap nuclear waste for mercury

What does a really bad idea look like? It looks like the U.S. Department of Energy's proposal to store 17,000 tons of mercury at the Idaho National Laboratory.

That would be the same INL located a few hundred feet above the Magic Valley's water supply.

INL is one of seven sites in the running for long-term disposal of elemental mercury, which is used in manufacturing and mining. The others are the Grand Junction Disposal Site in Colorado; the Hanford nuclear reservation in Washington state; Hawthorne Army Depot in Nevada; the Kansas City Plant in Missouri; the Savannah River site in South Carolina; and Waste Control Specialists in Andrews, Texas. DOE already stores 1,200 tons of mercury at its Oak Ridge Reservation in Tennessee.

The irony of this proposal isn't lost on anyone who depends in the Eastern Snake River Plain Aquifer: Even as DOE digs up tons of radioactive waste to protect the aquifer, it might threaten it with mercury contamination.

And threaten is the appropriate verb. In humans, mercury:

- Damages the central nervous system, endocrine system, kidneys and other organs.
- Adversely affects the mouth, gums and teeth.
- Can result in brain damage and death from long-term exposure.

Mercury is especially toxic to fetuses and babies. Pregnant women exposed to quicksilver have sometimes given birth to children with serious birth defects.

Reaction by folks who live near the six candidate storage sites outside of Idaho has been ferocious.

"To even propose that it could be used for the storage of toxic metals is mind-boggling," Kansas City Councilman John Sharp told the Kansas City Star. "It would certainly cause irreparable harm or kill our economic development efforts for that area."

"You're kidding," Kathy Hall, a former Mesa County, Colo., commissioner told the Grand Junction Sentinel.

Whether the DOE will get an earful in Idaho depends on you. The one and only public scoping meeting in the state is scheduled for Idaho Falls' Shiloh Inn on Aug. 11, beginning at 6:30 p.m.

No hearings are planned for the Magic Valley. Given the significance of this issue to south-central Idaho, that's inexcusable.

But you can have your say on the Mercury Storage Environmental Impact statement Web site, <http://www.mercurystorage.com>.

Please do.

Sen. Ensign's excellent adventure

The reason the Republicans lost so many Senate seats last November is now becoming clear. No one had any time to think about the campaign. They were too busy worrying about Sen. John Ensign's sex life.

Last month, Ensign, a Nevada Republican, called a news conference to confess that he had had an affair with a former staff member. That was when we learned, to general surprise, that Ensign had been widely regarded as a possible future presidential candidate. Also, that he is currently the only veterinarian in the U.S. Senate.

Nobody paid a great deal of attention. But lately, the Ensign saga has become more and more fascinating. Every social conservative in Washington seems to have been involved.

Most of the juicy details have been supplied by Doug Hampton, Ensign's former chief of staff, who says his wife, Cindy, a bookkeeper for Ensign's political action committees, was seduced by the senator in the Ensign home over the Christmas holidays in 2007. Hampton, 47, gave a long TV interview in Las Vegas this week — a disjointed account of betrayal in which he concluded at one point: "All of those tentacles were birthed because John needed things to go down like this."

It's actually a good thing adultery knocked Ensign out of the presidential contest because it appears he would not be the kind of leader who surrounds himself with the best and the brightest.

The senator says the affair went on until August 2008. Doug Hampton's version is that it lasted only a few months, followed by a long period of complicated drama in which the remorseful Cindy was pursued by the Love Veterinarian.

Ensign was, at the time, chairman of the National Republican Senatorial Committee, which was supposed to be working to elect candidates in 2008. In Washington, he lived with some other conservative Christian lawmakers in a building known as the "Prayer House." Both members of the NRSC and residents of the Prayer House were brought into the drama. Hampton, in his version of events, seems to remember Ensign's friends as being particularly concerned with making sure that the cuckolded aide got generous compensation for his suffering.

One of Ensign's room-mates, Sen. Tom Coburn of Oklahoma, was described by Hampton as being particularly vocal about the importance of cash contributions to "make these folks whole." Coburn denies this, although he won't say exactly what advice he gave to his erring colleague. Coburn told Roll Call that he talked to Ensign as a "physician and as an ordained deacon" and that he will therefore have the right to keep mum even if he's dragged into court or a Senate committee hearing.

This makes me sort of hope that some kind of investigation takes place just so Coburn, who's an obstetrician, can explain how exactly doctor-patient confidentiality figures into this.

Hampton says Ensign's friends convinced the senator to write Cindy a good-bye letter, then bundled him off to the FedEx office to make sure it got mailed. Then, he claimed, Ensign called Cindy and said: "The letter's coming. 'Doug's ratted me out. Don't pay attention to the letter!'"

Let's hope this part of the story isn't true. I'd hate to think that a person who says things like "Doug's ratted me out" is in the U.S. Senate. Or even giving rabies shots to beagles in Las Vegas.

We hardly need to point out that Ensign was one of the people who demanded that President Bill Clinton resign over the Lewinsky affair, that he votes against financing for education and contraception services to combat teenage pregnancy and that he supports a constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage.

In the world of politics, hypocrisy is a hard market to corner, but lately the Republicans have been making a Microsoft-like effort to do it.

Both of the Hamptons lost their jobs, and Doug was shuffled off to a Las Vegas-based airline, run by a friend of Ensign's, where he is now vice president of government affairs. Unappeased, he hired a lawyer to demand that Ensign make financial amends for "evil and completely unjustifiable acts by one of our country's top leaders."

While Ensign refused to respond to what small and negative minds might regard as blackmail, the senator's parents gave the Hamptons $96,000. Ensign's father is a retired casino mogul, and the senator's lawyer said the money was given "out of concern for the well-being of longtime family friends during a difficult time. The gifts are consistent with a pattern of generosity by the Ensign family to the Hamptons and others."

Truly, this puts a whole new spin on the term "family values."

Nuclear plant would do nothing but benefit Elmore Co.

Your June 15 editorial regarding nuclear power had many of the same misunderstandings that are commonly seen, along with a few new ones.

However, I do agree with your point that "The Idaho Energy Complex would fundamentally change the character of Elmore County." It would in at least one way, and for the better.

Elmore County has pockets of severe poverty. According to Census data, around 17 percent of people in the Hammett ZIP Code live below the poverty line, while it's 21 percent in Glens Ferry (<http://tinyurl.com/nra2jg>). While your editorial failed to mention it, our plant will create 500 jobs with an average salary of $80,000 and another 1,500 spin-off jobs with above average wages. I encourage your editorial board to become familiar with the difficult economic conditions in these communities, and what we offer in that regard.

Of course, our primary goal in building a power plant is to earn money by providing a needed product; this is true of any business, be it a farm, factory or newspaper. At the same time, our plant will create thousands of family-wage jobs in an area that is suffering a great deal. Any responsible corporate citizen should provide well-paying jobs, infrastructure and industrial/commercial tax revenues for the privilege of setting up shop in community, and we'll do that.

READER COMMENT

Every form of energy has tradeoffs and on a productivity/injury comparison, nuclear is the safest form of energy by far. The Banqiao Dam disaster of 1975 killed at least 171,000. Wind power accidents have killed around 60 people since 1970, about as many as died at the Chernobyl accident (an inherently unsafe design that has never been allowed in the U.S.).

Yet we safely use dams, wind and other forms of energy. Nuclear technology is used thousands of times a day; one of our critics is a podiatrist who has irradiated more people than any U.S. nuclear plant. No one has been killed or injured from exposure to radiation in the 52-year history of the U.S. commercial nuclear industry. That's a better safety record than the financial sector or, if I dare say, journalism!

You mention Three Mile Island, where residents were exposed to less radiation than a typical X-ray, but have you asked the residents what they think about nuclear power? Someone already has. A 2007 survey of 1,100 adults living within 10 miles of U.S. nuclear plants found 82 percent favor nuclear energy and 71 percent are willing to see a new reactor built near them (<http://tinyurl.com/n4te47>). That's consistent with a 2008 national survey, which found 74 percent of Americans favor nuclear energy (<http://tinyurl.com/myww7j>).

According to the U.S. Energy Information Agency, it costs 1.8 cents to produce a kilowatt-hour of electricity with nuclear, and that power is produced more than 90 percent of the time (<http://tinyurl.com/2pgc8k>). That kind of reliability and low cost is a significant benefit to agriculture, which is one reason why the American Farm Bureau strongly supports nuclear (<http://tinyurl.com/kokgnq>).

The Indian Point nuclear plant is just 24 miles from New York City, yet you state a nuclear plant doesn't have a role in the middle of population center like Elmore County, nor in the state's airshed, nor on the banks of the Snake River. Why is that?

Nuclear plants typically have farms or wildlife habitat abutting them (in contrast to wind farms, which threaten bird populations). They take up very little room, produce no noise, smoke or odors, and have an impeccable safety record.

Simply put, nuclear power is the only way to reliably generate large amounts of affordable carbon-free energy.

OTHER VIEWS

Here's what newspapers are saying about ...

... who cares what Idahoans think?

The New York Times

One of the most ambitious environmental bills in years, the Northern Rockies Ecosystem Protection Act, is awaiting action in Congress. It could be waiting a while. A version was first introduced in 1991, and while the bill has become a perennial focus of great hopes and fierce objections, it has never come up for a vote.

The bill, sponsored in the House by Reps. Carolyn Maloney of New York and Raul Grijalva of Arizona, would designate more than 20 million acres of federal public land — mostly in Idaho and Montana ... — as wilderness, the law's highest protection. That means no roads, no logging, no ski resorts, no off-road vehicles. It would continue to allow certain traditional, nonmotorized uses, like hunting, fishing and rafting.

The great strength of the bill lies in the breadth of its vision. Recognizing that animals and plants thrive best within intact ecosystems, not governmental borders, it would reach across state lines to secure biological corridors where animals can roam freely.

Yet while the bill has more than 90 co-sponsors, none are from the districts affected. That is not a good sign. Congress traditionally shows great deference to local delegations in deciding whether to set aside land as permanent wilderness. And the bill's conspicuous lack of local lawmakers' support — and in many cases resistance — is evidence of the passions it arouses from hunters, fishermen, skiers, snowmobilers. For that reason, many wilderness advocates say, land-preservation deals ... require finely wrought compromises and piecemeal progress.

But that is no reason for Maloney or Grijalva ... to give up on this bill or on the noble idea of preserving large, connected, intact ecosystems. The proposed legislation offers a vision of where a truly enlightened environmental policy could lead, balancing the needs of both nature and local economies.

Big ideas often stumble on the ground, where this particular ski trail or that fishing lake is loved and ferociously defended. But horse trading won't save whole ecosystems. The bill's supporters are holding out for a truly wild wilderness bill in the hope that someday politics will catch up with their farsighted idealism.

... what Idaho got right

Idaho Press-Tribune, Nampa

The bad news for state government seems to be coming from capital cities coast-to-coast

Stung by budget woes, elected officials are struggling with major financial crisis ...

The Associated Press reported that some states say plummeting tax collections drove them to hold on to refund money so they can make ends meet.

California, which faces a deficit that could top $24.3 billion, may have to issue about $3 billion worth of promissory notes this month to state contractors, college students and taxpayers owed refunds unless there is a budget-balancing agreement.

It wasn't pretty, but Idaho Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter and lawmakers hammered out a lean budget that for the first time went so far as to reduce the amount of money distributed to public schools. And even state schools chief Tom Luna agreed that cuts were necessary ...

(Earlier this month) Otter was able to say the state entered a new budget year "with its financial house in order" ...

Idaho's state government has been hit by cuts, but day-to-day operations continue with no threat of a collapse some states could face.

The governor's office added that 32 of the 46 states with fiscal years that ended June 30 began that day without budgets for the new fiscal year that started July 1. Despite a long legislative session, Idaho's financial blueprint had been in place for weeks.

But it's not just the state's current leadership. You can look back 119 years to the folks behind Idaho's statehood, which came on July 3, 1890. The Idaho Constitution doesn't allow lawmakers to go in the red with the state budget from year to year. The inability to run up a deficit forces lawmakers to be especially careful with spending and set aside a reserve for a rainy day.

... we can thank Idaho officials for their prudence in setting a realistic budget in tough times as well as those who had extraordinary ...

.. connecting rural Idaho

Post Register, Idaho Falls

Cheers to those attempting to get broadband connectivity into every Idaho high school.

This includes Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter, who recommended that $3 million in stimulus funds be used to apply for federal education technology grants; legislators who allocated the money; and the Department of Education and Administration officials who facilitated the grant proposals.

Now comes word that the feds will pick up two-thirds of the costs and the state will begin linking its rural school districts not only to urban districts but also to state universities.

Say a kid in Arco wants to take a class not offered in his district. The Idaho Education Network would allow him to link up with students in Boise, for example. It's a system that has worked well in Utah and Wyoming.

This is a big deal because the divide between urban and rural has been exacerbated by the recession. Urban districts have an easier time backfilling school budgets through the property tax.

That's led some to believe the state is close to violating its constitutional mandate of providing a uniform system of public schools. Technology can help bridge that gap.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Stop cap-and-trade and abolish the EPA

The regulator compliance unelected bureaucrats are killing our country. The Competitive Enterprise Institute report states that regulatory compliance costs hit $1.172 trillion in 2008. Also, it cost $49.1 billion to administer and police compliance. The total of $1.221 trillion equals the 2008 individual income taxes of $1.2 trillion. Government regulations add 22 percent to the cost of every American-made product and are destroying U.S. companies.

The Obama/Gore carbon cap-and-trade scheme will finish the destruction of U.S. industries and greatly drive up utility costs. The non-scientific, political Environmental Protection Agency has ruled that carbon dioxide is a pollutant. This is ludicrous as CO2 is necessary for photosynthesis in green plants to produce the food we eat and the oxygen we breathe. More than 31,000 U.S. scientists including more than 9,000 Ph.D.s have signed a petition (petitionproject.org) against man-caused climate change and the benefits of extra CO2.

The EPA, created by executive order, and the Natural Resources Defense Council coordinated the false scare of alar poisoning of apples in 1988 as part of the radical environmentalist plan to gain totalitarian power. Professor David Schoenbrod of the New York Law School confesses how this conspiratorial game plan is played in the March 1999 PERC Reports, titled "Legislation Ideals." He states, "We wanted new kinds of statutes that would force agencies to bend society to our timetable."

The EPA is becoming the Green Gestapo as it is now implementing the Biodiversity and Global Climate treaties, even though the U.S. Senate never ratified either one. Dr. Schoenbrod realizes that environmental idealism is a cover for more ulterior motives. "The point of this system is power not environmental quality," he states.

We must stop the cap-and-trade bill and abolish the political, non-scientific EPA.

Don't listen to the deception of denials

Al Gore said "The debate is over." But! Some would keep the global-warming debate going with half-truths and outright lies. The most recent lie is that of economist, not scientist, Alan Carlin. This is not the same Carlin who wrote about words you can't say on TV. Carlin said the past 10 years, the world has been cooling, well yes and no, my stockbroker uses similar trickery.

In 1998, Earth had an extraordinary heat spike and subsequent years have been cooler, hence the claim of global cooling. Factor in the past 50 years and seven of the top 10 warmest years recorded have been in the time where Earth is "cooling"; you get the idea of trickery afoot. Carlin is moaning his junk science was hushed up by his bosses in the EPA. George Will in The Washington Post got into the fray. Will wrote "according to the University of Illinois' Arctic Climate Research Center, global sea ice levels now equal those of 1979." What they really said: Global sea ice was "1.34 million sq. km. less in February 2009 than in February 1979."

Fred Singer is a scientist but a charlatan nevertheless. Singer authorized the "Leipzig Declaration" where scientists signed that global warming was a hoax. Singer also falsely claimed that some glaciers were growing. The World Glacier Monitoring Service in Zurich shot down his claim, glaciers are retreating around the world. Singer gets his climate change funding from major oil companies.

I could write volumes about the deception of the denialist. Heartland.org is a propaganda machine aimed at putting lies out so that talk show hosts treat them as gospel and spread them. This Org went so low as to claim scientist Gerard Bond as one of its denialists; too bad Bond has been dead for more than four years and can't contradict them as others have. The debate is over; propaganda and lies continue.

FTC, 19 states act to stop sham loan consultants

By Jacob Adelman
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — Prosecutors nationwide filed 189 legal actions Wednesday against loan modification consultants accused of bilking homeowners who are desperate to make their mortgage payments more affordable.

The lawsuits and cease-and-desist orders announced by Federal Trade Commission Chairman Jon Leibowitz and California Attorney General Edmund G. Brown were part of a nationwide sweep of alleged sham consultants by the federal agency and officials in 19 states.

Leibowitz used the announcement to put scam artists on notice and urged homeowners to protect themselves from being exploited.

He said fraudulent loan modification consultants are "full of hollow promises designed to fatten the pockets of criminals and con men."

The lawsuits filed by the FTC included allegations that Aliso Viejo-based Lucas Law Center persuaded distressed borrowers to stop paying their mortgages in order to pay the firm's fees of up to $3,995.

The agency also filed suits against Orange-based U.S. Foreclosure Relief Corp., Santa Ana-based Loss Mitigation Services Inc., and Apply2Save Inc., of Coeur d'Alene.

The lawsuits Brown's office filed in Orange and Los Angeles counties include allegations against five companies and their subsidiaries and staff members.

"We are going to do everything we can to stop it, realizing that there are more rats to come out of their holes than we can stomp on," Brown said. "But we will keep doing the best we can because it is horrible to take advantage of somebody who is vulnerable with their family exposed to foreclosure."

Dean Schafer, CEO of Loss Mitigation Services, said he sympathized with the FTC's goal of weeding out bad players in his industry and was surprised his company had been singled out. He said he was still reviewing the lawsuit and had no comment on its specific allegations.

The lawsuits seek millions of dollars in civil penalties, restitution for victims and a permanent injunction to keep the companies and the defendants from offering mortgage-relief services.

One defendant, Irvine-based U.S. Homeowners Assistance, is accused of collecting up to $3,500 each from dozens of borrowers in danger of losing their homes.

Court documents allege one victim had her signature forged and financial information falsified on documents filed with her lender.

Also named in the lawsuits are Home Relief Services LLC, with offices in Irvine, Newport Beach and Anaheim; RMR Group Loss Mitigation, which has offices in Newport Beach, Orange, Huntington Beach, Corona and Fresno; Los Angeles-based United First Inc.; and U.S. Foreclosure Relief, which was also targeted by an FTC complaint.

Authorities said they also arrested a Newport Beach man Tuesday who was accused of using the names of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and other government agencies as part of his business.

Leibowitz said the FTC was working on rules that would prohibit a mortgage modification service from accepting upfront payments. He said he hoped to have the regulations in place by the end of this year.

Fed: Unemployment will top 10 percent this year

Policymakers estimate 'five or six years' for economy to return to full health

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve expects the economy this year will sink at a slower pace than it previously thought, but that unemployment will top 10 percent, according to a forecast released Wednesday.

The Fed now predicts the economy will shrink between 1 and 1.5 percent this year, an improvement from its old forecast issued in May. At that time, the Fed projected the economy would contract between 1.3 and 2 percent. The upgrade comes from the expectation that the economy's downhill slide in the first half of 2009 wasn't as bad as previously thought. The Fed said the economy should start growing again in the second half of this year, although the pace is likely to be plodding. Most Fed policymakers said it could take "five or six years" for the economy and the labor market to get back on a path of full health in the long term. Most officials also saw "the economy as still quite weak and vulnerable to further adverse shocks." Against that backdrop, the Fed's forecast for unemployment this year worsened. The central bank predicted the jobless rate could rise as high as 10.1 percent, compared with the previous forecast of 9.6 percent. The nation's unemployment rate climbed to 9.5 percent in June, a 26-year high. The predictions are based on what the Fed calls its "central tendency," which exclude the three highest and three lowest forecasts made by Fed officials. The central bank also gives a range of all the forecasts. That range showed that some officials expect the jobless rate could rise as high as 10.5 percent this year, and 10.6 percent in 2010. The post-World War II high was 10.8 percent at the end of 1982, when the country had suffered through a severe recession. The average jobless rate was 5.8 percent last year. For 2010, the Fed predicted the economy would grow between 2.1 and 3.3 percent. That's a slight upgrade from its old forecast of growth between 2 and 3 percent. The Fed's estimate is based on comparing projected activity in the fourth quarter of one year to the same period a year earlier. The economy dipped 0.8 percent in 2008 by that measure. SMALL COURSE, BIG FUN

NazzKart opens mini-golf addition to business

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

While her son and his friend played pool at NazzKart in Twin Falls, customer Jodi Olsen occasionally looked back into the room behind them. Amid sporadic go-kart races on the track the noise of vacuuming and people chatting floats by the billiard table. The buzz was coming from the business putting the final touches on its new nine-hole mini-golf course, which opened July 11. "I think it would be a lot of fun. I'd mini-golf," said Olsen. Magic Valley has seen mini-golf courses come and go but it's been years since one has been in business. Olsen's trip to NazzKart, at 302 3rd St. South, was a first but with the additional activity available there she said coming back was in her future. See GOLF, Business 2

Mason Newhouse, 9, takes a break from helping his mom clean up the mini golf course at NazzKart to play a hole. The youngster, whose parents are majority owners in the Twin Falls business, said the addition is exciting.

Stand up and be counted

Stand up and be counted — literally. The Idaho Department of Labor and the U.S. Census Bureau signed an agreement this week to make sure every Idaho resident is counted in the 2010 census. That's because people like you and me are worth a little federal money to the Gem State, said Zerelda Quintana, the Census Bureau's regional partnership specialist. "Every year more than $300 billion in federal funds are awarded to states and communities based on the census count," she said. "That makes a complete count of the people of Idaho important to the future of this state." Quintana and Idaho Labor Director Roger B. Madsen signed the agreement during a campaign to secure maximum participation in the next census count. "Idahoans are independent people, but they know when and how to help each other" Madsen said. "Census 2010 is clearly one of those times." Between 2000 and mid-2008, Idaho's population increased nearly 18 percent to over 1.5 million. Only four other states — Nevada, Arizona, Utah and Georgia grew by greater percentages. And, c'mon, we're worth more than any of those states. ... In a story published Wednesday, I wrote about the Small Business Administration awarding an unprecedented number of SBA loans to businesses in the Wood River Valley. I received a few calls and several emails asking what types of businesses were eligible — most people wanted to know if their own business was eligible. The following is a list, based on an information request to the SBA, of those businesses that received SBA loans: Aqua Pro Spa & Pool, Inc.; Artistic Plaster & Stucco Co.; Bahama Blue, Inc.; Elephant's Perch, Inc.; Funk Bright, Inc.; Gallery Davis, Inc.; Kasey Jo Hochmuht; Ketchum Dry Goods; Ketchum Lighting Company; Prosperity Organic Foods, Inc.; Sun Valley Insurance Inc.; Sushi on Second, Inc.; Tastevin Wine Limited; Tater Tots, LLC; Tom Buck Training LLC and Whiskey Jacques Inc. Fertilizer potash prices set to decompose

Reports of a cheaper-than-expected contract for potash, a main ingredient in agricultural fertilizer, means prices are set to slide. This prompted analysts to cut expectations for North American fertilizer companies. Oppenheimer analyst Edward Yang wrote in a note Monday that "potash pricing appears poised to rapidly crumble." He downgraded fertilizer suppliers Intrepid Potash and Compass Minerals International to "underperform" and "perform," respectively. He had previously rated both "outperform." Last week, fertilizer industry sources said a Russian potash supplier, Silvinit, had struck a big deal with the major Indian potash importer to sell India large quantities of the material for well below current spot prices, said RBC Capital Markets analyst Fai Lee in a research note Monday. The deal with India will likely set the market floor price going forward with other big potash buyers such as China, said Lee and UBS analyst Joe Dewhurst. Lee cut his earnings estimates on Potash Corp. of Saskatchewan and Intrepid Potash and slashed his target price on the stocks to $100 and $29. AP

Consumer prices jump, industrial production falls

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Consumer prices shot up in June by the largest amount in 11 months, reflecting the biggest jump in gasoline prices in nearly five years. The Labor Department said Wednesday that inflation at the consumer level rose by 0.7 percent last month, slightly higher than the 0.6 percent increase that economists were expecting. It was the biggest one-month gain since a 0.7 percent increase last July. The big jump was seen as a temporary blip, however. Inflation is not expected to be a problem any time soon given a severe recession which is keeping a lid on wage pressures.

Changes from the preceding month in the Consumer Price Index for all urban consumers: Seasonally adjusted 0.7% 1.2 percent the recession crimped output for a wide range of manufactured goods including cars, machinery and household appliances. However, the decline was not as severe as the 1.4 percent plunge in May, a possible sign that the recession is easing its grip. Underscoring the low threat of accelerating inflation, prices in June compared to a year ago were actually down by 1.4 percent, the biggest year-over-year decline in nearly six decades. Core inflation, which excludes food and energy, posted a moderate 0.2 percent rise in June, slightly higher than the 0.1 percent rise that economists had expected. The absence of an inflation threat has allowed the Federal Reserve to drive a key interest rate to a record low in an effort to fight a severe recession which is already the longest since World War II. The central bank pushed its target for the federal funds rate to near zero in December and it is expected to remain there until the nation's unemployment rate, currently at a 26-year high of 9.5 percent, stops rising. The 0.7 percent jump in the Consumer Price Index in June followed three months of moderation including a small 0.1 percent rise in May. The upward surge was driven by a 7.4 percent rise in energy prices, reflecting a 17.3 percent increase in gasoline prices, the biggest one-month jump in gas prices since a 20.9 percent spurt in September 2005 after Hurricane Katrina had shut Gulf Coast refineries. Analysts are looking for gasoline and other energy costs to retreat in coming months. Already, gasoline pump prices are down by about a dime since the start of July. Food costs edged up a small 0.1 percent in June, held back by a big drop in the cost of dairy products. The 0.2 percent rise in core inflation left the core inflation rate rising by a moderate 1.7 percent over the past 12 months, reflecting the downward pressure on costs coming from the prolonged recession. For June, new car prices jumped by 0.7 percent and clothing costs were also up 0.7 percent. Price increases were moderate in the health area with medical care edging up by 0.2 percent, the smallest gain in three months.

States awash in funds to weatherize homes

By Phillip Rawls Associated Press writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Ready or not, states are getting a tenfold boost in federal money to weatherize drafty homes, an increase so huge it has raised fears of waste and fraud and set off a scramble to find workers and houses for them to repair.

An obscure program that installs insulation in homes and makes them more energy-efficient is distributing $4.7 billion in stimulus funds — dwarfing the $447 million originally planned by Congress this year and the $227 million spent in 2008.

That is enough to weatherize 1 million homes, instead of the 140,000 normally done each year.

President Obama said pouring money into the program would lower utility bills for cash-strapped families, provide jobs for construction workers idled by the housing slump, and make the nation more energy-efficient.

"You're getting a three-fer," Obama said. "That's exactly the kind of program we should be funding."

But some worry states won't be able to keep track of the money.

Leslie Paige, spokeswoman for the Council for

Cade Gunnells, weatherization coordinator for three counties in central Alabama, right, visits with retiree Charles Uptain, March 20 in Montgomery, Ala. Uptain has seen a sizable drop in his utility bills since his home was weatherized last year.

Citizens Against Government Waste, said the program is open to fraud because of the way oversight is divided. The federal government passes the money to states, then states pass it to community action agencies, and the agencies pass it to contractors who work with customers.

"It's such a Rube Goldberg operation it should be setting off alarm bells," she said.

Energy Department spokeswoman Christina Kielich defended the program, saying the federal government monitors state operations and does a thorough review at least every two years of the local organizations. In addition, states are getting their money in increments and must demonstrate quality control to get more.

The program helps low-income families take steps to reduce their home energy expenses, from caulking leaky windows to replacing heating and cooling systems. The Energy Department says 6.2 million households have benefited since it began in 1976, saving the average household about $350 a year on energy bills.

In addition to receiving an infusion of stimulus money, the program was expanded to cover families making up to twice the federal poverty level, or $44,100 for a family of four. Also, the average amount that can be spent per house was more than doubled to $6,500.

The funding for New York is going up from $20.1 million last year to $395 million. California's share is soaring from $6.3 million to $185.8 million. Virginia's is going up 23 1/2 times, from $4 million annually to $94.1 million.

"I was stunned," said Shea Hollifield, Virginia's deputy director of housing. "Spending that much money will be a challenge."

In Texas, the state's share is increasing nearly 60 times, from $5.6 million to $327 million. To spend the money efficiently and on time, state officials decided to go beyond the community organizations that normally distribute it and route $100 million to large cities.

"They have experience in administering large, complicated programs," said Gordon Anderson, spokesman for the Texas Department of Housing and Community Affairs.

States are hurrying to find qualified weatherization workers and caulk-ready homes.

Wisconsin set up weatherization "boot camps" to train workers. West Virginia used to give new workers on-the-job training but is now looking to move to classrooms and online.

Alabama plans to train home builders in how to bid for weatherization contracts. Russell Davis, vice president of the Alabama Home Builders Association, said builders who once had no interest in weatherization contracts now see them as a way to keep their crews busy.

In many states, qualified homeowners are already on waiting lists. But some states don't have enough recipients signed up.

"We are out of clients. We need clients bad," said Cade Gunnells, weatherization coordinator for three counties in central Alabama.

To help find them, states are updating Web sites about the expanded program and working with nonprofit groups, churches and the news media to get the word out.

Police shoot, kill armed man near U.S. Capitol

WASHINGTON (AP) — A chaotic scene unfolded near the U.S. Capitol on Wednesday after police shot and killed an armed man in what authorities described as a routine rush hour traffic stop that turned deadly.

U.S. Capitol Police spokeswoman Sgt. Kim Schneider said the unidentified 35-year-old man sped away in a white car after being told to stop about a block north of the Capitol grounds. The man drove the wrong way down a street, ultimately striking two officers with his car, and crashed into a police cruiser, she said.

Police then opened fire after seeing the man hold up his handgun and refuse to put it down, said Schneider, who described the melee as "very fast moving, very fluid."

"The officers felt they were being threatened — they were in fear for their lives," Schneider said.

Pheasants take flight into the surrounding area of the South Hills, July 8. After four weeks of minimal human contact, the pheasants quickly disperse to hide.

Wildlife group releases pheasants in the Magic Valley

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

A number of pheasants are being released in the Magic Valley in an effort to help repopulate areas with the game birds.

The birds will be released in at least five locations throughout the summer, according to Doug Palmer, a member of the Idaho Chapter of Sportsmen for Fish and Wildlife, the conservation group releasing the birds. Birds have already been released in at least two locations — on property south of Twin Falls and in an area near Balanced Rock in Castleford.

"We're doing this not only for hunters, but for farmers and ranchers as well," Palmer said. "It also ties in to helping local businesses, such as sporting goods stores."

Increasing the pheasant population will help entice hunters to the area, he said, noting that more hunters means more revenue.

Ranch owner Rex Williams said he remembers a time when the fields were filled with pheasants — and the motels with hunters.

"That's the way I remember it," he said. But that was during the 1960s and '70s.

"Today it gets pretty discouraging when you go out here ... and maybe see one or two birds, and you

Making the great outdoors your home with this new camper concept

The SylvanSport GO came onto my radar in 2007 as a brave new concept in the age-old category of the pop-up tent trailer. Indeed, this was a camper designed for a younger, hipper outdoors crowd, a pop-up you could park at mountain bike races and get visitors streaming over to see what was inside.

In the outdoors media, it was heralded as a feat of design and ingenuity theretofore unseen in the camping world. It won an award from the Industrial Designers Society of America.

But then there was the price tag. After its release, the SylvanSport GO was marketed at $8,999 fully loaded. Next came the quips about the company's "$9,000 tent on wheels."

A recent price cut has made the trailer more approachable. By changing its sales and distribution model, the company (www.sylvansport.com) was able to reduce the cost of a GO trailer by more than $2,000.

Today, a camping enthusiast can purchase the basic GO trailer for $6,195. Still pricey, to be sure. But SylvanSport's pop-up offers a slick and convenient option for outdoor lovers looking to pull a wilderness home behind their truck or car.

The GO weighs 840 pounds, allowing for use with small cars that have a trailer hitch. It has high-flotation tires and 13 inches of ground clearance for pulling the trailer into moderate off-road terrain.

It packs into a low-profile bullet of a trailer with a strong aluminum frame that can be adorned with racks for bikes, kayaks or skis. You can load gear and supplies inside the lockable main compartment before hitting the road.

At your destination, the integrated tent, which is made by Kelty, unfolds like an origami flower to create a spacious and weather-proof pod. It has windows, walls, zippered doors, a stair step, bed platforms and a table.

I tested a SylvanSport GO for three nights last month while car camping along the Mississippi River. With my wife and two small children, the trailer offered ample room when compared to a typical family tent. I configured the trailer one night with its bed platform, nearly taking up the unit's entire 118-inch width. With an inflatable mattress we created a luxurious sleeping spot larger than a king-size bed.

Our demo trailer had a removable fabric storage unit on a wall for organizing and stashing all manner of small items. The table clicked in place easily for a meal at night while the bugs swirled outside.

We set up the GO's optional awning accessory with poles and stakes in the dirt. This extra polyester roof, which is like the vestibule on a large tent, adds a space for stowing bikes or gear outside the main door. Set a camp table under the awning and you have an adjacent living space off the main room for eating or hanging out while still protected from the rain or direct sun.

Overall, I found the GO to be comfortable and convenient. For safety on the road, the GO has LED taillights and turn signals. But the unit is not powered, and there is obviously no bathroom inside.

Like with a tent, most GO users will cook with a camp stove. You won't sleep on the ground in this trailer. But you will zip the door open and closed, and you'll have to hike to the outhouse at night before bed.

For a quick, solid space to make your home outdoors — and as a trailer to transport gear while getting there — SylvanSport's "tent on wheels" is a one of a kind camping option.

Protected Oregon pooch prevails over river perils

By Mark Freeman
(Medford) Mail Tribune

AGNESS, Ore. — Pete Pollard walked up the remote trail through the Lower Rogue River Canyon with the melancholy of a man who knows his one missed oar-stroke killed his daughter's dog.

The day before, the 57-year-old Talent man misrrowed while rafting the wild Rogue's Blossom Bar, pitching himself, two others and two canines into the river for a perilous bounce downstream.

All were rescued within minutes of the accident except for Ali, a 15-pound Boston terrier. Now, a full day later, it was time to recover the last victim.

"I was looking in the eddies for his body," Pollard says.

Then a twig snapped just off the trail. And another. "Oh, geez," Pollard thought. "Now I gotta deal with a bear."

But out of the bushes popped Ali, still sporting his blue life vest.

"That little tyke came walking down the hill like it was no big deal," Pollard says of the dog's June 28 rescue upstream of Blossom Bar. "He swam two rapids, got out of the canyon on the correct side of the river, walked upstream, survived the night, and walked out like it was nothing."

"Wow," he says. "That was a great feeling."

By living up to his namesake as a fighter and survivor, little Ali now has earned a few minutes of fame as the new poster-puppy for canine life jackets.

The neoprene life jackets, which cost from as little as $20 to more than $100, fit snugly to the torso. Most sport a back strap made for hoisting an overboard dog back into a boat. While not required anywhere in the United States, they have become commonplace on waters throughout the country.

"They're hugely popular," says Chris Edmondston, director of safety programs for the Maryland-based Boat

On the net

Boat Owners Association of the United States:
<http://www.boatus.com/>

Owners Association of the United States.

A page about dog vests on the BOAT-US Web site is one of the association's most-viewed pages, Edmondston says.

Casual boaters tend not to buy them, but whitewater boaters and others sometimes are more inclined to jacket-up their pet than themselves, he says.

"You'll see the kids wearing them and the pets wearing them, but the adults not wearing them," Edmondston says. "You can save your pet, but who's going to take care of him when you drown?"

All three people and two dogs in Pollard's raft wore life jackets when Pollard oared his raft into the first maneuver June 27 through Blossom Bar.

The first move is to pull left-to-right across the upstream side of a string of partially submerged boulders dubbed the "Picket Fence."

Pollard missed a left oar stroke. The raft hit the Picket Fence and flipped, sending everyone and everything overboard.

"I've done the lower Rogue 60 times, and it's the first time I've flipped," Pollard says.

His wife, Deb Pollard, and fellow passenger Bonnie Dial of Medford floated through Blossom Bar and were pulled to safety by others in their party.

Duke, the family's 80-pound, pitbull-labrador mix that also was wearing a life jacket, swam through Blossom Bar and the next rapid, called Devil's Staircase, before reaching shore.

For two and a half hours, the group struggled to free the raft, finally righting the craft and negotiating the rapid.

Only then did Pollard realize Ali wasn't accounted for.

They searched the waters, asked other boaters for help. Nothing. Even excursion jetboaters began looking for Ali throughout the day. Still nothing.

"There were hundreds of eyes looking for that dog,"

Pollard says.

As the party set up camp downstream, Pollard hiked upstream looking and calling for Ali.

He hiked back to camp that night deflated.

The 5-year-old dog belongs to his daughter, who is living in Houston — entrusted to Pollard only for the summer.

"It was not a great feeling," he says. "I didn't want to make that phone call."

Pollard hiked back up the next morning, doing his eddy-to-eddy search when Ali created his own happy ending to the tale.

"That dog swam Blossom Bar, then spent the night in the wilderness under a bush, hiding from bears and cougars," says Tom Shafer, a Medford rafter who was part of Pollard's party. "That had to be quite an ordeal."

When the entire party reached the take-out at Foster Bar later that day, Ali received a standing ovation.

It's probably the last time Ali will wear the life jacket that saved his life. For future excursions, there will be no need for neoprene.

"It's a good vest, obviously," Pollard says. "But he's not going down any big rivers anymore."

C.A.S.T. for Kids scheduled at Lake Walcott

Children with a wide range of disabilities will have the opportunity to enjoy a day of fishing with volunteers Saturday during the annual C.A.S.T. for Kids fishing event at Lake Walcott State Park near Rupert. C.A.S.T. stands for Catch a Special Thrill.

"For some kids, this is their first experience fishing," said local coordinator

Sarah Wageman of the Bureau of Reclamation's Snake River Area Office. "For the volunteers, it's a great opportunity to be part of a special experience that these children will remember for a lifetime."

The participants range from age 7-16 years old and have a variety of physical and/or developmental disabilities and, in some cases, a terminal illness. Each participant will receive fishing gear, a T-shirt and hat.

The state bass anglers societies work under the large umbrella of the Bass Anglers Sportsman Society. Volunteers from the bass clubs from southern and eastern Idaho will provide fishing boats and expertise to assist novice anglers. The morning event will be followed by a barbecue lunch hosted by the Rupert Elks Club 2106.

Lake Walcott State Park is located 11 miles north-east of Rupert off State Highway 24.

In the event of rain the C.A.S.T. event will be canceled.

Pheasants

Continued from Outdoors 1 remember back when there were literally hundreds of them," said Williams, who recently allowed birds to be released on his property in the South Hills.

"I figured it was for a good cause, to get some pheasants to start coming back," he said, noting that most of the birds released were hens. "I don't know if they'll ever be here like they used to be, but it's worth a try."

The birds, which are between 4 and 5 weeks old when released, are raised in surrogate holders placed in the areas where the birds are released. The 4-by-8-foot holders — each can hold 75 pheasants or 125 quail or chukar — feed and keep the birds warm.

The landowners check on the birds about every three days before they're released, Palmer said. The group sets up live traps to remove from areas predators that might otherwise harm the birds once they're released.

The best thing about the process, Palmer said, is that the surrogates leave minimal human imprint.

Sportsmen for Fish and Wildlife is a nonprofit group that promotes conservation efforts in the West, with chapters in Idaho, Alaska, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming. The group receives birds from area or national breeders soon after they're hatched. Surrogates cost about $2,000 apiece, he said, paid through fundraisers by or donations to the organization.

Like at Williams' ranch, about 80 percent of the pheasants released are hens, Palmer said, as the main objective is to repopulate areas with the game birds. Birds will be released until mid-September.

"We'll probably throw out some quail and chukar toward the end," he said.

Question: I plan to file my own bankruptcy case because I have no money for a lawyer. Is there a way I can avoid paying the filing fee?

Answer: Bankruptcy law provides for a fee waiver in some cases. The most important requirements are that your income be less than 150% of the poverty level and that you are unable to pay in installments. You can get the request form from the court clerk, or online at <http://www.id.uscourts.gov/>. A Judge will decide whether to waive the fee entirely or whether you may pay in installments. Non-payment of the fee does not effect any of the rights of your creditors, but you may find that the Bankruptcy Trustee will object to your request because, if the fee is waived, the Trustee will not collect the small portion he gets to help defray the cost of administering your bankruptcy case. Although this amount is less than $70.00, some Trustees are so "black-hearted" that they will try to force you to pay the filing fee. A professional bankruptcy attorney can help with this and other problems and will earn his or her fee many times over. You should reconsider your plan to proceed without an attorney.

Invisible lines crisscross the sky

In antiquity, astronomers organized the sky by dividing it into constellations, similar to the way idiosyncratic political borders divide continents into countries. Nowadays, a less quaint method, akin to latitude and longitude, is the standard.

The key to any coordinate system is its reference points. For example, latitude is defined relative to the equator. The celestial equator is a projection of earth's equator into the sky, occupying the same plane.

This invisible line passes through the east and west cardinal points, and arches about half-way up from the horizon into the southern sky.

Our home galaxy, the Milky Way, has an equator as well, in the mid-plane of its flattened disk. It's easy to locate because it follows the brightest part of the Milky Way's hazy band across the sky. This time of year, it arches directly overhead from the north-northeast to the south-southwest at 1 a.m.

Another line is the meridian, which divides the sky into eastern and western halves, passing through the north and south cardinal points and the zenith (the point directly overhead). Objects on the meridian are at their highest point in their daily paths.

The ecliptic — the "equator" of the solar system — is the apparent path of the sun, moon and planets among the stars. Because of earth's axial tilt, the ecliptic wanders north and south of the celestial equator.

Deadline to buy controlled hunt tags

Big game hunters must buy controlled hunt tags by Aug. 1. Any tags not purchased by that date will be forfeit. After a second drawing, any leftover tags are sold over the counter.

The rules have changed for controlled hunt permits this year. Hunters who were successful in a controlled-hunt drawing no longer have to buy a separate permit. All permit information is included on the tag.

Results of deer, elk, antelope and fall black bear controlled hunt drawings are available on the Fish and Game Web site, <http://fishandgame.idaho.gov>. Hunters can buy those tags at any Fish and Game office, license vendor, by telephone at 800-554-8685 or 800-824-3729, or at <https://id.outdoorcentral.us/>.

Man attacked by mountain lion

man reported being attacked by a mountain lion while he was camping near Elk River over the weekend and state wildlife authorities are searching for the cat.

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game says the man was pounced on by a mountain lion while he was gathering firewood Saturday.

The man and lion rolled down a hill while struggling and came to a stop when they hit a log. The man says he stabbed the lion in the side with a knife and the lion ran off.

The man returned home and notified authorities. Conservation officer Barry Cummings is investigating. He and the man returned to the area Sunday morning along with local hound hunters, who were unable to find the lion.

The man did not want to be identified.

Record chub caught in southeast Idaho

Dianne Jensen of Idaho Falls caught a record setting Utah chub in Blackfoot Reservoir.

The lunker was caught June 29 on spinning gear with 10-pound test line. It weighed 1 pound, 11.3 oz. with a length of 16.25 inches and a girth of 9 inches.

The previous record was held by Deborah Krick of Rigby, who caught a 1-pound, 4-ounce chub, 13.25 inches long in the Snake River on March 18, 2007, on a worm with 8-pound test line.

Genius 'inherretted': Herrett's Stocks, Inc.

The first lesson I learned after meeting genial host and president of Herrett's Stocks, Inc., Rod Herrett, was: "Handles are found on shovels and axes; handguns are fitted with stocks!" With this misconception cleared up, my good-natured tour guide walked me through his factory last week, introducing me to his skilled staff and detailing the finer points of handgun stock manufacturing. Situated inconspicuously at 169 Madrona St., in Twin Falls, Herrett's Stocks, Inc. is a major player in the production of standard factory and true custom handgun stocks, as well as bow handles, laser engraved belt buckles and plaques.

Basic economic theory dictates that to manage costs, high volume manufacturers must produce goods designed for the average consumer. This principle holds true whether you're building refrigerators, flip-flops or firearms. For this reason, mass-produced firearms are equipped with stocks intended to fit the average shooter.

If you're an average shooter, this usually doesn't present much of a problem. For the 1-200 rounds that you run through your guns each year, you've either learned to adapt your shooting form to better fit your gun or you've modified your ill-fitting gun by adding a recoil pad or changing the sights.

But if you shoot a lot — recreationally or competitively — it's a fact that you will become a much better shot using a gun that fits you like a glove. This is the handgun market niche that company founder, Steve Herrett (Rod's dad), entered more than 40 years ago. To quote Steve, "When buying stocks you should only consider the best. We at Herrett's have spent a lifetime in stock research and development and have shown the world that our stocks are superior stocks. When accuracy counts, you will find Herrett's being used by shooters all over the world."

To produce these superior stocks, Rod has equipped his factory with the latest in computer-controlled milling machines, laser engraving stations, as well as hand-operated equipment designed and built by his father and manned by his highly skilled staff.

Though Rod's extensive product line includes carefully crafted production stocks, the company's forte is its custom handmade models. To produce these one-of-a-kind custom stocks, Rod first has you provide a detailed description of your handgun (model, caliber, bbl. length). Next, if you are having a revolver stocked, you must provide a tracing of the gun's frame, since tolerances may vary considerably on certain models.

The true secret to Herrett's custom handmade stocks is their proprietary made-to-measure procedure. By carefully tracing the critical dimensions of your shooting hand on a template sheet, you provide the hand fitters with the precise dimensions necessary to sculpt a stock that will literally fit your hand — not the average shooter's — like a glove.

In addition to offering a plethora of stock styles in high grade walnut or exotic woods, Herrett can further enhance your stock with custom checkering patterns or laser-engraved logos of your choice.

Rod mentioned that the downturn in today's economy has persuaded many handgunners to upgrade their existing weapons with custom stocks rather than purchasing new ones.

To gain an appreciation for the many stock types and customizing options available, you need to check out www.herrett-stocks.com or give Rod a call at (208) 733-1498 and order a free brochure.

Good shooting!

Second wolf pack confirmed in Washington

SPOKANE, Wash. — State biologists have confirmed a second wolf pack in Washington state, this time in a remote area of Pend Oreille County.

The Spokesman-Review reports biologists were able to confirm the presence of at least one adult wolf and three pups by playing digital recordings of howling. The wolves, then, howled back.

Motion-detection cameras had captured photos of the pack earlier this year, but biologists needed confirmation of their presence.

Gray wolves were nearly hunted to extinction in the 1930s but have lately had a population resurgence in Montana, Idaho and Wyoming. Last summer, adult wolves were confirmed in Okanogan County.

State department of Fish and Wildlife biologist Dana Base says the next step is to put GPS collars on the adults.

Horse dies after being ejected from trailer

BOZEMAN, Mont. — Authorities say a horse fell down a steep embankment near Bozeman after it was ejected from a trailer that went off the shoulder of the road.

The Gallatin County Sheriff's office said Monday the horse was ejected from the trailer near the Palisade Falls Campground on Saturday. Almost a dozen volunteers from the sheriff's office pulled the horse back up to the roadway but could not save the animal's life.

State taking apps for sandhill crane, some turkey

CHEYENNE, Wyo. — The Wyoming Game and Fish Department says it's accepting applications for early season sandhill crane permits and limited quota fall turkey hunting licenses.

Applications for sandhill crane permits are due to the department's Cheyenne office by July 31.

Aug. 17 is the deadline for fall turkey license applications.

The state's limited quota areas for fall turkey are Goshen County and portions of Platte and Laramie counties.

The department will hold separate drawings for resident and nonresident licenses for limited quota turkey hunting. All other areas are general license, and those can be purchased starting Sept. 15.

The department says residents and nonresidents can apply for sandhill crane permits as a single party, with a maximum party size of two.

Wildlife officials target nuisance bears in Wyoming

SHERIDAN, Wyo. — The Wyoming Game and Fish Department says black bears tried to enter a home and tore into a tent at a youth camp over the weekend in Story.

The department said Monday that it had begun an aggressive trapping campaign to remove the bears after getting more than a dozen reports. There were no injuries in the incidents.

Residents reported that the bears have destroyed bird feeders and raided garbage cans and cooking grills.

Sheridan Game Warden

Bruce Scigliano says the bears could be dangerous to residents. He is asking residents to move all bear attractants, including pet food and compost piles, to locations where they're not available to bears.

Story is located 15 miles southeast of Sheridan.

Park Service seeks folks with Smokies memories

GATLINBURG, Tenn. — The National Park Service hopes people who have firsthand accounts of living in the Smokies or attending the national park dedication will share those memories.

Park Service spokesman Bob Miller in Gatlinburg said the memories of hundreds of Civilian Conservation Corps workers who built the park are also being sought.

Park officials hope those with tales to tell will call them by July 24 at (865) 436-7318, extension 349.

Officials would also like to hear from those who witnessed President Franklin D. Roosevelt dedicate the national park on Sept. 2, 1940.

The Great Smoky Mountains National Park was established on June 15, 1934, and dedicated six years later at Newfound Gap.

Plane crash kills 168

TEHRAN — A Russian-made jetliner carrying 168 people nose-dived into a field after taking off from the Iranian capital on Wednesday in a fiery crash that shredded the aircraft and killed everyone aboard — Iran's worst air disaster in six years. Witnesses say the plane's tail was on fire before it went down.

It was the latest in a string of deadly crashes in recent years that have highlighted Iran's difficulties in maintaining its aging fleet of planes.

Iranian airlines, including state-run ones, are chronically strapped for cash, and maintenance has suffered, experts say. U.S. sanctions prevent Iran from updating its 30-year-old American aircraft and make it difficult to get European spare parts or planes as well. The country has come to rely on Russian aircraft, many of them Soviet-era planes that are harder to get parts for since the Soviet Union's fall.

The Caspian Airlines Tupolev jet's impact plowed a deep, long trench into agricultural fields outside the village of Jannat Abad, and the aircraft was blasted to bits. Flaming wreckage, body parts and personal items were strewn over a 200-yard area. Firefighters put out blazes from the crash, but smoke smoldered from the pit for hours after as emergency workers searched for data recorders and other clues to the cause.

FLORIDA

Shuttle blasts off after month's delay

CAPE CANAVERAL — After more than a month's delay, space shuttle Endeavour and seven astronauts thundered into orbit Wednesday on a flight to the international space station, hauling up a veranda for Japan's enormous lab and looking to set a crowd record.

Success came on launch-try No. 6, on the eve of the 40th anniversary of the liftoff of man's first moon landing.

But the mood was dampened somewhat when NASA managers watched the launch video.

Eight or nine pieces of foam insulation came off the external fuel tank during liftoff, and the shuttle was hit at least two or three times, said Bill Gerstenmaier, NASA's space operations chief. Some scuff marks were spotted on the belly, but that probably is coating loss and considered minor, he said.

In fact, Mission Control told the astronauts Wednesday night that the damage — which occurred not quite two minutes into the flight — looked to be less extensive than what occurred on the last flight.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Cigarettes cost man 23 quadrillion dollars

MANCHESTER — A New Hampshire man says he swiped his debit card at a gas station to buy a pack of cigarettes and was charged over 23 quadrillion dollars.

Josh Muszynski checked his account online a few hours later and saw the 17-digit number — a stunning $23,148,855,308,184,500.

Muszynski says he spent two hours on the phone with Bank of America trying to sort out the string of numbers and the $15 overdraft fee. The bank corrected the error the next day.

Bank of America told WMUR-TV only the card issuer, Visa, could answer questions. Visa, in turn, referred questions to the bank.

Sotomayor dodges abortion, guns in grilling

By Julie Hirschfeld Davis
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Supreme Court nominee Sonia Sotomayor determinedly sidestepped volleys of Republican questions on abortion and gun rights Wednesday, keeping her demeanor cool and her opinions mostly private as she neared the end of a marathon Senate grilling on the road to all but sure confirmation.

After two long days of questioning by Judiciary Committee senators, Sotomayor had yet to make a slip — certainly not the gaffe that even Republicans concede would be necessary to derail her nomination to be the first Hispanic and third woman to serve on the high court.

Supreme Court nominee Sonia Sotomayor testifies before the Senate Judiciary Committee on Capitol Hill in Washington on Wednesday.

The appeals court judge, 55, avoided weighing in on any major issue that could come before her as a justice, instead using legal doctrine, carefully worded deflections and even humor to ward off efforts to pin her down.

Appearing more at ease in the witness chair, Sotomayor defused a tense exchange on gun rights by joking about shooting a GOP critic and charmed Democratic supporters with nostalgic praise for fictional attorney Perry Mason.

Republicans, frustrated in their attempts to undercut President Obama's first high court choice, said they were worried Sotomayor would bring bias and a political agenda to the bench.

"It's muddled, confusing, backtracking on issue after issue," complained Sen. Jeff Sessions of Alabama, the top Republican on the Judiciary panel. "I frankly am a bit disappointed in the lack of clarity and consistency in her answers."

Her rulings — except for a much-debated reverse discrimination case — have not shed much light on her positions either, though she is considered unlikely to disturb the Supreme Court balance in replacing generally liberal Justice David Souter.

On abortion rights for example, Sotomayor has not ruled on any case that squarely confronts the issue. As an appeals court judge she dismissed a challenge to the so-called global gag rule on U.S. foreign aid, deciding against an abortion rights group. But in her opinion she used the phrases "anti-abortion" and "pro-choice," typically used by abortion rights supporters.

The hearings continue today with more questions for Sotomayor and testimony from outside witnesses. A vote by the full Senate to confirm her is expected in early August, time enough to allow her to don the robes of a justice before a scheduled hearing on Sept. 9 on a case involving federal campaign finance law.

A sense of urgency

Obama shifts into campaign mode on health care

By Ricardo Alonso-Zalvidar and Ben Feller
Associated Press writers

WASHINGTON — President Obama achieved a milestone Wednesday when a Senate committee approved a plan to revamp the U.S. health care system.

The Senate panel's action, which attracted no Republican votes, came as the president's campaign organization rolled out television ads to build support for his top domestic priority.

Obama met with Republicans at the White House in search of an elusive bipartisan compromise on his call to expand coverage to the nearly 50 million uninsured Americans as well as restrain spending increases in health care.

But the 13-10 party-line vote in the Senate health committee signaled a deepening rift in Congress. While Democrats respond to Obama's call for action with renewed determination, Republicans are using harsher words to voice their misgivings.

In the House, Democrats began pushing legislation through the first of three committees, although moderate and conservative members of the rank and file were demanding changes. In the Senate, lawmakers were considering fees on health insurance companies as a new source of potential financing for a $1 trillion package that's short on funds.

"We have delivered on the promise of real change," Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., said as he presided over the Senate health committee vote, alluding not only

AT A GLANCE

A look at the Senate health committee bill:

WHO'S COVERED: Aims to cover 97 percent of Americans.

COST: About $615 billion over 10 years, but it's only one piece of a larger Senate bill.

HOW IT'S PAID FOR: Another panel — the Finance Committee — is responsible for figuring out how to cover costs.

REQUIREMENTS: Individuals will have to have insurance, enforced through tax penalty with hardship waivers. Employers who don't offer coverage will pay a penalty of $750 a year for each full-time worker. Businesses with 25 or fewer workers are exempted.

BENEFITS PACKAGE: Health plans must offer a package of essential benefits recommended by a new Medical Advisory Council. No denial of coverage based on pre-existing conditions.

SUBSIDIES: Available up to 400 percent poverty level, or $88,000 for a family of four.

GOVERNMENT-RUN PLAN: A robust new public plan to compete with private insurers. The plan would be run by the government, but would pay doctors and hospitals based on what private insurers now pay.

HOW YOU CHOOSE YOUR HEALTH INSURANCE: Individuals and small businesses could purchase insurance through state-based purchasing pools called American Health Benefit Gateways.

OTHER PROVISIONS: Creates a new voluntary insurance program that would provide a modest daily cash benefit to help disabled people stay in their own homes instead of going into nursing homes.

to his bill but also to Obama's campaign promise.

The president was in the Rose Garden for the latest in a daily series of public appeals to Congress to "step up and meet our responsibilities" and move legislation this summer. Obama also pushed his message in network television interviews, telling employers that his plan would require them to offer benefits or face a fine.

"If you can afford it, either give your employees health insurance or pay into the pot so that we're not subsidizing you," Obama told CBS News.

He also reversed a campaign stance against requiring everyone to buy health care coverage.

"I'm now in favor of some sort of individual mandate as long as there's a hardship exemption," he said. "If somebody truly just can't afford health insurance even with the subsidies that the government is now providing, we don't want to double penalize them."

Wednesday's Senate health committee vote "should make us hopeful — but it can't make us complacent," Obama said. "It should instead provide the urgency for both the House and the Senate to finish their critical work on health reform before the August recess."

The health panel's $615 billion measure would require individuals to get health insurance and employers to contribute to the cost. The bill calls for the government to provide financial assistance with premiums for individuals and families making up to four times the federal poverty level, or about $88,000 for a family of four, a broad cross-section of the middle class.

Obama wants the House and Senate to act on health care this summer so lawmakers can reconcile differences in their respective bills after Labor Day and put final legislation on his desk this fall.

Obama's all-out effort since he returned from his overseas trip last week has "galvanized things," Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said.

Obama met at the White House with Republican Sens. Susan Collins of Maine, Saxby Chambliss of Georgia, Bob Corker of Tennessee and Lisa Murkowski of Alaska.

"I urged him not to rush consideration of the bill," Collins told reporters later. "This bill is going to affect virtually every American. If the president tries to rush this through in the next two weeks ... I fear the process will be very divisive."

Another senior Republican also sounded alarm bells.

"This supposed health care fix is a health care failure and a disaster for the American people," Sen. Judd Gregg, R-N.H., said. "We still have time to turn this process around instead of steamrolling our country into a sub-par government-run plan, but it will require serious action from Democrats and Republicans and a pledge to put politics aside."

Army: Unit involved in slayings saw intense combat

By P. Solomon Banda
Associated Press writer

FORT CARSON, Colo. — The psychological trauma of fierce combat in Iraq may have helped drive soldiers in a single battle-scarred Army unit to kill as many as 11 people after their return home, the military said Wednesday.

In a report billed as the most comprehensive examination to date of violent crimes and combat exposure, an Army task force of medical experts looked at members of Fort Carson's 4th Brigade Combat Team, 4th Infantry Division, known as the Iron Eagles.

Soldiers in the unit were accused in five killings in separate attacks around Colorado Springs in 2007 and 2008, including the slaying of a couple gunned down while posting a garage-sale sign. They were also involved in six more slayings in Colorado and other states since 2005.

The report compared the unit of about 3,700 soldiers with a similarly sized unit and found it suffered more combat deaths in Iraq and was deployed there longer.

"This investigation suggests a possible association between increasing levels of combat exposure and risk for negative behavioral outcomes," the study said. It added that the soldiers faced "significant disruptions in family-social support."

During its two long tours in Iraq, the unit suffered 113 combat deaths, according to Fort Carson spokeswoman Brandy Gill. The unit is now in Afghanistan, where it has suffered two combat deaths since arriving in May.

Lt. Gen. Eric B. Schoemaker, the Army's surgeon general, said the unit's crime cluster appeared to be unique among Army bases and its combat exposure and length of deployments are just two factor officials are looking at.

The soldiers accused of the killings had committed crimes before and abused drugs and alcohol. Also, some of the GIs claimed they were discouraged from seeking mental help, or were too afraid of being belittled if they did so, officials said.

Task force members suggested the Army find a way to identify soldiers who have been exposed to fierce combat.

Cops: Fla. slaying suspects didn't expect cameras

By Bill Kaczor
Associated Press writer

PENSACOLA, Fla. — The accomplice assigned to turn off surveillance cameras before an elaborate, deadly break-in at a sprawling Florida Panhandle home never did, but the seven people accused in the crime apparently did not know that, authorities said Wednesday.

Melanie and Byrd Billings, known for adopting children with special needs, were shot to death a week ago. An extensive surveillance system captured footage of masked men — some dressed as ninjas — slipping into front and back doors at the home.

The video led investigators to a red van used as a used as a getaway car and eventually to the suspects, a loosely connected group of mostly day laborers who knew each other through a power washing business and an auto detailing operation.

They were in the nine-bedroom house for just four minutes and on the property for 10, Escambia County Sheriff David Morgan said.

But investigators have been pondering what he called a "huge gap" in what was otherwise a precisely executed break-in for which the suspects had spent 30 days training.

AP Photo

Ashley Markham, 26, daughter of Melanie Billings, is comforted by Escambia County Sheriff David Morgan after the announcement of a seventh arrest Tuesday in the murder of a Florida couple known for adopting children with special needs.

"The execution was basically flawless," Morgan said. "The one gaping hole that would not have made this a perfect operation, if you will, was the fact that the surveillance system was not disabled. I guess the question was why was it not?"

Morgan said the suspects took a safe from the house, though he would not say what was in it or what else was taken. Authorities have said the main motive was robbery, though there may have been others.

David Melenkevitz, a spokesman for the Drug Enforcement Administration, said Wednesday his agency is assisting with the investigation but would not comment on the case. He said Escambia County officials have also sought help from other federal agencies including the FBI and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives.

Also Wednesday, Morgan said police located a real estate agent named Pamela Laverne Long whom they had earlier sought help finding.

Police in Orange Beach, Ala., about 30 miles from Pensacola, found her at or near a marina on Wednesday afternoon. Morgan said she was not in custody and was returning to Florida voluntarily.

Morgan said Long is friends with and rents a home in suburban Gulf Breeze to 35-year-old Leonard Gonzalez Jr., whom Morgan described as a "pivotal person" in organizing the break-in at the Billings home.

"We know that she was associated with Leonard Patrick Gonzalez Jr. up until the day of the murder,"

Morgan said "We would like to get information from her about his activities, whereabouts, movements, those sorts of things."

Morgan also said authorities are looking for another person who may have been assigned to turn off the surveillance system, possibly remotely, though he did not identify that person.

Nine of the couple's 13 adopted children were home during the break-in. Three saw the intruders but were not hurt. The couple also had four children from previous marriages.

The suspects range in age from 16 to 56. One, Donnie Ray Stallworth, was with the Air Force Special Operations Command with an aircraft maintenance squadron at Hurlbert Field near Fort Walton Beach. It wasn't clear how he knew the others. Stallworth had been deployed to Iraq and Afghanistan five times since 2002, an Air Force spokesman said.

Attack victims push Congress to protect sharks

By Ben Evans
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Nearly a dozen shark-attack victims — many of them badly scarred or missing limbs — pressed Congress on Wednesday to protect a sea creature they'd rather not run into again.

The group wants to strengthen laws protecting sharks from "finning," in which fins are sliced from sharks for their meat, leaving the fish for dead. The growing market for fin meat, a popular soup delicacy in Asia, threatens many shark species around the world, they say.

"We bring pretty instant credibility," said Chuck Anderson, a school athletic director from Summerdale, Ala., who spent 13 days in intensive care and lost most of his right arm after being attacked by a bull shark in 2000 while swimming off Gulf Shores, Ala. "I've yet to run into anyone who disagrees with us."

Anderson and other attack victims wore white T-shirts reading "Shark Attack Survivors for Shark Conservation" as they met with senators and staffers. The lobbying blitz was organized by the Pew Environment Group to pass a bill strengthening language in an existing ban on finning in U.S. waters.

The measure, which supporters say would close loopholes and allow for stronger enforcement, easily passed the House by voice vote in March and has been introduced in the Senate by Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass. Among other things, it would prohibit sea vessels from carrying illegal fins whether they fished them or not, and it would allow the U.S. to call attention to other nations that are not following through with finning bans.

Anderson and Al Brenneka, who lost his right arm to a seven-foot lemon shark while surfing off Delray Beach, Fla., in 1976, said their attacks prompted them to learn more about sharks and, ultimately, to believe that humans are a far greater threat to them than they are to people.

"I don't think it's right for me to be angry. I went into their environment," said Anderson, who said the bull shark that attacked him pulled him 15 feet to the bottom of the ocean, flipping him around "like a ragdoll," before snapping off his arm.

Brenneka, who lost so much blood after his attack that his heart stopped temporarily, said he felt some resentment initially. But "after a while you learn that it's really not the sharks that are doing anything wrong," he said.

"They're actually a shy animal, and when they do attack it's a freak occurrence," said Brenneka, a computer repairman from Dried shark fin is seen for sale at a shop in the Chinatown section of Los Angeles in May 2003.

International Union for Conservation of Nature found that roughly a third of all sharks worldwide are in danger of extinction. The threatened species include hammerheads, the great white and mako sharks.

The organization said sharks killed at sea are often used only for their fin meat or are incidental bycatch as fishermen seek tuna and swordfish. Finning has been banned in most international waters, but advocacy groups say the rules are poorly enforced.

Spring Hope, N.C. "I just happened to be in the wrong place at the wrong time."

Shark attacks are extremely rare. There were 59 worldwide last year, four of them fatal, according to George Burgess, a leading shark expert who directs the International Shark Attack File at the University of Florida's Museum of Natural History.

Festival goes on despite owner's passing

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

BUHL — This time of year, the Valley View Lavender Farm looks like a purple cloud as the farm's three acres of lavender are in full bloom.

Last weekend the farm, at 4297 Carter Pack Road northwest of Buhl, hosted its sixth annual Lavender Fest with thousands of folks visiting.

While some munched on chicken breast, rolls and fruit medley, all infused with lavender, other guests took in the sun and slight breeze while listening to live music or taking in a horse-drawn carriage ride.

As successful as the festival was, this year's event will hold a special place in owner Peggy Armstrong's heart for a different reason. Ten years ago Armstrong opened the farm with husband, Al Armstrong, a fresh start for the couple who had both previously been divorced.

In April, Al lost his battle with brain cancer, leaving

Peggy with a deep void in her life and suddenly at the helm of the operation.

Al was honored Sunday at the festival with a memorial service, complete with a gun salute.

"I didn't really know just how hard he worked," Peggy said with a chuckle. "Here I thought he was piddling in the fields."

The farm and festival, she said, are helping her heal.

"The festival almost didn't happen but a lot of people came together and volunteered ... I had no idea how many people really cared about my well-being, it has been overwhelming," she said.

For those attending, the festival offered a look into the beauty the state can offer.

"I think it's great, it makes me love Idaho that we get to come to things like this ... and that they let you come here, to share in their farm," said first-time festival attendee Mandy Brumbach.

After hearing her friend talk up the festival for three years Brumbach, of Twin Falls, decided to come. She said she wasn't disappointed.

"It's just so peaceful," she said.

Some vendors were impressed with the festival's upbeat environment and broad spectrum of people it drew.

"I've been to other festivals but this one is quite nice ... the lavender fields as a setting are great," said Twin Falls jewelry designer Connie Zimmerman.

Although the farm is now up for sale, the business will be around, Armstrong said.

"We are looking to move the farm closer to Twin Falls, to be closer to more foot traffic," she said.

For now, visitors can still take in the lavender in Buhl from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday.

Blair Koch may be reached at blairkoch@gmail.com or 208-316-2607.

Horse-drawn carriage rides were among the activities at the sixth annual Lavender Fest at Valley View Lavender Farm near Buhl on Saturday and Sunday.

Prescriptions versus supplements — who's right?

DEAR DR. GOTT: I'm a 56-year-old male in good health and have a basic question for you. When does one stop prescription drugs and replace them with supplements and vitamins? Here is my case. My current medications are fenofibrate, Lipitor, omeprazole, Toprol, sertraline and warfarin. I went to a holistic doctor for a look-see and his opinion was to stop all drugs except the Toprol and start using supplements and vitamins for the rest.

Please give me your general opinion. I was also told that my medications are actually harmful to my health.

DEAR READER: Well, your question is straightforward, but the answer isn't an easy one. Let's consider your drug regimen. Fenofibrate and Lipitor are medications prescribed for high cholesterol and triglyceride levels. Omeprazole is used to treat heartburn and symptoms of gastroesophageal reflux disease. Sertraline is an antidepressant. Toprol is a beta blocker for control of hypertension, angina and heart failure. Warfarin is an anticoagulant.

As a general rule, prescription drugs are considered to be superior to supplements. They are also more expensive and more likely to carry side effects. I interpret this is what you are referring to when you indicate your medications are harmful to your health. However, this could also be the case with supplements taken unnecessarily or in excess. More is not better, especially in this regard.

The real question here is why you chose to leave your doctor to see someone in a holistic practice. I can only assume either you weren't seeing any improvement, or you simply decided to take another route in regard to your health. In any case, it was wise of the second doctor to recommend you continue with the Toprol. You haven't shared your medical history with me; however, I would guess you either have high blood pressure or a cardiac condition that requires prescription intervention. I would hate to have you discontinue something if doing so were to contribute to a worsening, serious medical condition.

When it comes to cholesterol-lowering drugs, alternatives include cinnamon, niacin, plant sterols and stanols, and a host of other possibilities. Not all have been proven in scientific studies to be helpful. Heartburn can be offset by chewing almonds, and depression might be controlled with St. John's Wort. Supplements can and do work. And sometimes they work without the side effects so common with prescription drugs. There are alternative choices a person can make — ideally with the help of his or her primary care physician.

People today want and often demand to be in control of the drugs recommended for them. I respect them for taking charge of their health issues. As such, I suggest you discuss your situation with your family doctor, who is a better judge of your needs than am I. Be frank regarding your preference of a holistic approach. If your physician is unyielding, make sure you understand and agree with the reasons behind his or her decision. Perhaps a compromise is in order. You should and need to do what is right for you. Naturopathy may not be appropriate in your case.

Norman Kay Walker

Norman Kay Walker, age 70, passed away peacefully on the evening of Sunday, July 12, 2009, in Twin Falls.

He was born Oct. 6, 1938, in Rupert, the son of Kenneth E. Walker and Dorathy N. Heath Walker. He was raised in Rupert and graduated from Minico High School in 1956. After high school, he served in the National Guard while he worked around the Paul area.

Though public service was a call Norman frequently answered, there was another love that called even deeper — he loved to work with his hands. He attended one year of trade school from the University of Idaho in 1959, after which he came back to the Paul area and married Hazel Butterfield. The two moved to Salt Lake City in 1962, where Norman worked his way through a technical degree in architectural drafting from Salt Lake Trade Tech. After graduation, he moved his small family to Idaho to raise his two children.

After a short stay in Pocatello, he took a job in Jerome at Ray Chugg Quarter Horse Ranch, a small step toward eventually owning his own farm in Wendell. In addition to farming, he also worked in construction as his love of carpentry took him all over the Magic Valley building houses and log cabins. His affinity for building eventually took him outside the Magic Valley, from Fairfield, where he built a log chapel for the Methodist Church Camp, to Alaska.

Though he worked very hard to support his family, he never forgot why he worked. He always found time to spend with his family and friends camping, hunting and fishing, as well as attending school events. He was well known as a community supporter as a member of the Wendell Masonic Lodge, a volunteer Wendell firefighter and a Wendell athletic booster, especially during Scott's basketball season.

Norman and Hazel were married nearly 25 years. After divorcing, Norman moved to the Treasure Valley, where he again did what he loved as he built and remodeled houses. Though he loved to work, he loved his family more. He was a proud father, a very proud grandpa and a very, very proud great-grandpa. Through all the many hospital visits and medical scares that he gave those he loved, he proved to us all that he was not just a fighter but a winner. He often mentioned that he was holding out to become a great-grandpa, a promise he kept when he held Lucas Wilmot for the first time in April of 2009. He never lost his sense of humor and he never put up with any bull, especially not from the nursing staff. His reasons for fighting surrounded his bed at every turn, and he never lost sight of the purposes of his struggle.

Norman is survived by his daughter, Patricia Walker White and granddaughters, Allison, Erin and Megan, all of Caldwell; son, Scott Walker, with wife Barbara, grandson LeRoy Walker-Sandoval, and granddaughter, Devin Wilmot, with husband Joshua, and great-grandchild, Luke, all of Jerome. He is also survived by his sister, Gail Brower, with husband Ray; his brother, Lewis Walker, with wife Betty; and a sister-in-law, Delores Walker; not to mention numerous nieces and nephews, many cousins and close friends including lifelong friends, the Kimbrough family and companion, Christine Cruickshank. He was preceded in death by his parents and his brother, Loren Walker.

A funeral service will be conducted at 11 a.m. Saturday, July 18, at Farnsworth Mortuary Chapel, 1343 S. Lincoln in Jerome, with Joshua Wilmot and family officiating.

Norm's family wishes to thank the many community members and hospital staff who helped care for him throughout his stays. His sense of humor, his love and support will be deeply missed.

Wade passed away Jan. 15, 1968. Anna Belle married Dean Vickers on Dec. 21, 1974. They enjoyed many years of travel, family and friends until Dean's passing on Dec. 27, 1997.

Anna Belle was an active and talented lady. She enjoyed gardening, fishing, crocheting, knitting, bowling, golfing, RV traveling and her beautiful china painting. She volunteered at the hospital as a pink lady, and was a member of the Moroa Club, Eastern Star and Filer Baptist Church.

Donations in memory of Anna Belle may be made to Camp Rainbow Gold, in care of ACS, 2676 Vista Ave., Boise, ID 83705.

A visitation for Anna Belle will be held between 6 and 7:30 p.m. Thursday, July 16, at White Mortuary "Chapel by the Park," 136 Fourth Ave. E. in Twin Falls. A funeral service will be held at 11 a.m. Friday, July 17, at White Mortuary, with Pastor Gary Gillman of the Filer Baptist Church officiating. Alan H. Humphrey BREMERTON, Wash. — Alan H. Humphrey, 55, passed away in Bremerton, Wash., on Thursday, June 18, 2009.

Alan was born in Twin Falls on July 6, 1953, to Hugh H. and Helen Humphrey. Alan grew up in Idaho and moved to Poulso, Wash., in the early 1980s. Alan was a master builder of homes for family and friends and as a profession in several western states. After graduating from Twin Falls High School in 1971, Alan and a few friends lived briefly in Barcelona, Spain, where their adventures became stories told to this day. Alan also traveled to the Sierra Madre Canyons of northern Mexico to visit the Tarahumara tribes.

Occasionally returning to Idaho, Alan worked summers as a rafting guide and led many trips on the primitive Middle Fork of the Salmon River. Alan bought five acres of wooded property in Poulso, Wash., in the mid 1980s, and lived an "off the grid" lifestyle. He created a system of generators and other curious devices to enable him to live comfortably for a number of years, even though winters were challenging. Alan loved backpacking and hiking in the Olympic Mountain range. He and his brother, David, twice conquered the "Brothers" peak. Alan also lived in Arizona for a few years, where he continued his work in construction and the highlight was a hike in the Grand Canyon to swim in the waters of Havasupai Falls.

Alan spent many Merry Christmas days at his sister's house in Shoshone, always bringing special and unique gifts for everyone. Alan was a strong mentor for his partner's grandson, Taylor. They learned to snowboard together and build many things and erected a tepee structure from trees on his property. Alan's loving heart and helpful ways were gifts to all who knew him.

Alan is survived by his sister, Carol Konklin (Ron); his brother, David Humphrey; niece, Holly Giltner; nephew, Jay Conklin; and life partner, Patti Prine.

We will love you always. A celebration of Alan's life will be held in Idaho at a later date. Please sign the guestbook at www.tuellmckee-bremerton.com.

Roy Neil Beutler

Our 'Angel' Brother — Roy Beutler passed away quietly at the Heritage Park Care Center in Roy, Utah, on Tuesday, July 14, 2009. He was born November 6, 1953, in Burley, a son of Jesse and Arthella (Pike) Beutler.

Although he suffered from some lifelong limitations associated with his seizures and mental disabilities, Roy gave a large part of his loving heart to everyone in which he came into contact. Small and simple things gave him overwhelming joy in his life: He loved the color "yellow," playing with his Legos, shooting hoops with basketballs, holding and loving cats, and tickling family members when they were sad.

He was a sincere and devoted member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He rarely missed church unless he was sick. He loved saving pennies and would readily tell anyone that he had to "pay his tithing" with them.

Roy's celestial qualities were genuine, and they far-outweighed any positions or peer accolades he would have received if he had not had disabilities. Roy was never called to a position in the church, but he unofficially took upon himself the position of a door greeter at church. Every Sunday, he faithfully shook the bishopric members' hands. This voluntary service was apparent every Sunday unless he was sick.

This service also extended to making everyone happy.

Sometimes his handicap noticeably made others feel uncomfortable. At times, it seemed as if they couldn't bring themselves to shake his hand, but Roy remained undaunted as he "placed himself in their invisible circle" and gave them a big cheesy smile then added, "I'm smiling at you!" This genuine outward expression from Roy usually broke the ice and one couldn't resist acknowledging his gesture of his kindness. He loved everyone and could often be heard saying, "Jesus said love everybody."

Although Roy's disabilities limited him from all the experiences he could have had, his continued optimism was a blessing to everyone with which he came into contact.

His optimism was often contagious. He blessed our lives by his good example in countless and simple ways. Several times during the week, he talked freely about how much he loved Jesus and Heavenly Father. He was often our family's anchor to them. He truly was, our "angel" brother. Simply put, "Roy helped us grow into being better people."

Roy was preceded in death by his father, Jesse Beutler; and his mother, Arthella Pike Beutler. He is survived by his 11 brothers and sisters, Clyde (Vicki) Beutler, Calvin (Marilyn) Beutler, Elaine (Max) Leavitt, Alma (Jean) Beutler, Elmo (Judy) Beutler, Miriam (Kevin) Lowry, Tim Beutler, Bonnie (David) Flandro, Rosie (Tug) Wagstaff, Nathan (Vanessa) Beutler and Bob Beutler.

A memorial service will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday, July 18, at the Hansen-Payne Mortuary Chapel, 321 E. Main St. in Burley. Friends may call from 10 to 11 a.m. prior to the service. Internment will be at the View Cemetery in Burley.

Condolences may be posted at www.hansen-paynemortuary.com.

Raymond Aubrey Cone

BURLEY — Raymond Aubrey Cone, 86, of Burley, passed away Monday, July 13, 2009, in Boise.

Raymond was born Aug. 22, 1922, in Adrian, Ore., the son of Aubrey Bertram and Edna Ferrell Cone. He married Bette Ann Peden on July 25, 1942, in Caldwell. He served in the U.S. Army in the European Theater as a PFC with the Headquarters Battery 492nd Armored Field Artillery Battalion. It was announced that they had played a major roll in the fight to save Bastogne.

After his military service, Raymond and Bette moved to Kooskia, where they dry land farmed for several years. As Raymond always wanted to farm irrigated land, they moved to Parma for a short period. They then moved to Moses Lake, Wash., where they farmed in Hiawatha Valley. Raymond then left farming to become a meat cutter with Safeway in Moses Lake. He was transferred to Colfax, Wash., where he served as the meat department manager. Safeway then asked him to go to Newport, Wash., where he served as the meat department manager. After leaving Safeway, Raymond and Bette moved to Nampa for a short period, then relocating in Blackfoot, where Raymond eventually began working with Basic American Foods in maintenance until his retirement. Raymond and Bette spent summers in Blackfoot and winters in Quartzsite, Ariz.

Bette preceded Raymond in death in 2002.

Raymond married Naomi Greener on April 4, 2003, and the marriage was solemnized Sept. 30, 2004, in the Idaho Falls LDS Temple. Ray and Naomi continued to spend winters in Quartzsite, Ariz. Raymond enjoyed talking, woodworking and visiting with friends. He was an active member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

He is survived by his wife, Naomi; sons, Richard Cone and wife, Nancy of Moses Lake, Wash., and Duane Cone and wife, Diane of Nampa, Idaho; and daughter, Ginger Kelsey and husband, Steve of Aberdeen; three grandsons; three granddaughters; five great-grandsons; and four great-granddaughters. Also surviving him are two stepchildren; Kevin (Cami) Greener and Beth Ann Cooper; and six step-grandchildren.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Monday, July 20, at the Burley LDS 7th Ward Chapel, 2200 Oakley Ave. Burial will be at 3 p.m. Monday at the Riverside Thomas Cemetery in Blackfoot. Condolences may be left for the family at www.hansen-paynemortuary.com.

Oldest woman to give birth dies, leaving twins

MADRID (AP) — A Spanish woman who deceived a U.S. fertility clinic about her age and become the oldest woman to give birth has died at 69, leaving behind 2-year-old twins, newspapers reported Wednesday.

Maria del Carmen Bousada gave birth in December 2006 after telling a clinic in Los Angeles that she was 55, the facility's maximum age for single women receiving in-vitro fertilization. Guinness World Records said the 66-year-old was the oldest on record to give birth and the case ignited fierce debate over how much responsibility fertility clinics have over their patients.

Bousada told an interviewer at the time that the Pacific Fertility Center did not ask her for identification, and maintained that because her mother had died at 101, she stood a good chance of living long enough to raise her children.

Dr. Vicken Sahakian, director and owner of the clinic, said Bousada falsified her birth date on documents from Spain.

When he learned of the deception, "I figured something might happen and wind up being a disaster for these kids, and unfortunately I was right," he said.

It's easy for women to lie to their doctors, he said.

"We don't ask for passports, obviously," Sahakian said. "When is the last time you went to a doctor and he asked you for a birth certificate?"

In search of youth at British

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press writer

TURNBERRY, Scotland — British bookmakers have listed Rory McIlroy as the third favorite at Turnberry, unusual for someone playing in his first British Open as a pro.

Stranger still is that he doesn't seem fazed, perhaps because his age (20) matches the odds (20-1). McIlroy already has shown in small doses that he is capable.

He comes from Holywood — a coastal town in Northern Ireland, not to be confused with the glitz of Los Angeles — and already is easily recognized by his freckles and curly brown hair that tumbles out of his cap and over his ears. He made his British Open debut as a teenager two years ago at Carnoustie and opened with a 68 on the toughest links in golf.

And without knowing it, he can put on quite the exhibition.

On a surprisingly sun-splashed day along the Ayrshire Coast, McIlroy found a flat part of the putting green Wednesday, and his caddie marked off 8 feet with a chalk line. The kid rapped three balls at a time, stopping to chat, constantly smiling, not really paying attention.

He made 105 putts in a row, seemed to lose interest, then moved on to another hole 30 feet away.

One reason he is getting so much attention, beyond the talent that allowed him to win the Dubai Desert Classic this year and rise to No. 22 in the world ranking, is the constant search for someone to challenge Tiger Woods.

Even at golf's oldest championship, the focus turns to youth.

McIlroy will be playing the first two rounds with 24-year-old Anthony Kim, who is No. 15 in the world and an

Gooding's Eames aims to bring home hardware in final trip to New Mexico

By Bradley Guire

GOODING — Rodeo is life for Cy Eames. Through the years, the Gooding cowboy has battled to make it to the top in Idaho rodeo, and now comes his final chance to take the next step and claim a national championship. The first performance of the National High School Finals Rodeo kicks off Sunday in Farmington, N.M., and the 2009 graduate will compete in calf roping and team roping.

The living room of his family's house is littered with leather saddles and dozens of high-shine buckles, which line numerous window sills and the fireplace mantle. Eames, who considers rodeo both an art and a science, admittedly eats, sleeps and breathes the sport. Beyond the events and practices, there's a lot of work to do with the animals, particularly the horses. Still, he makes time for school, friends and girls.

"It's not a job until you go to the rodeo,"

Local cowboys, cowgirls excited as NHSFR nears

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

Cowboys and cowgirls from around Districts V and VI are gearing up for the big trip to Farmington, N.M., and the 2009 National High School Finals Rodeo.

The top four placers in each event at June's state finals in Pocatello advanced to the national level, and that number includes 14 area competitors, led by Cody Wadsworth and Cy Eames, who were the All-Around Cowboys in their respective districts. Eames was the state's All-Around Cowboy as well, and he is set to compete in team roping and calf roping. Kimberly's Wadsworth had hoped to qualify with his brothers, Tyler and Jade, but must go it alone in bull riding and calf roping.

Brady Manning of Oakley advances as the state saddle bronc champion, while Eames and Justin Parke go as the reigning team roping champs. Parke was also the state's calf roping champion.

Manning has competed at nationals in cutting, so the experience of the massive event shouldn't hold many surprises.

"I'm excited to go," he said. "Just stay on three (go-rounds), and you should place."

Declò's Tanisha Adams, the state barrel racing champion, will be in New Mexico, along with cutting

Favre 'running out of time' to make decision on return

By Chris Talbott
Associated Press writer

HATTIESBURG, Miss. — Brett Favre acknowledged he's "running out of time" to decide whether he'll play for the Minnesota Vikings this season.

The quarterback told The Associated Press on Wednesday that he'll give the Vikings an answer on whether he'll play by the July 30 start of training camp. Favre has been working out with the Oak Grove High School football team three days a week all summer, but added a Sunday workout this week.

"There's two weeks left and I'm doing everything I can," Favre said. "I was down here Sunday morning working out. I'm trying to get everything to where I feel 100 percent when I go in. I can't go in any less. When you're 39 years old, it's hard enough. But it's getting there."

The former Packers and Jets quarterback said surgery to repair a biceps tendon in his throwing arm was successful and that he has enough velocity to return to the NFL. He's just not sure whether that means he'll be able to compete for an entire season.

"I felt like going to New York last year that I still had it," Favre said. "I didn't know my arm was hurt at the time. So that's what I try to get across to people. I had that fixed, the surgery to fix that, so I'm trying to make sure that if I go back that part is completely resolved."

It sure looked like it Wednesday morning, when a jovial Favre hit a variety of passes to high school and college wide receivers. He was crisp on short timing passes and was hitting receivers in the end zone from about 50 yards away. He attempted a few deep passes off bootlegs and usually hit his targets in stride.

Cavendish sprints for fourth stage win, Armstrong still 3rd

By Jerome Pugmire
Associated Press writer

SAINT-FARREAU, France — Mark Cavendish won the 11th stage of the Tour de France on Wednesday, Rinaldo Nocentini of Italy held onto the yellow jersey and Lance Armstrong remained third overall.

Armstrong finished safely in the main pack, with his Astana teammate Alberto Contador narrowly ahead of him in second place overall after Wednesday's 119-mile trek from Vatan to Saint-Farreau.

Nocentini leads Contador by six seconds and Armstrong by eight.

"I feel in very good shape," Nocentini said. "I hope to keep the yellow jersey."

Nocentini was among the riders who fell in two early crashes, giving Belgian rider Johan Van Summeren and Marcin Sapa of Poland the opportunity to break away after 18.7 miles.

"I was in a fall, but nothing too serious. I didn't hurt myself," Nocentini said. "I managed to get back up and finish calmly."

Cavendish sealed his second straight stage win and fourth of the Tour, tying the British record with eight career victories. He finished about half a bike length ahead of American Tyler Farrar in a sprint finish on a flat stage. The 24-year-old Cavendish finished in 4 hours, 17 minutes, 55 seconds.

Armstrong, who did not stop for reporters after the stage, finished in 54th place. Contador was 43rd.

"Fast start, crashes a plenty, then a breakaway," Armstrong wrote on his Twitter feed. "Ended up being pretty relaxed. Cav wins again. (No.) 4 for him. Congrats to him!"

Cavendish took the green jersey from Thor Hushovd of Norway, who finished fifth, and equaled British rider Barry Hoban's tally of eight Tour stage wins.

"I was able to get the jump on Thor and win, so it was perfect," Cavendish said. "It was just beautiful the way the guys could adapt to the situation and deliver me to the sprint."

Cavendish will defend the green jersey on another flat stage Thursday, a 131-mile trek from Tonnerre to Vittel featuring six small hills. The course again favors sprinters, and time differences are unlikely to be significant among the top three.

MLB: SECOND-HALF PREVIEW

All eyes on AL East, NL West

By Jay Cohen

Associated Press writer

Roy Halladay got a warm greeting from St. Louis fans during the red-carpet parade for the All-Star game. They chanted "We want Roy!" as he sat on the back of a vehicle and waved.

Get in line. The Blue Jays ace is sure to be a popular guy over the next couple weeks.

Halladay's future is the most pressing question as baseball revs up for an intriguing second half, with muddled division races that once again could come down to the final days. General manager J.P. Ricciardi is listening to offers for the 2003 AL Cy Young Award winner, making the right-hander the biggest chip on the open market ahead of the July 31 non-waiver trade deadline.

Halladay could tip the balance in the AL East if the Yankees, Red Sox or Rays make the best offer, or boost Philadelphia's chances of winning a second consecutive World Series. Contending teams across baseball are salivating at the thought of inserting the ace into their rotation.

"Obviously, I'm somewhere that I enjoy being and have spent my entire career. There's a lot, I think, that goes into it," said Halladay, who would have to agree to any deal. "I think as a player, there's that will to win, that will to do it in October and basically that's what all of this has been about. I would like that chance."

Any number of clubs would love to give him that opportunity, including each of Toronto's biggest rivals in the East. The Blue Jays' division is still the toughest in baseball, showing off its top-to-bottom strength during the American League's 4-3 victory over the NL on Tuesday night at Busch Stadium.

Tampa Bay's Carl Crawford made a highlight-reel catch and won the MVP award. Boston closer Jonathan Papelbon got the decision and New York's Mariano Rivera finished for his record fourth All-Star save. Even lowly Baltimore got into the act, with Adam Jones hitting a tiebreaking sacrifice fly in the eighth inning.

The Blue Jays, who dropped back after a fast start, are talented enough to hurt the division's top teams down the stretch, even if they decide to trade their best pitcher. Boston and New

"As a player, there's that will to win, that will to do it in October and basically that's what all of this has been about. I would like that chance."

— Toronto pitcher Roy Halladay, on the possibility of being traded York were tied for the lead heading into the final weekend of the first half, but the Red Sox won three straight against Kansas City and the Yankees were swept by the Angels.

Don't forget about the defending AL champion Rays, either. Tampa Bay was 6½ games back.

"We have a small payroll. We're always going to be underdogs, and I love that," Rays slugger Carlos Pena said. "To know that we haven't played I think up to our full potential, and we're still in the race, is comforting."

The Phillies weren't waiting around to see what the Blue Jays decide to do with Halladay. The NL East leaders agreed to a $1 million, one-year contract with Pedro Martinez over the All-Star break and are hoping the three-time Cy Young winner can help them down the stretch after a couple of minor-league rehab starts.

"I still feel like this team needs a little help, very little help," Martinez said Wednesday. "I think I can supply a little bit of it. I'm not going to say all of it, but a little bit of it. That's what we're counting on."

The Phillies have been hurt by injuries to their starting rotation. They already have used nine starters through 86 games, compared with seven all of last season.

San Francisco's loaded rotation was able to stay healthy much of the first half, leading to a renaissance in the Bay Area. Powered by All-Star starter Tim Lincecum and Matt Cain, the Giants were leading the NL wild-card race and seven back of the West-leading Dodgers.

The Colorado Rockies, who fired manager Clint Hurdle in May and replaced him with Jim Tracy, won 17 of 18 during one torrid stretch in June and closed the first half with a 27-9 run to get back into contention.

"The pitching has been far superior this year than it has been in past years," Giants closer Brian Wilson said, "especially on our team."

he said. His resume so far is impressive. He is the 2009 Idaho All-Around Cowboy and a three-time District V All-Around Cowboy, and he was the district's Reserve Cowboy in 2007 and the Rookie Cowboy in 2006. This year marks the third time he has qualified for the NHSFR (in different events), but Eames was unable to compete as a sophomore in 2007 because of health complications. Eames said that missing out on his first NHSFR was tough on him.

While he was able to compete in the 2008 nationals, he has yet to make the final go.

He aims to remedy that soon.

"I plan on winning," he said.

His roping partner for many years, Justin Parke, praised his work ethic.

"He cares a lot about rodeo. It's a big deal in our lives," Parke said. Parke qualified for last year's NHSFR in tie-down roping while Eames rode saddle bronc. Together, they have won the district team roping saddles two years running as well as this year's Idaho saddle, and they'll compete one more time in New Mexico.

Parke said that they've switched off between heading and heeling and that the most success has come when Eames took the head and he heeled. It's tricky to get down as both cowboys have to click, Parke said, but he is confident in his partner.

"I'm excited myself," Parke said. "This year, we've got a better chance to come home with a title. Putting it together is a big deal that people may not understand. It's about chemistry. Everybody ropes different. There's so much that can go wrong."

Eames' sister, Italy, was the 2002 IHSFR All-Around Cowgirl and competed with the University of Nevada-Las Vegas. She practices with Eames often, and they rodeo together alongside Italy's husband, Brett Sheehan, in the Idaho Cowboys Association. She's another that can attest to her younger brother's passion for rodeo.

"He has lots of desire," she said. "You have to have it to stick with it, through good times and hard times."

One thing Eames has never had to do is try to go this alone. With his partner and the help of his sister, brother-in-law, parents and grandparents, he's been able to achieve whatever he wants in rodeo.

This fall, he'll leave for Pocatello, where he'll rodeo with Idaho State University. He intends on competing and winning at the College National Finals Rodeo and eventually turning pro.

Stimpson is going to her first NHSFR and will go with a new horse. When her primary horse died recently, her aunt, Lorie Greenwell, allowed her to use one of her horses. Most of all, Stimpson said that if she can have clean go-rounds, everything should work out for her in the end.

The first performance is scheduled for Sunday night, and the finals begin on Saturday, July 25.

Pedro Martinez ready for return to Phillies

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Pedro Martinez promised to put on quite a show when he returns to the majors with the Philadelphia Phillies.

The NL East leaders are hoping it will be a vintage performance.

Martinez finalized a $1 million, one-year contract with the Phillies on Wednesday, and can earn up to $1.5 million in incentives. The three-time Cy Young Award winner hasn't pitched since last season and won only eight games in 25 starts over his final two seasons with the Mets.

"I might surprise you, I might not," Martinez said. "It's going to be really fun to go find out."

The Phillies are hoping Martinez has enough left to help them repeat as World Series champions. His dominating 20-win, 200-strikeout seasons are well behind him, but a healthy Martinez could provide a boost to a starting rotation that has been hit hard by injuries.

"I don't expect to be the same Pedro that I was when I was 26," the 37-year-old right-hander said. "There's a lot of innings I've pitched since then. It's not the same, but I still feel like I can still bring something to the table."

Martinez will need at least a few starts in the minors before he's ready to join Philadelphia's depleted rotation. The eight-time All-Star was placed on the 15-day disabled list with a shoulder strain but will be with the Phillies for their four-game series in Florida beginning Thursday.

General manager Ruben Amaro Jr. said he could pitch for the major league team in two to three weeks.

"Of course there's some risk here," Amaro said. "But we'd rather risk it on someone of his caliber and who knows how to win."

The risk stems from Martinez's age, his 2,700-plus career innings and the three consecutive injury-riddled seasons that derailed his career in New York. He made frequent trips home to the Dominican Republic last year to visit his dying father, an emotional burden he couldn't shed once he got the ballpark.

"The last few years have been horrible," Martinez said. "I'm not saying horrible because of the results. I haven't felt the way I wanted to feel. I wasn't the same Pedro you were accustomed to seeing."

The free agent pitched in the World Baseball Classic before this season. He went 5-6 with a 5.61 ERA for the Mets last year, and won only 32 games for them over the life of a $53-million, four-year contract.

Phelps defeats Woods to win male athlete at ESPYs

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Michael Phelps won a leading five ESPY Awards, including male athlete of the year, ending the five-year reign of Tiger Woods, who earned his record 22nd trophy.

The 14-time Olympic gold medalist also collected trophies Wednesday night for record-breaking performance, championship performance, and male Olympian while sharing the best moment award as part of the victorious 400-meter freestyle swimming relay at the Beijing Games.

Phelps won a record eight gold medals in Beijing, breaking Mark Spitz's 36-year-old record of seven golds in a single games.

Olympic all-around gymnastics champion Nastia Liukin won female athlete of the year.

British

explosive talent. Martin Kaymer, the 24-year-old German, is coming off consecutive victories on the European Tour and can become the first player since Seve Ballesteros in 1986 to make it three in a row.

Among the "older set" are 29-year-old Sergio Garcia and Adam Scott, who turns 29 on Thursday when the British Open begins.

So far, it has been a hopeless pursuit.

Woods set an obscure PGA Tour record two weeks ago when he won his AT&T National at Congressional for his 53rd victory this decade, topping the previous record of Ben Hogan, who won 52 times in the 1940s.

His 12 majors this decade is another record.

Woods is 0-for-2 in the majors this year since returning from knee surgery, both times giving himself a chance on Sunday, both times finishing in a tie for sixth, four shots behind Masters champion Angel Cabrera and U.S. Open champion Lucas Glover.

"He's not just another player," McIlroy said. "I remember when I first came out and I talked to Tiger, and I was even nervous talking to him. He just has some sort of aura about him, you know? He's just an incredible competitor. He hits shots that ... I wouldn't be able to hit sometimes. He's not won 14 majors for nothing. And I'm sure he'll win a few more before his career is over."

Woods returns to the United Kingdom for the first time in two years, having missed the British Open last year at Royal Birkdale while recovering from knee surgery.

He showed up at Turnberry on Wednesday only to hit balls on the range and rap a few putts, sticking to a routine that has worked fairly well for him in the majors.

One thing McIlroy has in his favor is having never faced Woods.

"It's been more inspirational for me, rather than disheartening, that this guy is coming to win every major he plays," McIlroy said.

Kim played with him for the first time at Congressional in the final group, tied for the lead, hit one bad stretch of bogeys and pars and wound up chasing him the rest of the day.

Garcia might have won a few majors by now except for Woods.

It was 10 years ago when he first challenged Woods in the PGA Championship at Medinah, finishing one shot behind. They played in the final group at the 2002 U.S. Open at Bethpage Black and the 2006 British Open at Hoylake, both won easily by Woods.

Garcia is still without a major, still answering questions about winning his first, and not enjoying the topic.

"The most important thing for me is obviously winning it," said Garcia, listed at 15-to-1 odds.

NASCAR: Mayfield again tests positive for meth

The Associated Press

Jeremy Mayfield tested positive again for methamphetamine, NASCAR said, igniting another round of denials from the driver, who angrily accused the sanctioning body of paying his stepmother to lie about his alleged past drug use.

The positive result from a July 6 random test was included in a U.S. District Court filing Wednesday that asked the federal judge who lifted Mayfield's drug suspension to reinstate the ban. The filing included an affidavit from Mayfield's stepmother, Lisa, who said she witnessed the driver using methamphetamine at least 30 times over seven years.

"I don't trust anything NASCAR does, anything Dr. David Black does, never have, never will," Mayfield told The Associated Press in a phone interview. Black is the administrator for NASCAR's drug-testing program.

"And they picked the wrong woman to use against me because that (expletive) is trash and has got nothing on me but lies."

According to documents, Lisa Mayfield said she first saw the driver use meth in 1998 at a race shop in Mooresville, N.C. She said Mayfield cooked his own drugs until the ingredient pseudoephedrine was taken off the shelves and it became too difficult to get money from NASCAR by giving them an affidavit full of lies," he said.

Mayfield was suspended May 9 for failing a random drug test conducted eight days earlier. NASCAR later said he tested positive for methamphetamine.

He sued, and U.S. District Court Judge Graham Mullen issued an injunction July 1 that allowed Mayfield to return to competition. Mullen based his decision on Mayfield's argument that the testing system is flawed and there was a reasonable likelihood of a false positive. He also gave NASCAR the right to test Mayfield at any time.

NASCAR did just that five days later at Mayfield's home and said in its filings that the "A" sample had levels of methamphetamine consistent with habitual users who consume high doses.

"My only comment is that's their result," Mayfield attorney John Buric said. "But what I want you to keep in mind is that test was performed by the defendants in the case. Aegis Laboratories and Dr. Black are defendants in this case. I don't know if NASCAR has the right to ask the defendant to test Jeremy's urine sample. It ought to be done independently, but NASCAR didn't do that."

On July 6, Mayfield also had a second test at a lab chosen by his attorneys. Buric said that test came back negative but was sent back to the lab Wednesday for "reconfirmation" after the NASCAR test results were received.

Lakers retract offer to Lamar Odom after contract talks stall

LOS ANGELES — The Los Angeles Lakers retracted a contract offer to Lamar Odom, saying that talks to re-sign the free agent have stalled.

Lakers public relations director John Black said the team had taken the offer off the table in the past two days.

"There are specifics behind why we pulled it, but that's not something we're going to get into," Black said.

According to the Los Angeles Times, Lakers owner Jerry Buss had offered Odom two deals. One was worth $36 million for four years and the other was for $10 million a season for three years.

Odom, who will turn 30 in November, made $14.1 million this past season.

Black said talks with Odom's agent Jeff Schwartz have been on and off.

"We haven't heard from him in the past few days and talks have not been consistent," Black said.

Odom played a key role off the bench in the Lakers' championship run. He averaged 12.3 points and 9.1 rebounds during the playoffs.

Had Suggs not signed, he would have played the season for $10.17 million and become a free agent next season.

McNair leaves no will

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The widow of slain former NFL quarterback Steve McNair says in court documents that her husband left no will and a judge in Nashville has ruled that she will oversee his estate.

Davidson County Probate Judge Randy Kennedy granted Mechelle McNair's request to administer the estate and gave her 60 days to file an inventory of her late husband's assets. She says in court documents that she did not know her late husband's worth, but documents contend it is "of sufficient size to be administered."

Police say McNair was shot to death on July 4 by a girlfriend who later turned the gun on herself. Nashville police have ruled it a murder-suicide.

Mechelle McNair listed herself and her two sons, Tyler and Trenton McNair, as the heirs to the estate. McNair also has two other sons from a previous relationship.

NFL LB Suggs signs with Ravens

BALTIMORE — Ravens linebacker Terrell Suggs signed a six-year, $63 million contract Wednesday, making him the highest-paid linebacker in NFL history.

The contract, which assures him $38 million in guaranteed money, provides a long-term solution to Suggs' unsettled status as the team's franchise player.

"I'm looking forward to showing them that they didn't make a mistake and they got the right guy," said Suggs, the Ravens' franchise player for the past two seasons. The 6-foot-3, 260-pounder had until 4 p.m. Wednesday to work out a deal or face being stuck with the franchise tag for another year.

"I am glad it is over. Now we can get back to football," Suggs said.

TENNIS Gasquet cleared to play

LONDON — Richard Gasquet escaped a lengthy doping ban Wednesday when the International Tennis Federation's tribunal panel ruled that he inadvertently took cocaine by kissing a woman in a Miami nightclub after withdrawing from a tournament.

The 23-year-old Frenchman, who was cleared to resume playing after completing a 2 1/2-month ban on Wednesday, convinced the independent anti-doping tribunal that he ingested cocaine with the kiss with the woman he had just met.

The tribunal panel of three lawyers said Gasquet consumed no more than "a grain of salt" of the drug, and a long ban would be an injustice in a case which was "unusual to the point of being probably unique."

The ITF, which had sought a two-year ban under the terms of the World Anti-Doping Agency's code, was told to impose a retroactive ban of 2 months, 15 days. That cleared 32nd-ranked Gasquet to resume playing.

The tribunal said Gasquet's rights to practice his profession would be infringed by a one-year suspension, though it was required to find that a doping offense was committed.

It also noted that Gasquet would be banned for life if he tested positive for a banned drug a second time.

Influential? NFL players tackle lawmakers

By Frederic J. Frommer
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Pro football players swept across Capitol Hill on Wednesday and asked lawmakers to take a tough look at owners' profits as the two sides prepare to decide how to divide their big pot of TV money and other revenues.

During the lobbying visits, the NFL players' union head urged members of Congress to consider the potential impact of labor strife on retired and disabled players. They could see their benefits cut unless there is a deal soon, executive director DeMaurice Smith said.

The contract between players and owners doesn't expire for two years, but only one more season will have a salary cap. When that goes, Smith said, so does the league's responsibility for paying its share of benefits for retired and disabled players. The league denies that.

"I don't think it's morally right" for those athletes to see their benefits reduced "when a league makes $8 billion a year," Smith said during a meeting with Rep. Linda Sanchez, D-Calif., and several players.

But NFL Vice President Joe Browne said in an e-mail that "there is nothing in the collective bargaining agreement that terminates pensions or disability benefits to our retired players in an uncapped year and it is wrong to suggest that this may occur if there is an uncapped season in 2010."

Two years ago, Sanchez held a hearing that highlighted problems

Members of the NFL players union, from left, former Oakland Raiders Nolan Harrison, Takeo Spikes of the San Francisco 49ers, Kevin Mawae of the Tennessee Titans, and Joe Thomas of the Cleveland Browns, wait outside the office of Rep. Barbara Lee, D-Calif., Wednesday on Capitol Hill in Washington.

The players have countered with a union-commissioned study that showed the average value of a team has grown from $288 million to $1.04 billion over 10 years.

It may be hard to feel sympathetic for athletes with seven-figure salaries. But the union is trying to connect with lawmakers by stressing the plight of retirees, many of whom played before the era of big money, as well as stadium workers.

Sen. Arlen Specter, D-Pa., popped out of Supreme Court nominee Sonia Sotomayor's confirmation hearing to meet with Smith and the players, telling them he'd be willing to "dig into your issues" to help avoid a work stoppage. Specter has taken on the NFL on a number of issues, including an investigation into "Spygate," the controversy that began when a New England Patriots employee was caught in the 2007 season opener filming New York Jets defensive signals.

"The NFL enjoys a luxurious antitrust exemption, so Congress has some power," he told reporters. While stressing he didn't know yet who was right or wrong, he said, "I do know it's not in the public's interest to have the football season interrupted," because of the excitement the sport generates for fans and its economic impact.

The players also met with a kindred spirit: Rep. Heath Shuler, D-N.C., a former NFL quarterback.

"It's great to see the current and former members of the National Football League Players Association working together to take strong stances on the issues that are important," he said in a statement.

the retirees had in fighting through red tape while trying to overcome multiple surgeries, dementia and homelessness.

Sanchez told Smith that his predecessor, the late Gene Upshaw, seemed more concerned with current than retired players. Smith responded that the union has a "moral obligation" to retired players. "We've all embraced change," he said.

"I'm glad to hear that," said Sanchez.

Kansas City Chiefs linebacker Mike Vrabel told Sanchez that the union had sought a leader who could help bridge the gap between current and retired players.

Smith also wants help in getting the NFL to open its books. He said Congress has leverage because of the benefits it provides to the league, including an antitrust exemption for broadcasting contracts. That exemption allows the NFL to sign TV contracts on behalf of all teams, helping to transform the league into an economic powerhouse.

The NFL's Browne responded: "Congressmen understand and passed laws to keep labor talks such as ours at the negotiating table and out of the halls of Congress."

About 20 current and former players fanned out across the Capitol in three teams, following a negotiating session a day earlier between players and owners on a new collective bargaining agreement. Players fear that owners are setting the stage for a lockout and hope Congress can use its influence to help prevent that.

Last year the owners voted to opt out of the current agreement in 2011, raising the possibility of a work stoppage in two years. Owners contend the existing agreement is too favorable for players, who get about 60 percent of revenues.

Favre

and he proved he still has plenty of zip when he tossed a deep pass to a college receiver who dropped by to work out. The pass split the receiver's hands and hit him in the face.

"He's a senior from Southeastern Louisiana, so I put a little more on it," Favre said with a smile.

Favre said if the arm strength wasn't there, he wouldn't be making a bid to return for his 19th season in the league.

"I don't think Minnesota would even consider it if I didn't have it," Favre said. "Second of all, I wouldn't even think about it if I didn't have it. Now, having it here and having in on the field on Sundays is two different things, I know that for a fact. I know what it takes to play on Sunday and I still believe I have that."

Favre said his hesitation is more about what those watching him practice might not see. He used a golfing analogy to explain his situation. What if, he asked, Tiger Woods came back and found he didn't have the same

"He goes out and hits a 2 iron and he thinks it will go the normal distance it has all his life, then all of a sudden it's 13 yards short, and he says, 'I don't know why that is because everything felt perfect,' so that's what I have to get through," Favre said.

"If you're throwing and it's a little off and you have a little pain, it's a little bit understandable. If there's no pain and there's no excuse, that's where you've got a problem. So I want to go out and have one of those days throwing and then have another where all of those throws you make, every warmup throw you make or just in general, feels perfect."

Favre was released by the Jets earlier this year, clearing the way for him to sign with any team willing to take him.

Dr. James Andrews performed surgery May 22 to address the injured biceps tendon, which hampered Favre down the stretch last season.

The Vikings have remained mostly quiet on the topic in recent weeks, preferring to let Favre work through his rehabilitation from the surgery and make up his own mind.

Having friends is essential for kids with special needs

DEAR ABBY: I am writing this in response to the letter from "Trying to Make a Difference in Ohio" (April 21). She is the 12-year-old girl who wants to help other students be more accepting of kids with special needs.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

My name is Anthony Kennedy Shriver, and I am the founder of Best Buddies International, a nonprofit dedicated to enhancing the lives of people with intellectual disabilities by providing opportunities for one-to-one friendships and integrated employment.

I would like to add one more piece of advice to yours. I'd advise "Trying to Make a Difference" to visit bestbuddies.org to find out how to get involved with Best Buddies and urge her friends to do the same. And when school starts again, if her school does not have a chapter, I would encourage them to start one. In friendship

I believe that friendship is the key to building the self-esteem essential to a happy and productive life, and that is why I started Best Buddies. In just two decades, Best Buddies has grown from one chapter to more than 1,400 chapters in 42 countries. Our six programs - Best Buddies Middle Schools, High Schools, Colleges, Citizens, e-Buddies and Jobs - positively impact more than 400,000 individuals with and without intellectual disabilities annually.

At Best Buddies, we envision a world where people with intellectual disabilities are recognized for their ABILITIES, embraced by society and valued in the workplace. Until that vision becomes a reality, we will continue to educate middle school, high school and college students; community members; corporations and employers about the emotional, functional and natural needs and abilities of people with intellectual disabilities. I also heard from their parents, describing what a huge difference just one child can make if he or she reaches out a hand in friendship.

DEAR ABBY: My son is autistic and was teased badly by his classmates. I worked with the school to address the issue. The school talked

IF JULY 16 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY:

Your ship may come in during the year to come. You may even see the smokestacks on the horizon within the next eight weeks when new friends and increased popularity may offer you a taste of additional opportunities. During October you may receive recognition or publicity, but what is really important is that you undergo a significant change in what you deem to be a motivating force in your life. December and January are full of hectic activity as you spin away in a social whirl. For the best results, make your most crucial decisions and commitments, and initiate significant new ventures, in April.

HOROSCOPE

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Today your chances of winning the pot, whether it consists of an attractive new hookup or buying into a new investment, are slim.

In 1790, a site along the Potomac River was designated the permanent seat of the U.S. government; the area became Washington.
In 1862, David G. Farragut became the first rear admiral in the United States Navy.
In 1909, the Audi auto company was founded in Zwickau, Germany, by August Horch under the name Horch Automobil-Werke. (A legal dispute resulted in Horch renaming the company Audiwerke the following year.)
In 1945, the United States exploded its first experimental atomic bomb, in the desert of Alamogordo, N.M.

ideas to those in authority.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be ready to lob the conversational ball back and forth with good grace. You may get a chance to sparkle in an intimate situation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Get your plans in order so you can enjoy the fabulous weekend ahead. People will trust you with privileged information.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Try looking at puzzles, problems or projects from a different perspective to reach an ideal solution. Work fast and trust intuitions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The quarters jingling in your pocket could end up glittering uselessly at the bottom of a wishing well if you make key purchases now.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Embrace new ideas or unexpected information. Networking could pay off even if you put off until tomorrow what you can do today.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Try physical activity to lift your spirits and restore vitality. A significant other might be in an amorous mood later this evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your instincts about the future are right, even if others doubt your forecast. You can't go wrong if you are compassionate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Get in the swing with style. A critical eye for fine detail and sensitive hands will make the things you touch "just right."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your sense of what's hot and what's not is right on target. Because you are able to walk the walk, you are a genius at what you do.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You can shine as the center of attention because it is obvious that you enjoy whatever you do. Touch base with old friends and new.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"I can see with half an eye."
— Miguel Cervantes

In today's deal from the Dyspeptics Club, neither North nor South did anything unreasonable to reach a thin spade game, but it would have required South to find a good play to bring home 10 tricks. Maybe North was optimistic in accepting South's invitation to game with such bad trumps and a possibly wasted club holding.

West cashed two top clubs, then paused for some while, trying to remember if East had echoed in clubs. Eventually he played a third club. Declarer ruffed in dummy and saw the danger of taking a trump finesse. If the cards lay as they actually did, West could win and lead a fourth club, letting East promote a trump trick for his partner by ruffing with his spade nine.

So South played the ace and queen of spades, a good try but not good enough. West won his king and switched to a heart. Declarer tried to ruff the third heart back to hand, but West could over-ruff for down one.

North is generally South's sternest critic, but even he was hard-pressed to berate South too severely on this occasion. Nonetheless, South had gone halfway down the road to success. It was a pity that he had not worked out that he needed to cash the two top hearts before playing the ace and queen of spades. That way, West must put declarer back in hand to draw the last trump, and the contract comes home.

ANSWER: There are two questions to address: Do you want to reopen the bidding, and if so, with what call? Since your side should have half the deck, it is reasonable to bid. Best would be two hearts because of the strong heart spots, rather than doubling for takeout or repeating a five-card spade suit.
