From Sept. 1 police reports:

Vandalism: A 25-year-old Heyburn woman told police that her ex-husband, 37, showed up at the Burley theater while she was watching a movie with her two kids and "a friend." She said, according to the report, "He went in the theatre and started yelling at her and telling her off. Before he left, he flicked her ear with his fingers hard enough to hurt her." He left her a message that was played for Deputy Norma Talamantes. According to her report, "every other word was '(expletive) whore.' He was upset at her because she was at the movies with a friend." The woman then said her car wouldn't start. "She got out and went to open the hood and noticed a bunch of wires on the ground next to her car ... She noticed the wires had been ripped out of her engine," the report reads. "She said she is sure it was (her ex-husband) because he was the only one around her car and also the fact that he was mad at her."

The estimated damage to the vehicle is $800.

From Sept. 2 police reports:

Harassment: Four teenage Burley girls were warned by police to stop calling each other sluts and threatening to beat each other up on their MySpace pages. According to the report, the disputes were "over a boy."

Information: The landlord of a Burley trailer reported that he recently evicted a 30-year-old woman and that the trailer was left damaged — two broken windows and a front door that wouldn't lock. Deputy Chris Weber inspected the trailer.

"I walked inside and saw that the residence was destroyed. There was trash all over the floor and furniture was overturned," the report reads.

Hatfields and McCoys got nothing on Cokes and Pepsis mong all the earthshaking events that took place last week, few received more attention in south-central Idaho cyberspace than the announcement that the Twin Falls County Fair had signed a sponsorship deal with Coca-Cola, giving the soft drink company exclusive rights to sell its products at the fair next year.

DON'T ASK ME Steve Crump

"Even if I did drink soda. it wouldn't be Coke," wrote C. Donald. "That stuff will eat the rust off your bumper."

"My understanding is that vendors were told that Coke does not have enough fountain machines to provide fountain drinks, so all drinks will be in bottles," fumed Etha Carruthers. "I suspect we Pepsi lovers will be forced to drink warm Coke products. Yes, this is capitalism but it sure doesn't seem like it when fair goers have no choice in soda."

Nowhere is polarized America more riven with contention than over choice of soft drink.

Samuel McClure, an assistant professor of psychology at Stanford University, and some colleagues recently ran brain scans on people who'd just tasted soft drinks. They found that Coke-vs.-Pepsi preferences go down to the neurological level, based on cultural - and marketing influences.

Think not? Consider that almost one-third of Americans use the term "Coke" for any soft drink, according to Luanne von Schneidemesser, senior editor of the Dictionary of American Regional English.

Marketers say that as a rule of thumb Americans younger than 40 prefer Pepsi. So do folks who live on the Eastern Seaboard from Maine to Virginia and across the Northern Tier to Minnesota.

People older than age 40 generally like Coke. And so do Southerners, Westeners and most Midwesterners.

So Coke and Diet Coke control 27.3 percent of the U.S. market, according to the trade journal Beverage Digest. Pepsi and Diet Pepsi? Sixteen percent. (All Coca Cola Co. products, regardless of flavor, own 42.7 percent of the softdrink market; PepsiCo 30.8 percent).

Coke and Pepsi partisans are almost immovable, market researchers have found. For years, PepsiCo and the Coca-Cola Co. have been trying to convert the other brand's loyalists but not with their nameplate products. Pepsi may pitch Coke drinkers Gatorade, and Coke may try to lure Pepsi drinkers with, say, Honest Tea. But brand loyalty to the core product is remarkable.

All despite the fact that chemically, Coke and Pepsi are virtually identical.

So the question remains: Do the Cola Wars rage on because people are just hard-wired to take sides? Lots of psychologists think so, although others strongly disagree.

It's a pretty heated dispute. Think I'll listen to both sides while I nurse this corn dog and Diet Coke.

Obama's back-to-school speech inspires some

PHILADELPHIA – On the very first day of the school year, 12-year-old Mileena Rodriguez was reminded by President Barack Obama himself that places. listened to Mileena Obama's plea to study hard and stay in school Tuesday, watching along with several of her classmates at Thurgood Marshall Elementary School and students across the country. For all the hubbub among adults over the back-to-school speech, many youngsters took the president's message to heart.

"He said that we're the future, and he's right," said Mileena, who wants to be a forensic scientist. "That's a his policies, and they urged attend chose not to air the president telling you, 'I care about you getting your education.' Just imagine what Republican Party chairman kids like us can do if we actually listen."

Schoolchildren from coast to coast watched on classroom TVs and computer the message at all, either because their parents pulled schools refused to carry the speech over complaints from conservative groups and others that it smacked of the president. political indoctrination.

on C-SPAN and the White House Web site, Obama used advance transcript on its examples from his own life to urge students to study hard. He told them to stop chasing dreams of being athletes or reality TV stars.

"The truth is, being successful is hard. You won't love every subject you study. You won't click with every teacher. Not every homework assignment will seem completely relevant to your life right this minute. And you won't necessarily succeed at everything the first time you try," Obama said. Other presidents, including Republicans Ronald Reagan and George H.W. Bush, delivered similar speeches to students, but

> The uproar followed Obama to Wakefield High School in Arlington, Va., where he delivered the speech. A small band of protesters greeted his motorcade when it arrived at the school outside the nation's capital. One carried a sign reading: "Mr. President, stay away from our kids."

Karen Miller, a former PTA official and a longtime Still, others were glad they education activist in the Houston area, said she initially had concerns about the speech and accompanying lesson plans. "Whenever a political figure goes to a public school, one has to be very cautious;" she said.

After hearing the speech, however, Miller said she found it inspiring.

"The message he gave to children was so appropriate, that you shape your destiny sage was absolutely on target. I had chills."

All schools in 163,000-student Philadistrict delphia were encouraged to show the speech, which coincided with the first day of school.

Missouri Lt. Governor Peter Kinder, a Republican, had originally criticized the speech and its suggested lesson plans as "steps never before seen by any presidency in the realm of government intervention." But he said his concerns eased after some of the lesson plans were changed.

"It was perfectly innocuous and a praiseworthy message," he said Tuesday.

At Thomas Jefferson High School in Auburn, Wash., a racially and economically diverse district outside Seattle, sophomores listened attentively to the address. Fifteen-year-old Ariana Steele said the message connected with her.

"When you see someone of such power saying what your parents say or your teachers have said, like all your life, it really makes it more powerful to you and it really makes you want to try more," she said.

Idaho students watch president's address

By Jessie L. Bonner Associated Press writer

CALDWELL - Students in one of Idaho's poorest schools listened to a message from President Obama about hard work and personal responsibility Tuesday, days after his plans for a back-to-school speech sparked a revolt among conservatives.

Fourth and fifth graders at Lincoln Elementary School in Caldwell, where more than 50 percent of kids are eligible for free and reduced lunches, were among students across the country who watched Obama's address on classroom TVs, projectors and computer screens.

Students in some other Idaho public schools, however, didn't hear the speech at all.

The Bonneville Joint School District in eastern Idaho was flooded with phone calls from parents who were upset over the address, which they call an attempt to promote a political agenda, the Post Register reported.

The district did not air the president's message live in the classroom.

District Superintendent Chuck Shackett said the decision had nothing to do with the backlash, but instead was based on a school board policy requiring teachers to preview, and principals to approve, audiovisual materials used in the classroom.

Shackett said teachers will have the option of showing the speech later, pending approval.

At Lincoln Elementary in southwest Idaho, where the speech was shown to the school's oldest students. permission slips were sent home to parents notifying them of the address and asking them if they wanted their children to watch.

A 10-year-old girl was pulled from teacher Holly Slaughter's fifth-grade class while the address was shown. An 11-year-old boy told Slaughter that his mom wanted him to tell her everything the president

"Caldwell is pretty conservative," Slaughter told The Associated Press. "I expected a lot more parents to take their kids out, and I was actually pretty pleasantly surprised I only had one."

In his speech, Obama challenged the nation's students to take pride in their education, and to stick with it even if they don't like every class or have tough home circumstances.

The message resonated with educators in a school where more than 90 percent of students are from low-income households, according to statistics from the state Department of Education for the 2008-09 school year.

bone fragment recovered from a back yard next door to the home of kidnapping suspects Philip and Nancy Garrido appears to be from a human, a sheriff's spokesman in Contra Costa County, Calif., said Tuesday.

Spokesman Jimmy Lee said an independent expert determined that the bone is "probably human," and investigators are sending it to the state of California's DNA lab for further testing.

"We will be requesting the state to see if it can develop a DNA profile on the fragment," Lee said in an e-mail Tuesday afternoon. "It should be noted that it is not uncommon to find Native American remains in Contra Costa County?

Lee did not return emails or phone calls late Tuesday. Authorities have declined to display the bone, describe it or specify where it was found in the yard. Philip Garrido, 58, and Nancy Garrido, 54, who are married, were arrested Aug. 26 and charged with 29 felony counts of rape and kidnapping in the 1991 abduction of 11-year-old Jaycee Lee Dugard, who authorities say bore Philip Garrido two daughters after she was snatched from a street near her home in South Lake Tahoe. Authorities have been searching for evidence that might connect the Garridos to other kidnappings and homicides in the area, Lee said. The bone fragment was recovered after several law-enforcement agencies, including the FBI, sheriff's office and local police, combed the back yard next door to the Garridos' home last week with dogs trained to detect human remains. Philip Garrido took care of the property when it was vacant in 2006, authorities said, and he sometimes lived in a shed in the back yard. During the search, investigators dug a trench at the back of the shed, but it was not clear whether the bone was recovered from that area.

4 Americans killed in attack in Afghanistan

KABUL (AP) - Four U.S. troops died Tuesday in a militant attack in eastern Afghanistan, and NATO forces acknowledged that civilians were among the dozens killed in an airstrike on two hijacked fuel trucks.

Top NATO and U.S. commander Gen. Stanley McChrystal appointed a Canadian major general to lead an investigation into Friday's strike on the tankers in Kunduz province. An Afghan official appointed by President Hamid Karzai to examine the attack said his best estimate of the death toll was 82, including 45 armed militants.

Also Tuesday, McChrystal banned the sale of alcohol at the military alliance's Kabul headquarters after he had trouble getting in touch with staff after the attack in Kunduz, said Elizabeth Mathias, a U.S. military spokeswoman.

In adviser's resignation, vetting bites Obama again

The Washington Post

Jones's resignation late Saturday came as calls for his ouster increased from Republicans tionary Movement, which leaders, who have been critical of past statements and associations that have also taken the White House by surprise. His departure as a top adviser to the White convicted of fatally shooting House Council on Environmental Quality leaves Obama's push to create socalled green jobs, which he has called an essential element of the more stable economy is trying to build, without a leader.

White House spokesman Robert Gibbs on Sunday explained the resignation on ABC's "This Week With George Stephanopoulos," saying Jones "decided that the agenda of this president was bigger than any one individual." The president does not endorse Jones's past statements and actions, Gibbs said, "but he thanks him for his service."

Jones, a towering figure in the environmental movement, had issued two public apologies in recent days. One avoided the kind of vetting was for signing a petition in Cabinet officials received.

And on Saturday his advocacy on behalf of death-row inmate Mumia Abu-Jamal, who was a Philadelphia police officer in 1981, threatened to further deepen the controversy. A White House official, who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss a personnel matter, said Sunday that Jones's past was not studied as intensively as that of other advisers because of his relatively low rank.

Iraq, Afghanistan aren't ours to win or lose he other night I watched the film "The Deer Hunter." Afterward, I remembered why it took me so many years to be able to watch Vietnam movies.

It all came tumbling back – the tragedy, the innocent victims, the waste. Too often in Washington we tend to see foreign policy as an abstraction, with little understanding of what we are committing our country to: the complications and consequences of endeavors. It is easy to get into war, not so easy to get out. Vietnam lasted more than 10 years; soon, we will slip into our ninth year in Afghanistan. We have been in Iraq for almost seven years.

When I came to the Senate in 1997, the world was being redefined by forces no single country controlled or understood. The implosion of the Soviet Union and a historic diffusion of economic and geopolitical power created new influences and established new global power centers – and new threats. The events of Sept. 11, 2001, shocked America into this reality. The Sept. 11 commission pointed out that the attacks were as much about failures of our intelligence and security systems as about the terrorists' success.

The U.S. response, engaging in two wars, was a 20th-century reaction to 21st-century realities. These wars have cost more than 5,100 American lives; more than 35,000 have been wounded; a trillion dollars has been spent, with billions more departing our Treasury each month. We forgot all the lessons of Vietnam and the preceding history.

No country today has the power to impose its will and values on other nations. As the new world order takes shape, America must lead by building coalitions of common interests, as we did after World War II. Then, international organizations such as the United Nations, NATO, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and GATT – while flawed – established boundaries for human and government conduct and expectations that helped keep the world from drifting into World War III and generally made life better for most people worldwide during the second half of the 20th centu-

Our greatest threats today come from the regions left behind after World War II. Addressing these threats will require a foreign policy underpinned by engagement — in other words, active diplomacy but not appeasement. We need a clearly defined strategy that accounts for the interconnectedness and the shared interests of all nations. Every great threat to the United States whether economic, terrorism, proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, health pandemics,

As the new world order takes shape, America must lead by building coalitions of common interests, as we did after World War II.

environmental degradation, energy, or water and food shortages - also threatens our global partners and rivals. Accordingly, we cannot view U.S. involvement in Iraq and Afghanistan through a lens that sees only "winning" or "losing." Iraq and Afghanistan are not America's to win or lose. Win what? We can help them buy time or develop, but we cannot control their fates. There are too many cultural, ethnic and religious dynamics at play in these regions for any one nation to control. For example, the future of Afghanistan is linked directly to Pakistan and what happens in the mountains along their border. Political accommodation and reconciliation in this region will determine the outcome. Bogging down large armies in historically complex, dangerous areas ends in disaster. In Vietnam, we kept feeding more men, material and money into a corrupt Vietnamese government as our own leaders continued to deceive themselves and the American people. Today's wars are quite different from Vietnam. But the Obama administration, Congress and the Pentagon must get this right because it will frame the global architecture for the next generation. We must put forward fresh thinking. We can no longer hold ourselves to narrow "single issue" engagement when dealing with nations such as China, Russia, India, Brazil, Turkey or South Korea. The United States needs all these countries and many more if we are to engage the most dangerous challenges — not one at a time but all together. Our relationships with these nations have matured since World War II, as these nations have matured. Does anyone believe we will get to a responsible resolution on Iran without Russia? There's a reason we are part of a Group of 20 rather than a G-8. Even the world's largest economies cannot handle today's problems alone.

The president and his national security team should listen to recordings of conversations that President Lyndon B. Johnson had with Sen. Richard Russell about Vietnam, especially those in which LBJ told Russell that we could not win in Vietnam but that he did not want to pull out and be the first American president to lose a war. Difficult decisions with historic consequences are coming soon for President Obama.

Chuck Hagel, a Republican, represented Nebraska in the U.S. Senate from 1997 to 2009.

lons of water monthly — and that's all but a few dozen of the town's 3,167 metered users — will see their rates drop up to $60 a year.

Those who use more will pay more.

How did Hailey accomplish that? By conservation.

"It costs less to produce less water," said Heather Dawson, Hailey's city administrator.

With the help of a $750,000 grant from the federal Environmental Protection Administration, Hailey two years ago installed a water metering system. It then used data from that system to profile water use.

In the past year, Hailey consumed 653.6 million gallons of water; next year, city officials expect it will use about 33 million gallons less.

The mayor, City Council members and administrators also began preaching conservation, and with noticeable effects. Average water use in the city ranges from 6,000 gallons-per-month in winter to 51,000 gpm in July. That's less than comparably-sized communities in the Magic Valley consume.

Admittedly, Hailey has some advantages when it comes to water that many Magic Valley cities don't. Unlike some cities south of the Timmerman Hills, it's not stuck with finding massive amounts of water to dilute arsenic in well water. And because of ample springs in Indian Creek Canyon, Hailey doesn't have to run its city wells in winter.

But Hailey's rates wouldn't be declining unless there was a commitment by city government to focus on conservation — and community buy-in.

South-central Idaho can't continue to be as thirsty as it has been in the past 30 years. But as Hailey is demonstrating, conservation isn't just good for the soul.

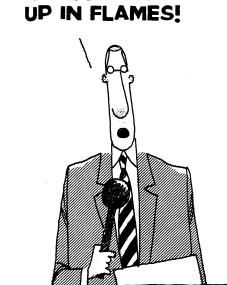

It pays.

Bipartisan health care reform in Congress? Not gonna happen

If the clamors of the congressional recess have made anything clear, it is that measurable bipartisan support for substantial health care reform is impossible. The White House and congressional Democrats will have to give up the whole business, settle for enacting for a few weak palliatives or finally use their majority power to install systemic change.

Hopes for compromise of any meaningful sort have devolved to just the three conservative Democrats and like number of Republicans who have been negotiating endlessly in the Senate without consequence. And two of the three Republicans have now, in effect, disqualified themselves.

Sen. Charles Grassley of Iowa lost all credibility as a good-faith negotiator when he threw in with the conservative lie that the proposed legislation would give the government the power, as Grassley put it, to "pull the plug on grandma." Grassley thus joins the long line of once-moderate Republicans who now defer Democrats won the last two national elections, and in both emphasized comprehensive health care reform, to evident voter approval. President Obama has been right to prefer and urge a bipartisan effort to that end but Republicans have preferred their only tendered alternative, Mediscare.

Senate Democrats don't have the 60 votes needed to override the inevitable GOP filibuster but if they can add enough stray Republicans to make up for their own strays, there is no reason why they shouldn't use the parliamentary dodge called, ironically in the circumstances, "reconciliation" to pass a broad reform bill by majority vote.

Settling issues is what elections are for and what confident governing parties do.

Cameron Willingham is innocent, but he's also dead here is a remarkable article in the current New Yorker about a man who was executed in Texas in 2004 for deliberately setting a fire that killed his three small children. Rigorous scientific analysis has since shown that there was no evidence that the fire in a one-story, wood frame house in Corsicana was the result of arson, as the authorities had alleged.

In other words, it was an accident. No crime had occurred.

Cameron Todd Willingham, who refused to accept a guilty plea that would have spared his life, and who insisted that he was innocent, had in fact been telling the truth all along.

It was inevitable that some case in which a clearly innocent person had been put to death would come to light. It was far from inevitable that this case would be the one. "I was extremely skeptical in the beginning," said the New Yorker reporter, David Grann, who began investigating the case last December.

The fire broke out on the morning of Dec. 23, 1991. Willingham was awakened by the cries of his 2-year-old daughter, Amber. Also in the house were his year-old twin girls, Karmon and Kameron. The family was poor, and Willingham's wife, Stacy, had gone out to pick up a Christmas present for the children from the Salvation

Willingham said he tried to rescue the kids but was driven back by smoke and flames. At one point his hair caught fire. As the heat intensified, the windows of the children's room exploded and flames leapt out. Willingham, who was 23 at the time, had to be restrained and eventually handcuffed as he tried again to get into the room.

There was no reason to believe at first that the fire was anything other than a horrible accident. But fire investigators, moving slowly through the ruined house, began seeing things that they interpreted as evidence of arson.

They noticed deep charring at the base of some of the walls and patterns of soot that made them suspicious. They noticed what they felt were ominous fracture patterns in pieces of broken window glass. They had no motive, but they were convinced the fire had been set. And if it had been set, who else but Willingham would have set it?

With no real motive in sight, the local district attorney, Pat Batchelor, was quoted as saying, "The children were interfering with his beer drinking and dart throwing."

Willingham was arrested and charged with capital murder.

When official suspicion fell on Willingham, eyewitness testimony began to change. Whereas initially he was described by neighbors as screaming and hysterical and desperate to have the children saved, he now was described as behaving oddly, and not having made enough of an effort to get to the girls.

And you could almost have guaranteed that a jailhouse snitch would emerge. They almost always do. This time his name was Johnny Webb, a jumpy individual with a lengthy arrest record who would later admit to being "mentally impaired" and on medication, and who had started taking illegal drugs at the age of 9.

The jury took barely an hour to return a guilty verdict, and Willingham was sentenced to death.

He remained on death row for 12 years, but it was only in the weeks leading up to his execution that convincing scientific evidence of his innocence began to emerge. A renowned scientist and arson investigator, Gerald Hurst, educated at Cambridge and widely recognized as a brilliant chemist, reviewed the evidence in the Willingham case and began systematically knocking down every indication of arson.

The authorities were unmoved. Willingham was executed by lethal injection on Feb. 17, 2004.

Now comes a report on the case from another noted scientist, Craig Beyler, who was hired by a special commission, established by the state of Texas to investigate errors and misconduct in the handling of forensic evidence.

The report is devastating. There was absolutely no scientific basis for determining that the fire was arson, Beyler said. No basis at all. He added that the state fire marshal who investigated the case and testified against Willingham "seems to be wholly without any realistic understanding of fires." He said the marshal's approach seemed to lack "rational reasoning" and he likened it to the practices "of mystics or psychics."

Management of DNA sample at issue in Wisconsin killings

Associated Press writer

MILWAUKEE - Police investigating a string of cold-case slayings identified their prime suspect after obtaining DNA from his toothbrush late last month, but investigators should have had a sample from him eight years earlier and before the last killing.

Two state agencies are now disputing whether the sample mandated by state law was taken, and if so, what happened to it. Police said Walter E. Ellis of Milwaukee was arrested Saturday after a state crime lab matched his DNA to samples taken from nine women killed between 1986 and 2007. Ellis was in prison from 1998 to 2001, which meant a 2000 state law mandating corrections officials obtain DNA from all prisoners with felony convictions should have applied to him. But the state Department of Justice said it never received the sample, which would have been processed before the 2007 slaving ever happened. The state agency responsible for collecting such samples insists it did "We have no record that we received a convictedoffender sample from Mr. Ellis," said Justice

Kevin St. John. In some cases, a person's sample yields an unusable profile, but the DOJ keeps records of those people to ensure proper follow-up. Ellis didn't show up on that list either, St. John added.

Department

Wisconsin's Department of Corrections, which is responsible for obtaining samples, said it complied with the law.

"The only information we have is an indication in our system that the specimen was collected on Feb. 4. 2001," said John Dipko, a corrections spokesman. He said the sample would have lab, which is under the jurisdiction of the state DOJ.

Police Chief Edward profile in a statewide database, forcing them to take the high-risk step of obtaining a sample directly by executing a search warrant Aug. 29, even if doing so tipped off Ellis that police were investigating him. Authorities began to focus on Ellis, 49, after his name surfaced in connection with a number of unsolved homicides, Flynn said, but did not elaborate. Search warrant documents released Tuesday indicated Ellis was identified by the FBI's Violent Criminal Apprehension Program, a national repository in which violent crimes are compared and analyzed by experts.

The warrant said authorities were seeking "possible ligatures" that could be used for strangulation. All nine women were strangled except one. Documents indicated police confiscated the toothbrush along with a metal chain, clothing, a pipe, an unknown white powder, cell phones and CDs.

The documents said Ellis was scheduled to meet with police Aug. 29 but didn't show up. He was captured Saturday after a struggle when an alert officer spotted his car at a motel, authorities

Ellis was charged in the deaths of two of the nine women, and more charges are expected this week, prosecutors said. The state public defender's office said Tuesday that no attorney had been assigned to him. He could make an initial court appearance today.

"It's certainly speculative but a plausible speculation that if his DNA had been collected in 2001 that certainly the pattern would have been discerned perhaps more quickly," Flynn told CNN. "Certainly we would have identified a suspect more quickly."

A message left with Flynn's office Tuesday was not immediately returned.

Ellis served his previous prison sentence pleading no contest to a reduced charge of secondbeen sent to the state crime degree reckless injury. He was released from prison in 2001 and from state supervision in 2003, when cor-Flynn said authorities rections officials would couldn't find Ellis' DNA have verified that his DNA sample was in the system, Dipko said.

Twin Falls home cook Brian Peck retrieves the dessert from the grill on the patio outside his home. Peck hopes his adventures in cooking will help him in the future with his career in social work. He wants to use gardening as a teaching tool for troubled youth.

Grad student opts against culinary career

kitchencharacter

Most of Brian Peck's dishes are cooked off-the-cuff, rather than from a recipe. So instead of recipes, here are descriptions of two dishes he cooked. All the ingredients are here, with guidelines about how to put them together, but he advocates adjusting based on your tastes and the fresh ingredients available to you.

GRILLED PEACHES WITH BALSAMIC REDUCTION

By Ariel Hansen Times-News writer

Brian Peck isn't your typical home cook. He's a he, first of all, and he's a grad student. He's also more than willing to try strange, new ingredients and foreign combinations - and he rarely cooks from a recipe.

On a recent afternoon in his Twin Falls did a measuring cup or spoon emerge from a drawer. Instead, he's more apt to add a pinch of this, a shake of that, a squirt of the other, and take tastes until he's satisfied with his creation.

The Asian guacamole, for example. After discovering his avocado had a few brown spots, he simply cut them off, and scooped the green flesh into a bowl, then added chopped cilantro and lime and squished it all together. Pretty traditional — until he squirted in Sriracha hot sauce and added Furikake, a mix of sesame seeds, nori and bonito. Suddenly, what was Mexican became something else entirely.

"I'll cook from recipes sometimes, to get kitchen, he made four dishes, and not once inspiration," Peck said, "then play with flavors as I go."

> That ability to make changes on the fly is one of the reasons Peck, 32, decided not to go to culinary school to become a professional

Adventurous palate, creative cook

From the garden to your mouth in minutes: Brian Peck clipped a variety of garden tomatoes from the vines, topped them with a splash of olive oil, salt, pepper and lavender to make a delicious appetizer or side dish to any meal. A white wine with this side makes your taste buds erupt.

No measuring spoons, please. Brian Peck's Mexican-Asian guacamole contains a little of this and a little of that. He mixed the spices on the spot to create the hybrid dish.

Meet Brian Peck

Favorite cookbook: "Vegetarian Cooking for Everyone" by Deborah Madison. "We cook out of there twice a week, probably," Peck said, describing lentil, bean and quinoa dishes that he said please everyone he cooks for. Favorite cuisines: In order of preference: Japanese, Spanish, Ethiopian, Indian. "The bigger, bolder flavors," Peck said. Who taught him to cook: He did. Peck said his Pennsylvania family favored traditional meat-andpotatoes dinners, but when he began traveling across the world, he developed a taste for ethnic cuisines. And living in Washington, D.C., for several years, he ate at many excellent restaurants. It wasn't long before he was trying to reproduce that food at home.

What he doesn't enjoy as much: Baking, because it relies so heavily on precise measurements. "When it comes to weighing and measuring, I lose interest a bit," he said. "You do exactly what the book says and it comes out exactly the same — coloring in the lines.

His latest favorite kitchen tools: Several microplanes, including one specifically for whole nutmeg, and squeeze bottles for sauces and other liquids. He's plates that look as appetizing and refined as any restaurant's. His least favorite thing to do in the kitchen: Can you guess? Dishes. "I end up using way more bowls and dishes than (my wife) thinks is necessary. And she's probably right," Peck said.

Biggest culinary failure: Good question, Peck said. "I try to forget those! I've cooked some dishes that my wife will say, 'Yeah, you don't have to cook that again,' politely," Peck said.

He's more cautious when friends are dining with him, to more consistent result. "I've never had a flop at his house, for sure," said

Couponing's best-kept secrets: Keep your eyes on the prize

'm sure you know by now that I love getting groceries for free with coupons whenever possible. But we can't get everything for free all of the time. Here's a fun way to maximize coupon savings and get items very inexpensively, even when they're not completely free.

Super-Couponing Secret: Buy "small" and save the biggest for "free"

Manufacturers will often issue coupons for an item that's free "when you purchase any of these 3 brands." The coupon often shows various other brands or products sold by the same manufacturer. I recently had a coupon offering a free package of hot dogs if the shopper purchased three other items from the same manufacturer.

During the sale at my store, the hot dogs were on sale for $3.99. If the total cost of the three additional items is less than the sale price of the hot dogs, I'll get the hot dogs cheaper than I could have purchased them otherwise — plus, I'll have three additional items to take home as part of the deal, too.

When I spot coupons like these, I will look closely at the additional brands featured. I do not necessarily think about whether I want or need these items. Instead, I calculate what would be the least expensive thing to buy to make the larger item cost as little as possible.

The additional products with the hot dog deal included coffee, crackers, condiments, gelatin desserts and powdered drink mixes.

Of those items, the gelatin desserts and powdered drink mixes seemed like the best candidates. They're both usually pretty inexpensive, and buying three of either will qualify me for my free $3.99 package of hot dogs. After checking the prices on both, I saw that the gelatin was on sale for 33 cents a box. I could pay 99 cents for three boxes and get a free package of hot dogs, too! Not bad at all.

But then I checked the price on powdered drink mixes. They were on sale for 10 cents each! Whether I plan to drink them or not, buying 3 packets of drink mix became my means for acquiring the $3.99 package of hot dogs for just 30 cents!

In my coupon classes, I refer to this as the "take one for the team" couponing strategy. Sometimes it's necessary to buy something we don't necessarily want because it's our means to acquire the item we actually do want for a much lower price.

Here's another example. I recently saw tear pads of coupons in the produce department of my store near the salads. The coupons provided $2 off produce when you purchased any of a certain manufacturer's salad dressing. I looked at that brand of salad dressing and realized that the manufacturer makes both bottled salad dressings and the dry seasoning that come in a small packet, the kind you mix at home with oil and vinegar. The packets of seasoning cost 79 cents. So, for each packet of the salad dressing I purchased, I used one of the coupons. I was able to buy $2 worth of fresh produce for 79 cents. I didn't necessarily want the salad dressing, but it allowed me to purchase my produce items at a much lower cost.

Coupon clippers can buy the previous Sunday's Times-News (minimum 10 copies) for 50 cents each at the Times-News office for extra coupon savings.

LOCAL FOOD CLASSES

Become a canny canner with CSI class

You can enjoy your garden bounty all year long when you learn to preserve it properly, and canning fruits and vegetables with a pressure cooker is the safest way to preserve them, say organizers of the upcoming class "Canning Garden Fruits & Veggies."

High temperatures inside the pressure canner destroy bacteria inside the jar. Under the guidance of instructor Dianne Jolovich, class participants will can and prepare green beans, dilly beans, salsa, spaghetti sauce, fruits and fruit jams. Bring your canning equipment along with some fruits or vegetables to the first class.

The noncredit class is offered through the College of Southern Idaho Community Education Center from 9 a.m. to noon Saturdays, Sept. 12-26, in the college's Desert kitchen room 116. Cost is $65.

Sweet or savory, learn the technique of risotto at Rudy's

A recipe is a good idea that someone had and wrote down, but a technique is an established method that leads to predictable results.

On Tuesday chef Randy King will teach a class at Rudy's - A Cook's Paradise on the technique of risotto.

The class will feature four risotto variations, each with its own flavors. The recipes will demonstrate the ease with which risotto can be altered and turned from savory to sweet and light to filling.

King is a graduate of Boise State University, earning a degree in philosophy as well as attending the culinary arts program. He has won numerous awards and has been featured in several magazines and newspapers.

The class will be 7-9 p.m. and costs $45. Rudy's is at 147 Main Ave. W. in Twin Falls. To register, call 733-5477.

Peck even gave her a cooking lesson as a wedding gift. Tiel-Nelson said she still thinks of that afternoon when she gets out a knife. "Every time I go to slice anything, I'm always curling my fingers and making sure it's flat-side down."

That's certainly how Peck cuts, moving his knife as quickly and precisely as any of the chefs on The Food Network. A culinary career may not be in Peck's future, but as his family and friends testify, he's as good a home cook as any in southern Idaho.

BACON-WRAPPED DATES WITH MANCHEGO

From the kitchen of:

BRIAN PECK

Inspired by an appetizer of dates that were battered and deep-fried. Peck came up with this combination. Cut manchego cheese into slivers or rectangles sized to fit into the openings of large, pitted dates. Insert the cheese into the dates. Wrap each date in a slice of bacon — Peck uses thin, nitratefree bacon — and spear with a toothpick to hold. Put in a hot oven until the bacon is crispy and the house smells great.

Peck said this appetizer is a favorite at Rudy's — A Cook's Paradise; after he made it for the store's staff once, they haven't stopped asking for him to do it again. If you don't have manchego around, try pecans or Granny Smith apples anything that inspires you.

WASHINGTON - Food makers must alert government officials of potentially contaminated products within 24 hours under a new rule designed to help federal regulators spot food safety problems sooner.

The Food and Drug Administration displayed a new electronic database Tuesday where manufacturers must notify the government if they believe one of their products is likely to cause sickness or death in people or animals.

Regulators said the database will help the FDA prevent widespread illness from contaminated products and direct inspectors to plants that pose a high safety concern.

"There's been a lag time; we learn about problems after people get sick," said Michael Taylor, senior adviser to the FDA's commissioner. "This is intended to inform us of contamination problems before people get sick."

The law creating the database was passed in 2007, after Congress criticized the FDA for its handling of safety problems with a range of foods and drugs, many of them imported.

The FDA has struggled since then to manage a spate of food-safety recalls, including national outbreaks of salmonella linked to peppers and peanut butter. President Obama pledged this year to improve the safety of the U.S. food supply, after tainted peanut butter from a Georgia plant sickened hundreds of Americans and caused one of the largest food recalls in recent history. "Working with the food industry, we can swiftly remove contaminated products from commerce

New manager of Crowley's plans to add breakfast, espresso and Wi-Fi

By Joshua Palmer Times-News writer

ricia Anderson remembers eating at Crowley's Soda Fountain when she was a student at Twin Falls High School – back when the nostalgic diner sported a pharmacy in the rear and packed tables in the front. Now, more than 20 years later, Anderson has returned to Twin Falls from living in Arizona to manage one of the community's most iconic businesses.

Avenue in downtown Twin Falls, has struggled with declining business in recent years, but Anderson said she plans to reverse the trend by expanding business hours, offering new services such as espresso and Wi-Fi, and adding a breakfast menu.

"I want to add some new items, makes the place unique," she said. "Crowley's biggest strength is that almost everybody knows about it and where it's located."

But, she added, that its location is also its greatest challenge. "I need to be getting those people to come downtown," she said. To do that, Anderson will offer a morning breakfast menu beginning Oct. 1, which will be complimented by espresso and other coffee drinks.

She is also searching for a businesses that is interested in renting at Crowley's, located on Main soda fountain, which previously housed a pharmacy.

> Pat Meyer, Anderson's mother, is also planning events to "make the business more visible?

> Meyer said she is working with a local band to play '50s music, as well as an organizer of classic car shows to host a show in front of the business on Main Avenue.

"We need to do something to but retain that '50s feel that attract attention, but we need to see what fits," she said.

Anderson said she does not plan to stay open on the weekends, unless there is a downtown event or she sees a demand for it.

"If other businesses stay open on the weekend, then I would likely do the same," she said.

Anderson said her children, Tyler, Skye and Ciarra, will help work the grill and serve customers.

Joshua Palmer may be reached 208-735-3231 or the adjoining space behind the jpalmer@magicvalley.com.

Tricia Anderson and her children, Skye and Tyler, are seen at Crowley's Soda Fountain in Twin Falls on Monday. Anderson took over management of Crowley's on Sept. 1. She plans to continue the '50s theme, but will add new services such as breakfast, Wi-Fi and espresso.

"Crowley's biggest strength is that ALMOST EVERYBODY KNOWS ABOUT IT and where it's located."

Kruse now safest fleet in Idaho ave Hill did everything right on March 1, 2008, according to Idaho State Police.

The driver for Kruse Nationwide, a trucking company based in Filer, pulled his rig as far from the center line as he possibly could when he saw the other driver's headlights approaching.

But it wasn't enough to avoid the deadly collision near Lava Hot Springs that killed the other driver.

Although ISP said in its report that Hill was not at fault, the trucking company's Safety Inspection Rating end every call with "Be safe." was crushed – increasing insurance premiums and devastating drivers who consider safety ratings a badge of honor.

That's why the trucking company was so surprised to be awarded the Safest Fleet in Idaho by Great West Casualty and Premier Insurance.

"Our drivers worked hard for this recognition, especially after what happened in March," said Lorie Kruse, co-owner of Kruse Nationwide Inc.

The company has adopted practices that are both large and small to promote safety, she said.

Small practice: Employees Large practice: All drivers routinely train using the Safe State Web site.

"It worked," Kruse said. "Our drivers got our rating back up, and we beat the larger companies."

Pay before you pump - get used to it: A reader asked why some fuel retailers require customers to pay before they pump.

Answer: All fuel retailers are required to receive 'proof of payment' – such as a debit or credit card verification, or cash transaction before customers can pump gas.

Anyone, including retailers, who do otherwise are violating a city ordinance that has been in place for about four years.

It's up to cities and counties to adopt and enforce the ordinance, so drivers might be surprised when they come from out of town.

"It was enacted to prevent people from driving away without paying," said Twin Falls Police Sgt. John Wilson. "It's worked well — we rarely get calls about it anymore."

Joshua Palmer may be reached at 208-735-3231.

Cold, hard cash may be key to Cadbury's heart

By Marc Levy and Sarah Skidmore Associated Press writers

PORTLAND, Ore. - British candy maker Cadbury PLC is awaiting a sweeter offer than Kraft Foods Inc.'s $16.7 billion stockand-cash proposal. But it is unclear if Kraft or other potential suitors – like Hershey Co. and Nestle SA — will put more cash on the line, which could prove key to a deal.

Cadbury, the second-largest global candy maker with brands like Trident, Dentyne and Cadbury Creme Eggs, quickly rejected the surprise offer by Kraft Foods on Monday, saying it fundamentally undervalues the compadeal, which would expand Kraft's global footprint.

Cadbury's rejection of the bid, however, opens the door to discussions with others. Analysts Switzerland-based suggest Nestle, the world's largest foodmaker, and U.S.-based candy maker Hershey might come together to consider making a bid of their own.

Kraft, the world's secondlargest foodmaker with brands like Ritz, Oreos and Toblerone chococontinue discussions with efforts "friendly." Rosenfeld said of holding Kraft stock.

ny. But Kraft CEO Irene Rosenfeld she believes Cadbury will realize is continuing to make a case for the the value of the offer in the coming weeks. "We fully expect either a dialogue between these two companies to commence resulting in an increased offer, or hostile offer from Kraft," Stifel, Nicolaus & Company Inc. analyst Christopher Growe wrote in a note to investors Tuesday. Some analysts say cash may prove more important as Cadbury's investors have limits on how much U.S. stock they can hold. But Kraft dismissed the conlate, said Tuesday that it plans to cerns, saying Cadbury has an array of international and U.S. investors Cadbury and will try to keep the as well who would see the benefit and keep them out of consumers' hands," Taylor told reporters. Many companies already voluntarily submitted reports about possible contamination, but the new law "makes this a duty that all food facilities have," he said. The food industry welcomed the new database, but the FDA must answer a number of questions about how it will work, according to a spokesman for the Grocery Manufacturers Association. Its members include ConAgra Foods Inc., Kraft Foods Inc. and Nestle USA Inc.

"As with any new system ... there are bound to be a number of issues to be resolved in the initial stages, and we would hope that the agencies will take this into account," said spokesman Scott Openshaw.

The new reporting requirements apply to all U.S. facilities that are registered with the FDA to process, pack or hold food, with the exception of credit as a refund. And the money doesn't have to be repaid, unlike last year's homebuyer credit, unless you sell the house within three years.

The credit pushed many to buy this year, when low interest rates and falling prices weren't quite enough.

One bill that has been introduced would extend the credit through next year. Another would raise the maximum credit to $15,000 for one year to anyone buying a principal residence. But passage is iffy.

"One of the reasons the housing market has firmed up this summer is the tax credit," says Mark Zandi, chief economist with Moody's Economy.com, who supports expanding the credit to up to $15,000 for all buyers.

But David Wyss, chief economist for Standard & Poor's, says making the credit too generous could create other problems.

"We would get another housing bubble with people buying houses to take advantage of the credit when they don't have the ability to maintain the payments," Wyss said. And giving the credit for all purchases "just encourages flipping again," he says.

Hurt caused by old flame still burns 26 years later started my freshman year of college, I was a loner. I had low self-esteem, the result of a disability I was born

On the first day of school I noticed "Will," who was also a freshman. I thought he was and we hit it off instantly. We became inseparable, often visiting each other's families on weekends and breaks.

At the end of the first semester - out of the blue he called me a "b-tch" and told me to get out of his life. I was crushed! He left school shortly afterward without saying goodbye.

Later I was given some shocking news. His roommate told me that Will was gay. I went through the gamut of emotions from disbelief to anger to sadness. And I felt used. Twenty-six years have passed. I answered the phone at work two days ago and was surprised to hear Will's voice on the other end. He was shocked, too. I asked if he remembered me and he said he did. He came into the store several days later, and we exchanged phone numbers and e-mail addresses. I looked at his Web pages and saw pictures of him holding and kissing

They say you never forget your first, and I haven't. The problem is, I still feel hurt, I want him to know that, but I don't know what to do. Am I making too much of this?

"GRACE" IN NEW YORK

DEAR "GRACE": No, I don't think so. Your relationship with Will ended without closure, so your hurt is understandable. Give Will a call and invite him to join you for lunch. Tell him you were deeply hurt all those years ago, and then ask him to explain why he treated you the way he did and what happened after he left the school. Don't be surprised if he tells you he loved you, too, and that he tried to be straight but simply could not be who you wanted him to be. Sometimes that hapnegative about her to him. A few weeks ago he found it necessary to include this woman in our weekly visit to our mother's grave. We told him if he wants to go there with her - fine. But do not drag her there with us. This was our private time with our mother. We didn't want a stranger there.

The end result was they broke up. Now Dad is blaming it all on us. The breakup is a secondary issue. What are your thoughts about his insisting she be a part of the cemetery visits?

GRAVELY CONCERNED IN OHIO

DEAR GRAVELY CON-CERNED: Frankly, I am surprised that the woman would want to be included in the weekly visits to your mother's grave. However, before she accepted the invitation, she should have made sure that her presence wasn't an imposition by asking your father if it had been cleared with you. THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

"The high that proved too high,

the heroic for earth too hard." Robert Browning

451-4-101-101-101-101-1

Sitting East, plan the defense to four spades on partner's lead of the heart seven. When you have made up your mind, look at the full deal to see why playing the heart ace at trick one is a bad idea.

It might be hard to explain to partner why you violated the rule of third hand high if your partner has led a singleton or if declarer has a bare king. Equally, if declarer has the doubleton king, you will score one trick sooner or later. whatever you do. However, if declarer has three cards in the suit, you need to put in the 10 now; if you take the ace and return the suit, you have lost your entry to cash the third round.

Declarer will take the second heart and drive out the trump ace, then can lead a diamond to his 10 to establish a diamond discard for his heart loser. However, if you put in the heart 10 at the first trick, declarer is immediately dead in the water.

Admittedly there are two positions where playing the ace wins, and only one where playing the 10 does, but that does not take into account the significance of partner's spot-card lead. If the seven is only consistent with a doubleton or singleton, the odds change dramatically in favor of playing the 10 at trick one.

Incidentally, this sort of deal is further justification for leading low and not MUD from three small in partner's suit, unless you have supported him.)

ANSWER: Some people would argue that with an opening bid you should always get into the auction. Indeed, facing an unpassed partner, I can see the merits of doubling here. BSU focuses on matchup with Miami

By Dustin Lapray

Times-News correspondent

BOISE – One thing has Boise State head coach Chris Petersen worried about Saturday's home date with Miami of Ohio: the unknown.

Even after watching film of the RedHawks' 42-0 loss to Kentucky on opening weekend, BSU has little to go on.

"We still don't know a whole bunch about them, being a new staff," said Petersen. "They didn't run a tremendous amount (offensive) plays either."

The game kicks off at 6 p.m., Saturday (KTFT), with BSU as a 35 1/2-point favorite. Focusing on the RedHawks should be welcome for the Broncos as they try to get past the fallout from the altercation between Byron Hout and Oregon running back LeGarrette Blount.

Lost in the melee was a vast improvement by BSU's offensive and defensive lines. The Broncos dominated the line of scrimmage throughout the game. The offense ran 89 plays and held the ball for 43 minutes.

"We don't really ever go in setting goals like that, never have conversations on time of possession," Petersen said. "We'd like to keep the ball away if we can, but that's not do whatever we can to score points."

Since the NCAA began rerules to speed up the college game, the 89 plays are the rules, BSU had a few games with 100 or more plays.

No. 13 Oklahoma loses tight end Gresham for rest of season

NORMAN, Okla. – Oklahoma tight end Tuesday night. Jermaine Gresham will miss the rest of the season after having surgery to repair torn cartilage in his right knee.

Coach Bob Stoops said that doctors determined during an arthroscopic surgery Tuesday that they needed to stitch together the cartilage in Gresham's knee. Stoops said Gresham will need five months to recover. The 13th-ranked Sooners are already reeling from the loss of Heisman Trophy-winning quarterback Sam Bradford, who sprained his shoulder in a 14-13 loss to BYU and will be out at least two weeks. The loss dropped Oklahoma 10 spots in Tuesday's Associated Press Top 25.

Gresham was a second-team All-America pick last season and had been considered a top NFL prospect before returning for his junior year.

Florida freshman Debose to have season-ending surgery

GAINESVILLE, Fla. – Top-ranked Florida will have to wait a year to see highly touted freshman Andre Debose on the field. Debose, coach Urban Meyer's prized recruit in February, will have season-ending surgery to repair a torn hamstring. Meyer announced Debose's decision after practice

Meyer had tabbed the 5-foot-11, 185pound speedster as Percy Harvin's replacement this fall. But Debose injured his hamstring at the Florida state high school track meet in April, tweaked it during summer workouts and then hurt it again on the first day of fall practice.

Team doctors initially thought it was just a pulled muscle, but tests later revealed a partial tear. Debose has been considering his options for two weeks.

OREGON TRIES TO MOVE ON

The Associated Press

The Oregon Ducks are looking to put LeGarrette Blount's punch and suspension in the past by focusing on Purdue this weekend, although there's little doubt the drama will have lingering effects. "LeGarrette's not going to be here so we have to move on," was how linebacker Spencer Paysinger summed up the team's mindset.

Blount appeared briefly at practice on Tuesday, but did not suit up. He did not speak to reporters.

The running back was suspended last Friday after he punched Boise State defensive end Byron Hout following the Broncos' 19-8 victory over the Ducks the night before. Hout was seen taunting Blount, who threw a right that hit Hout's jaw and knocked him to his knees. Blount was allowed to keep his scholarship. He can practice with the Ducks, but cannot play in games or in the postseason, effectively ending his career in Eugene. Oregon coach Chip Kelly was brusque in describing Blount's appearance at practice during a conference call with Pac-10 coaches. "Yep," he said. Seymour still a no-show in Oakland Richard Seymour failed to report to Oakland for a second straight day Tuesday after being traded from the New England Patriots.

"I really have nothing to report on that," Raiders coach Tom Cable said. "Nothing has changed at this point."

Seymour, a five-time Pro Bowl defensive end, was acquired from the Patriots on Sunday in exchange for Oakland's first-round draft pick in 2011. The move was on the NFL's official transactions list and Seymour is on the Raiders' roster on their Web site.

Cable said he spoke with Seymour earlier this week and that the defensive lineman told him he wants to play in Oakland.

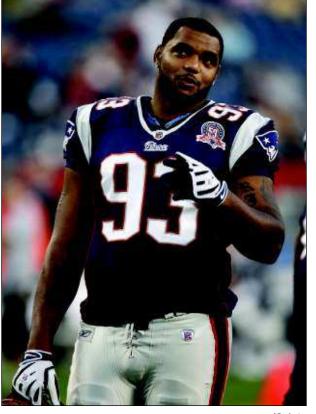

Cable reiterated that he is hopeful Seymour will play for the Raiders but declined to discuss reports the two sides were in talks on a new con-
