Two area schools part of new state network's beginning

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Two Magic Valley schools are among the first group of 12 schools that will be hooked into the state's Idaho Education Network that will provide expanded bandwidth to classrooms.

Jerome High School and Shoshone High School are both part of the initial schools throughout Idaho that are plugging into the network this year, which has the goal of providing expanded bandwidth to all Idaho's public high schools by 2012.

The network is being paid for with a combination of $2.95 million of federal stimulus money and another $8 million of federal dollars. The $2.95 million comes from discretionary stimulus funding that Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter earmarked for the network.

The goal is to have the expanded bandwidth at all 12 schools by Sept. 1. In 2012, the second phase will begin, which involves connecting middle schools, elementary schools and public libraries to the network, said Garry Lough, communications director for the network.

The decision to start with high schools was made because students at that level will have an interest in taking college-level courses, he said.

Other potential benefits are "virtual field trips" that give students a look at a faraway place, and connections that also extend between all the schools in the system.

"Those kids will get to travel virtually to places in the world or country that they wouldn't necessarily be exposed (to)," Lough said.

With a connection among the schools, a teacher offering a specialized course could become a class assessable elsewhere in the state, he said.

Clark Muscat, business manager for Jerome School District, said that the district's buildings are already connected with fiber, though students have trouble logging online when the system reaches its limitations for users. He's anticipating that the expanded bandwidth will reduce those times when the system is maxed out.

"We don't think we're going to have those points of maximum usage appear as much," said Muscat, who until recently was the high school's principal.

Shoshone School District Superintendent Mel Wiseman couldn't be reached for comment.

Workers contracted by the Doppelmayr Garaventa Group of Austria to build Sun Valley Co.'s new gondola on Bald Mountain install the tracks atop one tower Friday near Ketchum. When completed, 21 towers will hold up the eight-seat gondola, which will carry patrons the nearly 2,000 vertical feet between the River Run Lodge and the Roundhouse Restaurant.

Sun Valley Co. gondola project takes shape

KETCHUM — The unmistakable whir of helicopter rotors pierced the quiet of a Ketchum morning on Friday.

By the end of the day Bald Mountain's landscape featured 21 new gondola towers taking root among the evergreens lining the mountainside between Sun Valley Co.'s River Run Lodge at the mountain's base and Roundhouse restaurant nearly 2,000 feet up.

A narrow wedge-shaped Kaman K-Max helicopter designed to lift, transport and place heavy objects, started up at 7 a.m. Friday in the parking lot above the bike path that runs past River Run Lodge.

Within five minutes, it had dropped off the bottom half of the first tower and was on its way back to the lot to pick up the tower's upper part.

Survey: Wolves, fees keeping out-of-state hunters away

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

Concerns over wolves harming Idaho's elk population, fee increases and the national economy have kept out-of-state hunters away this year, according to an informal survey by the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

Sales of nonresident elk tags are down about 25 percent from one year ago, and deer tags about 31 percent, said Michael Keckler, chief of the agency's communications bureau. Out-of-state hunters provide nearly half of Fish and Game's license revenue, and Keckler estimates they contribute $441 million to the state's economy every year.

Area summer lunch programs see more kids in bad economy

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Area school district officials are seeing higher numbers of youngsters lining up for free summer meals at a time when the region suffers one of the worst economic slumps in recent years.

Through the federal Summer Food Program, school districts get reimbursed from the U.S. Department of Agriculture for free meals served to children from 1 to 18 years old. Because the program does not have income restrictions or require signing up in advance, school district officials weren't sure what, exactly, to expect at the start of summer.

Twin Falls School District has noticed one the largest increases compared to last year.

So far this summer, the district has served more than 40,000 meals. In June, the district served 39,502 meals, almost triple the 14,825 meals served in June 2008, said Beth Pendergrass, the district's spokeswoman.

"As to why, I could say the economy obviously is what people contribute that to," she said. "It just is a good balanced lunch at a great price for a lot of the youth in town."

Twin Falls School District's program wraps up Aug. 14.

Twin Falls Municipal golf pro Hamblin to get new contract from Council

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

The Twin Falls City Council is expected to approve tonight a new five-year contract with Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course PGA Professional Mike Hamblin.

City officials said the contract, which follows several months of negotiations, is designed to make the golf course solvent. Earlier this year, an advisory committee selected Hamblin to continue to manage the course over Rob Ellis, manager of Desert Canyon Golf Course in Mountain Home, and Fore Golf Inc., which manages two courses for the city of Pocatello.

Hamblin, a popular community figure for his contributions to junior golf, has been an independent contractor since 1998 and the course's head pro since 1986. He's been on an extended contract since last year as the city sought to make revisions, put it out to bid and save money.

The new contract has several changes, including paying Hamblin a flat salary, $40,000, and removing extraneous provisions such as Hamblin paying the city rent for the clubhouse — something Assistant City

Manager Travis Rothweiler described as "the city writes Mike a check and then Mike turns around and writes a check to the city."

"We wanted to make sure the process was much cleaner than what it was in the past," said Rothweiler. "We wanted to focus on the bigger picture and the operations of the golf course."

Additionally, Hamblin will receive all revenue from the driving range and golf cart fees. He will also receive revenue from the restaurant, golf shop, rentals and 12 days of exempted green fees for tournament play.

However, Hamblin is responsible for hiring and paying clubhouse and restaurant employees.

The city will continue to receive revenue from green fees, season passes, corporate memberships, locker

MORNING BRIEFING

Pat's Picks

Three things to do today

Pat Marcantonio

● Share your talents. Groups or solo performers are invited to entertain residents at Chardonay Assisted Living on Carriage Lane in Twin Falls on Thursday evenings. Information: Sebrina Messner, 736-4808.

● Take in entertainment and free ice cream, while raising money to beautify Burley, at the Burley Area Action Team Social in the Park from 6 to 8 p.m. at Storybook Park.

● While the Thousand Springs Preserve is the site of a popular fall festival, it is great to visit year-round. The water is clear and there's plenty of space to picnic. The spectacular setting comes complete with waterfalls, waterfowl and springs coming out of the canyon walls. Take Interstate 84 Exit 155 (Wendell), then turn south and drive three miles. Take a left onto 1500 East and drive 2.5 miles, then turn right onto 3200 South. Take this road for two miles. Turn left at the sign, followed by a quick right.

The pilot of a Kaman K-Max helicopter looks out of a bowed side window to line up a piece of the gondola with its base and workers below. According to the Kaman Aerospace Group's Web site, the K-Max can lift 6,000-pound loads, and is built for aerial construction jobs such as the Sun Valley Co. gondola project.

Gondola

In contrast, a truck loaded with photographers left the parking lot at the same time, heading up a dusty, winding road and before arriving at the Roundhouse 20 minutes later — after workers had all but assembled the first tower.

"I'm amazed at how smooth and quick the operation is," said Sun Valley Ski Patrolman Mike Davis. "And I'm so impressed that everyone still has their fingers."

The gondola will open Bald Mountain up to nonskiers, said Peter Stearns, Sun Valley's new director of mountain operations. It will transport diners and partygoers year-round to the 70-year-old Roundhouse for both lunch and dinner.

In addition, it will serve as the primary lift for hikers, sightseers and mountain bikers to access Bald Mountain beginning next summer. It will offer skiers a way to access intermediate slopes on Seattle Ridge without going to the mountaintop, and offer tired skiers an easy way down the mountain.

Sun Valley officials expect that the gondola will also create a buzz among skiers and boarders outside the valley.

Stearns and Davis watched Friday as two employees working for the Austria-based Doppelmayr Garaventa Group employees scaled the lower half a tower to guide in its upper half, dangling above from the helicopter.

Over the next half-hour the workers reached from their perch about 200 feet above the ground to catch a head frame and wheel tracks.

"The hardest part actually takes place the day before when you're getting everything ready," a worker from Utah shouted to the Times-

"This lift traverses some very steep, rocky terrain. We had to use dynamite and elbow grease with shovels and bars in a couple places."

— Peter Stearns, Sun Valley's director of mountain operations.

News as he awaited the delivery of the head frame. "If you're missing a link, this doesn't happen."

In a good year Doppelmayr installs about 50 gondolas and chairlifts worldwide, shouted another worker from Colorado. "This year, not so many."

A walking excavator or spider hoe capable of navigating 45-degree slopes dug most of the holes for the gondola towers. But Stearns said a few had to be dug by hand.

"This lift traverses some very steep, rocky terrain," he said. "We had to use dynamite and elbow grease with shovels and bars in a couple places."

Sun Valley Co. officials haven't said how much the project will cost when completed. Its construction began in mid-April, as workers even removed snow to get started on the base terminal. The project is on schedule for a Nov. 9 completion date.

Survey

Concerned about the declines, Fish and Game staff mailed questionnaires to more than 30,000 non-residents who purchased licenses in 2007 and 2008, asking them what keeps them away from the state.

Somewhat more than 2,500 people responded from across the country. Fish and Game commissioners heard a presentation on the survey results on Thursday during their regular meeting. Among its findings:

● Twenty-eight percent of hunters didn't plan to visit Idaho because of the effect the state's burgeoning wolf population is having on elk. Some respondents cited personal experience, Keckler said, while others said their worries came from reading blogs and talking to other hunters.

● The Legislature this spring approved fee increases for nonresidents, but largely eliminated bumps to in-state fees. The increases led 13 percent of respondents to stay home, though Keckler noted that fee increases for either group usually causes a dip in sales for a year or so.

● The troubled economy kept 11 percent of those surveyed sticking around home for the year. "Many of them just said, 'Look, it's not a good time for me to be spending money on Idaho,'" Keckler said.

● Another 22 percent of hunters cited various other reasons for staying away, including overcrowding in their favored parts of the state and illegal use of off-highway vehicles.

The wolves, only recently removed from the federal endangered species list, are being managed as a big game animal. Quotas for a hunting season this fall will be set in August, Keckler said, and such a hunt may be enough to draw those hunters most concerned about wolves back to Idaho.

"Just the opportunity to hunt a wolf is something they find appealing," he said.

While only two out of 10 hunters said they will probably still buy a 2009 license, fully half said they are likely to return to the state within the next few years. And, Keckler said, many of them thanked Fish and Game for the chance to comment. A full 70 percent of respondents included some form of longer written comments with their thoughts on Idaho.

Fish and Game officials now plan to study the findings for ways to draw more people back to Idaho. Commission members took copies of the surveys home to review, and Keckler said he plans to post a summary on the agency's Web site.

"We're continually looking for ways to communicate in open dialogue with customers," Keckler said. "We can't forget our non-residential customers too, it's the bottom line on that."

Meals

Minidoka County School District started participating in the program this year. Despite being in its first year, participation was high, said Phyllis Bean, food service supervisor for the district.

About 7,000 meals were served before the program ended July 16, Bean said.

"For the first year and not knowing what to expect I was satisfied with that," she said. "It showed that we do have a need. Next year, I plan on doing it longer."

Bean said that the economy and hard times led to the district's decision to start the program this year.

"There had just been students who told principals they didn't like summers because they didn't have food to eat," she said.

Anji Baumann, the child nutrition director for Gooding School District, said the district had an 11 percent increase when comparing the 2,909 meals served in June to last year.

But not every district is seeing an increase. Shoshone School District's numbers haven't noticeably increased.

The district serves about 200 summer meals a day, which is about the same as last year, said Daveda Whitesell, lunch supervisor for Shoshone School District.

rentals and cart storage. It will pay course superintendent Kevin Packard, but is using a temp agency to provide seasonal workers. Any other employees would be hired under the direction of the city.

Under the new contract, Hamblin is not considered an independent contractor since the city is paying employee-related costs, Rothweiler said. The city expects the contract to lead to savings of $80,000 in next year's budget, which kicks in Oct. 1.

City officials said the contract will keep golf affordable and available to juniors while maintaining the quality of the course and limiting the use of taxpayer dollars. The city has unsuccessfully tried for years to make the course profitable. In 2012, it will begin examining the possibility of an annual lease of the course.

Rothweiler said that while play appears to be down this year, new efforts for revenue have already begun. For example, the course is currently undergoing a renaming process.

"We believe by entering into this agreement, there is a better chance for the course to become solvent," he said.

Tonight's council meeting will begin at 5 p.m. at 305 Third Ave. E.

Law & Disorder...

... in Cassia County

From July 11 police reports:
Larceny:

A 28-year-old Burley woman reported that her tenant's rent — $300 in cash — was missing from her mailbox, but, according to the report, she said two German postcards were in the mailbox.

Phone harassment:

A 37-year-old Burley woman called police to report that her ex-husband has been harassing her on the phone — calling her, at one point, 15 times within an hour, she said.

According to the report, the man instructed their 14-year-old son to beat up the woman's current boyfriend. The man allegedly told his ex-wife that he plans to shoot her boyfriend and, according to the report, said, "If you don't believe me when I tell you I have a gun, just asked (sic) the kids, they have seen it."

From July 12 police reports:
Larceny:

A 73-year-old Burley woman reported that two women, ages 25 and 35, pulled up to the front of Stokes Fresh Food Market and stole a tree. According to the report, they threw the tree in the backseat of the vehicle, panicked when the woman saw them, and drove off at a high speed.

The suspects were later found in Heyburn. "While I was searching the rear seat of the vehicle I noticed a large amount of potting soil on the floor and also green pine needles. I asked both of them where the tree was and they said they didn't know," Deputy Kenny Emery's report reads.

The women were issued citations for theft.

From July 13 police reports:
Larceny:

A Burley man, 72, reported that his wallet was stolen from his briefcase. "In the briefcase he keeps misc. papers, his wallet and his handgun," the report reads. He looked in his briefcase and found only his wallet missing, according to the report.

Driving violations, et cetera: After running into another vehicle in Burley, a 17-year-old male from Veracruz, Mexico, was issued a citation for failure to yield.

Later, through an interpreter from the fire department, police discovered that the juvenile had no driver's license and couldn't provide an address or any form of identification. He was arrested. At the jail, according to the report, Deputy Jarrod Thompson discovered the driver's name from records showing that he had been incarcerated for driving under the influence in the past.

"The file at the Mini-Cassia Criminal Justice Center also showed him being deported in November. Border Patrol was contacted and they advised that they did deport him but they did so because his factious (sic) paperwork at the time identified him as an adult.

"Border Patrol said they would not issue a Border Patrol Hold on him because his current birth date identifies him as a Juvenile. Border advised me to contact the Mexican Consul (sic) to see if they could verify his birth date," the report reads. The juvenile was then transported to the sheriff's office. The report indicates no further information about his age.

M-C soup kitchen gains momentum

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

Volunteers are working to open a soup kitchen that would feed the hungry seven days a week in Mini-Cassia.

Rupert resident Catina Sullivan has taken over the organization of the group and has scheduled a meeting this Saturday for volunteers at the Burley Golden Heritage Senior Center.

"We would like everyone to come out and give their opinions on this," said Sullivan, a single mother who plans to volunteer her and her children's time.

Sullivan said volunteers are trying to secure a location for the soup kitchen.

The group is seeking permission to use the old Heyburn J.R. Simplot cafeteria, now part of the Burley Industrial Park.

"It's in the middle of Mini-Cassia," Sullivan said.

Sullivan said when a list of serious volunteers is gathered, they will approach

TAKE PART

A Mini-Cassia soup kitchen organizational meeting will be held from 5 to 8 p.m. Saturday at Golden Heritage Senior Center, 2421 Overland Ave., Burley.

Burley officials and ask permission to use the building.

A U.S. Department of Agriculture program is already in place through South Central Community Action Partnership to provide the soup kitchen's food.

What's needed now are volunteers that can help clean, cook and serve.

Sullivan said anyone willing to put in as little as an hour is welcome to join.

If they get enough volunteers to step forward and permission to use the building, Sullivan said they could have the soup kitchen open within a week.

"We are supposed to take care of ourselves," Sullivan said. "But, aren't we supposed to take care of others as well?"

Commuter bus might link Twin Falls, Shoshone, Sun Valley

By John Plestina
Times-News Writer

SHOSHONE — Commuter bus service could link Twin Falls and Ketchum with stops in Shoshone and Hailey at least twice daily if a Blaine County bus service operator obtains federal grant funding.

Gene Daniels, business manager of the Blaine County-based Mountain Rides, told the Shoshone City Council Tuesday that service could begin in three to six months.

He said he was seeking a partnership with Shoshone.

"This could be a real boost to the community," Daniels said.

He said the service could provide Shoshone residents an alternative to the commuting to work in both Twin Falls and Sun Valley.

The fare between Shoshone and Ketchum would be between $8 and $10, he said.

Mountain Rides currently operates van service to the Sun Valley area with a stop in Shoshone.

In another matter, the council discussed an ordinance that would allow the city to charge a new deposit for water, sewer and garbage services if a customer files for bankruptcy.

Several instances where Shoshone residents have filed for federal bankruptcy protection and city deposits have reverted to the jurisdiction of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court prompted the city to take action.

Jerome has a similar ordinance in place. The council is likely to vote on an ordinance in August.

Post Falls mayor challenging waste-disposal plan in Idaho

POST FALLS (AP) — The mayor of Post Falls says concerns about the environment and public health should prevent 20 acres near the Coeur d'Alene River from becoming a dumping ground for soil contaminated with old mine waste.

The site, known as the East Mission Flats repository, lies west of Cataldo and is 3,000 feet from the river.

"I just have great concerns about placing toxic material beside a body of water, and in a wetland on top of that," Mayor Clay Larkin said.

He recently expressed his concern in an e-mail to Terry Harwood, executive director of the Coeur d'Alene Basin Environmental Improvement Project Commission.

Larkin maintains the waste dumping likely would contaminate the Coeur d'Alene River and other waters in Kootenai County.

"From what I can gather, it really doesn't matter about all the concerns and objections, the project will go forward, even though there are multiple sites better suited," Larkin wrote in the e-mail.

In protesting the site selection, Larkin has collaborated with the Silver Valley Community Resource Center, an activist group that tallied 2,000 petition signatures against East Mission Flats.

Harwood said concerns about the site are unfounded and based on misinformation. The Upper Coeur d'Alene River Basin already contains multiple repositories in a flood plain and none has washed away in floods, he said.

Main Street's soaring sour loans

Officials expect defaults on small business loans to rise

By Frank Bass and Rira Beamish
Associated Press writers

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. — As the effects of the economic collapse began pouring down Main Street, the government last year was left holding a record $2.1 billion in write-offs of small business loans it had guaranteed. Officials expect the number of defaults to rise as the nation continues to climb out of the recession.

Records obtained under the federal Freedom of Information Act show the public is paying to offset bank losses on small business loans across the country, from a convenience store in the tiny Canadian border town of Houlton, Maine, to a graphic arts design company on the island of Hawaii, more than 5,000 miles away.

Despite having loans written off, little companies such as Caffe Sportivo, an espresso shop and small gym in Redwood City, Calif., are barely scraping by.

"I just couldn't make any payments. I was barely making rent or payroll," owner Chris Sakelarios said on a recent afternoon when her cafe stood empty except for two patrons who read as they sipped coffee. "The same as everyone else. We're in a hovering pattern."

It's a sign that even as record profits re-emerge on Wall Street, thanks to massive government loans and guarantees for banks deemed too big to fail, the pain on Main Street is as profound as it's been in half a century. The companies that were not too big to fail are failing.

Their plight is a shift from previous recessions when small business bounced back ahead of big employers, said Todd McCracken, president of the lobby group National Small Business Association.

"This could be the first economic recovery we've seen in a long time that hits small business the hardest the longest," he said.

The Small Business Administration purchased $2.1 billion in bad loans from lenders last year. Agency officials say it's likely that this year will see another high as the recession nears the two-year mark.

Eric Geedey makes a smoothie with the help of a stationary bike at Caffe Sportivo in Redwood City, Calif., July 20. Geedey double his duties as massage therapist and coffeehouse manager in order to cut costs on the business he runs with his sister-in-law Chris Sakelarios.

"It's frustrating when (banks) are getting bailed out for bad decisions they made, that there isn't more assistance for the small business," said Eric Geedey, who manages Caffe Sportivo for Sakelarios.

Sakelarios obtained a $20,000 SBA loan from Union Bank in late 2007 to start her business when the economic outlook was brighter on the affluent San Francisco Peninsula. Within a year, however, she was scraping by with the help of a landlord and vendors who let her adjust payments. She has reduced the hours of her seven employees and relies on her brother and a friend to help keep the doors open on weekends. The balance of the loan was written off in early January.

In addition to being dogged by bad credit, the cafe will have to report the loan charge-off as taxable income, Geedey said.

Sakelarios isn't the only recession victim and she won't be the last.

SBA loan defaults generally occur in two stages. The first is when the bank decides it won't get its money back and asks the government for the guaranteed portion of the loan. In the second, the government decides it won't get any more collateral or money from the borrower.

Years can elapse between the time that the borrower stops paying and the government writes off the loan.

In 2008, for example, the government concluded it wouldn't be able to recover $1.3 billion in defaulted bank loans it had guaranteed. Many loans were part of a backlog, according to SBA officials.

But an AP analysis found that the time between loan approvals and loan defaults is narrowing. According to the analysis:

• More than $235 million in restaurant loans have been charged off since 2007. The 2,586 restaurant charge-offs make up the largest number of defaulted loans, according to the SBA. More than 150 loans made to Quizno's franchises — worth nearly $15.5 million — have been written off since 2007.

• The Gulf Coast fishing industry, battered by two major hurricanes in 2005, has been hit especially hard. Half of the 10 cities with the highest industry-specific write-offs are in Biloxi, Miss.; New Orleans; Ocean Springs, Miss.; Lafayette, La.; and Abbeville, La. All told, the shellfish fishing industry had 45 loans charged off, at a total cost of $19.5 million.

• The banks making the loans have also been hit hard by the recession. Bank of America Corp., which has received $52.5 billion in government aid, has had nearly 7,000 loans worth $238 million charged off since 2007. More than 660 loans worth $174 million have been charged off by CIT Group Inc., a major commercial lender forced to turn to bondholders in an effort to try to avoid bankruptcy protection after the government refused to save the company.

Heyburn tightens animal control rules

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

HEYBURN — After discussing everything from animal control fines to whether livestock should be allowed in the city limits, the Heyburn City Council voted Wednesday to tighten the language of its animal control ordinances.

Heyburn Attorney Steven Tuft will amend sections of the current ordinance to include court costs on all fines for animal control violations. Fines for the first offense are $50 plus court costs, $100 plus court costs for a second offense, and the third offense $300 plus court costs.

The council also decided to continue running all city ordinance citations through the courts instead of having residents pay for violations at the city office.

After significant discussion on what would be a sufficient amount of property to allow a resident to house a horse or other livestock within city limits, the council made no decision and will discuss the issue further at an upcoming meeting.

In other business, the council:

• Unanimously approved the city's tentative budget for fiscal year 2010 for $7,678,232. The city's budget hearing was set for Aug. 12. A time for the hearing was not discussed.

• Unanimously agreed to approve a 17-cent per-household increase for PSI Waste Systems garbage collection services.

• Voted to set the Heyburn amphitheater's 2010 budget at $4,000, in spite of a requested increase of $1,000 by Chris James.

• Tabled an agenda item to discuss and possibly approve a proposal to receive dispatch services by the Minidoka County Sheriff's Office. Cassia County has supplied Heyburn with dispatch services since 1992.

4 cousins, mom, 3 others die in N.Y. wrong-way crash

BRIARCLIFF MANOR, N.Y. (AP) — A family's minivan going in the wrong direction crashed into two cars on a suburban parkway on Sunday, killing eight people, including four young cousins and the mother of one of them.

State police Investigator Joseph Becerra said the minivan was traveling southbound in the northbound lanes of the Taconic State Parkway in Westchester County, just north of New York City, when it struck an SUV and then careened into a third vehicle. The minivan rolled down an embankment, where it burst into flames.

The minivan's front end appeared to have been almost entirely smashed in, and its shell was scorched and bent. At least one wheel was blown out.

The minivan was smoking, and a fire spread from under the vehicle, throughout its shell, within minutes.

The woman driving the minivan and four of the five children inside it were killed, Becerra said. They were part of a family from Floral Park and West Babylon, on Long Island.

The children who died were girls ages 2, 5, 7 and 9. The fifth child, a boy, age 5, was hospitalized.

The minivan's driver was the mother of the surviving child, and the other children were her nieces and her daughter, Becerra said.

A witness, Katrina Dedvukaj, who was traveling north on the parkway to a family barbecue in Mahopac, said she saw the accident in her rearview mirror.

"One car goes this way, one goes that way, up in the air, both of them," she said. "I was crying. I was shaking."

Her brother, Peter Dedvukaj, driving in another vehicle, said he saw smoke ahead and traffic came to a standstill.

"People were getting out to help, shouting, 'We need help! We need help!'" Dedvukaj said. "Everybody said, 'There are kids in the car.'"

IRAN

Opposition requests memorial ceremony

TEHRAN — The top aide to Iran's opposition leader says his boss has requested permission from authorities to hold a memorial service for victims of post-election unrest.

Ali Reza Beheshti told The Associated Press Sunday that Mir Hossein Mousavi signed the request with Mahdi Karroubi, the other reformist candidate in last month's disputed presidential election.

Beheshti said the two requested a memorial Thursday in a Tehran mosque to recite the Quran, the Muslim holy book, and hold moments of silence.

WASHINGTON

U.S. hopes China talks help spur economic recovery

With the global economy mired in recession, the United States and China begin talks Monday to seek a solution together despite tensions over currencies, the U.S. budget deficit and the huge U.S. trade gap with China.

Ultimately, how well the U.S. efforts succeed could help determine how fast the economy recovers and how many U.S. jobs might be created once it does.

Other issues, such as climate control and North Korean nuclear ambitions, also will command attention. Few expect the talks to bridge the sharp differences between Beijing and Washington. But both governments want to use the occasion to help build a less confrontational relationship.

Three years ago, Henry Paulson, then Treasury secretary, used the talks to press Beijing to let its currency, the yuan, rise in value against the dollar, to make it cheaper for Chinese to buy U.S. goods. U.S. manufacturers blame an undervalued yuan for record U.S. trade deficits with China — and, in part, for a decline in U.S. jobs.

The U.S. efforts have yielded only mixed results. The yuan, after rising in value about 22 percent since 2005, has scarcely budged in the past year. Beijing had begun to fear that a stronger yuan could threaten its exports. Chinese exports already were under pressure from the global recession.

Military considers private security contract for Afghan.

U.S. military authorities in Afghanistan may hire a private contractor to provide around-the-clock security at dozens of bases and protect vehicle convoys moving throughout the country.

The possibility of awarding a security contract comes as the Obama administration is sending thousands of more troops into Afghanistan to quell rising violence fueled by a resurgent Taliban. As the number of American forces grow over the next several months, so too does the demand to guard their outposts.

Defense Secretary Robert Gates has said he wants to cut back on the use of contractors that now provide a wide range of services to American troops in war zones, including transportation, communications, food service, construction, and maintenance. As recently as February, however, Gates called the use of private security contractors in certain parts of Afghanistan "vital" to supporting U.S. bases. A contract for the work also creates job opportunities for Afghans, he said.

MASSACHUSETTS

Gates says he'll have a beer with Obama, white cop

BOSTON — Black Harvard scholar Henry Louis Gates Jr. says he's ready to move on from his arrest by a white police officer, hoping to use the encounter to improve fairness in the criminal justice system and saying "in the end, this is not about me at all."

After a phone call from President Barack Obama urging calm in the aftermath of his arrest last week, Gates said he would accept Obama's invitation to the White House for a beer with him and Cambridge police Sgt. James Crowley.

In a statement posted Friday on The Root, a Web site Gates oversees, the scholar said he told Obama he'd be happy to meet with Crowley, whom Gates had accused of racial profiling.

"I told the president that my principal regret was that all of the attention paid to his deeply supportive remarks during his press conference had distracted attention from his health care initiative," Gates said.

Pitz pulls out two main events win at MVS

By Linda Brittsan
Times-News correspondent

It may have been the first time Josh Pitz climbed behind the wheel of the No. 4 Budweiser Super Stocks car for a race, but he made it look like he was back with an old friend as he came from towards the rear of the field to win the main event contest Saturday night at Magic Valley Speedway.

After Josh Black and Jason Abbott took their turn in front Pitz was able to get to the lead at lap 13. But it wasn't long before Kris McKean moved into second and began applying the pressure to Pitz. McKean continued to make valiant efforts to get around him, trying high and low - finally getting a hold of a slight lead at lap 31. However Pitz refused to back down for the final four laps, making his car stick in the outside groove and nipping McKean at the finish line by 0.050 seconds.

"I had practiced in the car just once - last night - just to get a feel for it," Pitz said after the win. "Tonight it was hooked up, it was awesome. I thought I had lost it there towards the end of the main when he (McKean) passed me with like five laps left and I thought I was a goner. So I went up to the outside line and just ran him down. On that last lap I beat him like a foot, it was a good finish. I didn't even know if I won it or not until the scoreboard stuck me on top."

Pitz had a much easier time roping in the main event win in the Pony Stocks division, overcoming two weeks of mechanical issues with a convincing victory in the 20-lap race.

JACKSON DOUBLES UP WINS IN WINGED SPRINT CARS

The winged sprint cars made their only appearance of the season and 16-year old Sierra Jackson made a lasting impression with the crowd capturing both main event wins. Dominating the series for the night, Jackson led all but two laps of the first 30-lap main event race and all 30 laps of the second main. Reaching a top speed of 94.06 mph on the evening, Jackson left the runner-up positions to Chris Ratterree and Cory Lockwood respectively in the first and second mains.

LUTTNER CONQUERS IN RACE TRUCKS

Josh Pitz (4) would beat Kris McKean to the finish line by just 0.050 seconds in the Budweiser Super Stocks main event race Saturday night at Magic Valley Speedway. It was Pitz' second main event win of the night.

Alberto Contador wins Tour; Lance Armstrong 3rd

By Jamey Keaten
Associated Press writer

PARIS - Lance Armstrong's children were dressed in yellow. He was not.

When the seven-time Tour de France champion returned to the Tour podium Sunday, his family was there. His fans were there. And so was rival and teammate Alberto Contador - wearing the coveted and hard-won yellow jersey.

Four years after his seventh Tour win, Armstrong capped his return with an impressive third-place finish. He had his whole clan on hand - son Luke, twin girls Grace and Isabelle, his mom, Linda, and his girlfriend Anna Hansen, with their baby Max, sporting bright yellow shoes.

They were among the massive crowd that poured out onto Paris' most famous avenue for the finish - Norwegians in Viking helmets, flag-waving Britons and an American in a stars-and-stripes top hat among them.

Contador cruised down the Champs-Elysees to win the Tour for a second time Sunday after 2,141 miles over three weeks of racing. He repelled many challenges in the mountains, excelled in the two time-trials - winning a pivotal race against the clock in the 18th stage - and won the first Alpine stage.

Andy Schleck of Luxembourg, Contador's toughest rival in the mountains, was second overall.

Contador's biggest battle, however, was against his own Astana team.

"It has been an especially difficult Tour for me, but I savor it and it is more special because of it," he said after the prize ceremony.

The body language on the winner's podium said it all.

As the 37-year-old Armstrong climbed onto the stage, he gave a perfunctory handshake to his teammate Contador, then heartily grabbed Schleck's hand with both hands.

And as Contador took the victor's bowl, Armstrong cast a long sideways glance at what had long been his spoils; he gave only a cursory glance to his own crystal trophy.

Asked on French TV what the hardest moment in this race,

CSI assistant takes head job at WNCC

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

Russ Beck wouldn't leave the College of Southern Idaho for just any old job. But this was an offer he couldn't refuse.

After only one season as an assistant coach with the Golden Eagles men's basketball program, Beck has accepted the head coaching job at Western Nebraska Community College.

"It was a very hard decision for me and my wife because we loved everything about the community and school," Beck said in a press release issued by CSI Sunday evening.

"The opportunity to be a head coach at such a prestigious college and basketball tradition was just too hard to pass up."

Beck came to CSI in the summer of 2008 after spending one season as an assistant at Salt Lake Community College, helping the Bruins to a runner-up finish at the NJCAA tournament. He previously spent time as an assistant at Southern Utah University and Dixie State College.

"It's a great compliment to CSI that he could get an opportunity like this," said CSI head coach Steve Gosar. "I wish him nothing but the best. I'm excited for him and I know he'll do great things."

With a reputation as an excellent recruiter, Beck helped CSI to a 22-9 record in his lone season in Twin Falls. He joins a Western Nebraska program that has made it the NJCAA tourney 11 times, placing as high as third in 1995.

"This is a great opportunity for Russ to get a head coaching position," said CSI athletic director Joel Bate. "He did great work and we will miss his talent."

Gosar and Bate said a search for Beck's replacement will be immediately.

"I'm grateful for the open arms and how I was treated in my short time at CSI," said Beck. "... I want to thank all the fans and everyone associated with Golden Eagle athletics for making my time here special."

Jimmie Johnson grabs Indy win

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press writer

INDIANAPOLIS - Jimmie Johnson grabbed an improbable third victory at Indianapolis Motor Speedway when a speeding penalty to Juan Pablo Montoya blew Sunday's race wide open.

Montoya led 116 laps and had a 5-second lead when he headed to pit road for a routine stop with 35 laps remaining. NASCAR flagged him for speeding on his way in, and the penalty knocked him out of contention.

"I swear on my children and my wife that I was not speeding!" he shouted over his radio. "There is no way!

Thank you NASCAR for screwing my day!"

Crew chief Brian Pattie begged his driver to calm down and focus on salvaging a solid points day, to no avail. "Don't tell me to relax, dude!" Montoya yelled. "We had this in the bag."

Indeed he did, but the 2000 winner of the Indianapolis 500 was relegated to an 11th-place finish. Montoya, who had moved as high as sixth in the Sprint Cup standings as he ran out front, instead lost a spot and is now 10th in the race for the Chase for the championship.

The performance was reminiscent of Montoya's win in the Indy 500, when he led 167 of 200 laps in his first race at the storied track. His team celebrated his return Sunday with a retro paint scheme that duplicated that winning car, and as he clicked off lap after lap, it was deja vu for the Colombian driver.

"Actually reminded me of last time I led here to be honest," a calm Montoya said after the race. "I was cruise(ing). I was super fast."

Too fast, actually. NASCAR said the electronic timing system caught Montoya twice exceeding the limit as he drove down pit road.

"There's nothing to prove wrong," said Robin Pemberton, vice president of competition. "It's about as simple math as you can use." The penalty opened up the race for anyone else to claim.

Mark Martin restarted as the leader with 24 laps to go and Hendrick Motorsports teammate Jimmie Johnson lined up on his outside. Johnson sailed to the front and pulled away, only to have to hold off Martin over a nerve-racking final five laps.

Johnson, winner of three of the last four races at The Brickyard, became the first driver to win in consecutive years in 16 NASCAR races at Indy. It was the third win this season for the three-time defending NASCAR champion.

Michael Phelps of the United States react during the final of the Men's 4x100M relay, at the FINA Swimming World Championships in Rome, Sunday. The United States won the gold medal.

Phelps off to winning start at worlds

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press writer

ROME — Michael Phelps had an off night. His new windmill stroke just slowed him down. He left his teammates with some catching-up to do. Heck, he didn't even get a world record when about all you had to do was squeeze into one of those newfangled suits and dive in at the Foro Italico.

Yet, when it was done, Phelps found himself in that same ol' place — top of the medal stand.

At his first major meet since a historic Olympics, Phelps got off to a winning start at the world championships as part of the 400-meter freestyle relay Sunday. He was actually the slowest member of the team, but the guys picked him up and beat the French again, just as they did in that memorable race last summer in Beijing.

"The best thing about this relay was they carried Michael," said Bob Bowman, Phelps' coach and also in charge of the U.S. men's team. "We need the other people to step up."

They sure did — especially Nathan Adrian on the anchor leg. His blistering down and back was reminiscent of Jason Lezak's amazing swim at the Olympics, when he somehow chased down

Alain Bernard, touched first by eight-hundredths of a second and kept Phelps on course to win a record eight golds.

"Relays are raced as a team," Phelps said, "and I think all four guys swam a great race."

Phelps was third when he passed off to Ryan Lochte, who hung tough against the hulking Bernard while surprising Russia surged into contention. Matt Grevers did his part on the third leg, and Adrian finished it off with fastest split of anyone to touch in 3 minutes, 9.21 seconds.

Phelps pumped his fists on the pool deck, then leaned over to congratulate Adrian. Call him Lezak Jr.

"Coming in to this relay, to be honest, I felt like a child among men," said Adrian, whose 100 was timed in 46.79 — nearly a full second faster than Phelps' 47.78 opener. "All of these guys have made a great name for themselves, they've won individual medals at the Olympics, and they threw me on the last leg, so I had a little bit of pressure on myself."

The French were the ones who cracked. The Russians touched second in 3:09.52, while France — which sent out four of the world's fastest sprinters, at least on paper — were relegated to the bronze at 3:09.89.

Tour

Contador replied: "It was in the (team) hotel," without elaborating.

Only 26 years old, Contador already is one of cycling's greats, having won all three Grand Tours of France, Italy and Spain. Armstrong's comeback after 3½ years of retirement raised questions about who would lead Astana during cycling's most prestigious race. And those questions remained through much of the Tour as tensions mounted over who was the No. 1 rider.

"We are totally incompatible," Contador said. "In the end, Armstrong will go his way, and I'll go mine."

On Sunday, they were both headed for Paris and the winner's podium.

They shared a glass of champagne on the ride into the city, only this time it was to celebrate Contador's win and their win as a team.

"I'm realistic, I did everything I could," Armstrong said before the final stage. "For me, and even more for my kids, it's probably a healthy thing for them to see, because they saw their dad that never lost, and the kids in their class (say) 'your dad never loses,' so it's good for them to see dad get third and still be cool with that and still be happy."

By the end of the race, Armstrong, who admitted his form wasn't the best, was talking less of squabbling within Astana and more about Contador's greatness as a rider.

Despite the team tensions, Contador said he enjoyed this victory more than in 2007. Four days from the finish that year, then race leader Michael Rasmussen of Denmark was sent home for lying about his whereabouts during pre-Tour doping controls.

"In the key stages of this Tour, I found myself feeling more at ease than I did in 2007. But in situations outside of racing, I didn't feel so comfortable," Contador told Spanish broadcaster TVE.

After Oscar Pereiro's victory in 2006 and Carlos Sastre's in 2008, the Tour has been won by a Spaniard for four straight years.

Swarzak ends Angels' 8-game streak

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Justin Morneau hit two homers, rookie Anthony Swartzak shut down a potent lineup pitching into the seventh inning, and the Minnesota Twins ended the Los Angeles Angels' eight-game winning streak with a 10-1 victory Sunday.

Denard Span homered and drove in a season-high four runs, and even light-hitting Nick Punto added a season-best three RBIs as the Twins ended a four-game losing streak.

Swarzak (3-3) allowed just four hits and three walks in his eighth career start, throwing 121 pitches against one of the majors' most productive offenses.

Kendry Morales' fourth-inning homer was the first hit for Los Angeles, which scored 62 runs during its streak before sputtering on a sweltering day in Orange County.

Roberts wins 2nd Senior British Open

SUNNINGDALE, England — Loren Roberts of the United States won his second Senior British Open title on Sunday, beating Mark McNulty on the third hole of a sudden death playoff.

Fred Funk also took part in the playoff at Sunningdale, but the American was eliminated on the first extra hole when he could only make par as Roberts and McNulty birdied.

The remaining pair parred the second playoff hole before Roberts clinched victory with another par at the next.

Greg Norman, the third-round leader, missed birdie chances at the first three holes and double-bogeyed the 17th after driving into trees. Norman finished in a tie for sixth place, three strokes behind the leaders.

"My game felt good, no question about it. I just lack a lot of match practice," Norman said.

Roberts, who won in 2006 at Turnberry, and Funk each shot a 67 in the final round. McNulty shot 64.

Bernhard Langer (65) was fourth with Sam Torrance (67) fifth. Norman (71) and Larry Mize (68) were next.

Roberts thought he had lost it on the second playoff hole after missing an 8-foot birdie attempt, but McNulty drove into heavy rough on the next hole and bogeyed.

Loren Roberts of the US tees off on the first play off hole after the final round of the Senior British Open Championship at the Sunningdale golf course, in Sunningdale, England, Sunday.

Canadian Open leaderboard before play was washed out because of the latest round of heavy rain and lightning, forcing the tournament to at least a fifth day.

Dufner, the second-round leader after rounds of 68 and 63 on the saturated Glen Abbey course, had a one-stroke lead over Anthony Kim and Jerry Kelly. Kim was 4 under after nine holes in the third round, and Kelly was 1 under through six.

MIYAZATO WINS EVIAN MASTERS

EVIAN-LES-BAINS, France — Ai

Miyazato of Japan won the Evian Masters with a birdie on the first playoff hole, beating Sophie Gustafson of Sweden to clinch her first victory.

The 39-year-old Argentine finished at 10-under 282 on the 7,665-yard Barseback Golf Club course — the longest in European Tour history.

Kendell Woll and Craig Nuthak changed places for the lead before a late race caution bunched up the field for a restart.

The front group quickly shuffled for the lead but when things shook out, it was Jason Todd who went on to victory in the 25-lap main event race.

GILLIGAN LANDS ANOTHER HORNETS DIVISION WIN.

100 years, finished second and moved up two spots in the standings to ninth.

"I would have liked to win it," Martin said. "Just got beat by Superman."

Current points leader Tony Stewart, a two-time Brickyard winner, was third and could commiserate with Montoya's heartbreak.

"He never really was challenged all day," Stewart said. "He did a great job. I know what he's feeling like — he's got to be sick inside. He had the car, he had the talent to do it, he just made a mistake and it cost him."

Greg Biffle was third and followed by Brian Vickers and Kevin Harvick, who grabbed his best finish in 15 races.

Kasey Kahne was seventh and followed by David Reutimann, four-time

Brickyard winner Jeff Gordon and Matt Kenseth.

A cut tire caused Kyle Busch to finish 38th and drop out of contention for the Chase. The bad day cost him four spots in the standings, and he is 14th with six races left to set the 12-driver Chase field.

"I think it's pretty self-explanatory that we're trying to fight for a spot in the Chase," said Busch, a three-time winner this season.

The tire problems that plagued last year's Goodyear made good on its promise to find the right compound for one of the biggest races of the season.

Goodyear's product last year couldn't last longer than 10-to-12 laps, and the tire-maker spent 11 months diligently correcting the problem.

Forget the meters: Downtown T.F. needs to focus on customers

Cathy Freeborn, who runs a business in downtown Twin Falls, got it exactly right. "I just feel like charging anything at all for customers to shop is ridiculous," said

Freeborn, who owns Cathy's Unique Boutique. "I don't want my customers to have to pay to see me."

Amen. The time has come for the Historic Downtown Business Improvement District to dump parking meters.

Really, it's come down to cases: Does downtown, which is struggling to survive, want shoppers or not?

For years, the issue of downtown parking has roiled, and the BID and city have spent thousands of dollars on consultants trying to figure out what to do.

For long stretches of time, the meters have gone untended — leaving folks to regard downtown parking regulation as a joke.

The BID claims it needs meter revenue to maintain downtown. That may be true, but what maintenance that has been done hasn't attracted visitors.

So here's the deal that downtown merchants should pitch to customers: Come downtown and park for free, just as you would at the mall. The employees of downtown business will be restricted to parking in the lots off Main Avenue.

And we're serious about that. Workers who park in customers' parking space should be subject to sanctions by their employers.

Much of the 30-plus-year history of the BID has been characterized by wishful thinking. Downtown doesn't have that luxury anymore.

Either the Townsite attracts more visitors, or it dies. It's that simple.

A patient on life support shouldn't be arguing with the nurse about getting his or her parking ticket validated. It's time to move on to what matters.

Our view: It's past time to worry about parking meters in downtown Twin Falls. What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Soaring health care cost has got to be curbed

Forget the wonkery. Let's get primeval. Rising health care costs are a stampede of big ugly rhinos. They are trampling your crops, stomping on your children's play areas and spoiling your hunting grounds.

President Barack Obama wasn't exaggerating when he said this cost onslaught is unsustainable. The rhinos have been roaming unchecked for a generation. We've thrown research projects, legislative and corporate reforms at them, all in an effort to tamp down health care inflation. But the rhinos keep coming. They are powerful, protean and inexorable.

DAVID BROOKS

They feed on fuel sources deep in our system: expensive technological progress, the self-interest of the millions of people who make their living off the system, the public's desire to get the best care for nothing, the fee-for-service payment system and so on.

The rhinos are closing off your future. As the White House folks say, health care premiums have doubled over the last decade. The government is saddled with $36 trillion in unfunded liabilities.

So your only question should be: Where do you find a tool or weapon big enough to stop the rhino stampedes? You know the problem is big, and you figure the response had better be gigantic.

Then you look on Capitol Hill and you see a bunch of popguns. The politicians describe these big ugly problems, but when it comes time to talk about their remedies they tell you: Don't worry. Nothing's going to change. In other words, we're going to eliminate the biggest, hairiest, most entrenched problem in the country without fundamentally changing the system and without asking for sacrifice from anybody.

Good luck. Then you talk to the health care experts promoting the bills and they are very honest: We don't know exactly how to slow health care inflation. But we think we have some good ideas. We're going to put some innovations, information clearinghouses and pilot projects in this legislation, and over the next 10 years we will see what works to really bring down costs. We're going to go on a voyage of discovery to learn about rhino eradication.

And, indeed, some of the ideas do sound good: more information technology, comparative effectiveness research, conducting experiments to bundle hospital payments so they are based on outcomes. Some of the providers that do things right really are getting results.

But some of these ideas have been watered down in the legislation. And you're not a complete idiot. You know there is a big difference between finding islands of excellence and creating a national system based on them.

Besides, you've got a bunch of big, evil rhinos stomping around! You want more than some promising ideas to pinpoint waste, fraud and abuse. You want some big heavy hammers to clock those suckers.

Now that the first wave of legislation is bogging down, you want to take the seeds of cost control and you want to do more. You want to eliminate or cap the tax exemption on employee health benefits. This is a big way to crush one of the core drivers of health care inflation. You're willing to give MedPAC-style technocrats a chance to take control of Medicare spending away from congressional spend-thrifts.

You want to loosen federal regulations so that states have more room to experiment — not tighten them, as the current legislation does, so that states have less. You want reforms throughout the system that will cut down on first-dollar reimbursement in exchange for catastrophic protection. You want to tie Medicare subsidies to income. You want to look at anything that will move us away from a fee-for-service model, the core perversion in the system.

You want to change incentives at both ends. The legislators who drew up the first bills want to change the provider's incentives. But big cost savings can also come if consumers have choices and incentives to hunt for cheaper coverage. The Wyden-Bennett bill gives people a chance to choose the best option, instead of imprisoning people in existing coverage, as the current legislation does. The Medicare Part D reform has produced impressive reductions by allowing consumers to pocket prescription drug savings. Other proposals would give people tax credits and allow them to go to any trusted community group that wanted to compete to offer coverage.

Not everything is compatible with everything else. But the point is that you have rhinos at the door! You'll try anything that works. You want a political class that no longer perpetuates the myth that people can get everything for nothing. You know that it was political pandering that got us into this mess in the first place.

Obama is right. Things will be bad if we don't tackle the problem this year. Things will be worse if we add to the costs without beating the rhinos.

Give immigrants a chance at citizenship

I support immigration reform that keeps families together and offers an opportunity at citizenship for immigrants that want it. Congress must pass reform this year. It's morally wrong to keep immigrant families in a legal limbo loop, and it's plain wrong to keep the American people waiting for reform.

Not to mention our economy desperately needs the dollars and taxes paid to the black market by undocumented immigrants. Let's get these dollars into our real economy now. By not solving this issue now, we are supporting the status quo, which is injustice toward immigrants, weak worker protections for all Americans and fewer tax dollars into federal, state and local budgets.

Let's get real, deporting everyone is not possible, so we must give hard-working immigrants an opportunity at citizenship like our ancestors once had.

With Obama, the joke's on us

There's an old story about a scorpion and a frog who arrived at the edge of a swollen stream at the same time. Scorpion convinced Frog he would not sting him if he would provide a ride across the stream. Frog reluctantly agreed, and they proceeded.

Halfway across, however, Scorpion suddenly stung Frog, who exclaimed, "Why did you do that? Now we'll both die!" And Scorpion replied, "I'm a scorpion; that's what I do!"

It was well publicized that Obama had a 100 percent liberal voting record in the Senate, that he had a 20-year relationship with a radical, anti-American preacher of hate and rebellion, and that he had very little administrative experience in government. Like Nancy Pelosi, he claimed his administration would be the very picture of moral integrity. Have you caught the punch line yet? (The joke's on us!)

But it's not Obama who is back of it all. When Henry Kissinger reported that Obama was being primed to create a New World Order, we learned who is actually pulling his strings. Now the Pope has issued an official clerical document urging the creation of a New World Economic Order. Without doubt, America is in the vortex of a whirlpool that is sucking us down into oblivion for these elite world planners cannot allow American sovereignty to continue blocking that New World Order.

We are now a socialistic nation, for all practical purposes. Had George W. Bush created the deficits now in place by Obama and the Pelosi-Reid Congress, they and their media cohorts would have torn him to pieces (or, that part that was still left of him). This deficit is too huge to overcome.

I have great distaste and disgust for the blatant deception and treachery being palmed off on America. Is it too late to pray?

School districts must show accountability

We expect our public servants to be resourceful and willing to sacrifice when money is tight. We expect them to be responsible and thrifty with the money we entrust to them even in the best times.

If school districts cannot get bonds to pass with a supermajority as law requires, perhaps you should ask why 66 2/3 percent of your patrons are unwilling to pass them. Has there been even one of your superintendents that has made a serious attempt to find out what it would take to get a bond passed before it is brought before the patrons? Has even one of your superintendents made a real effort to find out the reasons a bond did not pass? Or do you and they just think patrons are stingy?

If the requirement is lowered and bonds still don't pass, what will you do? Will you keep trying to lower the requirement? I guess that is the public school way. That might be how it works in your world, but in the world where your patrons live, if requirements aren't met, the business closes, the house is lost, the car is repossessed.

Mr. Luna, show us what you are doing to manage the money we already gave you. The public you serve has to find ways to adjust and deal with tough economic times. It is insulting to us that rather than do the same, you and your superintendents would rather change the law. I'm afraid you would be dismayed to find that school bonds would be even less likely to pass if you lower the supermajority requirement. We, the public you serve, do not like it when you don't listen.

We hear of junkets for our school boards and families; we see administrator salaries and benefits that are out of proportion to both your patrons' and your teachers' incomes. We see waste without accountability. Show us how you and your organization are wisely managing the money we already give you and you might be surprised at how easily bonds would pass.

Small towns: Methland vs. mythland

Like a brief, intense summer squall, a media storm passed over small-town America a few years ago, stripping away what was left of the myth of the rural idyll to reveal a cast of hollow-cheeked white people smoking meth behind the corn silo.

It was going to destroy the heartland, this methamphetamine epidemic, just as crack cocaine had done to the inner city. There was no George Bailey in this version of Bedford Falls. No John Mellencamp melodies on the soundtrack. Just toothless boys on bikes peddling some nasty stuff cooked up from cold medicine and farm products.

And then it all passed, as these things do, the damage done, leaving the impression of rural America as a broken land, scary. In the interim, the more traditional narrative, of country people somehow more authentic than city folk — “the best of America in these small towns” — came roaring back in the form of Sarah Palin.

In truth, neither of these images does justice to the complexities of small-town life. And neither version does anything to advance the cause of an honest rural policy, something that might help some of the worst casualties of global economic tumult.

People in small towns are more likely to be poor, more likely to lack health insurance, more likely, if they are young, to move out, according to government statistics. In the invisible margins off the interstate, the story about decline takes place in slow motion, rarely attracting a headline.

Palin may soon hit the speech circuit as a woman from another era with an itchy Twitter finger. At the same time, we have a much different look at modern rural life in a new book by the journalist Nick Reding — “Methland: The Death and Life of an American Small Town.”

Reding spent nearly four years charting meth's course in Oelwein, Iowa, a town of about 6,000 residents nearly 120 miles northeast of Des Moines. There, the people who grow our food are agribusiness oligarchs, and the people who run our factories have cut their workers' wages by two-thirds, dissolved the unions and shipped in illegals to work for a paycheck that would barely pay for dog food.

Meth is a symptom of this collapse, not a cause. And though its presence in small towns can be cancerous, it never took over rural America. The latest national surveys suggest that there are about 1.3 million regular users of meth — hardly an epidemic in a country where 35 million people said they had used an illegal drug or abused a prescription one.

Still, meth is different in at least one respect. Reding says it is “the only example of a widely consumed illegal narcotic that might be called vocational, as opposed to recreational.” It was given to starving Nazi soldiers to keep them in warrior mode on the Russian front. Now it's a preferred stimulant for people working two jobs in low-wage purgatory.

“Rural America remains the cradle of our national creation myth,” Reding concludes. “But it has become something else, too — something more sinister and difficult to define.”

Of the 1,346 counties that shrank in population between 2000 and 2007, 85 percent of them were outside the major metropolitan areas, according to the Census Bureau. Not far from Reding's story, the town of Postville has lost half its population just in the last year after one of the largest immigration raids in Iowa.

Oelwein, like so many small towns trying to shape its destiny in an America that may have passed it by, has spruced up its Main Street, modernized its infrastructure and constructed a spec building ready for any employer who wants to move in. Alas, it's the same story in thousands of Oelweins: If you build it, they won't come.

When candidate Barack Obama made that comment about bitter people in small towns clinging to guns and religion, he was criticized as a clueless elite from the big city. No one paid attention to the first part of what he said:

“You go into these small towns in Pennsylvania and, like a lot of small towns in the Midwest, the jobs have been gone now for 25 years and nothing's replaced them. And they fell through the Clinton administration and the Bush administration.”

Every president said he would do something about it, Obama continued, but never did.

The mistake that Palin made was to cast small towns as more virtuous, morally superior in their struggle. The mistake that Obama made was to speak the truth. She can continue to pander all the way to the bank. But he has a chance to make a difference in places that are neither methland nor mythland, just overlooked parts of the same country.

Here's what Idaho newspapers are saying about ...

... pay as you throw

Idaho Press Tribune, Nampa

Nampa officials have a good idea when they suggest residents who throw out less trash shouldn't have to pay as much in waste-collection fees as those who toss out more.

The “pay-as-you-throw” concept is already being used in Eagle, where they charge customers based on the size of the trash bins the city provides. The bigger the bins you use, the more it costs you.

Generally speaking, any system which charges people based on the amount they use deserves support. Your power bill is based on the amount of electricity you use ... so why not apply the same principle to your trash bill? ...

Right now, Nampa residents pay a flat fee of $12 a month for trash service. So the elderly widower who lives alone pays as much as the family of eight ...

Eagle residents can opt for one of three different sized trash bins. The smallest — a 32-gallon bin — costs residents $8.21 per month. Larger ones cost more. Customers have a few designated “cleanup days” every year where they can set out an unlimited amount of trash without paying more for it — right after Christmas, a week in the spring, a week in the fall, etc.

They are given a certain amount of “overflow stickers” for the remaining weeks of the year that they can put on additional trash cans. When the trash collector sees the sticker, he unloads that trash can and takes the sticker. If you run out of stickers, you can buy more. If not, trash collectors won't pick up your additional trash cans that don't have stickers on them, which prevents people from gaming the system by paying for the small bins provided by trash collectors, then setting out a bunch of their own additional cans every week ///

Choices are good. And giving people who don't throw out as much trash as others the opportunity to save some money is a good choice to provide.

... the high cost of higher pay

Coeur d'Alene Press

To the hundreds of Kootenai County residents who will celebrate a pay raise ... congratulations. Thanks to an act of Congress in 2007 and ratification by the Idaho Legislature, (this is) the third federally mandated increase in the minimum wage ... the lowest wage earners will see their pay go up from $6.55 an hour to $7.25.

If that doesn't seem like a pretty nice bump, consider that it is a raise of more than 10 percent. Not bad for a recession, is it? ...

But we confess to harboring several regrets ...

Local employers have noticed that with previous minimum wage increases, employees who had been with the business longer but were making little more than minimum wage have been discouraged that the newer, less experienced workers saw a hefty jump while the veterans did not. In fact, it's conceivable that a new hire will be earning more tomorrow than someone who has been with the business for a year or more ...

We're concerned that in the hospitality and retail sectors particularly ... this third minimum wage increase in as many years could actually wipe out other jobs ... To meet the mandate, some jobs might have to be eliminated, leading to higher unemployment and lower potential for that business to succeed. While the raise is good news to those who get it, it might have a greater negative impact in the long run.

... the road ahead for ITD

Idaho Statesman, Boise

The firing of Idaho Transportation

Department chief Pam Lowe was about as smooth as a pothole-pockmarked patch of highway.

This palace intrigue is the last thing the agency needs. The ITD is sufficiently busy rebuilding the state's highways ...

This is a job for one bureaucratic superstar ... But who exactly would want this job, after recent events?

The Idaho Transportation Board fired Lowe (earlier this month). The reasoning, delivered by board Chairman Darrell Manning, was lacking: “The board determined this change was necessary to help the department continue improving customer service, economy of operations, accountability and our relations with the Legislature.” That covers a lot of ground — and consequently, it really says nothing.

Lowe, meanwhile, has no intentions of walking away quietly from a job she has held since 2007. Citing state code that says an ITD head can be dismissed only “for inefficiency, neglect of duty, malfeasance or nonfeasance in office,” Lowe says she is considering her legal options ...

We're not in a position to take sides between the board and Lowe; this is, ultimately, a personnel issue, discussed outside public view. We do know a mess when we see one. The state cannot afford to make anything less than a first-rate hire, and now the Idaho Transportation Board comes stumbling its way into the job market.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Politics has a way of turning men dishonest

Although some worthy politicians aspire to election to the Congress or other offices to actually serve the public's interest and try to do so, most politicians, especially those now in Congress, only serve their own egregious purposes of unequal power, acquiring personal financial wealth at the expense of the taxpaying public and perks, privilege with the same lifetime salaries and benefits even after leaving their office after only one term!

My grandfather years ago used to say that an honest man elected to Congress becomes a dishonest politician soon after his election with his extended time in office. These unreasonable qualities and actions alone should convince patriotic American voters to push for a national referendum to force term limits which these corrupted members of Congress will never voluntarily pass into law much less get approval of by a leftist president.

Stand up, all loyal American citizens of either party or no party affiliation and fight for your country, your Constitution and our founding fathers' intentions! Pass the word!

Why waste the water when we live in desert?

I read with much interest the July 15 Times-News front-page article about an injection well near Gooding on Greg Lierman's farm.

Over many years, the canal company has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to plug sinkholes and cracks in the canal system to curb water loss.

The concrete canal north of Shoshone and the flume over Thorne Creek cannot carry additional water. People are turned down who need to buy water shares to water thirsty land because there isn't room to add more water to that system.

Why would an individual, living downstream of the canal and flume mentioned above, be allowed to serve on the Big Wood Canal Company's board of directors who would deliberately inject water down a hole when it could be put to beneficial use for fields or livestock situated downstream? Or, build a pond and use that water himself?

Why would anybody in their right mind do such a wasteful thing in this desert country? Stupid hurts, so someone here must be in a lot of pain!

Some are possessive of vanishing apostrophes

By Dave Ggram
Associated Press writer

SAXTONS RIVER, Vt. — A strange series of disappearances is gripping the state, from Saxtons River in southeastern Vermont to Malletts Bay on Lake Champlain.

And it's not just Vermont. In places and names around the country, apostrophes are vanishing.

The missing apostrophes have gained the attention of Web sites, blogs, Facebook and at least two associations devoted to the apostrophe's proper use, one in the United States and one in Britain.

In Saxtons River, the absence of an apostrophe before the second s is lamented by some, shrugged off by others.

When she lived in the village before moving to the neighboring town of Windham, state Rep. Carolyn Partridge gave a return address of Saxton's River — with the apostrophe.

"I'm a renegade," she said. She said she tried to find out why there's no apostrophe in the name, but "no one seemed to have an answer for it."

Jack Peters, a retired English teacher at the private boarding and prep school Vermont Academy in Saxtons River, said he could live without the apostrophe.

"Maybe the people who started it were not grammatically literate," he said. "I like it better; it looks better" without the punctuation mark.

The federal government actually discourages apostrophes in place names. The U.S. Geological Survey's Board on Geographic Names has had such a policy for more than 100 years.

So it's Pikes Peak — not Pike's Peak — in Colorado, and Henry's Fork, a branch of the Snake River, in eastern Idaho.

Henry's Fork doesn't sit well with Steve Trafton, executive director of the Henry's Fork Foundation, a conservation group that keeps the apostrophe in its name.

"It's named for Andrew Henry," an early 19th-century trapper and explorer, said Trafton, who has an English degree from Harvard. "The dictates of the English language say you need a possessive apostrophe. So, darn it, that's the way we're going to do it."

Evidence of the government's policy can be seen in the old maps and other artifacts at the Saxtons River Historical Society. Louise Luring, chairwoman of the village trustees and the society's president, joined local residents Albert Neill and Bob Wilson recently to go over old artifacts. Maps and clocks made locally in the 19th century had the apostrophe, but the punctuation mark disappears beginning in early 20th century ones.

It's not just place names, however. The federal Department of Veterans Affairs, the book trade magazine Publishers Weekly, the Diners Club credit card and Albertsons supermarket chain are among the organizations and companies that eschew the apostrophe.

Albertsons is part of the Supervalu Inc. family of food stores, which also includes Shaw's supermarkets in New England, which continue to use the apostrophe.

Vermont Gov. Jim Douglas, the newly elected chairman of the National Governors Association, said he had no intention of restoring the apostrophe to the organization's name.

"Think of how many key strokes we've saved over the last few years since the apostrophe was eliminated," Douglas said in a telephone interview from the mountain road that passes through Smugglers Notch (no apostrophe).

School budgets dip, class sizes grow

By Libby Quaid
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Like a seesaw on the school playground, falling state budgets are pushing class sizes higher.

The recession is forcing districts to lay off teachers even as the economic stimulus pumps billions of dollars into schools. As a result, classrooms across the country will be more crowded when school starts in the fall.

Patti Hathorn, a fifth-grade teacher in rural Pinson, Ala., is expecting 29 or 30 students, making it the biggest class she's taught. Many of her students at Kermit Johnson Elementary are learning English or are in special education.

"You may have a child that needs you, that needs that adult figure, to spend the extra five minutes with them. If you have five or six extra kids, that five minutes is gone," Hathorn said.

It's the same story in small communities such as Pinson and Wapakoneta, Ohio, and urban areas including Los Angeles and Broward County, Fla. In many places, classes will have well over 30 kids.

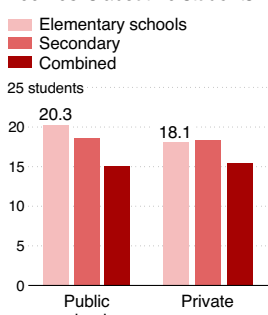

There is no official data on class sizes for the upcoming year; many states and districts have not finalized their budgets. A survey this year by the American Association of School Administrators found that 44 percent of school districts expected to increase class size.

Educators and parents worry the larger classes will keep kids from learning.

"The issue is how this affects kids and what price this generation is going to have to pay," said John White, principal of Mulholland Middle School in Los Angeles, where the district has laid off more than 2,000 teachers.

A recent federal report found the average class size for public elementary schools in 2007-08 is about 20 students.

Classes in Los Angeles are expected to grow by two kids in fourth through 12th grades. Middle school classes will have 35 kids on average; juniors and seniors will have about 43 kids in each class. Kindergarten through third-grade classes will rise by four kids to 24. Very large classes can keep teachers from teaching because their time is spent keeping order. Crowded classrooms also increase the chance that struggling students may fall through the cracks.

"I certainly won't say there's a magic number because it depends on the nature of the student group," said Jeremy Finn, education professor at University at Buffalo-SUNY. "But in the elementary grades especially, there's a certain point at which teachers can't do what they were trained to do."

Just as there's a downside to bigger classes, there's an upside to smaller ones, he said.

Research has shown that younger children, those in kindergarten through third grade, perform and behave better in smaller classes. Benefits are strongest for minority and poor children, Finn said.

So long, snail shells: Postal Service adapts to declining mail volume by pulling collection boxes

By Bridget Schulte
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Dorothy and Andrew Yankanich moved into their $18,000 brick rambler in Wheaton, Md., in 1966 and soon began what would become a daily ritual: Walking across the street to the squat blue mailbox and dropping off bills, birthday cards, letters, catalogue orders and whatever else needed to be sent on its way. For 43 years, in rain and shine, through the raising of seven children, the friendly box they could see through their front window's lace curtains was always there.

Until, one day at lunchtime a week or so ago, it wasn't. Yankanich, 82, watched as postal workers hacked at the rusted bolts and hauled the box away for good.

Across the country, stalwart blue "collection boxes" like the one on Flack Street in Wheaton are disappearing. In the past 20 years, 200,000 mailboxes have vanished from city streets, rural routes and suburban neighborhoods — more than the 175,000 that remain. In the Washington area alone, half the blue boxes that were on the streets nine years ago have been pulled up and taken to warehouses to molt in storage or be sold for scrap, leaving 4,071 mailboxes remaining in the District of Columbia, Northern Virginia and the Maryland suburbs.

"It was a nice-looking box," sighed Dorothy Yankanich, 77, looking out on the empty concrete slab across the street. "That was my exercise. Going across the street with the mail every day."

Although some communities have mounted protests — angry customers in one Maine town planted a snowplow and backhoe in front of a threatened mailbox — the vanishing boxes are only the most visible sign that something fundamental is changing in the way Americans communicate. The boxes are disappearing because most of us, unlike the Yankaniches, no longer use the mail as we used to.

The U.S. Postal Service says it removes "underperforming" mailboxes — those that collect fewer than 25 pieces of mail a day — after a week-long "density test." Snail mail is a dying enterprise because Americans increasingly pay bills online, send Evites for parties and text or give a quick call on a cellphone rather than write a letter.

Combine the impact of new technologies with the gut punch of the recession, and in the past year alone, the Postal Service has seen the single largest drop-off in mail volume in its 234-year history, greater even than the decline from 1929 to 1933 during the Great Depression. That downward trend is only accelerating. The Postal Service projects a decline of about 10 billion pieces of mail in each of the next two years, going from a high of 213 billion pieces of mail in 2006 to 170 billion projected for 2010.

The situation is so dire that the Postal Service, which is projecting a $6 billion shortfall by the end of September despite a recent postage rate increase, will go to Congress this month to seek emergency relief, looking to cut home mail delivery from six days a week to five. Already, the Postal Service has cut hours at hundreds of post offices across the country. It has consolidated routes, dropping 158 delivery routes locally, offered workers early retirement and imposed hiring and salary freezes. Still, said Postmaster General John E. Potter, the service is in "acute financial crisis."

Palin steps down as Alaska governor

By Matthew Daly
Associated Press writer

FAIRBANKS, Alaska — Sarah Palin stepped down Sunday as Alaska governor to write a book and build a right-of-center coalition, but she left her long-term political plans unclear and refused to address speculation she would seek a 2012 presidential bid.

In a fiery campaign-style speech, Palin said she was stepping down to take her political battles to a larger if unspecified stage and avoid an unproductive, lame duck status.

"With this decision, now, I will be able to fight even harder for you, for what is right, and for truth. And I have never felt that you need a title to do that," Palin said to raucous applause from about 5,000 people gathered at Pioneer Park in Fairbanks.

Her first order of business as a private citizen is to speak Aug. 8 at the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library in California. She also wants to campaign for political candidates from coast to coast, and continue to speak her mind on the social networking site Twitter, one of her favorite venues to reach out to supporters.

Free speech was a theme of her farewell speech at a crowded picnic in Fairbanks, as the outgoing governor scolded "some seemingly hell bent on tearing down our nation" and warned Americans to "be wary of accepting government largess. It doesn't come free." She also took aim at the media, saying her replacement, Lt. Gov. Sean Parnell, "has a very nice family too, so leave his kids alone!"

And she told the media: "How about, in honor of the American soldier, you quit makin' things up?"

She didn't elaborate, but Palin said when she announced her resignation July 3 that she was tired of the media focus on her family and felt she had been unfairly treated by reporters and bloggers.

Friend and foe alike have speculated that Palin may host a radio or TV show, launch a lucrative speaking career or seek higher office in Washington.

Palin hasn't ruled out any of those options, and her political action committee, SarahPAC, has raised more than $1 million, said Meghan Stapleton, a spokeswoman for the committee and the Palin family.

Stapleton said Palin is still deciding what her future will be.

"I cannot express enough there is no plan after July 26. There is absolutely no plan," she told The Associated Press.

Palin's surprise announcement she was stepping down 17 months before the end of her first term pushed her favorability rating down to 40 percent, according to a Washington Post-ABC poll. Fifty-three percent of those polled gave her an unfavorable rating.

Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin gives her resignation speech during a ceremony in Fairbanks, Alaska, Sunday, where Palin turned over power to Lt. Gov. Sean Parnell.

Revolutionary Guard tightens hold in Iran crisis

By Hamza Hendawi
Associated Press writer

CAIRO — The Revolutionary Guard tightened its already powerful hold over Iran during the post-election turmoil, raising alarm among some Iranians that it is transforming the Islamic Republic into a military state.

The elite force and an affiliated volunteer militia, the Basij, led the crackdown against street protesters who claim mass fraud in the June 12 election after President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad was declared the winner in a landslide. At least 20 protesters have been killed in clashes and hundreds detained.

The Revolutionary Guard weighed in at key moments of the crisis.

Two days before the election, with the reformists' Western-style campaign at its zenith, the Guard warned it would crush any attempt at a popular "revolution." A few days after Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei admonished demonstrators in a Friday prayer sermon to stop protests or face the consequences, the Guard followed up with its sternest warning to prepare for a "revolutionary confrontation" if protesters take to the streets again. A harsh crackdown followed.

The Guard was created following the 1979 Islamic revolution as an ideological force to defend Iran's clerical rule and root out the enemies of the newly born Islamic Republic. The 120,000-strong force has its own ground, naval, air and missile units and is believed to be better armed and equipped than the far larger

On top of its enormous military power, the force in recent years has amassed a network of economic and political power extending to virtually every aspect of life in Iran. Now some fear it has gone beyond protecting the system to dominating it. Even Khamenei may have become overly dependent on the Guards, some experts say.

The Guard is also believed to be the vanguard for Iran's ties with militant groups abroad, providing training for Hezbollah in Lebanon and, the U.S. says, Shiite militants in Iraq. That has led Washington to brand the force as a supporter of terrorism.

Opposition leader Mir Hossein Mousavi, who claims he won the presidential election, and other reform leaders appealed to Iran's top Shiite religious figures over the weekend to speak out against the growing crackdown. They warned of "the spread of tyranny in the Islamic Republic system."

French President Sarkozy hospitalized after collapsing during morning jog

PARIS (AP) — French President Nicolas Sarkozy collapsed while jogging Sunday on the lush grounds of the Chateau de Versailles and will stay at a hospital overnight even though tests so far have found nothing wrong, his office said.

Military doctors quickly performed a battery of tests on the 54-year-old president, who is known for his hyperactivity. The presidential Elysee Palace said Sarkozy's test results were normal but that doctors would keep him under cardiological observation until Monday.

Upon his collapse, Sarkozy was rushed by helicopter to a military hospital. His office denied the president had lost consciousness in the episode. The Elysee Palace statement followed reports from members of Sarkozy's government and his chief of staff, who had indicated that Sarkozy had lost consciousness.

"Today, late in the morning, while he was jogging in the park at the Chateau de Versailles, the president of the republic felt unwell. This episode, which came after 45 minutes of intense physical activity, was not accompanied by a loss of consciousness," the palace statement said.

Sarkozy, an avid jogger and cyclist, was forced to interrupt his run and "lie down with the help of an aide," the statement said. A presidential doctor who is with Sarkozy at all times sounded the alert and administered initial treatment.

LONDON — In a drive to inoculate people against swine flu before winter, many European governments say they will fast-track the testing of a vaccine, arousing concern among some experts about safety and proper doses.

The European Medicines Agency, the EU's top drug regulatory body, is accelerating the approval process for swine flu vaccine, and countries such as Britain, Greece, France and Sweden say they'll start using the vaccine after it's greenlighted — possibly within weeks.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Dr. Keiji Fukuda, the World Health Organization's flu chief, warned about the potential dangers of untested vaccines, although he stopped short of criticizing Europe's approach outright.

"One of the things which cannot be compromised is the safety of vaccines," he said Friday. "There are certain areas where you can make economies, perhaps, but certain areas where you simply do not try to make any economies."

Flu vaccines have been used for 40 years, and many experts say extensive testing is unnecessary, since the swine flu vaccine will simply contain a new ingredient: the swine flu virus.

But European officials won't know if the new vaccine causes any rare side effects until millions of people get the shots. Still, they say the benefit of saving lives is worth the gamble.

"Everybody is doing the best they can in a situation which is far from ideal," said Martin Harvey-Allchurch, a spokesman for the European Medicines Agency. "With the winter flu season approaching, we need to make sure the vaccine is available."

The Pita Pit in Twin Falls is locally owned and operated by Jeff Scott and Danny Auth. We Opened on July 10, 2007 and just celebrated two years of serving the Magic Valley fresh and healthy food. We would like to thank the Magic Valley for all of your support. If you haven't tried The Pita Pit take this opportunity for a free drink and try it today.

Pita Pit was founded on the idea that people want an exciting alternative to fast food restaurants—a place with great tasting food that's healthy, fresh, and still served fast. (Because who isn't burned out on burgers and pizza, and bottomed out on subs?) So Pita Pit ditched all the heavy breads and buns—along with the higher carbs and fat that today's health-conscious consumers are trying to avoid.

Instead, we came up with our own special light and tasty Lebanese-style pitas. And we vowed to fill them with only the good stuff. Leaner, savory meats that could be grilled to perfection, unique flavorful cheeses, and a larger choice of crisp, fresh veggies. We also offer exotic toppings, including our own zesty signature sauces. Our pitas were developed with a special fold, so these tantalizing flavors could be all rolled into one.

This "fresh thinking and healthy eating" can now be served up quickly for people on the go. And for those who aren't in a hurry, we designed our restaurants to provide a casual and fun atmosphere—part of which includes friendly employees who are good at what they do and treat every customer special.

Rikki Bosh cheers on her stepson, Hayden Bosh, with her daughters Henli, 2, and Kali, 10, at a Little League game in Twin Falls in June. 'The more people that know about (this disease) the better,' says Bosh, who has the gene for Pallido-Ponto-Nigral-Degeneration, an extremely rare genetic disease that strikes in mid-life. Her offspring have a 50-50 chance of carrying the tainted gene.

Family members ponder future

Would you want to know your fate?

Think long and hard about the question.

Rikki Bosh, now 29, wanted to know if she carried the tainted gene of her father's family tree. She already had one child, and before she brought another into the world, she wanted to know if she, like her father, would suffer and die from Pallido-Ponto-Nigral-Degeneration (PPND), an extremely rare genetic disease that strikes in mid-life. Usually within eight years from the first sign of the disease, those with the mutation die. Their offspring have a 50-50 chance of carrying the tainted gene.

After receiving counseling in Boise, the Twin Falls resident finally found out she was clear of the disease.

"It was like the best day. We went out and celebrated," Bosh said.

But several years later, and after she and her new husband, Jerod Bosh, had a baby, a series of events revealed that the information she received in 2004 differed from the blood test Dr. Zbigniew K. Wszolek's team had done many years before. Wszolek called her in September 2007 to share the news.

She recounts: "I remember, he said, 'I want you to know before you make any life-changing decisions. I was so mad — not at him — but I was just mad and said, 'I have a baby. I've already made life-changing decisions.'"

"I feel very sorry for Rikki," said Wszolek, who has studied the family disease for more than 20 years. "It's a very unfortunate situation, but it's better to know (the truth). There are very few people who know their fate."

On Nov. 2, 2007, Bosh found out for sure she was afflicted with the family disease.

"I will always remember that date — that's the day my life took a hard right," she said. Depression set in, and throughout the next year she had many awful days. But turning to her Christian faith helped her live for the moment. "My pastor says, 'A test says that I have it, but only God knows what's going to happen,'" Bosh said.

Some days still consume her with worry, though. About two months ago, on one of those days, she dropped by her church and the pastors' wife gave her a scripture:

"Therefore do not worry about tomorrow, for tomorrow will worry about its own things.

Sufficient for the day is its own trouble." — Matthew 6:34

Knowing these words needed to be close every day, she then drove to a tattoo parlor and had the scripture permanently dyed into her upper left arm.

"It's a good reminder. Don't worry about years down the road. Just worry about today," Bosh said.

Strong faith

Christianity runs strong through many branches of this family tree. Brenda Maloney, whose mother died of PPND in September 2008, said it was her mother's faith that got the family through the hard times.

Maloney is at risk of getting the disease, and if she has the mutation, her daughter, Laci, 5, and son, Carson, 2, will also be at risk. She remembers her mother mentioning during her childhood that she wanted to have children young so she could watch them grow up, just in case she inherited this mysterious disease that the family knew nothing about at the time.

"I had Carson after we pretty much knew (my mom) had it, so you kind of second guess yourself if you should reproduce," Maloney said. "But I didn't want Laci to be an only child, either."

Maloney has chosen not to be tested.

"I'm not that lucky at roulette," she said. "If there is a cure, or some benefit from being tested, I would. I know I wouldn't be the same person I am if I got tested. I'd be consumed about the future, and I wouldn't live today."

Maloney's 17-year-old cousin, Shandel Fouts, is also wrestling with the decision to learn her fate. PPND has led her to ponder her future, way beyond where to attend college next year.

Her mother, Jennilee Fouts, died of the disease two years ago, so she knows she and her two older brothers each have a 50-50 chance of having the deadly gene.

"I wouldn't want to find out as a junior in high school that I have a disease that has no cure yet, and know that by around the age of 45 I would pass away," Fouts said. "I want to make the best out of my life and not have any regrets."

She said she will consider being tested before having kids, but is concerned that if she is tested when she's between the ages of 25 and 30 and finds out she has the

Not just a fashion faux pas

The Washington Post

Summer means it's time to break out the flip-flops. Or is it?

According to the American College of Sports Medicine (ACSM), wearing flip-flops as primary footwear is harmful to your feet and legs. Though they may seem comfortable, flip-flops lack the support that sneakers and other shoes give you. Then there's all the extra work you have to do to keep them on your feet. The ACSM found that flip-flops force people to change their gait, which may explain the foot and leg pain that comes from wearing them for too long.

This doesn't mean you should never wear flip-flops — just not all the time and when walking long distances. And replace them often, the ACSM says. But in the end, when it comes to sneakers and flip-flops, sneakers are the better choice.

deadly gene, that she will have a decade or so to worry about what will happen to her.

She tries not to let it consume her thoughts, but as she watches other high school kids interact with their moms and dads on some of their happiest days, like prom and graduation, it's hard to put her future decisions on the side burner.

"So I have a while to think about it," Fouts said. "It's something that I would have to talk over with my family when the time comes."

Living under a cloud

Bosh now wishes she didn't know.

"I can see a difference," said her mother, Linda Kienerberger. "I know that Rikki takes life more serious — she doesn't take life for granted anymore. I wish she didn't know because it's so hard for her."

The family considered filing a lawsuit against the laboratory that misread Bosh's test results, but to have a case, daughter, Henli, would have to be tested to see if she carries Bosh's tainted gene.

"No amount of money is worth knowing that my baby is sick, so we just dropped it," she said.

Bosh worries about what the disease might do to her. She vividly recalls the moment she walked in to see her dad and he didn't remember his only child.

"That's what worries me the most, is that I won't know my girls," she said.

Mike Adams, Bosh's father, was always loving and nurturing. But when he got sick, he started changing. He got mean, and he was drinking to excess, Bosh said. For one year during high school, Bosh lived with her dad and frequently had to wake in the night to retrieve her father at the bar's closing.

But Bosh would prefer her girls not find out their fate.

"They still need to live their life and have children — not have this cloud over them," she said.

And if she is not around to tell them not to get tested, she has asked her husband to tell them for her.

"Hopefully, I won't be affected by then, and I would tell them of all the ups and downs of knowing. I'd tell them it's definitely something they need to really think about," she said. "It's 100 percent life-changing."

Odds are she has another decade to tell them about her decision to find out before dementia sets in.

"But I don't know," Bosh said of her future. "We could get hit by a Mack truck tomorrow."

Future hero

Maloney and Fouts' grandmother, Mary Hake, has seen two generations fall from this family disease. She lost her husband, her daughter and three stepchildren — and she can't help but think about the future and the fates of the next generation.

"I worry about them," she said. "It's depressing if you think about it."

But Wszolek and his staff remain optimistic.

"I think every year, we are getting closer and closer to a cure," Wszolek said.

Right now, researchers are working to find a drug that would slow symptoms of the disease.

"But you never know by doing this you might find the cure," he added.

Hake senses the urgency: "Most of the next generation is in their 30s right now. Gosh, we don't have much time."

But Bosh could be the future hero in this family. She is one of the 10 family members who have been tested in their young, healthy years. Five are clear of the disease; five have the faulty gene.

This spring, Bosh underwent two days of tests at the Mayo Research Clinic in Minnesota.

"I am 100 percent certain that even if the girls have the gene, they won't suffer from the disease," she said after returning home to Twin Falls.

Bosh is the first to join research before the onset of the disease. She will travel to Minnesota about once a year for testing.

Her mother and husband joined her on the trip where they met with one of Wszolek's colleagues, Dr. Bradley Boeve. The first day, she underwent cognitive testing that will be a baseline doctors will use as a comparison from year to year. She also had an MRI.

The second day, they met with Boeve, who has given them hope of a brighter future. He discussed the results and talked about several medications that are in clinical trials and could be available in a matter of years.

"He and Dr. Wszolek are so optimistic, it's hard not to be optimistic," Bosh said.

As the couple sat quietly waiting for a taxi to take them to the airport for their return trip to Idaho, Jerod Bosh broke the silence: "I don't think you are going to get sick."

"I just started bawling," she said. "It hit me. I might actually be able to hold my grandchildren, get to walk my kids down the aisle."

Quick Study

By Linda Searing
Special to The Washington Post

The topic: sleep apnea

Losing weight appears to improve disrupted sleep

THE QUESTION
If overweight people with sleep apnea shed some pounds, might the breathing disruptions that disturb their sleep lessen?

THIS STUDY
It involved 72 people who were overweight and had mild obstructive sleep apnea. They were randomly assigned to a group that followed a very-low-calorie diet for three months and received personalized counseling on diet, exercise and lifestyle modification periodically for a year or to a group that was given general diet and exercise information three times in a year. People in the diet group lost, on average, about 24 pounds in 12 months; weight loss in the other group averaged five pounds. Based on standardized scales, sleep apnea symptoms improved in both groups; but overall, the more weight lost, the greater the improvement. About 88 percent of those who lost more than 33 pounds were described as "cured" of sleep apnea, as were 62 percent of those losing 11 to 33 pounds and 38 percent of those who lost fewer than 11 pounds.

WHO MAY BE AFFECTED?
People who are overweight and have sleep apnea, characterized by breathing that repeatedly stops and starts, interrupting sleep, and often is accompanied by loud snoring.

CAVEATS
The study did not include, for comparison, people with sleep apnea who were given no treatment.

FIND THIS STUDY
It's in the Feb. 15 issue of the American Journal of Respiratory and Critical Care Medicine.

Hospital adds channel to soothe

Times-News

Stressed out by a hospital stay?

St. Luke's Wood River implemented The C.A.R.E. Channel for patient television at the Ketchum hospital. Planned to begin its broadcast this month, the relaxing channel is meant to contribute to a healing environment with respite from commercial television, noise and other stressful distractions.

Combining nature images and soothing music, the channel supports circadian rhythms and includes overnight programming for restfulness and sleep. Broadcasted in both English and Spanish, it offers options targeted for heart health, cancer care and pediatrics.

"The environment of care remains a powerful and effective tool in both tending to the patient and supporting treatment protocols," said Mary Kay Foley, the hospital's Integrative Therapies coordinator. "Research and patient satisfaction data have shown that sound can significantly impact clinical results."

Three-wheeled wonder

Trikke is an offbeat way to lose a few pounds

By Lenny Bernstein
The Washington Post

"What is that?" "How does it go?"

I am on Washington's Mall, outside the U.S. Botanic Garden, with Roy Brown and a small group of his friends and relatives, also known as the DC Metro Area Trikke Riders club. It is a sunny Sunday morning, and in various forms, those are the two questions this three-wheeled contraption provokes from tourists and passersby.

Remember the Trikke (pronounced "trike")? Me neither. But apparently plenty of people have seen the late-night infomercial featuring this adult scooter, and increasing numbers of people are buying them.

According to Trikke CEO John Simpson, the company sold 2,500 units in 2002 and more than 60,000 last year. Clubs have sprung up in 16 locations across the country, with no help or sponsorship from Trikke headquarters in Buellton, Calif. In 2002, Time named the Trikke one of the best inventions of the year.

The thing is more than a little strange to look at, with its oversize wheels, skateboard platforms and cambering handlebars. But it offers a full-body, no-impact workout, according to its adherents, at the same time that it gets you from Point A to Point B. And it's as much fun as a bicycle, once you learn how to ride it.

"To me, this solved the motivation problem," said Angela Roberts, Brown's wife and the woman who got the Trikke rolling in her household. "When I'm on it, I love it. When I'm off it, all I want to do is get back on it."

Roberts had been trying to lose weight for years when — you guessed it — she saw the infomercial and bought a Trikke a little over a year ago. She is 25 pounds lighter now, the result of the graceful arcs she traces just about everywhere.

Better yet, she put Brown, her husband, on it. Brown's job as a buffet manager at Charles Town Races and Slots had ballooned his weight to 325 pounds and, combined with his low-activity lifestyle, had given him Type 2 diabetes and heart disease.

"I said, 'There is no way I'm doing that. No way,'" Brown recalls. "She got it right away. But it was very frustrating for me."

Today, Brown is 15

Learning to ride Trikkies 'was very frustrating for me,' says Roy Brown, who now sells and services them.

The thing is more than a little strange to look at, with its oversize wheels, skateboard platforms and cambering handlebars. But it offers a full-body, no-impact workout, according to its adherents.

pounds lighter and has quit his buffet job. He no longer requires insulin. He has started an exercise equipment business, Rock and Roll Fitness, out of his home in Charles Town, W.Va., where he sells, services and offers training on Trikkies.

He says he has sold 170 so far. Prices range from $120 for a child's model to $600 for the most expensive adult Trikke.

You don't just jump on a Trikke and take off. It takes practice to find what Brown calls "the sweet spot" and what I thought of as my center of gravity. "Carving" — the leaning, back-and-forth motion that, along with leg power, is essential to moving the thing forward — is disconcerting at first. It takes a good bit of practice to go uphill, according to everyone who rides them.

You can jackknife if you're not careful, as first-timer Eric Strauchler found out that morning. He fell off in a heap, bruising his shoulder and collarbone, and scraping off some skin.

"We all have Trikke tattoos," Brown says.

When I call Strauchler the next day, he is sore but undaunted.

"I'm going to keep doing this. I'm not going to give up," says Strauchler, 52, a deckhand on an Army Corps of Engineers vessel that cleans debris from the Anacostia and Potomac rivers. "I think everyone falls off of something. When I was a kid, I rode a bike and I fell off many times."

I climb on Roberts' Trikke with a bit of trepidation and try to wriggle and lean it into motion. I go nowhere, becalmed on a sea of asphalt, until she tells me to think of the alternate-foot motion of inline skating. I give it a running start the second time and soon I am able to putter along for a few yards. The motion of the handlebars helps sustain my momentum, and as I grow more comfortable, the left-right lean isn't nearly as troubling. Others say the motion is closest to skiing.

Then Lawrence Mayes shows up. Mayes, 29, is a man among boys in the local Trikke club. He has done a 100-mile ride on a Trikke in less than nine hours and regularly zips along at an average of 12 mph. (He has a wrist GPS to prove it.) He is trying to hit a sustained 15 mph. You can see him in a YouTube video, but be forewarned: He crashes rather spectacularly and shows off some nasty road rash. (Search for "Trikke Crash Road Rash.")

Mayes, a Bank of America administrator from Chesapeake, Va., says he lost 36 pounds in three months after acquiring his Trikke with points he earned at work and has kept the weight off for a year. He rides his scooter to work a couple of days a week and sees no need for any other form of exercise.

"On a bike, if I did 30 miles, I would work the crap out of my legs," he says. "On the Trikke, if you do 30 miles, you feel it in your arms, your shoulders, your calves, your abs, your obliques."

HEALTHY & FIT BRIEFS

Being underweight less of a problem

It's hard to believe, but being underweight used to be a considerable U.S. health problem. In the years from 1966 to 1970, 5.8 percent of children ages 6 to 11 and 4.6 percent of children ages 12 to 19 were underweight. From 1960 to 1962, 5.7 percent of people ages 20 to 39 were underweight.

How times have changed.

Today, people who are underweight are most likely those who have underlying medical conditions, according to data from the National Center for Health Statistics. The rates of people of all ages who are underweight have declined significantly. Although some people may still be underweight because of malnutrition, many more become overweight as a consequence of eating a poor diet based on processed foods and saturated fat with little fruit, vegetables and lean meat and fish.

Survey data from 2003 to 2006 show 3.3 percent of children ages 2 to 19 are underweight. In children ages 2 to 5, the incidence declined from 5.8 percent in 1971-74 to 2.8 percent in 2003-06.

Among adults of all ages, the rates of underweight fell from 4 percent in 1960-62 to 1.8 percent in 2003-06. Five decades ago, 3.7 percent of people ages 60 to 74 were underweight. Today only 0.9 percent are underweight.

Is your fish safe?

Rich in high-quality protein and omega-3 fatty acids and low in saturated fat, fish is an important addition to any diet because it promotes a healthy heart and proper development in growing children. But mercury contamination in fish poses a very real health risk to some people — particularly kids and women who are pregnant or might become pregnant.

How do you know when fish is safe? Here are guidelines from the Environmental Protection Agency:

- Avoid shark, swordfish, king mackerel and tilefish, which tend to contain high levels of mercury.

- Up to 12 ounces per week of a variety of fish is good for you. Shrimp, canned light tuna, salmon, pollock and catfish have the lowest mercury levels.

- Check the safety of fish caught in your local lakes, rivers and coastal areas by consulting fish advisories at EPA's Web site: www.epa.gov/waterscience/fish/tates.htm.

Mom fears burning bridges in day care exit interview

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have decided to take our son out of the day care where he has been for the past six months. It's a small center, run by a woman, "Joni," who serves as director and lead teacher. She started the service two years ago and manages a staff of about 12.

Joni is the reason we are leaving. She seems incredibly stressed out all the time. She is curt with us when we talk and has been too harried to discuss our concerns over our boy's care. She appears to be more preoccupied with finances than the quality of care she is providing. One of our favorite teachers just quit, and she confided that it was because of the difficulty she had working with Joni.

Because we told Joni we are going, she has requested an "exit interview" to discuss what didn't work for us. I am hesitant about it. If we let her know the impact her stress is having on the quality of service she provides, she might be able to hire an administrator and make improvements. On the other hand, she may take offense.

Our community is small, so we will see her around, and because there are few child care centers, we may need to go back to this one someday. Should we be frank with her or let it go?

DEAR ABBY Jeanne Phillips

— MIDWEST MOM

DEAR MIDWEST MOM: Have the meeting with her. Be kind, calm and nonconfrontational, and do not tell her how to run her business. Explain that you are seeking other options for your son because she has been preoccupied and seems not to have enough time to address your parental concerns. Say you understand how complicated it is running a business even in the best of times, but as much as you like her, your first responsibility must be to your child. Period.

DEAR ABBY: I am a single woman in my 60s who lives alone. One of my greatest fears is developing dementia. Because there is no one living with me, there would be no one around to notice changes in my behavior.

I am still able to balance my checkbook, do my grocery shopping, drive myself to the dentist's office, etc. If I ever need assisted living, how would I recognize the fact so I could make other arrangements before requiring someone else to make them for me?

— GROWING OLDER

IN SAN DIEGO

DEAR GROWING OLDER: Most single women have friends with whom they interact on a regular basis. If you didn't recognize the signs that you were slipping, one or more of your friends probably would.

With our population living longer, concerns about age-related dementia are growing. Because this is one of your concerns, discuss it with your physician and request to be evaluated for signs of dementia during your annual physicals.

DEAR ABBY: I am a college student with a gender-neutral name. I often need to exchange e-mails with people who have never met me, and I am frequently assumed to be male when I am, in fact, female.

Is there a polite way to correct this in my return e-mails? Or should I not let people know they have made a mistake until they meet me in person?

— Z.W.

CAMBRIDGE MASS.

DEAR Z.W.: A sure way to let people know they have made an incorrect assumption would be to sign your return e-mail "Ms. Z.W."

IF JULY 27 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: This is a good summer to develop friendships among your peers and to set a high bar for physical conditioning. Join a swim club or fitness center to obtain the most benefit from the stars and kill two birds with one stone. Your aspirations grow during the autumn, but you may be lacking the tools or experience to make your move until the end of the year. Put important plans in motion in January or early February when your judgment is better than usual and you will have extra help from well-wishers. That is also a good time to make a crucial decision about a romantic relationship.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You want to use money well, but your approach can fall when you are dealing with friends or family. Hold off on business contracts.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Relationships must be handled like eggs. Avoid sudden changes of plan to preserve the peacefulness of a valued relationship.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Juggle all the balls; try to please everyone. Your tranquility could be upset by new job policies. Family conflicts need attention.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You like to be on the cutting edge, but may be too adventurous. If restlessness strikes, find something constructive to do.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You have the ability to tackle even the humblest task and can take pride in executive abilities. Don't let people take advantage of you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You know how to wait for your opportunities. But a tendency to diligently dig up the dirt might cause a social blunder.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You aren't content to rely on the tried and true and prefer the excitement of new technologies, new people and cutting-edge ideas.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Someone wants to play the field; you want white picket fences. A brief upset in your love life may result in a better understanding.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You follow your beliefs regardless of public opinion. Family members might surprise you or present you with an emergency.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't let enthusiasm control you. Whatever your excitement, take time to experiment and verify that what sounds good is also true.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You're used to being everyone's darling, so are surprised by and might take innocent advice the wrong way. Keep aware of your place.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The word "no" is also part of the word "innovation." This is why people often resist change to demonstrate their independence.

Today is Monday, July 27, the 208th day of 2009. There are 157 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On July 27, 1909, during the first official test of the U.S. Army's first airplane, Orville Wright flew himself and a passenger, Lt. Frank Lahm, above Fort Myer, Va., for one hour and 12 minutes.

On this date: In 1789, President George Washington signed a measure establishing the Department of Foreign Affairs, forerunner of the Department of State. In 1794, French revolutionary leader Maximilien Robespierre was overthrown and placed under arrest; he was executed the following day.

In 1866, Cyrus W. Field finished laying out the first successful underwater telegraph cable between North America and Europe (a previous cable in 1858 burned out after only a few weeks of use).

In 1919, race-related rioting erupted in Chicago; the violence, which claimed the lives of 23 blacks and 15 whites, lasted until Aug. 3.

In 1953, the Korean War armistice was signed at Panmunjom, ending three years of fighting.

In 1960, Vice President Richard M. Nixon was nominated for president at the

TODAY IN HISTORY

Republican national convention in Chicago.

In 1967, President Lyndon B. Johnson appointed the Kerner Commission to assess the causes of urban rioting, the same day black militant H. Rap Brown said in Washington that violence was "as American as cherry pie."

In 1974, the House Judiciary Committee voted 27-11 to adopt the first of three articles of impeachment against President Richard Nixon, charging he had personally engaged in a course of conduct designed to obstruct justice in the Watergate case.

In 1984, actor James Mason died in Lausanne, Switzerland, at age 75.

In 1996, terror struck the Atlanta Olympics as a pipe bomb exploded at Centennial Olympic Park, directly killing one person and injuring 111. (Anti-government extremist Eric Rudolph later pleaded guilty to the bombing.)

Ten years ago: The House approved President Bill Clinton's one-year extension of normal trade with China. In an overwhelming defeat for major league umpires, they threatened walkout collapsed when all of the umpires withdrew their resignations; however, about one-third of them ended up losing their jobs anyway. A flash flood in Switzerland claimed the lives of 21 people, 18 of them tourists. With Air Force Col. Eileen Collins at the controls, space shuttle Columbia returned to Earth, ending a five-day mission.

Five years ago: Democrats assailed President George W. Bush's handling of the Iraq war at their convention in Boston and painted a vivid portrait of John Kerry as a decorated Vietnam War hero. In a keynote address, Illinois State Sen. Barack Obama said Kerry had long made "tough choices when easier ones were available."

One year ago: A gunman went on a rampage at the Tennessee Valley Unitarian Universalist Church in Knoxville, killing two people and wounding six others. (Jim D. Adkisson later pleaded guilty to murder and attempted murder and was sentenced to life in prison without parole.) Two bombs targeting civilians at a packed square in Istanbul, Turkey, killed 17 people. Iran hanged 29 people convicted of murder, drug trafficking and other crimes. Carlos Sastre of Spain won the Tour de France in one of the closest finishes in the 105-year-old race.

Palin steps down as Alaska governor

By Matthew Daly
Associated Press writer

FAIRBANKS, Alaska — Sarah Palin stepped down Sunday as Alaska governor to write a book and build a right-of-center coalition, but she left her long-term political plans unclear and refused to address speculation she would seek a 2012 presidential bid.

In a fiery campaign-style speech, Palin said she was stepping down to take her political battles to a larger if unspecified stage and avoid an unproductive, lame duck status.

"With this decision, now, I will be able to fight even harder for you, for what is right, and for truth. And I have never felt that you need a title to do that," Palin said to raucous applause from about 5,000 people gathered at Pioneer Park in Fairbanks.

Her first order of business as a private citizen is to speak Aug. 8 at the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library in California. She also wants to campaign for political candidates from coast to coast, and continue to speak her mind on the social networking site Twitter, one of her favorite venues to reach out to supporters.

Free speech was a theme of her farewell speech at a crowded picnic in Fairbanks, as the outgoing governor scolded "some seemingly hell bent on tearing down our nation" and warned Americans to "be wary of accepting government largess. It doesn't come free." She also took aim at the media, saying her replacement, Lt. Gov. Sean Parnell, "has a very nice family too, so leave his kids alone!"

And she told the media: "How about, in honor of the American soldier, you quit makin' things up?"

She didn't elaborate, but Palin said when she announced her resignation July 3 that she was tired of the media focus on her family and felt she had been unfairly treated by reporters and bloggers.

Friend and foe alike have speculated that Palin may host a radio or TV show, launch a lucrative speaking career or seek higher office in Washington.

Palin hasn't ruled out any of those options, and her political action committee, SarahPAC, has raised more than $1 million, said Meghan Stapleton, a spokeswoman for the committee and the Palin family.

Stapleton said Palin is still deciding what her future will be.

"I cannot express enough there is no plan after July 26. There is absolutely no plan," she told The Associated Press.

Palin's surprise announcement she was stepping down 17 months before the end of her first term pushed her favorability rating down to 40 percent, according to a Washington Post-ABC poll. Fifty-three percent of those polled gave her an unfavorable rating.

Revolutionary Guard tightens hold in Iran crisis

By Hamza Hendawi
Associated Press writer

CAIRO — The Revolutionary Guard tightened its already powerful hold over Iran during the post-election turmoil, raising alarm among some Iranians that it is transforming the Islamic Republic into a military state.

The elite force and an affiliated volunteer militia, the Basij, led the crackdown against street protesters who claim mass fraud in the June 12 election after President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad was declared the winner in a landslide. At least 20 protesters have been killed in clashes and hundreds detained.

The Revolutionary Guard weighed in at key moments of the crisis.

Two days before the election, with the reformists' Western-style campaign at its zenith, the Guard warned it would crush any attempt at a popular "revolution." A few days after Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei admonished demonstrators in a Friday prayer sermon to stop protests or face the consequences, the Guard followed up with its sternest warning to prepare for a "revolutionary confrontation" if protesters take to the streets again. A harsh crackdown followed.

The Guard was created following the 1979 Islamic revolution as an ideological force to defend Iran's clerical rule and root out the enemies of the newly born Islamic Republic. The 120,000-strong force has its own ground, naval, air and missile units and is believed to be better armed and equipped than the far larger regular military.

On top of its enormous military power, the force in recent years has amassed a network of economic and political power extending to virtually every aspect of life in Iran. Now some fear it has gone beyond protecting the system to dominating it. Even Khamenei may have become overly dependent on the Guards, some experts say.

The Guard is also believed to be the vanguard for Iran's ties with militant groups abroad, providing training for Hezbollah in Lebanon and, the U.S. says, Shiite militants in Iraq. That has led Washington to brand the force as a supporter of terrorism.

Opposition leader Mir Hossein Mousavi, who claims he won the presidential election, and other reform leaders appealed to Iran's top Shiite religious figures over the weekend to speak out against the growing crackdown. They warned of "the spread of tyranny in the Islamic Republic system."

French President Sarkozy hospitalized after collapsing during morning jog

PARIS (AP) — French President Nicolas Sarkozy collapsed while jogging Sunday on the lush grounds of the Chateau de Versailles and will stay at a hospital overnight even though tests so far have found nothing wrong, his office said.

Military doctors quickly performed a battery of tests on the 54-year-old president, who is known for his hyperactivity. The presidential Elysee Palace said Sarkozy's test results were normal but that doctors would keep him under cardiological observation until Monday.

Upon his collapse, Sarkozy was rushed by helicopter to a military hospital. His office denied the president had lost consciousness in the episode. The Elysee Palace statement followed reports from members of Sarkozy's government and his chief of staff, who had indicated that Sarkozy had lost consciousness.

"Today, late in the morning, while he was jogging in the park at the Chateau de Versailles, the president of the republic felt unwell. This episode, which came after 45 minutes of intense physical activity, was not accompanied by a loss of consciousness," the palace statement said.

Sarkozy, an avid jogger

and cyclist, was forced to interrupt his run and "lie down with the help of an aide," the statement said. A presidential doctor who is with Sarkozy at all times sounded the alert and administered initial treatment.

Europe fast-tracking swine flu vaccine

By Maria Cheng
Associated Press writer

LONDON — In a drive to inoculate people against swine flu before winter, many European governments say they will fast-track the testing of a vaccine, arousing concern among some experts about safety and proper doses.

The European Medicines Agency, the EU's top drug regulatory body, is accelerating the approval process for swine flu vaccine, and countries such as Britain, Greece, France and Sweden say they'll start using the vaccine after it's greenlighted — possibly within weeks.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Dr. Keiji Fukuda, the World Health Organization's flu chief, warned about the potential dangers of untested vaccines, although he stopped short of criticizing Europe's approach outright.

"One of the things which cannot be compromised is the safety of vaccines," he said Friday. "There are certain areas where you can make economies, perhaps, but certain areas where you simply do not try to make any economies."

Flu vaccines have been used for 40 years, and many experts say extensive testing is unnecessary, since the swine flu vaccine will simply contain a new ingredient: the swine flu virus.

But European officials won't know if the new vaccine causes any rare side effects until millions of people get the shots. Still, they say the benefit of saving lives is worth the gamble.

"Everybody is doing the best they can in a situation which is far from ideal," said Martin Harvey-Allchurch, a spokesman for the European Medicines Agency. "With the winter flu season approaching, we need to make sure the vaccine is available."

The Pita Pit in Twin Falls is locally owned and operated by Jeff Scott and Danny Auth. We Opened on July 10, 2007 and just celebrated two years of serving the Magic Valley fresh and healthy food. We would like to thank the Magic Valley for all of your support. If you haven't tried The Pita Pit take this opportunity for a free drink and try it today.

Pita Pit was founded on the idea that people want an exciting alternative to fast food restaurants—a place with great tasting food that's healthy, fresh, and still served fast. (Because who isn't burned out on burgers and pizza, and bottomed out on subs?) So Pita Pit ditched all the heavy breads and buns—along with the higher carbs and fat that today's health-conscious consumers are trying to avoid.

Instead, we came up with our own special light and tasty Lebanese-style pitas. And we vowed to fill them with only the good stuff. Leaner, savory meats that could be grilled to perfection, unique flavorful cheeses, and a larger choice of crisp, fresh veggies. We also offer exotic toppings, including our own zesty signature sauces. Our pitas were developed with a special fold, so these tantalizing flavors could be all rolled into one.

This "fresh thinking and healthy eating" can now be served up quickly for people on the go. And for those who aren't in a hurry, we designed our restaurants to provide a casual and fun atmosphere—part of which includes friendly employees who are good at what they do and treat every customer special.
