Area students lag behind state in AYP

Idaho makes progress with 66 percent of schools meeting mark

By Nichole Carnell
Times-News writer

Two-thirds of Idaho's schools met Adequate Yearly Progress under the No Child Left Behind Act during the 2008-09 school year, though south-central Idaho's schools are lagging behind.

However, area school officials called the test results misleading.

Idaho Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna announced the new AYP numbers Wednesday. The 66 percent of schools meeting the mark, measured by Idaho Standards Achievement Test scores, is up from only 27 percent in 2006-07 and 56 percent in 2007-08.

According to numbers released by the State Department of Education, 53 percent of south-central Idaho schools met federal AYP standards, though only 34 percent of area districts made the cut compared to 45 percent statewide.

Some area school districts have been struggling for years.

The Shoshone School District is facing its eighth year of missing AYP in both math and reading. The Buhl School District has reported inadequate progress in math for six years, and two years of inadequate graduation rates.

"Those schools that continue to struggle will participate in more intense intervention," Luna said.

Sewer overflow in Jerome causes stinky situation

By John Plestina
Times-News writer

JEROME — City sewer systems, like people's tempers, can only take so much before they burst.

A discharge by Idaho Milk Products into Jerome's sewer system created a stinky situation with a Wednesday overflow at the wastewater treatment plant.

City Administrator Ben Marchant said late Wednesday morning that city workers and Idaho Milk Products were working to alleviate the situation.

The milk processing plant on the 220 block of South Tiger

"We're doing everything we can to reduce the odor and address the problem."

— City Administrator Ben Marchant

Drive was closed for repairs during the first half of this week.

"This isn't adversely impacting any residences or businesses except Idaho Milk Products, who are in the process of troubleshooting their problem," Marchant said.

The facility opened in March, when Marchant said the city had adequate sewer capacity. However, due to the plant's startup, the system's limits were exceeded, which Marchant said the city is working to remedy.

"It's a limited problem, he said. "If we weren't doing anything about it it could become a big problem ... These problems are normal when you bring any new facility online."

Marchant said the city will soon meet with Idaho Milk Products and other industrial users of the sewer system to discuss and formulate ways to avoid problems like the one that happened Wednesday.

Marchant said odors from the wastewater plant have generated complaints from some of its neighbors.

"We're doing everything we can to reduce the odor and address the problem," he said.

The Jerome-based milk processor's business manager, John Martin, said Idaho Milk Products hopes to resolve all of its wastewater issues.

"We are participating fully with the city to insure that our flows are within our permitted amounts," he told the Times-News Wednesday. "We want to be good stewards of the environment."

Officials still searching for cause of fatal plane crash

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

Air safety investigators are working to determine what caused a fixed-wing single-engine plane to crash in Oregon last Friday, killing a Paul man and his two sons.

Ronald Eugene Mingo, 62, of Paul; Jed R. Mingo, 32 of Bountiful, Utah; and Jordan D. Mingo, 26, of Lehi, Utah, were flying to Ilwaco, Wash., to fish when the 1949 Navion plane they were in went down in a mountainous region in Malheur County, Ore.

Ronald Mingo

The trio left from a dirt airstrip near Kasota Road and stopped to refuel at the Jerome County Airport between 11 a.m. and 11:30 a.m. on Friday. The plane was not found until Monday.

National Transportation Safety Board Air Safety Investigator Zoe Keliher, who is still working at the crash site, said she arrived on scene at 11 a.m. Tuesday and expects a preliminary report within five

Judge could decide in week on new trial, acquittal for Burley man

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

BOISE — A federal judge said Wednesday he intends to decide within a week whether a Burley feedlot co-owner convicted of illegally injecting fluids into an underground aquifer deserves an acquittal and a new trial.

Judge B. Lynn Winmill heard arguments Wednesday afternoon about whether federal prosecutors tainted the jury at Cory King's trial this spring, and whether the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency even had jurisdiction necessary to bring charges.

King was convicted of four counts of illegal injection and one count of making a false statement to an inspector from the Idaho State Department of Agriculture.

One of King's attorneys, Larry Westberg, argued that the mention of supposed livestock wastewater in the injected fluids — a debate suppressed during the trial after a request from prosecutors — caused an unfair trial, and that the restriction kept his defense from responding. He also argued that the water injected was pure, natural creek water, and renewed an argument that the federal government is simply trying to assert control over groundwater that it has no right to regulate.

Lawmakers may reverse key part of roads compromise

The Associated Press

BOISE — Shifting millions that now go to off-road trail maintenance work to fund highway repairs was part of a compromise in May that helped end a standoff between the 2009 Idaho Legislature and Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter.

But a legislative task force may recommend undoing the move as opposition from all-terrain vehicle and snowmobile enthusiasts mounts, the Spokesman-Review newspaper reported Wednesday.

"We may need to give the gas tax back to the recreationists and look for other funding," said Rep. Raul Labrador, R-Eagle.

Come July 2010, about $4.5 million in gas-tax money that funds trails managed by Parks and Recreation and $17 million that goes to the Idaho State Police will shift to the Idaho Transportation Department for road work.

Those who testified at the legislative panel's first two meetings this summer have largely panned the shift of taxes on gas burned in boats, off-road vehicles and snowmobiles that now goes to various trail and search and rescue programs.

Clark Collins, founder of the Blue Ribbon Coalition and president of the Gem State ATV Association, told lawmakers that money "wouldn't really buy a lot of miles of highway, but it buys a lot of miles of trails and trail improvements."

Sen. Jim Hammond, R-Post Falls, favors a new funding source to replace money Idaho State Police receives from the gas tax, but he's leaning toward undoing the trail maintenance cash shift.

For that to happen, the 2010 Legislature must approve such a move.

"I think that's going to have to be on the table," said

MORNING BRIEFING

Pat's Picks

Pat Marcantonio

• The Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce's big blowout, Hot August Nite runs from 5 to 9 p.m. at Twin Falls City Park. Besides a picnic and live music, there will be fabulous packages up for auction. Picnic tickets are $10 for adults and $7 for children 12 and younger, or buy 12 raffle tickets and receive two picnic tickets free.

• For a beautiful walk, check out the Murdock Creek Trail. The trailhead is located about one mile from the Sawtooth National Recreation Area office, eight miles north of Ketchum. It's an easy walk and follows the creek. If I can do this, anyone can. This weekend we saw lots of wildflowers.

• For the older set, a Silver Sneakers open house offers a demo of senior fitness classes at 5:15 p.m. with a free class with free dinner at the Jerome Senior Center. There will even be door prizes.

Know something that is unique to the area and that may take people by surprise? E-mail me at patm@gmagicvalley.com.

King

"Your Honor, once the government gets its foot in the door with groundwater, it's all over," Westberg said late in the hearing.

Federal prosecutors responded that King's attorneys should have asked Winmill during the trial for permission to lift the restriction on discussing wastewater.

Winmill questioned the attorneys throughout the hearing. In one instance, he asked if conflicting statements by a prosecution witness that were highlighted by Westberg were simply the result of trial court limits on wastewater discussion.

The wastewater question was an issue from the start of the hearing, when the judge asked both sides to work with a probation officer to prepare an evidentiary hearing on whether the water was contaminated. That information, he said, is needed for federal sentencing guidelines to be included in the probation officer's pre-sentencing report.

The EPA initially argued the fluids injected in King's wells included wastewater, while King's attorneys recently released to the media statements from a University of Arizona scientist who concluded that water samples from the site were not contaminated.

Prosecutor Dean Ingemansen said EPA does not plan to release its information before the court filings, though it still has a "differing opinion" on the matter.

The evidentiary hearing will likely take the place of King's sentencing, scheduled for Nov. 2 in Pocatello. Sentencing will be delayed a few more weeks, partly prompted by Winmill's busy schedule.

That introduces another delay to a case that went more than a year before even reaching trial.

"We just keep having to go through with it over and over again," said Vicky King, Cory King's wife.

Brad Hurd

"We have plans to recover the plane tomorrow (Thursday) and will secure it at a facility in Boise," Keliher said.

Keliher said autopsies will be performed on all three victims by the medical examiner in Malheur County. The medical examiner's office did not return phone calls from the Times-News Wednesday.

Keliher said the NTSB is not allowed to give out names of people involved in a crash but she confirmed only one individual in the crash was a certified pilot.

"Because of the position and fragmentation of the plane we can't tell who was in what is normally regarded as the pilot's seat," Keliher said.

According to the Federal Aviation Administration, Jed Mingo holds a private pilot's certificate rated for land-based, single-engine aircraft. The plane is registered to Roland Alfred Letsom of Junction City, Ore., according to the FAA.

Letsom's wife, Hermie, said they sold the plane in Oregon to the Mingo family in August 2005 for $30,000 cash.

"It was in very good shape when they bought it," Letsom said. "Oh, my goodness, I feel so sorry for them."

She said she does not know why the Mingos had not changed the registration after the sale.

Malheur County Under-sheriff Brian Wolfe said his office did not come to any conclusions about how the crash occurred.

"We leave that to the experts in that field unless it's really obvious, like pilot error or the weather. There was no extreme weather that morning."

Wolfe said the terrain around the crash site near the Idaho-Oregon state line in the Succor Creek State Natural Area in the Owyhee Mountain does not have particularly high peaks.

"There are a lot of airplanes that fly daily in that area," Wolfe said. "They don't fly around it."

Wolfe said the plane appeared to have come over a peak and was found on a sagebrush-covered ridge.

The nearly 66 percent of area districts unable to reach AYP include four of the five largest — Cassia, Jerome, Minidoka and Twin Falls school districts. Blaine County School District met its AYP goal.

"We are excited about it," said Blaine County School District Superintendent Lonnie Barber. Although his district has a large population of limited-English-proficiency students, Barber said, the implementation of targeted intervention for all groups of students has been successful.

"When a school district makes improvements that is due to great teaching," Barber said.

Kimberly School District Superintendent Kathleen Noh said she agrees with Barber, and although her district didn't make AYP as a whole, each individual school in her district did, pointing to a quirk in the program.

AYP measures 41 different subcategories that are derived from the ISAT data. If a district does not reach proficiency in any one of the goals, it does not meet AYP.

Subcategories include measurements of students with disabilities, economically disadvantaged, limited-English-proficient students and ethnicity categories. In order for those subcategories to be measured at a school, a total of 34 students must have taken the ISAT.

If a school does not have 34 students to measure the category by, then it is not measured, said Noh.

The reason Kimberly did not meet AYP, but its schools did, is attributed to the number of students with disabilities, Noh said.

District-wide there were 38 students with disabilities who tested, she said, but no more than 34 in each individual school. The district failed to meet its goal in the subcategory, while none of its schools' progress was measured.

Many small school districts meeting AYP receive the same benefit, while larger districts, like Twin Falls, receive lower proficiency scores because of the challenges of a more diverse population, school officials said.

"There are quite a few problems with the current AYP system," said Twin Falls Superintendent Wiley Dobbs.

Dobbs said that even though his district is outpacing the state in reading and math proficiency, a few subcategory shortfalls make it appear to be losing ground.

"If you look at third-through sixth-grade, our scores beat the state average in every grade and every category tested — in some cases by a considerable amount," Dobbs said. "Then to be considered a failing school because one category is missed is misleading."

Twin Falls met 37 of the 41 categories. According to the AYP report, the district did not reach proficiency in African-American math and reading, limited-English-proficiency learners math, and students with disabilities math.

Dobbs said a huge challenge for the district is the arrival of students who come to Twin Falls through the College of Southern Idaho Refugee Center. Students from Africa are classified African-American, even if they have only lived here for a short time and are still learning English.

"We have many things we need to celebrate," Dobbs said. "We are pleased with our results and we know we can do better."

Luna at a news conference in Boise agreed that AYP measurement needs some adjustment.

"Right now we have assessments of learning," Luna said, "next we will be exploring assessments for learning."

Luna announced last week he was appointed to a national task force that will work with Congress and the Obama administration on the reauthorization of the 2001 law.

CSI: T.F. rape suspect is part-time, on-call security

Times-News

An Idaho Army National Guard soldier accused of rape is also a part-time, on-call security guard with the College of Southern Idaho.

Donovan Edwin Wiser, 26, was charged July 22 with raping a woman at his Twin Falls home during a May party.

Wiser's employment with the college was unclear in a story about his case published on Tuesday, because college officials on Monday wouldn't provide his employment status, saying a written request had to be filed for that information.

On Tuesday afternoon, the college responded to a Times-News request for information and said Wiser has not worked at CSI since July, though he remains on a call list for security services. The college consulted first with an attorney before commenting.

Citing personnel issues, CSI Human Resources Director Monty Arrossa declined to say if Wiser may be offered work with the criminal allegation against him pending in court, but as of this week Wiser was not currently scheduled for a shift.

Wiser has a private attorney and has been released from jail on $40,000 bond, with a preliminary hearing set for Sept. 4 in Twin Falls 5th District Court.

He is also the subject of an ongoing stalking investigation and may have threatened to kill someone, according to court records.

SIRCOMM taking steps to recover revenue

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

JEROME — Officials with the regional emergency dispatch center in south-central Idaho say they've begun taking steps to secure revenue that might not have been collected for years.

Most of the revenue for Southern Idaho Regional Communications Center comes from a $1.25 surcharge assessed to telephone customers for 911 calls received. While most revenue is collected through telephone providers, there have been gaps because of changing technology. SIRCOMM plans to recover some funds lost due to voice over Internet protocol (VOIP), which gives callers the ability to make emergency telephone calls via the Internet.

"Were getting some of the providers to start paying," said Jerry Gonterman, communications technician at Tuesday's monthly meeting. "It's getting narrowed down. We're starting to catch up."

Gonterman said progress is being made with three companies — Level 3 Communications; Eight by Eight; and Tax Partners — and one company, Level 3, will reimburse SIRCOMM for a year's worth of fees. Level 3 apparently bought a local company that wasn't paying SIRCOMM.

The three companies handle the 911 surcharges for a dozen or so Internet providers and submit to SIRCOMM the payments on behalf of the providers.

The four-member Joint Powers Board said it's unclear how much money will come in. Tom Faulkner, a Gooding County commissioner, acknowledged that most people have land lines or cell phones. In next year's budget, revenue from VOIP access fees is more than $50,000 while wireless and land line fees combine for around $1.1 million.

Meanwhile, Board Chairman Tom Mikesell said the revenue from cell phone companies for wireless communications is assumed to be correct. Cell phone revenue has come for several years after the state adjusted laws, he said.

"There's no way for us to check," said Mikesell, a Twin Falls County commissioner. "There's no vehicle for us to do that."

In related news, SIRCOMM awarded several surplus items to school districts in Shoshone, Castleford and Hansen.

Shoshone school board mulls required stimulus audit

By John Plestina
Times-News writer

SHOSHONE — Federal stimulus money might be a boon for school districts but it doesn't come without strings. Shoshone school trustees on Tuesday took a step toward future compliance with a federal mandate.

Districts receiving more than $250,000 in stimulus must have an independent audit, separate from regular yearly audits, performed for the year they receive stimulus funding.

Shoshone received stimulus funding totaling $153,000 in three allocations earmarked for different programs. Superintendent Mel Wiseman said he believes the $250,000 audit requirement figure is a combined total of stimulus money and other government funding.

"With the stimulus money plus the money we already get we'll have to do a separate audit," he said.

The district Board of Trustees authorized Wiseman to seek specific costs from auditors and to report back to the board at the September meeting. Wiseman said he believes the audit could cost between $8,000 and $12,000.

Earlier this summer, when the trustees approved a $4.9 million budget for the 2009-10 fiscal year, they did so knowing that federal stimulus funding would keep spending on par with last year, despite a 7.8 percent decrease in state support.

"If it wasn't for the stimulus money coming in through the backside, we'd be looking at cutting 8 percent," Wiseman said in June.

One sent to hospital in late-Wednesday crash

Times-News

A late-Wednesday crash east of Twin Falls sent one juvenile male to the hospital, a Twin Falls County Sheriff's spokesman said.

At approximately 5:50 p.m., law enforcement officials received a call of a traffic collision at 3900 North and 3450 East. An unidentified juvenile male driving a westbound 1989 Ford Ranger failed to see a subject stopped in front of him, wishing to turn left, a sheriff's spokesman said.

The driver braked but determined he could not stop before he would have collided with the vehicle. The juvenile's vehicle veered into the oncoming lane, where collided with an eastbound 1996 Chevrolet pickup the turning vehicle was waiting for.

The juvenile driver of the Ranger was able to crawl out of his vehicle on his own, and the severity of his injuries is unknown, but not thought to be serious, a sheriff's spokesman said.

The driver and passengers in the 1996 Chevrolet were uninjured. The incident remains under investigation.

New BLM chief calls job 'great opportunity'

By Adella Harding
Elko Daily Free Press writer

ELKO, Nev. — U.S. Bureau of Land Management Director Bob Abbey said Tuesday he sees his new position as a "great opportunity" to bring people together on public land issues.

"One of my goals is to ensure the BLM manages public lands for multiple uses and to protect and conserve natural resources," he said on his first day on the job since his Senate confirmation.

"The key for me is to try to move forward aggressively for sustainability of local economies and good on-the-ground public land management. I certainly understand the importance of public lands to the rural West," said the former Nevada BLM director.

At the same time, he said he is mindful there are public lands abutting Western cities where quality of life issues differ from those of rural communities.

"It's just a balancing act," Abbey said in a telephone interview from Washington. "I hope to bring people together."

Abbey, 58, spent time in Elko, Nev., during his eight years as the state BLM director.

He said renewal energy projects will be a BLM focus in the short term, and the challenge will be to see that projects are environmentally sound.

Abbey said a potential problem with proposed wind projects is that some sites are in sage grouse habitat, and one solution may be to look at alternative locations.

BLM also faces legal hurdles over grazing permits the agency issues for public lands. The BLM is accused in a Western Watersheds Project lawsuit of violating environmental laws and regulations designed to protect dwindling numbers of sage grouse.

The lawsuit affects roughly 34 million acres of BLM-managed land.

"I believe grazing is a legitimate use of public lands, as long as it's done responsibly," Abbey said, explaining that means ranchers should mitigate grazing impacts and increase the sustainability of the land.

Abbey also said litigation over BLM-issued permits, whether for grazing or a mining project, is costly.

"That is why the BLM needs to do the right thing the first time," he said. "It is a very open and public process. People have the opportunity to provide comments before the final decision. It would be helpful if people provided impact early rather than after the fact."

Heyburn man sentenced for helping inmate escape

By Damon Hunzeker
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Kalob Morrison, 20, of Heyburn, was sentenced Wednesday in Cassia County 5th District Court to a unified prison term of five years, with a retained-jurisdiction order of 180 days, for “carrying things to prisoner to aid escape.”

The “thing” he carried was a cell phone for Isaac Polanco, 21, who escaped from the Mini-Cassia Criminal Justice Center last fall.

The execution of Morrison’s sentence by Judge Michael Crabtree — two and a half years determinate, plus two and a half years indeterminate — will depend upon a review after he completes the six-month “rider” program, to begin immediately in Cottonwood State Prison.

Morrison is one of three people sentenced in connection to Polanco’s escape.

Morrison, who was serving time with Polanco for possession of a controlled substance, was released days before Polanco’s escape.

According to the criminal-complaint affidavit, Morrison bought a cell phone for Polanco with money he sent to Morrison and hid it in the visitor area restroom at the jail, where maintenance crews have access.

Polanco, a former maintenance trustee, allegedly obtained the phone and used it to call another former inmate, Arturo Flores, 20, and discussed an escape plan that the three had apparently concocted while in jail together.

But Polanco didn’t need much help to escape. While sweeping jail sidewalks on Nov. 5 he simply walked away.

According to court records, Flores, who was released at the time, had been receiving money from Polanco’s jail account and agreed to leave it, along with some clothes, in a car parked at Video Mexico on Overland Avenue.

When Polanco escaped, he called Flores, but Flores never left the car, the clothes, or the promised money.

In fact, he told police that he spent the money as soon as he got it.

Flores told police Polanco was heading to either Phoenix or El Salvador, according to court records, and Morrison said Polanco was heading to Durango, Mexico.

Instead, Polanco was arrested in Heyburn 36 hours after escaping. He was already serving at least seven years for multiple charges — including robbery, burglary, and criminal conspiracy.

Flores was sentenced in May to five years for his role in assisting Polanco’s escape — two and a half determinate, two and a half indeterminate.

Polanco was sentenced in June to a unified sentence of four years — two determinate, two indeterminate. Polanco has served about two and a half years on a seven-year sentence for armed robbery and criminal conspiracy. The two determinate years will be served consecutively following the completion of the remaining time on his previous conviction.

T.F. Co. mulling future of hospital building

Twin Falls County commissioners met last week with Idaho Department of Correction Director Brent Reinke to discuss whether the state agency or any others could move into the county’s old hospital building when it becomes vacant in the near future.

“They went over it and went through it,” Commission Chairman George Urie said. “They’re going to talk about it and let us know.”

Within the next few years, commissioners will decide what to do with the building that’s currently occupied by the St. Luke’s Magic Valley Medical Center but will become empty once the nonprofit moves into its new facility on Pole Line Road.

Commissioners invited Reinke to discuss the idea of the agency possibly renting the space, perhaps for work-release programs. Urie said the building wouldn’t become a jail, but said one possibility is to use the building for office space for all state agencies in the area.

Urie said the commissioners approached Reinke partly because he’s from the area and is a former Twin Falls County commissioner.

IDOC spokesman Jeff Ray said talks are preliminary but Reinke said the state probably couldn’t provide any funding for three years.

Jan Frew, deputy administrator at the state Division of Public Works, said she wasn’t aware of any discussions yet.

County plans new parks building

Twin Falls County officials said Wednesday they plan on erecting a new building to store maintenance equipment for its parks and weeds departments.

On Wednesday, commissioners met with Rick Novacek, parks director, and Kali Sherrill, weeds director. In the spring, the county razed an old and decrepit building and hopes the new one to be up by the winter, according to commissioners. It will go up near the parks department at 450 Sixth Ave W.

Commission Chairman George Urie said the county visited informally with some local contractors to get estimates and will solicit bids soon. The cost is estimated at $75,000.

Sen. Risch sends letter to Obama

Idaho’s U.S. Sen. Jim Risch has co-drafted a bipartisan letter urging President Obama to press Arab leaders to recommit their nations to the peace process.

The letter, which was co-drafted with Sen. Evan Bayh, D-Ind., and includes 71 signatures from both parties, is a follow-up to Obama’s discussions and June visit to the Middle East pushing for progress in the peace process, said Risch spokesman Brad Hoaglund.

“We applaud these comments and agree with you and Secretary (of State Hillary) Clinton that Arab states must do more to end their isolation of Israel,” the Aug. 7 letter reads.

Risch, who is in Idaho for the Senate’s August recess, sits on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

“Israel has made some concessions and is doing some things,” Hoaglund said. “This letter urges the Arab nations to do some things as well.”

Police busy Wednesday with crashes

Times-News

A two-vehicle crash late Tuesday night along U.S. Highway 93 “heavily injured” two women, breaking one passenger’s back and another’s neck, Idaho State Police said.

Shortly before midnight on Tuesday, Thomas Reid, 58, of Orland Calif., was heading south on U.S. Highway 93 in a semitrailer just before the Hollister Port of Entry when he turned left into the path of a vehicle heading north, according to an ISP news release.

That vehicle, a 2005 GMC pickup driven by James Whismore, 73, of Twin Falls, hit the back-right dual tire of the trailer and caused the back dual tires on the axle to break off.

The semi was pulling into the port of entry and likely traveling about 5 to 10 mph, while the GMC truck was headed at a faster rate of speed before the collision, said ISP Trooper Chris Pohanka.

Reid, 58, was not injured. Four people in the pickup, however, were transported by ambulance to St. Luke’s Magic Valley Medical Center, according to the release. They were wearing their seat belts and alcohol is not a factor, police said.

A Twin Falls Police Officer moves a bicycle from the spot where the rider collided with a motorcycle on Wednesday afternoon at Addison Avenue East near Buchanan Street. The cyclist was transported to St. Luke’s Magic Valley Medical Center “for precautionary measures just to get checked out,” said Twin Falls Police Traffic Officer Lou Coronado.

GMC truck received the heavy injuries, though their full names and ages were not immediately available on Wednesday, said Pohanka.

Reid allegedly failed to yield, though citations are pending, and the case remains under investigation, Pohanka said.

Elsewhere, Twin Falls Police said an unidentified driver Wednesday afternoon was arrested for alleged driving under the influence after four vehicles crashed in a pile-up along Washington Street North near Wirsching Avenue West, tying up traffic for nearly 45 minutes.

Names of people involved in that crash were also not available Wednesday afternoon, said Twin Falls Police Sgt. Dennis Pullin, adding no one was taken to the hospital.

Earlier on Wednesday, Twin Falls police handled a crash involving a motorcycle rider and a bicycle rider at about 11:45 a.m. near Addison Avenue and Buchanan Street, said Pullin.

Twin Falls Police Traffic Officer Lou Coronado told the Times-News that the bicyclist was attempting to cross the street when it collided with a motorcycle, hitting the right saddle bag. The cyclist was transported to St. Luke’s Magic Valley Medical Center “for precautionary measures just to get checked out,” Coronado said.

Names will not be available until at least today, said Pullin.

District judge denies stay of well closures

IDWR to meet with well owners today

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

The state of Idaho seems set to continue enforcing large-scale well closures in the Magic Valley for at least another week and a half after a district judge on Wednesday denied an attempt by groundwater pumpers to end them.

Gary Spackman, interim director of the Idaho Department of Water Resources, has currently ordered users of about 150 groundwater rights in four counties to stop using those rights, after concluding last month that the districts failed to carry out part of a plan to provide water to a fish farm run by Clear Springs Foods of Buhl.

The widespread closure, which includes water that irrigates about 4,150 acres of land, is known as curtailment and had never

In a sizeable filing Tuesday afternoon, attorneys for the North Snake and Magic Valley groundwater districts had asked 5th District Judge John Melanson to temporarily put the closures on hold, as well as to review the curtailment orders and hold a hearing on a permanent stay of them. Melanson replied Wednesday afternoon, declining to halt the process for now but scheduling a hearing on a full stay for 10 a.m. Aug. 21 at the Snake River Basin Adjudication courtroom in Twin Falls.

Melanson wrote that his decision was influenced by several factors:

- The districts assumed that a previous court decision of his led Spackman to invalidate the agreement that was broken, which the judge wrote does not appear to be entirely the case.

• The districts admitted that they have not complied with the agreement, which was based on one of their own proposed plans.

• A temporary stay may cause irreparable harm to Clear Springs.

No comment was immediately available Wednesday afternoon from the districts and their representatives, some of whom had not seen the decision. But Randy MacMillan, the fish company’s vice president for research and environmental affairs, said his company was disappointed and surprised that the districts weren’t able to agree to an offer made last week Clear Springs viewed as “reasonable.”

Clear Springs continues to work on long-term solutions to the decline of the Eastern Snake Plain Aquifer, he said.

The denied stay means IDWR’s enforcement — so far limited to cursory inspections and phone calls — will progress to the next stage. Speaking in his office early Wednesday evening, Spackman said area Watermaster Cindy Yenter will begin visiting water users today who don’t appear to be complying with the closures, ideally working out ways to reach compliance but possibly opening the door to physically limit their wells.

It’s a step Spackman said he was hoping wouldn’t have to be carried out. But state law and his orders give him no choice, he said.

Some water users who may have only one well or have other limited options are certain to be harmed by the closures. But by and large, the users affected so far appear to be looking to work with IDWR, Spackman said.

“People have been remarkably civil, have responded, and I’ve been impressed by the responses of the groundwater users,” he said.

Roads

Hammond, whose district includes miles of forest trails.

Still, Sen. Dean Cameron, R-Rupert, said reversing the shift would revive the very same issue — finding more cash for highway maintenance that Otter insists on — that prompted the governor to veto dozens of bills and pushed the 2009 Legislature to 117 days, the second-longest session in state history.

“By reversing it, do we really solve anything?” Cameron said. “We have to find additional funding for transportation.”

Conservative Idaho House members including Labrador favor shifting about $25 million in sales taxes on vehicle-related purchases to pay for the gas tax shift, rather than levying a new tax.

But taxes from tire or car battery sales now go into the general fund that is growing ever-tighter.

For instance, tax revenues at the end of the 2009 fiscal year that ended June 30 came in $95 million short of forecasts. And further shortfalls, including a $20 million deficit in the Medicaid health-insurance program for the poor and disabled due to rising case-loads, will dent Idaho’s reserves this year.

Iraqi PM to visit Syria for security talks

By Qassim Abdul-Zahra
Associated Press writer

BAGHDAD — The Iraqi government insisted that it's not up to the United States to negotiate over Iraq's security with Syria as a delegation from the Obama administration arrived Wednesday in Damascus.

Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki will make his own trip to Syria next week to discuss security, the government said, calling the issue an internal Iraqi affair. U.S. and Iraqi officials have long been concerned about the infiltration of foreign fighters across the Syrian border.

"It is not the duty of the American delegation to negotiate on behalf of Iraq," spokesman Ali al-Dabbagh told The Associated Press. "It is the Iraqi government that will directly negotiate on security with Syria."

The remarks underscored emerging strains in the relationship between the Iraqis and the Americans as the balance of power shifts with the impending withdrawal of U.S. forces by the end of 2011. U.S. combat forces already turned over urban security to Iraqi forces on June 30, focusing their efforts on the borders and rural areas.

U.S. officials dismissed concerns about a rift over this week's talks in Damascus, which also were expected to deal with prospects for Mideast peace-making.

"One of the issues that we continue to discuss with Syria is its efforts in terms of taking care of border issues on the Syrian side of the border," State Department spokesman P.J. Crowley said. "We have had concerns, going back a number of years, regarding the infiltration of foreign influences from the region through Syria into Iraq."

And, Crowley said, Iraq benefits from the effort to deal with the problem.

The mostly military delegation includes Frederic Hof, an assistant to George Mitchell, a former Senate Democratic leader who oversees U.S. Mideast peacemaking efforts. An earlier round of talks was held in June. Hof has been rumored to be in line for nomination as U.S. ambassador to Damascus. The post has been vacant for four years.

The talks are part of an acceleration of U.S. engagement with the Arab world and U.S. hopes that Syria can play a constructive role.

But Crowley said Tuesday that the infiltration of foreign fighters from Syria into Iraq would be "a significant topic of discussion."

U.S. and Iraqi officials have sought to shut down Sunni extremist networks that smuggle weapons and fighters through Iraq's northern desert to Mosul, where al-Qaida and other Sunni insurgents remain active.

American special forces staged a cross-border raid in October that Washington said killed the al-Qaida-linked head of a Syrian network that smuggled fighters, weapons and cash into Iraq. The operation outraged Syria, which claimed only civilians were killed.

The some 130,000

remaining U.S. troops face new limits on their actions in Iraq under a security pact that took effect on Jan. 1, and the Iraqi government has increasingly been asserting its sovereignty and reaching out to neighboring countries.

Al-Maliki's trip comes as violence has risen over the past week with a series of devastating bombings that have killed more than 120 people.

Gunmen also assassinated a senior Iraqi police officer late Tuesday as he was leaving a funeral in his hometown near Mosul, authorities said.

Brig. Gen. Abdul-Hamid Khalaf, a 55-year-old father of three, was an army officer under Saddam Hussein's regime but joined the police force amid efforts to rebuild the Iraqi security forces following the 2003 U.S. invasion.

He was a provincial police spokesman from 2005 to 2007, when he was promoted to be the deputy head of emergency battalions, and had survived at least one other attempt on his life.

AROUND THE WORLD

Magnitude 6.5 quake hits off east coast of Japan

TOKYO — The Japan Meteorological Agency says a magnitude-6.5 earthquake hit off the country's eastern coast.

The agency says the quake occurred off the coast of Hachijo, a small island off the coast of the country.

There were no immediate reports of injuries or damage.

The agency said there was no danger of a tsunami.

Ship reports mystery attack, sails through Channel, disappears reported it had been attacked in waters off Sweden. Then it sailed with no apparent problems through one of the world's busiest shipping lanes. And then it disappeared.

LONDON — First the ship

The Arctic Sea, a Maltese-flagged cargo ship, was supposed to make port in Algeria with its cargo of timber on Aug. 4. More than a week later, there's no sign of the ship or its Russian crew.

Piracy has exploded off the coast of lawless Somalia — but could this be an almost unheard of case of sea banditry in European waters?

"If this is a criminal act, it appears to be following a new business model," Marine intelligence expert Graeme Gibbon-Brooks told Sky News on Wednesday.

Russian President Dmitry Medvedev ordered the country's defense minister on Wednesday to take "all necessary measures" to find the missing cargo ship and, if necessary, to free its crew, the Kremlin said. Wives and other relatives of the crew members issued an appeal to the Russian government to carry out a full-scale rescue mission, using all of Russia's special services.

The mystery began on July 24, when the 15 crew members of the Arctic Sea said they were tied up and beaten by a group of up to 10 men who boarded the ship off the Swedish island of Oland. The masked men identified themselves as police officers — but Swedish police said they hadn't been searching ships in that area.

London police make arrest in jewelry heist

LONDON — Police said Wednesday they have arrested a suspect in connection with a daring daytime heist that netted $65 million worth of jewelry from a prominent London diamond merchant last week.

Police said the 50-year-old man, who was subsequently released on bail, is not one of two dapper dressers captured in security camera footage released by Scotland Yard on Tuesday. The footage showed two men in smart suits being let into Graff Diamonds flagship store, where police say they produced guns, briefly took a member of staff hostage and escaped in a series of getaway cars across central London.

Police believe at least two others helped the pair escape. No one was hurt in the robbery, one of the biggest in British history.

Woman barred from pool for donning 'burquini' swim suit

PARIS — A Muslim woman garbed in a head-to-toe swimsuit — dubbed a "burquini" — may have opened a new chapter in France's tussle between religious practices and its stern secular code.

Officials insisted Wednesday they banned the woman's use of the Islam-friendly suit because of France's pool hygiene standards — not out of hostility to overtly Muslim garb.

Under the policy, swimmers are not allowed in pools with baggy clothing, including surfer-style shorts. Only figure-hugging suits are permitted.

Nonetheless the woman, a 35-year-old convert to Islam identified only as Carole, complained of religious discrimination after trying to go swimming in a "burquini," a full-body swimsuit, in the town of Emerainville, south-east of Paris.

She was quoted as telling the daily Le Parisien newspaper that she had bought the burquini after deciding "it would allow me the pleasure of bathing without showing too much of myself, as Islam recommends."

Our cavalier attitude about immunizations is dangerous

Health experts say chances are growing that Idaho will have a bad experience with swine flu, perhaps as early as fall, after schools open.

The federal government has purchased enough swine flu vaccine to inoculate every man, woman and child in America, but it's still in the pipeline. And it's not yet clear whether a single dose will be enough, or if a second shot will be needed.

What is apparent is that children six months and older and young adults ages 19-24 will be a priority, whenever the vaccine arrives. And therein lies a concern.

Idaho is the most vaccination-phobic state in America. Immunization rates for young children are 57.6 percent, compared to a national average of 77.2 percent.

So what happens if Idahoans are as nonchalant about protecting themselves and their families from swine flu as they are about shielding children from measles and whopping cough?

That's a real possibility.

When Department of Health and Welfare's budget cuts went into effect in July, some health care providers got out of the vaccination business altogether. Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter wisely decided to use $2.1 million from one of the state's "rainy-day" funds to restore the immunization program, which will be a boon in protecting kids from childhood diseases.

But swine flu immunizations are a different matter.

For starters, the vaccine is going to arrive later rather than sooner — well after the flu season has begun. Swine flu may have a foothold by then.

The iron law of infectious diseases is that the fewer people who are vaccinated, the greater the risk to the population as a whole.

That sorts badly with the philosophy of many Idaho parents that there's something sinister about vaccines — despite overwhelming scientific evidence to the contrary — and immunizing kids is none of the government's business.

In fact it is the government's business because one of its core responsibilities is protecting citizens from harm.

A tragedy — and that's what a swine flu epidemic in Idaho would be — would certainly change attitudes about the importance of immunization.

But does it really have to come to that?

Our view: It's bad enough that Idaho has the lowest immunization rate for younger children in the nation. What happens if Idahoans blow off swine flu vaccinations as well?

What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

WASHINGTON — You may recall the seventh rule of "Fight Club": Fights will go on as long as they have to.

In this summer of our discontent, fights are spreading like mountain wildfires — from a town hall in Lebanon, Pa., to one in Kinshasa, Congo. Never before have we had so many tools to learn and to communicate. Yet the art of talking, listening and ascertaining the truth seems more elusive than ever in this Internet and cable age, lost in a bitter stream of blather and misinformation.

The postpartisan, postracial, post-Clinton-dysfunction world that Barack Obama was supposed to usher in when he hit town on his white charger, with turtle doves tweeting, has vanished.

Hillary's KO in the Congo on Monday made the covers of both New York tabloids. Using tough hand gestures not seen since "The Sopranos" went off HBO, Hillary snapped back at an African college student who asked about the growing influence of China on Africa and then, according to the translator, wanted to know: "What does Mr. Clinton think?"

It turned out that the student was trying to ask how Obama felt about it. But before he was able to clarify, the secretary of state flared: "Wait, you want me to tell you what my husband thinks? My husband is not the secretary of state. I am."

This raw, competitive response showed that the experiment in using the Clintons as a tandem team on diplomacy may not be going as smoothly as we had hoped; once more, as with health care, the conjugal psychodrama drags down the positive contribution the couple can make on policy.

At Tuesday's State Department briefing, Assistant Secretary P.J. Crowley explained that Hillary was particularly irritated to feel overshadowed by men in Africa, where she is pushing her "abiding theme" of "empowering women."

Nice try, P.J. But we all know Hillary could just as well have made the same comment in Paris. (And looking unhinged about your marriage on an international stage hardly empowers women.) She may have been steamed about Bill celebrating his upcoming 63rd birthday in Las Vegas with his posse. The Times' Adam Nagourney irritated Clinton Inc. when he reported that Bill went to the pricey Craftsteak restaurant at the MGM Grand Hotel Monday night with Hollywood moguls Steve Bing and Haim Saban, and former advisers Terry McAuliffe and Paul Begala, among others.

Another rule of "Fight Club," as Brad Pitt explained, is: When someone yells "stop" or goes limp, the fight is over. Unfortunately for Arlen Specter and Claire McCaskill, that rule didn't apply at their donnybros on health care on Tuesday. The senators were punching bags for audience members irate about everything from the trillions in debt and illegal immigrants to term limits and toilet paper.

As Katy Abram told Fox News after passionately confronting Specter: "I know that years down the road, I don't want my children coming to me and asking me, 'Mom, why didn't you do anything? Why do we have to wait in line for, I don't know, toilet paper or anything?'"

Besides the chilling prospect of 21st-century America morphing into a Cold War state there are also delusional fears about the government tapping bank accounts and convening "death panels," as Sarah Palin dubbed them, to exploit the cost-saving potential of euthanizing the old and disabled.

At his more placid town hall in Portsmouth, N.H., on Tuesday, the president had to explain that he did not intend to "pull the plug on grandma." He said that the specter of death panels had spun out of a proposal from a Republican, Sen. Johnny Isakson of Georgia, who has long espoused helping Medicare patients learn about options for care at the end of their lives. In an interview with The Washington Post on Monday, Isakson diagnosed Palin's interpretation of his suggestion as "nuts."

The young grass-roots army that swept Obama into office has yet to mobilize now that the fight is about something complicated rather than a charismatic hope-monger. No, they can't?

Instead of a multicultural tableau of beaming young idealists on screen, we see ugly scenes of mostly older and white malcontents, disrupting forums where others have come to actually learn something. Instead of hope, we get swastikas, death threats and T-shirts proclaiming "Proud Member of the Mob."

Obama has proven quicksilver instincts, but not in this case. You would think that a politician schooled in community organizing and the foul balls of a presidential campaign would be ready to squash this kind of nuttiness. Instead, the president's overconfident Harvard Law Review side, expecting a high-minded debate, prevailed.

He knows how to rise to the occasion, even when others are in the dirt. But he may be running out of time.

Meet Barack Obama, champion of the status quo

— President Obama, June 13

WASHINGTON — One of the bewildering ironies of the health care debate is that President Obama claims to be attacking the status quo when he's actually embracing it. Ever since Congress created Medicare and Medicaid in 1965, health politics has followed a simple logic: Expand benefits and talk about controlling costs. That's the status quo, and Obama faithfully adheres to it. While denouncing skyrocketing health spending, he would increase it by extending government health insurance to millions more Americans.

Just why this approach is perennially popular is no secret. Health care is viewed as a "right." Promoting it seems "moral." Cost controls suggest dreaded "rationing." So there's a powerful bias toward expansion.

History is unambiguous. Originally, Medicare covered only the 65-and-over population. In 1972, Congress added the disabled, now about 15 percent of beneficiaries, notes Diane Rowland of the Kaiser Family Foundation. It also covered dialysis for kidney failure. In 2003, Congress created a drug benefit. Along the way, other services (hospice care, mammograms) were added.

Medicaid — the federal-state program for the poor — is the same story, says Rowland. Initially, it covered mainly people on welfare, as defined by states. Gradually, eligibility broadened. Now, children 6 to 18 in households under the poverty line ($22,050 for a family of four) get it.

Congress also set higher limits (133 percent of the poverty line) for pregnant women and children under 6. In 1997, Congress created the Children's Health Insurance Program to expand coverage further.

Meanwhile, open-ended reimbursement by government and private insurance has ballooned health spending despite repeated pledges to "contain" costs. For example, health payments for individuals rose from less than 1 percent of federal spending in 1965 to 23 percent in 2008.

Obama would perpetuate this system. No president has spoken more forcefully about the need to control costs. Failure, he's argued, would expand federal budget deficits, raise out-of-pocket health costs and squeeze take-home pay (more compensation would go to insurance). All true.

But Obama's program would do little to reduce costs and would increase spending by expanding subsidized insurance. The House legislation would cut the uninsured by 37 million by 2018, estimates the Congressional Budget Office. The uninsured get care now; with insurance they'd get more.

Just imagine what the health care debate would be like if it truly focused on controlling spending.

For starters, we wouldn't be arguing about how to "pay for" the $1 trillion or so of costs over a decade of Obama's "reform." Congress wouldn't create new benefits until it had disciplined the old. We'd be debating how to trim the $10 trillion, as estimated by CBO, that Medicare and Medicaid will spend over the next decade, without impairing Americans' health. We'd use Medicare as a vehicle of change. Accounting for more than one-fifth of all health spending, its costs per beneficiary, now about $12,000, rose at a dizzying average annual rate of 8.5 percent a year from 1970 to 2007. (True, that's lower than private insurers' rate at 9.7 percent. But the gap may partly reflect cost-shifting to private payers.

reimbursement rates, hospitals and doctors raise charges to private insurers.)

Medicare is so big that shifts in its practices spread to the rest of the delivery system. But changing Medicare, and through it one-sixth of the U.S. economy, requires more than a few demonstration projects of "comparative outcomes" research or economic incentives. What's needed is a fundamental restructuring. Fee-for-service medicine — Medicare's dominant form of payment — is outmoded. The more doctors and hospitals do, the more they get paid. This promotes fragmentation and the overuse of services.

We should move toward coordinated care networks that take responsibility for their members' medical needs in return for fixed annual payments (called "capitation"). One approach is through vouchers; Medicare recipients would receive a fixed amount and shop for networks with the lowest cost and highest quality. Alternatively, government could shift its reimbursement of hospitals and doctors to "capitation" payments. Limited dollars would, in theory, force improvements in efficiency and effective care.

Here's what Idaho newspapers are saying about ...

Idaho Mountain Express, Ketchum

Local leaders need to pay close attention to the health of events that draw large numbers of people to the Sun Valley area lest they harm the area's economy.

Take the Hailey Rodeo. It's a keystone event that ... has generated business from visitors for decades.

The rodeo grounds sit on a piece of land on Hailey's Main Street. The city itself owns the property.

Before last fall, bloated real estate values made it appear that the property was underutilized relative to its value on the open market.

That changed with the Panic of 2008 — last fall's nationwide economic crash precipitated by a crisis in mortgage and exotic financial investment packages, not to mention outright fraud.

Neither the nation nor the Sun Valley area has sorted out all that has changed, but it's certain that land values will once again become tied strongly to the real and ongoing income they produce.

Hailey is reviewing a plan to retain the rodeo arena while opening the property to other uses. Rodeo organizers, all volunteers, are criticizing the plan and claiming that it could jeopardize the rodeo.

Not only would that be a shame in terms of Western heritage, it could seriously damage one of the biggest business weeks of the summer in the entire Sun Valley area.

... the rodeo attracts thousands of people and generates serious income for the entire valley.

No one should take that for granted.

Everything changed last fall, and it's imperative that city leaders ... remember that the Sun Valley area's amenities — skiing and boarding, golf, tennis, swimming, arts and events of all kinds, great food — exist because of money spent by visitors to the area.

The Sun Valley area has seen fully half of its economy devastated by the crash in real estate and construction ...

No one expects the boom in construction of second homes to come back any time soon. That means the Sun Valley area must look to tourism as the economic generator that will get it through to better days.

... The Sun Valley area simply can't afford to erode tourism or to bank on old bets gone bust.

Idaho Statesman, Boise

Congenial and cajoling, Gov. Butch Otter turned on the charm (last week).

Addressing his hand-selected task force of 15 politicians and business leaders, Otter praised the group for recognizing the value of Idaho's transportation infrastructure. He expressed hope that the group would come up with a long-term funding plan during its assignment, which ends with a final report due Dec. 1, 2010.

If the group wants to get something done sooner, that's fine by Otter. "We don't have to wait 18 months to start moving forward," he said.

Otter is ever the optimist ... The political reality hasn't changed since May, however. The history is even longer than the lofty title Otter has attached to his group: the Task Force on Modernizing Transportation Funding in Idaho.

Sen. Chuck Winder, a Boise Republican and task force member, acknowledged the history. He said the group needs to address some of the "ghosts" swirling around the transportation debate. The committee should take a hard look at how the Idaho Transportation Department spends its money, and whether the Connecting Idaho highway financing plan has saddled the state with excessive debt — even if the research cuts into its schedule ...

We would hope that this task force is ready to make the tough recommendations, without regard for political expediency. It's time for solutions, not stalling. But we'll believe that when we see it ...

... home sweet where?

Lewiston Tribune

Playing out in Boise is a judicial spat over a law that is both vague and unnecessary. It says 2nd District Judge John Bradbury must reside in Idaho County.

What does that mean? Bradbury says he complies by having a home in Grangeville. For purposes of his homeowner's exemption, it is listed as his primary residence. Bradbury votes there.

But much of the time, the judge stays in Lewiston. The Idaho Judicial Council says Bradbury should move full time to Grangeville or leave the bench.

"Judge Bradbury is either residing in the county or he isn't," judicial council attorney Keith Roark told the Idaho Supreme Court ...

Idaho's Constitution requires only that a judge live within the judicial district that elected him ... Beginning in 1967, the Legislature tied things down even tighter. But only for some.

While lawmakers give Bradbury one choice of county residence ... In the 5th District, one judge can live in either Gooding or Jerome county.

Nor is there much reason to give Idaho County its own judge. Among the three counties where Bradbury works — Clearwater, Idaho and Lewis — Idaho County is responsible only for about half of the civil filings, 44 percent of the juvenile proceedings and 27.6 percent of the new criminal cases.

If it's a local judge law-makers want, they already have it. Every county in this state gets to pick at least one magistrate, who is the on-call judge for matters such as search and arrest warrants or protective orders.

Is this how the judiciary should be spending its time? Whatever the Idaho Supreme Court decides, it's going to lead to another round of litigation in the federal courts.

Meanwhile it looks like the people wearing the black robes have gotten themselves into a personal feud. Let politics settle this. If voters don't like Bradbury commuting from Lewiston to Grangeville or Orofino, they can boot him out at the next election ...

Why health care works for our neighbor to the north

Universal health insurance is on the American policy agenda for the fifth time since World War II. In the 1960s, the U.S. chose public coverage for only the elderly and the very poor, while Canada opted for a universal program for hospitals and physicians' services.

As a policy analyst, I know there are lessons to be learned from studying the effect of different approaches in similar jurisdictions. But, as a Canadian with lots of American friends and relatives, I am saddened that Americans seem incapable of learning them.

All Canadians have insurance for hospital and physician services. There are no deductibles or co-pays. Most provinces also provide coverage for programs for home care, long-term care, pharmaceuticals and durable medical equipment, although there are co-pays.

On the U.S. side, 46 million people have no insurance, millions are underinsured and health-care bills bankrupt more than 1 million Americans every year.

Lesson No. 1: A single-

payer system would eliminate most U.S. coverage problems.

On costs, Canada spends 10 percent of its economy on health care; the U.S. spends 16 percent. The extra 6 percent of GDP amounts to more than $800 billion per year. The spending gap between the two nations is almost entirely because of higher overhead. Canadians don't need thousands of actuaries to set premiums or thousands of lawyers to deny care. And providers and suppliers can't charge as much when they have to deal with a single payer.

Lessons No. 2 and 3: Single-payer systems reduce duplicative administrative costs and can negotiate lower prices.

Because most of the difference in spending is for nonpatient care, Canadians actually get more of most services. We see the doctor more often and take more drugs. And we now live nearly three years longer, and our infant mortality is 20 percent lower.

Lesson No. 4: Single-payer plans can deliver the goods because their funding goes to services, not overhead.

The Canadian system does have its problems, and these also provide important lessons. Canadians needing urgent care get immediate treatment. But we do wait too long for much elective care, including appointments with family doctors and specialists and selected surgical procedures. We also do a poor job managing chronic disease.

However, according to the New York-based Commonwealth Fund, both the American and the Canadian systems fare badly in these areas. In fact, an April U.S. Government Accountability Office report noted that U.S. emergency room wait times have increased, and patients who should be seen immediately are now waiting an average of 28 minutes. The GAO has also raised concerns about two- to four-month waiting times for mammograms.

On closer examination, most of these problems have little to do with public insurance or even overall resources. These problems are largely caused by our shared politico-cultural barriers to quality of care.

In 19th-century North America, doctors waged a campaign against quacks and attained a legislative monopoly on medical practice. In return, they promised to set and enforce standards of practice. By and large, it didn't happen. And perverse incentives like fee-for-service make things even worse.

Using techniques like those championed by the Boston-based Institute for Healthcare Improvement, providers can eliminate most delays. In Hamilton, Ontario, 17 psychiatrists have linked up with 100 family doctors and 80 social workers to offer some of the world's best access to mental-health services. And in Toronto, simple process improvements mean you can now get your hip assessed in one week and get a new one, if you need it, within a month.

Lesson No. 5: Canadian health-care delivery problems have nothing to do with our single-payer system and can be fixed by re-engineering for quality.

U.S. health policy would be miles ahead if policy-makers could learn these lessons. But they seem less interested in Canada's, or any other nation's, experience than ever. Why?

American democracy runs on money. Pharmaceutical and insurance companies have the fuel. Analysts see hundreds of billions of premiums wasted on overhead that could fund care for the uninsured. But industry executives and shareholders see bonuses and dividends.

Compounding the confusion is traditional American ignorance of what happens north of the border, which makes it easy to mislead people. The U.S. media, legislators and even presidents have claimed that our "socialized" system doesn't let us choose our own doctors. In fact, Canadians have free choice of physicians. It's Americans these days who are restricted to "in-plan" doctors.

Michael Rachlis is a physician, health policy analyst and author in Toronto. He wrote this commentary for the Los Angeles Times.

Three-strikes laws may not mean you're out

By Kim Murphy
Los Angeles Times

SEATTLE — Stevan Dozier was 25 when he punched a woman in the face to snatch her purse, another episode in the cash-for-crack crime wave that plagued America's big cities during the 1980s.

Over the next eight years, he would be arrested three more times for the same thing. But just before his last conviction, Washington in 1993 became the first state to pass a law requiring criminals with three serious felony convictions to spend the rest of their lives in prison. California followed the next year, and 24 other states now have similar laws.

Dozier, who never caused a serious injury or used a weapon, disappeared behind bars without the possibility of parole — along with more than 290 other Washington inmates convicted under the state's tough three-strikes law.

"I went through a period of depression going into Walla Walla State Penitentiary," said Dozier, 47.

MIKE KANE/For the Los Angeles Times Stevan Dozier is Washington's first three-strikes offender to be granted clemency. He had served 15 years of a life sentence without the possibility of parole. In prison, he joined drug recovery programs and turned his life around.

"I had been to jail before, but I always went in with release dates. Your vision is, 'I just gotta make it to this date.' But then, there was no date."

That was before the district attorney's office that sent him to prison, the conservative talk radio host who coauthored Washington's law, and the judge who sentenced him all came to agree that despite the public's demand to keep career criminals behind bars, three strikes shouldn't always mean never getting out.

In May, Gov. Chris Gregoire, a Democrat, signed Dozier's appeal for clemency, making him the first three-strikes lifer in the nation to be pardoned.

The state's Pardons and Clemency Board in June recommended freeing Al-Kareem Shadeed, 39, and Michael Bridges, 47, who both had been sentenced to life without parole in the mid-1990s for stealing wallets.

"My sentence is the same as the Green River killer's. ... And other people who have viciously murdered and raped women and children are getting out of prison while I never will," Shadeed wrote in January on the liberal Washblog.

Fifteen years after voters and legislatures across the country began embracing the three-strikes concept, many states apply those laws more sparingly. Prosecutors and judges often use the discretion provided them to avoid charging a defendant whose past consists of minor robberies or assault convictions with a third-strike offense.

Now Washington is taking the extra step of reviewing the cases of some nonviolent three-strikes prisoners and moving to release those, like Dozier, who probably would not face such a severe punishment today.

"We're talking about the kinds of offenses that if you were to poll the average person, they'd say, 'Yeah, it's bad, but is it deserving of mandatory life in prison without parole?'" said Jennifer Walsh, a political science professor at California's Azusa Pacific University, who has studied three-strikes laws across the country.

"I think that's where you start to get some deviance from what was thought of as being appropriate during the height of the crime wave, which was 1992-93 for most states, and today with our historic low crime rates."

In California, where the law is less harsh than in Washington, two-strikers get a doubled penalty, and three-strikers face 25 years to life, with parole. More than 40,800 of the state's 170,000 inmates are behind bars under second- or third-strike provisions, with more than 8,400 of them sentenced to the full 25 years to life.

MOUNTAIN OF DEBT

Social Security crisis looms

By Tom Rumm
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — As Congress agonizes over health care, an even more daunting and dangerous challenge is bearing down: how to shore up Social Security to keep it from burying the nation ever deeper in debt.

What to do about mushrooming government payments as millions of baby boomers retire? How about a giant federal Ponzi scheme? That might work for a while.

But wait. That's pretty much the current system. Social Security takes contributions from today's workers and uses them to pay the old-age benefits that were promised to retirees. But there are serious concerns how long that can last.

President Obama has said he'll tackle Social Security and related "entitlement" programs when the health care overhaul is resolved. But the anger and intensity of that debate could complicate his effort.

Failure on health care could make it harder, if not impossible, for Obama to successfully tackle overhauling Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid.

The raucous health care debate is "a bad omen for any change in social policy," said Ross Baker, a political scientist at Rutgers University who's also a former Senate aide.

"People seem to be very fearful of tampering with what already exists. It may be a simple reaction to the uncertainty that's been introduced into people's lives by the recession," Baker said.

Still, he said, if not Obama, "some unfortunate president down the road is going to have to deal with it when the crisis strikes."

Although calling Social Security a Ponzi scheme may be a bit of a stretch, there is one clear similarity.

As in a Ponzi scheme, the concept works fine at first. So long as there are more new "investors" pumping money into the system to pay off the earlier ones, everyone is happy. But at some point not enough new money is coming in and the scheme collapses.

"We had a remarkable 25-year run in terms of the economy. We had this wonderful demographic holiday where the baby boomers were moving through their main earning years," said William Gale, co-director of the nonpartisan Tax Policy Center, a joint venture of the Brookings Institution and the Urban Institute.

"Now, the economy's in tatters, the boomers are ready to retire, the world is sick of our debt. The problems are much bigger," said Gale.

With baby boomers working, Social Security — the biggest social spending program — has produced a surplus that has helped finance the rest of the government for the past quarter century. But that will change within a decade.

Trustees of the system recently said that in 2016 — a year earlier than previously forecast — money paid out in benefits will start exceeding the tax dollars flowing in. With no changes, Social Security will be completely depleted in 2037, the trustees said.

Medicare is in even worse shape. It's been paying out more than it takes in since last year and is projected to go insolvent in 2017.

While some economists argue that such doomsday calculations ignore a growing propensity of older Americans to work beyond traditional retirement age, the day of reckoning is fast approaching under any timetable.

Fed signals vote of confidence in economy

Reserve board leaves key interest rate unchanged

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve delivered a vote of confidence in the recovery on Wednesday, declaring that economic activity is “leveling out.” The central bank also signaled that it would end one of its programs aimed at propping up the economy, and kept a key lending rate at a record low.

The Fed said it would gradually slow the pace of its program to buy $300 billion worth of Treasury securities so that it will shut down at the end of October, versus September. It has bought $253 billion of the securities so far.

The program is aimed at lowering rates on mortgages and other consumer debt, a move to spur Americans to spend more. But its effectiveness has been questioned by some on Wall Street and on Capitol Hill who worry that the program makes it look like the Fed is printing money to pay for Uncle Sam’s exploding deficits.

With the economy on the mend, the Fed held a key banking lending rate at a record low near zero and again pledged to keep it there for “an extended period.”

Economists predict the Fed will leave its target range for its banking lending rate between zero and 0.25 percent through the rest of this year. The rationale: super-low lending will spur Americans to spend more, which would support the economy.

If the Fed holds its key rate steady, that means commercial banks’ prime lending rate, used to peg rates on home equity loans, certain credit cards and other consumer loans, will stay around 3.25 percent, the lowest in decades.

It was the first Fed meeting since the economy has flashed more definitive signs of turning a corner.

In an upgraded assessment, the Fed said the economic barometers since its last meeting in late June suggest that “economic activity is leveling out.” Conditions in financial markets also “have improved further” in recent weeks, the Fed said.

Small business index revised upward

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

Economists at Zions Bank revised the Idaho Small Business Index upward in July after the U.S. Commerce Department reported that Gross Domestic Product was better than expected in the second quarter of '09.

The Zions Bank Small Business Index for Idaho registered 77.9 in July 2009, up from a revised 72.8 in June 2009, according to a report released on Wednesday.

“While this is good news, it does not mean that all of our problems with housing, foreclosures, and bankruptcies are now behind us,” said

Keep good employees by offering ‘alternative’ compensation and benefits

Family business owners understand the need to reward their non-family workers. After all, in many cases, these employees make up the lion’s share of a company’s workforce. But it can be difficult to keep them motivated when family employees are also part owners.

BUSINESS INSIGHT

Scott Plev

If you don’t want to give ownership interests to non-family members, consider offering them “alternative” compensation and benefits.

The following are some alternatives for non-family workers:

Twin Falls entrepreneur delivers his own brand of CRACK CAFFEINE

MEAGAN THOMPSON/Times-News

Jake Schumacher’s delivery business Crack Coffee delivers a daily dose of caffeine. Schumacher rigged his bicycle with wooden panels that support baskets for easy beverage and food transport.

Former furniture maker peddles coffee to downtown businesses

Want your own cup?

Jake Schumacher is a self-described peddler of addictive substances: Particularly, iced white mochas that are delivered via bicycle to offices in downtown Twin Falls.

The young entrepreneur is hard to miss in the early hours of the morning on his cruiser with a white apron and flat cap.

The former custom furniture maker launched Crack Coffee in early August, delivering coffee and baked goods to a loyal following of small business owners and office workers who are unable to leave their confines.

Schumacher got the idea while visiting Portland, Ore., where he said bicycle delivery was as prevalent as vehicle couriers.

“After I saw it, I just bootstrapped my own business,” he said.

Schumacher said he first approached Jayne Fischer, owner of The Cookie Basket in downtown Twin Falls, to propose a business partnership.

“I didn’t know anything about

June trade deficit rises to $27B, imports increase

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The U.S. trade deficit edged up slightly in June as imports rose for the first time in 11 months, another sign that the worst recession since World War II is beginning to loosen its grip on the economy.

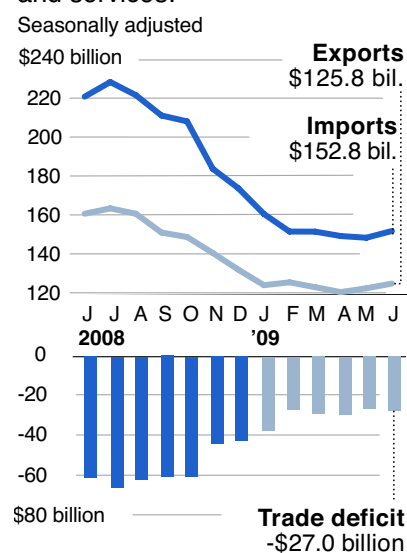

The Commerce Department said Wednesday that the deficit rose 4 percent to $27 billion, from May’s $26 billion. The May imbalance had been the lowest deficit in nearly a decade.

While the politically sensitive deficit with China widened in June, the imbalance so far this year is running

Idaho second quarter exports rise

Semiconductors and machinery lead state exports

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

Export sales by Idaho companies increased in the second quarter of 2009, totaling more than $877 million for April through June.

Foreign sales of Idaho products for the three-month period were up nearly 11 percent compared to the previous three months, according to Idaho Department of Commerce.

Nationally, exports for the same period rose 1.9 percent.

Significant declines in exports during the first quarter means Idaho still is

The Dow rose 120.16, or 1.3 percent, to 9,361.61. The Standard & Poor's 500 index rose 11.46, or 1.2 percent, to 1,005.81, while the Nasdaq composite index gained 28.99, or 1.5 percent, to 1,998.72.

Rising stocks outpaced those that fell 5-to-2 on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume came to a light 1.2 billion shares, flat with Tuesday. Light volume can skew price moves but is typical of late summer when many traders take vacations.

The dollar was mixed against other major currencies, while gold rose. Benchmark crude rose 71 cents to settle at $70.16 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

The Russell 2000 index of smaller companies rose 10.05, or 1.8 percent, to 572.17.

Overseas, Britain's FTSE 100 rose 1 percent, Germany's DAX index added 1.2 percent, and France's CAC-40 jumped 1.5 percent. Japan's Nikkei stock average fell 1.4 percent.

economists with Zions Bank in a written statement. "But a very likely return to positive U.S. economic growth this quarter is a precondition to dealing with all of the serious issues noted above."

Second quarter economic data released by the U.S. Commerce Department showed that the national economy did contract, however, the 1.0 percent real - after inflation - annual rate of decline was much lower than the revised 6.4 percent real annual rate of decline during the first quarter of 2009, the worst quarter in 27 years.

The U.S. Commerce Department said it expects U.S. GDP - the broadest measure of all goods produced and services provided in the American economy - will turn positive during the third quarter, with growth continuing at a slow but steady pace.

U.S. economic performance is a component of the Idaho Small Business Index.

Justice Sotomayor celebrated at White House

By Jennifer Loven
 Associated Press writer

President Obama applauds new Supreme Court Justice Sonia Sotomayor at the start of a reception in the East Room of The White House in Washington, Wednesday.

WASHINGTON — President Obama threw a big White House party Wednesday to celebrate Sonia Sotomayor as the Supreme Court's first Latino justice — and to publicly savor the victory sure to earn him points with politically potent Hispanics.

The event — televised remarks from Obama and Sotomayor followed by a private reception for a few hundred supporters — was packed with Sotomayor's family and friends, lawmakers, issue advocates, Hispanic community leaders and two of her fellow Supreme Court justices. The jubilation of those who helped shepherd her confirmation through the Senate gave the event a pep-rally feel amid the stately grandeur of the East Room.

The Supreme Court is a separate branch of government that frequently rules on cases critical to the administration in power. Still, because presidents make the nominations — and because Supreme Court confirmations have become taxing, politically hard-fought affairs — it is common for the White House to stage celebrations once the nominees are confirmed.

Typically, though not always, justices have two swearing-in ceremonies, an intimate judicial oath at the Supreme Court followed by a pomp-filled White House event in which the new justice takes the constitutional oath administered to all federal employees. This was true for Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. and Justices Samuel Alito, Stephen Breyer, Clarence Thomas and Ruth Bader Ginsberg.

During Wednesday's celebration, both Obama and Sotomayor heavily emphasized the history being made now that she has joined the court, its first Hispanic and just the third woman in its 220-year history.

The lines from both about Sotomayor's unlikely rise, from a poor and difficult childhood in public housing projects in the South Bronx to an Ivy League education and distinguished legal career, were huge crowd-pleasers. Nearly every time either mentioned the inspirational qualities of Sotomayor's nomination by Obama in May and confirmation by the Senate last Thursday, people clapped, cheered and jumped to their feet.

Obama's words that Sotomayor's move brings the nation "another step to the more perfect union that we all seek" were welcome in the room. They were also a reminder to Latino voters around the nation that Obama, the country's first black president, is the one who at last put one of their own in one of America's most prestigious jobs.

"While this is Justice Sotomayor's achievement, the result of her ability and determination, this moment is not just about her. It's about every child who will grow up thinking to him or herself, 'If Sonia Sotomayor can make it, then maybe I can, too,'" Obama said. "This is a great day for America."

Hispanics are heavily courted by both political parties. Despite recent gains by Republicans among Latino voters, polls show they went heavily for Obama over Republican John McCain in the last election. Sotomayor was confirmed by a 68-31 Senate vote, with Democrats warning Republicans voting against her that they risked a backlash from Hispanic voters.

Sotomayor spoke emotionally about her gratitude to family and country for making her achievement possible.

"It is our nation's faith in a more perfect union that allows a Puerto Rican girl from the Bronx to stand here now," she said. "I am struck again today by the wonder of my own life and the life we in America are so privileged to lead."

Sotomayor has no time to rest. The court's rookie and second-youngest justice, she must move to Washington from New York and immediately get to work studying and hiring clerks to be ready when the court hears arguments beginning Sept. 9 in an important and complicated case about money in campaigns.

The entire court will convene the day before for a formal ceremony to welcome Sotomayor. The new court term formally begins Oct. 5.

Crow Chief receives Medal of Freedom

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 95-year-old Crow Indian who went into battle wearing war paint under his World War II uniform has been awarded the nation's highest civilian honor.

Wearing a traditional headdress, Joe Medicine Crow on Wednesday received the Presidential Medal of Freedom at the White House. The award was clasped around his neck by President Obama.

"Dr. Medicine Crow's life reflects not only the warrior spirit of the Crow people, but America's highest ideals," Obama said as he introduced him and called him "a good man" in the Crow language.

Medicine Crow broke tradition and briefly spoke after Obama gave him the medal, telling the president he was "highly honored" to receive it.

Other recipients this year were Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, physicist Stephen Hawking, retired Arch-bishop Desmond Tutu of South Africa and 12 other actors, athletes, and activists, scientists and humanitarians.

In 1939, Medicine Crow became the first of his tribe to receive a master's degree, in anthropology. He is the oldest member of the Crow and the tribe's sole surviving war chief — an honor bestowed for a series of accomplishments during World War II, including hand-to-hand combat with a German soldier whose life Medicine Crow spared.

IF YOU GO

Great Basin National Park is located about 60 miles east of Ely, Nev. via U.S. Highway 6/50 and Nevada Highways 487 and 488. The park's four campgrounds are on a first-come, first-serve basis and have no hookups or leveled parking sites. The Wheeler Peak Scenic Drive is closed to vehicles and trailers longer than 24 feet. Story and photos by Mike Cothorn

Times-News correspondent

The Great Basin, covering most of Nevada and Utah as well as slivers of Idaho and California, is a monumental piece of arid real estate that often gets little attention. Composed of a seemingly endless series of smaller basins punctuated by interspersed mountain ranges, the expanse has many intriguing qualities besides having no drainage to the sea.

One of the region's crown jewels, Great Basin National Park, offers a fantastic array of geological highlights that range from glacially-sculpted mountains rising above tree lines to underground caverns containing endless formations. Throw in a forest, whose most elderly members measure age not in hundreds of years but thousands, and an outing to the park becomes truly remarkable.

For first-time visitors, stopping at Great Basin National Park's visitors center near the town of Baker provides an excellent opportunity to get a feel for the entire region as well as the park itself. From there a paved road penetrates the high county, quickly climbing 4,000 feet in elevation. Topping out at 10,000 feet above sea level, the road ends at a campground that serves as base camp for several hiking routes.

One of these trails leads to Wheeler Peak, the highest point in Nevada. While this steep, strenuous route requires no specialized skills other than the persistence of putting one foot in front of the other, park brochures and signage advise hikers to take several precautions. Since no water is available on the four-mile trek, carrying an ample water supply is a must. Finishing the hike before afternoon summer thunderstorms begin to build is also a good idea; the exposed ridgeline route offers no protection from lightning strikes.

Basin

For those that summit the 13,063-foot mountain, the spectacular view quickly overshadows the earlier effort. Hikers are rewarded with an excellent vista of the Snake Range in which Wheeler stands. In addition, a vast panorama unfolds eastward to the outer boundaries of ancient Lake Bonneville, evidenced by white playas that shimmer in the lowlands.

A much easier trail leaves the campground in the opposite direction, leading toward a double-dose of fascinating features. The first of these is a scattered bristlecone pine forest that truly places a new perspective on time. An interpretative trail branches off from the main route, making a short loop through these impressive conifers.

Signs inform hikers that the gnarled bristlecones are the oldest living organisms on earth. While Great Basin's ancient relics don't quite hold the title as the oldest anywhere, a marker points out one that is dated at 3,200 years old. Resting one's hand on a living thing that old, while reflecting on its existence, is a truly awe-inspiring experience.

For those returning to the main trail and wanting more, hikers can continue towards the base of Wheeler Peak into a small high valley once sculpted by a gigantic volume of ice. Explorers there can crawl over large mounds of rock ground from the mountain, occasionally stopping to stare at the landscape and imagine past forces of nature. In addition, a small amount of year-round snow and ice held at the bottom of the peak's 1,500-foot sheer face represents Nevada's only current glacier.

But not all of Great Basin National Park's gems are found in the high country. Many visitors come just for the chance to explore Lehman Caves. Park ranger John Manning describes the feature as a "solution" cavity, created when underground limestone was dissolved by a weak acid produced from a mix of carbon dioxide and groundwater.

Even without any knowledge or care about chemistry, the formations now growing inside the cave are easily enjoyed. No two sculptures are alike and are represented by an endless range of fantastical shapes, sizes, textures and colors. Guided tours not only include a tutorial on stalagmites, stalactites, shields and other cave-speak, but also an interesting lesson on the cavern's discovery and historical use.

Whether visitors partake in the underground exploration or head to the high country to become intoxicated by the mountain air and what might be found there, one thing is certain. They'll leave with memories of wonderful sights and experiences, along with a new appreciation for one of the West's largely unknown treasures.

The best biking bags for riding in the great outdoors

Touted as high-performance and eco-friendly, Pacific Outdoor Equipment's new line of bike bags include front and back fender panniers, under-the-seat cases, trunk bags, and other items that clip onto a bike's frame and rack system. They are equipped with waterproof fabrics and roll-top closures. They have airtight welded seams, light-reflecting buckles, and reflective patches for added safety.

The company's Randonneur Series, which includes bags for self-supported adventures, can facilitate a cycling vagabond — and his or her gear — for a multi-day bike trip across country. Pacific Outdoor's One Less Car Series, another line of products, includes urban-styled panniers built for city bike commuters and people who hope to replace their dependency on an automobile for errands in their neighborhood and around town.

GEAR JUNKIE
Stephen Regenold

As an eco bonus, all Pacific Outdoor Equipment (www.pacificoutdoor.com) bike products incorporate renewable and recycled fabrics. The plastic buckles use reclaimed material, and the company offsets the energy used in production and shipping with Green Tags to give its bike bag collection a carbon-neutral footprint, according to company press materials.

I tested Pacific Outdoor Equipment's Rear Fender Panniers, which go for about $230 a pair. Like other bags in the Randonneur Series, they are equipped with a waterproof roll-top closure. A watertight zipper seals a small pocket on front.

The bags are made of welded waterproof nylon fabric. There are interior organizational pockets and straps inside to keep loads compressed toward your bike's rack.

On the bike, the Rear Fender Panniers were a slick system. They are built with left- and right-side specific shapes to provide better heel clearance when you pedal. The interior space — which totals about 2,500 cubic inches for the pair — is ample for multi-day excursions.

The panniers clipped onto my bike rack with no issue. Pacific Outdoor Equipment has made setup a tool-free experience, as there are sturdy plastic clips and a large hook below that which allows you to slide and lock the bike bag into place.

Each pannier weighs about 2 pounds — a very reasonable weight. They ride well on the rack and can function to carry copious loads for long distances on the open road or commuting in a city with cargo in tow.

Walton Lake offers trout serenity

By Mark Morical
The (Bend) Bulletin

WALTON LAKE, Ore. — High in the Ochoco Mountains, Walton Lake sits tucked away among bright green meadows and towering ponderosa pines.

While a longer drive for folks from Bend, Walton Lake is extremely popular among Prineville-area residents. They come to this serene setting to camp, to fish, or to lazily float the lake.

Now is the time to make the trip. The lake was recently stocked with rainbow trout, and they can be active during insect hatches in the evenings, as was the case a few weeks ago.

"We put some trophy fish in there," says Mike Harrington, a fisheries biologist for the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife in Prineville.

"This is the time of year when you're likely to catch several fish, and larger fish."

Harrington says caddis and mayfly imitations are the best bets for fly anglers at Walton Lake. And fly-fishing, he adds, seems to be the most effective method for landing rainbows.

"See if fish are hitting the top, and if not, go sub-surface with woolly buggers and streamers," Harrington says.

Rainbow trout in Walton Lake average 8 to 11 inches in length, and some holdovers and stocked trophy trout are as long as 19 inches, according to Harrington.

Walton Lake offers ample fishing from shore, and a trail circling the lake offers easy access to the water. But a float tube is a good way to cover more water and reach the middle of the lake.

Located about 65 miles northeast of Bend, Walton Lake is small — just 18 acres, with an average depth of 12 feet. Spring-fed Ochoco Creek was dammed in the 1940s, creating the lake, which historically maintains constant water levels.

According to Harrington, anglers who simply tie on a worm will typically catch only brown bullhead (catfish), which were illegally introduced into the lake several years ago.

"They're a huge problem," says Harrington, adding that the ODFW plans this fall to chemically treat Walton Lake and nearby Antelope Flat Reservoir to rid the water bodies of the brown bullhead.

The catfish compete with the rainbow trout for food, seriously harming the rainbow population in the lakes, Harrington explains. The ODFW will treat Walton Lake and Antelope Flat with rotenone, a plant-derived pesticide, sometime in October. The treatment will kill all fish in the lakes, and the ODFW will then restock the waters with rainbow trout in the spring.

"They will be fishable next summer," Harrington says of Walton Lake and Antelope Flat Reservoir. "Rotenone's an organic chemical, which breaks down quickly.

We'll restock both (treated lakes) with catchable rainbow trout; the same number we usually stock them with."

The stocked rainbows, Harrington notes, "will be a lot easier to catch, because they won't be competing with the bullhead."

In 2006, rotenone was used on Diamond Lake, in eastern Douglas County, to rid the popular fishing lake of tui chub. According to angler and ODFW reports, the project was a resounding success, and rainbow trout fishing on Diamond Lake has drastically improved.

Anglers are hoping for the same on Walton Lake and Antelope Flat.

But for now, fishing is still decent in the Ochoco National Forest, and the fish are certainly rising.

On Walton, anglers just need to escape the tubers and campers, tie on the right fly, and cast out onto the small but productive lake.

The rainbows will come. And next spring should be even better.

Alaska anglers get hooked along with salmon

KENAI, Alaska (AP) — Salmon aren't alone in being snagged during this busy summer fishing season in Alaska. Anglers get the hook, too.

Monica Musgrove, a nurse at Central Peninsula Hospital in Soldotna, said emergency room staff have removed 62 hooks from patients since May — including a few through the eyelids and one from the tip of the nose.

And it's likely that many more went to other hospitals or did their own first-aid work.

Musgrove said the hospital also sees people who cut themselves while cleaning their catch and injuries related to weights — such as when an angler catches a hook on the bottom, jerks backward to free it, and winds up getting smacked in the face by a split-shot or sinker.

"The weights are like a bullet when they come out of the water," she said.

For years, the hospital has used two, life-sized display boards of a fisherman and a fisherwoman to show the hooks that are removed each season.

"We always try to keep the hooks, but some people don't want us to," Musgrove said. "They'd rather keep them for souvenirs," Musgrove said.

The boards illustrate that the hands and face are the primary targets for errant hooks.

"With the hands, people sometimes can't take them out themselves because of the tendons, and with the face, I think some people are hesitant to remove them, since they could possibly disfigure themselves," Musgrove said.

Most of the hooking seems to occur when fishermen fail to keep a safe distance from each other, a common problem when sockeye are running at the crowded Russian River.

"When the reds are in, that's when the injuries peak. A week ago we took out five in one day, so I knew the fishing must have been good," she said.

Sometimes, telescopic treats are found by accident

Some of my fondest memories of backyard star gazing are moments of serendipitous discovery, when you stumble onto a target you weren't even looking for.

Last month, at the annual City of Rocks Star Party near Almo, I was scanning the rich star fields of northern Sagittarius, looking for emission nebulae (stellar birth clouds). Sagittarius is packed with interesting nebulae and star clusters, since it lies in the direction of the galactic center.

Because City of Rocks is exceptionally free of light pollution, it affords wonderful opportunities to see targets that are invisible through urban sky glow. I was using the Herrett Center's big 18-inch telescope, which brings in enough light to make faint, subtle targets stand out nicely.

My accidental find, however, was not some faint smudge of light from a distant galaxy or star cluster. Rather, it was a conspicuous absence of stars, forming two black ovals like dark thumb prints staring back at me through the eyepiece. One had a sharp edge; the other was less clearly separated from its starry backdrop. A third, just off to the side, was larger and even less well defined, looking only slightly sparser than its surroundings.

A little post-star party research revealed that the empty ovals were dark nebulae. Rather than a lack of stars, they are actually clouds of opaque interstellar dust, dense enough to absorb the light of the stars beyond. Two of them even have names (B91 and B92), having been cataloged by American astronomer E. E. Barnard in 1919. Together, they form one edge of the so-called "Sagittarius Star Cloud," an apparent dense concentration of stars three times wider than a full moon, but actually a "window" through surrounding dust.

Sagittarius is currently due south, low in the sky, around 10:30 p.m.

Next week: Two crowns in the sky, one north and one south.

Upcoming outdoor events in south-central Idaho

The 4th annual Bucks and Bulls contest, hosted by Intermountain Taxidermy & Worldwide Adventures, Sportsman's Warehouse, Advantage Archery and Rob Green Auto Group, kicks off Saturday at Sportsman's Warehouse in Twin Falls. The contest is open to antelope, mule deer, elk, and white-tailed deer taken in Idaho. Entries can be submitted through Dec. 31.

"We've incorporated more sponsors this year to accommodate its growing popularity," said Jeff Frost of Intermountain Taxidermy. "We have racks that come in from all over the state. This is not just a local contest anymore."

Last year, about 150 racks were submitted in the contest.

For more information about the contest: Frost at 734-9790 or John Howard at 737-9900.

Gun club hosts clays shoot

The Jerome Gun Club will hold a sporting clays shoot on Sunday. This is a 100-target event. If you have never shot sporting clays at Jerome Gun Club, your first 50 targets are free.

Cost is $20 for adults and $14 for juniors under age 18. There is a $5 charge for non-members. Sign-up time is 9 a.m., shooting begins at 10 a.m.

The club is located 11 miles north of the junction of Highway 93 and I-84 at mile marker 64. For information: Mike at 539-4814.

Hunters can enter for 2nd controlled hunt drawing Didn't draw in the first round? It's not too late to apply for the second controlled hunt drawing for unclaimed permits.

The application period for the second drawing for deer, elk and pronghorn hunts runs through Saturday. The drawing will be Aug. 20. Any leftover permits will go on sale Aug. 25.

The application fee is $6.25 for residents, and $14.75 for nonresidents. Residents began buying general season tags Aug. 1.

Hunters can pick up tags at any license vender in the state, online at <http://fish-handgame.idaho.gov/cms/1/licenses/>, or by calling 800-554-8685.

Wounded vets find healing from fly fishing

By Kristy Gray
Casper Star-Tribune

CASPER, Wyo. — The morning smells of last night's rain, shrouded by a quiet you have to leave town to hear. Only birdsong breaks the calm.

Here at Bessemer Bend on the North Platte River, it's a good morning to concentrate.

Back and forth. To and fro. Ryan Carr swings his fly rod over the water, watching the line snap at each apex.

"Get it out there, buddy," says his fishing guide, Kray Lutz.

"Throw it down. Good."

Carr's fly ripples the water. Lutz guides the boat and lets it drift.

Carr's not thinking of it, but the swing loosens muscles in his back, shoulder and hip.

When he ties flies off the water, it improves his diminished fine-motor skills, the result of a herniated disc that went undiscovered for two years in Bagram, Afghanistan.

Carr, 28, of Maryland, a sergeant with the Army Reserve's 160th Military Police Battalion, injured his back in 2007 during Humvee rollover training. Discs pinched muscle nerves in his spine but not his pain nerves. He never knew he was injured.

His left hip flexor and shoulder weakened to the point he could barely use them.

But he's not thinking of it now. Of any of it. Not the time away from his family, not the surgeries or the healing he has yet to do.

Not on this still morning on the water.

That's precisely the mission of Project Healing Waters.

And it's why Carr fishes: "Being out on the water, it's quiet. The serenity, the peacefulness — it makes you forget everything. It's one of the few times you actually have a clear mind."

He didn't want to try fly

Afghanistan veteran Ryan Carr casts his line into the water, while fishing with Iraq veteran Dale Cherney, right, as fishing guide Kray Lutz pilots the boat July 28 on the North Platte River near Casper, Wyo. The veterans are taking part in the Project Healing Waters fly fishing program, which gives wounded active military personnel and veterans the chance to take guided fly fishing tours and fly tying lessons.

fishing. His left hand barely worked. He suffered permanent nerve damage from the shrapnel that tore through his arm in Baghdad, barely missing arteries that would have killed him.

To David Folkerts, lying around Walter Reed Army Medical Center in April 2005, fly fishing seemed like another thing his dead arm wouldn't let him do.

That sounds complicated. Why would I want to do that and feel defeated afterward? he told a friend hounding him to try a new program — Project Healing Waters Fly Fishing.

Retired Navy Capt. Ed Nicholson had started the program in 2004 after he went to Walter Reed for a cancer surgery.

He watched soldiers struggle through their recoveries and wanted to help take their mind off their situations.

So the avid outdoorsman recruited some friends and started offering fly-tying classes. In the spring and summer, they organized trips to water around Washington, D.C.

Nicholson knew nature could heal, the spirit and the body.

Eventually, Folkerts decided to try. He practiced a few casts and caught fish on his first trip to the water, despite his mangled arm.

Folkerts is now a full-time Healing Waters program manager. He organized the trip to fish the North Platte River in Casper. He joined eight other veterans and active-duty soldiers.

"It's just the attitude change and the outlook and perspective. Not just my own life, but for the guys I've met," Folkerts said.

"Honestly, what we really do is help bring soldiers and veterans together as a group. We talk about things that we would normally not talk about with other people. And then we throw fly fishing in with that."

The blackout lasted two months. And though people tell Dale Cherney that he was fully functioning during that time — talking, eating, trying to get better — he has no recollection of it.

The blast that took his leg and left eye? That he remembers.

He remembers the siren, thinking it was another drill.

He thinks he saw a flash of light. He can hear the ambulance, but doesn't see it because of the bandages on his eyes.

He remembers being wheeled down a long hallway and the sound of helicopter blades. Doctors preparing to operate, a priest standing at his bed.

The next thing he remembers is waking up at Walter Reed, two months later.

Cherney, 44, of Wisconsin, was on his third tour in Iraq on Oct. 10, 2007, as a volunteer with the Army Reserves. He was stationed at Camp Liberty in Baghdad as a finance officer. A paper pusher.

Then the rockets came. The blasts injured 38 and killed two. He lost his left leg below the knee and the left eye popped out of his head. Doctors removed his spleen.

He joined Project Healing Waters at Walter Reed though he'd never been fly fishing before. He needed to get out of the hospital, mingle with other people.

"It helps to talk to other veterans. You need to find an escape," he said.

"I'm going to do nothing but fish for a while," Cherney said, packing up his gear. He hopes to be well enough to leave Walter Reed in April, but quit believing in schedules long ago.

Through his recovery, Carr sees his children about every five weeks.

ON THE NET:

Project Healing Waters:

<http://www.projecthealingwaters.org>

he's lost about three years of his kids' lives.

He wants to be well when he returns to them so he goes to appointments, does what his doctors tell him.

And he fishes and ties flies.

Carr also suffers from PTSD. In battle, his mind dealt with what it had to at the time. Now, it's processing what it saw. Carr says he is more angry than he used to be and has a short temper.

Flashbacks come at random triggers, at the most awkward of times.

"With a full flashback, you see it. Other times, you just hear it. People screaming, the commotion. It's hard to get used to normal," he said.

Concentrating helps. Twisting bird feathers around tiny, hard-to-hold hooks helps. So does drifting on a slow-moving river, swinging a fly rod back and forth, back and forth.

When he does come home, Carr's wife is going back to work to give him some time with their children — a 6-year-old daughter, a 4-year-old son and a baby girl not yet 2 months old. He can't swing his daughter around like he used to, and he knows she wonders why.

But since starting Project Healing Waters, he's already taken the kids fishing. He plans to take them more.

The water, he says, heals more than just his bad hip and weak shoulder.

Wyoming doesn't have a Healing Waters chapter right now.

Talks are ongoing to start a chapter in Wyoming, said Larry Barttelbort of Cheyenne, director of the Wyoming Veterans Commission and a regional Healing Waters coordinator.

Commission weighs cuts to elk licenses near Cody

By Ben Neary
Associated Press writer

CHEYENNE, Wyo. — Some outfitters in the Cody area who rely heavily on out-of-state hunters for business say they are opposed to a Wyoming Game and Fish Department proposal to cut the number of general elk hunting licenses issued in key areas near Yellowstone National Park.

The Wyoming Game and Fish Commission plans to act on the proposal to limit licensing in four hunting areas at an Aug. 6 meeting in Cody.

Any one of the state's 7,200 general elk licenses currently available to non-resident hunters potentially could be used to hunt in the areas, said Gary Brown, regional wildlife supervisor for the game department in Cody.

Under the new proposal, the number of out-of-state hunters would be limited in the areas to 32, Brown said.

Geri Hockhalter, co-owner of Timber Creek Outfitters in Cody, said that rather than restrict licenses, the game commission should restrict hunters to killing bull elk with antlers of at least six tines on each side.

"There are four outfitters up there and it would put us out of business," she said. "And it would take away about 35 or 40 jobs in this area."

The Sunlight-Crandall elk herd's numbers have suffered, and one reason is because wolf packs have preyed heavily on elk calves.

During the summer, the herd of more than 1,500 migrates into Yellowstone National Park's Lamar Valley.

A recent Yellowstone National Park study of elk in the Lamar Valley found that 69 percent of calves — generally born in the spring — died by the end of September, Brown said.

He added that 95 percent of the deaths were caused by predators.

Hockhalter said the federal government's refusal to turn over wolf management to the state is to blame for the elk herd's decline.

Wyoming has been locked in legal disputes with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service over wolf management since wolves were reintroduced into Yellowstone National Park in the mid-1990s.

Wyoming recently sued the federal agency over its refusal to turn wolf management over to the state.

A state wolf management plan proposes classifying wolves as predators that could be shot on sight in much of the state.

Rep. Pat Childers, R-Cody, is chairman of the wildlife committee in the Wyoming House of Representatives. If the state took over wolf management, he said, it could schedule wolf hunts.

"We would be able to control the wolf population up there, at least get the wolves educated that they can't be around like they are," said Childers. "And then maybe the young from the elk herds, the calves, would be more frequent, and we'd be able to provide better hunts for the people."

Childers and two other Republican lawmakers from Cody, House Speaker Colin Simpson and Sen. Hank Coe, intend to speak with the game commission about the issue before the commission votes on the issue.

Brown said hunters killed only about 100 bull elk in the areas last year and they have averaged about 176 bulls each year over the last three years.

The number of elk calves in the herd is currently running between 11 and 15 per hundred elk, Brown said. He said most of the scientific literature states that a herd with fewer than 20 calves per 100 elk can't sustain hunting.

Recent dry years have played a role in declining elk pregnancy rates, Brown said. However, he said grizzly bears, wolves and coyotes are also taking a toll.

The study found that grizzly bears killed up to 60 percent of the elk calves, Brown said. He said that wolves killed between 14 to 17 percent and coyotes killed up to 11 percent.

Doug Honnold, a lawyer with Earthjustice in Montana, represented the coalition of environmental groups that shot down Wyoming's proposal to take over management of wolves last year.

Honnold said Thursday he hasn't been following the game department's proposal to restrict licenses in the four hunt areas. However, he said the scientific evidence is inconclusive about how wolves and other factors determine elk cow-calf ratios.

"My overall take is that the evidence on this is used to justify whatever outcome they want, frankly," Honnold said.

When can a senior purchase a youth-only permit?

Question: "As a senior citizen, when can I purchase a leftover youth-only controlled hunt permit?"

Answer: For the general public to understand your question let me first provide a synopsis of the situation. Last year the Fish and Game Commission passed a rule that would allow holders of a senior combination hunting/fishing or disabled combination hunting/fishing license to purchase leftover permits originally designated for youth-only controlled big game hunts.

For several years the Idaho Department of Fish and Game has developed special hunting opportunities to recruit young men and women to big- and small-game hunting. In areas where antlerless or either-sex harvest does not jeopardize population goals, some youth-only controlled deer, elk and antelope hunts have been developed.

Some of these youth-only controlled deer hunts go undersubscribed, so some permits are not unfilled.

purchase those leftover youth-only permits after the second drawing. The permits will be available over the counter on a first-come first-served basis Aug. 25 at license vendors.

The following may be helpful to determine eligibility for this opportunity:

- Idaho senior resident hunters must have lived in Idaho the last five years, be older than 65 years of age, and possess a senior resident combination hunting/fishing license.
- A disabled combination hunting/fishing license may be purchased by persons living in Idaho for more than six months and who has been "deemed disabled by: the railroad retirement board; or certified as eligible for federal supplemental security income (SSI); or social security disability income (SSDI); or a non-service connected veterans pension; or a service-connected veterans disability with 40 percent or more disability; or certified as permanently disabled by a physician."

Question: Bill asked: "My wife & I divorced about 3 years ago. She was awarded the house which had a 1st & 2nd mortgage. I was ordered to pay 1/2 of the monthly payments on the 2nd mortgage until the $75,000.00 balance was paid. Last year my wife refinanced the house & paid off the 2nd mortgage. I know I owe half of the balance that was paid off, but the loss of my job has kept me from paying anything. My wife was recently killed in an accident & her father is the personal representative of her estate. He is dragging me back into divorce court to try & force me to pay the estate the money that I owed to my deceased ex-wife. Would a bankruptcy take care of this debt?"

Answer: A bankruptcy discharge eliminates your legal obligation to repay most debts. However, there are certain debts that are not discharged, including debts to a former spouse arising from a divorce. If your former wife were still alive, your bankruptcy would not eliminate your debt to her. But due to her untimely death, a bankruptcy will help you. Bankruptcy courts have ruled in similar situations that the personal representative of the estate does not have legal "standing" to challenge the discharge. Therefore, the property settlement debt to your deceased ex-wife will be eliminated in your bankruptcy.

Jerome Co. commission OKs business park plat

By John Plestina
Times-News Writer

JEROME — The Jerome County Commission approved the final plats for the second and third phases of the Crossroads Point Business Park Tuesday, in what was little more than a formality requiring the commissioners' signatures.

County Planning and Zoning Administrator Art Brown explained that by the time a plat gets to the county commission, it has already gone through the planning and zoning process with P&Z approval.

Commission approval came with no caveats for the developer to pay for improvements to U.S. Highway 93 or the intersection at Crossroads Point.

Brown said improvements at the intersection will have to be made at some point. The cost of the highway and intersection improvements could fall on the Idaho Department of Transportation, the developer, or both.

"Those improvements have to be put in. Who pays for them? It's not the county. It's a state highway," he said.

Times-News

JEROME — Jerome County has a new ambulance — and it's about to be put to work.

Jerome County Paramedics Manager Ken Sheldon said the state-of-the-art 2008 model ambulance will provide 85 percent of county emergency service right out of the gate, while two older ambulances will fill the remaining 15 percent of need. Another ambulance will be held in reserve.

"We would like to modernize our fleet of ambulances," Sheldon said.

Each of the older ambulances have logged about 200,000 miles, Sheldon said. Saint Benedicts Family Medical Center recently sponsored a blessing of the new ambulance that will bring patients to the hospital, as representatives from the Jerome County Commission and Jerome Chamber of Commerce joined in for the festivities.

Woolley to celebrate 90th birthday

Alta Woolley of Jerome will celebrate her 90th birthday at an open house from 4 to 7 p.m. Saturday at the home of Russell Woolley, 3 N. 200 E., Jerome. Light refreshments will be served.

Woolley was born to Thomas and Alta Palmer on Aug. 13, 1919. She had four brothers and three sisters and spent her youth in the Preston area. She attended Ricks College in Rexburg and Utah State University in Logan, Utah.

In 1939, she married Cecil Durrant from Dayton. They moved to Jerome early in their marriage and lived there until 1969 when the family moved to Pocatello. Together they had six children, Anne (Don) Sullivan Durrant of Idaho Falls, Marlene Jenks of Idaho Falls, Dean Durrant of Pocatello and Larry (Lezlie) Durrant of Logan, Utah. She has 30 grandchildren and 40 great-grandchildren.

While in Jerome, she was an active member of the LDS church serving as the stake primary president for 13 years, and an organist for stake and ward meetings. She also enjoyed playing the piano in a dance band for many years.

In 1965 she began her teaching career working in special education. She attended night classes at the College of Southern Idaho and summer school at Idaho State University to complete her degree, graduating with a bachelors degree in education from ISU in 1969.

In April of 1976 her husband, Cecil, died. She continued to teach until 1986 when she retired to go on an 18-month LDS mission to San Diego.

In 1991 she married Jay Tilby of Burley. After he passed away in 2003, she returned to her home in Pocatello. In 2007 she married Russell Woolley of Jerome.

Drug representatives get preferential treatment

DEAR DR. GOTT: My letter is in regards to medical sales representatives at doctors' offices. I personally attend or accompany family and friends to approximately 20 different doctors' offices yearly. While in the waiting room, it is common to see four or five and (as many as 12) different sales reps come through the door in an hour. They typically have a friendly, chatty three- to five-minute conversation with the suddenly available and upbeat office staff. They discuss such nonmedical subjects as hairstyles, vacation plans and upcoming sales receptions. This is in stark contrast to the patient welcome we often receive upon check-in, where minimal eye contact with the staff occurs, directive conversation appears blunt, and the staff appears too rushed to offer clarification regarding anything.

Often, the reps bring lunch, balloons and cookie trays. As I sit in the waiting room, I gauge the length of time until the reps reappear in the lobby, to revisit with the office staff about upcoming weekend plans and then depart. Most visits average five to 10 minutes. What concerns me most is the patient wait time, congestion of public waiting and parking areas and a possible misinterpretation of loyalties. I realize reps perform a vital function for the medical community and patient; however, what I consistently observe unsettles me.

Are there any medical-industry guidelines regarding such alliances, so as a patient I will receive a prescribed drug that best fits my need in lieu of a drug marketed by a sales rep who may have finished lunch at the clinic on that day?

Proposed Superfund waste deposit attracts foes

CATALDO (AP) — A state plan to bury thousands of truckloads of mining waste at a site in northern Idaho's Silver Valley is drawing renewed opposition from residents and Coeur d'Alene tribal leaders weeks before the first loads are expected to be dumped.

The Idaho Department of Environmental Quality intends to dump more than 40,000 truckloads of Superfund waste at the so-called East Mission Flats repository. The 23-acre site is located near the Sacred Heart Mission at Cataldo, one of the state's oldest buildings.

So far, more than 2,000 residents have signed petitions objecting to the location. Leaders of the Coeur d'Alene Tribe, whose ancestors built the mission with Jesuit priests in the 1850s, are objecting on cultural and environmental grounds.

"This was and still is sacred ground," the tribe

"This was and still is sacred ground."

— in a letter to the DEQ from Coeur d'Alene tribal leaders wrote in a letter to DEQ, detailing the tribe's historic and spiritual ties to the nearby mission.

Contractors have already started work on the repository, which will be built in phases, the first two estimated to cost $1.1 million. State officials hope to begin trucking later this month loads of metals-laced dirt removed from residential yards polluted by decades of mining in the valley.

Federal stimulus money accelerated the removal of topsoil from yards this summer. But the increased waste volume has also caused the existing repository at Big Creek, one of five repositories in the Silver Valley, to near capacity, state officials say.

Two years ago, the Silver Valley Community

Resource Center asked the Inspector General's office to look into East Mission Flats.

Barb Miller, leaders of the SVCR, says the public didn't get enough time to comment on the repository. The group has also raised concerns about dumping waste in an area prone to flooding.

But the Inspector General, in a report issued in June, concluded the public had ample opportunity to respond to the repository, citing public meetings and three formal comment periods. The report also noted that parts of the site were underwater when the inspectors visited last spring and asked for more information about the design.

The state and federal Environmental Protection Agency are waiting for the Inspector General's response to the independent review.

The Superfund waste destined for the repository is actually cleaner than the soil at East Mission Flats, where heavy metals already pollute surface and groundwater, according to a state report.

Still, state officials say the design will prevent the problems cited by opponents, including water leaching through the repository and ultimately into the groundwater table, said Andy Mork, DEQ's repository program manager.

The objections may be just a hint of controversy to come for the state.

Over the next 25 years, DEQ will need storage space for 600,000 truckloads of waste as state and federal agencies clean up a century of mining pollution. That much waste would fill 15 repositories the size of East Mission Flats.

Phantom Hill pack kills 12 Idaho sheep

KETCHUM — Wolves that are part of the Phantom Hill pack near the central Idaho resort town of Ketchum have been linked to the deaths of 12 domestic sheep and could be shot legally.

Idaho Department of Fish and Game late Tuesday afternoon authorized the killing of Phantom Hill wolves involved in the sheep deaths on Sunday.

The Defenders of Wildlife has a project in the area to limit wolf predation on local ranchers' sheep.

But Suzanne Stone, a spokeswoman for the group, says the sheep killed weren't part of herds being protected by the Wood River Wolf Project.

The Phantom Hill pack has 10 or 11 members, not counting any new pups that may have been born earlier this spring. In June, the pack's alpha male was struck and killed northwest of Ketchum on state Highway 75.

Stone, 42, of Emmett.

Stone's A Star helicopter, flying from Oregon-based Evergreen Helicopter, went down Aug. 13, 2006, about 18 miles from the mountain town of Yellow Pine as fires burned in the region.

The memorial, a plaque embedded in a rock pedestal and a bench, overlooks the crash site.

Repeat offender arrested again on drug offense

BOISE — A 46-year-old Nampa man pulled over in Idaho's capital city this week for traffic violations now faces drug and weapons charges after police officers say they discovered methamphetamine and a loaded gun in his car.

Alfredo Ybarra, who has a long history of drug arrests and convictions in Idaho and has spent time in the state's prison system, was arrested Monday night.

Police say they found 247 grams of a white powder that turned out to be methamphetamine. They said they also discovered $10,148 in cash, drug paraphernalia, a loaded handgun and several rounds of ammunition.

Ybarra has drug-dealing, weapons and domestic battery convictions dating back to at least 1995, according to a database of Idaho criminal records.

UI offers student firefighters delayed start

BOISE — The University of Idaho says students who pull double duty as firefighters during the summer will be able to delay their return to campus for the fall semester.

University of Idaho registrar Nancy Krogh says nearly a dozen students took advantage of the offer last year.

Krogh says requesting a delayed return is among options the university will extend to students who will continue to fight forest and wildland fires in the western United States after classes start on the Moscow campus Aug. 24.

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A private military training company that hoped to build a sprawling camp in northern Idaho says the plans are now on hold because of funding and contractual problems.

Phoenix-GA LLC President Steven Didier said

Tuesday the that the plans for the military, law enforcement and private sector security training camp were stalled.

The company applied earlier this summer for a conditional use permit in Kootenai County to build a 461-acre facility with shooting ranges, helicopter pads, a private school, barracks-style lodging, vehicle driving ranges, archery ranges, a ropes course, climbing walls and explosive storage. The site would also include caves, tunnels and other underground structures, according to the proposal.

Didier didn't offer any details of the funding and contractual problems that put the project on hold, but said the company would make a public announcement if and when it picks up the project again.

Probe: Canyon County shooting was justified

MIDDLETON (AP) — A Middleton man wounded by a Canyon County deputy in March later killed himself with a single shot to the chest, according to investigation results.

A task force also concluded that Canyon County Deputy Brian Crawforth was justified in shooting Ricardo Ramos in the leg.

It also found that Ramos, a Mexican immigrant who came to the United States in 1990, had methamphetamine in his system when he died.

Rosalinda Ramos, the dead man's sister, says the investigation's conclusion that Ramos died instantly from the shot from his 9mm pistol at point-blank range to his chest was a comfort.

She says, "It was a relief to know he died instantly. We were thinking that he laid there for three hours, suffering."

Chief Deputy Gary Deulen says he wished the public could have learned earlier that Crawforth didn't kill Ramos, but said a thorough investigation was necessary before all the details were released.

Commission Chairman Charlie Howell said ITD could decide who will pay.

"If that's what the Department of Transportation says Crossroads needs to do, then by all means that's what we will do," he said.

Construction is ongoing on a condominium business park at the site and further development is likely.

The Jerome City Council agreed in early June to provide water to the Flying J Travel Stop and other commercial property on the east side of U.S. 93. The council also authorized the city to annex the site at Crossroads Point, but that might not happen for 10 years. It would be Jerome's first land actuation east of U.S. 93.

There is current city water and sewer service in close proximity to Flying J on the west side of U.S. 93.

In a related matter, the commission waived two permit fees totaling $280 for Blair Crouch, the son of Crossroads Point owner Arlen Crouch. Those permits are a property reduction permit and an expansion permit.

The council also discussed the budget for the next fiscal year. No numbers have been released yet. Public release of the new budget could come as soon as next week.

reps being seen during office hours. Some don't accept samples, nor do they allot any time to speak about products carried.

Others, as you are aware, stock the larder and often get fed. I know of one surgeon who used to pop his head out of his office, pick the reps he would see and have his secretary usher the others away for lack of time. His logic? Looks. The cute blonde or redhead in the corner was a definite yes. The older (and probably more knowledgeable) balding gentleman in the first chair was passed over. This probably wasn't the doctor's best means of selection, but it was his.

You have a legitimate complaint, and I can understand and appreciate your frustration, even though you or someone you know may benefit by receiving free drug samples. After all, for every salesman seen, you sit longer and longer before being treated.

Whatever you decide, it might be best to speak with your physician and express your concerns. While he or she is obviously aware of the number of interruptions in a day, it may come as a surprise that patients are annoyed by the process. As I see it, you have a couple of options. First, you might determine whether your doctor sees reps all day or only in the afternoon, for example. You can then schedule your appointments at opposite times and avoid the issue. Or you can change to another physician who has a policy not to see drug reps at all.

Bruce Joel Bradley

JEROME — Bruce Joel Bradley, 43, of Jerome, left this earth into Heavenly Father's arms, on Monday, Aug. 10, 2009, due to complications from a severe leg injury.

in 1992 and was blessed with his greatest loves, his four beautiful children, Erin, Sara, Kristi and Connor. That marriage ended, and recently he married and will Joel was born Sept. 23, 1965, to Bruce J. and JoAnn Wahlen Bradley in Grande Prairie, Alberta, Canada. He was the oldest of seven children. Joel spent his childhood in Moscow, where he helped his dad build their family home. When Joel was 12, he moved with his family to Vermont, where he and his brothers all learned to snow ski and many other outdoor activities. One last move brought the family to Jerome, where he finished his education at Jerome High School.

Joel was an avid reader, loved jazz music and started his love for computers on an old Commodore 64. This love turned into his lifetime work as an IT Specialist which led him to the Silicon Valley in California to work for Cisco, Juniper and Lucent. He returned to Jerome in 2002 and became the IT Specialist for his father's growing company, MSI, where he had worked for the last eight years.

Joel married Kelly Robbins always love Gayle Argyle who was with him in his final hours.

Joel is survived by his mother, JoAnn; brothers, Jared (Marla), Matthew, Christopher and Andrew. He also has two sisters, Megan and Lindsey (Tim); along with many nieces and nephews, aunts, uncles and cousins. He was preceded in death by his father, Dr. Bruce Bradley. Joel will be so greatly missed.

Services for Joel will be conducted at 11 a.m. Saturday, Aug. 15, at the Jerome LDS 2nd Ward Chapel, 50 E. 100 S. in Jerome, with Bishop Blain Hope officiating. A visitation for family and friends will start at 10 a.m. Interment will be at approximately 3 p.m. at the Springfield Cemetery. Arrangements are under the direction of Farnsworth Mortuary in Jerome.

In lieu of flowers, donations can be made to The Joel Bradley Family Fund located at any Wells Fargo Bank Branch.

Gary L. Moreton

BURLEY — Gary Lynn Moreton, age 64, of Burley, peacefully passed away at his home on the morning of Sunday, Aug. 9, 2009, after a courageous battle with Parkinson's.

He was born to Lynn Raymond and Lita Beth (Johnson) Moreton on Oct. 16, 1944, in Salt Lake City, Utah. By occupation, he was a shift supervisor for 32 years at Ore-Idaho Foods/McCain Foods.

He is survived by his wife of 38 years, Linda Moreton; his mother, Lita; a brother, Michael; one sister, Vicki; eight children, Tammy (Lon) Pearson, Nikki (Danny) Valenzuela, Dawn (Keith) McCall, Tina (Ron) Orr, Toni (T.J.) Jones, Kevin (Kristie) Moreton, Jenny (Curt) Chatterton and Miranda (Matt) Godfrey; 28 grandchildren; and many nieces and nephews.

Gary loved sports and coached several years of Lions basketball and soccer. He was a die-hard Denver Broncos fan. He enjoyed fishing, the horse races and the Fourth of July fireworks. However, his greatest love was his family.

The funeral will be held at 1 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 15, at the Burley High School's Little Theater, 2100 Parke Ave. in Burley. Friends may call from 6 until 8 p.m. Friday at the Rasmussen Funeral Home, 1350 E. 16th St. in Burley, and from noon until 12:45 p.m. Saturday at the high school.

Public wake to honor Eunice Kennedy Shriver

BARNSTABLE, Mass. (AP) — Family and friends of Eunice Kennedy Shriver plan to celebrate the sister of President John F. Kennedy and Massachusetts Sen. Edward M. Kennedy at a public wake at a Cape Cod church.

Shriver, who founded the Special Olympics, suffered a series of strokes in recent years and died early Tuesday at a hospital on Cape Cod at age 88.

The wake will be held Thursday from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. at Our Lady of Victory Roman Catholic Church in the Centerville section of Barnstable, not far from the family's Hyannis Port compound.

Members of the Shriver and Kennedy families gathered at her home for a private service Tuesday night.

An invitation-only funeral mass will be held Friday at 10 a.m. at Saint Francis Xavier Roman Catholic Church. The service will be streamed live at the Special Olympics Web site, family spokesman Stephen Rivers said.

"The service will be preceded by the Special Olympics Torch being carried into the church by Special Olympians and law enforcement officers, followed by the hearse with Mrs. Shriver's casket, and the family walking behind it," Rivers said.

The family will only release details of a private burial after Shriver's interment.

Actor John Quade, 71, dies

By Dennis McLellan
Los Angeles Times

John Quade, a veteran character actor who specialized in playing heavies and appeared in several Clint Eastwood movies, including "Every Which Way But Loose" and its sequel "Any Which Way You Can," has died. He was 71.

Quade died in his sleep of natural causes Sunday at his home in Rosamond, Calif., said his wife, Gwen Saunders. In a more than two-decade career in films and television that began in the late 1960s, Quade played character roles in numerous TV series and in films such as

"Papillon," "The Sting" and Eastwood's "High Plains Drifter" and "The Outlaw Josey Wales." He also played Sheriff Biggs in the 1977 TV mini-series "Roots."

"Everybody remembers him for 'Every Which Way But Loose' and 'Any Which Way You Can,'" Quade's wife said Wednesday. "He played Chola, the leader of the motorcycle gang. It was more of a comic relief of the movie; they were a bumbling motorcycle gang."

Although Quade's name might not be familiar to many moviegoers, his face was — a face made for playing heavies.

"He was one of the nicest men you'd ever want to know, but he looked mean and nasty," his wife said. "He looked like he could do murder and mayhem at any moment, but he was a big teddy bear — the kind that he just loved little kids, but they were always afraid of him."

"His face definitely stands out in a crowd. He had to be careful he didn't overshadow scenes just by the way he looked. The first film he did with Clint Eastwood, Clint hired him for his face and told him afterward that he felt like he got a bonus because John could act."

Born John William Saunders III April 1, 1938, in Kansas City, Kan., Quade arrived in California in 1964. "He got involved in missile and aerospace for awhile," said his wife. "He built parts that are still on the moon."

One day, she said, "he was sitting in a restaurant with a bunch of guys and this man noticed him and said, 'Have you thought about acting?'"

"It had to be his face; it wasn't anything else."

Quade was appearing in a play in Hollywood in 1968 when a casting director saw him and cast him in his first TV show, an episode of "Bonanza"

GE calls Fox report 'maliciously false'

NEW YORK (AP) — General Electric Co. called a Fox News Channel report about the company supplying terrorists with material used in bombs "irresponsible and maliciously false" on Wednesday, as a feud between Fox's Bill O'Reilly and MSNBC's Keith Olbermann kept sizzling.

It was the first time that GE, the parent company of NBC News and MSNBC, had publicly responded to accusations made by O'Reilly on his Fox show.

Olbermann also kept up his attacks, naming O'Reilly one of his "worst persons in the world" on Tuesday's show. The two men have taken their feud to a new level ever since The New York Times reported on Aug. 1 that the chief executives of both parent corporations of the cable news channels — News Corp. as well as GE — had encouraged them to cool things down.

O'Reilly said on Tuesday that his show's sources say there is a federal investigation into whether American companies supplied components being used in roadside bombs aimed at American soldiers. He said that radio frequency modules inside some bombs were part of a shipment made by a U.S. company to Corezing International, a Singapore company that does business with Iran.

O'Reilly said that his show "has been told, but cannot confirm, that the General Electric corporation is under suspicion in the case."

GE spokesman Gary Sheffer said he was surprised by the report, given O'Reilly's admission that he could not confirm GE's involvement.

GE does not do business with Corezing, and does not produce the radio frequency modules that were described in the report, he said.

"We usually do not respond to the misleading and inaccurate claims made on this program because very few people take them seriously," Sheffer said, "but tonight's report took this smear campaign to a new low."

A Fox News spokeswoman, Irena Briganti, had no immediate comment about GE's statement. FBI spokesman Steve Kodak said the bureau does not comment about any investigations it may be doing.

Sheffer said he believed O'Reilly's report was tied to the MSNBC feud. Briganti did not comment on GE's assertion that O'Reilly's story was done because of the feud. Fox issued a statement last week about GE and NBC: "Both organizations are covered as news warrants."

Federal deficit higher in July, $1.27T this year

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The federal deficit climbed higher into record territory in July, hitting $1.27 trillion with two months remaining in the budget year.

The Treasury Department said Wednesday that the July deficit totaled $180.7 billion, slightly more than the $177.5 billion economists had expected.

The Obama administration is projecting that when the current budget year ends on Sept. 30, the imbalance will total $1.84 trillion, more than four times last year's record-high.

The soaring deficits have raised worries among foreign owners of U.S. Treasury securities including the Chinese, the largest holder of such debt.

Massive amounts of government spending to combat the recession and stabilize the U.S. financial system have pushed the deficit higher. The cost of wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, along with depleted government tax revenues, also are major factors.

The July deficit reflected government spending of $332.2 billion, a record amount for any month and up from outlays of $263.3 billion in July 2008. Of that increase, about $25 billion reflected the fact that Aug. 1 was a Saturday this year, requiring many government benefit checks to be sent out earlier and counted as spending in July.

Government receipts totaled $151.5 billion, down 5.6 percent from a year ago. It marked the 15th consecutive month that government receipts have been lower than the same month in the prior year, illustrating how deep the recession has cut into tax receipts.

Through the first 10 months of the budget year, receipts total $1.74 trillion, down 16.9 percent from the same period in 2008.

Outlays totaled $3 trillion over the past 10 months, up 21.1 percent from the same period in 2008. The resulting deficit of $1.27 trillion compares to an imbalance of $388.6 billion during the year-ago period. The deficit for all of 2008 was $454.8 billion, the current record holder in dollar terms.

President Obama's economic team sought to reassure the Chinese during high-level talks last month that the administration is committed to reducing the deficits once the current economic and financial crises have been resolved.

So far, interest rates have remained low as the Federal Reserve has kept the federal funds rate, a key short-term interest rate at a record low near zero in an effort to jump-start the economy. At the end of a two-day meeting Wednesday, Fed officials repeated their view that the weak economy was likely to "to warrant exceptionally low levels of the federal funds rate for an extended period."

The concern, however, is that rates could begin rising despite the Fed's efforts if foreigners suddenly lose confidence in the government's ability to manage its debt burden.

In bond markets, prices fell Wednesday after a fairly weak auction of $23 billion in 10-year Treasury notes. The Treasury Department is auctioning a record $75 billion in debt this week.

Calif. gay rights group: Wait for 2012 to attack ban

SAN FRANCISCO — California gay rights activists are at odds over when to ask voters to repeal the state's same-sex marriage ban, with one of the largest groups saying it needs until 2012 to put together a winning campaign and two others saying they plan go to the polls next year.

For months, organizers have been weighing the best strategy for gaining back marriage rights for gay and lesbian couples following their loss last fall, when voters passed Proposition 8 banning same-sex nuptials just months after the California Supreme Court ruled to allow them.

Outrage at the defeat caused gay rights activists to spill into the streets, their anger galvanizing supporters in California and elsewhere to push forward.

New DVD shows dangers of texting and driving

SALT LAKE CITY — The dangers of texting while driving might seem obvious, but for anyone who doesn't get it, Utah state officials are releasing a 15-minute public-service DVD.

The Utah Department of Transportation had a news conference Wednesday to promote the video documentary on an accident that killed two people when a driver who was texting collided with another vehicle.

For drivers, texting or sending e-mails from a cell phone became a Utah misdemeanor in May.

U.S., Swiss keep deal on secret accounts under wraps

MIAMI — United States and Swiss government officials announced a deal Wednesday to settle American demands for the identities of suspected tax dodgers, despite Switzerland's vaunted bank secrecy. But they kept all details under wraps, including how many of the 52,000 names sought by the IRS from banking giant UBS AG will be revealed.

Depending on the scale of the deal, it could be a new blow to Switzerland's reputation as a safe place to hide assets from the tax man back home.

Marines work on a pig as part of instruction. It is sedated and monitored so that it doesn't wake up.

Troops use pigs to get the feel of real trauma

By Tony Perry
Los Angeles Times

VALLEY CENTER, Calif. — Two enlisted Marines were kneeling on the ground, quickly stuffing gauze into a gaping wound in a pig's belly to stop the bleeding. Another was doing a "blood sweep" to find other wounds.

An officer, just inches from the snout, was monitoring the pig's breathing and keeping its thick tongue from blocking the airway.

"Come on, buddy, stay with us," Capt. Doug Verblaauw whispered to the heavily sedated pig, dubbed Gen. Dude.

Gen. Dude would not survive the day. Nor would the 19 other pigs used in last week's "live-tissue" training for 28 Marines and a dozen Navy doctors. The carcasses later were sent to a rendering plant.

But the Marines had the experience of pushing intestines back into living bodies, applying tourniquets and heat packs to gushing wounds, clearing tongues and other obstructions from airways and working under pressure when time is blood and indecision is death.

Camp Pendleton has used pigs in the training of Navy corpsmen and infantry Marines since 2006. But the training takes on new significance as the U.S. focus shifts from Iraq to Afghanistan.

In Iraq, U.S. forces have a highly developed system of transporting casualties from the battlefield to medical stations by vehicle or helicopter. In Afghanistan, the distances are vast, roads are minimal and helicopters often are not readily available.

The result is that more frontline troops need to be trained to treat traumatic wounds.

Under a $1 million contract with Deployment Medicine International, based in Gig Harbor, Wash., 1,300 Marines and sailors at Camp Pendleton will receive trauma training this fiscal year, some of it using pigs.

The company, whose instructors are combat veterans, has annual contracts worth between $6.5 million and $10 million and uses about 2,900 pigs a year.

The use of the pigs is strongly opposed by animal-rights groups. Nine members of Congress sent a letter to the Army in June asking that the program be stopped.

But military leaders say the pigs provide an invaluable conclusion to a program that also uses classroom lectures, mannequins and computerized simulators.

"You can't quantify it, but we firmly believe that this training saves lives," said Navy Cmdr. Bryan Schumacher, a surgeon for the 1st Marine Division. "You can't replicate living tissue."

Working on a living creature, even a barnyard animal, has an emotional effect. "You just don't have that visceral feeling when you're dealing with a simulator," Schumacher said.

Marines are told to regard the pigs as wounded comrades. "We are treating these casualties as we would a downed war fighter, a buddy, with respect and consideration," an instructor tells them.

"Ours is Private Ryan," said Cpl. J. Crane, "he's definitely worth saving."

The pigs are 2 to 3 months old and range from 140 to 200 pounds. Stretched out, they can reach 5 feet from snout to hoof. Each costs about $1,000.

Before the training begins, the pigs are sedated. Veterinary technicians monitor the pigs to make sure they remain asleep.

Using scalpels, instructors inflict increasingly serious wounds on the pigs and watch as the Marines scramble to keep their pigs from dying. In the final exercise, the pigs are shot in ways that approximate injuries a Marine might suffer, with some of the shots severing limbs.

The part of the trauma course using pigs occurs after three days of lectures and simulations at the base. It used to be held at a police training facility in Escondido, but it was moved to avoid controversy.

Plan to put Guard troops on border stalls over money

By Lolita C. Baldor
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — A government plan to use National Guard troops to help stem Mexican drug violence along the southern border is stymied by disagreements over who will pay for the soldiers and how they would be used.

Ordered by President Obama in June to help secure the border with Mexico, the Pentagon and the Homeland Security Department drafted a $225 million plan to deploy temporarily 1,500 Guard troops to supplement Border Patrol agents.

The two agencies are wrangling over how to structure the deployment, but the primary sticking point is the money, according to senior administration officials who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss internal deliberations.

The funding stalemate lingers even after Obama renewed his commitment to Mexican officials on Monday to reinforce the border and to help Mexico battle the drug cartels. Fierce battles between Mexican law enforcement and the cartels have left as many as 11,000 people dead and fueled concerns about violence spilling into the U.S.

"The United States," Obama said during a news conference in Mexico on Monday, "will also meet its responsibilities by continuing our efforts to reduce the demand for drugs and continuing to strengthening the security of our shared border — not only to protect the American people, but to stem the illegal southbound flow of American guns and cash that helps fuel this extraordinary violence."

"For too long the border has gone without the adequate resources to secure it," Cesinger said. "It's a federal responsibility but a Texas problem."

White House spokesman Nick Shapiro cautioned that Obama has not made any decision yet on the issue. "The president is firmly committed to ensuring that our borders are secure and that we are doing all that we can to cut off the flow of drugs, illegal weapons and bulk cash in both directions," he said.

Early drafts of the Pentagon's plan revealed Defense would seek reimbursement for its costs of the program, which is slated to last just one year, giving the Border Patrol time to build up its force of agents.

The Homeland Security Department, which expects to get roughly $44 billion in its overall 2010 budget compared to the Pentagon's $636 billion, is also reluctant to bear the costs of the proposed program.

Military officials have also balked at having a highly visible uniformed presence at border crossings.

One administration official said an initial Pentagon draft was nixed by Defense Secretary Robert Gates because it suggested that Guard troops could be used to help screen commercial vehicles at the border.

Defense leaders have been insistent that the U.S. avoid any appearance of militarizing the border, and they are opposed to using the soldiers at border entry points to openly inspect vehicles.

Defense officials have been uneasy about the Guard plan from the onset, insisting that the effort be temporary and not tied to any existing program that could end up being extended or made permanent. Adding to those concerns is the fact that while the program would be federally funded, the Guard members would be under the control of the border states' governors.

WTO: China violates free trade on entertainment imports

By Don Lee
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The World Trade Organization on Wednesday ruled that China violated free trade practices by restricting imports of movies, music and books, handing the U.S. a victory in a highly contentious issue that has long ruffled Hollywood and other purveyors of media products.

U.S. Trade Representative Ron Kirk in Washington called the WTO panel ruling a significant win for America's creative industries.

"This decision promises to level the playing field for American companies working to distribute high-quality entertainment products in China, so that legitimate American products can get to market and beat out the pirates," he said in a statement.

A Hollywood industry group was cautiously optimistic.

"The Chinese system for distributing U.S. films to Chinese audiences is among the most restrictive and burdensome in the world," said Dan Glickman, chairman and chief executive of the Motion Picture Association of America. The WTO's "decision points a way forward."

Trade experts were more circumspect, saying Chinese officials would almost certainly appeal the ruling. In any case, there is little the Geneva-based trade body can do to force China to open up market access to foreign media content. China has long restricted the number of foreign films in theaters to about 20 a year.

In its report, the WTO panel told the Chinese to stop requiring foreign media suppliers to go through a burdensome process of distributing goods through Chinese-owned companies. It also urged China to allow foreign companies to sell music over the Internet.

"This is a good step forward, but I wouldn't say this would change the landscape for Hollywood or music studios doing business in China," said Gary Hufbauer, a senior fellow at the Peterson Institute for International Economics, a think tank in Washington.

Sec. Clinton says corruption undermines Nigeria government

By Matthew Lee
Associated Press writer

ABUJA, Nigeria — U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton on Wednesday said corruption has undermined the legitimacy of Nigeria's government and urged the oil-rich nation to embrace broad political reform and ease sectarian tensions.

In the Nigerian capital of Abuja on the fifth stop in a seven-nation tour Africa, Clinton told an audience of Nigerian civic activists that a culture of corruption and incompetence has hobbled Nigeria's ability to grow as an economic power and benefit its deprived citizens.

"The most immediate source of the disconnect between Nigeria's wealth and its poverty is a failure of governance at the federal, state and local level," she said.

Clinton said Nigeria's "lack of transparency and accountability has eroded the legitimacy of the government and contributed to the rise of groups that embrace violence and reject the authority of the state."

She cited a recent World Bank report that said Nigeria has lost more than $300 billion to corruption and mismanagement over the past three decades. And she said that reform can only come by "fixing Nigeria's flawed election system?"

Clinton raised the possibility that if Nigeria showed strong signs of change, it could lead to its entry into the G-20 nations, providing a voice in global economic and political decision-making.

During an earlier news conference, Clinton expressed concern about tensions that have led to sectarian violence and disrupted energy production in the Niger Delta. She said the Nigerian government needed to take action to protect its status as the continent's largest oil producer and top recipient of American investment.

Some reformers cautioned that the Nigerian administration has done little to counter its culture of corruption.

Dr. Jibrin Ibrahim, head of the Centre for Democracy and Development, a Nigerian think tank, said, "Things have gone down rather than up in the fight against corruption since this

"We strongly support and encourage the government of Nigeria's efforts to increase transparency, reduce corruption (and) provide support for democratic processes in preparation for the 2011 elections," Clinton told a news conference after meeting Nigerian Foreign Minister Ojo Maduekwe.

Some reformers cautioned that the Nigerian administration has done little to counter its culture of corruption.

Dr. Jibrin Ibrahim, head of the Centre for Democracy and Development, a Nigerian think tank, said, "Things have gone down rather than up in the fight against corruption since this government came into power?"

Ibrahim said Nigeria's Economic and Financial Crimes Commission, the government's anti-corruption watchdog, has been less progressive about pursuing cases and audits on the country's oil industry were running four years behind.

U.S. officials regard Nigeria, Africa's most populous nation, as a bellwether for the continent's success. They have grown worried about the coup-prone country's political situation, especially after 2007 elections were marred by fraud.

Maduekwe insisted there was a "national consensus on issues of enhanced democracy, a deep commitment to rule of law and electoral reforms" and pledged that President Umaru Yar'Adua's government would deliver on reform.

Nigeria is the fifth largest supplier of oil to the United States and U.S. officials are also troubled by unrest and kidnappings in the Niger Delta, where indigenous groups have complained vehemently about exploitation of oil reserves by foreign petroleum companies.

Violence in the region has led to cuts in production that in June led to Angola surpassing Nigeria in monthly oil production.

Swine flu cases climb among U.S. soldiers in Iraq

BAGHDAD (AP) — There have been 67 confirmed cases of swine flu among American troops in Iraq with dozens more suspected, Iraqi officials said Wednesday, making U.S. soldiers the single largest group in the country to come down with the virus.

American soldiers account for more than two-thirds of Iraq's 96 swine flu cases, according to figures released by the Iraqi Health Ministry, as it presented steps being taken to control the spread of the virus that last week claimed its first fatality in Iraq.

In addition to the soldiers, 23 Iraqis and six foreigners have been diagnosed with the virus, said Dr. Amer al-Khuzai, the deputy health minister. A 21-year-old woman, described in poor health, died in the southern holy city of Najaf where she had been visiting revered Shiite shrines.

All American soldiers diagnosed with swine flu have either recovered or are undergoing treatment, he said, adding that there have been no fatalities among U.S. forces.

The U.S. military confirmed the 67 cases, an increase from the 51 it reported earlier this week. It also said 71 suspected cases were in isolation.

"None have been significantly ill. None have required hospitalization or evacuation," Col. Michael D. Eisenhower, chief of clinical operations in Iraq, told The Associated Press in an e-mail Wednesday.

Swine flu cases have been diagnosed at six American bases in Iraq, he said.

The military has been giving the ministry weekly updates on the number of cases found on their bases in Iraq, Eisenhower said in another e-mail to AP this week. "There has not been a sudden outbreak," Eisenhower said, explaining that the cases have appeared over the last three months since the military began screening for the virus.

In May, 18 soldiers on their way to Iraq were diagnosed with swine flu while in Kuwait, leading to an agreement between Iraq and the U.S. military to share information about the number of confirmed cases.

Troops heading to and from Afghanistan and Iraq are now also screened.

Bronco corners lock down positions

By Dustin Lapray
Times-News correspondent

BOISE — It's not hard to figure out who the starting cornerbacks will be for the Boise State Broncos in 2009. Kyle Wilson returns to the left side he dominated in 2008, an All-Western Athletic Conference season for the senior.

The right side is junior Brandyn Thompson's domain to roam. Thompson got a lot of attention last season because teams avoided Wilson's side, but he was no slouch with 54 tackles and four interceptions.

Wilson

Thompson

Wilson made 35 tackles and five picks. Both are highly-skilled, but both have room to grow.

"There's a lot of stuff they need to improve on," said BSU defensive backs coach Marcel Yates said. "As a coach, I have to keep these guys humble, keep them grounded, and point out all the things they need to get better at, the little things as well as the big things."

Wilson agrees and sees a desire to improve in his fellow corners.

"The guys came in focused, definitely with a chip on our shoulder from last year," Wilson said. "Nobody wants to be like last year, everybody wants to be better. We've trained that much harder to be better."

CHECK OUT THE BRONCOS

Boise State will hold its first scrimmage of fall camp at 3 p.m. today in Bronco Stadium. The scrimmage is open to the public and admission is free. The Broncos will hold another open scrimmage at 7:30 p.m. Aug. 21, as they prepare for their Sept. 3 season-opener against Oregon.

year and he's having fun out here," Yates said. "He understands that he's at the point that, 'You're out here and you have to work, so you might as well have fun and get better.'"

Thompson is fine with the respect opponents give Wilson as it gives him the chance to influence the game. But he wants to repay his team for some picks he dropped last year.

"Dropped picks always hurt because you never know when the next one is coming and you never know if that could have affected the game," Thompson said. "It's hard to go to sleep when you know that maybe

Adding arms: CSI stocks up on pitching

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

Pitching, pitching and more pitching.

That's what it takes to be successful in the Scenic West Athletic Conference, and that's just what College of Southern Idaho baseball coach Boomer Walker pursued in the recruiting season. On Tuesday, he confirmed three more pitchers and a position player as the newest Golden Eagles.

"It's a great group and I think we recognized our deficiencies from last year and took some advantages of getting some good pitching in," Walker said. "We're real excited."

Three of the incoming players are freshmen — right-handed pitchers Bryce Montoya of Wells, Nev., Philip Valos of Bakersfield, Calif., and Ryan Wilkins of San Diego — while Kyle Beverly comes to Twin Falls from Oregon State University. CSI now has 14 players on its roster of 25 with pitching experience.

Valos, a teammate of current CSI left fielder Ryan Lay at Stockdale High, originally committed to the University of California-Berkeley. Later on, however, the undersized righty decided he would have a better opportunity at the junior college level.

"He's got great stuff, but I think in the stereotypical pitcher's body he doesn't have it. A lot of kids get overlooked because they're not what someone else wants them to be," Walker said. "We're real excited to have him, he's a real good student and he had a lot of four-year opportunities. But he wanted to go the two-year route because he thought he would get more opportunities to pitch."

Wilkins, who was an early commit to San Diego State, was the winning pitcher in Cathedral Catholic's state sectional championship game, the school's second in as many seasons. He posted an 8-1 record on the mound with a 2.23 ERA and 99 strikeouts.

Walker likened Wilkins to former CSI pitcher Nate Bumstead, citing his 6-2, 205-pound build.

WE JUST KNOW WHAT WE'RE WORKING TOWARD

MEAGAN THOMPSON/Times-News

College of Southern Idaho sophomore Amanda Filiaga works on a drill Wednesday morning during the Golden Eagles' practice session.

MAKING IT RIGHT

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

With each break, the College of Southern Idaho volleyball team members high-fived each other before shagging balls and grabbing a drink.

It was the kind of subtle unity CSI coach Heidi Cartisser craved when recruiting eight new players to go with a steady sophomore class that was part of the first CSI group since 1992 to miss the NJCAA Division I National Championships when eligible to compete.

"As a coaching staff we evaluated what we could do differently in order to become national contenders again. Part of that was recruiting girls who were going to put the team ahead of themselves no matter what," Cartisser said, hinting that last season's group was more a collection of individuals than a united team.

"We've got a lot of great spots on this team, and I think the competition is good. I think we're more talented than last year, and I think the group is already further along than at the same point last year."

Golden Eagles aim for return to nationals

It might have been just the third day of practice, but already the group seemed more on the same page than the group of a year ago. They know top talent and top teamwork are what it takes to return to the national tournament in Council Bluffs, Iowa, after a one-year absence.

Part of that comes with the seven returning sophomores growing into their roles as leaders and big-time players. They remember what failure feels like, Cartisser said, and it's something they're not willing to let happen again on their watch.

"You're still looking up to some of your teammates, but it's important to realize that the freshmen are looking up to you. You've got to make sure you're doing the right things and being a good example," said sophomore right-sider Alex van Dyke. "Coming in last year, I was just really nervous. This year I'm excited to come to practice every day, to see who's going to step up each time and how we're going to get better as a team."

Getting better as a team will help the Golden Eagles forget the misery of 2008, when they finished 30-6 but were stunned by North Idaho in the Region 18 Tournament semifinal round.

While the thought still stings the players a little, they prefer to see it as motivation for a season that begins Aug. 28-29 with the CSI Outback Invitational.

"We just know what we're working toward," said Chauncey Axelson, a former Hagerman star who played basketball last year at Blue Mountain Community College (Pendleton, Ore.) and intended to return to CSI as a student only before being recruited to join the volleyball team. "The past doesn't matter, because it's already happened and now we just have to go about making it right."

The buzz word at Hazeltine is length

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press writer

CHASKA, Minn. — Paul Azinger pulled the driver from his bag because there really is no other option at Hazeltine. The sign post on the opening hole has two words and two sets of numbers that serve as a not-so-subtle welcome to the PGA Championship.

490 yards. Par 4. If that's not enough, the wind was in his face.

First-round coverage

200 yards off the tee, and as a marshal frantically waved his arms to stop the traffic, Azinger told him not to worry. He figured even he could keep the ball in the air that long, and he then ripped a shot that traveled well over their heads.

No need to put the cover back on the driver or any of the fairway metals for most players in the PGA Championship.

The final major gets under way Thursday, already in the record books without a single shot having been hit that counts on the card. Hazeltine National measures an official 7,674 yards, making it the longest course in major championship history.

The previous record was 7,643 yards last year at Torrey Pines for the U.S. Open. Before that, the record belonged to Medinah No. 3, which was 7,561 yards for the 2006 PGA Championship. And before that, it was 7,514 yards at Whistling Straits for the '04 PGA.

"Looking forward to playing a major one day that does not promote itself as the longest ever," Geoff Ogilvy said on Twitter.

If that's the worst anyone can say, Hazeltine is doing much better. Dave Hill brought plenty of attention to his course in the suburbs

Lots to be learned from sordid Pitino affair

There are a lot of lessons to be learned from the lurid revelations about Rick Pitino, not the least of which are that moral depravity and dishonesty may not mean what you think and that the president of the University of Louisville should be a little more careful in choosing his words.

Perhaps the most important, though, is this: A coach is only as great as the

Pedro returns to bigs with a win over Cubs

CHICAGO — Pedro Martinez returned to the majors with a win, pitching five innings and leading the Philadelphia Phillies over the Chicago Cubs 12-5 Wednesday night.

Martinez (1-0) gave up three runs and seven hits, striking out five. The World Series champion Phillies signed the three-time Cy Young Award winner on July 15.

The 37-year-old Martinez had not pitched in the big leagues since last season with the New York Mets.

Shane Victorino, Jimmy Rollins and Raul Ibanez homered as the NL East leaders sent the Cubs to their fourth straight loss.

ROCKIES 8, PIRATES 0

DENVER — Ubaldo Jimenez pitched three-hit ball for eight innings and Carlos Gonzalez homered early, sending Colorado over Pittsburgh.

Jimenez (10-9) won his fourth straight decision. He became the fourth member of the Rockies' rotation with double-digit victories, joining Jason Marquis, Aaron Cook and Jorge De La Rosa.

MILWAUKEE — Adrian

Philadelphia Phillies starting pitcher Pedro Martinez pumps his fist after getting Chicago Cubs batter Kosuke Fukudome to fly out for the third out in the fifth inning Wednesday at Wrigley Field in Chicago.

Gonzalez hit a go-ahead double in a four-run seventh inning and San Diego held on to beat struggling Milwaukee.

Prince Fielder reached 100 RBIs in the shortest amount of games in Brewers' history, but it was overshadowed by the flurry of moves the team made, including sending shortstop J.J. Hardy to the minors to give prospect Alcides Escobar a chance.

CARDINALS 5, REDS 2

ST. LOUIS — Chris Carpenter won his seventh straight decision and beat Cincinnati for the third consecutive time, and Albert Pujols homered for the second game in a row in the St. Louis 5-2 victory.

The first four hitters in the St. Louis lineup had at least two hits, with Matt Holliday going 3-for-4 and contributing an RBI double to a three-run first.

GIANTS 4, DODGERS 2, 10 INNINGS

SAN FRANCISCO — Juan Uribe hit a game-ending two-run homer with one out in the 10th inning and San Francisco avoided a three-game sweep by archrival Los Angeles.

Brian Wilson (4-5) pitched 11-3 innings with four strikeouts for the win on a wild day in which the benches cleared and both Giants manager Bruce Bochy and bench coach — and acting manager — Ron Wotus were ejected in separate arguments.

METS 6, DIAMONDBACKS 4

PHOENIX — Cory Sullivan tripled twice and Gary Sheffield had two singles in his return to the lineup, helping the Mets avoid a three-game sweep.

Luis Castillo's pinch-hit single with two outs off Rauch Jon (2-1) brought in the go-ahead run, then Sullivan tripled to the right-center gap to make it 5-3. A wild pitch by Arizona reliever Daniel Schlereth allowed a run in the ninth.

BRAVES 6, NATIONALS 2

ATLANTA — Adam LaRoche gave the Braves the lead with a seventh-inning homer, his second of the game, as Atlanta continued its second-half surge.

LaRoche snapped a 2-2 tie with his seventh-inning homer off Jorge Sosa (1-1). He had a second-inning homer off Craig Stammen and drove in a third run with a bases-loaded walk.

ASTROS 14, MARLINS 6

MIAMI — Hunter Pence hit two three-run homers for a career-high six RBIs to power Houston.

Pence's home runs highlighted a five-run first inning and a seven-run fourth that chased Ricky Nolasco (8-8). Florida had won five straight.

AMERICAN LEAGUE RED SOX 8, TIGERS 2

BOSTON — Josh Beckett pitched seven strong innings for his major league-high 14th win, and Mike Lowell and Jason Bay homered as Boston beat Detroit 8-2 on Wednesday night.

The Red Sox won their third straight and sent AL Central-leading Detroit to its fourth loss in five games. Boston has won seven straight against the Tigers.

YANKEES 4, BLUE JAYS 3, 11 INNINGS

NEW YORK — Robinson Cano homered and hit a game-ending RBI single in the 11th inning for New York.

Alex Rodriguez got the winning rally started when he was hit by a pitch from Shawn Camp (1-6) with one out. Rodriguez was checked on by manager Joe Girardi and a trainer but stayed in the game, eventually moving up on Jorge Posada's single and scoring when Cano lined Camp's first pitch into the gap in right-center.

RANGERS 5, INDIANS 0

CLEVELAND — Texas rookie Tommy Hunter turned the shutout tables on Cleveland, pitching into the eighth inning.

Hunter (5-2) gave up six hits and struck out five without a walk over a career-high 7 2-3 innings as the Rangers bounced back from a 5-0 loss to Cleveland on Tuesday with their eighth shutout.

ATHLETICS 6, ORIOLES 3

BALTIMORE — Landon Powell homered in Oakland's four-run fourth inning, and the Athletics won their straight series for the first time since April 2008.

Rookie Vin Mazzaro (4-8) allowed three runs, two earned, in 5-1/3 innings to post his second consecutive win after an eight-game skid. Andrew Bailey worked a perfect ninth for his 17th save in 21 opportunities.

ANGELS 10, RAYS 5

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Gary Matthews Jr. put the Angels ahead with a three-run homer in the sixth, Howie Kendrick added another three-run shot in the seventh, and Los Angeles (68-44) finished a three-game sweep of the Rays to move a season-best 24 games over .500.

TWINS 7, ROYALS 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Joe Crede hit a three-run homer in his return to the lineup, and Francisco Liriano had his best start in two months for Minnesota.

Crede, who had not played since Aug. 6 due to a sore right shoulder, needed two cortisone shots in the joint before returning.

you could have made that play?"

Right behind the starters are a trio of guys itching to get on the field in Jamar Taylor, Garcia Day and Antwon Murray.

"I just have to know my role on the team," said Taylor, a true sophomore. "I came in for some passing downs last season. This year hopefully I can come in for a couple more. With my experience, I can get in a little bit."

Yates has made an impression on his young corners.

"He never lets you settle for less," Taylor said. "We're on this thing, trying to get from good to great."

It's a struggle to take the conversation away from Wilson, but it always comes back to the senior, the WAC preseason player of the year.

"They're humble kids, they're not big-headed," Yates said. "The key to that is the leader. (Wilson) is out here working his butt off everyday, so they just follow him."

Said Day: "There are certain things you don't understand, but when you see him do it, then it starts to make sense and makes it easier for you. It's just awesome watching a player like that, running, making tackles and interceptions. His enthusiasm and intensity set the stage for how you need to play?"

Wilson doesn't have to sweat his starting spot, but he values the guys playing behind him.

"They should be fighting to play," Wilson said.

"Competition will bring out the best in everybody and the best one will play, that's the best thing about this team.

The best players will play; the smartest players will play. There's always a role for somebody. You keep working hard, you'll find a role on this team and you will play?"

Montoya fanned 117 batters in just 11 appearances at Class 1A Wells High last season, amassing at least 15 strikeouts on five occasions. He came to Twin Falls for a workout, and was impressive enough to earn an invite to train with the team. From there, it's down to the pitcher to prove he belongs at the college level.

"Bryce is not a kid that we know a whole bunch about. Obviously he dominated the small schools in Nevada and came up and worked out for us," Walker said. "He's an interesting kid ... it's just tough to tell because he comes from such a small area and doesn't have summer ball. But it doesn't matter how they got here, we're all here and we all have to earn our stripes."

Beverly left Oregon State to pursue more playing time in his sophomore season. The Salt Lake City native was highly touted out of high school, and Walker said it wouldn't take much more than regular time on the field to help the utility player recapture his form. Walker added that Oregon State already indicated interest in bringing Beverley back for his junior season after a year at CSI, once his recruiting re-opens.

CSI's final roster is expected to feature 17 newcomers and nine returnees from last year's squad. Walker confirmed that shortstop Tanner Craswell committed to return to Twin Falls, adding that he expected right-handed pitcher Colby Robison to do likewise and round out the roster at 26.

Twin Falls native Kasey Jeroue will sit out the 2010 season and be a team manager, Walker said, to try and get healthy in the hopes of playing in 2011. Jeroue was named the 2007 Region Four-Five-Six Player of the Year in his junior year for Twin Falls, but was beset by injuries the past two seasons.

"His body's just not ready, and who knows if it ever will be," Walker said. "It just gives him a chance to stay involved with us and hopefully it works out. We love that kid to death, and we're glad he's going to stay with us."

Super Bowl rematch? Not exactly

PITTSBURGH — You can't call this Tampa II.

Six months after meeting in the Super Bowl, the Arizona Cardinals and Pittsburgh Steelers begin the preseason the way they ended last season by playing each other.

Just don't refer to it as a rematch of the Super Bowl in Tampa, not when Ben Roethlisberger and Santonio Holmes, Larry Fitzgerald and Kurt Warner will be on the bench Thursday night for at least three quarters and maybe longer.

"Most of the guys that played a lot in that game probably won't play much at all in this game," Warner said. "That's more for league hype than it is anything else. It doesn't really matter until the real season kicks off."

No, exhibition games are for trying out the rookies, testing new offensive and defensive alignments and sorting out the roster, not for renewing any grudges.

As Steelers cornerback Deshaea Townsend said, the Super Bowl was played an eon ago by NFL standards, given the constant player turnover.

"It's just another game," Townsend said of one of only several NFL preseason games in which one team will fly nearly cross-country to play another. "The Super Bowl is gone and we won it, so we really don't care about the rematch."

Steelers coach Mike Tomlin didn't bother to get out the Super Bowl tapes for review, saying what happened on Feb. 1 has no effect on shaping a team for the new season.

"The big thing is to come out and play with tempo and speed," he said. "You run some core stuff you know they're familiar with. ... We'll put some base football in all three phases, something guys are capable of executing because that's what we want to see them do. We want to see them execute at a high level?"

The other games tonight are New England at Philadelphia, with Tom Brady expected to quarterback the Patriots for the first time since the 2008 opener in which he injured his knee; Washington at Baltimore; and Dallas at Oakland.

VIKINGS PASSING GAME STILL A WORK IN PROGRESS

MANKATO, Minn. — Tarvaris Jackson didn't try to hide the uncertainty following a tense practice that served as Minnesota's final on-field workout at training camp this year.

The Vikings' passing game remains a work in progress. Jackson, Sage Rosenfels and the rest of their offensive teammates have much to prove.

"We've got to kind of find ourselves," Jackson said, adding: "When we have to throw the football, can we throw it? Not just on running downs and first downs. When we have to throw the football late in the game, can we do it? We've just got to try and get to that level and be consistent."

Brett Favre or not, this was going to be the season's biggest focus. Jackson and Rosenfels have each shown ups and downs during their auditions for the starting quarterback job over the past two weeks. Full-team drills in Wednesday's workout exposed more of the downs.

Madieu Williams intercepted a pass by Jackson over the middle, and Antoine Winfield nearly did the same on Jackson's next throw, which he dropped. Quarterbacks coach Kevin Rogers was in a fit.

Rosenfels later hit a defensive lineman's helmet with one of his passes, and Erin Henderson picked it off. Conclusions can't fairly be drawn from practice performance, but this was clearly not a good day for the offense.

COLTS SAFETY BREAKS HAND IN PRACTICE

TERRE HAUTE, Ind. — Colts safety Antoine Bethea has cracked a bone in his right hand, leaving him on the sideline for both of Indianapolis' practices Wednesday.

Coach Jim Caldwell did not give a timetable for Bethea's return. Caldwell said Bethea would be fitted for a cast and would return when he can play while wearing the cast.

Losing Bethea is a blow to a Colts defense that is still missing safety Bob Sanders. Caldwell said Wednesday morning he wasn't sure Sanders would be back for the regular-season opener. Sanders had offseason knee surgery to clean up the same knee that kept him out of 10 games last season.

BRONCOS RELEASE OBT-INJURED RUNNING BACK TORAIN

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. — Former coach Mike Shanahan compared him to Terrell Davis, yet Ryan Torain's short and bitter career in Denver ended with more injuries than touchdowns.

The Broncos waived their oft-injured second-year running back on Wednesday after he was diagnosed with a strained knee ligament, the latest in a series of physical setbacks to dog the talented athlete.

A fifth-round pick last year after an injury-plagued career at Arizona State, Torain missed almost all of his rookie season. He broke his left elbow during training camp and played just parts of two games before a season-ending left knee injury sidelined him once again.

CITY ATTORNEY WON'T CHARGE PHILLIPS

SAN DIEGO — The San Diego city attorney's office says Chargers linebacker Shaun Phillips won't be charged in a case in which he was accused of striking a security guard in the face at a downtown hotel in late April.

Phillips was cited by police for misdemeanor battery after a security guard at the Ivy Hotel said the player hit him.

City attorney's spokeswoman Gina Coburn said that after an investigation, the city attorney's office declined to prosecute Phillips.

Coburn said in an e-mail Wednesday that officials didn't believe there was enough evidence to prove the case beyond a reasonable doubt.

USC reloads for run at another Pac-10 title

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The rebuilding job facing Pete Carroll this month would put most college football programs in a stationary stall.

Yet to most people who don't work on USC's downtown campus, the Trojans' tasks apparently don't even resemble a speed bump.

Even with just 12 returning starters — perhaps none in the defensive front seven — and even with three inexperienced quarterbacks battling for the starting job, the Trojans are the runaway pick by the media and Carroll's fellow coaches to rule the West Coast again. Such is the respect and fear engendered by seven consecutive Pac-10 titles, BCS bowl berths and 11-victory seasons for Carroll's powerhouse program.

"Nothing has really changed for us," Carroll said. "We've been able to see the approach and the philosophy work for us. We've been able to maintain the level of coaching it takes to stay at this level. I have no idea why it should change, although the rest of the coaches in this league should have something to say about that."

Those coaches respect talent, and USC has been rolling in it ever since Carroll and his indefatigable recruiting machine took charge. The spots vacated by Mark Sanchez, Rey Mauluga, Fili Moala, Brian Cushing and Patrick Turner are being circled by a wealth of the nation's top players, all eager to become a memorable part of the Trojans' tradition.

Nobody is more eager than quarterbacks Aaron Corp, Matt Barkley and Mitch Mustain, who still haven't settled the duel for Sanchez's starting spot. Although Corp won the job coming out of the spring, Carroll repeatedly has said things could change during the four weeks of camp.

Barkley was the nation's top high school recruit, and he graduated from high school one semester early so he could participate in spring drills. He seems to be keeping pace with Corp, who isn't about to give up his chance to follow Carson Palmer, Matt Leinart, John David Booty and Sanchez.

"I've talked to Carson, and I talked to Mark this morning," Corp said after the Trojans' first fall practice on Saturday. "They say, 'Just take over,' and that's what I'm trying to do."

the coach was having drunken sex with a woman he had met just hours earlier. Tim Sypher valued his job so much that he gave Pitino the keys to his condominium, then kept watch as the coach gave the same woman $3,000 so she could go across state lines and get an abortion.

Oops, scratch that.

The latest word from Pitino's lawyer is that the basketball coach was simply so concerned Karen Sypher had no health insurance that he reached into his pocket for a wad of bills to pay for it. Sypher was apparently posted upstairs at the clandestine rendezvous to make sure Pitino got a receipt for his largesse.

Not a problem. If only every rich person in America were as generous as Pitino, there would be no need for President Obama to campaign for health care reform.

Tim Sypher took it even further, though, if you believe the woman whose accusations shattered the pious facade of the coach who, to many, is the face of college basketball. According to Karen Sypher, Tim Sypher not only took her to get the abortion and coached her in what to say, but later married her, hence the same last name.

None of this seems to particularly bother the people in charge at Louisville, who spent much of Wednesday hiding from questions about a hugely popular coach who went 31-6 last year and came within one game of the Final Four. The athletic director issued a statement praising Pitino for being truthful, while president James Ramsey said only that some details of the whole sordid mess were "surprising."

Disgusting would be a more accurate description, but, hey, Pitino wins games and lots of them. No reason to jeopardize that, especially now that archrival Kentucky has its own superstar coach.

Sure, Pitino's contract lists moral depravity and dishonesty as possible causes for termination. But let's get real.

Winning basketball games is a lot more important than taking the high moral ground at most universities. Besides, where is Louisville going to get another coach who can win and win big?

No need to even look. Pitino said Wednesday he was at Louisville "as long as they will have me" and, by the mutely response of the university to the scandal, that figures to be as long as he keeps winning.

Pitino's attorney was quick to remind everyone that the worst of Karen Sypher's accusations — that Pitino raped her not once, but twice — were not found credible by police and that the woman faces charges for allegedly trying to extort money from the coach. He then dusted off the old law school playbook to blame the media for creating a "feeding frenzy" around the coach.

Sadly, a lot of the blame lies with Pitino himself.

He's a father of five who wears his religion so openly he sometimes has a Roman Catholic priest alongside for counsel and support. He's paid millions to coach basketball and win games, a job that includes leading impressionable young men and teaching them the value of making good judgment calls.

Yet he's drunk in a restaurant having sex with a woman he just met while his assistant listens in? He's giving her money in a secret meeting at another assistant's place after she tells him she's pregnant with his baby and plans to get an abortion?

Say what you will about Bobby Knight, but this wouldn't happen on his watch. He might throw a few chairs in a restaurant, but he wouldn't be having sex on top of one.

Pitino's apologists — and there are many — will surely try to spin the whole sordid mess and make it all about Karen Sypher. She, after all, waited six years to bring up a claim of rape to police.

Just how far they get may determine how long Pitino stays. Read her police interview and she sounds a lot more together than some have made her out to be, but there will likely be a trial on the extortion charges and new details will just as likely emerge about both her and Pitino.

Ultimately, the people in Louisville will decide for themselves whether winning means more than anything else. So will parents of recruits, who will be faced with decisions of their own about leaving their sons in the care of a man whose moral compass went awry.

Mexico edges U.S. in Cup qualifier

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Miguel Sabah scored in the 82nd minute, lifting Mexico to a 2-1 victory over the United States in a World Cup qualifier Wednesday.

The win strengthened Mexico's chances of reaching next year's World Cup in South Africa, but it remained fourth in CONCACAF qualifying, with only the top three teams automatically advancing. Mexico now has nine points, one behind both the U.S. and Honduras, who beat group leader Costa Rica 4-0 on Wednesday.

"This wasn't a live-or-die game for us," Landon Donovan said. "It was for them."

Sabah, who came in three minutes earlier, was all alone in front of the net when he took a feed from Efraim Juarez and beat goalkeeper Tim Howard, bringing Mexico's home record against the Americans to 23-0-1. Defender Jay DeMerit made a key tackle on Juarez in the area, but the ball, instead of bounding out-of-bounds, went to Sabah, who put it away.

"I think it's a tight game and a fair score," U.S. coach Bob Bradley said. "It's a tough loss to have so many guys work so hard and then give up a late goal. The feeling inside is one of great disappointment?"

The Americans nearly silenced the piercing drone of horns, drums and high-pitched screams in the ninth minute when Charlie Davies gave the U.S. a 1-0 lead on a world-class goal, the fourth of his career. Donovan turned near midfield and threaded a pass through three Mexicans on the left side to Davies, who timed a perfect run and curled the ball just inside the far post from 15 yards.

It was the first time the Americans led a match at Azteca Stadium, which opened 43 years ago.

"This is what you live for, especially as a striker scoring big-time goals," Davies said.

The U.S. edge lasted only 10 minutes. In the 19th, Cuauhtemoc Blanco found Israel Castro, who equalized on a wicked 27-yard shot off underside of the crossbar and just over a leaping Howard's outstretched hand.

was greeted by cheers of "Ole, Ole."

Mexico won the Gold Cup last month using many of the same players. But the U.S. team the Mexicans routed 5-0 in the final was a lesser squad than the one on the field at Azteca.

Still, no U.S. squads win in Mexico, and Sabah made sure that long string of futility continued.

"We did a good job starting the game well and scoring," Donovan said. "They made one play at the end that made the difference."

"It's hard to play here, man. It wears you out. It's just exhausting."

In the 74th minute, tempers flared. With Davies down on the field — apparently with cramps — several Mexican players tried to pull him off the ground. That angered Benny Feilhaber, who shoved several Mexicans as Howard came out of goal to separate the sides.

Three American defenders — Oguchi Onyewu, DeMerit and Carlos Bocanegra — drew yellow cards in a game that became increasingly physical. Onyewu carried a yellow into the match, meaning he will miss the next qualifier on Sept. 5 against El Salvador in Sandy, Utah.

Length

of Minneapolis in the 1970 U.S. Open when he said, "All you need is 80 acres of corn and some cows." And he was the runner-up.

The buzz word this week is long.

Scott Verplank, who is more on the short side of driving distance, was asked how many players could talk about Hazeltine without mentioning length or some variation of the word. "Zero," he said.

"The best hole on the course is No. 16, and it's the second-shortest hole," he said of the 402-yard signature hole that runs along Hazeltine Lake. "The shortest one is No. 14, the one the same length as the par 3 before it."

The PGA Championship bills itself as "Glory's Last Shot" because it is the final chance of the year to win a major. That takes on particular significance for Tiger Woods, whose five victories this year do not include the kind he covets the most.

Woods is trying to match Jack Nicklaus and Walter Hagen with his fifth PGA Championship victory, and continue toward a more obscure record. Hagen won a major six years in a row; Woods is at four.

The world's No. 1 player came close seven years ago at Hazeltine, closing with four straight birdies to finish one shot behind Rich Beem. The course was a mere 7,360 yards for the 2007 PGA Championship. Woods couldn't help but notice the difference.

"Oh, man," he said when asked what he had seen of the course. "It's a heck of a lot longer than what we played in 2002. It's going to be a great test all week. You're going to have to hit the ball pretty good here."

Hazeltine gets most of its length in the par 5s, the shortest of which is 572 yards and might be the only one where players can try to reach in two shots. Conveniently enough, the left side of the green is guarded by water.

Lot 7 in Block 1 of Glynn's Addition, Twin Falls County, Idaho, recorded in Book 6 of Plats, Page 8.

The Trustee has no knowledge of a more particular description of the above referenced real property, but for purposes of compliance with Section 60-113 Idaho Code, the Trustee has been informed the address of 1878 Sigrid Ave., Twin Falls, ID, is sometimes associated with the said real property.

This Trustee's Sale is subject to a bankruptcy filing, a payoff, a reinstatement or any other conditions of which the Trustee is not aware that would cause the cancellation of this sale. Further, if any of these conditions exist, this sale may be null and void, the successful bidder's funds shall be returned, and the Trustee and the Beneficiary shall not be liable to the successful bidder for any damages.

Said sale will be made without covenant or warranty regarding title, possessions or encumbrances to satisfy the obligation secured by and pursuant to the power of sale conferred in the Deed of Trust executed by Maricela Samargis, a single person, as Grantor(s) with Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. as the Beneficiary, under the Deed of Trust recorded April 25, 2002, as Instrument No. 2002007909, in the records of Twin Falls County, Idaho. The Beneficial interest of said Deed of Trust was subsequently assigned to Midfirst Bank, recorded July 15, 2009, as Instrument No. 2009-016164, in the records of said County.

THE ABOVE GRANTORS ARE NAMED TO COMPLY WITH SECTION 45-1506(4)(a), IDAHO CODE. NO REPRESENTATION IS MADE THAT THEY ARE, OR ARE NOT, PRESENTLY RESPONSIBLE FOR THIS OBLIGATION.

The default for which this sale is to be made is the failure to pay the amount due under the certain Promissory Note and Deed of Trust, in the amounts called for thereunder as follows: Monthly payments in the amount of $547.40 for the months of January 2009 through and including to the date of sale, together with late charges and monthly payments accruing. The sum owing on the obligation secured by said Deed of Trust is $58,616.69 as principal, plus service charges, attorney's fees, costs of this foreclosure, any and all funds expended by Beneficiary to protect their security interest, and interest accruing at the rate of 7.000% from December 1, 2008, together with delinquent taxes plus penalties and interest to the date of sale.

The Beneficiary elects to sell or cause the trust property to be sold to satisfy said obligation.

 INDUSTRIAL FROM STORAGE (3.17 CFS) (1600 AF)
 Total Diversion: (3.17 CFS, 1600 AF)
 Date Filed: 9/4/2007
 Place Of Use: INDUSTRIAL and INDUSTRIAL FROM STORAGE uses within parts of S12, T11N, R16E; INDUSTRIAL STORAGE within parts of S1, T11N R16E, within parts of S6, T11N, R17E, within parts of Sections 25 and 36, T12N, R16E and also within parts of S31, T12N, R17E.

Application seeks to appropriate 3.17 cfs of groundwater diverted from two locations in the mine excavation pit for industrial use for the mining and milling of ore at the Thompson Creek Mine site located approximately 5.0 - 8.0 miles west and 2.75 - 5.25 miles north of Clayton. The application also describes up to 1,600 ac-ft of potential storage use of the groundwater diverted from the mine excavation pit to reflect potential storage in the tailings impoundment prior to and after use in the mill facility. This application proposes the diversion and use of water tributary to a federally designated Wild & Scenic River. The decreed minimum stream flow rights for the federal Wild & Scenic Rivers are subordinate to certain categories of water use and to specific amounts of water use established after the minimum stream flow. The industrial storage proposed in this application will benefit from the subordination provision because it is for storage purposes and the industrial diversion rate will be applied to the subordination amounts specified in the decree for the Salmon Wild & Scenic River.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED CHANGES TO WATER RIGHTS

BARBARA E GARDINER, 1750 S HWY 81, MALTA, ID 83342 has filed Application No. 75421 for changes to the following water rights within CASSIA County: Right Nos. 43-300, 43-301, 43-2573, 43-4232, 43-4233, 43-4240, 43-10123. The purpose of the transfer is to change a portion of the above rights as follows: This application proposes to tie all the existing Cassia Creek and groundwater rights on this farm together in a single irrigation system. Some land will be dried up so a new pivot can be installed on the south end of the farm. The existing wells and river headgate will continue to be used; no new wells will be drilled. The farm is located 2-3 miles south of the Hwy 77/81 junction at Malta on both sides of Hwy 81*ROBERT & KATHI MEYERS LTD FAMILY PARTNERSHIP, 3024 WOODRIDGE DRIVE; TWIN FALLS, ID 83301 has filed Application No. 70893 for changes to the following water rights within TWIN FALLS County: Right No. 47-7464. The purpose of the transfer is to change a portion of the above right as follows: This application proposes to change the nature of use for 5 cfs from Cedar Draw Creek from commercial fish propagation to recreation. Three dirt ponds will be dug or built about 1/2 mile NE of the existing fish farm. Instead of returning to Cedar Draw Creek and then running NW into the Snake River, this water will now enter the Snake River about 1 1/4 miles upstream from Cedar Draw Creek. An existing irrigation ditch will carry this water to the new ponds. The ponds will be located just south of the Snake River about 1 3/4 miles west and 5 1/4 miles north of Filer.* SIX S RANCH LLC, 1354 E.SIX S RANCH RD;DECLO ID 83323 has filed Application No. 75772 for changes to the following water rights within CASSIA County: Right Nos. 45-297, 45-247. The purpose of the transfer is to change a portion of the above rights as follows: Application filed to add a new authorized point of diversion on White Pine Canyon Creek for two water rights that currently allow for the diversion of up to 3.2 cfs from White Pine Canyon Creek &/or Brim Creek for the irrigation of 127 acres within a 670.3 acre permissible place of use. The new proposed point of diversion will be located approximately 3.35 miles south and 1.7 miles west of Albion, and approximately 0.5 mile upstream of the currently described point of diversion from White Pine Canyon Creek for the two previously mentioned rights.To see a full description of these rights and the proposed transfers, please see www.idwr.idaho.gov/apps/ExtSearch/WRFfiling.asp.*Protests may be submitted based on the criteria of Idaho Code § 42-222. Said sale will be made without covenant or warranty regarding title, possession or encumbrances to satisfy the obligation secured by and pursuant to the power of sale conferred in the Deed of Trust executed by CHRISTOPHER M. KOCH, a Single Person, Grantor, to Charles W. Fawcett, Successor Trustee, for the benefit and security of WELLS FARGO BANK, N.A., recorded February 28, 2007, as Instrument No. 2007-004642, Mortgage records of Twin Falls County, Idaho; and assigned to the IDAHO HOUSING AND FINANCE ASSOCIATION by Assignment of Deed of Trust recorded on February 28, 2007, as Instrument No. 2007-004644, Mortgage records of Twin Falls County, Idaho. THE ABOVE GRANTOR IS NAMED TO COMPLY WITH SECTION 45 1506 (4)(a), IDAHO CODE. NO REPRESENTATION IS MADE THAT HE IS, OR IS NOT, PRESENTLY RESPONSIBLE FOR THIS OBLIGATION.

The default for which this sale is to be made is the failure to pay when due, monthly installment payments under the Deed of Trust Note dated February 27, 2007, in the amount of $679.00 each, for the months of March through July, 2009, inclusive; and for each and every month thereafter until date of sale or reimbursement. All delinquent payments are now due, plus accumulated late charges, plus any costs or expenses associated with this foreclosure. The accrued interest is at the rate of 5.59% per annum from February 1, 2009. The principal balance owing as of this date on the obligation secured by said Deed of Trust is $86,290.80, plus accrued interest at the rate of 5.59% per annum from February 1, 2009.

Wary parents suggest ways to keep kids safe in public places

DEAR ABBY: "Lisa in Phoenix" (June 12) questioned whether taking her 7-year-old son into the ladies' room would be better than having her wait outside the men's room. You advised her to stand outside the men's room and announce loudly that she will be "waiting right there." Abby, children have been violated in a matter of seconds in the play areas of fast food restaurants with the parents RIGHT THERE!

As a mother, I feel the advice you gave Lisa will give her a false sense of security and put her child in danger. I would have told Lisa that before they go anywhere, she should make sure her son goes to the bathroom at home. If he has to go while they are out, she should go to the men's room, knock on the door and announce that she is with a child. If there is no answer, GO IN AND BE SURE NO ONE IS INSIDE. If she's uncomfortable doing it, ask an employee to check. Then wait outside the bathroom. If a man needs to go in, she can explain the situation.

Never assume that simply standing guard outside the door will deter a molester. They couldn't care less.

- VIGILANT MOM IN SOUTH CAROLINA

DEAR VIGILANT: Your suggestions are helpful, and thank you for offering them. Other readers volunteered alternative solutions to

Jeanne Phillips

Lisa's dilemma.

Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I have a 7-year-old son and I do not allow him to go unsupervised into a men's room. Anyone could be behind that door and anything could happen in less than a minute's time. We must protect our children even if it means that sometimes they have to suffer embarrassment.

A friend with two sons offered an interesting alternative. She would allow her sons to use the men's room if they talked to her while she stood outside the door. If they stopped talking, they knew it meant she was coming in.

- DONNA INTYNER, N.C.

DEAR ABBY: Your advice strikes a balance between commonsense safety and "helicopter parenting." Having been a teacher for 42 years, I see an alarming increase in the number of parents who want to be in lockstep with their children 24/7. It can be stunting, and it does not prepare them for life in the real world. Of course, parents should take some precautions for the sake of safety, but don't be so paralyzed with fear that you keep your children from becoming self-directed individuals.

- MANHATTAN, KAN. TEACHER

DEAR ABBY: When my son was 7 or 8, he, too, was embarrassed about going into the restroom with me. I gave him a whistle with instructions to blow it if anyone bothered him while I waited outside the men's room. The whistle also came with additional instructions: "Never blow it as a joke just to see if I'll come running, because if you do, you are in DEEP trouble!"

- LORI IN TEANECK, N.J.

DEAR ABBY: Lisa should invest in a pair of two-way radios. This way, her son goes into the restroom with an additional layer of protection. She should also inform him to always use the stall so he can lock the door.

- MARK IN GATOR COUNTRY

DEAR ABBY: Your advice to Lisa was good, but she should also discuss personal safety with her son. He needs to know exactly what to do if anyone says, or does, anything inappropriate. As parents, we can't be everywhere our children are at all times, and that's why we need to equip them with life skills to handle/avoid dangerous situations.

happy with just one. People may indulge in extravagance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You shouldn't expect someone else to hand you the answers when you are perfectly capable of finding them yourself.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You will know the truth when you hear it even if it comes to you in disguise. This is a good day to ask someone's opinion.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): No one knows what is best for you but you. It will pay off in the long run to be an independent thinker and to avoid insincerity.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Results may be slow, but sure. Don't be too caught up in your concern that the universe quickly points out failure so quickly.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Inspiration is instrumental to your success. Your warmth is an asset, but remember not to overstep the bounds of propriety.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): This might be a good time to bark up the right tree with a special someone. Merge your ideas with the plans of others for success.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If you have promised to do something, follow through. You gain by being true to your word and dependable in a crisis.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your closest friends will give you the clues necessary to find the right formula for success. Follow the hints to land a deal.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You can capitalize on your charm and business connections right now. This is a good time to make crucial changes.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Everyone seems to gloss over uncomfortable facts. You might find that someone close is not as tolerant or generous as you believed.

IF AUGUST 13 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY:

Too many cooks spoil the broth – and too much input from others can distract you from the business at hand. Follow through on your present business plan quickly and don't be waylaid by the hopes of greener pastures. You are doing great, but need to avoid extravagance. If you miss the golden opportunity that is presented this week, you may be tempted to make a change in November that could be unwise. Next February is the next time when the stars are favorable for successful business activity or making your ambitions a reality. April brings a beneficial time to ask for favors or make future plans with a special someone.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You won't sing "wasted days and wasted nights" if you find ways to be energetic. Pry yourself away from daydreams.

In 1934, the satirical comic strip "Li'l Abner," created by Al Capp, made its debut.

In 1981, in a ceremony at his California ranch, President Ronald Reagan signed a historic package of tax and budget reductions.

In 1989, searchers in Ethiopia found the wreckage of a plane which had disappeared almost a week earlier while carrying Texas Congressman Mickey Leland and 14 other people – there were no survivors.

Five years ago: A stronger-than-expected Hurricane Charley roared ashore Florida's Gulf Coast as a dangerous Category 4 storm, resulting in at least ten U.S. deaths. Hutu marauders raided a U.N. refugee camp in western Burundi, shooting and hacking at least 150 Congolese Tutsis to death. The summer Olympic games officially opened in Athens. TV chef Julia Child died in Montecito, Calif., two days short of her 92nd birthday.

One year ago: A man barged into the Arkansas Democratic headquarters in Little Rock and opened fire, killing state party chairman Bill Gwatney before speeding off in a pickup. (Police later shot and killed the gunman, Timothy Dale Johnson.) Michael Phelps swam into history as the winningest Olympic athlete ever with his 10th and 11th career gold medals. Phelps won the 200-meter butterfly, then swam the leadoff of a runaway victory by the U.S. 800 freestyle relay team. Sandy Allen, who was recognized as the world's tallest female at 7 feet, 7 inches tall, died in Shelbyville, Ind., at age 53.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"Even God cannot change the past." —Agathon

No, the editor did not fall asleep. Today's deal is apparently the same as yesterday's, but there are some subtle changes to the East and West cards. Again, you have to play four hearts, but this time, after winning the diamond lead in hand, you take the two top trumps and discover that it is East, not West, who has the trump trick.

Whereas yesterday you were heavily favored to make your game, today you are a virtual lock to take 10 tricks, so long as you handle the play carefully.

Again, the natural instinct is to exit in trumps to force the opponents to play the black-suits for you, but, as in yesterday's case, that would be a mistake.

This time, the right thing to do is to analyze which suit you want to force East to lead for you. Today's answer is spades, whereas if West had the long hearts, the answer would be clubs. The winning line, after you take the opening diamond lead and draw two rounds of trump, is to strip off the diamonds and play king, ace and a third club, not caring who wins the queen. If it is East, he is immediately employed; if West, he will exit with a spade and dummy's king will win the trick.

Only now do you play the third trump to East and wait for the forced spade-play back into your tenace or for a ruff-sluff. Either way you have 10 tricks.

ANSWER: Not all 12-counts belong in game facing an opening bid. With this hand, invite to game by bidding two no-trump. If partner passes, you may find yourself playing against the field, but you can be sure game way will be no walk in the park. Focus on making the right bid, not following the sheep!
