Taliban: Bergdahl's fate depends on U.S. response to demands

No deadline given; exact demands unknown

By Ishtiaq Mahsud
Associated Press writer

DERA ISMAIL KHAN, Pakistan — A militant commander who is holding a U.S. soldier abducted in Afghanistan said Sunday that Taliban leader Mullah Omar's council is waiting for a response to its demands before deciding the American's fate.

It was the first news of Pfc. Bowe R. Bergdahl, 23, made public since a Taliban video was released July 18.

Maulvi Sangin, an insurgent commander for eastern Afghanistan, said the Taliban's governing body was awaiting a response to demands it made to the U.S. for his return.

"The American's fate is in the hand of (leadership), which is waiting until a response from the Americans to its demands," Sangin told

The Associated Press.

Sangin would not elaborate on the demands or say if any deadline had been given. A spokesman for Sangin had previously said the soldier would be killed unless the U.S. stops airstrikes in two areas of eastern Afghanistan.

Bergdahl, of Hailey, was serving with an Alaska-based infantry regiment when he disappeared June 30, just five months after arriving in Afghanistan. He was serving at an eastern base near the border with Pakistan. The circumstances of his capture weren't clear.

Bergdahl

Details of such incidents are routinely withheld by the military to avoid giving away any information to captors.

Sangin, who spoke by telephone from Pakistan, refused to say on which side of the border Bergdahl was being held.

Last month, Afghans in contact with the Taliban told The Associated Press that the fighters had initially planned to smuggle the soldier across the border into Pakistan but ruled that out because of U.S. missile strikes and Pakistani bombing attacks against militant targets in the area.

Instead, they decided to move him north into Taliban-controlled areas of Afghanistan's Ghazni province.

The Taliban move freely between the mountainous ethnic Pashtun areas on both sides of the border.

Lt. Cmdr. Christine Sidenstricker, a U.S. military spokeswoman in Kabul, would not comment on the status of Bergdahl's case.

"We do not want to do anything that compromises his safety or efforts to recover him," she said. "Recovery efforts remain one of the largest ongoing operations and we are doing everything we can to get him back safely."

MURTAUGH — Kirk Tubbs has seen a lot of Twin Falls County this summer.

Tubbs is the manager of the county's new pest abatement district, a job that's kept him on the road — poisoning insects, mapping breeding grounds and trapping and testing mosquitoes for disease.

For the previous two years, the county itself has done abatement work through an emergency district created by county commissioners. Voters approved a formal, county-wide district last year, creating an organization separate from the county and with its own board of directors to protect them from mosquitoes, black flies and whatever else infests the area.

Backed by an annual budget of $442,000 — minus a portion being used to pay back the county for the emergency work — Tubbs and two employees have focused on fighting the mosquitoes and black flies, the two major pests the emergency district battled as well. Mosquitoes can carry disease and pester humans, breeding in standing water. Black flies prefer moving water, on the other hand, and are mainly a threat to livestock operations.

Both succumb to a biological larvicide called VectoBac, which Tubbs said

Council to vote on next year's budget cap tonight

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News

The Twin Falls City Council is expected to vote tonight on a spending cap for next year's proposed $48.3 million preliminary budget and schedule a public hearing for the budget.

By adopting the preliminary budget, the total allowed for expenditures for next year is set. The public hearing allows for funds to be reallocated or even to reduce the budget. But the final budget the Council approves cannot exceed the preliminary budget amount.

The public hearing is proposed for 6 p.m. Aug. 24. The fiscal year begins Oct. 1.

Council members have held three informal budget discussions. They've also received information from the city staff about ongoing changes, including savings from road projects being earlier, lower costs to health care for city employees and how to begin saving annually for longterm projects.

The budget includes a 12 percent increase in water rates to cover a portion of city debt toward the $33.3 million project to meet federal arsenic standards.

Bicyclist dies Sunday morning in Twin Falls

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

A man riding his bicycle in downtown Twin Falls died Sunday morning after he collided with a semi truck at the intersection of Shoshone Street and Main Avenue, police said.

Shortly before 7 a.m., a semi truck pulling two trailers was heading north on Shoshone Street South when a bicyclist also heading north on the adjacent sidewalk tried to cross Shoshone Street at the intersection at Main Avenue to travel west, according to a news release from Twin Falls Police Department.

The bicyclist abruptly turned left and apparently struck the second trailer, said Twin Falls Police Department Staff Sgt. Dan Lewin. He said "it was pretty apparent" the man was dead when police and paramedics arrived. Police did not release the name of the bicyclist because the coroner's office is working to identify him and will contact the family before releasing his name, Lewin said.

The driver of the 2007 International Semi Truck pulling two trailers, registered to Glanbia Foods, Inc., was identified as Barry L. Gines, 51, of Gooding, according to Lewin.

The incident is under investigation and no arrests have been made, according to the release.

Sunday's incident is the latest in a series of bicyclist fatalities in Idaho this summer.

In June, David Webster, of Twin Falls, was killed on Falls Avenue East when a truck that was trying to pass another vehicle struck him. Several bikers in Boise were killed in May and June, as well.

Police responded at about 6:55 a.m., according to the release.

IRI tests show students improve reading skills

T.F. students faring better than state average

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

The school year ended two months ago, but Idaho's school districts are now being graded on how well students are learning to read.

The final round of Idaho Reading Indicator test results for the past school year is out. The IRI is given to kindergarten through third-grade students three times a year — fall, winter and spring — and is used to gauge if students are reading at grade level.

With the exception of first-graders, each grade in Idaho improved from the fall and spring. Eighty percent of first-graders tested at or above grade level in the fall, but the figure dropped to 71 percent in the spring IRI tests.

The biggest increase was among the state's kindergartners, where the increase from fall to spring was from 56 percent to 82 percent at or above grade level.

Twin Falls School District fared better than the state average in its spring IRI test results. While pleased, administrators say there's still room for improvement.

Three things to do today

• You've probably found that if you live in a place you tend to take for granted some of the attractions. Take Crystal Springs, a five-acre lake fed by springs and tucked into the Snake River Canyon. People fish there year round and it's a great place to watch the wildlife. It's off of Interstate 84 on the north side of the canyon. Drive past Niagara Springs.

• If you can't take a trip to Russia, learn about that country's literature in the "Saints and Sinners in 20th Century Russian Literature and Film" class through the College of Southern Idaho. It costs $100 and starts Aug. 25.

• And this sounds very interesting: Author and philanthropist Jacqueline Novogratz discusses "Patient Capital for an Impatient World," about her efforts to solve global poverty at 4 p.m. at the Community Library, 415 Spruce Ave., Ketchum. Her journey started when she spotted a young boy in Africa wearing a blue sweater she had given to Goodwill years before. Admission is free.

Law & Disorder...

... in Cassia County

From July 25 police reports:

Vandalism:

A 45-year-old Burley man reported that someone wrote "Daze Joe" with a black marker on a business sign. No suspects.

From July 26 police reports:

Driving violations:

Police were dispatched in Burley for, the report reads, "a vehicle vs. power pole."

The vehicle had left the scene, according to the report. The suspect was pulled over south of Burley near Farmer's Corner, where the driver — Richard Saenz, 31 — was questioned. "I asked him why he had left the scene of the damage crash and he said he was just going to stop somewhere safe. I asked him how far back he had hit the pole and he said about a half mile," Deputy Terry Higley's report reads.

"I said to him so there is no where (sic) else to stop between here and the pole. The driver advised that he wanted to buy a pop." According to the report, Higley recognized Saenz, as he had cited him for trespassing at a tanning salon earlier that day. He was arrested for leaving the scene and inattentive driving. According to the report, various car parts from the crash were found in the front and back seats of the vehicle.

From July 27 police reports:

Vandalism, et cetera:

A 27-year-old Burley woman told police that she "has been having an ongoing problem with her neighbors" and that, according to the report, "when she came home she found red, sticky stuff on her door knob." She took a picture of it. The night before, she said, her car door was opened at 4 a.m., and the CD player was damaged. Two nights before, she said, someone threw an egg at her front window. No further information provided about the "red, sticky stuff."

is derived from bacteria and largely safe for use in canals and other waters.

On Wednesday morning, he sprayed the substance into the Twin Falls Canal Co.'s system near Murtaugh Lake, targeting the flies — which travel from the area to the South Hills. Canals are a problem because they dry up in winter, he said, killing off the creatures that would otherwise eat the insects.

"So they've got this perfect habitat with no natural predators, and they breed like crazy," Tubbs said.

The recent heat has led to more hatches across the county, and Tubbs said he's pumping in the VectoBac once a week now. One 25-gallon tote costs $7,000; Tubbs goes through a tote and a half each week.

Widespread tests on mosquitoes haven't turned up any carrying West Nile virus so far, he said. The emergency district was created one year after the virus infected more than 1,000 people across Idaho. Changes in testing requirements, the virus' natural progression and other factors have led to a sharp decline in cases since, but officials still keep a sharp eye on it.

The virus was rare last year, but seems to be keeping an even lower profile this summer. According to provisional data from the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, mosquitoes have tested positive for the disease in only seven counties in southwestern Idaho, and only one person — a resident of Bonneville County in eastern Idaho — has come down with the disease. In contrast, state and local health officials had counted 12 infections by August 2008; department spokeswoman Emily Simmitt said Friday that officials aren't sure why this year's been so quiet.

"Certainly we're glad that it seems to have waned," she said.

Tubbs is confident that he'll be able to alert people if he finds West Nile in Twin Falls mosquitoes. But he still wants to encourage residents to do their part, draining standing water on their properties and calling him if they find larvae from either bug.

"If it's out there, we'll likely find it," he said.

Democrats wrestle over public health care option

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — As Congress breaks for its August recess, the debate back home will center on Democratic proposals to create a government-run insurance option, which insurers and Republicans are casting as a step toward socialized medicine.

But the more relevant debate is the one occurring amongst Democrats themselves, who will have the most say in the outcome: Even if one believes the public option is a good thing, should reformers stake everything on its inclusion?

President Obama supports the creation of a public insurance plan that would compete with insurers on "exchanges" — state or regional marketplaces where the uninsured and small businesses could buy coverage with the help of income-based subsidies. This competition ideally would be "keeping insurers honest," as Obama says, and reduce the cost of universal coverage.

Most Republicans in Congress are dead set against a public option, saying it would drive insurers out of business. Some key centrist Democrats in Congress, notably Finance Committee Chairman Max Baucus, Mont., say Democrats must give up on the public option if they want to win a filibuster-proof 60 votes in the Senate, and are instead proposing insurance cooperatives, non-profit groups owned by their members, similar to rural utility co-ops. Obama recently expressed openness to this alternative.

"The hard reality is ... that a public option does not have enough support in the Senate to pass," said Sen. Kent Conrad, D-N.D.

Other Democrats disagree, saying that reform without a strong public option is doomed to fail, with private insurers reaping a bonanza of new customers while costs continue to escalate and premium subsidies fall short.

"Health insurance by its

INSIDE

Consumer protection lost in health care debate.

See Main 4

very nature is a rapacious industry. (Insurance companies) want to make a lot of money," said Sen. John Rockefeller, D-W.Va. "We have to have a strong counterbalance to them."

The debate over whether to fight for a public option spans Capitol Hill cloakrooms and the premier progressive think tanks.

Many experts, such as Linda Blumberg and John Holohan at the Urban Institute, say a public plan is essential to fiscal responsibility in a country where health-care spending has soared to $2.4 trillion per year. A public option such as that proposed by House Democrats, with prices initially set at 5 percent above Medicare rates but well below private insurer rates, would inject competition into markets that are now oligop-olies: An American Medical Association study found that a single insurer controls more than half the market in 16 states and a third of it in 38 states.

This competition, the thinking goes, would drive insurers to demand that medical providers find more cost-effective ways to deliver care, leading to innovations and the spread of well-integrated networks of salaried physicians in the place of the costly fee-for-service approach that predominates today.

As it stands, insurers can pass on rising medical costs in the form of higher premiums. But with a public option in the mix, providers would work with insurers to lower costs, to keep the private insurers from going out of business; providers would likely have little choice but to accept the public option but would not want it to gain too much of the market. Medicare does not offer this competitive dynamic because it covers only the elderly.

reading," Superintendent Wiley Dobbs said. "Some would say that's impossible, but you know what, we're going to keep striving for that."

Of Twin Falls School District's first-graders, 75.7 percent tested at or above grade level, above the state average.

Ted Popplewell, elementary programs director, said the spring IRI test for first-graders tests fluency, which is the ability to read a specific number of words per minute. While that's important, Popplewell said the district also wants its students to have good comprehension of what they're reading.

Superintendent Heather Williams of Gooding School District said that while her district's scores may be lower than some other schools, the district is encouraged by the growth of students' improvement.

For example, 62.8 percent of kindergartners in Gooding School District scored at or

But at the same time, 28.4 percent of the district's kindergartners started out in the fall at or above grade level, well below the state average of 55.9 percent.

The district this fall is starting a new reading curriculum for kindergarten through fifth-grade students this fall that uses interactive media.

In Kimberly School District, 81.5 percent of first-graders were at or above grade level in the spring.

Car show in Castleford draws big crowd

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

CASTLEFORD — Over the weekend, Castleford wasn't just a sleepy agricultural community of 300 people. Instead Castleford was one happening boom town as thousands descended on it for the fifth annual Buhl Bunch Car Show and Shakin' the Rock mud races.

There were about a hundred cars to browse in Jean's Park, ranging from quaint works in progress to classic cars. There were also burn outs and mud races to cheer on, and a street dance that lasted until midnight.

Buhl resident Krystal Brown brought her three young children, whose favorite event — hands-down — was the mud races.

"The kids love it. The mud has kept their attention all day," Brown said.

She's been to the event before but was impressed with how many people were there, the most she's ever seen.

"It's awesome. There is a great turnout," Brown said. "I'm not surprised — the whole thing is a lot of fun."

Mud racer Terri Heath shows the mud track who's boss during the Shaking the Rock event Saturday in Castleford.

Participants had fun, too. Sixteen-year-old Scott Walker entered his 1964 Chevy truck into the burn out competition. He smoked his tires good last year but came more prepared this year.

"You want to be really loud and have crappy tires," Walker said. "Last year I ruined some good ones and that was expensive."

After giving the crowd a good show, Walker received more than a couple of thumbs-up from the audience as he drove his bright white truck off the concrete burn-out pad.

"I'm probably one of the youngest guys out here and I may not have as much horsepower as some, but it's fun. I'm just here to have fun," Walker said.

Back in the park, the Castleford Middle School cheerleaders braved sometimes-chilly weather in the dunk-tank.

"It's worth it because in the end we'll have enough money for new uniforms," said 13-year-old Caitlyn Choate. Choate was shivering but, like most in Castleford over the weekend, she was also smiling.

Buhl Bunch Car Show burn-out contestant Scott Walker checks his mirror Saturday prior to his turn on the concrete pad in Castleford.

Dam operators fly Idaho rivers, map hot spots

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Federal hydropower officials will buzz two Idaho mountain rivers this week with helicopter-mounted cameras typically used for tracking illegal immigrants or finding dangerous transmission-line hotspots.

For this mission, the cameras will be pointed at endangered salmon spawning grounds in an effort to pinpoint the spots where habitat restoration would do the most good.

The Bonneville Power Administration says thermal and video images captured today and Tuesday from a Bell helicopter 800- to 1,200-feet above the Lemhi and Pahsimeroi rivers will focus BPA-financed work like planting streamside vegetation to give young chinook or steelhead cool nooks to hide from predators.

Environmentalists complain that the effort by the BPA — which markets energy from 31 Columbia River Basin hydroelectric dams and pays millions annually to offset their negative effects on salmon runs — is merely distracting from a more significant issue: removal of Lower Snake River dams that kill migrating fish.

But power agency officials fighting dam breaching contend fish-passage improvements at eight Columbia and Snake dams running about $80 million yearly since the early 1990s are nearing peak effectiveness, with 90 percent or more of young fish swimming to the Pacific Ocean surviving each dam. Consequently, they said, habitat improvement like that guided by these camera images will increasingly occupy BPA's focus.

"I'm not saying the dams don't continue to impact fish, but they are substantially more innocuous than they were 30 years ago," said Bill Maslin, director of BPA fish and wildlife in Portland, Ore. "The degradation of that habitat continues. We think that's where the better opportunities are."

Since the mid-20th century, the BPA's massive dam projects have been the region's energy backbone, but also are blamed for dwindling numbers of the iconic salmon that swim hundreds of miles into Oregon, Washington and Idaho to reproduce.

Agricultural irrigation, logging, livestock grazing and human encroachment have added to fish woes on tributaries like the Lemhi and Pahsimeroi, both of which run into the Salmon River in the central Idaho mountains.

Environmental groups concede habitat restoration is laudable.

Still, Bill Sedivy, Idaho Rivers United director in Boise, said restoring Snake River salmon runs that once numbered in the millions demands something the BPA is doing its utmost to avoid:

breaching four Snake River dams in eastern Washington.

"Focusing on habitat restoration to the exclusion of focusing on mainstem restoration, which is what the BPA would like to make you think we need to do, is like trying to treat a brain tumor with aspirin," Sedivy said.

Thirteen Columbia River salmon runs are listed under the Endangered Species Act, four of which — Snake River sockeye, fall and spring Snake River chinook and steelhead — spawn in Idaho.

A Bush-era plan, rejected twice by a U.S. District Court judge who says dam breaching should be considered as a last resort, calls for tackling a range of salmon and steelhead recovery barriers, everything from managing predators like sea lions to beefing up degraded habitat. The BPA and U.S. Army Corps of Engineers dam managers contend they can restore fish without breaching that would hurt recreation, river shipping and energy production.

By Thursday, the Obama administration plans to weigh in on the fight.

The surveillance flights over Idaho, skimming rivers of the region where Lewis and Clark guide Sacajawea was born more than two centuries ago, will be conducted from a BPA helicopter normally used to find hotspots in the BPA's 15,000 miles of transmission lines across Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

Similar cameras, made by Portland-based Flir Systems Inc. to register temperature differences to a half of a degree Celsius, are also used by law enforcement agencies to search for illegal immigrants near the U.S. border.

"It's used wherever people are looking for temperature differences," said Peter Stack, whose Airborne Integrations in Portland operates the cameras for the BPA. "Those could be people hiding in the bushes, animals hiding in the woods."

Or, places where cooling springs enter the Lemhi and Pahsimeroi — and where cows have munched sheltering streamside plants resulting in river hot spots. Both rivers are plagued by low stream flows and high temperatures. Thermal images from these flights are meant to help the BPA fulfill a 2008 pledge to Idaho to fix such problems.

Joe DeHerrera, a BPA biologist who grew up in Arco in the central Idaho mountains, was the one who suggested using the cameras to map areas of the Lemhi and Pahsimeroi Rivers near where he fished and hunted as a child.

"Thermal data will help us prioritize projects, but it also works in reverse, where we've done these projects already," DeHerrera said. "This thermal data should say, 'Look, it is working. It's doing what it should!'"

Two crashes Sunday near Bob Barton Road result in injuries

Times-News

Two separate unrelated crashes resulted in injuries Sunday near Bob Barton Road in Jerome County, police said Sunday.

The first crash, at 100 Bob Barton Road, involved two vehicles at about 4:45 p.m., according to an Idaho State Police dispatcher. Police described it as an injury crash but declined to provide additional information. It was cleared by 8:30 p.m., according to dispatch.

The second accident, which occurred on private property just west of Southern Idaho RV and Marine at 60 Bob Barton Road, was an all-terrain vehicle crash. An approximately 20-year-old man flipped a four-wheeler that landed on him, said Jerome County's Deputy Jason Summers.

The man, who was conscious, sad he had pain in his back and hip and was transported to St. Benedict's Family Medical Center, said Summers.

"It's just a typical ATV crash. Most of the injury came after the four-wheeler landed on him," Summers said.

Jump into summer with better hearing...

Dear Neighbor,

If you have hearing loss and are in need of hearing enhancement, we would like to introduce you to an amazing new hearing technology:

OPEN-EAR

Open Ear technology allows the ear canal to be "OPEN" and not plugged up with the plastic of a traditional hearing aid. The result is amazingly clear sound quality without feedback and without the "plugged up" feeling. This product fits a wide range of hearing losses and we feel that it is the most comfortable hearing product ever made. We have received more referrals from this product than any we have ever offered!

Obama's EPA plans fewer toxic cleanups

By Dina Cappiello
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — For years, the Bush administration was criticized for not cleaning up enough of the nation's most contaminated waste sites. The Obama administration plans to do even less.

Environmental groups and some Democratic lawmakers railed against President George W. Bush's cleanup record. But this time, they're shying away from speaking out against a popular president who's considered an ally in the fight to clean up the environment.

In Obama's first two years in office, the Environmental Protection Agency expects to begin the final phase of cleanup at fewer Superfund sites than in any administration since 1991, according to budget documents and agency records. The EPA estimates it will finish construction to remove the last traces of pollution at 20 sites in 2009 and 22 sites in 2010.

During the eight years of the Bush administration, the agency finished construction at 38 sites on average a year.

"Certainly, we are very disappointed that we can't get our ... numbers up," said Elizabeth Southerland, the acting deputy of the EPA's hazardous waste cleanup program, known as Superfund.

The explanation by the Obama team is the same one put forward time and time again by Bush officials: The sites on the list have become increasingly complicated, contaminated and costly. That means it takes years for sites to reach the final cleanup stage, and as a result fewer are getting there.

Of the 527 contaminated properties still needing cleanup on the Superfund list, 40 have progressed to the point where all that's left is removing the last piles of contaminated soil, building a treatment plant to strip the groundwater of toxic pollutants, or capping a landfill so

Environmental Restoration project manager Tim Sloan oversees the work cleaning up the American Brass superfund site in Headland, Ala., last Tuesday. The site is one of 40 on the Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) Superfund list which is ready for the final phase of cleanup. But according to EPA budget documents and agency records the final phase of cleanup will occur at fewer Superfund sites in the first two years of Obama's administration than in any administration since 1991.

Fewer cleanups at toxic sites

In 2009 and 2010, the Environmental Protection Agency estimates it will start the final phase of cleanup at only 42 hazardous waste sites.

contamination does not enter the drinking water or air in surrounding neighborhoods.

At the other 1,060 hazardous waste sites still on the list, construction is finished and the last stages of the cleanup are under way — a process begun before Obama took office.

When EPA Administrator Lisa Jackson explained this trend to a Senate committee this year, Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., replied: "That's the same answer the Bush administration gave us and I don't buy it!"

Later, in an interview with The Associated Press, Boxer elaborated. "It doesn't matter to me who the president is. What matters to me is these sites get cleaned up," she said.

But not everyone is so critical of Obama's Superfund numbers.

Environmental groups such as the Sierra Club and some Democratic lawmakers who highlighted how little the Bush administration did on hazardous waste cleanups are now silent. They say it's because Obama, unlike Bush, wants to address the problem that has plagued Superfund for years — a lack of money.

A tax on petroleum, chemicals and large companies once helped EPA pay for the multimillion cleanups. It expired in 1995 and Superfund has been on financial life support since.

The pool of money ran dry in 2004, when Superfund cleanups that did not have a company to foot the bill ceased to be subsidized by the tax on polluters and started being paid by taxpayers.

Obama, unlike Bush, has called for the reinstatement of the tax in 2011. That will require action by Congress. It will also be up to Congress to set aside more money for cleanups if the tax is reinstated. In the past, when Superfund was flush in cash from the tax, Congress did not always provide more money for cleanups.

The Bush administration "didn't make an investment. They weren't willing to increase the tax and they weren't willing to shift general funds. They were just willing to limp along," said Rep. Earl Blumenauer, D-Ore., who is sponsoring legislation to restore the tax.

"This administration is not willing to limp along. That's a profound difference," he said.

Supporters also point out that the Obama administration has asked for slightly more money in its budget for Superfund — $1.31 billion compared with the $1.29 billion in Bush's last year. There's also an extra $600 million from the economic stimulus plan for cleanups at 50 sites across the country.

But neither has helped boost the number of sites ready for the final stage of cleanup, although they could down the road.

Since October, the EPA has installed the equipment necessary to complete cleanups at five sites in New York, Kansas, Missouri and New Jersey. At one of those sites, a former metal-plating facility in Franklin, N.J., it will take 30 more years for the treatment plant installed in June to remove the heavy metals and organic compounds in the water beneath the property so that it meets water quality standards.

The site was one of the first to be placed on the Superfund list in 1983.

Consumer protections lost in health care debate

By Ricardo Alonso-Zaldivar
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — It's one issue in the health care debate that nearly everyone — even the insurance lobby — seems to agree on: Better consumer protections are needed to end the nightmare of not being able to get covered for a treatable, if costly, illness.

Yet such practical considerations are being overlooked in a debate that's become a passionate argument about the government's reach and role in medical matters.

Experts say the bills before Congress include significant consumer protections that would end denial or cancellation of coverage for medical reasons, from high cholesterol to cancer.

Insurers no longer could base premiums on a person's medical history, although they still could charge more to 50-year-olds than to people in their 20s.

People buying their own policies, and those working for small businesses, would gain many of the advantages employees of Fortune 500 companies now have. That would eliminate "job lock," the fear of leaving employment that provides medical benefits.

"It would bring insurance and insurability standards into line with medical practice and with the way people live their lives," said Dallas Salisbury, president of the nonprofit Employee Benefit Research Institute. "When people are in the doctor's office, they're worried about that day's issue. You're not thinking, 'If I take this pill for my cholesterol, will it cause me to be denied insurance coverage in the future?'"

If President Obama's effort to remake the health care system implodes, chances are slim that such protections could be enacted on their own. What consumer groups call discrimination by insurance companies, the industry sees as self-defense against people who put off getting coverage until they're seriously ill.

Major insurers will accept a rollback of the industry's restrictive practices only if they're guaranteed that all Americans would be covered — a central goal of Obama's approach and a potential financial boon to the industry.

The consumer protections are part of what Republican Sen. Mike Enzi of Wyoming calls the 80 percent of health care fixes that there's consensus for. Enzi is one of six members of the Senate Finance Committee who are trying work out a bipartisan solution — with no guarantee of success.

Obama may have made a critical error by not stressing the consumer aspects of the legislation, and his advisers seem to have realized it as they belatedly retooled the White House pitch in recent days.

If a bill does pass, the biggest winners are likely to be self-employed people and small-business owners and employees, who now have the most trouble getting and keeping coverage. Those working for big companies would only benefit indirectly; they'd find it easier to keep their coverage if they get laid off or leave to launch a new career.

Insurance companies could come out ahead, too.

"They'll get a big new market with millions and millions of new customers," said Gary Claxton, a health policy expert with the Kaiser Family Foundation. "Their average profit per person may not be as high, but they still should be able to earn a profit by insuring more people."

One major catch is that the consumer protections would not be available immediately. They are timed to take effect alongside government subsidies to help people buy coverage. In the House Democratic legislation, the coverage expansion would come in 2013 — after the next presidential elections. Part of the reason for the delay is to make the costs of the bill appear more manageable.

"It's a long time to wait," said John Rother, policy and strategy chief for AARP. "This is complicated stuff, but I would have personally liked to see it done in two years."

The House legislation, the Senate health committee bill and the evolving Senate Finance Committee package differ on some important specifics, but follow the same general approach.

All would set up an insurance marketplace. This exchange would be open to individuals and small businesses, and maybe big companies later on. Government subsidies would be available for low-to-middle income households. People buying health insurance through the exchange would be part of a large pool that spreads risks, giving participants leverage similar to what government employees — including lawmakers — now have.

Health plans offered through the exchange would have to meet basic standards, so it would be easier for consumers to understand what their insurance covers. To protect against catastrophic illness, there would be annual limits on out-of-pocket costs for co-payments and deductibles. Year-to-year increases in premiums would be more predictable for small companies.

God will hold Pa. gunman accountable, church says

FOREST HILLS, Pa. (AP) — If prayers were said Sunday for the soul of the gunman who killed three women at a Pennsylvania health club, they were not by the parishioners of a church where he apparently sat quietly for many years: Tetelestai Church doesn't pray for the dead.

"We pray for the living — the victims and the family of George Sodini," said Chuck Matone, a senior deacon.

And Sodini? "God will hold him accountable. God has his justice!"

Sodini's name wasn't even mentioned during the service, held in the auditorium of Trinity Christian School in Forest Hills. But John Dorohovich, an associate pastor, referred to the LA Fitness club shooter's long-seething rage indirectly, urging the faithful to reject "the bitterness and the gall and man's frantic search for happiness."

"When you seek that over the word of God, that brings upon you a lifestyle of misery," he said. "And then you want to take it out on others."

Sodini shot and killed Elizabeth Gannon, Heidi Overmier and Jody Billingsley and wounded nine others Tuesday night in Bridgeville before killing himself.

Church records suggest Sodini last attended services about five years ago. He signed an enrollment card in March 2004 but was removed from the congregation sometime later for harassing a woman, Matone said.

Sodini's misery was apparent in his rambling, hate-filled blog, in which he complained of a nonexistent sex life, years of rejection by women and social isolation.

Abbott, VanderMeer, Quale make first trip to Victory Lane

By Linda Brittsan
Times-News correspondent

Three young drivers raked in their first main event wins of the season at Magic Valley Speedway Saturday night while three others made a repeat appearance in the winner's circle.

Jason Abbott broke through the rookie barrier to chalk up a main event win driving in the Budweiser Super Stocks division.

Abbott started the race from the second row with fellow rookie and heat race winner Don Cunningham on the pole. A caution at lap six set up a side-by-side restart for the duo with Allen Williams and points leader Jerry McKean directly behind. After the two pairs battled door-to-door for several laps Abbott took control at lap 13. McKean then began stalking Abbott for the remainder of the race but he would not be able to get Abbott in his clutches before the checkered flag flew at lap 35.

"I didn't know how far Jerry (McKean) was behind me," Abbott said. "I was just watching the board and every time I looked up at the board I kind of screwed up coming off the corners. I figured he was going to catch me, but I just tried to hit my marks."

Abbott would finish the race just slightly more than one-half second ahead of McKean.

POHLMAN HAULS IN RACE TRUCKS VICTORY

After laying out a 15.9 second lap in qualifying, Jeff Pohlman started from row two of the seven starting positions in his main event race. It only took him four laps to get out front. Ken Fortner tried to chase Pohlman down as the rest of the pack worked on bettering their positions, but Pohlman had the truck to beat in the 25-lap race. It was the driver of the No. 24 truck's third trip to the winner's circle this season.

"The problem is, we don't have enough trucks," Pohlman admitted. "The four guys who started up front are the four guys leading the points. I would rather start at the back, it's more fun passing. But, to be even more honest, I'd rather start up front because anytime you get a win it's beautiful, right?"

VANDERMEER GATHERS STREET STOCKS WIN

Brennen VanderMeer jumped out in front early the main event race leaving Jim Shirley making every attempt to rope him in. A caution at lap 17 lined up VanderMeer with Shirley directly behind and Craig Nuthak on the outside for the restart. After battling door-to-door with Jason Abbott makes his way around Turn 4 during his heat race Saturday night at Magic Valley Speedway. Later in the evening Abbott would pilot the No.4 Budweiser Super Stocks car to his first main event win.

RAINED OUT, AGAIN

Rain postpones Cup race at The Glen

By John Kekis
Associated Press writer

WATKINS GLEN, N.Y. — Andy Lally will have to curb his enthusiasm for another day.

Lally, a champion road racer with dreams of competing in NASCAR, was scheduled to make his first Sprint Cup start on Sunday. But a band of rain moved over the road course at Watkins Glen International and never lifted, forcing NASCAR to postpone the race until 10 a.m. today.

"It's pretty anticlimactic. We were all belted in ready to go when they pulled the plug on us," Lally said after NASCAR called off the race at 4 p.m. "This being my first Sprint Cup start, it just makes it that much more anticipation. I'm going to try to get a good night's sleep in the motor home tonight and just think positive, keep thinking about all the things I have to do tomorrow."

A thunderstorm hit the track about 2 p.m. Sunday when drivers were about to start their engines. The course takes at least two hours to dry. Rain was still falling at 4 p.m. making it too late to complete the 90-lap event before sunset. The track stretches nearly 2½ miles around 11 turns and has several elevation changes.

Last week's race at Pocono also was moved to Monday because of rain, and with just five races before the Chase for the Sprint Cup championship, another delay wasn't welcome.

"That's got to be tough," Canadian road racer Ron Fellows said. "They've spent a lot of time at the racetrack watching it rain. You might get a bit stir-crazy."

Saturday's Nationwide race at The Glen was also threatened by rain. Though it never materialized, rain tires were stacked in the garage area just in case.

HALL OF FAME GAME

Collins sharp as Titans beat Bills in HOF game

By John Wawrow
Associated Press writer

CANTON, Ohio — Kerry Collins was sharp and Vince Young tentative for the Tennessee Titans in overshadowing Terrell Owens' debut for the Buffalo Bills.

With a little trickery and a solid performance by the Collins-led starting offense, Tennessee opened the preseason with a 21-18 win in the Hall of Fame game on Sunday night.

If this was the NFL's throwback weekend to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the founding of the American Football League, then this also resembled the Titans' quarterback situation at the beginning of last year. That's when Young got off to a terrible start and lost his starting job to Collins by Week 2.

Collins, already selected the starter, quickly began delivering on the faith the Titans put in him after being signed to a two-year $15 million contract this offseason.

He went 7-of-10 for 82 yards in producing two touchdowns, one capped by reserve punter A.J. Trapasso's 40-yard run on a perfectly executed fake punt on the opening possession. Collins was especially efficient in going 3 for 4 for 49 yards on third down.

"I thought we got off to a good start," Collins said. "We executed our offense and played fast out there."

The same couldn't be said for Young, who took over at the start of the second quarter. In his first three series, Young was 1-of-5 for 13 yards and an interception, nearly dropped a shotgun snap and looked hesitant running the ball when he was easily caught from behind by rookie linebacker Nic Harris.

Young finally warmed up, and showed great touch in hitting Paul Williams for a 5-yard touchdown pass to convert third-and-2 to put the Titans up 21-3 late in the second quarter. The No. 3 selection in the 2006 draft still has a long way to go to regain his once-dominant form. In five series, Young went 5-of-10 for 39 yards, and a 1-yard run.

The Bills were sluggish and looked nothing like the better-prepared team, considering Buffalo opened training camp two weeks ago — a week ahead of the Titans.

The only offensive highlights were provided by Owens, who signed a one-year $6.5 million contract with Buffalo in early March, days after being released by Dallas.

On the field for only one series, Owens had two catches for 27 yards, including a 16-yarder on the second play

CSI spikers prep for season's first practice

Times-News

The last time anyone saw the College of Southern Idaho volleyball team in official capacity, the Golden Eagles were soaking in a shocking five-set defeat to North Idaho College and elimination from the 2008 Region 18 Tournament.

Nine months later, the time has arrived for them to start putting that right.

CSI opens practice for the 2009 season today, returning seven players from a squad that went 31-6 last season and finished second in the Scenic West Athletic Conference but failed to qualify for the NJCAA Division I Tournament for the first time in 16 years.

Australian international Jessica Peacock is back to lead the line from the outside, joined by promising newcomers Ashleigh Pollard, Dama Cox, Danielle Dean and Elisa Brochado.

The middle features returning sophomore Torrey Hulsey, who will be backed by freshmen Alyssa Everett and Charelle Minor.

At the setter position, Laticia Lehman returns, but CSI coach Heidi Cartisser is also high on Barbara Alcantara, and former Hagerman star Chauncey Axelson. Sophomore Amanda Filiaga could figure as well. Filiaga and Alex van Dyke are the primary right-sided options, and Britani Hathorn is back to ply her all-out "Energizer Bunny" style of play at the libero spot.

Brochado and Alcantara are both from Brazil, giving CSI its full allotment of three international scholarship players.

Polanco's clutch hit helps Tigers beat Twins

DETROIT — Placido Polanco hit a go-ahead single in the eighth inning, helping the Detroit Tigers beat the Minnesota Twins 8-7 on Sunday.

The AL Central-leading Tigers have won five of seven games to keep their lead over the Chicago White Sox and third-place Twins. Minnesota has lost seven of nine and trails the Tigers by 5½ games.

Brandon Lyon (5-4) pitched a scoreless eighth and Fernando Rodney closed the game for his 23rd save in 24 chances.

Matt Guerrier (5-1) gave up a leadoff double in the eighth. Minnesota manager Ron Gardenhire then chose to walk free-swinging Curtis Granderson to face a contact hitter in the hopes of getting a double play, and Polanco made him pay for the decision with a bloop single to right to put Detroit ahead 7-6.

RANGERS 7, ANGELS 0

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Rookie Derek Holland threw a three-hitter against the majors' highest-scoring offense for his first career shutout, and Texas gained ground on the AL West-leading Angels.

The 22-year-old Holland (5-7) didn't allow a hit until the sixth inning of his 12th career start as Texas took two of three from the Angels in their weekend series, cutting Los Angeles' lead in the AL West to 3½ games.

BLUE JAYS 7, ORIOLES 3

TORONTO — Roy Halladay won his 10th straight decision over Baltimore, and Vernon Wells and Marco Scutaro hit two-run homers in a four-run third.

Halladay (12-5) allowed three runs and nine hits in eight innings, walked one and struck out four.

Detroit Tigers reliever Brandon Lyon pitches against the Minnesota Twins in the eighth inning of a baseball game Sunday, in Detroit. Lyon recorded his fifth win of the season in the Tigers' 8-7 victory over the Twins.

The right-hander is 20-4 with a 2.89 ERA in 31 career games against the Orioles.

ATHLETICS 6, ROYALS 3

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Bobby Crosby homered twice and Ryan Sweeney hit a three-run shot, lifting Oakland to a win over the Royals.

Sweeney and Crosby hit consecutive homers in the second inning off Luke Hochevar (6-5) to stake

Brett Anderson (8-9) to an early 4-0 lead. The Royals scored three runs in the seventh to get within one, but Kurt Suzuki hit a solo homer in the eighth and Crosby had one in the ninth to put the A's up 6-3.

INDIANS 8, WHITE SOX 4

CHICAGO — Jamey Carroll hit a go-ahead RBI double in the fifth inning and added a solo homer in the seventh, leading Cleveland to its third straight series win against a division rival.

MARINERS 11, RAYS 2

SEATTLE — Russell Branyan broke out of a slump with his first grand slam in six years, Ryan Rowland-Smith rebounded from a shaky beginning to pitch effectively into the seventh inning and Seattle rolled over Tampa Bay.

Franklin Gutierrez's second consecutive three-hit game included a game-turning home run in the second inning off Scott Kazmir (6-7).

YANKEES 5, RED SOX 2

NEW YORK — Johnny Damon and Mark Teixeira hit back-to-back homers in the eighth inning Sunday night, and the New York Yankees beat the Boston Red Sox 5-2 to finish their first four-game home sweep of their bitter rival in 24 years.

NATIONAL LEAGUE NATIONALS 9, DIAMONDBACKS 2

WASHINGTON — Elijah Dukes drove in three runs, Ryan Zimmerman had three hits and the surprising Washington Nationals won their eighth straight with a 9-2 victory over the Arizona Diamondbacks on Sunday.

The Nationals' eight-game run is the second longest in their five seasons in the nation's capital. They won 10 straight from June 2-12, 2005.

ASTROS 2, BREWERS 0

HOUSTON — Wandy Rodriguez pitched seven shutout innings and Geoff Blum hit a two-run homer in the Astros' win over the Brewers.

MARLINS 12, PHILLIES 3

PHILADELPHIA — Josh

Johnson pitched six impressive innings, helping the Marlins complete a three-game sweep over the Phillies.

CARDINALS 7, PIRATES 3

PITTSBURGH — Skip Schumaker's first career pinch-hit home run started a five-run eighth-inning rally for St. Louis that included Pirates pitcher Matt Capps' ejection for hitting Albert Pujols, and the Cardinals finished off a three-game sweep.

REDS 5, GIANTS 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Aaron Harang ended the worst winless stretch of his career with his first victory since late May, Brandon Phillips and Adam Rosales each homered and the Reds beat the Giants.

ROCKIES 11, CUBS 5

DENVER — Todd Helton had three hits to extended his hitting streak to 14 games, Dexter Fowler scored three times and the Rockies beat the Cubs.

Carlos Gonzalez also had three hits for Colorado, which had 14 hits.

METS 5, PADRES 1

SAN DIEGO — Johan Santana threw eight strong innings and tied his career high with two hits and an RBI as the New York Mets avoided a four-game sweep with a win over the Padres.

BRAVES 8, DODGERS 2

LOS ANGELES — Javier Vazquez won his fifth straight decision with eight solid innings and the Braves beat the Dodgers to take three of the four games in their weekend series.

Tiger rallies to win at Firestone

AKRON, Ohio — First came another signature moment from Tiger Woods, an 8-iron over the water that stopped a foot from the hole. Even more stunning was the meltdown that followed by Pdraig Harrington.

In a swift turn of events on Firestone's famous 16th hole, Woods went from one shot behind to a four-shot victory Sunday by closing with a 5-under 65 to win the Bridgestone Invitational.

Woods became the first player in PGA Tour history to win seven times on the same golf course.

It was his 16th victory in the World Golf Championship series, and the world's No. 1 player now goes to the PGA Championship next week at Hazeltine with two straight victories after missing the cut last month in the British Open.

After nearly four hours in the tough battle that Harrington expected, he let it slip away in shocking fashion.

Woods left himself some 170 yards over the water, and his 8-iron landed near the pin and rolled back a foot away.

Harrington hit from the collar of a bunker over the 16th green, but his flop shot from behind the green came out hot and into the water.

He wound up with a triple bogey and closed with a 3-over 73 to share second place with Robert Allenby, who had a 66.

Woods, who has won the Bridgestone Invitational seven times in 10 starts and has never finished out of the top five, finished out his remarkable afternoon in style with a 6-foot birdie putt.

ROLLINS WINS LEGENDS RENO-TAHOE OPEN

RENO, Nev. — John Rollins overcame an early double bogey with a chip-in eagle, then survived a string of bogeys to shoot an even-par 72 and win the Legends Reno-Tahoe Open for his third career PGA Tour victory.

Rollins, who tied the course record with a second-round 62 and led by six strokes at the turn Sunday, won by three strokes, finishing at 17-under 271 on the Montreux Golf & Country Club course. He also won the 2002

Chicago Blackhawks Kane arrested

By Carolyn Thompson
Associated Press writer

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Chicago Blackhawks star Patrick Kane was charged with attacking a cab driver in his hometown Sunday, a beating that police said was triggered when the driver did not have 20 cents in change to give the player and his cousin.

Buffalo police said the 20-year-old Kane and his 21-year-old cousin, James Kane, had apparently caught a cab from the city's downtown nightclub district at about 4 a.m. The cab driver suffered cuts to his face and his glasses were damaged, police spokesman Michael DeGeorge said.

Both men were charged with felony robbery and misdemeanor counts of theft of services and criminal mischief. Patrick Kane pleaded not guilty in City Court on Sunday, WIVB-TV reported. It was not immediately clear when James Kane will appear in court.

The driver said he was punched and hit by both men because he did not have 20 cents in change to give them, according to the police report.

A message left at the home of Patrick Kane's parents was not immediately returned Sunday afternoon. Relatives who answered his grandfather's phone and his mother's cell phone declined to comment and could not say whether either Kane had an attorney.

A Blackhawks spokesman said the team is aware of the allegations against Kane.

"He is a big part of our organization and a team leader and we stand behind him," spokesman Brandon Faber said. "As we are still collecting all the facts, it would be premature to comment further at this time."

On Thursday, Patrick Kane was at a Buffalo ice rink where he played hockey as a child to help Mayor Byron Brown announce funding for improvements.

Nuthak for several laps VanderMeer began to gain ground in the final laps and would cross the line 1.758 seconds ahead of Nuthak. It was the first main event win for VanderMeer, who just recently began competing in the series.

QUALE OUTSTANDING IN HORNETS WIN

Starting fifth in a field of 12, Jenna Quale powered her way around John Wilson taking the lead for good at lap eight of the 20-lap main event.

As the race snaked around the track several cautions tested Quale's tenacity but the teenage driver rebelled against seasoned driver John Newhouse for the lion's share of the contest. It was Quale's first main event win since moving up into the division this season from the Jr. Stingers.

PATRICK BACK IN WINNER'S CIRCLE FOR JR. STINGERS

the No. 79 car this week outlasted pressure from Hannah Newhouse in the final laps to gather the win. It was her second trip to Victory Lane this season.

WALTMAN REPEATS IN SUPER SIXES

Dean Waltman continued his winning ways at MVS with another come from behind win in the 30-lap main event. There were several changes for the lead before Waltman took control from Jasen Skyberg at lap 24 after making his charge from near the rear of the pack.

Waltman also had the top qualifying speed for the night at 14.834 seconds as well as capturing the win in his heat race.

from scrimmage. Trent Edwards hit Owens in perfect stride on a slant, and the receiver had the opportunity to score if not for a perfect tackle by cornerback Cortland Finnegan. The drive, however, ended when Edwards floated a pass intended for Lee Evans at the Titans' 7 and was easily intercepted by Cortland Finnegan.

"It's good to get the cobwebs out," Edwards said. "(The rhythm) is just what we are trying to find right now. ... We just can't turn the ball over."

Owens was greeted by chants of "T.O.! T.O.!" by the partisan Buffalo crowd that stayed an extra day after Bills defensive end Bruce Smith and team owner Ralph Wilson were among six inducted into the Hall.

Bills cornerback Reggie Corner scored on a 26-yard interception return off fourth-stringer Alex Mortensen, while kicker Ryan Lindell hit all three field-goal attempts, including a 52-yarder.

Crapo’s right: Feds make a lousy national school board

Except for the four guys who wrote it — Sens. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., and Judd Gregg, R-N.H., and Reps. John Boehner, R-Ohio, and George Miller, D-Calif. — almost everyone agrees that the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 must be changed before Congress reauthorizes it for another five years.

In a partly successful effort to improve the performance of public schools by setting high standards and establishing measurable goals, NCLB has turned the workaday business of teaching upside down. Since student achievement tests are make-or-break propositions in standards-based education, classroom instructors too often “teach to the test” and schools ration education to core subjects, neglect high-performing students and give short-shrift to subjects such as physical education, music and art. Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, has some innovative ideas about changing that. Along with Sen. Blanche Lincoln, D-Ark., he’s sponsoring legislation that reforms NCLB by giving more of the decision making to states, local school boards, teachers and parents.

Our view: Idaho Sen. Mike Crapo has introduced legislation that would leave more of the decision-making about standards-based education to states, local school boards, teachers and parents. That’s a reform long overdue.

What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

“The federal government should not act as a national school board,” Crapo said. “Federal programs and standards must allow states and districts more flexibility in local implementation.”

- Crapo and Lincoln’s bill would:
- Allow supplemental services, such as tutoring, to be offered sooner than they are now available.
 - Grant states more flexibility in using different assessment models for measuring student progress.
 - Provide greater flexibility for assessing students with disabilities.
 - Ensure fairer and more accurate appraisals of students with limited English.
 - Create a student testing participation range that provides flexibility for uncontrollable variations in student attendance.
 - Guarantee students are counted properly in assessment and reporting systems.
 - Permit schools to target student populations that need the most attention by applying sanctions only when the same student group fails to meet adequate yearly progress standards in the same subject area for two consecutive years.

Idaho Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna hasn’t taken a position on Crapo’s bill yet, according to his spokeswoman, Melissa McGrath.

“Because of his extensive knowledge and experience with No Child Left Behind, Superintendent Luna has been appointed to a subcommittee of the Council of Chief State School Officers to work directly with Congress, the White House and other states on the reauthorization of this legislation,” McGrath said. “The Council of Chief State School Officers hasn’t released the details of this subcommittee yet.”

Something along the lines of Crapo and Lincoln’s proposals are likely to emerge as part of the NCLB reauthorization. Their bill, it seems to us, is a good starting point for the conversation.

Rethinking North Korea: Fewer carrots, more sticks

Now that President Bill Clinton has extricated Laura Ling and Euna Lee from North Korea, the hard work begins.

There are new indications that North Korea may be transferring nuclear weapons technology to Myanmar, the dictatorship also known as Burma, and that it earlier supplied a reactor to Syria. For many years, based on five visits to North Korea and its border areas, I’ve argued for an “engagement” approach toward Pyongyang, but now I’ve reluctantly concluded that we need more sticks.

Nicholas Kristof

Burmese defectors have provided detailed accounts of a North Korean reactor, perhaps a mirror of the one provided to Syria, built inside a mountain deep in Myanmar. The reports, first aired in The Sydney Morning Herald this month, come from Desmond Ball, a respected Asia scholar, and Phil Thornton, a journalist with expertise on Myanmar. If the defectors’ accounts are true, the reactor “could be capable of being operational and producing a bomb a year, every year, after 2014,” Ball and Thornton wrote.

Partly because the North Korean reactor in Syria (destroyed by Israeli bombing in 2007) caught intelligence agencies by surprise, everyone is taking the latest reports seriously. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton expressed concern about the transfer of nuclear technology from North Korea to Myanmar, without giving details.

All this was eerily foreshadowed by the North Koreans themselves. Michael Green, who ran Asian affairs for a time in the Bush White House, says that in March 2003, a North Korean official — with hands shaking — read out to him and other American officials a warning: We have a nuclear deterrent. If you don’t end your hostile policy, we will demonstrate, expand and transfer it.

“(North Korea is) the most totalitarian state in history: In North Korean homes, I’ve seen the “speaker” on the wall that wakes people up with propaganda each morning. More bizarre, triplets are routinely taken from parents and raised by the state because they are considered auspicious.”

“They’ve done all those things,” Green notes.

At times in the past, there seemed hope for diplomacy aimed at coaxing North Korea into giving up its nuclear program and joining the concert of nations. These days that seems virtually hopeless.

“Formal diplomatic engagement aimed at rolling back their nuclear program has run its course, at least for the time being,” says Mitchell Reiss, a North Korea expert and former senior State Department official who is now at the College of William and Mary. “The facts have changed. You have to change your strategy.”

In the past, Reiss focused on engagement. Now he advocates “hard containment” — toughened sanctions backed by military force if necessary.

The truth is that North Korea doesn’t want to negotiate away its nuclear materials. It is focused on its own transition, and this year it has declined to accept a visit from the Obama administration’s special envoy, Stephen Bosworth. The North isn’t interested in “six-party talks” on nuclear issues; instead, it seeks talks with the U.S. conditioned on accepting North Korea’s status as a nuclear power — which is unacceptable.

In recent months, North Korea has dismantled some economic reforms and economic cooperation projects with South Korea.

Meanwhile, it continues to counterfeit U.S. $100 bills — the highest-quality goods that North Korea manufactures — and its embassies in Pakistan and other countries pay their way by smuggling drugs, liquor and currency. And it’s the most totalitarian state in history: In North Korean homes, I’ve seen the “speaker” on the wall that wakes people up with propaganda each morning. More bizarre, triplets are routinely taken from parents and raised by the state because they are considered auspicious.

There are no good options here, and a grass-roots revolution is almost impossible. Most ordinary North Koreans swallow the propaganda. Indeed, Kim Jong-il’s approval rating in his country may well be higher than Barack Obama’s is in the United States.

Our best bet will be to continue to support negotiations, including a back channel that can focus on substance instead of protocol, as well as economic and cultural exchanges — but backed up by sticks. The Obama administration is now working with allies to reimpose economic and financial sanctions that a few years ago were very successful in squeezing the North Korean regime. China is surprisingly cooperative, even quietly intercepting several shipments of supplies useful for WMD programs.

Where we have intelligence that North Korean ships are transferring nuclear materials or technology to a country like Myanmar or Iran, we should go further and board those vessels. That’s an extreme step, but the nightmare would be if Iran simply decided to save time and buy a nuclear weapon or two from North Korea. We can’t allow that to happen.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Law enforcement stymied by courts

Regarding the editorial Aug. 3, “Twin Falls needs more cops,” and the editorial view stating, “The best hope for reducing crime in the city of Twin Falls is cooperating with other Twin Falls County law enforcement agencies”:

Cooperation instead of competition may help solve the problem. The real problem is that local enforcement agencies do not have a court in which to enforce local matters. A magistrate in Article 1 Section 7 criminal court tries all and any violation or charge made by law enforcement. This is true, as in Idaho we are without a justice of the peace to try local and other matters that do not rise to the level of a criminal offense.

It is true that jurisdiction of justices of the peace was repealed by the people in 1962. However, the office still existed concerning local matters until Jan. 11, 1971. At that time, the Legislature, not the people, abolished constitutional offices of probate, police and justice of the peace courts.

As a result, local enforcement are without a court to try local matters and all matters are tried in state criminal court contrary to jurisdictional provisions of Article 1 Section 8.

It is my opinion that all enforcement officers should wear a state uniform and only the pay scale differ. There are already enough enforcement personnel and they need to be on the same page.

Letter writer would like word-count raised

Having written many letters to the editor over many years and having become aware by “feedback” that quite a few people were reading them, I wonder if the Times-News is interested in why I, for one, have stopped writing? The reason is because of the “strict” 300-word limitation.

If you are writing something with a little more depth than “if Mr. Jones” might or might not be qualified to be a “little league coach,” it may require some background, and easily exceed 300 words. In the past, I have written letters that ran close to 400 words, and then, in an attempt to trim them to the 300-word limit, much of the meaning is destroyed or altered to the point it is incoherent. I suggest the paper put this issue to a “vote” of its readers, and I would suggest a 50 percent increase to 450 words. I also understand the paper may be confronted with so much really important news it doesn’t have space for letters of 450 words.

Who's behind the Internet Snitch Brigade?

Chardom has its privileges. Last week, President Obama's health care overlord, Nancy DeParle, launched a taxpayer-funded initiative to recruit an Internet Snitch Brigade that will combat "disinformation about health insurance reform." As the White House explained in a special online bulletin:

"These rumors often travel just below the surface via chain e-mails or through casual conversation. Since we can't keep track of all of them here at the White House, we're asking for your help. If you get an e-mail or see something on the web about health insurance reform that seems fishy, send it to flag@whitehouse.gov."

What will health care czar DeParle do with this information? Where will it be stored? Who has oversight of the czar's powers, budget and personnel? Concerned citizens, alas, will have a hard time tracking down the "Office of Health Care Reform" created by executive order in April. There is no central Web site for the office, no direct channel for transparency and no congressional accountability.

Michelle Malkin

At least one member of Congress has started asking questions. Texas GOP Sen. John Cornyn sent a letter to Obama demanding that he disband the Internet Snitch Brigade immediately: "By requesting citizens send 'fishy' e-mails to the White House, it is inevitable that the names, e-mail addresses, IP addresses and private speech of U.S. citizens will be reported to the White House," Cornyn wrote. "You should not be surprised that these actions taken by your White House staff raise the specter of a data collection program"

Taxpayers have the right to know what government agencies and third parties the health care czar may share that data with — and why. Take note: The White House Office of Health Care Reform is working in close quarters with an entirely separate Office of Health Reform created under the Department of Health and Human Services. That office is staffed with several Obama campaign operatives and former employees of the Center for American Progress, including special assistant Michael Halle and HHS Office of Health Reform Director Jeanne Lambrew, a former senior fellow at the Center for American Progress who worked on health policy in the Clinton administration.

CAP is a lead organization in the Health Care for America Now coalition, the "grassroots" lobbying group for Obama's health care takeover legislation run out of 1825 K St. in Washington, D.C., with a $40 million budget. CAP is also the parent group of Think Progress, the far-left Web site leading the smear campaign against fiscally conservative activists protesting at congressional town halls.

Lawmakers must also dig far beyond the health care czar's flagging operation. Last month, a Washington, D.C., citizen watchdog group filed suit to force the White House to disclose which health care lobbyists and executives it had met with this year to discuss the government health care takeover legislation. White House counsel Greg Craig refused to disclose which administration officials attended the meetings. But at least two of the industry visitors have ties to DeParle.

William C. Weldon is chairman of Johnson & Johnson, which paid DeParle $7,500 for a recent speech. Wayne Smith is chief executive of Community Health Systems, which merged with Triad Hospitals — where DeParle served on the board of directors. DeParle's options were converted to cash payments worth $1.05 million.

Despite Obama's lip service to transparency, the public is in the dark about which assets DeParle has divested; how many times, if any, DeParle has recused herself from policy matters and meetings; and the exact nature of her conversations with health care executives. While White House press secretary Robert Gibbs lambastes the corporate health care ties of Republican opponents, he has shrugged off the corporate ties of the woman leading the Obamacare charge.

Alert the Internet Snitch Brigade: The fishiest odor is emanating from 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

Educate yourself about Neo-Nazis

The Times-News on Monday, Aug. 3, included an article (on the front page no less) about the "Aryan Nations." I am a Magic Valley resident and a Neo-Nazi; therefore, I take offense at Mr. Geronias referring to the church as a racist religion. With all the progress in our country, you'd think people would at least be politically correct! And, why oh why do you only see and hear the negative?

Our belief in family and our genuine desire to have a better future for our children is never mentioned.

Everyone says "go to college," we agree! "get a job," we agree! "don't do drugs," we agree! "provide a home, medical, food," and again, we agree!

Fear still holds the power to blind and control the masses; we say "educate" yourself before you judge people.

Paper shouldn't hide the important news

I found it very interesting that an article on the Aryan Nations made the front page of the Times-News paper on Aug. 3 and something that everyone is or should be concerned about on the back page (Page 12).

In the article, "Two Obama officials: No guarantee taxes won't go up," Obama's treasury secretary and his chief economic adviser said, "they would not dismiss raising taxes on middle-class Americans."

I believe this is you, me and most Idahoans! I also find this very interesting since Mr. Obama repeatedly vowed during his campaign, "You will not see any of your taxes increase one single dime." Do people really believe that they can get something for nothing — government health care!

Maybe the Times-News should put the important things on the front page and not try to hide it on the back page.

Thanks for listening.

Obama needs to address Mexico's war on civil rights

When President Obama goes to Guadalajara, Mexico, this week for the North American Leaders Summit, he will surely praise Mexican President Felipe Calderon for the courage he has displayed fighting the war on drugs. The applause is well deserved. Calderon has turned the crackdown on drug traffickers into the centerpiece of his administration and has pursued organized crime with undeniable zeal. But before Obama becomes too effusive and pats Calderon on the back for a job well done, it's important that Obama remember the cost and the consequences of his counterpart's crusade.

In Mexico today, human rights violations committed by the military and the police in this effort are on the rise, yet punishment for the perpetrators remains elusive. So although Obama should recognize Calderon's efforts, he should also insist that drug lawlessness cannot be combated by breaking the law and that the army must be subjected to the kind of scrutiny it has shunned so far.

Today, more than 45,000 soldiers police the roads of Mexico's main cities and drug-producing areas as part of a strategy designed to confront drug traffickers and contain the violence they wreak. Many ring leaders have been captured, many drug shipments have been confiscated and many smugglers have been imprisoned.

But violence remains unabated, and the unintended consequences of Calderon's efforts have become distressingly clear: The number of cases of human rights violations brought before the Mexican Human Rights Commission has risen by 600 percent over the last two years.

The war on drugs is turning into a war on the civilian population that can't simply be dismissed as collateral damage. Mexico's military is capturing "capos," but it's also raping, extracting confessions through torture and detaining people arbitrarily. Crime is begetting more crime.

In light of this, U.S. Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., was right last week to call "pre-mature" the U.S. State Department's draft report claiming that Mexico has fulfilled its human rights obligations under the so-called Merida Initiative. He is right to remind officials on both sides of the border that in return for Merida's $1.4 billion in counter-narcotics aid from the United States, the Calderon government made promises it has not kept. Key among these are transparency and accountability, and that military officers be tried by civilian courts.

Denise Dresser

Calderon has resisted these demands. He stands with his hand outstretched, asking the U.S. for more support and involvement in the war on drugs. But Calderon also obstinately defends military exceptionalism regarding the justice system, decries U.S. intervention in Mexico's internal affairs and rallies Mexico's political class under the banner of a politically expedient anti-Americanism.

So unless the Obama administration insists that those requirements be met, the Merida Initiative will simply be financing impunity. It will heighten the climate of fear that deeper binational collaboration sought to eradicate. It will allow the Mexican military and police forces to do what they do now: arbitrarily detain people, kill innocent bystanders at army checkpoints, threaten and abuse alleged suspects, ignore due process while carrying out arrests and get away with it because Calderon believes they can and should. In his view, the ends justify the means. As he defiantly stated in a recent interview: "The worst human rights abuses are those committed by the drug traffickers."

Unfortunately, Calderon's stance will undermine the cause he so valiantly espouses. Military abuses that go un sanctioned are weakening public support for the war on drugs and making it difficult to construct the rule of law in a country where it functions intermittently.

Until Mexico makes real progress where human rights are concerned, the U.S. Congress should withhold future funding for the Merida Initiative.

Therefore, when Obama meets with Calderon, before putting his Mexican counterpart on a pedestal, he should remind him of the violations reported by human rights sources, such as the women raped by the military in Chihuahua and the family killed at a military checkpoint in 2007 in Sinaloa, and about the 30 people arrested without a warrant in a church in Michoacan last weekend. All of them victims of crimes gone unpunished.

So many Mexicans hope that when Obama arrives in Guadalajara for the summit, he treads firmly and carries a big stick.

House health bill skews end-of-life counsel

WASHINGTON — About a third of Americans have living wills or advance-care directives expressing their wishes for end-of-life treatment.

When seniors who don't have them arrive in a hospital terminally ill and incapacitated, families and medical workers wrestle with uncertainty — while life-prolonging machinery runs, often at Medicare's expense. This has consequences for families and for the federal budget.

Enter Section 1233 of the health-care bill drafted in the Democratic-led House, which would pay doctors to give Medicare patients end-of-life counseling every five years — or sooner if the patient gets a terminal diagnosis.

On the far right, this is being portrayed as a plan to force everyone over 65 to sign his or her own death warrant. That's rubbish.

But, if Section 1233 is innocuous, why would "strategists" want to tip-toe around the subject?

Perhaps because, at least as I read it, Section 1233 is not totally innocuous.

Until now, federal law has encouraged end-of-life planning — gently. In 1990, Congress required health-care institutions (not individual doctors) to give new patients written notice of their rights to make living wills, advance directives and the like — but also required them to treat patients regardless of whether they have such documents.

The 1997 ban on assisted-suicide support specifically allowed doctors to honor advance directives. And last year, Congress told doctors to offer a brief chat on end-of-life documents to consenting patients during their initial

Charles Lane

"Welcome to Medicare" physical exam. That mandate took effect this year.

Section 1233, however, addresses compassionate goals in disconcerting proximity to fiscal ones. Supporters protest that they're just trying to facilitate choice — even if patients opt for expensive life-prolonging care. I think they protest too much: If it's all about obviating suffering, emotional or physical, what's it doing in a measure to "bend the curve" on health-care costs?

Though not mandatory, as some on the right have claimed, the consultations envisioned in Section 1233 aren't quite "purely voluntary," as Rep. Sander Levin, D-Mich. asserts. To me, "purely voluntary" means "not unless the patient requests one." Section 1233, however, lets doctors initiate the chat and gives them an incentive — money — to do so. Indeed, that's an incentive to insist.

Patients may refuse without penalty, but many will bow to white-coated authority. Once they're in the meeting, the bill does permit "formulation" of a plug-pulling order right then and there. So when Rep. Earl Blumenauer, D-Ore., denies that Section 1233 would "place senior citizens in situations where they feel pressured to sign end-of-life directives that they would not otherwise sign," I don't think he's being realistic.

What's more, Section 1233 dictates, at some length, the content of the consultation. The doctor "shall" discuss "advanced care planning, including key questions and considerations, important steps, and suggested people to talk to"; "an explanation of ... living wills and durable powers of attorney, and their uses" (even though these are legal, not medical, instruments); and "a list of national and State-specific resources to assist consumers and their families." The doctor "shall" explain that Medicare pays for hospice care (hint, hint).

Ideally, the delicate decisions about how to manage life's end would be made in a setting that is neutral in both appearance and fact. Yes, it's good to have a doctor's perspective. But Section 1233 goes beyond facilitating doctor input to preferring it.

As it happens, I have a living will and a durable power of attorney for health care. I'm glad I do. I drew them up based on publicly available medical information, in consultation with my family and a lawyer. No authority figure got paid by federal bean-counters to influence me. I have a hunch I'm not the only one who would rather do it that way.

Franklin Morris Nielson

Franklin Morris Nielson of Gooding died at his home of a heart attack on Thursday, Aug. 6, 2009. He was just one month shy of his 90th birthday.

Idaho State Brand and Livestock Inspector. Morris lived his whole life as an adventure. He participated in rodeo roping events and chariot racing, garnering many trophies and honors along the way. He also partnered with the late Ernie Watts as a rodeo producer.

Morris was born in Manard, Idaho, on Sept. 16, 1919, to Lydia and Oliver Nielson. His family lived in Camas County before moving to a farm south of Gooding when he was seven years old. Morris was the "middle" child in a family of twelve children.

Morris attended elementary school in a one-room house in the Shoestring district south of Gooding. After elementary school, he attended upper grades in Gooding. Because of difficult times during the Depression, he took a year off from school in his second year of high school in order to help with the family expenses by working. He returned to high school in Wendell and graduated from Wendell High School in 1938. There he met Lois Freeman, who had recently moved to Idaho from Oklahoma. They were married in 1940.

Morris and Lois lived for seven years in the Black Canyon area north of Gooding while Morris worked as a rider for the Black Canyon Cattle Association. He and Lois raised their four children, Lynda, Gayle, Roger (Butch), and Carla.

Morris bought his father's ranch south of Gooding in 1950 where he and his family raised cattle and horses for some 60 years. He also served for several years as

Funeral services will be held at 11 a.m. Tuesday, Aug. 11, at the LDS Church in Gooding. Burial will follow at the Wendell Cemetery in Wendell. Visitation for family and friends will be one hour prior to services at the church on Tuesday.

In lieu of flowers, memorial donations can be sent to the charity of your choice. Arrangements are under the direction of Demaray Funeral Service, Gooding Chapel.

Crash over Hudson River exposes crowded airspace

By David B. Caruso
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Flying a small plane above the Hudson River can feel like ducking into a crowded, urban canyon — with towering skyscrapers on each side and more than a dozen helicopters and planes all buzzing lower than the nearby Empire State Building.

The city's worst air disaster in eight years has drawn calls for more regulation of the air corridor over the Hudson, which is less than three-quarters of a mile wide at the site where a helicopter and small plane collided midair. It serves as an air highway for helicopters, police patrols and small planes flown by pilots of varying ability.

"That's not a lot of space," said Ray Adams, president of the National Air Traffic Controllers Association union at Newark (N.J.) Liberty International Airport. "And it's not unusual at all for us to have 10 to 20 aircraft

The wreckage of a helicopter is lifted by crane from the Hudson River and placed on a boat as seen from Hoboken, N.J., Sunday. Divers recovered a piece of a submerged helicopter and a fifth body Sunday as investigators searched the Hudson River for wreckage from the helicopter and a small plane that collided in midair, killing nine people.

between the George Washington Bridge and the Statue of Liberty."

Pilots are largely free to choose their own route, radioing their position periodically but not communicating regularly with air traffic controllers. Planes often fly as low as 500 feet to get a good look at the Statue of Liberty.

"So, what you have is a lot of helicopters. You've got the sightseeing tours. You have police helicopters. You have the weekend warriors who fly up and down the river," said Justin Green, an aviation attorney and former military pilot who has flown the route.

"All these airplanes are flying 1,000 feet or lower, and a lot of the pilots are up there to see the sights, so they may not be seeing and avoiding things as they should be," he said.

Pilots must stay under 1,100 feet to avoid straying into jetways used by commercial aircraft. They also aren't allowed to fly over Manhattan's tall buildings or stray into restricted zones around several major airports.

"What makes it kind of hairy is that, to stay out of all the restricted airspace ... you are kind of shooting the gap," Green said.

Planes and helicopters have blind spots just like cars do, making it difficult at times to spot an approaching aircraft, said Stanley Ferber, a flight instructor from Brooklyn.

"The only way to compensate is to have your head constantly on a swivel, moving your head around and scanning all parts of the sky," Ferber said.

Wait for sex and marriage? Evangelicals conflicted

By Eric Gorski
Associated Press writer

When Margie and Stephen Zumbun were battling the urge to have premarital sex, a pastor counseled them to control themselves. The couple signed a purity covenant.

Then, when the two got engaged and Margie went wedding dress shopping, a salesperson called her "the bride who looks like she's 12." Nonchurch friends said that, at 22, she was rushing things.

The agonizing message to a young Christian couple in love: Sex can wait, but so can marriage.

"It's unreasonable to say, 'Don't do anything ... and wait until you have degrees and you're in your 30s to get married,'" said Margie Zumbun, who did wait for sex, and married Stephen fresh out of Purdue University. "I think that's just inviting people to have sex and feel like they're bad people for doing it."

Against that backdrop, a number of evangelicals are promoting marrying earlier, nudging young adults toward the altar even as many of their peers and parents are holding them back.

Couples like the Zumbuns are caught between two powerful forces — evangelical Christianity's abstinence culture, with its chastity balls and virginity pledges, and societal forces pushing average marriage ages deeper into the 20s.

The call for young marriage raises questions: How young is too young? What if marriage is viewed as a ticket to guilt-free sex? What about the fact that marrying young is the No. 1 predictor of divorce?

The conversation is spreading from what pastors say is a relatively small number of churches and ministries that promote early marriage to the broader evangelical community, with the latest development being a Christianity Today magazine cover story this month titled "The Case for Young Marriage."

The article's author, University of Texas sociologist Mark Regnerus, argues that evangelicals "have made much ado about sex" but are damaging the institution of marriage by discouraging and delaying it.

Regnerus is not saying that premarital sex is OK. But he does suggest that abstinence has its limits, and that intensifying the message won't work. When people wait until their mid- to late 20s to marry, he writes, it's unrealistic and "battling our creator's reproductive designs" to expect them to wait that long for sex.

Statistics show that few Americans wait. More than 93 percent of adults 18 to 23 who are in romantic relationships are having sex, according to the National Longitudinal Study of Adolescent Health. For conservative Protestants in relationships and active in their faith, it's almost 80 percent.

Regnerus, a conservative Presbyterian, knocks the "abstinence industry" for perpetuating "a blissful myth" that great sex awaits just beyond the wedding reception. He advises against teen marriage, but argues that early 20s marriages are not as risky as advertised.

"I think marriage is just a fantastic institution for people who think rightly about it, have realistic ideas about it and put the requisite work into it."

The median age for first marriages in the U.S. is about 26 for women and 28 for men, the highest figures since the Census Bureau began counting. Solid data on evangelicals is not readily available, but research suggests they marry only slightly younger, Regnerus said.

High-school sweethearts Megan and Jay Mkrtschjan planned to marry at 20. But the suburban Chicago couple waited an extra year to finish college under pressure from Megan's parents.

There were few doubts in their minds about marrying young. They had found each other. Why wait?

"For me, it was really a trust issue," Megan said. "Marrying right out of college was showing our friends, showing the people we were acquainted with, that we trusted our lives with God."

For Jay, a songwriter and guitarist, "the sex issue" was the best argument for early marriage. "By getting married young and dating for a shorter period of time, it leaves less room to sin sexually," he said.

1 million evacuated as typhoon hits China

By Gillian Wong
Associated Press writer

BEIJING — A typhoon pummeled China's eastern coast Sunday, toppling houses, flooding villages and forcing nearly a million people to flee to safety. Officials rode bicycles to distribute food to residents trapped by rising waters.

Typhoon Morakot struck after triggering the worst flooding in Taiwan 50 years, leaving dozens missing and feared dead and toppling a six-story hotel. It earlier lashed the Philippines, killing at least 21 people.

Morakot, which means "emerald" in Thai, made landfall in China's eastern Fujian province, carrying heavy rain and winds of 74 miles per hour, according to the China Meteorological Administration. At least one child died after a house collapsed on him in Zhejiang province.

People stumbled with flashlights as the storm enveloped the town of Beibi in Fujian in darkness, the official Xinhua News Agency said. Strong winds uprooted trees or snapped them apart, while farmers tried to catch fish swept out of fish farms by high waves.

Village officials in Zhejiang rode bicycles to hand out drinking water and instant noodles to residents stranded by deep floods, while rescuers tried to reach eight sailors on a cargo ship blown onto a reef off Fujian, Xinhua reported.

Morakot was expected to weaken as it traveled north at about six miles per hour, but still bring strong winds and heavy rains to Shanghai, the meteorological administration said.

Flood control officials in Shanghai released water stored in inland rivers to

A rescuer helps a crying baby out of floodwater area after Typhoon Morakot hit Pintung county, southern Taiwan, Sunday. The storm dumped more than 80 inches of rain on some southern counties on Friday and Saturday, the worst flooding to hit the area in half a century, the Central Weather Bureau reported.

reduce levels in preparation, Xinhua said.

About 1 million people were evacuated from China's eastern coastal provinces — more than 490,000 in Zhejiang and 505,000 in neighboring Fujian. Authorities in Fujian called 48,000 boats back to harbor.

Five houses were destroyed by heavy rain ahead of the typhoon's landfall, burying four adults and a 4-year-old boy in debris, Xinhua said. The child died after emergency treatment failed, it said.

Another 300 houses collapsed and thousands of acres of farmland were inundated, Xinhua said.

Dozens of domestic flights were canceled and delayed in Fujian and Zhejiang, and bus service in Fujian's capital, Fuzhou, was suspended, it said.

Taiwan, meanwhile, was recovering after the storm dumped more than 80 inches of rain on some southern counties Friday and Saturday, the worst flooding to hit the area in half a century, the Central Weather Bureau reported.

Taiwan's Disaster Relief Center said a woman was killed when her vehicle plunged into a ditch in Kaohsiung county in heavy rain Friday, and two men drowned in Pingtung and Tainan. It said 31 were missing and feared dead.

Morakot hit Taiwan late Friday and crossed the island Saturday. The Disaster Relief Center reported Sunday that flash floods washed away a home in southern Kaohsiung, leaving 16 people missing. Three were swept away in southeastern Taitung county, including two policemen helping to evacuate villagers.

Twelve others were missing, including three fishermen from a capsized boat and three others whose cars fell into a rain-swollen river, it said.

In southern Pingtung county, 4,000 people were stranded in inundated villages waiting for police boats to rescue them, news media reported.

In Taitung county, a six-story hotel collapsed and plunged into a river after floodwaters eroded its base, but all 300 people inside were evacuated and uninjured, officials said.

In the northern Philippines, the typhoon and lingering monsoon rains left 21 people dead and seven others missing in landslides and floodwaters, including three European tourists who were swept away Thursday, the National Disaster Coordinating Council said Sunday.

The bodies of the Belgian and two French citizens were found Friday, the council said.

Meanwhile, Xinhua said three fishermen died and 26 others were missing from Tropical Storm Goni, which hit Guangdong on Wednesday but weakened into a tropical depression by Sunday. Helicopters and ships were searching for the missing crew.

U.S., Pakistan increasingly believe Pakistan's Taliban leader Mehsud dead

ISLAMABAD (AP) — The U.S. and Pakistan are almost certain a U.S. missile strike killed the head of Pakistan's Taliban and that his death led to a fierce power struggle among his deputies, officials said Sunday, despite claims and counter-claims as to the fate of the country's most wanted man.

Mehsud

Government and intelligence officials, as well as some Taliban commanders and at least one rival militant, have said Baitullah Mehsud likely died in Wednesday's drone strike on his father-in-law's house in northwestern Pakistan's rugged, lawless tribal area near the Afghan border.

President Barack Obama's national security adviser, James Jones, said the U.S. was 90 percent confident Mehsud had been killed. But three Taliban commanders — Hakimullah, Qari Hussain, who is known for training suicide bombers, and Taliban spokesman Maulvi Umar — called AP reporters Saturday insisting Mehsud was alive.

Neither side has produced any concrete evidence, and the claims were impossible to verify.

There also were conflicting reports that a major fight had broken out between rival Taliban factions during a meeting, or shura, to select Mehsud's replacement, and that one or two of the most likely contenders — Hakimullah and Waliur Rehman — had either been killed or wounded.

The meeting was in the house in northwestern Pakistan's tribal region, a mountainous area off-limits to journalists where the reach of the government is tenuous or nonexistent.

While it was unclear whether there had been a dispute at all — one Taliban commander, Noor Sayed, denied there had been any disagreement — any succession battle for the top slot in Pakistan's Taliban is likely to be fierce and potentially bloody.

North Korean leader Jong Il 'in full control'

By Paul Richter
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — North Korean leader Kim Jong Il appeared to be "in full control of his government" when an American mission met with him last week to free two imprisoned U.S. journalists, White House national security adviser James L. Jones said Sunday.

Jones, appearing on news programs, said that despite months of credible reports that Kim was struggling with grave health problems, "he seemed in control of his faculties" and "sounded very reasoned" in wide-ranging discussions with former President Bill Clinton.

Kim's health and control over his government have been key issues in the region for months amid reports from intelligence agencies that the leader's health setbacks have set off a struggle for power in the impoverished Stalinist state.

The White House has so far released little information on the 3 1/2 hours of conversation between Clinton and the secretive dictator. Jones provided few additional details, saying the debriefing of mission members was not yet complete.

He stopped short of predicting that the 20-hour visit would lead to a new engagement with North Korea over its disputed nuclear program, saying on NBC's "Meet the Press" only that "time will tell."

Jones, who oversaw the White House effort to organize the North Korea mission, said on "Fox News Sunday" that the conversations between Clinton and the North Koreans were "respectful and cordial in tone." Asked if he could

"I can do that absolutely, with a straight face."

— White House national security adviser James L. Jones when asked if he could guarantee that the U.S. team had given Kim nothing more than a highly publicized photo opportunity guarantee that the U.S. team had given Kim nothing more than a highly publicized photo opportunity, Jones said, "I can do that absolutely, with a straight face."

Jones signaled that U.S. policymakers are grappling with another diplomatic crisis set off by young journalists wandering into a different country at odds with the U.S. government.

Referring to Iran's arrest of three young Americans near its border with Iraq, Jones said the administration had "sent strong messages that we'd like these three young people released as soon as possible."

The Iranian government acknowledged Sunday that it was holding the Americans, who claimed they were unaware they were crossing the border into Iran when they went hiking in northern Iraq.

Jones said the administration was prepared to try to deal with Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, despite an internal political crisis in Iran that raised questions about the legitimacy of the hard-line government.

"We have to deal with whatever the central authority is," he said.

On CNN, U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Susan Rice strongly criticized Iran's trials of Iranians who protested the results of the June 12 presidential election.

"These are show trials, and they are clearly a demonstration of the fact that the Iranian leadership is not reconciled to the concerns of its people regarding the validity of the elections," she said.

THINK OF SHAPE, NOT SIZE

Kimberly woman to offer free body image consultations

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

Gillian Funk remembers when she first felt self-conscious about her looks.

The Kimberly resident was in junior high and realized that jeans and T-shirts wouldn't cut it if she wanted to look as good as her peers. She started dressing better, and, in turn, feeling better.

Fifteen years later, Funk is offering workshops about using clothes to improve one's self image. She hopes to get the word out that women don't have to change their body's weight or shape to feel confident.

Funk has been selling Modbe Clothing for four years. While helping women find the best-fitting clothes for their bodies, she learned about how different women's bodies are shaped. This year, after reading about body image issues affecting girls as young as 6 or 7 years old, she decided to start offering classes that focus on making better fashion choices to improve one's self-esteem.

In her workshops, Funk will teach women and girls about five different types of bodies and how women with those body types can dress their best.

The focus, she said, isn't on fashion, but on using clothes and accessories as a tool for feeling good.

"I think they kind of go together," she said.

Funk emphasized that she isn't using the workshops as a way to promote clothing sales. Although she uses Modbe Clothes as an example of clothing women should look for, the sessions focus on self esteem.

Liyah Babayan, owner of Ooh La La! clothing consignment shop in Twin Falls, said fashion and self-esteem are inextricably linked. Confidence lends to a sexy image, she said, and dressing well helps build that same confidence.

"It's like the chicken and the egg," she said. "One leads to another."

Babayan agreed that women need to stop focusing on their perceived flaws and make the most of the body they have.

"It's very subjective, what we think are flaws and what we don't think are flaws," Babayan said. "Not every woman's waist is at the same place. Not every woman's bust is shaped the same. Not every woman's legs are the same length."

Both Funk and Babayan expressed concern that the media promotes a certain body image that marginalizes women who don't share that body type. Funk hopes her free workshops will help women realize that everyone has positive physical attributes, no matter how much they weigh or what shape their body is.

"You don't have to look a certain way to look pretty and look feminine," she said.

Melissa Davlin may be reached at 208-735-3234 or melissa.davlin@lee.net.

What's your shape?

Slender, petite women are under 5 feet, 4 inches and have a well-proportioned body. Funk recommends wearing clothes that don't overwhelm your small frame. "That's the hard thing when you're small and petite," she said. Splurge on a tailor if you have to. If sleeves are too long it makes you look sloppy.

Pear-shaped women have small shoulders and busts and bigger, fuller hips and bottoms. Balance proportions by emphasizing your top half and wearing slimming pants or skirts that aren't too tight. Choose dark colors for the bottom half. "Since they are heavier on bottom, that's one where you're going to want to play up the top part of you," Funk said.

Straight shaped women have narrow hips and small busts. Focus on visual details that create a feminine figure, like belts or jackets that make the waist look smaller, Funk said.

Curvy-shaped women have full busts and hips and are often size 14 or bigger. Avoid wearing clothing that is too loose or too tight. Minimize your curves, but don't deny they're there, Funk said. Wearing a proper, fitted bra will minimize curves and lift up. Find an outfit that fits you properly. "The curves are there. You're not going to hide them," Funk said.

Broad and busty women have broad shoulders and a "more-than-generous bust line," Funk said. Downplay your top curves with good support and avoid bulky clothes. Focus on the bottom — find clothes that drop the eye down, like a cute, full A-line skirt.

WHAT TO LOOK FOR

- Gillian Funk shared seven points to remember when picking out clothes to maximize your self-image.
1. Figure out your body type using the chart.
 2. Choose outfits that fit and make you comfortable, rather than searching for the latest trend.
 3. Focus on accentuating the positives. Have wide hips? Highlight your upper torso.
 4. Toss what doesn't fit you. Ill-fitting clothes don't do anyone favors.
 5. Buy quality, not quantity. Spending a little extra on clothes that fit well and will last pays off.
 6. Choose the right outfit based on the occasion. Don't underdress for a work event or over-dress for a social outing, she said.
 7. Remember, size doesn't matter. Embrace your shape and have confidence in who you are.

For a dentist, the mouth holds clues to many ills

By Michael Birnbaum
The Washington Post

Your mouth can tell you a lot about your overall health.

Troubled teeth and gums aren't always just a dental problem. Sometimes they indicate deeper issues, and dentists are increasingly picking up the clues.

"We look around the mouth and we look for color changes. We're looking for certain smells. Spots around the gums," said Washington dentist Joseph Kravitz.

The relation of oral health to the rest of the body has gotten increased attention in recent years, spurred by such experts as Richard H. Carmona, who as U.S. surgeon general urged policy-makers in 2003 to "increase the understanding of how the signs and symptoms of oral infections can indicate general health status and act as a marker for other diseases." The publicity reminded a lot of dentists that their jobs weren't just about root canals and fillings, and it educated the public, Kravitz said.

Following are some non-oral-health issues and the possible clues Kravitz says dentists may be able to identify:

- Heart disease. Gums that have turned a "bright beefy red" or purple. Kravitz checks his patients' blood pressure when he notices those symptoms.

- Type 2 diabetes. Gums that bleed at the slightest touch although there is no plaque evident. Kravitz said patients with diabetes also typically have sores elsewhere on their bodies that they may not have connected to the disease.

- Kidney disease. A sweet ammonia smell on a person's breath, detectable even from behind a dentist's surgical mask.

- Acid reflux. Teeth that look worn and pitted, as if they'd been "dipped in battery acid." Only some teeth will be affected, depending on where the acids settle during a person's typical sleeping position.

- Oral cancer. Gum tissues with white spots that last two weeks or more. (Kravitz said spots that clear up more quickly can indicate many other things, including something as simple as having bitten into too-hot pizza.)

- Leukemia. Fiery-red swollen gums that just won't heal, distinguishable from diabetes symptoms with a blood test.

- Osteoporosis. Certain black spots on tooth X-rays that indicate air pockets and dead bone.

- Stress. Gums that have pulled away from teeth, or teeth that themselves are fractured. All sorts of fungal, bacterial and viral infections can enter the body through cracked teeth, Kravitz said.

- Sleep apnea. An enlarged tongue and inflamed gums in the part of the mouth through which air passes.

- Pregnancy. Deeply swollen gums can indicate hormonal changes.

- Bulimia. Upper front teeth that are paper thin, with the enamel almost completely worn away, and teeth that hurt. Distinguishable from acid reflux because different teeth are affected.

Kravitz said patients should make sure that dentists aren't "just looking in their mouths for five to 10 seconds" and that a thorough inspection should take at least five minutes.

He said that when he notices symptoms in his patients' mouths, he'll often have them come back in two weeks. About half the time, the symptoms are gone with no lasting effect. The other half of the time, he'll refer the patient to a physician.

"Every dentist in this country has this training," Kravitz said. "So it's good for consumers to make sure their dentists are paying attention."

Quick Study

The topic: Ovarian cancer

In women not taking hormones, obesity may increase risk

THE QUESTION
Women who are severely overweight face an increased risk for endometrial cancer and post-menopausal breast cancer. Are they also more likely than normal-weight women to develop ovarian cancer?

THIS STUDY
It analyzed data on 94,525 women who averaged about 62 years old at the start of the study. About a third of the women were overweight, and about a fourth were obese. In a seven-year span, ovarian cancer was diagnosed in 303 of the women. Among those who had never taken hormone therapy after menopause, obese women were 80 percent more likely to have ovarian cancer than were normal-weight women. No relationship between weight and ovarian cancer was found in women who had taken menopausal hormones at some point.

WHO MAY BE AFFECTED?
Older women who are severely overweight. Ovarian cancer, which most often affects women 55 and older, has a five-year survival rate of just 45 percent — in part because it often is not detected until it has spread beyond the ovary.

CAVEATS
Women in the study reported their own weights. Nearly all participants were white; whether the findings apply to other races is unclear.

Staying healthy during summer pool dips

The Washington Post

Nothing beats a dip in the pool on a hot, muggy day. But before you cannonball off the diving board, consider this: some lakes, hot tubs and pools can be breeding grounds for bacteria that cause gastrointestinal illnesses, ear and eye infections and even respiratory, neurological and viral problems, according to infectious-disease specialists at the University of Wisconsin School of Medicine and Public Health.

Municipal and private pools tend to be the safest because their chlorine contents are closely monitored. But there are also some things you can do to protect yourself. Here's what the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recommend:

- Shower with soap and tap water before and after swimming.
- Wash your hands thoroughly after using the toilet before jumping back in the water.

- Avoid swallowing water, even just a little.
- Don't swim in warm, stagnant water or use poorly maintained hot tubs or pools.

Staying healthy with age is a moving experience

By Jeannine Stein
Los Angeles Times

You may have heard the advice "If you exercise, you'll live longer." The good news — or the bad news, if you hate doing anything more active than downloading iTunes — is that it's true.

Research backs this up. A 2007 study in the Journal of the American Medical Association found that fitter people lived longer, even if they had extra pounds around the middle. Among 2,603 adults 60 and older enrolled in that longitudinal study, the fittest people (those who did best on a treadmill test) also had the lowest risk factors for hypertension, diabetes and high cholesterol.

Most of the negative changes to our bodies over time can be chalked up to two things, says Wojtek Chodzko-Zajko, head of the department of kinesiology at the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign: normal aging and disease-related aging (that is, changes accelerated by illnesses and conditions such as diabetes and heart disease).

Exercise, he says, can reduce the severity of both types.

• Strength maintenance: Normal aging results in a gradual loss of muscle mass (about 1 percent a year) that begins in middle age.

Strength-training can offset this loss, called sarcopenia, Chodzko-Zajko says. "The link between functionality and longevity may be indirect but more muscle mass allows you to be ambulatory and maintain function, whereas in a wheelchair you can't."

Having stronger muscles — especially leg muscles —

and better balance may mean fewer falls, a leading cause of death among the elderly, according to the American Geriatrics Society.

• Cardiovascular health: Over time, arteries become stiffer, paving the way for cardiovascular disease. The chemical composition of the artery walls begins to shift, says Douglas Seals, a professor in the department of integrative physiology at the University of Colorado, making the walls more rigid. "That stiffening of the arteries can cause changes in your blood pressure," putting extra stress on the heart, Seals adds.

Regular aerobic exercise, he says, slows or reverses some of the changes.

• Diabetes risk: As we age, blood-glucose control becomes less robust, making us more insulin-resistant and increasingly susceptible to diabetes. People also tend to gain weight as they age, further upping the chances for developing the disease.

During aerobic exercise, muscles take up glucose from the blood and use it for fuel, keeping the body's blood sugar levels low.

Exercise also causes the pancreas to decrease production of insulin. Continuous, steady exercise especially causes the liver to take lactic acid, amino acids and fats and turn them into glucose, further feeding the muscles and regulating blood sugar levels.

• Inflammation control: Inflammation can also worsen as we age and become exacerbated by extra weight, upping the risk for cardiovascular disease, lowering the immune system and paving the way for bacteria and viruses to take hold — even cancer cells to grow. But exercise may cause a decrease in levels of C-reactive protein, a marker for inflammation.

Researchers using cross-sectional data from the Health, Aging and Body Composition Study found that among 3,075 men and women ages 70 to 79, inflammatory markers were lower in those who had higher levels of exercise and physical activity, as well as those who used antioxidant supplements, regardless of their exercise level. The 2004 study appeared in the Journal of the American Geriatrics Society.

• Brain health: A small study found that older adults who did a minimum of 180 minutes per week of aerobic activity a week for 10 consecutive years had more small-diameter blood vessels with less twisting than a less active group that did less than 90 minutes of physical activity a week. The vessels of the more active group had a vessel pattern that was similar to those of younger people. The study appears in the American Journal of Neuroradiology.

The research leaves no doubt that activity isn't just meant for the younger years. "Human beings were active animals on the grassy savannas of Africa with high levels of energy expenditure," says Steven Blair, a professor in the Arnold School of Public Health at the University of South Carolina. "That's the kind of critter we are. But we're at the point now where we've engineered energy expenditure out of our lives, and that isn't good for us."

Father-in-law's fish story reveals his true character

DEAR ABBY: Two weeks ago, I went on a fishing trip with my father-in-law. It was great. I caught the biggest fish of my life. I kept it so I could have it mounted when I returned home.

When we arrived back at my in-laws', my father-in-law took the fish out of the cooler and claimed he had caught it. At first, I thought he was joking, but now he's planning on having the fish mounted!

I didn't want to make him look bad in front of his daughter and his wife, but I am furious. My wife thinks I'm overreacting, but this really is the big one that got away. Should I confront him and call his bluff?

— SOMETHING'S FISHY
IN NEW YORK

DEAR SOMETHING'S FISHY: If you were going to confront your father-in-law, you should have done so as soon as he took credit for catching your fish. Instead of being "furious," be grateful that you now have a clear insight into the man's character. That he would lie about something like this calls into question anything that has ever — or will ever — come out of his mouth.

DEAR ABBY: My 8-year-old nephew was diagnosed with autism at the age of 3.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

He has made amazing progress with therapy and has advanced so he is practically functioning at his age level.

Our entire family has teamed up and joined a charity that raises money for autism. We have devoted our time and energy to this important cause. My sister (my nephew's mother) refuses to get involved! She says she is "too busy."

We all work and have other activities, yet we still make time to devote to this cause. She doesn't work and has no other responsibilities outside her family that prohibit her from participating. She says raising money isn't something she likes to do.

I don't have much time for it either, but our family makes the time because this cause is important to us. It makes me furious that she won't help raise money for her own child's disorder. How can I talk to her about this without seeming confrontational?

— RAISING MONEY IN FLORIDA

DEAR RAISING MONEY: I urge you to refrain from doing so. For heaven's sake, your sister is the mother of a child who is working hard to overcome a disorder. She has a full-time job — one that lasts 24 hours a day, seven days a week. She is not malingering, so stop judging her.

DEAR ABBY: I am a happily married woman. Fifteen years ago, I was married to another man I'll call "Mario." Mario and I divorced after four years and ended it as friends.

Mario and I have both been in the restaurant business separately as well as together. Mario called me two days ago and asked me if he could hire me for his newest venture because he knows what a good manager I am. When I mentioned it to my present husband, he was adamantly against it.

Do you see anything wrong with my working with my ex?

— "CYNDIE"
IN SOUTH FLORIDA
DEAR "CYNDIE": I don't — but obviously your present husband does, because he's threatened by the idea. It appears you have an important decision to make. Which is more important to you — the job, or keeping peace in your marriage?

IF AUGUST 10 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Many areas of your life can improve during the next several months, partly because you are wiser than. Don't take your good luck for granted in November. During that month, making a change in career or initiating a business venture could be unwise. After the first of the year your judgment about people, money and business perks up again and ambitions can be realized. You may have an urge to escape on a romantic vacation next winter, but will have the best time if you wait until April.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Any obligations you complete will free you for bigger and better things. Procrastination merely puts the future further away.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You can reach your career aspirations faster and easier if you grab a new dance partner or hold hands with someone in the know.

GEMINI (May 21-June

20): Sitting around biting your nails won't accomplish anything. Complete small tasks so that the large ones won't seem impossible.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your exuberance and optimism may cause you to risk everything. Always put something aside for a rainy day.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You could miss out on an opportunity by taking people or things for granted. Affairs of the heart require more than just empty promises.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Find a task that gives you a sense of accomplishment. Your productivity is in direct proportion to the pride you take in work.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): To accomplish anything, you must concentrate on the details. New romantic horizons may be temporarily out of sight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You want people to like you, so you go overboard to impress them. Learn when to be gregarious and when to back off.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A little bit of knowledge is, as they say, a dangerous thing. If you are frustrated, learn more about the subject.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Honesty is the best policy where your financial situation is concerned. You may be to optimistic about the value of your holdings.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): When you take people for granted, you don't give them a chance to tell or show you what they can really do. Ask pertinent questions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The latest conspiracy theory may contain seeds of truth. You must gather the facts to separate the wheat from the chaff.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

20): Sitting around biting your nails won't accomplish anything. Complete small tasks so that the large ones won't seem impossible.

TODAY IN HISTORY

1846: President James K. Polk signed a measure establishing the Smithsonian Institution, named after English scientist James Smithson, whose bequest of half a million dollars had made it possible.

On this date: In 1792, during the French Revolution, mobs in Paris attacked the Tuileries Palace, where King Louis XVI resided. (The king was later arrested, put on trial for treason, and executed the following January.)

In 1809, Ecuador struck its initial blow for independence from Spain. (Ecuador achieved independence in 1822.)

In 1821, Missouri became the 24th state.

In 1874, Herbert Clark Hoover, the 31st president of the United States, was born in West Branch, Iowa.

In 1921, Franklin D. Roosevelt was stricken with polio at his summer home on the Canadian island of Campobello.

In 1949, the National Military Establishment was renamed the Department of Defense.

In 1968, 35 people were killed in the crash of a Piedmont Airlines Fairchild migrants seeking a better life in Puerto Rico drifted back to almost the same spot where the voyage began nearly two weeks earlier; at least 55 of the 86 people on board had died. The 20-year-old woman who'd accused Kobe Bryant of rape filed a federal lawsuit in Denver against the NBA star. (The lawsuit was later settled out of court; terms were not disclosed.) Barry Bonds became the first player in major league history to hit 30 home runs in 13 consecutive seasons, connecting in San Francisco's 8-7 loss to Pittsburgh.

One year ago: At the Beijing Olympics, Michael Phelps began his long march toward eight gold medals by winning the 400-meter individual medley in 4:03.84 — smashing his own world record. The U.S. women's 400-meter freestyle relay team, anchored by 41-year-old Dara Torres, took the silver behind the Netherlands. Stephanie Rice of Australia won the gold in the women's 400-meter individual medley in a world record time of 4:29.45. Pdraig Harrington rallied from three shots behind to win the PGA Championship in Bloomfield Township, Mich. Soul crooner Isaac Hayes died in Memphis, Tenn. at age 65.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

"Enemies' gifts are no gifts and do no good." — Sophocles

Sitting West, you lead king, ace and a third club against four hearts. South ruffs the third round and plays a diamond to dummy, then a spade to his king and your ace. What next?

The answer is that it does not matter what you do next. You have already let the contract through! Say you switch to a diamond. Declarer wins in dummy, leads a spade to the jack and queen, then draws two rounds of trump and plays to trump the fourth spade in dummy. Since your partner is out of trumps, he can do nothing to stop this plan from succeeding. But you could have prevented it; the key to the deal is to duck the first spade.

Declarer's general strength and distribution are clearly marked by the bidding and early play. Declarer must have the king-queen of spades, so winning the first spade cannot generate an extra trick for your side. The consequence of holding up the ace is that declarer now has the unpleasant choice of how many rounds of trump to draw before continuing the attack on spades. If none, you will win the spade ace on the second round and give partner a ruff with his heart 10. If South takes two rounds of trump, you will win the spade ace and play a third trump, leaving declarer with an eventual spade loser. By winning the spade ace, you retained control yourself.

Vulnerable: Both Dealer: North

The bidding:
South West North East
1♥ Pass 1NT Pass
2♠ Pass 4♥ All pass

Opening lead: Club king

LEAD WITH THE ACES
08-10-B

South holds:
♠ J 7 2
♥ 8 4
♦ K 8 6 4 3
♣ 10 7 3

South West North East
1♠ Pass 2♥
Pass 3♥ Pass 4NT
Pass 5♥ Pass 6♥
All pass

ANSWER: Against small slams, you should normally lead aggressively rather than passively, unless you think you have the contract set on passive defense. Here, a diamond lead may not work, but it is the huge favorite over a club lead (although I might lead a club if partner had had a chance to double a five-diamond response to Blackwood and had not done so).
