Role of gas prices unclear in Idaho crash statistics

By John Plestina Times-News writer

Four-dollar gas frustrated motorists and stretched budgets last year. However, pricey petrol may have also saved lives.

According to data released by the Idaho Transportation Department, fatal crashes in the state decreased by 8 percent in 2008, a decrease an ITD report said is likely due to a reduction of vehicles on the road due to high fuel prices.

According to that report, there were 25,002 reported crashes across the state last year -a5.5 percent decrease from 2007. Fatalities for the same period decreased from 252 to 232.

However, at least one Idaho State Police official said that this year's dip in gas prices to around the $2.50 mark hasn't necessarily led to an increase in fatal crashes.

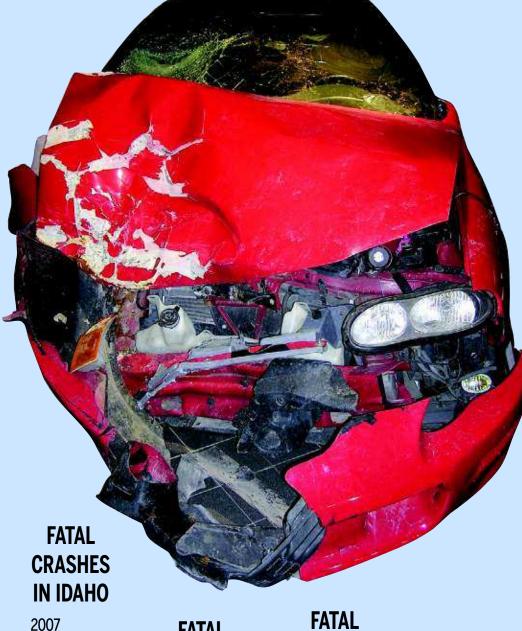

"We do monitor our crash statistics and our high-crash areas, and really we are about the same as last year so far," he said.

In Twin Falls County, fatal crashes decreased from 16 in 2007 to seven in 2008, while total crashes were reduced from 1,093 to 1,047 during the same span, according to ITD. Response to those crashes was split between the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office and city police departments.

According to Twin Falls County Sheriff's Spokeswoman Lori Stewart, crashes have continued to decrease this year.

T.F. Council considering speed changes

Times-News staff

The Twin Falls City Council tonight will consider two separate proposals to reduce speed limits in town during a regular meeting. Citing concerns about pedestrian safety in the Snake River Canyon, the Twin Falls Traffic Safety Committee wants the council to reduce the speed limit on Canyon Springs Road from the top of the grade to Centennial Park Road, from 35 mph to 25 mph. In the past 12 years, there have been 11 accidents reported, with one in the last five years, but none have involved pedestrians or bicyclists, according to information from the

If the city's elected leaders support the proposal, county and city law enforcement in Twin Falls could start citing motorists for driving faster than 25 mph on Canyon Springs Road and Centennial Park Road.

But the city's engineering department "disagrees with a speed reduction on Canyon Springs Road because drivers tend to drive at speeds they 'feel' are safe, regardless of the posting," according to a report from City Engineer Jacqueline Fields. "With limited resources, enforcement of a lower speed limit on the grade will move enforcement activities from another location."

The city council is also set to consider tonight another speed limit reduction proposal. Two concerned citizens want the speed limit on Hankins Road - from Kimberly Road to Addison Avenue — reduced from the current 50 mph to 35 mph.

The Twin Falls Traffic Safety Committee supports a 5 mph reduction in that area, though to Falls Avenue

The city council is also being asked for an extension to a final plat for Grandview Estates subdivision – to develop 133 residential lots along the southeast corner of Grandview Drive North and Federation Road.

Two public hearings are scheduled as well for tonight. Comments will be taken on the city's 2009-10 fiscal year budget, and a proposed comprehensive plan amendment will be up for discussion. The proposal would amend the future land use from a residential type, to office/professional, for property situated south of Cheney Drive West, west of Park View Drive and north of North College Road West.

The Council meets at 5 p.m. tonight at 305 Third Ave. E.

Wind farm debate splits private property concerns

By Matt Joyce Associated Press writer

GLENROCK. Wvo. Richard Grant Jr.'s family has ranched Wyoming's rugged granite-and-grass hills for generations, their 123-yearold ranch dotted with reminders of their long history - an historic schoolhouse, an old red barn and the parcels of land sold away during hard times.

But it wasn't until a few years ago that a radical prospect blew in with the stiff winds that sweep the ridge tops of the northern Laramie Range: wind turbines.

Grant welcomes the chance to get into wind energy development and generate some income. His courting of wind developers however has put him at odds with some of his neighbors, who consider a large-scale wind farm to be the industrialization of their backyards in the sparsely populated region.

"My goal is to stay in ag, be able to pass on our generations of history," Grant said. "This gives us that of 400-foot-tall wind turopportunity?

They formed the Northern Laramie Range Alliance this spring to fight industrial scale wind development in their namesake mountains and a segment of a proposed transmission line that would cut across the range.

Kenneth G. Lay, a founder of the group, said its members aren't opposed to industrial scale wind development in places such as Wyoming's eastern plains, where landowners actively marketing their land to wind developers. But the group doesn't want a big wind farm in an area it describes as "scenic, multiple-use landscapes?"

The group is also concerned about developers quietly negotiating with individual landowners.

THE REASON: The $3 billion program gives consumers rebates of up to $4,500 on new fuel-efficient cars if they trade in their gas guzzlers. As of early Friday, dealers had sold 489,269 vehicles through the program.

Medical testing at VA sites is faulted

Man infected with AIDS at Tenn. facility

By Steve Vogel The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - Army veteran Juan Rivera reported to the veterans hospital in Miami for a routine colonoscopy in May 2008. Almost a year later, the 55year-old father of two learned that the Department of Veterans Affairs had not properly sterilized the equipment used for the procedure.

A test soon after revealed that he had been infected with HIV. "The VA has issued me a death sentence," Rivera said, according to his lawyer.

A problem with sterilization practices at a VA center in Tennessee was discovered in December, and the department has notified more than 11,000 veterans who had endoscopic procedures at three of its facilities that they may have been exposed to cross-contamination. The VA has advised them to return for testing.

As of Aug. 3, eight of those family members.

patients have tested positive for HIV, 12 for hepatitis B and 37 for hepatitis C, according to the VA.

Rivera, who served in the Army for 13 years and drives a truck for the U.S. Postal Service, filed notice last month of his intent to sue the VA. The administrative claim, filed with the VA under the Federal Torts Claim Act, says that his infection was caused by the VA's failure to clean its equipment and to follow proper procedure.

"He's angry, stunned and distraught that the government he served so well for so long has done this to him," said his lawyer, Ira Leesfield.

Lawyers predict that Rivera's case marks the beginning of a rush of lawsuits against the VA alleging negligence in the handling of medical equipment.

Nashville, Tenn., lawyer Mike Sheppard said Friday that he is preparing to file claims on behalf of a dozen veterans who have contracted hepatitis B or C, as well as 50 to 60 emotional-distress claims from veterans and

Fighting in Yemen escalates

By Jeffrey Fleishman Los Angeles Times

CAIRO - Fighting in the mountains of northwestern Yemen intensified Sunday as the government announced that it had killed more than 100 Shiite Muslim rebels and humanitarian organizations voiced alarm over an estimated 100,000 people who have fled their homes since the conflict flared nearly two weeks ago.

The rebels rejected a ceasefire offer from the Sunni Muslim-dominated government at the beginning of the holy month of Ramadan on Friday. The region has since echoed with the fire of artillery, tanks and aircraft as Yemeni forces moved to crush a five-year rebellion led by Shiite militant Abdul Malik Houthi in Saada and Amran provinces. The fighting near the border with Saudi Arabia was another spasm across an increasingly unstable Yemen, a poor yet strategic country off the Gulf of Aden. U.S. officials are concerned that the government of President Ali Abdullah Saleh is engulfed in conflicts that also include a separatist insurgency in the south and growing numbers of al-Qaida fighters using the nation as a base to launch attacks across the Middle East.

Idaho has strong offense in final scrimmage of fall camp

Times-News correspondent

MOSCOW - University of Idaho head football coach Robb Akey was shuffling through lastminute preparations for Sunday's scrimmage with part of his staff when he decided to vocalize a hunch.

"I've got a feeling that one side of the ball is going to get after the other today," he predicted.

Sure enough, it was UI's offense that dazzled for much of a mild, breezy afternoon at the team's outdoor practice field. And much to Williams, a first-team Akey's liking, the Vandals flaunted all-Western expertise in a bit of everything: a Conference performer

Six wideouts/tight ends snared passes of 20 yards or longer on Sunday, helping Nathan Enderle and Brian Reader complete a combined 11 of 14 passes.

The burden of replacing player. Hardy seems ready to produce as the Vandals' designed Hback, a hybrid position that mixes tight end, fullback and receiver.

The junior has added nearly 40 pounds and two inches to his frame since coming to Moscow from Anchorage, Alaska, and he's shown a keen ability to extend the defense with deep receiving skills.

"You can't replace a guy like running game, we can Eddie Williams," said Hardy, now 6-foot-4, pounds. "Obviously he got drafted by the Redskins. He's making plays Hardy equates the Vandals' Williams won't fall on just one tight end group to the club's running backs. At both positions, UI will lean on a reservoir of talent instead of riding one key figure.

Besides Hardy, Idaho will use seniors Peter Bjorvik and Kevin Small, and perhaps true freshman Taylor Elmo of Yakima, Wash. Akey said his staff has been so impressed with Elmo's athleticism that the defensive aides want him to shift to defensive end and the offensive coaches have demanded he stay at tight end.

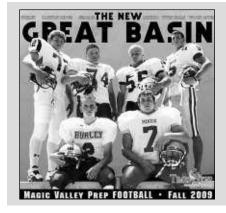

"Right now, I'm leaving him at tight end because that's a little there. We just want to follow in his more what his comfort zone is and what he'd like to play," Akey said.

With the field whittled down to nine from the original 14 starters, Newell and Lonnie Lowder began their own battle for the lead on the restart. However, the winner of the war would be Quale, who was able to pass the pair in turn

With Quale now in the lead, Lowder and Newell continued to make contact and Newell was punted out of bounds at lap 58, setting up a two-lap shootout for the win. Quale, who had problems early in the event, would maintain the front position to take the lap along the now dreaded checkered flag at lap 60, .551 seconds ahead of Lowder.

bad at first because I probably stayed out of that wreck," Quale said. "Then we got that one caution and changed our front tires. They were older tires but they worked better. I thought I had better go right after the restart. I think when I got beside Lonnie (Lowder) it looked like he was kind of anxious trying to stay up there and he bumped the No. 4 (Newell) a little bit. So it lap nine to take the lead in the worked out perfect."

PITZ RIDES TO WINNER'S CIRCLE IN PONY STOCKS

Points leader Ray Homolka held the lead in the 20-lap main event race until Josh Pitz was able to maneuver around Homolka using the outside groove. A restart at lap 11 set again, this time between Pitz and Wade Henslee. Pitz made short work of the task and he and Todd Audet, making a late sprint, finished one-two in the race.

EDENS BACK WITH STREET STOCKS WIN

Steve Edens quickly gained ground on the rest of the field after taking over the lead from Rob Roche on lap five. A caution at lap 17 tightened the pack for the restart but Edens was able to hold off the aggressive pair of Bruce Henry and Rosalee Weller who were in hot pursuit of Edens to the checkered.

Moore beats Stadler in sudden death

GREENSBORO, N.C. - Ryan Moore won for the first time on the PGA Tour with a birdie on the third hole of a sudden death playoff to beat Kevin Stadler.

Moore - who vaulted up the leaderboard with five consecutive birdies on the back nine - had two chances to seal the victory after his approach on No. 18 landed in the middle of the green and rolled to 6 feet. He sank that putt for his first victory in his 112th event.

Stadler's second shot on the third playoff hole skipped off the back of the green. He chipped within 20 feet, but his putt drifted to the low side of the cup.

That cleared the way for Moore to pick up $918,000 and 500 FedEx Cup points for winning the final tournament before the playoffs start later this week.

REID TAKES CHAMPIONS TOUR

SUNRIVER, Ore. – Mike Reid made a 12-foot birdie putt on the first playoff hole to beat John Cook Champions Tour.

Reid raised both hands and let out a deep sigh before humbly removing Crosswater Golf Club in central 272. Oregon.

Reid's two majors - he also won the 2005 Senior Championship – are his only two wins on the tour.

Orton sharp early, Hasselbeck better

SEATTLE (AP) — Seattle's Matt Hasselbeck likened finally getting hit again following back problems to having flashbacks of a car accident.

All of Colorado is relieved Kyle Orton's second game as the Broncos' starting quarterback wasn't another

Orton had a mostly reassuring answer to his dismal Denver debut, saying he feels his play is its best ever after he completed 16 of his first 19 throws with a touchdown before a relapse into another mistake.

Hasselbeck was even better, hitting on 16 of 23 throws with two touchdowns in his two quarters. He also withstood the first three sacks on his recuperating back in nine months during the Seattle Seahawks' 27-13 win over Denver. "It's just like I remembered – no fun. ... I forgot how hard people hit in here," said a lighthearted Hasselbeck said, who missed nine games with a bad back in 2008. "It's just like a car accident. It's part of the game ... and it was probably good that it happened." Hasselbeck, who was untouched in a short night at San Diego last week, plopped a 34-yard touchdown pass into the arms of rookie Deon Butler on the opening possession. He closed with a sharp two-minute drive that ended with a 2-yard scoring throw on a perfectly timed fade route.

Vick gets close to game day

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Michael Vick showed no signs of rust during the Philadelphia Eagles' practice Sunday, throwing tight spirals with plenty of velocity.

"How does Michael look in the offense? He looks pretty good," offensive coordinator Marty Mornhinweg said. "It was a fairly seamless transition, even though he hadn't played for two years, because of the terminology. It's very similar. Now, many of the details are different and details are where you win football games, so that's the important part there. But the terminology is coming very easily to Mornhinweg said coach Andy Reid will probably make a decision Tuesday on whether Vick will make his preseason debut Thursday at home against the Jacksonville Jaguars.

Vick worked with offensive assistants James Urban and Doug Pederson on Sunday.

"Every day he works with James and Doug he picks up a little more," Mornhinweg said. "He hasn't played in two years, so a lot of it is just getting him into football shape.

"I think he was in decent shape coming in, as far as in general. But moving, cutting, lateral movement, throwing the football, moving while he's throwing the football, that's what we needed to see."

Americans win third straight Solheim Cup

SUGAR GROVE, Ill. – The United States were unbeaten on U.S. soil. didn't want to be called the favorites at the Solheim Cup. Winners has a much better ring to it.

Morgan Pressel delivered the clinching point with her 3-and-2 victory over Anna Nordqvist on Sunday, and the Americans won their third straight Solheim Cup with a 16-12 decision over Europe. After Nordqvist missed an 8-footer to keep the match going, Pressel's teammates, who had been watching at the side of the green, leaped up and started celebrating.

"This is so important to us," Pressel said, wiping away tears. "It's not about pride. It's not about money. It's about country. It's about our teammates."

Michelle Wie, whose 3-0-1 record was the best of any American this week, grabbed a U.S. flag and held it aloft to cries of "Wheee!" from the crowd. As the last three matches finished, there were shrieks of joy when the next American joined the party, and new rounds of "U-S-A! U-S-A!"

When the last match was done, they ran around the 18th green hugging each other and waving American flags. The fans at Rich Harvest Farms, so boisterous all week, serenaded the players with more chants and applause.

"Most of the day, I didn't think it was hours. going to happen," an emotional U.S. captain Beth Daniel said.

The Americans were heavy favorites this week. They had some of the top players in the world while four of Europe's players were ranked 125th or lower. Annika Sorenstam, Europe's anchor the last decade, is no longer playing. And the United States had won the last two Solheim Cups, and

The vote was 4-3, with Chairman Wayne Wright - a retired Twin Falls cardiologist who represents the Magic Valley on the commission arguing unsuccessfully for a higher quota. But the bigger news was a series of conversations that

Commissioner Tony McDermott of Sagle reported with Canadian wildlife officials, who told him that a controlled hunt is a fool's errand for curbing wolf populations.

"We'll be lucky to probably hit half of the hunter harvest limit," McDermott told reporters.

If McDermott is right, the rationale for stateorganized hunts to limit wolf numbers flies out the window. For if Idaho doesn't have an effective mechanism to control wolves - and one that meets federal muster — how can it possibly manage the predators?

It would have been nice to know all this back during the state's tortuous negotiations with the feds to take the wolf off the Endangered Species List. The whole premise of Idaho's position — and that of neighboring Montana — was that the state, not the feds, is in a better position to manage wolves.

Now that's not so certain. Organized hunts are the state's last, best option. Wolf politics being what they are, if large-scale, systematic elimination of wolves is required it will be the feds - not Idaho Fish and Game officers - who do it.

That's not how the Fish and Game Commission, the governor and thousands of wolf-loathing Idaho sportsmen and ranchers wanted things to go. But in the world of wolf management, nobody's happy.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Lack of foresight has doomed California

Candice Reed, in a column Aug. 19 about the great state of California. rightly praises its superiority in weather, top-rated colleges and leading the other states in innovation. But she wrongly blames Proposition 13.

It provided the way to remain in your home in an era of inflation by limiting raises in property assessments to 2 percent a year. New homes with higher assessments would pay more and that seems fair, as they are creating the need for more roads, schools and parks. The mistake was including business property in Prop 13.

The lack of foresight by the legislators, who did not recognize that adjustments were needed, caused today's problem. And also the huge influx of undocumented immigrants allowed by the federal government without any compensation to border states.

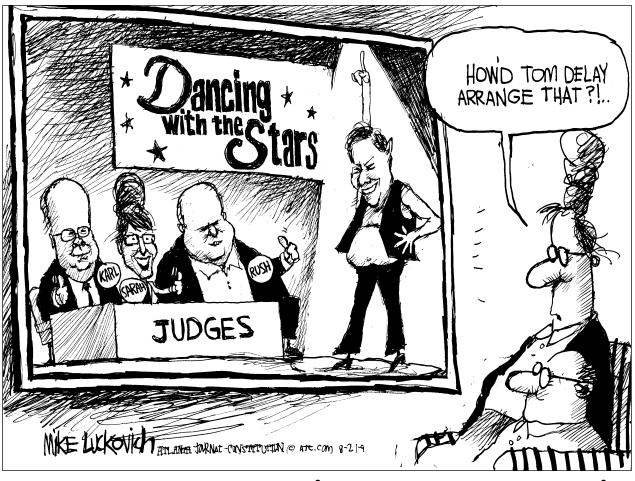

We are all suffering from legislators who do not see the big picture and look instead to their own personal situations.

Tom DeLay, a dancing 'Star?' Be afraid hen I think of Tom DeLay, the word "ballroom" doesn't leap into my

The guy just doesn't strike me as a dancing fool. He probably gets the terminology mixed up with dentistry. You know, flossie flossie one, flossie flossie two.

Oh sure, politicians just like anybody else are capable of enjoying normal entertainment activities, like hunting and hiking and hiring hookers. And text-messaging by loafer in an airport men's room.

But Tom DeLay on "Dancing with the Stars"? That's stretching reality.

Next month, the Republican former U.S. House majority leader will help ABC's dance show kick off its ninth season when the warm and cuddly DeLay hoofs his way into your

DeLay's dance routine will lead to lib protest chants like this one: "Hey hey, Tom DeLay, how many toes did you crush today?'

Can you think of anyone more awkward for "Dancing With the Stars"? OK, so Hillary Clinton. Ain't nobody gonna call her Diddy any time soon.

On the other hand, since DeLay is a Texan from Sugar Land, and the Cotton-Eyed Joe is a Texas dance famous for use of a certain description for cow droppings, let's just change DeLay's name to something more danceappropriate for the show: Cotton-Eved Tom.

This shoe leather gig could present a challenge for Cotton-Eyed Tom, who was indicted on money-laundering charges. Which means he could have got stuck dancing with a ball and chain. (As opposed to dancing with the old ball and chain.)

"... it should be one heckuva arts evening, especially if the network has DeLay jitterbug with Nancy Pelosi."

Ever tried to do the mashed potato while wearing a money belt and carrying around all those big fat checks? No easy task, friends and neighbors. That's a lot of stuff to trip over when you're trying to fox trot.

I sure hope ABC convinces DeLay to take a few turns with former Travis County D.A. Ronnie Earle. Seems like an obvious dance card pairing.

Talk about a Texas twostep, as in Step 1: Earle tries to nail him, and Step 2: Cotton-Eyed Tom gets a great attorney and dances right on outta here.

In a situation like this. who leads? This could be the first dance contest ever that begins with, "All rise."

This is not the first time "Dancing With the Stars" looks like it should change its name to "Dancing Behind Bars." Rapper Lil' Kim, who made it onto the show, did 10 months in prison.

But it should be one heckuva arts evening, especially if the network has DeLay jitterbug with Nancy Pelosi. Who needs Xtreme Fighting when you've got the kind of fireworks those two kids would set off if they went cheek to cheek?

So come on, everybody, let's do the loco-motion.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

More resources should go to top students

Your editorial Aug. 16 states, "to make AYP, a school must meet student achievement goals in 41 different target areas during a school year." You listed 15 districts and why they

I found it interesting that a combination of three "target areas," Graduation Rate, Math Proficiency and Reading Proficiency, and four student groups, Latino, Limited English, Economically disadvantaged and Students with disabilities caused these failures: (1) Graduation Rate lower than previous year, three districts. Few if any districts will have the same graduation rate from year to year due to different sized classes. (2) Math Proficiency (districtwide?), three districts, all small districts and math teachers are hard to find and hire. Latino, seven districts; Economically disadvantaged, four districts; Limited English, seven districts; With disabilities, nine districts. (3) Reading Proficiency (district wide?), one district; Latino, one district; Limited English, three districts; Economically disadvantaged, three districts; with disabilities, five districts.

Seems pretty obvious, if a student wants the opportunity of our school systems and English isn't your primary language, you need to become fluent in our language; not easy and requires real effort from you and your parents. Economically disadvantaged kids need the opportunity for early exposure to books, reading, being read to, etc. Parents must assume this responsibility and schools share in it. Students with disabilities should be tested to their capabilities not unrealistic goals, i.e., AYP Scorecard in editorial) "Districts missed AYP three years" Idaho State School for Deaf and the Blind — Reading. Duh! Using the primus of AYP, there should be no need for Special Olympics, special needs athletes should try for the regular Olympics.

Today "educational leaders" and politicians ignore the old "Bell Curve," but it has always been and will always be with us.

In my opinion, we need to devote more resources to the top 80 percent of our students to push them to achieve their potential.

We pay a high price for an empire

Being veteran of Vietnam, I'm supportive of the Wood River Valley campaign to help those affected by Private Bowe Bergdahl's prisoner-of-war sta-

However, if you're going to kill a snake, don't you chop the head?

Most Americans don't know it, but the real enemy for Osama bin Laden is the Saudi monarchy, not the USA. One: Bin Laden fervently opposes the leaders in Saudi Arabia who wish to shed the Wahhabi extremist brand of Islam; two: Bin Laden's core of fanatic supporters aren't in Afghanistan, they're in Yemen, specifically in the Assir province; and much of Europe believes that's where Bin Laden will soon be if he isn't dead or there already.

Then, why are we in Afghanistan and Pakistan? The Soviets went to Afghanistan to stabilize the government so they could start construction of a natural gas pipeline from Turkmenistan through Afghanistan to the port city of Karachi, Pakistan, located on the Arabian Sea. That endeavor failed with U.S. help during which 15,000 Soviet soldiers were killed and thousands more wounded.

Now America is there doing the same thing. With the collapse of the CCCP (pronounced: S-S-S-Rrrr), Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan became independent states, thus opening both countries to American influence and a consortium: Bush senior of Carlyle Group, Bush junior of Harkin. Cheney of Halliburton, Rumsfeld of Occidental, Rice of Chevron-Texaco and Union Oil of California and Gale Norton of BP Amoco – are the principal organizers and beneficiaries of this war.

As usual, America, the land of the sedated, has a hard time connecting the dots. Private Bergdahl's predicament, as with so many others, is a good example of the high price paid for empire.

So, how many wealthy Wood River types are getting richer over this war? Understand Carlyle alone owns 146 subsidiary companies.

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF POLITICS

Doonesbury

Let's not waste more tax money on Amtrak

ASHINGTON — The Obama administration's enthusiasm for high-speed rail is a dispiriting example of government's inability to learn from past mistakes. Since 1971, the federal government has poured almost $35 billion of subsidies into Amtrak with few public benefits. At most, we've gotten negligible reductions invisible and statistically insignificant - in congestion, oil use or greenhouse gases. What's mainly being provided is subsidized transportation for a small sliver of the population. In a country where 140 million people go to work every day, Amtrak has 78,000 daily passengers. A typical trip is subsidized by about $50.

Given this, you'd think even the dullest politician wouldn't expand rail subsidies, especially considering the almost $11 trillion of projected federal budget deficits between now and 2019. But no, the administration has made highspeed rail a top priority. It's already proposed spending $13 billion ($8 billion in the "stimulus" package and $1 billion annually for five years) as a down payment on high-speed rail in 10 "corridors," including Philadelphia to Pittsburgh and Houston to New Orleans.

The White House promises fabulous benefits. High-speed rail "will loosen the congestion suffocating our highways and skyways? says Vice President Joe Biden. A high-speed rail system would eliminate carbon dioxide emissions "equal to removing 1 million cars from our roads," adds the president. Relieve congestion. Fight global warming. Reduce oil imports. The vision is seductive. The audience is willing. Many

Robert Samuelson

Americans love trains and regard other countries' systems (say, Spain's rapid trains between Madrid and Barcelona, running at about 150 miles an hour) as evidence of U.S. technological inferiority.

There's only one catch: The vision is a mirage. The costs of high-speed rail would be huge and the public benefits meager.

President Obama's network may never be built. Its doubtful private investors will advance the money and once government officials acknowledge the full costs, they'll retreat. In a recent report, the Government Accountability Office (GAO) cited a range of construction costs, from $22 million a mile to $132 million a mile. Harvard economist Edward Glaeser figures $50 million a mile might be a plausible average. A 250 mile system would cost $12.5 billion and 10 systems, $125 billion.

That would only be the beginning. Ticket prices would surely be subsidized; otherwise, no one would ride the trains. Would all the subsidies be justified by public benefits - less congestion, fewer highway accidents, lower greenhouse gases? In a blogposted analysis, Glaeser made generous assumptions for trains ("Personally, I almost always prefer trains to driving") and still found that costs vastly outweigh benefits. Consider Obama's claim about removing the equivalent of 1 million cars. Even if it came true (doubtful), it would represent less Relieve congestion.

Fight global warming. Reduce oil imports. The vision is seductive. The audience is willing. ... There's only one catch: The vision is a mirage. The costs of high-speed rail would be huge and the public than one-half of 1 percent of the 254 million registered vehicles in 2007.

benefits meager.

What works in Europe and Asia won't in the United States. Even abroad, passenger trains are subsidized. But the subsidies are more justifiable because geography and energy policies differ.

Densities are much higher, and high densities favor rail with direct connections between heavily populated city centers and business districts.

In Japan, density is 880 people per square mile; it's 653 in Britain, 611 in Germany and 259 in France. By contrast, plentiful land in the United States has led to suburbanized homes, offices and factories. Density is 86 people per square mile. Trains can't pick up most people where they live and work and take them to where they want to go. Cars can.

Distances also matter. America is big; trips are longer. Beyond 400 to 500 miles, fast trains can't compete with planes. Finally, Europe and Japan tax car transportation more heavily, pushing people to trains. In August 2008, notes the GAO, gasoline in Japan was $6.50 a gallon. Americans regard $4 a gallon as an outrage. Proposals for stiff gasoline taxes (advocated by many, including me) go nowhere.

The mythology of highspeed rail is not just misinformed; it's anti-social. Governments at all levels are already overburdened.

Compounding the burdens with new wasteful subsidies would squeeze spending for more vital needs – schools, police and (ironically) mass transit.

High-speed rail could divert funds from mass transit systems that, according to a study by Randal O'Toole of the Cato Institute, have huge maintenance backlogs: $16 billion in Chicago; $17 billion in New York; $12.2 billion in Washington, D.C.; $5.8 billion in San Francisco. Any high-speed rail system should be financed locally; states should decide their transportation priorities.

All this seems familiar, because it's Amtrak writ large: the triumph of fantasy over fact. The same false arguments used to justify Amtrak (less congestion, pollution etc.) are recycled. Evidence and experience count for little. Obama and Biden pander to popular prejudices instead of recognizing past failure. Boondoggles become respectable. A White House so frivolous in embracing dubious spending cannot be believed when it professes concern about future taxes and budget deficits.

And the money kept rolling out in all directions

* ASHINGTON - I recently visited the U.S. Bureau of Engraving and Printing to watch money being made. Call it a cheap thrill while waiting for some real economic stimulation.

"We print between 700 and 750 million dollars a day," said P.J., a tour guide. At that rate, it would take less than five minutes to stimulate my bank account, boost my consumer confidence and get me spending again.

Ooo la la.

Through windows along the tour route, I saw sheets of $100 bills coming out of a 52-foot-long, 12-foot-high monster of a printing press. It was the mother of all cash cows: nursing the Federal Reserve, feeding the big banks, sustaining a global network of ATMs that suckles 24-7.

A sign in the press room read: "We make money the old fashion way. We print

Shake that moneymaker, baby.

A stack of bills worth $32 million, shrink-wrapped and resembling loaves of bread, sat on a skid in a corner. I was mesmerized, "like a one-eyed cat peeping at a seafood store," to borrow a line from songwriter Jesse Stone's 1950s hit, "Shake, Rattle and Roll."

Pathetic. Scintillating. Did you know that banknote paper is 75 percent cotton and 25 percent linen? Fabric pressed into paper, dyed green and called a dollar - amassed in sufficient quantities - can end povertv. cure disease, pay mortgages, car notes, school tuition.

It takes about 4 cents to make a dollar.

The bureau, located on 27 acres just off the Mall in Washington, printed the extra currency needed as a result of President Obama's $787 billion stimulus package. So why is so much of it stuck in bank vaults and languishing on skids instead of stimulating my wallet?

Alan Blinder, a former vice chairman of the Federal Reserve Board and professor of economics at Princeton, wrote in The Washington Post last week, "The simple truth is that even the voracious U.S. government cannot spend $787 billion quickly."

The bureau likes to publish "fun facts" about such things. For instance, if you had $10 billion in $1 bills and spent one every second of every day, it would take 317

years for you to go broke. Of course, the economic stimulus should have kicked in by then.

Still, you have to wonder why that money wasn't put directly into the hands of taxpayers. The bureau has a guillotine that can cut up sheets of money into $10,000 bricks. Why not send one to every taxpaying American household, say 100 million households?

There's a trillion dollars that might actually be spent on consumer goods. Jobs would be saved, homeowners spared foreclosure.

But no.

"Scared consumers are hanging onto their cash, bemoaning the lost value of their houses and trying to reduce their debts," Alice Rivilin, senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, wrote in The Washington Post recently. "They won't rush back to the mall to buy things they don't absolutely need. Employers will be cautious about hiring until they are sure the recovery is robust, so unemployment will remain high for several vears."

It need not be that way. There is just too much money floating around for so many people to be in such misery.

Consider a recent study of income inequality by Berkeley professor Emmanuel Saez: In 2007, the top 0.01 percent of American earners took home 6 percent of total U.S. wages, a figure that nearly doubled since 2000.

This is astounding. According to Saez, the top 10 percent of U.S. earners pull in more than 49 percent of total wages. I suggest that more people visit the bureau, aka "America's money factory," to see what they are missing. Sure, there's a strip club's kind of "look but don't touch" ethos to the place – unless, of course, you're a big shot like AIG. Then you get to grab all you want. But, hey, why should rich guys have all the fun? Show me the money.

We need to start thinking for ourselves

I doubt that Randy Rathie is a National Rifle Association member: why would he say that when the meeting was on health care not guns. He said he was satisfied because Obama said he would not raise his taxes; he seemed to think that it was all right to raise other people's taxes as long as it wasn't his. He seemed to forget the old adage of divide and conquer.

Obama's promise of not raising the taxes on people making under $250,000 now may sound good, but we all know that if there are not enough taxes in the future to pay for all these giveaways, taxes will have to be raised on the middle class. It is time for people to start thinking for themselves and reading between the lines of what politicians tell us to get us to go along with them.

I sincerely hope that Americans wake up to this "divide and conquer" agenda of the current administration, because if you allow your fellow men to be concurred, you will be next.

Time to restore basic principles

The principles contained in the Declaration of Independence need to be restored to preserve our individual liberty and independence. These principles include the following:

National Sovereignty. National sovereignty is the primary battle-ground in the war over independence vs. internationalism (world government).

Natural Law. It is the universal moral code that governs all people and forms the basis of our civil laws and inalienable rights. Self-evident truths. The Declaration states: "We hold these truths to be selfevident ..."

Equality. Equality means treating everyone's legitimate claims the same, not treating everyone equal.

Inalienable Rights. Fundamental human rights such as life, liberty and property are granted by God and not by government. The proper role of government is to protect these rights.

The Inalienable Right to Life, not abortion on demand.

The Inalienable Right to Individual Liberty. Our country was founded as a Republic – a representative form of government where individual rights are protected.

The Inalienable Right to Private Property. Economically it means free markets and free enterprise. Global government advocates want an unholy union of government, education and business

The Primary Purpose of Government is the Protection of Inalienable Rights. Governments are instituted among men to secure these individual rights, not the common good.

Popular Sovereignty. People have a higher level of authority than government and government has only those powers delegated by its citizens.

Federalism and States Rights. Powers not specifically delegated to the federal government are reserved to the states and the people.

Divine Providence. The signers of the Declaration believed their cause was just and that a just God (Supreme Judge) would be on their side.

It is time to restore the principles of the Declaration that made America great.

Pole Moves to build Muscles

first saw fliers for Becky Bronson Martinez's pole dance classes in February. Pole dancing to build muscles? It made sense. The climbing and twirling looked like it required an intense amount of arm and core strength. But how risque would it be?

So I looked it up. Pole dancing fitness classes, popular in urban areas and college towns, teach the same moves that strippers use, but the focus is on building muscle, not attracting gentlemen admirers.

This summer, Bronson Martinez moved her classes to a new studio that is right around the corner from the Times-News'Twin Falls office. Curiosity overcame me and I gave her a call.

What went down Muscles by Miss.FiT

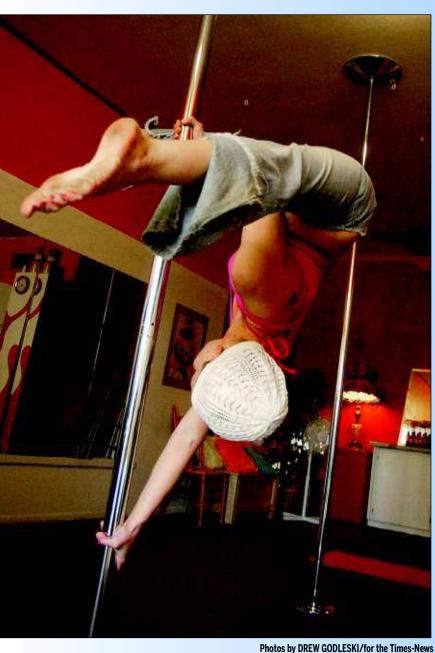

Bronson Martinez gave me a private, abridged beginner class Tuesday. We skipped the typical aerobic warm-up, which consists of jumping rope, and got straight to the dancing.

She showed me how to do moves called the Butterfly and the Tinkerbell. I looked them up on YouTube the next day and found out that moves can have multiple names, and the Butterfly can also refer to an upside down inverted move. I did the easy version — also known as a front hook — where my right leg hooked around the pole and my left leg bent, making a W shape. Don't forget to point your toes, Bronson Martinez reminded me.

Before class, I had stretched my arms thoroughly but neglected my legs. Big mistake. After I threw them back for a Butterfly a few times, both cramped. I limped to a yoga mat and stretched them as well as I could, but felt it for the rest of the night.

While I recovered, I watched Bronson

When I woke up on Wednesday morning, I felt a little like I was back in college.

No, I didn't moonlight as a club dancer. Pole dancing uses most of the same muscles as rock climbing, one of my favorite pastimes at school. The insides of my wrists ached, and I could barely raise my arms above my head. (My hair looked awesomely bad that day.) I imagine my core muscles would hurt if I did some of the advanced moves Bronson Martinez and Owens showed off.

Why did eating make her faint?

Cause of trouble finally found

By Sandra G. Boodman Special to The Washington Post

Although he had never seen a case like it in his career, cardiologist David Lomnitz felt certain he knew why his new patient kept blacking out when she ate. At the time of her first appointment in September 2004, Martha Bryce, then a 36-year-old health-care consultant, was feeling desperate. Four years earlier she had been given a diagnosis of epilepsy, and had taken medication to prevent seizures. But doctors had been unable to explain the frequent swooning episodes that occurred when she started to eat, forcing her to put her head down on the table in an intermittently successful attempt to avoid passing out.

Doctors seemed unconcerned and told her the episodes might be a symptom of her seizure disorder. Bryce, a registered nurse, wasn't so sure.

But after a frightening incident drove home the potential danger of the baffling condition, she made an appointment with Lomnitz, now assistant chief of cardi-Norwalk, Conn. "Her story rang a bell for me," he said.

His hunch about her condition, triggered by cases he heard about during his training years earlier, would upend her diagnosis and radically alter her treatment.

The first sign something was wrong was dramatic.

Las Vegas in January 2000, Bryce, who lives Ridgefield, Conn., decided to visit the Hoover Dam before tion. catching a red-eye flight home.

preparing to photograph the concrete behemoth, Bryce recalled, "all of a sudden I felt a way I'd never felt before?" She fainted and, after regaining consciousness, learned she had suffered a grand mal seizure during which she had bitten her tongue.

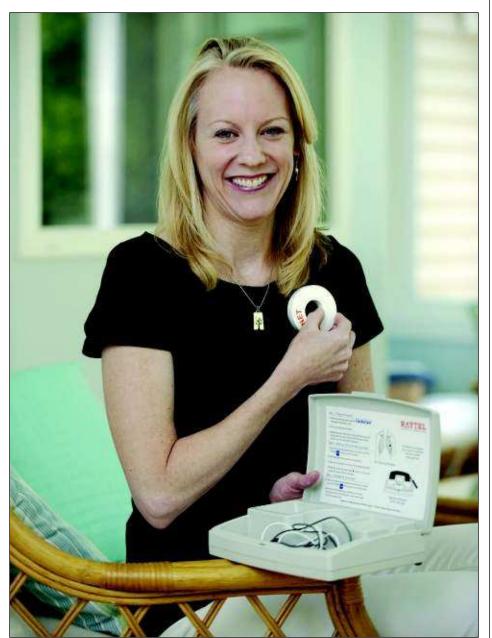

"I actually closed the dam down because they needed to get emergency services in;" Bryce said. She spent the next four days undergoing a complete work-up at a Las Vegas hospital. Doctors ruled out a brain tumor, drug reaction and other problems. An avid exerciser in excellent health, Bryce couldn't imagine what might be wrong.

Back home, a neurologist conducted additional tests but found nothing, either. He told her she might be among the 11 percent of people who suffer a single seizure for reasons that are never determined. To be safe, he prescribed anti-seizure medication and told her not to drive for six months.

Within a week, a disturbing new problem surfaced. While eating, Bryce would feel faint and sometimes briefly pass out. The episodes never occurred when she New Haven Hospital where drank, only when she consumed solid food. At first intermittent, they soon became a daily occurrence, especially at breakfast.

Her neurologist told her the episodes were unrelated to the seizure and advised her not to skip breakfast. After four seizure-free months, he weaned her off the medication and told her there was no reason to come back unless she had another seizure.

She learned to live with the swooning. Friends and family members got used to seeing her put her head on the table for a few minutes at the start of a meal. When entertaining business clients, then a frequent occurrence, she would

> "I was terrified about what might have happened," she said. After emergency room doctors found nothing, Bryce consulted a second neurologist.

> He told her that two unexplained seizures in less than five years meant she had epilepsy. The swooning, he told her, was probably an aura that precedes seizure activity. Bryce again began taking epilepsy medicine and was told not to drive.

Skeptical of the epilepsy diagnosis, Bryce mentioned her problem to a friend who is Hospital described two a cardiologist.

"He said, 'Of course you've had a cardiac work-up, right?" She hadn't. When she asked her neurologist for a referral, he scolded her, telling her she should go to the epilepsy clinic at Yaledoctors would, in his words, "make you understand your

Sometimes, as in Bryce's case, the cause is more exotic. Lomnitz had done his fellowship training at New York Hospital, home to a lab dedicated to syncope research. He knew about the unusual causes of syncope, including the one he suspected was causing Bryce's problems. "Based on her history, I thought she had swallow syncope," Lomnitz said. In some people, the act of swallowing interferes with the heart's electrical system, causing it to briefly stop beating, which results in fainting or near blackouts. The disorder is so uncommon it typically appears in the medical literature as a case report. In 1999 two physicians at Howard (Md.) General patients who had swallow syncope diagnosed, one after drinking a cold carbonated beverage, the other after eating a large quantity of food.

To test his theory, Lomnitz fitted Bryce with a 28-day monitor that would track her heart rate around the clock and transmit information to his office.

seconds. The next step was to determine the underlying cause. In some patients, Lomnitz said, swallow syncope can result from a narrowed esophagus or other anatomical defect. In Bryce's case, tests revealed no physical abnormality.

Lomnitz then recommended implanting a pacemaker, which uses electrical stimuli to regulate the heartbeat. Bryce was reluctant to undergo the procedure, opting to try medications first. When they didn't help, she had pacemaker surgery in January 2005.

"From the moment that pacemaker went in, I have never had another episode," Bryce said.

Some questions about her case may never be answered. Neither Lomnitz nor any of her other physicians know why the problem vanished during her pregnancy.

Although Lomnitz said that patients can develop swallow syncope for no apparent reason, Bryce wonders whether hers might have been related to her visit to the Hoover Dam.

"After my pacemaker was implanted, I read the warnings about not going through airline security, not getting near large speakers or electromagnets and, incredibly, not going to the Hoover Dam," she said. (The dam's electromagnets are used to generate power from the Colorado River.) Shedding pounds may help women control urine leakage

THE QUESTION

Might losing weight make urinary incontinence less of a problem for women affected by loss of bladder control?

THIS STUDY

It randomly assigned 338 overweight or obese women (average age, 53) with chronic urinary incontinence to participate in a weight-loss program with diet, exercise and behavioral components or in a program that provided only information on weight loss, physical activity and healthful eating. Both programs included one-hour weekly group meetings, and all participants were given a booklet with instructions on improving bladder control. Six months later, the active weight-loss group had lost, on average, 17 pounds, compared with a three-pound average loss for the others. Incontinence episodes had declined by 47 percent for women in the weight-loss group, compared with 28 percent for the others.

WHO MAY BE AFFECTED?

Women, who are twice as likely as men to suffer either stress incontinence, when urine leaks are brought on by activity such as sneezing, or urge incontinence, when urine is leaked unexpectedly.

CAVEATS

Data on incontinence were based on records kept by the participants.

— Jomo Kenyatta

The world championships have just started in Sao Paulo, so all the deals this week will come from the final stages of recent world championships.

"We must try to trust one another. Stay and cooperate."

To start with, let's compare how well the top-class defenders coped with an apparently simple

Antonio Sementa (South) followed the auction shown, while his counterpart made a weak jump overcall in spades and collected 170. At this vulnerability, I prefer Sementa's route, although it got him to four hearts, the wrong game. Can you see how the defense should go?

Had East cashed three rounds of diamonds, declarer would surely have ruffed the third round, ruffed a club in hand, then drawn trumps and played a spade up toward the queen to make 10 tricks. But after two rounds of diamonds and a spade shift (Boguslaw Gierulski playing for the legitimate chance to set the hand), Sementa was stuck. He could not ruff a diamond and a club in hand and draw three rounds of trump ending in hand. He did his best by taking the ruffs and drawing two trumps, but West could win the spade king and give his partner the ruff. Does that defense look easy to you? Well, at the six other tables where the deal was played, the final contract was four spades once (making 11 tricks) and four hearts five times. On each occasion but one, where four hearts was declared, the defenders led diamonds. Two of the four pairs of defenders got it right; the other two pairs did not. I suppose the defense is not that easy to find!

Daughter-in-law takes offense at family's tardy condolences

DEAR ABBY: We received a nasty note from our daughter-in-law, "Ariella." She lives several states away. Her father passed away about six weeks ago. They lived out of state, and we were never close with them.

Ariella is angry because we didn't send flowers to the viewing and didn't send her mother a sympathy card until two weeks after the funeral.

We're in our late 70s. Ariella's father was 89. Should we have sent flowers? And is two weeks after a death too late to send a sympathy card? Our other three children each received identical notes from Ariella.

- BEFUDDLED IN ALABAMA

DEAR BEFUDDLED: I'll say this about your daughter-in-law - she's outspoken about her emotions. Ariella's parents may have lived out of state, but they are (were) members of your extended family, and frankly, the nonchalance with which you treated the death of Ariella's father surprises me.

No law says you were obligated to send flowers for the funeral - but to have done so would have been a compassionate gesture and let her and her mother know you cared. To then wait two weeks before extending any condolences was cold in light of the fact that you could have picked up the phone and done it immediately - and the same goes for your children.

DEAR ABBYJeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: After 35 years living out of state, my parents have moved to my hometown, and I am thrilled to have them so near.

My problem: Now that I'm seeing my mother on a daily basis, I know what I'm going to look like in 20 years. She and I recognize our physical similarities and laugh about them; our noses, our coloring and our rear ends, etc. These genes will override any "magic cream" on the market.

Mother has many qualities that I admire and aspire to have, but I guess I wasn't ready for a preview peek into the aging mirror. I have never considered myself vain, but I would like to be slimmer and keep a more youthful appearance. Is it hopeless? The problem isn't my mother - it's me.

AFRAID OF DESTINY DEAR AFRAID: It's not

hopeless. Biology doesn't have to dictate one's destiny. Your diet and lifestyle can have a tremendous effect on your appearance in 20 years. Also, men and women seem to have aged more slowly in recent decades than they did in the 1930s, '40s and '50s.

If you want reassurance, drag out some old family albums and take a look at how your aunts, uncles and grandparents looked at your age. Please don't obsess about something that may not happen because nothing ages a woman like stress.

DEAR ABBY: My friend's daughter asked her child's godparent to buy a $60 to $100 dress for the baptismal service. I told my friend I had never heard of the parents not buying the outfit themselves.

daughter cannot The afford to buy the dress herself. Was it appropriate to ask this of a godparent?

- UNCERTAIN IN OMAHA

DEAR UNCERTAIN: She may have thought so. According to Emily Post: "The baby's gown - often one that was worn by the baby's mother, father or one of his grandparents - is provided by the parents, not the godparents - A former tradition that has "gone by the board".
