For Magic Valley schools, higher nutrition standards begin

A BETTER BALANCE

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Hold the salt, choose the whole grain and cut out the high-fat foods.

That's the mantra in public school cafeterias as classes begin this fall. New nutrition standards begin this fall for K-12 schools in Idaho based on new requirements coming from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, which oversees the National School Lunch Program.

The nutrition standards are:

- More foods with whole grains, fruits, vegetables, and beans, along with low-fat milk and lean protein.

- Limit food high in fat, sodium or sugar.
- Ditch salt shakers, sugar packets and deep-fat fried foods.

The Idaho State Department of Education began working with school districts in January to prepare them for the changes.

Among Magic Valley school districts, some of the requirements are already a common practice.

For example, Twin Falls School District already serves fresh fruits and vegetables and didn't have salt shakers to begin with.

One requirement is to not serve prefried foods such as chicken nuggets or patties more than three times a week, said Susan Henderson, food service supervisor for the district.

Steps to provide nutritious meals include whole-grain pizza, hamburger buns and other breads, along with incorporating beans into the menu at

King loses bids for acquittal, new trial

Judge: Jury properly convicted feedlot owner of illegal aquifer injections

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

A Burley man's attempt to seek an acquittal and new trial on charges of illegal injection into an underground aquifer has been rebuffed by a federal judge.

But attorneys for Cory King, co-owner of the 16,000-acre Double C Farms, said they plan to now appeal the case to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

A jury this spring found King guilty of four counts of injecting fluids into the aquifer without a permit and one count of making a false statement to an inspector from the Idaho State Department of Agriculture.

King and his attorneys had asked U.S. District Judge B. Lynn Winnmill for the acquittal and new trial, questioning whether there really was federal jurisdiction, if the jury was prejudiced and other issues. But in a decision filed Saturday and following a hearing in Boise last month, Winnmill rebuffed all their arguments and wrote that the jury had properly found King guilty.

King's attorneys, David Lombardi and Larry Westberg, pledged in a statement on Tuesday to continue to fight the conviction.

"The denial of King's motion for acquittal and for new trial has no impact ... on the fundamental lack of federal jurisdiction over this case which involves Idaho groundwater and which was settled with the Idaho Department of Water Resources in 2006," they wrote. "King will file an

New motions made in Sage Aragon's hypothermia death

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

Prosecutors in Lincoln County have filed a set of new motions in their case against a father accused of involuntary manslaughter for last year's hypothermia death of a child.

E. Scott Paul, the county's prosecutor, is asking for court permission to use testimony from a deputy who died recently during an upcoming trial for Robert Aragon, 55.

Aragon is accused of involuntary manslaughter and injury to a child, both felonies, after authorities found his 11-year-old daughter, Sage, lifeless and 12-year-old son, Bear, suffering from hypothermia following an attempted walk of nearly 10 miles to see their mother on Christmas.

Aragon allegedly let his children walk alone after his vehicle became stuck in a snow drift on West Magic Road near the Blaine County line.

M.V. Mall lawsuits spike in 2009

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

Magic Valley Mall LLC has filed four lawsuits this year against area businesses demanding more than $800,000 for alleged contract breaches and unpaid rent in a recent spike of litigious activity against mall tenants.

By comparison, Magic Valley Mall, a Utah limited liability company, filed no law suits last year and only two in 2006, seeking a total of more than $17,000, Twin Falls County court records show.

This year's cases were filed against Miley Insurance and Financial Services, Inc. on Jan. 27, and on May 14 filings were made against Just My Style LLC, Magic Valley Roasted Bean, and Speedy Specs LLC.

Speedy Specs was supposed to move into Magic Valley Mall LLC's strip mall on Pole Line Road under a 10-year lease agreement, according to the lawsuit, but the defendants allegedly "have refused to occupy and operate the premises."

The suit seeks $756,560 for rent and assessment from Jan. 1, 2009, through the end of the lease, plus interest accruing annually at 18 percent. Speedy Specs, however, wants the lawsuit dismissed.

Idaho wolf hunt is on

By Todd Dvorak
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Gray wolves were back in the cross hairs of hunters on Tuesday, just months after they were removed from the federal endangered species list and eight decades since being hunted to extinction across the Northern Rockies.

Hunters in Idaho began stalking gray wolves in a handful of districts in the central and northern mountains. Shortly after dawn, an Idaho real estate agent became the first to report a kill.

Robert Millage of the lumber town of Kamiah bagged an adult female from 25 yards away in the mountains near the Lochsa River, state officials said.

"I just wanted to beat my least once a week, Henderson said.

Phyllis Bean, food service supervisor for Minidoka County School District, said the biggest change is more whole grains.

Like Twin Falls School District, though, students can still get pizza — just with whole-grain crust.

"I haven't heard any negative comments about it and we are still going through as many pizzas this year as we did last year," Bean said.

And other traditional cafeteria food will continue, albeit with whole-grain status. They include: corn dogs, burritos and biscuits for breakfast sandwiches.

"I think it's going to be good for us," Bean said. "We're just trying to set the example for the students to be healthier."

Naomi McGovern, food service director for Filer School District, agreed that the switch to whole-grain products is the biggest change.

Like other food service directors, McGovern said she welcomes the requirements as an opportunity to encourage students to make healthy choices.

buddies to the punch, but I didn't know I'd beaten everybody in the state," said Millage, 34, who has hunted in Idaho for 22 years. "It was really an adrenaline rush to have those wolves all around me, howling and milling about after I fired the shot."

It remained unclear, however, just how much longer hunters would have to thin the wolf population in Idaho and Montana, which is scheduled to open its season in two weeks.

U.S. District Judge Donald Molloy in Montana was expected to rule soon on a request by environmental groups to stop the hunts in both states.

"The human population successfully eradicated wolves from this region in the early part of the 20th century, and it would be a true shame after all the efforts that went into recovery if that happened again," said Jenny Harbine, an attorney for Earthjustice, a plaintiff in the case.

An estimated 1,650 of the animals now live in the Northern Rockies thanks to a controversial reintroduction program that started in 1995.

Idaho set a quota of 220 wolves for this hunting season as part of its plan for managing the wolf population. The quota is 75 in Montana.

Idaho officials say they have no idea how many hunters headed into the woods to track the predators. State rules require hunters to notify game officials within 24 hours of a wolf kill and present the skull and pelt to wardens within five days.

So far, Idaho has sold more than 10,700 wolf permits, mostly to hunters who will head to the backcountry next month when elk and deer season begins. Hunters in Montana snatched up more than 2,600 tags on Monday, the first day of sales for the upcoming hunt.

The wolves were removed from the endangered species list in those states just four months ago. The environmental groups fear there aren't enough state protections in place to maintain their comeback.

The creatures were once abundant across North America, but by the 1930s had been largely exterminated outside Alaska and Canada.

About 300 wolves in Wyoming are still under federal protection because the government has not approved the state's management plan.

Last year, about a dozen wolves were killed in Wyoming during a brief period when the state management plan declared wolves wandering outside established recovery zones could be shot and killed on sight. That policy was later scrapped by a federal judge.

Idaho officials and hunting guides say the opening weeks of the season are likely to be slow.

Outfitters said they are not booking trips for hunters exclusively looking to bag a wolf. But guides are encouraging clients to buy wolf tags to have handy when tracking deer and elk later this fall.

"Any success we have with wolves will be more of a happenstance sort of thing," said Richard Huff, a guide for Silver Spur Outfitters and Lodge near Grangeville.

Magic Valley Mall LLC has filed more lawsuits this year against businesses it rents space to than in years past. Four suits have been filed this year, including a $756,560 lawsuit against the owners of Speedy Specs LLC, which never moved into this location along Pole Line Road East in Twin Falls.

that defendants did not pay rent."

A business owner who said she would have been a neighbor to Speedy Specs said Monday that empty storefronts don't help business as her rent has risen.

"As far as rent, it is high. On the flip side of that you have location, location," said Deby Johnson, owner of Everybody's Business. "Sometimes location doesn't look that great, though, with empties around. With slower sales it just makes everything harder."

Johnson estimates her rent has gone up by 3 to 5 percent during the past three years, and added she had looked forward to Speedy Specs as a neighboring business.

The cases against Magic Valley Roasted Bean and Just My Style LLC each seek unpaid rent — $47,863 for Just My Style and $11,450 for Magic Valley Roasted Bean.

Just My Style, however, denies the allegations in a counterclaim filed June 8 and wants to go to trial, court records show. "Counterclaimants were unable to perform the contract which forms the basis of Magic Valley Mall's complaint because Magic Valley Mall induced them to terminate the lease, which frustrated the purpose of the contract."

Magic Valley Roasted Bean also seeks a dismissal, court records show.

This year's small claim for $900 against Miley Insurance and Financial Services Inc., which also did business as Create-A-Critter, asserted the company failed "to fulfill payment terms required under promissory note," according to court records. The case wrapped up on May 8, though, with a judgment in favor of Magic Valley Mall, according to court records.

An Idaho Department of Labor official said Tuesday that a spike of lawsuits doesn't surprise her given recent economic downturns. Jan Roeser, a regional economist with the Labor Department said she is unaware of a new statewide trend, though, involving increased lawsuits from malls against tenants for rent and lease disputes.

Magic Valley Mall General Manager Brent White did not return calls Monday and Tuesday seeking comment.

The Speedy Specs case is heading to court on Thursday for a status hearing, and the mall's other two pending lawsuits filed this year have scheduling conference on Sept. 9.

Eggleston, 35, an eight-year veteran of the sheriff's department, died July 18 after a tire blowout caused him to lose control of the Ford Expedition sheriff's cruiser he was driving on Idaho Highway 24.

Before his death, Eggleston testified at a preliminary hearing in the case on Jan. 23. Paul asks in his motion filed Aug. 28, for audio of that testimony to be admitted at Aragon's trial.

"The witness' testimony is vital to the state's case," Paul's motion states.

Paul also wants the court to allow jurors in Aragon's upcoming trial to view the road where the children walked and were found, court records show.

In a separate motion that was also filed on Aug. 28, Paul says that jurors should also see the area for themselves.

"By viewing first-hand

the distance walked by the victims, in the particular terrain, and to see the area where the victims were located will be more demonstrative to the jury than descriptions, photographs, and/or video can convey," Paul's motion states. "By viewing the road and locations where the victims were found the jury will be able to best understand the unique circumstances faced by the victims, and as well as the defendant, on December 25, 2008."

Paul had originally accused both Aragon and Aragon's cousin, Kenneth Quintana, with second-degree murder. Charges against Quintana were dismissed and the second-degree murder charge levied against Aragon was reduced.

Aragon has pleaded not guilty to the allegations and his trial is scheduled to begin Oct. 5 in Shoshone.

BLM jumps on lightning-caused weekend fires

Fire season still slow; only 15 acres burned in Sawtooth Forest

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

Though weekend storms started a few fires across south-central Idaho, officials still say 2009 is an unusually quiet fire season with the potential to turn ugly.

The U.S. Bureau of Land Management's Twin Falls District quashed three lightning-caused fires on Friday and seven more on Saturday and Sunday, spokeswoman Heather Tiel-Nelson said.

The largest fire of the bunch appeared Saturday near the U.S. Air Force's Saylor Creek Bombing Range and covered 98 acres before firefighters contained and controlled it. Two more small fires, likely human-caused, sprouted near roads by Timmerman Hill and Craters of the Moon National Monument on Monday, Tiel-Nelson said. A dispatcher said a smoke cloud near Jerome on Tuesday was just a prescribed burn.

The weekend's rash of fires was small compared to the massive blazes the district has taken on in the past. But they were still more than the 15 acres the entire Sawtooth National Forest has faced this year, according to forest spokeswoman Julie Thomas.

As fire officials have noted before, a cool, delayed spring and occasional moisture have kept much of Idaho calm this year. Farther north in the Salmon-Challis

A&B call appealed to district court

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

The third of three recent major water-delivery calls in the Magic Valley is now on its way to court.

Attorneys for A&B Irrigation District, based in Rupert, officially asked on Monday for judicial review of the Idaho Department of Water Resources' handling of its call, made to other groundwater users the district argues have harmed its senior right.

The short petition, filed in 5th District Court in Minidoka County, simply recaps the basic events of the call so far and the jurisdiction of the court to review it. The district plans to file a statement of issues within two weeks, and attorney Travis Thompson said Tuesday it will likely raise the same issues A&B raised several times before IDWR.

Those issues have included concerns that former IDWR Director Dave Tuthill created a new standard for injury to a water-right holder and that Tuthill effectively shrank the district's water right, which has already been decreed through the Snake River Basin Adjudication, by creating a slightly lower benchmark for diversion.

The call was first filed in 1994, but was put on hold after the state promised to manage the aquifer the district relies on. Proceedings resumed in 2007, just two years after other major calls were filed by two Thousand Springs-area fish farms and a coalition of canal companies and irrigation districts — also including A&B.

Tuthill denied the A&B call in January 2008, and affirmed his decision on his last day in June 2009. Interim IDWR Director Gary Spackman upheld Tuthill's order early last month.

It's not entirely certain who may end up presiding over the case. Judge John Melanson currently handles complicated water cases in the district, including appeals of the other two water calls, and is based in Minidoka County along with his duties as presiding SRBA judge in Twin Falls. But he is set to join the state Court of Appeals on Oct. 1, though he previously said he plans to ask for permission to finish several other pending cases.

appeal to the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals challenging the exercise of federal power over Idaho groundwater soon after sentencing."

Prosecutors representing the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency declined comment on the decision.

It won't be the first time King has looked to the 9th Circuit. About a year ago, he requested a writ of mandamus — an order from a superior court to a lower one — one month after Winmill denied several motions to dismiss the indictments against him. A three-judge panel denied the mandamus request in November 2008, according to court records.

Among the findings in Winmill's Saturday ruling, the judge once again concluded that his own instructions to the jury "cured" any problems caused by occasional mentions of King possibly injecting wastewater into the ground.

The federal indictments originally alleged that the injected water was contaminated in some way. But they were later revised and the matter was intentionally kept out of the trial. King has aggressively countered any hint that the injections contained anything more than clean creek water — even hiring Gallatin Public Affairs of Boise to counter a government press release and Associated Press story implying that he polluted the aquifer.

The matter should soon be sorted out. Next for King is a Nov. 2 evidentiary hearing in Pocatello on the contamination issue, with sentencing to follow a few weeks later.

Last-minute fair preparations take hold of Filer community

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

FILER — Nearly buried in quilts waiting to be displayed at the Twin Falls County Fair, Home Arts Superintendent Kathleen Lunte took a break from Tuesday's activity to admire a hand-crocheted baby Christening dress, laid neatly on a display bench only feet away.

After gently lifting the article, Lunte ran a finger over the delicately stitched, shining white yarn. A ribbon hangs proudly on the garment, awaiting its exhibitor.

"Crochet, sometimes you think it's a lost art but then, all this," Lunte says, her arm gesturing to the large display of crochet items entered in this year's fair. "But this is great."

Lunte was preparing for today's opening of the 93rd Annual Twin Falls County Fair in Filer, as were many people. While carnival rides unfolded out of semitrailers, exhibitors finished decorating booths and food vendors prepared goodies for today's crowds.

Beyond the Home Arts display cousins Heston Jenkins, of Filer, and Jasper Knight, of Elko, Nev., were busy working at the horse barn.

In between stacking fresh straw Knight wiped his brow and explained how he got roped into working in the hot afternoon sun.

"My grandpa brings draft horses and this is for their bedding and hay to eat. The horses will be here all week," Knight said. "They'll be coming later this evening and we've got to be ready for them."

Fair Manager John Pitz zipped around the grounds on his four-wheeler, answering calls on a radio. Typical pre-fair issues are always expected, like making sure people set up their

Quigley annexation moves forward

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — The Hailey City Council on Monday night directed city staff to draft an annexation agreement for a large part of Quigley Canyon in order to move toward the possible annexation of the property into Hailey.

"I am 100 percent clear in my mind that I made that request at the last meeting," frustrated Councilman Fritz Haemmerle told city planners. "Until that's done, we can meet and meet and we can't vote on anything."

"There has to be a serious discussion between our staff and the developer. The onus is heavily on our staff to meet with developer in timely fashion."

A draft proposal does not mean the Quigley annexation is a done deal, Councilwoman Carol Brown assured the audience. But it provides the council with hard numbers, especially relating to money matters that cannot be answered without it.

About 50 Hailey residents crowded into City Hall chambers Monday night to offer additional testimony on a new modified annexation request for the alfalfa field on which a developer wants to build 365 homes and an 18-hole golf course.

Developer David Hennessey recently pulled 380 acres of wildlife habitat above Quigley Pond and in Deadman Gulch out of the annexation request, prompting the city to reopen the matter for public comment after having closed it in June.

Hennessey has said he plans to develop the far-reaching areas under county zoning requirements.

Hailey resident Darlene Finnell told the council that she was originally in favor of the city annexing the property but that she had changed her mind because she now believes the best protection for wildlife and the community would be to keep the property in the county. County zoning regulations allow for a smaller number of homes — about 110 — on the property in question than city regulations would permit.

"The city doesn't need the headache," she said.

Jon Wiece echoed the sentiments of several of Monday's attendees when he said he wished the city could find out what the county would do before making a decision. Others pointed out that the city would retain a lot of leverage even if the county was handed the annexation question because the city would have to sign off on such infrastructure as sewer and water treatment.

"I think Hailey should reap the benefits from development but I think that no development should happen beyond the pond," said Hailey resident Tom Swenson. The problem with dealing with the county, he added, is that no one can predict what will happen.

"We don't even know who the commissioners would be should they decided to propose something (at the far end of the project)," he said.

KAREN BOSSICK/For the Times-News

The canyon proposed for a development that includes a golf course and residences currently hosts an alfalfa field in summer and cross country ski trails in winter.

Law & Disorder... ...in Cassia County

From Aug. 29 police reports:

Domestic battery, obstruction: Police were dispatched to a vehicle in Burley about a possible domestic fight. According to Deputy Matt Arthur's report, he found an unemployed, 30-year-old woman with the "Tiny Toons" character "Lil Sneezer" tattooed on her hip. She was with "several small children," the report notes.

"I asked her what happened. One of the children began saying something about their father when the female silenced them." The woman said nothing happened. When asked for her identification two times, she allegedly said she was "a Curiel," walked away from Arthur, and said, "Take me to jail!"

He did, arresting her for obstruction and, later, domestic battery. The 36-year-old male involved, presumably the father of at least one of the children, was questioned at his apartment.

According to the report, he had "wet blood on his face and a blood spot in his shorts." He reportedly said he got into a fight with the woman but didn't want to press charges and, when asked to write a statement, said "he really didn't want to."

At the jail, the woman allegedly told Arthur that the man pulled her hair while hitting her. Arthur notes that he didn't see any marks on her but that she "ran her fingers through her hair and quite a few hairs were removed from her head." The hair that fell out of her head was photographed, and Arthur requested that the prosecutor review the case to determine if the man needs to be charged.

Ducks just don't fly in Oregon; it's against the law

Starting this morning, thousands of University of Oregon football fans will begin the remarkably unscenic drive across their state's outback to Thursday night's nationally televised season-opening game against Boise State University.

In one of the more curious press releases I've seen in awhile, the Oregon Highway Patrol announced this week that it's just itching to write them speeding tickets.

OHP troopers will focus increased enforcement today and Thursday on major state highways in central and eastern Oregon — Interstate 84, U.S. Highway 20 and U.S. Highway 26 — that lead to Bronco Stadium's blue turf.

Quite sensible, but remember that on a free-way in Oregon speeding means driving 66 mph.

And the OHP is heart-attack serious about that. My wife and I were driving from Boise to California last spring, and we stopped for lunch in Jordan Valley (population 239). While we dined, eight OHP troopers walked into and out of the eatery.

"Big event today?" I asked one of them as I paid the check. "Nah," he said, "just an ordinary Sunday."

Along the 147 miles of U.S. Highway 95 between Marsing, Idaho, and the Oregon-Nevada border, there are fewer than 400 residents, according to the Census Bureau. And,

DON'T ASK ME
Steve Crump

I'm guessing, at least as many cops.

I have a cousin who raises potatoes near Winnemucca, Nev., and travels Highway 95 to Idaho often. He told me he'd received six speeding tickets — all in Oregon — in 3 1/2 years.

My father-in-law was pulled over — and cited — just north of the Nevada border for driving 67 mph.

What's curious is that safe and sane driving isn't exactly a statewide obsession in Oregon. Interstate 5, which runs down the middle of the Willamette Valley in western Oregon, is pretty much a race-track.

Not so east of the Cascades. It's as if state officials — who have repeatedly quashed legislative efforts to raise Oregon's highway speed limit to 70 mph — are focused on visitors seeing Oregon.

In slow motion.

After all, it's an 894-mile round trip from Eugene, Ore., to Boise. At 65 mph, that's a 14-hour drive.

Forget about catching speeding scofflaws. OHP should worry about keeping all those Ducks awake.

Steve Crump may be reached at 735-3223. Hear him on KLIX-1310 AM at 8:30 a.m. on Fridays.

Gooding homicide case clearing court

Times-News

The 2007 homicide of Gustavo Flores Quintana is rolling to a legal end at the Gooding County Courthouse.

Authorities found Quintana shot in the back of the neck on Nov. 8, 2007, and suspect he was killed for drugs and money along a gravel road, near 1700 South and 1750 East in Gooding County.

Authorities believed two men were connected to the killing: Jesus Valencia-Bolanos and Carlos Alberto Villanueva-Martinez Jr.

Bolanos pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter on July 2 and is set to be sentenced on Oct. 13 in Gooding. A jury convicted

Bolanos Martinez

Martinez of grand theft in February and he was sentenced to six years indeterminate prison time with four years fixed for the theft of Quintana's vehicle.

Bolanos wasn't charged in the homicide until February of this year, after an inmate at the Gooding County Jail approached police on Jan. 15 saying Bolanos had confessed to the murder, according to court records.

Gooding County Sheriff recommendations for Shaun Gough confirmed Bolanos will be open at the Tuesday that sentencing hearing.

T.F. County budget hearing today

Times-News

Twin Falls County commissioners will hold a public hearing today at 10 a.m. on the county's proposed $36.9 million budget for next year.

The hearing will be held at the Twin Falls County Courthouse, 425 Shoshone St. N., Twin Falls.

The budget, a 1.8 percent drop from this year, is decreasing, mainly to a decline in revenue, including from a drop in building permits. But the drop would have been nearly 4 percent if not for the 25 percent spike in indigent health care costs, commissioners have said.

Eliminate state agencies? That's a long-shot solution

Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter isn't happy about it, but sentiment is building on the Legislature's budget-writing Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee to zero-out entire state agencies as Idaho tries to cope with the recession.

"We not only will cut state government but we'll probably eliminate some services and some agencies because after you cut so far, there's nothing left," state Rep. Jim Patrick, R-Twin Falls — a JFAC member — told a gathering in Twin Falls recently. "And it's better to eliminate the agency than it is to drag on with just a few people who don't accomplish anything."

JFAC Co-Chairman Dean Cameron, R-Rupert, says all options are on the table.

"They may be great programs and they may be important and they may make sense to offer in good times, but we may be forced to choose between 'good' and 'better' programs," Cameron said.

The state's new fiscal year, which began July 1, has gotten off to a troubling start. July revenue was down about 9 percent, or $27 million less than a year ago, according to the Division of Financial Management. And the state came in $78.8 million short of what lawmakers predicted when they adjourned in May.

In some ways the eliminate-small-agencies argument is compelling. The state is nearing the limit of what's practical to cut in Corrections and the Department of Health of Welfare — two of the departments where serious money is spent. There's a point beyond which more felons can't be put back on the streets and a limit on how many prison guards can be laid off. And because Health and Welfare runs Medicaid and other programs mandated by the federal government, the department can't be gutted much further and still do its job.

Higher education, with its limited constituency in the Legislature, could still be reduced, but many lawmakers are unwilling to cut public schools significantly more.

Otter and the Legislature have already dialed back the departments of Parks and Recreation, Agriculture and Water Resources — so much, some legislators believe, the agencies are on the verge of losing their effectiveness.

So why not just get rid of them?

Because of practicalities. The state park system isn't going to be sold to the private sector. Industry support for the Department of Ag is strong, and the agency has significant regulatory responsibilities. And Water Resources is so integral to Snake River Basin adjudication, to Eastern Snake River Plain Aquifer management and to water-law enforcement that it's inconceivable the agency could shrink beyond a certain level.

The biggest budget cut is most likely to follow Gov. John Evans's path during the last serious Idaho recession: Put state employees on four-day work weeks.

That lasted for two months in 1982; it could be longer this time.

The Legislature that year approved a general fund budget of $465 million. Twenty-seven years on, it's $2.5 billion.

It's simply not possible to unravel a five-fold increase in the size of state government because demands — some statutory, but most political — are institutionalized.

And if Ag, Water Resources and Parks and Rec disappeared tomorrow, they'd be back soon.

Our view: Public employees — those who still have jobs — are likely to bear the brunt of the next round of state budget cutbacks.

What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Republicans flip-flop on Medicare

The summer health care debate has revived an old American tradition: bare-knuckled demagoguery. The airwaves have resounded with spurious charges of socialism, "death panels" and free health care for illegal immigrants.

Doyle McManus

Now comes the chairman of the Republican Party with an audacious act of political cross-dressing. Michael Steele announced that his party would henceforth embrace the mission of defending Medicare, the federal health insurance program for senior citizens, against anyone who wants to limit its rapidly growing spending.

"We need to protect Medicare and not cut it in the name of health reform," Steele said at the head of a list of principles he issued for this autumn's debate on health care.

In 1961, before the program's enactment, Ronald Reagan denounced its creation as the leading edge of socialism; with Medicare in place, Reagan said, "You and I are going to spend our sunset years telling our children and our children's children what it once was like in America when men were free." Reagan eventually dropped his opposition to Medicare's existence, but as president he looked for ways to rein in its spending.

But this time, the most prominent leader calling for fiscal restraint in Medicare is Barack Obama, and that has driven Steele, as if by chemical reaction, to take the opposite position.

The about-face has left the GOP chairman struggling to articulate a lucid policy. He acknowledges that without any change, "Medicare will go deep into the red in less than a decade." But he nevertheless insists that limits shouldn't be imposed. And he certainly isn't advocating tax increases to plug the gap.

Weirdest of all, even as he vowed to "protect Medicare," Steele denounced it as a "single-payer program" and "a very good example of what we should not have happen with all our health care."

This isn't merely demagoguery; it's incoherent demagoguery. After several days of bad reviews, Steele backpedaled a step and said that he might not oppose all cuts in Medicare spending. But he refused to say what changes he would support to stop costs from spiraling out of control.

What has happened here, of course, is that Steele and other GOP tacticians believe they have found a new "third rail" in American politics: Medicare. The one great untouchable up to now has been Social Security: Whenever fiscally responsible Republicans have called for controlling costs, partisan Democrats accused them of plotting to rob the elderly of their pensions. Now, having seen the advantage of pandering to America's most powerful voting bloc, Republicans have adopted a ploy they once railed against.

Polls show growing opposition among the elderly to President Obama's still-fuzzy health care proposals as they worry about what proposed trims in Medicare spending might mean. If senior citizens turn solidly against health care reform, Obama's signature project could collapse.

If Obama and the Democrats hope to win this battle, they'll need to convince senior citizens that their medical care won't be harmed by curbing future growth in Medicare spending and subjecting the program to tougher scrutiny on cost-effectiveness. They haven't successfully made that case yet.

In the debate about costs, many Democrats don't have clean hands. When then-President George W. Bush proposed modest Medicare spending trims in 2006, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid accused him of "asking our seniors ... to clean up his fiscal mess with painful cuts in health care."

Still, Steele's position is bad politics over the long run. The GOP chairman has declared that fiscal restraint, one of his party's most basic tenets, is no longer a virtue. Many Republicans believe their party lost its way when it abandoned its fidelity to fiscal responsibility. Steele's defense of unfettered Medicare spending won't help the party recover.

More important, it's bad policy. Telling seniors that growth in Medicare spending is an unshakable entitlement is a commitment that the next Republican president will regret.

Other Republicans have warned that the rate of growth in Medicare spending can't be sustained. Sens. Tom Coburn, R-Okla., and Richard Burr, R-N.C., have proposed a health care plan that doesn't agree with Obama on much, but does look for ways to control Medicare costs. Sen. John McCain proposed trimming future Medicare spending when he ran for president, and says he still thinks cuts are needed.

But Steele skipped those steps and went straight for the crowd-pleaser, promising that the Republican Party won't cut Medicare. He was seeking a tactical advantage for his side in the debate. Instead, he has put the GOP in danger of being not only the Party of No, but also a party of no sense.

Glenn Beck, Fox's new crackpot-in-chief

Does Glenn Beck really mean to incite the assassination of the president of the United States or is it that he just doesn't care much one way or another? Hey, it's TV and ratings matter, you know.

In case you've been lucky enough lately to be passing time in one of our meager groves of sanity, know that Beck is the latest Fox News cable sensation, a right-wing near lunatic of such inspired loquaciousness that his ratings are challenging even the network's reigning act, Bill O'Reilly.

Could it be that O'Reilly, with his hoary shtick of bullying arrogance and mewling pettiness, is beginning to come across as a bit of an old fogey? If so, the network has a comer in Beck.

Beck recently endeared himself to the nation's new secessionists by declaring that President Obama is "a racist" with a "deep-seated hatred for white people and the white culture."

And while the 1933 Reichstag fire in Berlin may not be haunting you personally, Beck has been fretting about it — loudly — on your behalf. The Reichstag was Germany's parliament and its building was torched maybe by communists, maybe by Nazis — or maybe by fireflies, for all anyone really knows. Whatever the case, Hitler used the apparent sabotage as an excuse to seize total power just weeks after his election.

This wouldn't seem, off hand, to have a whole lot to do with America in 2009, but Beck has been railing about it on his TV and radio shows. Yes, he has a radio show, too, and books.

Obama, Beck claims, is plotting to create a Democratic Party dictatorship and he and other Democrats are just waiting for, if they are not actually planning, some Reichstag-like event as a triggering mechanism. Beck is urging his listeners to pray for more time in hopes an aroused citizenry will stop Obama before we lose our freedom.

Let us, instead, pause and parse.

Hitler assassination fantasies play to one of history's great what-ifs — what if someone had just killed him before he consolidated power? A variation is featured in the current movie "Inglourious Basterds." So what is Beck up to? Given his true-believer listeners and the rough trade in Fox's audience, Beck and his network are playing with matches in an ammo dump.

Already, crazily, we see Obama-as-Hitler placards bobbing in anti-Obama rallies. We have armed show-offs strutting around the perimeter of the president's public events brandishing firearms, including even semi-automatic military-style weapons. We have people sporting T-shirts with Thomas Jefferson's comment that "The tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots and tyrants," a sentiment its wearers both proclaim and misunderstand. And in a ceaseless campaign, radio talkers and bloggers tutor their listeners and readers to distrust every established constitutional office and institution of governance.

From the start we've used our politics as much for entertainment as for actually getting anything done, though when push has come to shove we've usually settled down and seen the real work through.

A number of today's political games are different. Patriotism is being dumbed down to hating government. Trust and comity are scoffed at as a sucker's buy.

An increasingly clamorous fringe is counting on the shrugging indulgence of a timorous majority to nurture its hysterias with indifference. The sufferance so far suggests, worryingly, that the bet may be well placed.

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF POLITICS

Doonesbury

By Garry Trudeau

Mallard Fillmore

By Bruce Tinsley

Obama must keep liberal Dems at arm's length

Two tides swept over American politics last winter. The first was the Obama tide. Barack Obama came into office with an impressive 70 percent approval rating. The second was the independent tide. Over the first months of this year, the number of people who called themselves either Democrats or Republicans declined, while the number who called themselves independents surged ahead.

Obama's challenge was to push his agenda through a Democratic-controlled government while retaining the affection of the 39 percent of Americans in the middle.

The administration hasn't been able to pull it off. From the stimulus to health care, it has joined itself at the hip to the liberal leadership in Congress. The White House has failed to veto measures, like the pork-laden omnibus spending bill, that would have demonstrated independence and fiscal restraint. By force of circumstances and by design, the president has promoted one policy after another that increases spending and centralizes power in Washington.

The result is the Obama slide, the most important feature of the current moment. The number of Americans who trust President Obama to make the right decisions has fallen by roughly 17 percentage points. Obama's job approval is down to about 50 percent. All presidents fall from their honeymoon highs, but in the history of polling, no newly elected American president has fallen this far this fast.

Anxiety is now pervasive. Trust in government rose when Obama took office. It has fallen back to historic lows. Fifty-nine percent of Americans now think the country is headed in the wrong direction.

The public's view of Congress, which ticked upward for a time, has plummeted. Charlie Cook, who knows as much about congressional elections as anyone in the country, wrote recently that Democratic fortunes have "slipped completely out of control." He and the experts he surveyed believe there is just as much chance that the Democrats could lose more than 20 House seats in the next elections as less than 20.

There are also warning signs in the Senate. A recent poll shows Harry Reid, the majority leader, trailing the Republican Danny Tarkanian, a possible 2010 opponent, by 49 percent to 38 percent. When your majority leader is down to a 38 percent base in his home state, that's not good.

The public has soured on Obama's policy proposals. Voters often have only a fuzzy sense of what each individual proposal actually does, but more and more have a growing conviction that if the president is proposing it, it must involve big spending, big government and a fundamental departure from the traditional American approach.

Driven by this general anxiety, and by specific concerns, public opposition to health care reform is now steady and stable. Independents once solidly supported reform. Now they have swung against it. As the veteran pollster Bill McInturff has pointed out, public attitudes toward Obamacare exactly match public attitudes toward Clintoncare when that reform effort collapsed in 1994.

Amazingly, some liberals are now lashing out at Obama because the entire country doesn't agree with The Huffington Post. Some now argue that the administration should just ignore the ignorant masses and ram health care through using reconciliation, the legislative maneuver that would reduce the need for moderate votes.

This would be suicidal. You can't pass the most important domestic reform in a generation when the majority of voters think you are on the wrong path. To do so would be a sign of unmitigated arrogance. If Obama agrees to use reconciliation, he will permanently affix himself to the liberal wing of his party and permanently alienate independents. He will be president of 35 percent of the country — and good luck getting anything done after that.

Fiscal restraint is now the animating issue for moderate Americans. To take the looming $9 trillion in debt and balloon it further would be to enrage a giant part of the electorate.

This is a country that has always been suspicious of centralized government. This is a country that has just lived through an economic trauma caused by excessive spending and debt. Most Americans still admire Obama and want him to succeed. But if he doesn't proceed in a manner consistent with the spirit of the nation and the times, voters will find a way to stop him.

The president's challenge now is to halt the slide. That doesn't mean giving up his goals. It means he has to align his proposals to the values of the political center: fiscal responsibility, individual choice and decentralized authority.

Events have pushed Barack Obama off to the left. Time to rebalance.

David Brooks is a columnist for The New York Times. Write to him at dbrooks@nytimes.com.

What it was, was health care legislation

Of all the phony baloney sliced this summer, the phonest is that the health care reform bills are too long and their verbiage is too complicated to be trusted.

Some of this is coming from people who know better. Sen. David Vitter, R-La., said he has "a fundamental problem with any bill over 1,000 pages." Some of it is innocent, like the voter who shook papers at Sen. Arlen Specter, D-Pa., and ordered him to write laws at an eighth-grade level.

Be careful what grade level you ask for. The voter was in an age group in which eighth-grade comprehension cannot be taken for granted. More important, anything an eighth-grader can understand, two eighth-graders can argue about. Then you have a court case. It will help the judge and jury if the argument turns on words with a bit more precision than a rap lyric.

Regular readers know what I am talking about, but an example may help when they try to explain civics to their neighbors.

Remember Andy Griffith's classic comic bit "What it was, was football"? Casting himself as a rube who got into a football game by mistake, Mr. Griffith described men in a struggle over a "little pumpkin" and how it turned into the "awfulest fight I ever seen."

The joke works because listeners know that he is describing a football game without knowing the jargon. Football fans know that someone reaching the end zone doesn't mean that the game ends. If you want to enjoy the game, you learn the language.

If you want to criticize legislation, you have to learn the language, at least enough to get by. You can follow the game without knowing every one of its fine points, but you are as lost as Andy Griffith if you don't know the basics.

Laws are studied with phrases that might sound odd at the supermarket but have a distinct advantage in that some court at some time described, in detail, exactly what the phrase means. Try to say "the same thing" in eighth-grade words, and you can't be certain that the next court would get the same understanding from your new words.

Columnist Kathleen Parker couldn't resist the fun of quoting parts of a House bill that, standing alone and out of context, are total gobbledegook. But the law that subsidizes cattle ranchers leasing federal land contains that kind of language as well. All laws do. The ranchers get their government checks anyway.

What about the alleged lack of time to read the bills? What normally happens is that a senator or committee tells the staff to write a bill that does what the senator or the committee wants done. The staff writes the legislation, reads it and writes a summary.

That is the last time anyone reads the whole bill straight through.

The senator takes a close look at parts he expects to be controversial. Other senators check out parts that affect them or their constituents. Lobbyists look for what affects their clients. There are shortcuts all of them can use to find what they are looking for.

The process relies on trust that the staff won't mislead the sponsor and the sponsor won't mislead members. If it didn't run on this kind of trust, Congress would be a reading room where nothing is done.

It seems to be becoming one anyway, now that Sen. Ted Kennedy is gone and the replacement generation features the Republican congresswoman from Minnesota who is calling on citizens to be "armed and dangerous" against socialist energy taxes.

Sen. Vitter is not the most stylish toga in the Senate, but he was a Rhodes scholar. A thousand pages shouldn't daunt him, especially when he doesn't have to read them. He can make the process sound ludicrous, but Andy Griffith could make football sound like a bar fight.

If we had Cliffs Notes instead of statute books, we would have an eighth-grade government with no teachers to step in when childishness breaks out.

Firm picked for W.R. Valley corridor reconstruction

WHPacific to design first phase of Timmerman to Ketchum project

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

The first phase of development for the Timmerman to Ketchum corridor is set to begin — laying the groundwork for new development between

Hailey and Ketchum. A consulting firm has been selected to design and provide construction plans for the initial project, the Idaho Transportation Department announced. WHPacific, an Idaho-based engineering and land surveying firm, was chosen from a group of 13 candidates to develop right-of-way plans and design the first phase of the 26-mile corridor reconstruction project.

The Federal Highway Administration last year, identified four projects for initial development — the section from Timber Way and the Big Wood River Bridge north of St. Luke's Medical Center is the first of the four initial projects to be developed in the corridor.

"It was a difficult vetting process to choose the engineering firm," Project Manager Mike Scott said.

The section between Timber Way and Hospital Drive was picked to be the first phase because of acquisition requirements and transportation demands. Included in the first phase is development of roadway engineering and right-of-way plans, acquisition of right of way, and construction.

Construction is expected to begin in 2013.

As much as $27 million will be used to fund the first phase of the project.

Scott said any excess from phase one will be available

Fly Sun Valley Alliance: money would be used to help market valley

Times-News staff

The Friedman Memorial Airport Authority, with support from Fly Sun Valley Alliance and the Sun Valley Resort, submitted a $150,000 grant to the U.S. Department of Transportation in hopes of expanding the frequency of flights to and from the Wood River Valley.

The grant proposes using $150,000 in federal funds, along with a match of $50,000 from the local community in cash and in-kind support, to help increase marketing of the valley in an effort to enhance existing air service, according to a statement from the Fly Sun Valley Alliance.

The grant was submitted under the Small Community Air Service Development Program, which has a grant pool of $8 million in FY 2010 to grant to communities to assist them with enhancing air service.

A FAIR SHARE

Small businesses disappointed with contracting share

By V. Dion Haynes
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Officials of small businesses, asserting that the government has repeatedly failed to meet its obligation to set aside work for them, are demanding that the Obama administration dramatically increase federal contracts awarded to their firms.

Federal law requires that the government set aside 23 percent of its contracts to small businesses. But small businesses in fiscal 2008 received 21.5 percent of those contracts, the shortfall representing a loss of $30 billion in work to the firms, according to the National Association of Small Business Contractors.

Obama administration officials point out that awards to small-business contractors set a record in 2008. They say they are increasing their outreach efforts, requiring agency heads to participate in many more meet-and-greet events during the remainder of the year in an attempt to reach their goal.

But small-business advocates say it's not enough. The association, comprising 300,000 small-business contractors, is pressing for several changes, including imposing penalties on agencies that fail to meet the requirement and enforcing fines on large companies that misrepresent themselves as small or minority-owned businesses or misstate their connection with small-business subcontractors. They also are asking President Obama to make the top spot at the Small Business Administration a Cabinet position.

Though the government has failed to meet the contracting requirement for five years, officials said, the economy is how prompting the association to push harder for reforms. Small businesses, which employ the majority of U.S. workers, have been stung harder than big companies by tight credit and other recession-related problems, the association said.

"As president, Mr. Obama has focused on economic recovery. But he has not worked hard enough on small business," said Margot Dorfman, vice president of policy at the association and chief executive of the U.S. Women's Chamber of Commerce.

"The president said he is relying on small businesses to grow so the economy can grow," Dorfman said. But that sector is "seeing a contraction rather than an expansion."

Timothy Crawley, principal of Gemini Tech Services, estimates the suburban defense and professional services contracting firm, which has 25 full- and part-time employees, lost about $30 million in work over three years to larger companies.

"There are contracts that the government places a small-business requirement on, but not all agencies enforce it," Crawley said.

21.5 PERCENT

$30 BILLION
Shortfall to small business from not getting required amount of contracts.

This is "limiting small businesses' ability to gain access to government work and limiting government's ability to gain innovative and cost-effective ways to get the work done."

The government has considered how smaller firms often are at a financial disadvantage merely in preparing a proposal, he said: Many can't afford to invest $50,000 to $500,000 in an extensive proposal, a cost difficult to absorb if they don't get the contract, so they choose not to compete.

Moreover, the small-business set-aside doesn't apply to some of U.S. manufacturing activity, new orders grow in Aug.

By Tali Arbel
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — The U.S. manufacturing sector grew in August for the first time in 19 months, adding to evidence that the recession is ending.

The better-than-expected reading Tuesday by the Institute for Supply Management showed the highest number for its manufacturing index since June 2007. New customer orders jumped to a level not seen since late 2004.

The report raised hopes for a broad economic rebound. Still, as long as consumers remain hamstrung by weak pay and job losses, and wary of ramping up spending, the economy might not be able to sustain a recovery.

Consumers did buy more cars last month, due mainly to the popular Cash for Clunkers program, which boosted Ford Motor Co.'s U.S. sales 17.2 percent over last year. Shortages of smaller vehicles weighed on rival Chrysler.

Other automakers are expected to release U.S. sales figures later Tuesday that are likely to mark the first year-over-year monthly sales gain for the industry since October 2007.

The clunkers program, which ended on Aug. 24, spurred 690,114 new sales, at a taxpayer cost of $2.88 billion by offering up to $4,500 toward new, more fuel-efficient cars and trucks.

"Manufacturing will continue to expand," but capital investment will decline because plants have too much excess capacity, said Daniel Meckstroth, chief economist for the Manufacturers Alliance, a trade group. "You're going to see ups and downs."

The ISM, a trade group of purchasing executives, said its manufacturing index rose to 52.9 in August, from 48.9 in July. It's the first reading

Grants to help Idaho specialty crops compete

BOISE — The Idaho Department of Agriculture says eleven projects designed to improve specialty crops in the potato state will be awarded federal grant money.

State agriculture director Celia Gould says the projects — which include research into mint, grapes, apples, beans and potatoes as well as promotional activities — will enhance Idaho's specialty crop industry.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture is expected to give final approval for the grants sometime this month. The grants total more than $876,000.

Mexico evacuates thousands ahead of Hurricane Jimena

By Mark Stevenson, Associated Press writer

LOS CABOS, Mexico - Heavy winds, battering waves and intense rain pummeled residents and tourists in this vacation resort as Hurricane Jimena, one of the largest hurricanes this year, raked the coast late Tuesday.

Baja California prepared shelters to hold up to 29,000 people as Jimena, which weakened to a still threatening Category 3, churned northward offshore.

Ashley Legeyt, 62, a retiree from British Columbia who lives in Cabo San Lucas, pushed through the oncoming storm onto an exposed rocky point where he leaned against the onslaught of the hurricane's outer winds.

"It's like getting sand-blasted with water!" said Legeyt, his back to the wind, sand and spray blowing in from the ocean. "It's quite strong."

The Mexican government declared a state of emergency for Los Cabos and the Baja California Sur state capital of La Paz and schools, many ports and most businesses were closed. Rescue workers from the Red Cross and the Mexican military prepared for post-hurricane disaster relief.

Authorities reported no injuries or major damages in Los Cabos, but expressed concern about what might happen when the hurricane made landfall further up the coast.

"It could be ugly at Bahia Magdalena," state Interior Secretary Luis Armanado Diaz said, referring to a sparsely populated bay with a smattering of fishing villages farther up the coast.

Diaz said the hurricane might actually help alleviate the state's drought.

"If it continues like this, and there is not a major impact, it will help more than it will hurt," said Diaz, referring to the much-needed rain.

Huge waves battered the shore near Cabo San Lucas, and residents and tourists gathered to watch the show as the wind whipped up sand and salt spray.

Los Cabos resident Eduardo Meraz, 25, went swimming in the pounding surf at the height of the storm, and - still dripping wet - said he liked it.

"I'm not afraid. I respect the sea," said Meraz. "The water is nice but the waves really toss you around."

Paula Arenas took her 2-year-old nephew Mauro out to a rock outcropping to see the hurricane.

"I've spent a lot of time living here. We are used to hurricanes," Arenas said.

Receptionist Martha Pina stood in awe at the entrance to the SolMar hotel on the very tip of the peninsula.

Eduardo Meraz, 25, swims amid crashing waves in Cabo San Lucas, Mexico, Tuesday. The center of Hurricane Jimena was on course to pass west of Los Cabos late Tuesday or early today.

Exotic cooking in a one-butt kitchen

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — The porcelain lemon juicer with the bluebird painted on its side says as much about Bette Barnes' love of cooking as any other gadget she has in her kitchen.

It's from Mexico — a little town on the Sea of Cortez called Buena Vista, to be exact. That's where Barnes came to love to prepare dinners for friends.

"After my husband Bill retired as superintendent of schools, we moved to Mexico, a thousand miles south of San Diego. It was a simpler way where a Mexican lady washed laundry on a washboard and hung them on a barbed wire fence to dry," recalled the Hailey woman. "And there wasn't much to do except to fish for marlin and dorado and have dinner parties for everyone who wanted to come to Mexico to see us."

Apparently, practice made perfect, as Barnes has turned into "a fabulous cook," according to her friend Patti Reed: "She creates delicious, unusual and well-prepared meals with ease and with a smile on her voice."

When Bill and Bette Barnes moved to Sun Valley 18 years ago to escape the desert sun, the lemon juicer came with them, along with Barnes' penchant for entertaining. Both play a big role in one of her favorite dishes — Cold Lemon Soufflé.

"I like it because you can do it in advance. You can even put it in a freezer and then move it to the refrigerator to thaw about three hours before you serve it. And it serves about eight people because it's very rich," she said.

Barnes set about to make that soufflé on a recent afternoon, starting first by juicing fresh lemons on her porcelain juicer.

She spent the next 15 minutes stirring egg yolks, sugar and grated lemon rinds in the top of a double boiler.

"I'm not very creative so cooking is my outlet. And I find you get a lot of strokes for it because most people like to eat."

— Bette Barnes

"You could just wait for it turn into a ribbon. But that's a harder concept for people to grasp. So I just tell people to cook it for 15 minutes. That works out fine as long as the water's not too hot. If it's too hot, your eggs will scramble," she said.

Barnes' kitchen is a horse-shoe-shaped one, dominated by a granite counter and glass cabinets displaying her wine glasses and cookbooks and a smooth electric range top — a feature Barnes prizes because it's so easy to clean.

The kitchen is small as modern kitchens go, but everything is an arm's reach away.

"We call it a one-butt kitchen because two people can't bend over at the same time," she quipped.

Strains of classical music fill the air as she goes about her task. All they could get in Mexico was Mexican music, she says, save for 2 or 3 in the morning when they could tune in a San Diego station.

Barnes doesn't need to look at a recipe as she prepares the soufflé — she's done it dozens of times.

Meet Bette Barnes

Favorite gadgets: "The microwave, of course. It makes it so easy to steam vegetables and not lose the vitamins you would if you boiled them in water on the stove. Also, the Cuisinart — you can shred a pound of lettuce in eight seconds when you have a lot of people coming to dinner."

Have knife will travel: Bette Barnes takes her knives — all 22 of them that she bought for $30 off an infomercial during a bout of insomnia — with her when she and her husband head to Arizona for a few months during winter. She takes her spices, too — they don't last long and it's expensive to buy new ones, she said. Where Bette draws the line: Cookies and sushi. "I love to eat them but I don't like making them because you have to spend so much time dealing with little individual pieces. When I cook, I want to have it over with."

Food memory: "I was invited to President George W. Bush's inauguration and they had a cake that was a duplicate of the White House on a smaller scale. It was an awesome thing to see."

Most exotic experience: "My husband and I went to a restaurant in China where you could pick out the snakes you wanted for dinner."

Favorite dish: Lamb. "My Dad was born in France and my grandfather was a bit of a gourmand — he made his own wine in the cellar. As a result, I grew up eating artichokes, mushrooms and lamb — things that 60 years ago were considered exotic."

Comfort food: "Besides Cold Lemon Soufflé, I love ice cream sundaes loaded with chocolate and caramel sauce and almonds and whipped cream."

Most detested food: "I love to eat anything but hot beets."

Favorite chef: Martin Yan. "I used to watch him on PBS. None of his recipes go more than a page. They have limited ingredients. And they always turn out wonderfully."

Recipe for: COLD LEMON SOUFFLE

From the kitchen of:
BETTE BARNES

6 eggs, separated
1 1/2 cups sugar
1 tab unflavored gelatin
Juice of 3 lemons
Grated rind of 2 lemons
1 pint whipping cream

In top of a double boiler combine egg yolks, sugar and grated lemon rinds. Mix well and cook 15 minutes stirring constantly. In a small sauce pan combine gelatin and juice. Cook over low heat until gelatin is dissolved. Add to yolk mixture and cool. Beat egg whites until stiff peaks form. Whip cream until it is stiff. Fold egg whites and cream into yolk mixture and pour into a prepared soufflé dish. To increase the volume on the soufflé dish, tear a 24-inch piece of wax paper, fold it in half lengthwise, fold it again. Then tie it around the top of the souf-flé dish, extending it over the rim of the dish about 2 inches. Refrigerate overnight. Or freeze, thaw in refrigerator a few hours before serving. Serve with raspberry sauce or chocolate curls. Serves 6 to 8.

The mixture takes on a pretty yellow tone as Barnes folds the whipped cream into the egg yolk mixture.

Couponing's best-kept secrets:

Learn when less is more

This week's Super-Couponing secret may surprise you because it goes against just about everything shoppers believe about saving money and shopping. Are you ready for a head-scratcher?

Secret #5: Smaller-Size Items are Often a Better Value

Yes, you read that right. Buying the smaller size of a product, with coupons, is often a better deal than buying a larger size of the same item. When I teach my coupon classes, this statement is almost always met with disbelief. I completely understand why, because it runs contrary to just about everything shoppers believe.

To get the lowest price, we are conditioned to buy the largest size of something — the “family size” cereals, the “value-pack” of refills or just the largest package we can find. It does seem that you’ll need to buy that item less often if you buy a larger size — but you’re also likely to spend much more than you need to.

When we have a fairly high-value coupon, applying it to the relatively lower price of a smaller-sized item will often result in a significantly lower per-ounce cost. I know that this surprises many people. It surprised me, too, as I became a more experienced shopper. Over time, I noticed that many of the items I was able to bring home for free or for pennies were usually in smaller-sized packages than their so-called “value” or larger counterparts. Adding to the confusion, the larger packages often tout in big, bold letters that they are the better buy!

A few examples will help you understand why this works. A certain brand of aluminum foil is on sale at my local store. The 70-square-foot box is $3.79 and the 20-square-foot box is 99 cents. With a coupon that states “$1 off any aluminum foil,” I have my choice as to which size

COUPON QUEEN

box I'd like, the larger or the smaller. While my dollar coupon will, indeed, give me a discount on the larger box, the smaller box will be free. And I prefer free any day.

The rule of thumb that it's better to buy the smaller size especially holds true when we stack a store's coupon and manufacturer's coupon. With the two coupons, we receive an even larger discount on an item. For example, baby wipes are on sale at my store this week. The plastic tub contains 77 wipes and it's on sale for $2.99. The “value-pack” of baby wipe refills contains 231 wipes and it's on sale for $5.99. My store offers a $1.50 store coupon good on any size of the wipes. I also have a $1 manufacturer coupon for the wipes. Stacking these coupons gives me $2.50 in savings on either size item. With the coupons, the plastic tub with 77 wipes will cost just 49 cents. The “value-pack” refill will cost me $3.49 using the same coupons. The “value-pack” contains three 77-count wipe packages; that works out to about $1.16 for each 77-wipe package. I'd spend more than twice as much on baby wipes if I purchased the larger, so-called “money-saving” size.

An even easier example involves coupons for items that come in a trial or travel size. A $1 coupon good for any size deodorant will certainly give you a discount on a full-size deodorant. But a 99-cent travel size will be free using the coupon. Again, any time a coupon states that it will work on any size of a product, remember that the trial and travel sizes are included. Free always makes better financial “cents” than spending more than we have to!

An everyday crab cake

By Kate Shatzkin
The Baltimore Sun

Now, this crab cake is not intended to be your fancy, all-lump-and-no-filler, Maryland crab cake of your dreams. It's more of an everyday family dinner crab cake, which I tested with backfin meat to make it as inexpensive as possible. (Of course, you can feel free to use lump if you like. If you do use backfin, watch out for pieces of shell.)

This recipe caught my eye because it was submitted to the “Fix-It and Enjoy-It Healthy Cookbook” by Cathy Kruba of Baltimore. I figure that gives it some cred. I also liked it because the patties are baked, which helps their nutritional profile. They were satisfying and quick on a weeknight.

What did the kids think? Leah took one bite; Sam ate almost a whole crab cake, but didn't want to really admit that he had liked it. Actions speak louder than words.

BALTIMORE CRAB CAKES

1 pound crabmeat, flaked

KATE SHATZKIN/The Baltimore Sun

- 4 slices whole wheat bread, made into crumbs
- 1/4 cup minced fresh parsley
- 1/4 cup light mayonnaise
- 2 tablespoons prepared mustard
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1/8 teaspoon, or a few drops, of hot sauce

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Combine all ingredients thoroughly in a large bowl. Divide mixture evenly into 8 portions and shape into patties. Place on lightly greased baking sheet. Bake for 15 minutes.

Turn crab cakes over. Bake 10 minutes longer, or until crispy.

Satisfying seafood soup in 35 minutes

By Bonnie S. Benwick
The Washington Post

Seafood soups often don't have enough in them to make a satisfying meal, but that's not the case here. Two pounds of mussels and more than a pound of large shrimp, plus vegetables, coconut milk and vegetable broth, go into the pot.

Of course, you could increase the bulk further by adding cooked soba noodles or rice-stick noodles.

Serve with a vinaigrette-dressed salad of Boston lettuce, peanuts, water chestnuts, cilantro and mandarin oranges, as suggested in the cookbook this recipe comes from. Adapted from “Whole Foods Diet Cookbook,” by Ivy Larson and Andrew Larson (Gibbs Smith, 2009).

MUSSELS AND SHRIMP IN COCONUT-LIME BROTH

4 to 6 servings

- 5 medium cloves garlic
- 2-inch piece ginger root
- 1 or 2 serrano chili peppers
- 2 medium red or orange bell peppers
- 1 medium red onion
- 1 stalk lemon grass, tough outer leaves discarded
- 2 pounds mussels
- 1 tablespoon extra-virgin coconut oil (optional; may substitute extra-virgin olive oil)
- 2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
- Fine sea salt
- 20 large raw shrimp (about 1 1/4 pounds)
- 2 medium limes
- 1 medium orange
- 3 scallions
- 14 ounces coconut milk (may use low-fat)
- 3 cups organic vegetable broth
- Leaves from 8 sprigs cilantro
- Sweet chili sauce or toasted sesame oil, for serving (optional)

Peel the garlic, then cut it into very thin slices. Peel the ginger, then cut it into very thin slices. Stem and seed the serrano peppers, then mince. Cut away the flesh from the bell peppers and cut it into small dice. Cut the onion into small dice. Cut the lemon grass into 2 equal pieces, then use the wide blade of a chef's knife to smash each piece.

Rinse and drain the mussels; discard any whose shells are broken or damaged.

Combine the coconut oil, if using, and the olive oil in a medium soup pot or Dutch oven over medium-high heat. Add the garlic, ginger, chili pepper to taste, bell peppers and onion, stirring to coat evenly. Reduce the heat to medium (the sizzle should quiet down) and cook for about 6 minutes, until the onion and bell peppers just start to soften. Season lightly with salt.

While the vegetables are cooking, peel and devein the shrimp. Juice the limes (to yield 1/4 to 1/3 cup). Use a vegetable peeler to remove the zest (in large strips; no white pith) from the orange. Cut the white and light-green parts of the scallions crosswise into 1/4-inch pieces.

Add the coconut milk, vegetable broth, lime juice, strips of orange peel and smashed lemon grass to the pot.

Increase the heat to medium-high; stir to mix well. Once the mixture comes to a boil, add the mussels and scallions. Cover and cook for 3 to 4 minutes or until the mussels have opened.

While the mussels are cooking, coarsely chop the cilantro leaves (if desired, or leave whole).

Add the shrimp to the pot, making sure they are completely submerged in the liquid. Cover and cook for 2 to 3 minutes or until they become opaque. Uncover and remove from the heat. Discard any mussels that have not opened. If desired, discard the strips of orange peel and the lemon grass.

To serve, ladle equal portions of the soup among wide, shallow individual bowls, dividing the mussels and shrimp among the portions. Sprinkle cilantro on top; if desired, lightly drizzle with sweet chili sauce or toasted sesame oil. Serve hot.

Kitchen

She works methodically, putting the lemon mixture in the pantry to let it cool, then taking it out on the porch to stir it again to let it get cooler still. Satisfied that it is cool enough, she brings it back in and proceeds to mix whipping cream in a bowl in her sink so the mixture doesn't splatter on her dark red walls.

She folds the whipped cream into the lemon mixture, then fashions a collar of waxed paper around the souffle dish to give it a little additional height, tying the collar off with wrapping twine and a paper clip.

Her cooking was simpler, she says, when her kids were young and she was teaching business courses to high school and college students.

“We bought five pounds of hamburger — a pound for every day of the work week. We'd have meat loaf one day, stuffed peppers the next... Once the children left, I felt I could try a greater variety.”

And Barnes did just that, pairing her love of travel with cooking classes in exotic realms like Thailand and Italy.

She pulled an old book held together by red tape out of her recipe book cabinet. The book was written by Michael Fields, former food editor of the New York Times.

“This guy taught me how to cook. It doesn't have a lot of recipes but it explained things in a way that any idiot could follow them. After this, I graduated to Julia Child,” she said.

She pulled out another book — this one by Martin Yan. She thumbed through the recipes, which included Salmon Packets with Black Bean Sauce, Stuffed Steamed Trout, Thai Spiced Orange Pork Chops with Onions and Pork Basil Stir Fry.

Her husband has scribbled the dates that she prepared each dish next to the recipes, with comments like “Delicious.”

“When I started going to more exotic Chinese dishes, this was the chef I turned to,” she said. “You can see I've got food stains on all the pages.”

When the souffle had congealed, Barnes drizzled a few lines of raspberry sauce onto each plate. Then she drizzled a few more lines over the souffle and sprinkled on a few fresh raspberries to top it off.

“This is amazingly good,” said Jim Emry, among those lucky enough to sample it. “It's kind of like a lemon mousse. A very yummy lemon mousse.”

Such comments are music to Barnes' ears.

“I'm not very creative so cooking is my outlet,” she said. “And I find you get a lot of strokes for it because most people like to eat.”

Carnivorous cocktails put meat in your glass

By Caryn Brooks
For The Associated Press

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — First you cook the bacon, remove the fat and tear it into pieces. It sounds like the start of a nice breakfast, but it's actually the first part of mixologist Adam Seger's Baconcello recipe. The next step is steeping the bacon in vodka for 72 hours.

Bacon-infused spirits and other so-called "carnivorous cocktails" are quirky options on the menus of some cutting-edge bars these days, and with the introduction this May of a mass-produced product called Bakon Vodka, flesh-flavored spirits are beginning to nudge their way into the mainstream drinking scene.

Seger, general manager, mixologist and sommelier of Chicago bar/restaurant Nacional 27, is part of a multitasking breed of bar-keep that likes to incorporate culinary techniques into drinks. Bacon is the most popular meat-in-a-glass, but Seger has also made a ham-and-cheese cocktail, while renowned mixologist Todd Thrasher has experimented with foie gras and lamb.

Seger says that savory drinks follow cooking logic. "You use alcohol to deglaze a pan when you cook, so it makes sense that you can invert it," he says.

To taste Thrasher's BLT cocktail, you have to head to his speakeasy PX in Alexandria. Can't find it? That's because there's no sign and you have to knock on an imposing door to gain entrance.

On a recent summer night, we entered and found Jayson Smith manning the bar, doling out the BLT — a drink full of mind-bending, taste bud-tingling turns. A huge ice cube, made with lettuce water, anchors a glass rimmed with bacon salt. Clear tomato water and bacon-infused vodka are mixed and poured over the lettuce cube.

Thrasher also makes an off-the-menu special called "MacGriddle," which tastes like a McGriddle from McDonald's. This one mixes the bacon vodka with cream, maple syrup, a whole egg and confectioner's sugar. Smith warned us, "It coats your palate" and he was right: It's very sweet and good as a one-off dessert drink.

Thrasher echoes Seger when he talks about his overall mixology inspiration.

"I love food, I love cooking, but the limitations of a bar have been alcohol and just alcohol," he says. "I found the limitations of being a bartender, for lack of a better word, limiting. So I started looking through cookbooks to find inspiration."

What started Thrasher's engine when it comes to carnivorous cocktails was reading about how famed chef and author Auguste Escoffier poached foie gras (duck or goose liver) in Armagnac (grape brandy) in the late 1880s and then used the fat-washed spirit to flavor sauces.

"That's how the whole situation started for me," he says. "That's when I started thinking about things other than what a bartender is supposed to use. In 2005 I created a drink called The Pear of Desire using foie gras as garnish. At the beginning it wasn't so well-received, but a week into it a buzz started happening and everyone started ordering it."

The new commercial product Bakon Vodka, launched by three friends in Seattle, seems as far from the barroom experimentations of Adam Seger and Todd Thrasher as artisanal bacon is to a jar of Bacon Bits. The most obvious reason? Bacon isn't made with real bacon.

One of the owners, Sven Liden, explains: "After a lot of testing and figuring out shelf-life and other issues, we decided that an infusion was too complicated and messy. The upside is that it's vegan and gluten-free."

Because Bakon's baconness is chemically induced, it comes off far more smoky and strong than the bar infusions. But for those who might not have access to painstakingly infused liquor, Bakon Vodka (which currently sells by mail order at www.drinkupny.com for $29.99) seems to be appealing. Linden says demand has outpaced his predictions.

"Our initial expectation was that we could do a small pilot test in the Pacific Northwest with a few hundred cases. Not a huge amount, but we thought it would last 2-3 months based on similar introductions of specialty liquors," he says. "That run sold out in about three weeks."

Seger, the mixologist from Chicago, has tasted Bakon Vodka and fears that those who sample that product first will get the wrong idea about the real possibilities of carnivorous cocktails.

"It tasted like vodka with

A Bloody Mary made with Bakon Vodka.

a liquid smoke rather than an infusion you do with a high-quality protein," he says.

For anyone who has tasted the amazingly refined Old Fashioned served at Manhattan's PDT bar — made with bacon-infused Four Roses bourbon and Grade B maple syrup — there is no comparison.

However, Linden says the bartenders he's supplied in his area are enthused. "In Washington we're starting to see repeat sales to the same customers, and we're seeing bars put it on their permanent menus — so we know it's more than just a novelty purchase," he says.

Regardless of the source, the carnivorous cocktail movement is expanding people's view of drinking. As Thrasher says: "If you drink like you eat, you can have some amazing things happen."

Thinking more kindly of that ear of corn

By Jennifer LaRue Hugel
Special to The Washington Post

There's hardly anything so sublime as a perfectly steamed ear of fresh summer corn.

But this all-American favorite has taken a bashing lately, at least in the media. Gourmet magazine recently hosted a lively discussion about whether corn is worth eating, and a San Francisco writer named Daniel Patterson has blogged, in an entry called "Fed Up With Corn," about how today's corn, by virtue of overzealous cross-breeding, lacks the taste of the ears of his youth.

On a grander scale, corn has been sullied by the controversy surrounding high-fructose corn syrup, a sweetener many fear is bad for both our bodies and the environment, and has become embroiled in the politics of farm subsidies and ethanol production. Its mass production by Midwestern mega-farms is portrayed unfavorably in Michael Pollan's 2006 book, "The Omnivore's Dilemma," and in the 2007 movie "King Corn." Both illustrate the way cheap, plentiful corn has invaded our diets — and not to our ultimate good.

Not that the negative press appears to have diminished corn's popularity. Calls to D.C. area farmers markets reveal that corn is selling well this summer, maybe better than usual. From a nutrition-conscious point of view, though, does corn deserve a place on our plates?

Historically, corn has saved our collective behinds when times were tough and food was scarce. Kindly Native Americans shared their corn-growing expertise with the early settlers, helping to put food in their bellies during a particularly hardscrabble time. Ground corn is the inexpensive basis of breads that have kept many cultures fed for centuries. Its versatility has long served us well. But that very trait, now seems more a drawback than a boon.

Viewed strictly as a vegetable, corn admittedly is outshone by other summer-time produce in the nutrients it delivers. A medium ear, at about 100 calories, offers about 10 percent of the federally recommended daily value, or DV, of Vitamin C and folate. That ear of corn delivers about 12 percent of the DV for Vitamin B1, or thiamine, which helps your body convert carbs into energy and keeps your heart, muscles and nervous system working well. Thiamine is also thought to help maintain cognitive function and prevent memory loss. (A severe thiamine deficiency causes beriberi, which can harm the heart or nervous system.)

In addition to the minerals phosphorus (for bone and tooth strength) and manganese (which helps your body use nutrients such as Vitamin C and thiamine), corn offers some Vitamin B5, or pantothenic acid, which may help mediate stress by supporting adrenal-gland function.

Corn gets its yellow color from the phytochemical zeaxanthin, which promotes eye health, according to Kerry Neville, a spokeswoman for the American Dietetic Association. And according to research at Cornell University published in 2002, cooking apparently boosts corn's antioxidant activity (which may help protect against heart disease and cancer, among other conditions).

Of course, if you use corn mostly as a vehicle for butter and salt, its nutrients may be outweighed by saturated fat and sodium, neither of which does your cardiovascular system any favors.

In any case, providing nutrients isn't really corn's strong suit. Though eaten as a vegetable, corn agriculturally is considered a whole grain — and we all know we need more of them, right? When we think about adding more whole grains to our diet, we tend to think about wheat. But corn is a perfectly legit whole grain that does an admirable job of performing the tasks expected of all whole grains.

Corn is composed of both soluble and insoluble fiber. The soluble fiber becomes gellike when wet, and it binds to undesirable matter such as cholesterol and escorts it out of our bodies. It also slows the absorption of dietary fat.

Insoluble fiber, which our bodies can't digest, scrapes the sludge out of our gastrointestinal tracts. Those big kernels are like snowplows, scooping stuff up as they move through your intestines. When the kernels leave your body, so does a lot of material your body doesn't need.

Which brings me to corn poop. You'd be hard-pressed to find evidence with your naked eye of any other grain's having moved through your system intact. But with corn, it's all too clear. Considering this phenomenon made me wonder whether, in tallying calories, we have to count those in the corn kernels that remain whole. If we haven't digested them, have we absorbed their calories?

I asked registered dietitian Keri Gans, another spokeswoman for the American Dietetic Association, who agreed that those completely intact kernels don't impart any calories — or nutrients — as they make their way through us. But she observed that, appearances to the contrary, we likely chew up many more kernels than we think, and we do receive those chewed kernels' calories and nutrients. "If you counted how many intact kernels were in your stool" compared with how many you ate, you'd likely find you'd chewed more than you thought, Gans suggests.

I think I'll pass on that activity. But not on the corn.

Cheap dinner in 25 minutes

By Bonnie S. Benwick
The Washington Post

Here's a dish that's meatless and subtly flavored, and it costs less than $5 to make. The original recipe calls for soft tofu, because it makes a creamy sauce. But firm tofu can be used as well. If necessary, add a little water while pureeing to achieve the desired consistency.

Serve with a mixed green salad.

Adapted from "Eat Cheap but Eat Well," by Charles Mattocks (Wiley, 2009).

TOFU-PESTO PASTA

4 servings

- 8 ounces button or cremini mushrooms
- 1/4 medium onion
- 1 medium vine-ripened tomato
- 2 to 3 medium cloves garlic
- 1 large lemon
- 8 ounces dried fusilli, gemelli or small penne pasta
- 3/4 cup packed basil leaves (about 30 leaves)
- 3 tablespoons olive oil
- 6 ounces soft tofu (may substitute firm tofu)
- 3 to 4 ounces Parmesan cheese
- 1/4 teaspoon kosher salt
- 1/8 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper

Bring a large pot of salted water to a boil over high heat.

While the water is heating, clean the mushrooms and discard the stems, then cut the mushrooms into thin slices. Mince the 1/4 onion to yield 2 tablespoons. Core and seed the tomato, then cut into small dice to yield about 3/4 cup; discard the juices. Mince the garlic to yield 1 1/2 teaspoons. Squeeze the lemon to yield 2 tablespoons of juice.

Add the pasta to the boiling water; cook according to package directions (about 12 minutes). Drain and transfer to a large serving bowl.

While the pasta is cooking, combine the basil and 1 tablespoon of the oil in a blender or bowl of a food processor; pulse until well blended, then add 1 tablespoon of oil, the tofu, Parmesan to taste, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Process until smooth.

JULIA EWAN/Washington Post

Pour into a large skillet, preferably nonstick, over low heat. Stir until just warmed through.

Heat the remaining tablespoon of oil in a separate medium skillet over medium heat. Add the mushrooms, onion and garlic; cook, stirring often, for 5 to 7 minutes, until the mushrooms have yielded their liquid and the onion has softened.

Add to the pasta in the bowl, then add the blended tofu-pesto mixture. Toss to combine, then divide among individual wide, shallow bowls. Top with the diced tomato. Serve immediately.

Video shows egg hatchery disposing of live chicks

By Melanie S. Welte
and Frederic J. Frommer
Associated Press writers

DES MOINES, Iowa — An animal rights group publicized a video Tuesday showing unwanted chicks being tossed alive into a grinder at an Iowa plant and accused egg hatcheries of being “perhaps the cruelest industry” in the world.

The undercover video was shot by Chicago-based Mercy for Animals at a hatchery in Spencer, Iowa, over a two-week period in May and June. The video was first obtained Monday by The Associated Press.

“We have to ask ourselves if these were puppies and kittens being dropped into grinders, would we find that acceptable?” asked Nathan Runkle, the group’s executive director, at a news conference in Des Moines. “I don’t think that most people would.”

The group said that tossing male chicks, which have little value because they can’t lay eggs or be raised quickly enough to be raised profitably for meat, into grinders is common industry practice. United Egg Producers, a trade group for U.S. egg farmers, confirmed that.

The hatchery is owned by West Des Moines-based Hy-Line North America and is one of many operations in Iowa, the nation’s leading egg producer.

The video, shot with a hidden camera and microphone by a Mercy for Animals employee who got a job at the plant, shows a Hy-Line worker sorting through a conveyor belt of chirping chicks, flipping some of them into a chute like a poker dealer flips cards.

These chicks, which a narrator says are males, are then shown being dropped alive into a grinding machine.

In other parts of the video, a chick is shown dying on the factory floor amid a heap of egg shells after falling through a sorting machine. Another chick, also still alive, is seen lying on the floor after getting scalded by a wash cycle, according to the video narrator.

Hy-Line said the video “appears to show an inappropriate action and violation of our animal welfare policies,” referring to chicks on the factory floor.

But the company also noted that “instantaneous euthanasia” — a reference to killing of male chicks by the grinder — is a standard practice supported by the animal veterinary and scientific community.

Company spokesman

Tom Jorgensen said Tuesday an investigation was continuing, and once it’s completed the company would release more information.

Runkle acknowledged that his group’s ultimate goal was to get people to stop eating eggs. He said he believes many would refuse to eat eggs if they knew what happened to male chicks.

“The egg industry is perhaps the cruelest industry on the face of the planet,” Runkle said.

Mercy for Animals also sent letters to the nation’s 50 largest grocery store chains, including Walmart, Whole Foods, Safeway, Harris Teeter and Trader Joe’s, asking them to include a label on egg cartons that says, “Warning: Male chicks are ground-up alive by the egg industry!”

Huge wildfire portends bad Calif. fire season

By Greg Risling
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — Firefighters reported progress Tuesday against a gigantic blaze on the edge of Los Angeles that might be just a preview of even greater dangers ahead. The peak Southern California fire season hasn’t even started yet.

The worst fires typically flare up in the fall, when ferocious Santa Ana winds can drive fires out of wilderness areas and into suburbs. As a result, Southern California could be in for a long wildfire season.

“When you see a fire burning like this, with no Santa Ana winds, we know that with the winds, it would be so much worse, so much more intense,” said Los Angeles County fire Capt. Mark Whaling.

The Santa Anas are so devastating when they carry fire because they sweep down from the north and reach withering speeds as they squeeze through wilderness canyons and passes and plunge into developed areas.

Even though winds have been mostly calm since the blaze began along the northern fringe of Los Angeles and its suburbs, the flames have spread over 199 square miles of forest in a week.

Citing new damage assessments, officials Tuesday raised the number of destroyed homes from 53 to 62 but said the number of homes remaining under mandatory evacuation orders was reduced by 300 to 6,000. Up to 12,000 homes were considered threatened at the height of the fire, though not all were ordered evacuated. One of the threatened houses was the home where the movie “E.T.” was filmed.

But it was not the only significant blaze in Southern California.

In the inland region east of Los Angeles, 2,000 homes were being threatened by a fire of more than 1.5 square miles in the San Bernardino County community of Oak Glen, and a nearby 1.3-square-mile blaze was putting 400 homes at risk in Yucaipa. More than twice as many homes had been threatened but aircraft held the fire back and it was 70 percent contained by Tuesday evening.

“There’s action everywhere,” Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger said as a helicopter interrupted his comments at a news conference in San Bernardino County.

Containment of the big fire, known as the Station Fire, rose to 22 percent. U.S. Forest Service incident commander Mike Dietrich said he felt better but was not willing to say a corner had been turned. “Right now if I were in a boxing match I’d think we’re even today,” Dietrich said.

Weather was more humid, which helps brush resist burning, but the downside was a possibility of dry lightning. Some sprinkles were reported, but no significant rain.

Officials were worried about the threat to a historic observatory and TV, radio and other antennas on Mount Wilson northeast of Los Angeles. But on Tuesday, firefighters set backfires near the facilities before a giant World War II-era seaplane-turned-air tanker made a huge water drop on flames below the peak.

2 GOP senators take health care show on the road

By Mitch Weiss
and Laurie Kellman
Associated Press writers

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — An odd couple of Republican senators have hit the road, arguing for a go-slow approach to President Barack Obama’s push to revamp health care.

Minority Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky and 2008 presidential nominee John McCain are headlining the GOP’s answer to the raucous town hall meetings of August in which congressional Democrats had to shout over angry constituents about health care, growing deficits and the increasing role of the federal government.

Not known for working closely or particularly liking each other — the two waged a fierce fight for years over campaign finance — McConnell and McCain nonetheless have been united at three events in two days in which they’ve urged a more modest approach on Obama’s top domestic priority.

In North Carolina on Tuesday, they interacted with something close to deference, unity and self-deprecation.

McConnell introduced McCain as the “famous GOP senator.”

McCain answered, “You mean our most famous loser.”

Hardly an upbeat outlook, but on health care they have reasons to work together and try to frame Republican opposition to a comprehensive health care overhaul in thoughtful and credible terms.

Start with the GOP’s drive to recover in next year’s midterm elections after the drubbing Republicans took from Obama and the Democrats in 2008. To do that, they must bring the Democrats down a notch from an effective hold on 60 Senate votes, potentially enough to kill GOP filibusters and control policy.

Political recovery is an issue for McCain, too.

The decorated war veteran and recognized expert on national security and campaign finance reform has largely deferred to other Republicans on health care although the Arizona lawmaker is a member of the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee. But in recent weeks, McCain has been outspoken on health care overhaul and its pricetag of $1 trillion-plus over 10 years and basing his argument on his reputation as a deficit hawk.

NYC schools to offer free swine flu vaccinations

By Sara Kugler
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — The nation’s largest school district said Tuesday it will offer free swine flu vaccinations to its 1 million-plus schoolchildren as New York City takes bold steps to avoid becoming the country’s flu epicenter again in the fall.

Hundreds of school districts nationwide have agreed to allow vaccinations in school buildings, once the vaccine becomes available in mid- to late October as the nation prepares for a spike in swine flu cases in the coming months.

New York’s announcement may influence other large cities. Brenda Greene, director of school health programs for the National School Boards Association, said the city could wind up being “a great role model.”

Federal health authorities have been pushing the idea of school vaccine clinics for months. A few small states, including Maine and Alabama, previously announced plans to do as

New York is doing — offer the vaccine to all schoolchildren.

Many large districts are still awaiting details from their state health departments on how to carry out vaccine clinics. Others like California, Ohio and Massachusetts, are focusing first on other elements of flu planning, like when to close schools. Some cities, like Boston and Dallas, have rejected school vaccinations.

However, New York was the first large metro area in the country to have hundreds of children sick from swine flu last spring. The virus rapidly spread among high school students, beginning with a private high school in Queens. Officials estimate as many as 1 million people were sickened in the city, and more than 50 people died. Nationwide, swine flu has killed about 500 people.

“We know New Yorkers are concerned, very understandably, about the risks that they might face,” New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg said. “Our job is to plan in case it is a big deal.”

In Washington, President Barack Obama said Tuesday that while swine flu vaccinations will be voluntary, the government will “strongly recommend” that people get them.

“I don’t want anybody to be alarmed, but I do want everyone to be prepared,” the president said of the second, more serious wave of the virus expected this fall.

A White House report suggests up to half the U.S. population could be infected.

Rammell stands firm: No apology

BOISE (AP) — Idaho Republican Rex Rammell said Tuesday the hoopla over his remarks about hunting President Barack Obama has been a boon to his campaign, and he again refused to apologize for what he called a joke.

“This country needs to lighten up,” the GOP gubernatorial candidate told a news conference in a Boise park Tuesday.

“Hopefully, if there’s people in Idaho that didn’t know me, then they’ll know me now. I think I’ll come out of this much better off,” Rammell told the Rexburg Standard Journal in eastern Idaho, where he lives.

Twitter opens a door to Iowa OR

By Michael J. Crumb
Associated Press writer

DES MOINES, Iowa — From anesthesia to the recovery room, 70-year-old Monna Cleary's children followed her surgery — 140 characters or less at a time.

Twitter is opening doors to the sterile confines of operating rooms, paving the way for families — and anyone else for that matter — to follow a patient's progress as they go under the knife.

Most of the Cleary family chose to track the developments from a laptop computer in the hospital's waiting room. But one daughter-in-law kept tabs from work.

"It's real time information instead of sitting and not knowing in the waiting room," said Cleary's son Joe, hours after his mother's surgery Monday at St. Luke's Hospital in Cedar Rapids.

"It made the time go by," said Cleary, who was joined by a brother, two sisters and a sister-in-law at the hospital. "We all feel it was a positive experience."

His mother, who underwent a hysterectomy and uterine prolapse surgery, had given her OK for hospital spokeswoman Sarah Corizzo to post a play-by-play of the operation on Twitter, a social-networking site that lets users send out snippets of information up to 140 characters long using cell phones or computers.

Corizzo sent more than 300 tweets over more than three hours from a computer just outside the operating room's sterile field. Nearly 700 people followed them. Eight tweeted questions to Corizzo about the procedure and a Cleary family member commented on how fascinating it was to follow the surgery.

The primary goal of the Twitter posts was education, Corizzo said, but it had the added benefit of keeping the family informed during surgery. It also helps to raise the profile of the hospital.

The idea to follow the surgery on Twitter at St. Luke's evolved after a similar surgery was Webcast several months ago.

"A lot of people would like to go into the operating room and see what happens but don't want all the visuals and stuff," said Laura Rainey, another hospital spokeswoman. "This is a more gentle way to help inform patients and consumers."

The Iowa hospital isn't the first to describe a surgery on Twitter. Others include Children's Medical Center in Dallas, which tweeted in May when a father donated a kidney to his son, and Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit, where officials have tweeted about several surgeries since January.

Dian Luffman, a spokeswoman with Change: healthcare, a business that helps clients save money on procedures, said hospitals using Twitter during surgery is a sign that it's entering the mainstream, especially among the 20- and 30-somethings.

"I think hospitals are trying to build relationships," she said.

Amanda Gillbret, whose husband and son were involved in the Dallas kidney transplant, said she appreciated being able to monitor her husband's surgery at another hospital while she was at Children's Medical Center with her son.

"I felt like I was part of my husband's surgery and connected to what he was going through but was there with my son, too," Gillbret said. "It gave me a huge peace and it was just comforting knowing what was happening."

Jewell Von Ins

"Anyone can be a father, but it takes someone special to be a daddy."

Jewell Von Ins, 94, was born Nov. 24, 1914 in Annawan, Ill., and passed away Sunday, Aug. 30, 2009, in Boise.

He was the youngest of 11 born to Susan and Alfred Von Ins. He was raised in Holland, Michigan, and loved to return there for the tulip festivals. My dad married my mom, Jewel Lundin von Ins in Olympia, Wash., on Oct. 18, 1945, and they made their home in Twin Falls. Mom passed away in February 2000. They met at the USO while dad was in the Army when someone called "Jewel" and they both answered!

Dad was a man of so many talents. He was a pianist for the Masons, the Eastern Star and so many others. He was a master furniture refinisher and was trained in Holland at the Baker Furniture Factory. He was employed by the Twin Falls Post office for many years, retiring in 1973. Most of all, he loved his family. His grandchildren and his great-granddaughter were the lights of his life. He loved them unconditionally. He was a cherished father and friend to so many. The world is a darker place without Jewell in it. We will love him and miss him forever.

Dad is survived by his daughter, Pam Fowers; his grandson, Tom Fowers; his granddaughter, Tara Fowers; and his great-granddaughter, Rikki Dickson. He was preceded in death by his wife; his parents; all of his brothers and sisters; and his great-granddaughter, Denisha.

My heartfelt thanks to the staff of Boise Health and Rehab for the love and kindness you gave my dad for the last seven years. You were all his second family.

A service will be conducted at 2 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 3, at Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home, 2551 Kimberly Road in Twin Falls, with Pastor Dale Metzger officiating.

Dad loved animals of every kind, so in lieu of flowers, donations to the Humane Society would be greatly appreciated.

Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi gestures with a green cane as he takes his seat behind bulletproof glass for a military parade Tuesday in Green Square in Tripoli, Libya. Libyans were celebrating the 40th anniversary of the 1969 military coup that brought Gadhafi to power.

Lockerbie overshadows Libyan coup anniversary

TRIPOLI, Libya — Libya staged a lavish spectacle Tuesday, parading white-robed horsemen and gold-turbaned dancers as jets streaked overhead to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the coup that brought Moammar Gadhafi to power in the oil-rich nation. The four-day festivities were designed to highlight the volatile leader's acceptance on the world stage, but were overshadowed by new controversies about the recent return of Abdel Baset al-Megrahi, the only man convicted in the 1988 bombing of a Pan Am jet over Lockerbie, Scotland. While African leaders held a summit to coincide with the celebrations, most Western leaders stayed away. Libya's decision to include a video clip of al-Megrahi stepping off the plane from Scotland to roaring cheers could stoke even more anger. The segment, which lasted only a few seconds, came at the end of a video presentation chronicling Gadhafi's accomplishments since the 1969 coup. The Libyan leader, known for his outlandish outfits and penchant for conducting state business in tents, kicked off the celebrations before dawn Tuesday, timed to coincide with the start of the coup, with a feast at a former U.S. air base that was later turned into a Libyan military camp. Addressing the audience, Gadhafi said that as a young Libyan lieutenant he'd been barred from entering the base by an American soldier. "I told the soldier: 'You'll see what the future has in store,'" said Gadhafi. "I don't think the American soldier quite measured the scope of my words." The return home of al-Megrahi, convicted of the bombing that killed 270 people, overshadowed the celebrations. Scottish officials released him Aug. 20 on compassionate grounds because doctors said he was suffering from terminal prostate cancer and had only three months to live. But his release and warm homecoming in Libya outraged many of the victims' families and U.S. officials. Intense public pressure over al-Megrahi's release has sent the British and Scottish governments scrambling to respond. On Tuesday, both governments made public their correspondence on his release showing some British officials advised Scotland's government that there were no legal obstacles to returning al-Megrahi to Libya.

Group: U.S. Embassy guards in Kabul are mistreated

By Richard Lardner
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Guards hired by the State Department to protect diplomats and staff at the U.S. Embassy in Afghanistan live and work in a "Lord of the Flies" environment in which they are subjected to hazing and other inappropriate behavior by supervisors, a government oversight group charged Tuesday. In a 10-page letter to Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, the independent Project on Government Oversight contended the situation has led to a breakdown in morale and leadership that compromises security at the embassy in Kabul where nearly 1,000 U.S. diplomats, staff and Afghan nationals work. Sen. Claire McCaskill, D-Mo., on Tuesday called on the State Department to open an investigation into the performance and management of the contract with ArmorGroup North America. McCaskill, who chairs a Senate subcommittee on contracting oversight, said the new evidence calls into question the company's ability to provide adequate security at a key facility.

In a letter to Patrick Kennedy, the undersecretary of state for management, McCaskill also demanded a slew of documents related to the contract, including any department reviews of alleged misconduct by ArmorGroup employees. The nonprofit group's findings are based on interviews with ArmorGroup guards, documents, photographs and e-mails that it says depict "Lord of the Flies" conditions. The reference is to the 1954 novel by William Golding about a group of British schoolboys who are stranded on a desert island and try, but fail, to govern themselves in a chaotic setting. One e-mail from a guard describes lurid conditions at Camp Sullivan, the guards' quarters a few miles from the embassy. The message described scenes of abuse including guards and supervisors urinating on people and "threats and intimidation from those leaders participating in this activity." Photographs show guards and supervisors in various stages of nudity at parties that took place near the housing of other supervisors. Multiple guards say these conditions have created a "climate of fear and coercion." Those who refuse to participate are often ridiculed, humiliated or even fired, they contended. ArmorGroup's management is aware of the conditions but has not stopped it or disciplined those responsible, the letter says. Two supervisors alleged to be the worst offenders have been allowed to resign and may now be working on other U.S. contracts, the group said. Wackenhut Services, ArmorGroup North America's parent company, did not respond to a request for comment on the allegations. State Department spokesman Ian Kelly told reporters Tuesday that Clinton has been apprised of the allegations. The group also sent the letter to the State Department's inspector general, the independent Commission on Wartime Contracting and members of Congress.

Hoax video of Michael Jackson creates online stir

BERLIN (AP) — A hoax video purportedly showing Michael Jackson emerging from a coroner's van was an experiment aimed at showing how quickly misinformation and conspiracy theories can race across the Internet, German broadcaster RTL said Tuesday. The video was posted by RTL on YouTube for a single day a week ago and received 880,000 hits. The broadcaster has since removed the video from YouTube, but it has been picked up by other Web sites around the world. "We wanted to show how easily users can be manipulated on the Internet with hoax videos," spokeswoman Heike Schultz of Cologne-based RTL told The Associated Press. "Therefore, we created this video of Michael Jackson being alive, even though everybody knows by now that he is dead — and the response was breathtaking." Jackson died June 25 in Los Angeles. The video — posted under an "anonymous source" — shows a coroner's van entering what seems like a parking garage and the King of Pop getting out of the back with another person. The lighting is bad, the sound muffled and the footage appears amateurish. "Unfortunately, many people believed it was true," Schultz said. "Even though we tried to create the video in a way that every normal user can see right away that it is a fake." She said the video was shot near Cologne — "definitely not in the U.S." The van in the video had the word "CORONER" printed in English, suggesting it had been recorded in America.

Pakistan forces kill 40 militants in Khyber raids

By Riaz Khan
Associated Press writer

PESHAWAR, Pakistan — Government forces destroyed four militant bases and killed 40 insurgents Tuesday in a new offensive near Pakistan's famed Khyber Pass, the main route for supplies to U.S. and NATO troops in Afghanistan, authorities said. The offensive follows a suicide blast in the region last week that killed 19 police officers at a key border crossing. Tariq Hayat, the top administrator in Khyber, told reporters 40 militants were killed and 43 arrested. The four destroyed bases belonged to the militant group Lashkar-e-Islam, he said. The death toll could not be independently verified. The military paraded the detainees — blindfolded with their own shirts and hands tied — at Hayat's press briefing in Peshawar. An AP photographer saw a handicapped man among the suspects who was carried in by a soldier from a military truck. A truck loaded with the bodies of militants was seen outside the briefing, where captured weapons, including rocket launchers and assault rifles, were displayed. Hayat gave no indication of whether a sustained operation was planned in the area, through which scores of trucks carrying fuel and other goods to U.S. and NATO troops in Afghanistan travel each day. The convoys are often targeted. Pakistan is under intense U.S. pressure to crack down on militants close to the Afghan border, a lawless region where al-Qaida leader Osama bin Laden is believed to be hiding. The Taliban there also help mount attacks against Western troops across the frontier. Elsewhere in the northwest, the army claimed 105 Pakistani Taliban fighters had surrendered in the Swat Valley. Eight were close aides to Swat Taliban chief Maulana Fazlullah, said Brig. Salman Akbar, the army commander of Kabal town in the valley. The Taliban were not immediately available for comment. The army launched an offensive in Swat in April that the government says was a success, although no insurgent leaders were killed or captured and pockets of resistance remain. On Sunday, a suicide bombing at a police station killed 17 cadets training. The army says it has killed 45 militants in Swat since that attack. Human rights activists have accused security forces of executing captured militants and dumping their bodies, but the military denies it.

Changes, for better or worse, coming to SWAC

The changes are abundant, the reasons varied and the reactions split. And the one change that could make the most difference won't be arriving anytime soon.

That's the nutshell approach to this year's Scenic West Athletic Conference basketball schedules.

Mike Christensen

The first change: This year's SWAC slate grows from 15 games to 20. With only six teams competing in men's and women's basketball — a generous count considering it includes the annually abysmal Colorado Northwest Community College — each SWAC team will face the other five on four separate occasions.

Two home. Two away. College of Southern Idaho head coach Steve Gosar isn't a fan.

INSIDE

Full CSI men's and women's basketball schedules.

See Sports 4

"We'll just beat each other up with a 20-game conference schedule," he said. "That hurts our national perception."

From an administrative standpoint, the expanded conference slate was almost a necessity. With SWAC schools struggling to find quality nonconference foes, the five additional league games make scheduling simpler.

CSI athletic director Joel Bate sees another advantage, pointing out that Salt Lake Community College, last year's NJCAA men's champion, was so "battle-tested" in the SWAC that the Bruins cruised through the opposition in Hutchinson, Kan.

"It paid some dividends when they got back there," said Bate.

Where it could hurt more is on the women's side, where a seeded national tourney may hinder a SWAC team that has suffered a few extra bruises in conference play.

The second change: The Region 18 Tournament site is now predetermined and will rotate among the SWAC's institutions rather than being hosted by the men's or women's regular-season champ. Both of this season's tournaments will be held in Price, Utah.

The league's coaches voted against the move. "I hate it," said Gosar. "I want to make sure we advance the best team we can."

But the cost and challenge of hosting a major tournament on a week's notice just wasn't working in the eyes of administrators. Especially when basketball is the revenue generator for the SWAC's other sports. Bate sees positives aplenty. Tourney hosts can prepare a year in advance, seek sponsorship and promote ticket sales, while schools won't have to make last-minute travel plans.

It's all in the eye of the beholder.

BSU's Brotzman pops in the clutch

By Dustin Lapray
Times-News correspondent

BOISE — Football specialists typically have one role on the team. Kyle Brotzman does it all, handling kickoffs, punts and field goals for the 14th-ranked Boise State Broncos.

Over the past two seasons, he's made 33 of 44 field goals and all 116 PAT's he has attempted, blowing away Tyler Jones' consecutive PAT record of 74 makes set in 2003-04. Continuing that trend could make a big difference in Thursday's showdown between BSU and No. 16 Oregon (8:15 p.m., ESPN).

Physically, Brotzman looks like he could play safety. He is up to 191 pounds, mostly due to new muscle, which gave his kicks more distance in fall camp.

"It's a long season and I want to get more behind the ball," said Brotzman. "You can't just go out there and be a pudgy kicker. You still have to go out and chase guys down."

A rule change allows punt return units to tackle punters if they choose to leave the tackle box. The Broncos run variations on the rugby-style punt, in which Brotzman rolls out, typically to his right, and punt the ball a few seconds later than usual. Once he leaves the box, he has no protection from the rules.

"I got some big guys up front who are protecting me," Brotzman said. "They know what they're doing. If it happens it happens, there's nothing I can do about it."

those players to get downfield faster. That limits returns and opens a chance for a turnover should the bouncing ball hit the opposing team.

"It's one more thing teams have to plan for," Brotzman said. "They have to come up with a couple different things, how to attack us and how to set a return up. Sometimes they don't even get a return the way the ball rolls. If the ball is rolling it's hot."

Rugby punts typically roll forward as well, helping Brotzman compile an average of 45.3 yards per punt. That would have been the second-best mark in the Western Athletic Conference last season, but the Broncos didn't punt enough for Brotzman to qualify, happily failing to reach the minimum of 3.6 punts per game.

Brotzman has only punted 58 times in two seasons,

ROUND 1: BRUINS

TFHS volleyball wins first matchup with Canyon Ridge

By Diane Philbin
Times-News writer

The first fight goes to the Bruins.

There was bit of history Tuesday night as the Twin Falls volleyball team beat Canyon Ridge in the first-ever athletic competition between the two schools.

The Bruins, 25-14, 25-19, 25-10 winners, hosted the new kids on the block as the two teams kicked off the 2009 Great Basin Conference volleyball season.

"As the offense goes, we go," said Twin Falls head coach B.J. Price. "We are working three rotations. And we are looking at all our players and re-assessing everything and trying to make our weaker spots stronger."

Senior Ariel Medina and sophomore Josie Jordan led the Bruins with seven kills, followed by junior Cheltzie Williams, who contributed five. Price said the team exhibited great serving, collecting 28 aces mostly off the barrage of jump serves the Bruins threw at the Riverhawks. Jordan led with 11 and Williams added nine. Libero Mallory Jund picked up 13 digs and Allie Johnson had 16 assists.

"This year's team is real close," said Medina. "Our offense is looking better but we still need to work on our defense. We think that nothing should hit the floor."

Even with the defeat, Canyon Ridge coach Karen Perron remains upbeat about her team.

"Even with the first conference game on their turf, we came to play and hung in there," said Perron. "We may have given them more of game than they thought we might. We had some amazing digs. We are going to keep working on plays that are working."

Perron agreed that the Bruins jump serves did cause her team some problems.

"We just can't be afraid of jump serves. They are just like any other serves, but they can be a little intimidating."

Senior Brook Johnson led the CRHS defense with seven blocks and sophomore Lauren Shotwell had 10 digs.

Canyon Ridge (1-2, 0-1) visits Burley on Thursday, while Twin Falls (2-1, 1-0) travels to the Peg Peterson Tournament at Highland High School in Pocatello this weekend.

Sharapova returns to U.S. Open with easy victory

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Maria Sharapova simply couldn't bear the thought of a U.S. Open taking place without her.

So while sidelined with a torn shoulder a year ago, she refused to follow the tournament on TV. Basically pretended it wasn't even happening.

On Tuesday night, Sharapova was right where she likes to be: on the Grand Slam stage and in the spotlight. The 2006 U.S. Open champion returned to the tournament with an impressive 6-3, 6-0 victory over Tsvetana Pironkova of Bulgaria.

"I was in the physical therapy office every single day, and the tennis was on. But I made a point not to watch it," Sharapova explained. "When you're not participating in a tournament that you very much love, and you've had success at, as an athlete and as a competitor, to not be there and not be competing is pretty tough."

Against her 98th-ranked opponent, Sharapova's game was as glittery as her black-and-silver dress, an outfit she described as a tribute to New York's skyline. The three-time Grand Slam title winner produced 29 winners — 23 more than Pironkova. And Sharapova's game was particularly clean in the second set, when she hit 16 winners and only five unforced errors.

Apart from four double-faults, Sharapova showed no signs of the shoulder injury that forced her to have surgery in October and kept off the tour for nearly 10 months.

"This is a Grand Slam. You've got to get going from the first match," Sharapova said. "After being gone, this is what it's all about."

Tell that to Ana Ivanovic. Or Dinara Safina.

Earlier Tuesday, Safina came perilously close to becoming the first No. 1-seeded woman to lose in the U.S. Open's first round. But she eked out a victory over an 18-year-old from Australia who is ranked 167th and needed a wild-card invitation to get into the tournament.

The worst showing ever by a top-seeded woman in New York came last year, when Ivanovic exited in the second round. Now seeded 11th, Ivanovic did herself one worse this time, losing in the first round to 52nd-ranked Katerina Bondarenko 2-6, 6-3, 7-6 (7).

"It hurts. I can tell you that," Ivanovic said. "I'm sure I will have sleepless nights."

At least the 2008 French Open champion had a big support group in the stands,

Papelbon, Sox top Rays, add to Wild Card lead

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Jonathan Papelbon bailed Boston out of an eighth-inning jam and Jason Bay, J.D. Drew and Kevin Youkilis homered Tuesday night to help the Red Sox beat the Tampa Bay Rays 8-4 in the opener of a series crucial to the AL wild-card race.

Papelbon entered with two runs in and the bases loaded with no outs and shut down the AL champions in the eighth with help from a diving catch by center fielder Jacoby Ellsbury, who snared Jason Bartlett's sinking liner before scrambling to his feet to keep a runner from tagging up at third.

Papelbon pitched a perfect ninth for his 33rd save, fifth of more than one inning.

YANKEES 9, ORIOLES 6

BALTIMORE — Jorge Posada homered twice, and Nick Swisher and Eric Hinske hit successive drives in a three-run seventh inning that carried New York to its fifth straight win.

nected for Yankees, who will try to complete a three-game sweep Wednesday.

ninth with a single off Matt Thornton (6-3) and Punto was inserted as a pinch runner. He advanced to third on a single by Brendan Harris, but Tony Pena got Carlos Gomez swinging to take away the sacrifice option.

NATIONAL LEAGUE PHILLIES 1, GIANTS 0

PHILADELPHIA — Cole Hamels pitched a two-hitter, Ryan Howard drove in the only run with a fourth-inning double and Philadelphia beat San Francisco.

Hamels (8-8) allowed a leadoff double to Ryan Garko in the second inning and a single to pinch-hitter Rich Aurilia to start the ninth. He struck out nine and walked one in his fourth career shutout and second this season. The left-hander extended his scoreless innings streak to 19, tying a career best, and won for the first time since July 28 against Arizona.

cheering for her wildly. Safina, in contrast, would look up at her coach for positive body language, and instead, he'd cover his eyes with his hands or turn his head with a wince.

Nearly undone by 11 double-faults and 48 total unforced errors, Safina was a point away from a 4-0 deficit in the third set before coming back to beat Olivia Rogowska 6-7 (5), 6-2, 6-4.

Safina, younger sister of 2000 U.S. Open champion Marat Safin, is used to faring well in the early stages of Grand Slam tournaments. Usually, it's later on that problems arise: She is 0-3 in major finals, all lopsided losses, and managed to win only one game against Venus Williams in the Wimbledon semifinals in July.

"I was surprised that, you know, she was giving me free points," said Rogowska, who never has defeated anyone ranked better than 47th.

As Rogowska spoke, her eyes were red, and she fiddled with a well-worn tissue.

"I'm disappointed I lost," she said, "and I didn't expect to say that after playing the No. 1 player in the world. It's a bit weird."

Ivanovic was not the only seeded player who was upset: 276th-ranked Jesse Witten of Naples, Fla., knocked off No. 29-seeded Igor Andreev of Russia 6-4, 6-0, 6-2; Nicolas Lapentti beat No. 19 Stanislas Wawrinka 4-6, 3-6, 7-6 (6), 7-6 (3), 6-3; and Ivan Navarro beat No. 27 Ivo Karlovic 6-4, 7-6 (8), 7-6 (5).

Yanina Wickmayer of Belgium defeated No. 16 Virginie Razzano of France 6-4, 6-3; and Shahar Peer of Israel eliminated No. 32 Agnes Szavay of Hungary 6-2, 6-2.

Otherwise, winners included 2004 U.S. Open champion Svetlana Kuznetsova, past runners-up Elena Dementieva and Jelena Jankovic, No. 9 Caroline Wozniacki and No. 13 Nadia Petrova.

Men's winners included No. 2-seeded Andy Murray, last year's U.S. Open runner-up, who beat Ernests Gulbis of Latvia 7-5, 6-3, 7-5 in Tuesday night's last match.

Also advancing were 2008 Australian Open champion

Novak Djokovic and that tournament's runner-up, Jo-Wilfried Tsonga, along with No. 10 Fernando Verdasco, No. 11 Fernando Gonzalez, No. 16 Marin Cilic, No. 17 Tomas Berdych, No. 22 Sam Querrey of Thousand Oaks, Calif., and Taylor Dent of Newport Beach, Calif.

Dent, playing in the U.S. Open for the first time since 2005, eliminated Feliciano Lopez of Spain 4-6, 7-6 (6), 6-3, 7-5.

But the one thing SWAC coaches and administrators agree on is the need for more teams in the league.

While nearby Region 9 is overflowing with teams, the SWAC's numbers have struggled with schools like Ricks College (now BYU-Idaho), Dixie College (now Dixie State College) and Utah Valley State College (now Utah Valley University) departing after major changes in their athletic programs.

While Southern Nevada Community College and Western Nevada College compete in baseball and softball, their presence is missed on the hardwood. Bate said that won't change until the Nevada state legislature gives the schools the ability to use student fees for athletics.

"They can't do anything without that," he said.

There may come a time when College of Western Idaho comes on board. Or maybe Region 9 squads like Western Wyoming or Casper College will man up and tackle Region 18's tougher competition. But when the Golden Eagles open practice on Oct. 1, they'll do so with new faces and new hope, but no new conference foes.

And that numbers game is the SWAC's biggest predicament.

Goodell: NFL teams could face TV blackouts

ASHBURN, Va. — Avoiding local television blackouts will be a challenge as the NFL approaches its first full season in the economic downturn, commissioner Roger Goodell said Tuesday.

During a visit to the Washington Redskins, Goodell was asked specifically about the Jacksonville Jaguars, whose season-ticket base dropped from 42,000 to about 25,000 this season. The decline is such that the club might not even bother asking for extensions in hopes of avoiding blackouts this year.

Goodell said Jacksonville, one of the smallest markets in the league, is "one of the markets where we're seeing some challenges from ticket sales coming into the 2009 season."

"And we'll have other markets that'll have those challenges. It's all part of the challenges that we're seeing in the economy, and what our clubs are going through," Goodell said. "Our clubs have been working hard in the offseason to create other ways to try to get people in the stadiums and to have policies that are a little more flexible, and hopefully they're going to pay dividends for us."

The San Diego Chargers had an exhibition game blacked out for the first time since 2006 and will have Friday's game blacked out as well. They say regular-season blackouts could be on the way as well. Other teams that could have trouble selling out their home games include the Detroit Lions and Oakland Raiders, who both had blackouts last season.

The Cleveland Browns nearly had their first blackout since 1995 for a preseason game last month, but Goodell said some of the August ticket sales could be attributed to the nature of exhibition football.

REDSKINS NO. 2 PORTIS STRIKES BACK AT NO. 1 RIGGINS

ASHBURN, Va. — On his 28th birthday, Clinton Portis was trying to be low-key. No big party this year. "I'm going to mind my business," he said Tuesday as he walked off the Washington Redskins practice field.

But at the mention of the word "Riggo," he wasn't about to bite his tongue.

Portis kept up his running feud with Hall of Fame running back John Riggins on Tuesday. Portis, who has a chance to overtake Riggins this year as the franchise's all-time leading rusher, is clearly getting tired of being criticized by the legend he's pursuing.

"I think he was a great running back, but, you know, think of who else was around him," Portis said. "That was really not hard to be a great running back when you've got that talent all around you. I think they just had great teams, you know. I think everybody who played in that era as a running back is big around here."

Riggins rushed for 7,472 yards in the 1970s and '80s for the Redskins, much of it behind the stalwart offensive line known as the Hogs. Portis needs 1,370 yards to take the No. 1 spot.

As a radio commentator in retirement, Riggins hasn't been shy about criticizing any and all facets of his former team. Among his comments about Portis, Riggins in January called Portis "a headache" who needs to change "the way he views himself and views his contributions to the team."

ROOKIE BRANDSTATER TO START BRONCOS FINALE

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. — With the Denver Broncos' top two quarterbacks sidelined by injuries, rookie Tom Brandstater will start the team's preseason finale Thursday night against Arizona.

The start, even though it comes in the last exhibition, represents a dramatic turn for Brandstater, who watched from the sideline barely taking a snap in practice let alone the exhibition season as Kyle Orton and backup Chris Simms got virtually all the work.

Brandstater said he's spending extra time studying this week to get a better handle on the playbook going into the game.

BENGALS' SMITH BREAKS FOOT

The first-round pick sustained a small fracture in the foot during a non-contact drill in his third workout since signing his deal, another major setback to his chances of winning the starting job this season.

"Our medical staff tells me the injury will not require surgery," coach Marvin Lewis said. "It's too soon to closely predict how long it will be before he can return to practice, but it looks like he's going to miss a few weeks."

The Bengals took Smith with the sixth overall pick, expecting him to start at right tackle.

NFLPA ACCUSED OF TRYING TO COLLUDE WITH NFL

The NFL Players Association has confirmed it is the target of a federal investigation into whether union leaders attempted to collude with NFL officials by holding secret meetings to discuss labor talks.

NFLPA official George Atallah said Tuesday the union has been cooperating with the Department of Labor probe, which came to light in a lawsuit filed against the union last week by NFLPA employee Mary Moran. Moran claims she was wrongfully removed from her job as director of human resources and placed on administrative leave with pay on Aug. 3 because of her role as a confidential informant in the investigation.

In court documents filed in District of Columbia Superior Court on Thursday, Moran said she provided investigators evidence that former NFLPA president Troy Vincent and other union members met with NFL commissioner Roger Goodell and Houston Texans owner Bob McNair, allegedly to provide the league access to confidential union information.

RAMS TRADE FORMER NO. 1 PICK TO ATLANTA

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Rams cut ties to their top two picks from the 2006 draft on Tuesday, trading cornerback Tye Hill to the Atlanta Falcons for an undisclosed draft pick and releasing tight end Joe Klopfenstein.

Hill missed 20 games the past two seasons, including the last 12 game of 2008 with a knee injury.

Hill started 10 games as a rookie and had three interceptions and a fumble recovery. He'd been working behind Jonathan Wade, a third-round pick in 2007, during the preseason.

BRADY ZIPS PASSES. BACKUP QBS NEED EXPERIENCE

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. — Tom Brady zipped passes from 10 yards, lofted softer ones from 25 and showed no sign that his shoulder hurt.

It certainly was much better at Tuesday's practice than it was four days earlier when 350-pound Albert Haynesworth of the Washington Redskins landed on him, forcing his throwing shoulder into the ground on an incomplete pass.

New England Patriots coach Bill Belichick didn't say if Brady would play Thursday night against the New York Giants, although he prefers not to use starters much in the final exhibition game.

T'Wolves say Rubio backed out of chance to play

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — After saying all summer long that his preference was to play in the NBA, Ricky Rubio apparently got a case of cold feet at the last minute.

Less than 48 hours after the Timberwolves, Rubio's agents and the Spanish team DKV Joventut agreed in principle on a deal to bring the 18-year-old point guard to Minnesota, Rubio changed his mind.

He told Timberwolves president David Kahn on Monday night that he wanted to stay in Spain for the next two years to better prepare for life in the NBA — a blow to a team that was hoping to have the popular passer on the court this fall.

"Of course there's disappointment, but I don't think that disappointment should overshadow the big picture, which is, he's still so young," Kahn said Tuesday during a call from Spain, where he spent the weekend negotiating the deal. "It appears now we will have a two-year wait. But if you frame it as he'll be 20 years old and he'll have two more years to develop, I can think of a lot worse things to happen to us as a franchise."

The Timberwolves drafted Rubio fifth overall in June, even though he was still under contract with DKV Joventut in a deal that included a $8.1 million buyout clause. Kahn made three trips to Spain over the summer to try and help Rubio's representatives negotiate that number down, a process that was hindered by NBA guidelines limiting the amount of money Minnesota could contribute to $500,000.

Kahn said Rubio's agent, Dan Fegan, delivered a package of endorsement deals and sponsorships that helped make the NBA deal attractive enough for Rubio and Joventut to enter into an agreement on Saturday night.

while T.J. Conley, the 2008 WAC leader from Idaho, punted 58 times in 2008. Brotzman recorded a long punt of 75 yards last season, hit 16 of 22 field goals and scored 8.3 points per game, No. 1 nationally among active returning players.

The rugby-style punt also gives Brotzman the option of running for a first down if the return team doesn't contain him on the roll-out.

"It's exciting," Brotzman said. "I've got the option. I can run, depending on what it looks like, but I'm never wrong if I kick it."

Perhaps the most important number for a punter is net yards (punt yards minus return yards), an area where Brotzman and BSU excelled a year ago, with a 39.6-yard average.

"There's a lot of hidden yardage in there," Brotzman said. "If they start inside the 20, that's 80 yards on the back of our defense. It's my job to get our defense set."

Brotzman's added muscle may increase that differential. He has more pop off his foot in clutch situations. He is confident and focused on his job.

Not many have the opportunity to have one play, one split-second change a game, for better or worse, win or lose.

Brotzman appears anxious for the chance.

NOTICE OF FOREST MANAGEMENT DECISION- BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT- IMPLEMENTATION OF BELL MOUNTAIN DWARF MISTLETOE VEGETATION TREATMENT.

The Bureau of Land Management (BLM), Shoshone Field Office, will implement vegetation treatments within the Bell Mountain area east of Bellevue, Idaho. In these areas dwarf mistletoe infestations are contributing to declining growth rates, increased susceptibility of insect outbreaks, decreases in viable regeneration and ultimately limiting the health and sustainability of the forest system. The objectives of the proposed vegetation treatments are to: 1) create a viable tree population where there is currently only highly diseased and dying trees, 2) reduce further infection and declining forest health in areas that are lightly or moderately infested with dwarf mistletoe, 3) increase the amount of early-seral forest communities to proportions that are closer to historical levels and 4) increase the forest communities resiliency to the presence of disease and insects. A Categorical Exclusion (CE) Review and Approval document has been prepared to provide documentation of the review of extraordinary circumstances and the decision to implement the proposed vegetation treatments. This document is available at <http://www.blm.gov/id/sten/info/nepa.html>, or for a hard copy you may contact the Shoshone Field Office at (208)732-7200.

The decision to implement this forest management project may be protested under 43 CFR 5003- Administrative Remedies. As outlined in 43 CFR 5003.3 (a) and (b), protests of a forest management decision may be made within 15 days of the publication date of this decision notice and shall contain a written statement of the reasons for protesting the decision. In accordance with the regulations protests shall be filed by close of business (4:15 pm) on September 17, 2009 with the authorized officer, Holly Hampton, at Shoshone Field Office, 400 West F Street, Shoshone, ID 83352. Protests shall be in the form of a written statement of reasons for protesting the decision, signed, and delivered to the physical address listed above. Therefore, e-mail, verbal, or other facsimile protests will not be accepted.

Wife shies away from man's embrace of nudist's lifestyle

DEAR ABBY: My husband, "Adam," and I bought a lovely, secluded home in the country. We have no children, and our nearest neighbor is a half-mile away. Now it seems like my husband plans to spend the rest of his life in the nude. He loves it and often tells me how "relaxing" it feels. I must admit his temperament has improved.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

Please don't get me wrong - I'm not a prude. But Adam goes for days on end without wearing a stitch unless we're going out or someone is coming over. He works in the yard, cuts the grass, hikes in our woods naked - and has a head-to-toe golden tan.

I don't mind seeing my husband in the buff. He's clean and well-groomed and nearly as trim as when we first married. (We both are.) My problem is, Adam is constantly after me to join him. I admire his nerve, but just can't bring myself to go outdoors with nothing on, despite the privacy. My biggest hang-up is fear of getting caught.

Last month, Adam was mowing the lawn and didn't hear the UPS truck come down our long driveway. Caught "red-handed," he nonchalantly signed for the package, wished the driver a good day and went back to work. The driver winked and gave me a thumbs-up as he drove away.

Should I give in to Adam's request and give his nude lifestyle a try? I know it would mean a lot to him. I told him I'd follow your advice.

- "EVE" IN UPRSTATE NEW YORK

DEAR "EVE": I'm not opposed to it. From everything I have read, and from readers' testimonials, the naturalist lifestyle is healthy and upbeat, so give it a try. Just be sure to wear sunscreen.

P.S. By December, your problem should no longer be a problem.

DEAR ABBY: My friend "Opal" worries me. When it comes to dating, she meets most of her men in bars. They're usually a lot younger than she is. Opal is in her late 50s - her "boyfriends" are 40 or younger.

I have no problem with women dating younger men, Abby, but these are guys who have been in jail and who have had drug problems, emotional issues, etc. Because I am Opal's best pal, I am the person whose shoulder she cries on when these relationships don't work out.

I am tired of always hearing the same old sob story. Sometimes I just want to slap some sense into her. What should I do when she calls me upset because she

IF SEPTEMBER 2 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: The year ahead offers you ample opportunity to improve your overall well-being and secure your future. People consider you to be trustworthy so are more likely to give you positions of trust between now and January, making this a fine time to go after a new job or obtain a romantic commitment from an important person. Look for myriad blessings in February and the first week of March when important doors can open that lead to long-term prosperity. Don't be too full of yourself in late March or April when you could set off on a wild goose chase or develop unrealistic plans.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): "Sticks and stones may break my bones, but words can never hurt me" won't be true if you spread gossip and tell lies.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You might make a good mediator if, and when, trouble erupts. But it is still wise to avoid situations that require you to take sides.

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine Saunders

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Instead of knocking a chip off someone's shoulder, give that person a pat on the back instead. It is easy to give the wrong impression.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Defensive postures invite hostility. Instead of viewing opposition as a conflict, look at it as a challenge to be handled with care.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): It is an action-oriented day, so resting on your laurels won't win brownie points. You need to show that you can handle jobs expeditiously.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't let enthusiasms run away with you. Your creative genius might not be appreciated under these celestial conditions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your sweet ways could be has been dumped again? I've had it, and I don't know what to do.

- APPALLED IN CLEVELAND

DEAR APPALLED: Poor Opal appears to be desperate for companionship and incapable of learning from her mistakes. The next time she calls to cry on your shoulder, give her the wake-up call she needs. Explain that if she's trying to hook a mountain trout, she shouldn't be fishing in a herring barrel. If she takes offense, so be it - because she's looking for love in all the wrong places, and it appears your friendship has pretty much run its course.

DEAR ABBY: A single male friend and I have had a running debate about the phrase "I love you, but I am not IN love with you." It came up again with his telling another friend he believes there is a big difference between the two.

I have been married for 20 years, and I told him that all love starts out "in" love and gradually becomes a more meaningful and everlasting love. Can you settle this?

- TIRED OF HEARING IT IN TEXAS

DEAR TIRED: You can love more than one person at a time, but to be IN love with someone implies that you are focused only on that person and want the relationship to be exclusive. Although sometimes that feeling passes, other times it deepens into the emotion that you described. In other words, when it comes to love there are no absolutes.

overcome by a sour note. Someone could be determined to win at all costs and turn the tables on you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): When rams fight they charge into each other, causing a head-on collision. Avoid conflicts by remaining on your own turf.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A cool head prevails no matter how hot people get. Tempers could flare under these stars and disrupt communications.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Someone could throw weight around, but you don't have to react or engage in one-upmanship. Patience is a valuable trait.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): True wisdom consists of knowing how to make a point without making an enemy. Your desires could conflict with those of others.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): If executive action is necessary remember that choosing to wait on a final decision is also an action. Don't rush projects.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Sept. 2, the 245th day of 2009. There are 120 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On Sept. 2, 1945, Japan formally surrendered in ceremonies aboard the USS Missouri, ending World War II.

On this date:
In 1666, the Great Fire of London broke out.
In 1789, the United States Treasury Department was established.
In 1864, during the Civil War, Union Gen. William T. Sherman's forces occupied Atlanta.
In 1901, Vice President Theodore Roosevelt offered the advice, "Speak softly and carry a big stick" in a speech at the Minnesota State Fair.
In 1930, the first nonstop airplane flight from Europe to the U.S. was completed in 37 hours as Capt. Dieudonne Costes and Maurice Bellonte of France arrived in Valley Stream, N.Y., aboard their Breguet 19 biplane, which bore the symbol of a large question mark.
In 1935, a hurricane slammed into the Florida Keys, claiming more than 400 lives.
In 1945, Ho Chi Minh declared Vietnam an independent republic. (Ho died on this date in 1969.)

In 1958, President Dwight D. Eisenhower signed the National Defense Education Act, which provided aid to public and private education to promote learning in such fields as math and science.
In 1969, the first automatic teller machine (ATM) to use magnetic-stripped cards was opened to the public at Chemical Bank in New York. (Called a "Docuteller," it was developed by Donald C. Wetzel.)
In 1998, a Swissair MD-11 jetliner crashed off Nova Scotia, killing all 229 people aboard.
Ten years ago: It was announced that President Bill Clinton and his wife, Hillary, had signed a contract to purchase a $1.7 million house in Chappaqua, N.Y., ending a monthslong guessing game over where the couple would live after leaving the White House.
Five years ago: President George W. Bush pledged "a safer world and a more hopeful America" as he accepted his party's nomination for a second term at the Republican National Convention in New York. A military jury at Camp Pendleton, Calif., convicted Marine Sgt. Gary Pittman of dereliction of duty and abuse of prisoners at a makeshift detention camp in Iraq; Pittman was sentenced to 60 days of hard labor and demoted to private. A jury at Fort Lewis, Wash., convicted a National Guardsman of trying to help al-Qaida; Specialist Ryan G. Anderson was sentenced to life in prison.

One year ago: Republicans assailed Barack Obama as the most liberal, least experienced White House nominee in history at their convention in St. Paul, Minn., and enthusiastically extolled their own man, John McCain, as ready to lead the nation. President George W. Bush briefly addressed the convention by satellite from the White House. A gunman in Skagit County, Wash., killed six people and injured four others; a suspect, Isaac Zamora, is awaiting trial. Jaguars offensive tackle Richard Collier was left paralyzed in a shooting outside an apartment building in Jacksonville, Fla.; a suspect, Tyrone Hartsfield, is awaiting trial.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE[®] Bobby Wolff

"What each man does is based not on direct and certain knowledge, but on pictures made by himself or given to him."
—Walter Lippmann

It is usually easier to defend against good bidders (you know what they really have, not what you think they have). Having said that, cover up the South and West cards and defend against three no-trump from the East seat, after working out what you know about South's hand.

With 12-14 points South would have rebid one no-trump over a suit response from North, and with 18-19 he would have bid two no-trump. So a rebid of three no-trump is generally made on a solid or near-solid six- or seven-card minor suit, plus some outside values. (This is in contrast to an opening pre-emptive bid of three no-trump, which is made with a solid seven-card minor suit with little or nothing else.)

At the table West led the spade two. Declarer played low from dummy, East won with the ace — and woodenly returned a second spade. Declarer rapidly wrapped up nine tricks.

East could count South for six or seven clubs tricks. Even if West had the spade king and underled it, one spade trick plus two in diamonds (if the diamond finesse were needed, it would clearly work) gives South enough for game.

The position East should have envisaged was the one that existed, where the defenders' best chance is to run the hearts. It can hardly cost to cash the heart ace. Now the heart three to partner's queen and a heart back through dummy's 10 nets the necessary five tricks to defeat the contract.

ANSWER: This hand is ideal for a jump to three hearts, an invitational bid. When your partner doubles in the sandwich seat, he will always deliver the unbid suits and a decent hand. In fact, jumping to four hearts is far from unreasonable here because of your fifth trump and apparently well-played diamond honors.
