CSI wind energy students train for high-wire jobs

CAREERS

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Working on electricity-producing wind turbines requires more than an appreciation for Mother Nature's breezes.

Instead, a willingness to work from great heights — and do it safely — is crucial for a career as a technician working on wind turbines. Students in the College of Southern Idaho's new wind energy program gained some hands-on instruction in that area on Wednesday.

The students donned helmets, harnesses and safety glasses as they readied themselves for a climb up the two 35-foot ladders fastened to a wall in the backstage area of the Fine Arts Center. The Wednesday activities were a precursor to trips planned for this week when students will go to wind turbines and gain further training with safety and climbing skills.

"The job that these guys are preparing for is obviously 300 feet off the ground," said Mark Goodman, the instructor for the class.

Twenty-one students are training in wind energy technology. Some are in CSI's wind energy program while others are in the college's environmental technology program, which combines wind energy with other disciplines such as solar and geothermal technology.

"Get into your harness and make sure you're checked," Goodman told the students.

Checking — and double-checking — is emphasized when working from great heights, where the force of gravity

Former jailer charged in gun assault

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

GOODING — A former jailer is locked up on an assault charge, after allegedly shooting a high-powered gun into a couch occupied by his wife.

David A. Howell, 32, is accused of felony aggravated assault for an Aug. 28 incident at his home with a .40-caliber Desert Eagle pistol, according to court records in Gooding County.

Howell was lodged Wednesday at the Gooding County Jail on $100,000 bond.

Court records show he was hired at the Snake River Juvenile Detention Center in Twin Falls in December as a part-time juvenile corrections specialist, though Twin Falls County officials declined Wednesday to state his current employment status, citing personnel issues.

Howell said on Sept. 8, though, that the detention center "was" his employer, court records show.

The case against Howell heated up on Aug. 28 when one of his wife's family members told Wendell

Police empty Canyon Ridge after gun rumor

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Twin Falls police officers and school personnel completed a sweeping, 90-minute search through Canyon Ridge High School on Wednesday that turned up no weapon after a student reported seeing what appeared to be a gun in a backpack.

At 11:45 a.m., students were evacuated to the school's football bleachers, where they waited for school and police officials to search through classrooms, backpacks and lockers. It was the first such incident for Canyon Ridge, which opened up for class last month in Twin Falls.

"Some may look at this as being overly cautious, but we err on the side of caution," Superintendent Wiley Dobbs said.

The student had seen what looked like a gun in a backpack and told a teacher, Dobbs said, adding that the student did the right thing in telling authorities about it.

Lt. Craig Stotts of the Twin Falls Police Department said that all officers on duty — more than a dozen — were involved in the search.

Marijuana seized from corn field

Jerome County bust yields 232 plants, no suspects

Times-News

Jerome County Sheriff's Office authorities seized 232 marijuana plants Tuesday night from a corn field northwest of Jerome without determining yet who put the plants there.

The 100-acre farm along 100 West Road had plants ranging in size from 3 to 7 feet tall. They were spaced in a manner "which would allow the suspects to locate the plants in the tall corn field," according to a press release Wednesday from the sheriff's office.

The field's owner does not want to be identified by police for safety reasons, but was leasing the land to another person who farmed it, said Jerome County Sheriff Doug McFall on Wednesday in an e-mail.

"The owner and farmer are not suspects in the crime, as they are cooperating with authorities," McFall said.

The estimated value of the plants is $464,000, according to the sheriff's office release.

Board broadens search for new transportation head

The Associated Press

BOISE — The hunt is on for a new director of the Idaho Transportation Department, and those leading the search say applicants need not have experience building roads and bridges or designing elaborate interchanges to be considered.

Instead, members of the Idaho Transportation Board say they are looking for candidates with business and leadership skills, political savvy and a resume showing at least five years of senior management experience.

So far, the board has narrowed a pool of 126 applicants down to 12 finalists.

The search began after the board fired Pam Lowe in July.

"We just decided that it was probably time to broaden our horizon and see where it would lead us," Jim Coleman, board member from northern Idaho, told the Spokesman-Review.

"Some of the finalists that we have interested had not had any transportation department experience," he said.

Some of the criticism of Lowe was a perception she lacked political skill to get things done in the Legislature and champion the priorities of Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter. For two years, Otter, a Republican, made raising taxes and fees to fix Idaho's road and bridge system a top legislative priority, only to suffer back-to-back defeats in the GOP-dominated Legislature.

Lowe, who was named head of the agency in Dec. 2006 and is challenging her termination, is a civil engineer, like all but two of the agency's directors since 1974.

State law states that the "board shall appoint a director having knowledge and experience in transportation matters," but Coleman and others contend the language is vague.

of the police that she needed a protection order against Howell for the alleged couch-shooting incident.

"Howell had pointed a gun at (the victim) and fired it into the couch that she was sitting on," according to court records. "Howell was very intoxicated and was angry when he shot the pistol. After he discharged the weapon he stood up and began to yell at her and passed out on the floor."

The victim left their house after that, according to court records, which say that she was in fear for her life.

Jerome County Commissioner Charlie Howell said on Wednesday he is an uncle to David Howell, but was unaware of any charges against his nephew.

The police tipster in Howell's case was scared to report the incident because of Howell's contacts in the community, according to court records. The informant told Wendell police that "Howell had contacts with all of the police and sheriff departments in the area and they would help him get out of this."

Howell worked with the Jerome County Sheriff's Office three years ago, said Jerome County Sheriff Doug McFall. "He worked for the Jerome County Jail before I took office."

Court records also say that Howell is "ex SWAT, ex EMT, ex LAW ENFORCEMENT" and that he has "lots of knowledge with law enforcement equipment." He is also described as having three gunshot wounds on his body.

Howell claims to own $7,000 worth of guns, according to court records.

A preliminary hearing is set for Oct. 1 in Gooding.

can prove deadly if mistakes are made.

Before climbing up, the students as a group went through a checklist of what's needed: a clean work area, leather gloves, helmets, and a first aid kit.

Fred Schillreef, director of training and education with Syntech Safety Solutions in Salt Lake City, showed students how to use the equipment. His company specializes in training for industries that require work to be done off the ground.

"We're teaching them how to think," he said. "There's a reason behind what we do."

For the students, the new wind energy program is one that they hope will open doors. Albert Renner of Bellevue decided to enroll in the program after being laid off from his carpentry job.

After climbing up the ladder — complete with a safety cable to catch him if he falls — Renner said the equipment "makes it just feel secure and safe."

"It's very safety oriented, which is important," Renner said.

"That's a pretty broad definition that could go all the way down to driven on a highway, taken a bus, been in an airport, flown on an airplane," Coleman said. "It could mean that (in) the business setting that they had to deal with transportation issues whether it's licensing, making sure the products get to market, coordinating the transportation system within the corporation. I mean, transportation is a part of every business and every governmental agency."

Yet a former director believes a background in transportation issues should not be overlooked. Dwight Bower, who served in the role for a decade before retiring in 2002, was deputy transportation director in Colorado before coming to Idaho.

"Obviously I'm a little biased because my entire life was spent in transportation. I would think that that would be a plus, if the background was in transportation, or at least they had some experience in it," Bower said.

Just last week, authorities in Blaine County found a small marijuana growing site north of Ketchum.

The Blaine County Narcotics Enforcement Team, Sun Valley Police Department and Ketchum Police Department executed a search warrant at 400 Mesquite Lane, where they found three living marijuana plants and numerous others that were being dried, as well as lighting equipment and fertilizer.

When they contacted the renter, 64-year-old Daniel Collins, he began to complain of chest pains and was treated and released from a local hospital. According to online court records Wednesday, Collins has not been charged in connection to that marijuana.

Minidoka teen disappointed by molester's probation sentence

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

A 16-year-old girl said Wednesday that the man who molested her last year in Minidoka County should have been sent to prison.

Instead, Charles Bailey got 10 years of supervised probation after pleading guilty to a count of lewd and lascivious conduct with a minor. Judge John Melanson in Minidoka County on Monday sentenced Bailey to a lifetime of incarceration with prison suspended and probation ordered, according to online court records.

The minor, now 16, was 15 at the time that Bailey molested her, she said. Bailey, 62, was her family's friend of six years and told her that he knew it was wrong. She asked the Times-News to not identify her, citing privacy issues.

"He was a family friend, my mom met him through (Alcoholics Anonymous)," Bailey's teen victim said on Wednesday. "At first I couldn't sleep and was so depressed."

She is concerned that

Bailey got too light a sentence, given his past conviction for lewd conduct with a minor in the 1980s.

"I think he should have gone to prison," said Bailey's victim, adding that she is pleased that Bailey faces prison time if he violates his probation. "I don't think he'll be able to go that long before doing something stupid."

According to the Idaho Department of Correction, Bailey was given three years of probation for lewd and lascivious conduct against a minor in July of 1984 in Twin Falls County. He completed that probation in 1987. In 1996, though, Bailey was put back on probation for five years for aggravated assault in Minidoka County, which he completed in 2001, said IDOC Spokesman Jeff Ray.

Bailey had originally been charged with two counts of criminal solicitation and two counts of lewd conduct with a minor in his most recent Minidoka County case. All but one count of lewd conduct was dropped with Bailey's guilty plea, online court records show.

Law & Disorder...

... in Cassia County

From Sept. 11 police reports:

Larceny:

A Jack in the Box employee, 37, was cited for theft after allegedly stealing two DVDs from Walmart in Burley. According to the report, the store's loss-prevention officer watched him conceal the movies in his "shoulder bag." After leaving, the man was reportedly told to come back inside the store but refused, instead calling someone on his cell phone. He allegedly handed his bag to Walmart employees and said it contained only a "personal companion" type ferret.

The woman he called reportedly took the bag, along with the suspect, and drove off in her Chevy Tahoe.

The Rupert Police Department found the Tahoe at the suspect's address. He was questioned by Cassia County Deputy Bret Wood.

According to the report, the man "did have a shoulder bag containing a personal companion type ferret" and denied stealing the movies.

He said that he agreed to go back into the store but that the Walmart employees, the report reads, "went buzz-irk (sic) when he gave (name withheld) his shoulder bag."

Both the man and the woman that he called were cited for trespassing, in addition to the man's theft charge. Wood's report ends with "Case closed by citation given!"

Jerome schools seek to improve math performance on standardized tests

By John Plestina
Times-News writer

JEROME — Nearly one-third of Jerome Middle School students are struggling with arithmetic as the city's schools work to meet federal mandates.

"The area that we need improvement in is math," said Jerome Middle School Principal Janet Avery.

She presented a report to the district's school board on Annual Yearly Progress as mandated by the federal No Child Left Behind Act.

The district has struggled with AYP compliance. Horizon and Jefferson elementary schools, both K-3 schools, made AYP last year but did not the previous year. Therefore, they must make AYP this year to improve their academic standing. Jerome High School also needs to make AYP.

The middle school and Summit Elementary School are in compliance.

Avery talked specifically about the middle school. While 83.4 percent of the school's students hit the NCLB reading target, math hit 67.46 percent, well below the 75 percent AYP target.

All subgroups except Caucasian students, who scored an average of 75.51 percent, failed to meet the AYP target. Hispanic students averaged 56.19 percent and students with known disabilities came in at 23.94 percent.

Avery presented an improvement plan, which includes the use of math labs, a school-wide literacy plan and literacy labs to improve reading scores.

In other business, the board voted unanimously Tuesday to contribute $480 toward the Jerome High School FFA trip to Indianapolis in October to represent Idaho at the National FFA Convention. The $480 contribution will cover the cost of meals for the four students and teacher Tom Clifton based on a calculation of 12 meals at $8 per meal.

JHS senior Amanda Wensveen told the board that the Jerome Dairy Foods Team won a recent state competition and will represent Idaho in Indianapolis.

"We've been working on raising funds to get to the nationals. We estimate that we will need $4,000," she said.

Wensveen said a dairy association and local dairy product producers have made contributions and the students worked at the Joe Mama's Car Show, but JHS FFA needs additional funds to reach the $4,000 goal.

In addition to Wensveen, students Shelby Allen, Katelyn Clifton and Cade Nelsen will represent Jerome at the national convention.

Twin Falls day care under investigation by state

Times-News

A Twin Falls day care is under investigation following a complaint filed with the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare. Keri's Kids, at 688 Washington St. N., had a complaint filed against it on Tuesday, said Tom Shanahan, spokesman with the state agency.

Shanahan said the agency could not disclose the nature of the complaint, citing the ongoing investigation. But no action has been taken against the day care's license, he said. Carrie Costa, the owner of the daycare, said she hasn't heard from health and welfare. But she did say there was an incident in which a couple of children pushed over a baby gate in a doorway and went outside to a neighbor. Costa said she's in the process of working out a solution with city building and fire code officials and looking at her floor plan. Shanahan said he could not say how long the investigation will take because they vary depending on the circumstances.

Third H1N1 case confirmed in Jerome school district

By John Plestina
Times-News writer

JEROME — Whether or not the culprit is a rhinovirus with a sharpened horn or something more serious, a recent spike in student absences from Jerome schools prompted Superintendent Dale Layne to inform the school board Tuesday that the number of students confirmed to have the H1N1 virus had increased to three. Layne also informed the board that he met with officials of the South Central Public Health District earlier Tuesday and requested that the health district urge physicians to test more patients with flu-like symptoms for the H1N1 virus because, he said, the number of infected students could be higher than three. It is not known how many of the 88 Jerome Middle School students — about 12 percent of the school's student body — absent on Tuesday were ill or missing school for other reasons.

WATCH a video interview with Superintendent Dale Layne.

Laboratory tests confirmed last week that two absent middle school students have the H1N1 virus, Layne said. He told the board that a third swine flu case was confirmed with a student from Jefferson Elementary School. Layne said absences at the three elementary schools — Horizon, Jefferson and Summit — were between 8 and 9 percent Tuesday. The district also reported that 177 Jerome High School students, or 19 percent, missed school Tuesday, the highest percentage so far this school year. "I'm in constant contact with the health district as far as recommendations they might have," Layne said. "I'm sending our daily attendance to them so they could monitor the numbers." There are no immediate plans to close schools. Layne said his concerns over a possible school closure include that some students and parents might not heed warnings to stay home, and that some younger students might go unsupervised.

TFHS Homecoming Parade held today

Times-News

The annual Twin Falls High School Homecoming Parade will be held at 4 p.m. today, along Main Avenue North in downtown Twin Falls. The parade will stage in the 500 block of Main and proceed east to its termination at the intersection of Main and Murtaugh Street East. The parade route will be closed to traffic from 3:30 to 5 p.m. The intersection of Main and Shoshone Street will be closed, so motorists are encouraged to use Washington Street or Blue Lakes Boulevard to navigate around the parade route. Twin Falls Police will help control traffic along the parade route. Parents are asked to watch their children closely at the parade, and participants have been told not to throw candy from floats to prevent injury related to children entering the parade route. Parade attendees are asked to park two to four blocks from the parade to avoid congestion, and avoid blocking driveways to homes and businesses.

IRS, ACORN sever ties over video scandal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The IRS announced Wednesday it was severing ties with ACORN, joining a growing list of government agencies to end relationships with the community activist group. The Internal Revenue Service said it would no longer include ACORN in its volunteer tax assistance program. The program offered tax advice to about 3 million low- and moderate-income tax filers this spring. ACORN provided help on about 25,000 returns, the IRS said. ACORN, meanwhile, said it had already suspended its tax program, raising questions about who broke up with whom. "We had already made that decision to not deliver those services," ACORN chief executive Bertha Lewis said. ACORN officials provided reporters with a letter to the IRS, dated Monday, saying the group was suspending all tax services for 2009. IRS spokesman Terry Lemons had a different take: "We announced last week we were conducting a thorough review and today we terminated the relationship. We stand by our statement that we terminated the relationship." ACORN, which is short for the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now, has long been a target of conservative activists. A hidden-camera video surfaced earlier this month showing ACORN employees in Brooklyn, N.Y., advising a couple posing as a prostitute and pimp to lie to get housing aid. The video shows employees in other cities counseling the pair on tax, banking and immigration issues.

Human rights activist finds noose on porch

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — The education director of a Human Rights Education Institute in Idaho said someone left a noose on the porch of her home in an apparent threat against the black family.

Rachel Dolezal said she found the noose Sunday morning just outside her front door in Spokane, Wash.

"I spent a lot of time in Mississippi, so when I saw that rope, I knew what it was," Dolezal told the Coeur d'Alene Press in a story published Wednesday. "You have to learn and practice how to tie a noose. It's a very intentional thing."

Dolezal reported the noose to the Spokane Police Department the following day. Department spokeswoman Jennifer DeRuwe said a detective was assigned to the case, and it was being investigated as a hate crime or malicious harassment.

It was the latest in a series of unsettling events for Dolezal and her family. Last week, her home was broken into and $13,000 worth of personal belongings — including two guns — were taken.

Police are investigating the burglary as well. Dolezal and DeRuwe said there was no evidence yet linking the two crimes.

Idaho has long struggled to overcome a reputation as a haven for racists and white separatists. The small town of Hayden in northern Idaho was for 30 years an outpost of the white separatist group Aryan Nations.

Residents largely rejected the group, and a $6.3 million civil judgment against it in 2000 over a violent attack forced the group's leader, Richard Butler, to liquidate the compound.

The Human Rights Education Institute is located in Coeur d'Alene, where residents have reported racist leaflets being strewn across their yards for several months this year.

Earlier this year, Dolezal said, several white supremacists confronted her while she was working at the institute.

"They asked me if I am biracial, then asked where I live and where my son goes to school," she said.

Dolezal found it disconcerting but gave them a tour of the building's exhibits and invited them to future events.

Stimulus money for wildfires going to Washington, D.C., parks

By Matthew Daly
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Nearly $3 million in stimulus money targeted for fighting wildfires is being spent to restore public parks and watersheds in the nation's capital, which has no national forests.

The Forest Service has directed that $2.8 million in "Wildland Fire Management" funds, approved under the economic stimulus law, go to groups that will create "green jobs" in the District of Columbia. The projects are intended to restore public parks and watersheds in the city and highlight the value of urban parks, including a park 2 miles north of the White House that once was plagued by crime.

The spending angered a group of Western lawmakers, who noted that the District of Columbia has no national forests and that forests throughout the West continue to burn. A huge wildfire in Southern California blackened nearly 250 square miles of the Angeles National Forest and resulted in the deaths of two firefighters whose truck plunged off a mountain road.

"The last major fire in D.C. was likely lit by British troops in 1814," said Sen. John Barrasso, R-Wyo., who is leading Western lawmakers' effort to strip the city of the money. "There are many wasteful and wild schemes born in Washington, but this takes the cake."

Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, called it unreasonable that federal firefighting money is going to areas where there are no forest fires.

A spokesman for the Agriculture Department, which oversees the Forest Service, said the lawmakers' anger is misplaced. While the stimulus law targets "Wildland Fire Management," the term encompasses a broad range of activities, including forest health protection and rehabilitation and activities on state and private lands, said spokesman Caleb Weaver.

"Wildland fire management is not just for fighting fires," Weaver said, noting that the stimulus law allocates $500 million for that broad category. Half the money is to be used for wildfire prevention on federal lands through activities such as clearing underbrush and other hazardous fuels. The other half is for similar work on state and private lands, as well as for projects to improve forest health and ecosystems, Weaver said.

Steve Coleman, director of Washington Parks & People, a D.C.-based nonprofit that will receive nearly $2.7 million under the program, called the criticism unfair.

"This grant is seeking to improve forest health in the region," Coleman said. "The condition of forests in the city is directly related to crime."

Washington Parks & People began nearly two decades ago at Meridian Hill Park in Washington, also known as Malcolm X Park, and helped transform it from the most violent in the city to one of the safest, Coleman said. The group received an award from the National Park Service for its work.

What good are tax incentives that don't work?

Idaho is open for business. Trouble is, nobody's knocking on the front door at the moment. Fact is, when the state's economy is at the bottom of a well as it is now, the state's industry-friendly tax code — which Idaho's conservative legislators spent so much time rewriting in the past several years to benefit the friends of the Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry — makes it harder to keep state government functioning.

Our view:
 An unbalanced tax code is a problem when businesses aren't investing.

What do you think?
 We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Much harder. Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter has ordered a mid-year budget cut, which means that many state employees — and educators — stand to lose their jobs.

The governor needs $159 million to make the budgetary pot right. He'd already have most of it except for all those tax incentives the state gave away recently, to the likes of Micron Technology and Albertsons.

How'd that work out for Idaho, anyway?

Three years ago, the Legislature — at the behest of then-Gov. Jim Risch — raised the sales tax to offset property tax reductions for public school maintenance and operations.

Over the past 10 years, total revenue from taxes paid primarily by individuals, the sales tax, individual income tax and taxes on owner-occupied homes, is up $1.5 billion, 105 percent, according to Ken Robison, a Boise Democrat who served 17 years on the Legislature's Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee. Revenue from taxes paid primarily by business, corporate income tax and commercial property taxes, is up $131 million, 28 percent.

Do the math: Any significant business tax cut means lost revenue will have to come from other taxpayers.

But wait, there's more to come: Once Idaho's feeble economy has recovered sufficiently to raise its head off the pillow, businesses will be lining up to collect a multi-million-dollar personal property tax break. Lawmakers nearly two years ago installed a 5 percent "trigger" on phasing out a portion of the business tax.

That will allow Idaho businesses to exempt the first $100,000 worth of computers, forklifts and office equipment, will eliminate personal property tax payments for about 60,000 Idaho businesses and reduce them for the rest of the state's companies.

What's curious about this is that very few across Idaho's political spectrum — including the tax hawks on the House Revenue and Taxation Committee — dispute that the state's prosperity for four decades before 2008 can be directly traced to the enactment of a balanced tax code in 1965, supported by sales taxes, property taxes and income taxes.

It's not so balanced any more, thanks to the Legislature. Which is a big reason why the budget hole in which Idaho finds itself is so deep.

Reform? Wall Street don't want no stinking reform

In the grim period that followed Lehman's failure, it seemed inconceivable that bankers would, just a few months later, be going right back to the practices that brought the world's financial system to the edge of collapse. At the very least, one might have thought, they would show some restraint for fear of creating a public backlash.

Paul Krugman

But now that we've stepped back a few paces from the brink — thanks, let's not forget, to immense, taxpayer-financed rescue packages — the financial sector is rapidly returning to business as usual. Even as the rest of the nation continues to suffer from rising unemployment and severe hardship, Wall Street paychecks are heading back to pre-crisis levels. And the industry is deploying its political clout to block even the most minimal reforms.

The good news is that senior officials in the Obama administration and at the Federal Reserve seem to be losing patience with the industry's selfishness. The bad news is that it's not clear whether President Obama is ready, even now, to take on the bankers.

Credit where credit is due: I was delighted when Lawrence Summers, the administration's ranking economist, lashed out at the campaign the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, in cooperation with financial-industry lobbyists, is running against the proposed creation of an agency to protect consumers against financial abuses, such as loans whose terms they don't understand. The chamber's ads, declared Summers, are "the financial-regulatory equivalent of the death-panel ads that are being run with respect to health care."

Yet protecting consumers from financial abuse should be only the beginning of reform. If we really want to stop Wall Street from creating another bubble, followed by another bust, we need to change the industry's incentives — which means changing the way bankers are paid.

What's wrong with financial-industry compensation? In a nutshell, bank executives are rewarded if they deliver big short-term profits — but aren't punished if they later suffer even bigger losses. This encourages excessive risk-taking: Some of the men most responsible for the current crisis walked away immensely rich from the bonuses they earned in the good years, even though the high-risk strategies that led to those bonuses eventually decimated their companies.

The Federal Reserve, awakened from its Greenspan-era slumber, understands this problem — and proposes doing something about it. According to recent reports, the Fed's board is considering imposing new rules on financial-firm compensation, requiring that banks "claw back" bonuses in the face of losses and link pay to long-term performance. The Fed argues it has the authority to do this as part of its general mandate to oversee banks' soundness.

But the industry will fight against these changes. And while the administration will support some kind of compensation reform, it's not clear whether it will fully support the Fed's efforts.

I was startled last week when Obama questioned the case for limiting financial-sector pay: "Why is it," he asked, "that we're going to cap executive compensation for Wall Street bankers but not Silicon Valley entrepreneurs or NFL football players?"

That's an astonishing remark — and not just because the National Football League does, in fact, have pay caps. Tech firms don't crash the whole world's operating system when they go bankrupt; quarterbacks who make too many risky passes don't have to be rescued with hundred-billion-dollar bailouts. Banking is a special case — and the president is surely smart enough to know that. All I can think is that this was another example of something we've seen before: Obama's visceral reluctance to engage in anything that resembles populist rhetoric. And that's something he needs to get over.

It's not just that taking a populist stance on bankers' pay is good politics — although it is: The administration has suffered more than it seems to realize from the perception that it's giving taxpayers' hard-earned money away to Wall Street, and it should welcome the chance to portray the GOP as the party of obscene bonuses.

Equally important, in this case populism is good economics. Indeed, you can make the case that reforming bankers' compensation is the single best thing we can do to prevent another financial crisis a few years down the road.

It's time for the president to realize that sometimes populism, especially populism that makes bankers angry, is exactly what the economy needs.

'Solutions' from Perot deal raise more questions at Dell

Michael Dell, facing a question of solutions, found a solution that raises questions.

For years, his namesake company has tried to move beyond personal computers with little success. The big money these days is in computer services, known in geek speak as "information technology solutions."

Last year, Dell rival Hewlett-Packard bought Electronic Data Systems of Plano, Texas, for $13.2 billion, giving it a foothold in services and a powerful weapon against IBM, which dominates the market.

On Monday, Dell also went shopping in Plano for a solution, announcing plans to buy Perot Systems for $3.9 billion in what appears a half-hearted attempt to keep pace with a rival that's rapidly leaving Dell in the dust.

The first question raised by the deal: Can the struggling second acts of two Texas billionaires combine to find success?

Michael Dell, after all, returned to lead his company after a series of missteps from which it has yet to recover. Its second-quarter profit fell 23 percent on slumping PC sales. Perot Systems was founded by Dallas billionaire and erstwhile presidential candidate Ross Perot, yet never came close to matching Perot's previous startup success, EDS.

PC makers like Dell and HP have been trying to get into services for years because it's more profitable than peddling boxes. Unlike PCs, which have to be replaced far less frequently than they once did, services represent a steady revenue stream. Customers typically hire a company to manage Web sites, data centers, software, networks and other tech-related functions under long-term contracts.

In landing EDS, HP got a global company with expertise running systems in dozens of industries, from energy to retail.

Dell is buying something far different. Almost half of Perot Systems' revenue comes from the health care industry, mostly in North America. Dell gets neither the global reach nor the industry breadth. Perot Systems, like Dell, has faced slowing sales, though its executives have said they expect to get a boost as health care reform drives demand for electronic medical records. So, the question for Dell's shareholders is: Did you buy a tech company to invest in health care?

That's not necessarily bad, said Tim Ghriskey, the chief investment officer for Solaris Asset Management, who's followed Dell for years but doesn't currently own it.

"Health care's not going to be a shrinking business it's revenue, it's market share, it's a place to put their equipment," he said.

HP may have found a way to succeed at the services game, but Dell's strategy of following others into new markets which served it well in hardware doesn't apply in services, where customer loyalty hinges on personal contact rather than a brand name.

While Ghriskey agrees the deal's expensive and a bit of a head-scratcher, he also said it could pay off later. Dell said it will add to earnings in about two years.

But don't expect the acquisition to restore Dell to its glory days.

Michael Dell is opting for a me-too deal that brings the company far more questions than solutions.

Twin Falls Republican Rep. Stephen Hartgen is concerned about the kind of discourse taking place in some places on the World Wide Web. He's so concerned about it he has been trying to get the Idaho Legislature to do something.

Hartgen

Just before this year's session, Hartgen floated the idea of requiring Idaho bloggers and people who post online comments to use their real names. Right now, most Internet sites allow people to identify themselves however they choose when posting comments.

His idea was roundly criticized and, rightfully so, didn't get very far. In addition to being a bad idea, it would have been a legal nightmare to enforce.

Now Hartgen, a former newspaper publisher, is proposing another piece of legislation. This time he says he will push for a bill that would target cyber-bullies by outlawing and setting penalties for Internet harassment.

Hartgen is basing his idea on a law in Missouri that was enacted last year after the highly-publicized case of Megan Meier, a teenager who was teased on a social networking Web site. In that case, Meier's former friend, that friend's mother and an employee of hers conspired to create a fake online "boyfriend" for Meier, who was nice at first and then turned mean. Meier was so distraught that she hanged herself.

Missouri amended its laws against harassment to reflect today's technology, removing the requirement that the harassing communication had to be written or over the telephone. That was a simple, reasonable way to deal with the issue.

Hartgen's first proposal fell flat this past winter because House Judiciary Committee members had doubts it could be melded into the state's telephone statute, which was written decades ago. So Missouri's simple solution apparently wouldn't work here, and to rectify that, Hartgen now proposes a whole new section of law ...

The general concept is a good one. But there are some questions that should be asked about the specifics.

If Idaho's telephone statute is so antiquated, might it not be a better idea to revamp it to include cyber-bullying rather than create a whole new set of laws? Why not update and simplify, rather than create more and more bureaucracy that could be easily consolidated? ...

... no unlimited charter schools

Idaho Statesman, Boise

In the midst of a recession, all Idaho public schools ... are weathering unprecedented budget cuts.

So this is about the worst imaginable time to intensify the budget pressure by spreading scarce tax dollars into more unproven startup schools.

Yet state schools Superintendent Tom Luna wants to toss aside a statewide cap on charter schools.

Currently, no more than six new charter schools can open per year. Luna is working on a bill for the 2010 legislative session which would get rid of the cap.

Luna has some good reasons for wanting to OK more charter schools:

• Even with six schools ready to open in 2010, 15 to 20 charter applications are waiting in the pipeline. Luna says an innovative charter school might have to wait a few years to open.

• Luna wants to encourage what he calls the second generation of charter schools — niche schools that could serve students with a specific disability or need. He'd also like to encourage charter schools in small towns; half of Idaho's 36 charter schools are headquartered in Ada or Canyon counties.

• Luna wants the state to compete for its share of $5 billion in education grants from the federal government's Race to the Top program, and says the Obama administration has indicated it will penalize states with a charter school cap ...

Our biggest problem with Luna's charter school proposal ... has to do with the strain on Idaho's schools budget, and the startup nature of any new charter.

For the first time in state history, Idaho is spending less on K-12 than it did the preceding year, a 7.7 percent budget cut. Since public school dollars follow the kids ... Luna downplays the risk of expanding charter schools during the recession ...

But since this is a process of educational entrepreneurship — bankrolled by the taxpayers — let's give the taxpayers the best chance of getting a good return. A cap maximizes the odds that the state will put its limited dollars into new schools that have a strong business plan and a curriculum that fills an unmet need. That makes a lot of sense, especially when times are tough.

... cutting their own pay

Post Register, Idaho Falls

Cheers to Idaho's 134 judges, who earlier this year, and with very little fanfare, voluntarily took a two-day pay cut.

Understand that they didn't have to do this. Judges' salaries are set in statute. Unlike a Department of Health and Welfare employee, for example, a judge cannot have his or her pay arbitrarily cut. It takes a legislative act.

Every judge in the state — 42 District Court judges, 83 magistrates, five Supreme Court and four appeals court justices — signed on.

The cut works out to about $820 per year for magistrates, $862 for district judges and slightly more for the appeals court and Supreme Court justices. That works out to about $105,000 in savings.

And this isn't a furlough, which is essentially an unpaid vacation. Taking that route would have backlogged court calendars, something the judges were loath to do. Instead, they decided to work two days this year for free.

Sacrifice is common during a recession. Often that sacrifice is forced. It's gratifying that Idaho's judges recognized the gravity of the state's financial situation and with no outside prodding decided to do something about it. It's an excellent example and something to keep in mind as Idaho encounters excruciating financial decisions in coming months.

Give ACORN a defense contract

Congress sank to steamy levels of hypocrisy in defunding ACORN, the community-organizing group that we have been carefully taught to vilify. A body that has never been able to condemn torture was able, in the end, to condemn what it saw on a made-for-propaganda video.

This is not to say that ACORN should not lose its federal ATM card. The Catholic bishops' Campaign for Human Development cut off the national organization 15 months ago, and had good reasons, relating to weak management, transparency and fiscal accountability.

Unlike Congress, however, the bishops didn't make the decision hypocritically. They were not responding to a Fox News ploy for ratings; they were on ACORN's case while a Republican administration was signing contracts with it. Unlike Congress, the bishops investigated before they acted. And they offered ACORN help in correcting abuses before they pulled the plug, again unlike Congress.

That last contrast is what brings in my gusher. When a defense contractor gets in trouble with Congress, the Pentagon has 15 assorted active and retired generals and colonels at the contractor's offices first thing the next morning to help him get back in good congressional graces. If an agency for poor folks gets in trouble, it receives a form letter and a phone call from an overworked bureaucrat.

Because let's be straight about what ACORN and its government contracts are really all about. This is all about getting some sort of government subsidy to the poor to show off beside the government subsidies that go to Halliburton, Blackwater and Chrysler.

Fifty years ago, when the military-industrial complex became too big to ignore, sociological research was available showing that poor people can manage their lives at least as well as do-gooders telling them what to do. With some members acting from sociological or moral motives and others smelling pork, Congress began to subsidize community organizations under the banner of the war on poverty.

It never involved big money. Defense contractors wouldn't wash their hands to grab what the likes of ACORN get. Still it wasn't long before reactionaries went to work. The first part to be whittled away was money for law firms that serve poor folks. "Let the poor pay for legal services the way corporations do" was the attitude. But what does that really imply? Banks are using federal bailout money, for instance, to pay lawyers to lobby against stricter federal accounting rules.

When ACORN, which began as a housing advocacy group, got into voter registration, its doom was as good as sealed. It could not afford to screw up. One of our major parties opposes voter registration.

The last straw — or so ACORN's enemies pretend — was a video showing a hooker and her pimp (played by amateur actors) getting housing advice from ACORN functionaries. For the sins of the functionaries, Congress pulled the plug.

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., just called for an investigation of the death of the 19th American soldier or contractor in Iraq to be electrocuted while taking a shower in a building put up by one of the no-bid contractors who cashed in on the Iraq war. Investigations of faulty wiring have been going on since 2004.

Maybe Sen. Reid can find a cause for action if someone stages a video showing how easy it is to get killed while cooling off in a hot country.

Said a minority leader in the other chamber, Rep. Eric Cantor, R-Va., "Today the House voted to ensure that taxpayer dollars would no longer be used to fund this corrupt organization." Rep. Cantor was talking about a bunch of poor people, not a corporation that electrocutes GIs with sloppy construction. But you could have guessed that.

"Across America there are people who are hanging on by a thin economic lifeline called unemployment insurance. Without passage of this bill, that thread will break for over 1 million workers before the end of this year, plunging them and their families into an economic abyss and threatening to reverse the positive signs we are beginning to see in the economy."

Census worker found hanged with 'fed' scrawled on chest

By Devlin Barrett and Jeffrey McMurray
Associated Press writers

MANCHESTER, Ky. — A U.S. Census worker found hanged from a tree near a Kentucky cemetery had the word "fed" scrawled on his chest, a law enforcement official said Wednesday, and the FBI is investigating whether he was a victim of anti-government sentiment.

Bill Sparkman, a 51-year-old part-time Census field worker and teacher, was found Sept. 12 in a remote patch of the Daniel Boone National Forest in rural southeast Kentucky. The law enforcement official, who was not authorized to discuss the case and requested anonymity, did not say what type of instrument was used to write "fed" on his chest.

The Census Bureau has suspended door-to-door interviews in rural Clay County, where the body was found, pending the outcome of the investigation. An autopsy report is pending.

Investigators have said little about the case. FBI spokesman David Beyer said the bureau is assisting state police and declined to confirm or discuss any details about the crime scene.

"Our job is to determine if there was foul play involved — and that's part of the investigation — and if there was foul play involved, whether that is related to his employment as a Census worker," said Beyer.

Attacking a federal worker during or because of his federal job is a federal crime.

Sparkman's mother, Henrie Sparkman of Inverness, Fla., told The Associated Press her son was an Eagle scout who moved to the area to be a local director for the Boy Scouts of America. She said he later became a substitute teacher in Laurel County and supplemented that income as a Census worker.

She said investigators have given her few details about her son's death — they told her the body was decomposed — and haven't yet released his body for burial. "I was told it would be better for him to be cremated," she said.

Henrie Sparkman said her son's death is a mystery to her.

"I have my own ideas, but I can't say them out loud.

Bill Sparkman speaks to a seventh grade class in 2008. A law enforcement official says Sparkman, who was a U.S. Census worker as well as a substitute teacher, was found hanged from a tree near a Kentucky cemetery with the word 'fed' scrawled on his chest.

Not at this point," she said. "Right now, what I'm doing, I'm just waiting on the FBI to come to some conclusion."

Gilbert Acciaro, a retired Kentucky state trooper who directs an after-school program at the elementary school where Sparkman was a frequent substitute teacher, said he had warned Sparkman to be careful when he did his Census work.

"I told him on more than one occasion, based on my years in the state police, 'Mr. Sparkman, when you go into those counties, be careful because people are going to perceive you different than they do elsewhere,'" Acciaro said.

"Even though he was with the Census Bureau, sometimes people can view someone with any government agency as 'the government.' I just was afraid that he might meet the wrong character along the way up there," Acciaro said.

Acciaro said he became suspicious when Sparkman didn't show up for work at the after-school program for two days and went to police. Authorities immediately initiated an investigation, he said.

"He was such an innocent person," Acciaro said. "I hate to say that he was naive, but he saw the world as all good, and there's a lot of bad in the world."

Lucindia Scurry-Johnson, assistant director of the Census Bureau's southern office in Charlotte, N.C., said law enforcement officers have told the agency the matter is "an apparent homicide" but nothing else.

Census employees were told Sparkman's truck was found nearby, and a computer he was using for work was found inside it, she said. He worked part-time for the Census, usually conducting interviews once or twice a month.

Sparkman has worked for the Census since 2003, spanning five counties in the surrounding area. Much of his recent work had been in Clay County, officials said.

Door-to-door operations have been suspended in Clay County pending a resolution of the investigation, Scurry-Johnson said.

The Census Bureau has yet to begin door-to-door canvassing for the 2010 head count, but it has thousands of field workers doing smaller surveys on various demographic topics on behalf of federal agencies. Next year, the Census Bureau will dispatch up to 1.2 million temporary employees to locate hard-to-find residents.

The Census Bureau is overseen by the Commerce Department.

"We are deeply saddened by the loss of our co-worker," Commerce Secretary Gary Locke said in a statement. "Our thoughts and prayers are with William Sparkman's son, other family and friends."

Locke called him "a shining example of the hardworking men and women employed by the Census Bureau."

Appalachia scholar Roy Silver, a New York City native now living in Harlan County, Ky., said he doesn't sense an outpouring of anti-government sentiment in the region as has been exhibited in town hall meetings in other parts of the country.

"I don't think distrust of government is any more or less here than anywhere else in the country," said Silver, a sociology professor at Southeast Community College.

The most deadly attack on federal workers came in 1995 when the federal building in Oklahoma City was devastated by a truck bomb, killing 168 and injuring more than 680. Timothy McVeigh, who was executed for the bombing, carried literature by modern, ultra-right-wing anti-government authors.

Public comment sought on hot cell removal project at the Idaho Site's Advanced Test Reactor Complex

The U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) is seeking public comment on a project to remove three unused hot cells and the 1950s era laboratory building that contains them at the Idaho Site's Advanced Test Reactor complex. An Engineering Evaluation/Cost Analysis (EE/CA) document with three proposed alternatives for the final end state of the building and hot cells is under evaluation by DOE, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, and Idaho's Department of Environmental Quality.

The TRA-632 building and the hot cells were built in 1952 for assembly, disassembly and examination of nuclear test reactor components. The 13,000 sq. foot building contains three shielded hot cells with lathes, power saws, grinders, and other remote handling equipment. In addition to the examination of test reactor components, the hot cells have been used during the production of radioisotopes for medical use like cobalt-60 and iridium-192. The last active work in the hot cells took place in 2004, and the aging facility was placed on standby in 2006.

The EE/CA document evaluates three alternatives for disposition of the TRA-632 hot cells. The piping below the TRA-632 floor slab will be addressed in accordance with other environmental documents. If contaminated soils are encountered below TRA-632 after removal of the floor slab, those soils will also be addressed in a future environmental document. The three alternatives are:

1. No Action. The no action alternative assumes no decommissioning or demolition would be conducted on the building or hot cells and there would be no further surveillance or maintenance.

The no action alternative offers no reduction in toxicity, mobility, or volume of contaminants, and is only used as a baseline for comparison.

2. Continued Surveillance and Maintenance. Under this alternative, the building and hot cells would be left in place, under continuing surveillance and maintenance. This alternative also offers no reduction in toxicity or volume of contaminants, and only limited protection from mobilization of the contaminants to the environment above that provided by Alternative 1.

3. Removal of the TRA-632 hot cells (Recommended Alternative): Under this alternative, the building and the three hot cells would be removed whole or in sections to the lined Idaho CERCLA Disposal Facility. Under Alternative 3, all above-grade (above the floor slab) hazardous substances will be removed.

The removal action EE/CA for the TRA-632 Hot Cells is available on the Idaho Cleanup Project homepage at: https://idahocleanupproject.com/Portals/0/documents/TRA-632_HotCells_EE-CA_DOE-ID-11397.pdf

The EE/CA has also been posted to the Idaho National Laboratory (INL) Administrative Record website, and is available for public comment through October 20, 2009. The INL Administrative Record can be found on the Internet at <http://ar.inel.gov/> and hard copies are available to the public at the following locations:

Independent Meat facing hard times

Lower production and negotiations with labor union keep pork processor open

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

The Independent Meat Company has been pummeled by a severe recession, a worldwide health scare and efforts by foreign markets to block U.S. imports.

But Patrick Florence, president and CEO of the Twin Falls-based pork processing plant, said it's nothing new.

"This business rises and falls depending on which way the wind is blowing," he said. "We'll get through it. We've seen worse."

However, he doesn't discount the hardships facing the nearly 100-year-old business that has been in his family for four generations.

Florence said sales of pork products to foreign markets plummeted in 2009 as key export nations like China ratcheted up trade barriers — citing fears over the H1N1 virus.

The pork industry has argued that China used the virus as an excuse to block imports in the name of protectionism.

"I think this administration is being tested right now because Chinese trade officials are really good negotiators and we have some men and women who are new to the process," Florence said.

According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, nearly a quarter of all pork products produced in the U.S. are exported to foreign markets — generating more than $4.9 billion in revenue for the industry.

And much of that trickled down to south-central Idaho through Independent Meat.

According to the business reporting firm, Dun & Bradstreet, Independent Meat reported annual sales of $43 million in August 2008.

However, Florence said declining sales to foreign markets, which accounted for up to 35 percent of Independent Meat's total sales, are forcing the business to scale back operations.

"We are thinking more conservatively because sales to foreign markets are a lot lower than last year," he said. "We had to do some reductions in the way we operate and renegotiate contracts with our union and suppliers."

Florence said representatives of Independent Meat and United Food and Commercial Workers union reached an agreement in September to change

Fed slows $1.45T program to aid housing market

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — With the U.S. economy on the mend, the Federal Reserve on Wednesday said it is slowing the pace of a program to lower mortgage rates and prop up the housing market.

The Fed decided to stretch out its goal of buying $1.45 trillion in mortgage-backed securities and debt issued by Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and Ginnie Mae until the end of the first quarter of 2010. Originally, the central bank intended to complete buying those securities by the end of this year.

It marked the second time since August that the Fed has opted to slow some of its extraordinary support to revive the economy and spur Americans to boost spending. It shows that the Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke and his colleagues are increasingly confident the recovery will take hold.

To foster the recovery, the Fed also decided to hold the target range for its key bank lending rate at a record low of between zero and 0.25 percent. It again pledged to keep rates there "for an extended period." Economists predict that means through the rest of this year, and perhaps into part of next year.

Holding that bank lending rate steady means commercial banks' prime lending rate — used to peg rates on home equity loans, certain credit cards and other consumer loans — will stay at about 3.25 percent, the lowest in decades.

Low rate holds steady

The Federal Reserve will keep its key interest rate at a record low.

The goal behind leaving rates at super-low levels is to entice people and businesses to step up spending to aid economic growth.

In a more upbeat assessment, the Fed said: "Economic activity has picked up following its severe downturn." When the Fed last met in August, policymakers declared that economic activity was "leveling out."

Even with the pick up in economic activity, Fed policymakers predict inflation will remain "subdued for some time."

Factories are still operating well below capacity, one force that should keep a lid on inflation. Other factors keeping prices in check include the weak job market enabling employers to avoid wage increases, and cautious shoppers making companies wary of raising costs.

Even though the Fed will stretch out its purchases of mortgage securities, rates for home loans should remain low "in the 5 percent range" as long as the purchases continue, said Guy Cecala, publisher of Inside Mortgage Finance.

MCDONALD'S FRIES: The holy grail for potato farmers

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

KIMBERLY — From the fields of Idaho to tasting rooms in suburban Chicago, potato farmers, researchers and industry representatives are in the midst of an elusive hunt: finding a new spud for McDonald's french fries.

A decade has passed since the fast-food giant last added a new U.S. potato variety to three others approved for its golden fries, something that both irks and motivates potato researchers who hope their progeny will be next.

Because McDonald's buys more than 3.4 billion pounds of U.S. potatoes annually, it has the power to dictate whether a variety sprouts or winds up in the less-lucrative supermarket freezer's crinkle-cut bin — or worse yet, banished to become dehydrated taters.

"It's a card game where McDonald's holds nine-tenths of the cards," said Jeanne Debons, the Potato Variety Management Institute's director.

The institute was established in 2005 by the Idaho, Oregon and Washington potato commissions to handle licensing and royalties from new potatoes developed at universities and federal research facilities in the three states.

An unwritten ambition: to get new potato varieties looked at by McDonald's.

The company still relies on the Russet Burbank for many of its fries, even though this 130-year-old variety takes an eternity to mature, gulps water and falls victim to rots and other diseases, meaning farmers must douse it in chemicals. Socially conscious investors want McDonald's to help cut pesticides to protect the environment and farmworker health.

Still, coming up with a spud stud is no mean feat: One of the last varieties

McDonald's tested, the Premier Russet, has a pedigree that on paper resembles the lineage of a thoroughbred race horse, with ancestors like the buff-skinned Penobscot of Maine. The company decided it was an also-ran.

"It has a smaller starch cell," Mitch Smith, McDonald's agricultural products director, recalls of tasters' conclusions about the Premier. "You get a smoother texture, it does affect the way it eats."

Other U.S. potato-growing regions are also on the case. In July, researchers and industry reps meeting in Sturgeon Bay, Wis., home of the U.S. Potato Gene bank, discussed new sustainable varieties — to help "McDonald's to advertise that potatoes they serve are produced with less chemical and water input," said Chuck Brown, of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

To be sure, McDonald's has increased its use of other potato varieties in the last decades.

Early-maturing, Canadian-bred Shepody potatoes go into many of its fries sold in August, September and October. But those potatoes don't University of Idaho research scientist Tina Brandt leans into a pitch fork to unearth a three-month-old Yukon Gold potato plant in the fields at the University of Idaho, Kimberly Research Center outside Kimberly. Here researchers are testing experimental varieties of potatoes in an attempt to build a better potato which requires less water and chemical pesticides in the fields and encounters fewer problems like shrinkage and disease in storage.

Small business angst rises as tax deadline nears

These are anxious times for some small business owners who face an Oct. 15 due date for their 2008 income tax returns. These owners got extensions of the deadline for filing their returns back in April but aren't ready to file. Or, they can't pay the government the money they owe.

Some of them are just disorganized. Others might be having a cash flow crunch.

No matter what the problem is, if you're one of these owners, you must submit your return by the deadline or face big penalties for late filing. And not filing your return will only prolong the agony.

SMALL TALK
Joyce M. Rosenberg

If your issue is disorganization, it's time to rethink not just how you're running your taxes, but your overall business. And maybe more than that.

"My observation of these types of people is that it's not just their business that runs this way, it's their life," said Gordon Spoor, a certified public accountant in St. Petersburg, Fla.

Despite the availability and simplicity of software that helps small businesses keep their books and compile their tax returns, many of these owners have piles of receipts, invoices and statements that they bundle up and take to their CPAs or tax lawyers each year. Tax professionals call these owners "shoebox clients," and many preparers don't want to work with them, especially since they tend to show up right before the filing deadline looking for service.

The solution for these owners is clear: Get help, either from software, or get someone else to help you keep your accounts year-round. There are good, even critical reasons for doing this. Spoor pointed out that a CPA who charges a client $300 an hour for tax prep will also charge $300 an hour to sort through piles of receipts and invoices. That is money badly spent.

Moreover, a disorganized owner often doesn't have a good handle on how the business is doing, and that could be a threat to the company's survival.

General Mills IQ profit jumps on strong demand

By Sarah Skidmore
Associated Press writer

PORTLAND, Ore. — General Mills Inc., the maker of Cheerios and Yoplait yogurt, said Wednesday that its first-quarter profit surged 51 percent on lower ingredient costs and strong demand for its products.

The results, which well exceeded expectations, prompted the food maker to lift its full-year earnings outlook. And shares of the Minneapolis-based company rose $2.58, or more than 4 percent, to $63.55 in midday trading.

The company earned $420.6 million, or $1.25 per share for the quarter, up from $278.5 million, or 79 cents per share, a year ago.

Excluding an expense related to commodity positions, profit was $1.28 per share and easily topped the $1.03-per-share estimate

Russia links Iran sanctions to U.S. change on missiles

By Robert Burns
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — With a diplomatic wink and nod, Russian President Dmitry Medvedev opened the door Wednesday to backing potential sanctions against Iran as a reward to President Obama's decision to scale back a U.S. missile shield in Eastern Europe.

While U.S. and Russian officials denied a flat-out quid pro quo, Medvedev told the U.N. General Assembly that Obama's pivot on a missile defense plan long loathed by Moscow "deserves a positive response." Obama himself has said his missile decision may have spurred Russian good will as a "bonus."

"We believe we need to help Iran to take a right decision," Medvedev said after the two leaders met on the sidelines of the U.N. assembly.

The prospect of a unified U.S.-Russian stance on new sanctions would put Iran under added pressure to yield some ground on its nuclear program.

Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad has taken a softer tone on many matters since arriving in New York for the U.N. meetings, emphasizing his interest in improving relations with the United States and expressing an openness to include nuclear matters on the negotiations agenda.

Day 2 of health-care talks focus on Medicare

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Slogging through a second day of work on legislation intended to overhaul the nation's health-care system, the Senate Finance Committee wrestled Wednesday with politically volatile proposals to squeeze money out of Medicare.

As they continued marking up the bill, a process expected to stretch into next week, Democrats fended off attempts by Republicans to restore proposed reductions to the program, which serves the elderly, and get rid of government restrictions on the ways insurance companies market to seniors.

Although the day-long session was marked by a slow pace and partisan sniping, Finance Committee Chairman Max Baucus, D-Mont., could take comfort in several signs about the bill's prospects.

Early indications suggested that two key swing senators — Blanche Lincoln, D-Ark., and Olympia Snowe, R-Maine — were inclined to back the bill. Additionally, Baucus, who has not always enjoyed broad support in his caucus, held the Democratic bloc together in the face of an energetic assault from GOP senators.

Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., warned that seniors "have reason to be worried that portions of this bill could affect their care," saying legislation that includes hundreds of billions of dollars in Medicare reductions over the next decade is bound to impact the quality of care.

"Nobody is trying to cut seniors," countered Sen. Debbie Stabenow, D-Mich.

Obama to world: Don't expect America to fix it all

By Jennifer Loven
Associated Press writer

UNITED NATIONS — President Obama challenged world leaders Wednesday to shoulder more of the globe's critical burdens, promising a newly cooperative partner in America but sternly warning they can no longer castigate the U.S. as a go-it-alone bully while still demanding it cure all ills.

"Those who used to chastise America for acting alone in the world cannot now stand by and wait for America to solve the world's problems alone," said Obama in put-up-or-shut-up comments before a packed U.N. General Assembly hall. "Now is the time for all of us to take our share of responsibility for a global response to global challenges."

In his first appearance before the group, Obama promised the U.S. would reach out in "a new era of engagement based on mutual interest and mutual respect," but he also wagged a rhetorical finger at leaders who spend much of their time at international gatherings excoriating the U.S. He said "an almost reflexive anti-Americanism" that swept the globe under the administration of his predecessor, George W. Bush, is not "an excuse for collective inaction."

"Nothing is easier than blaming others for our troubles and absolving ourselves of responsibility for our choices and our actions," he said.

And yet, directly following Obama at the podium was Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi, who railed against the U.N. Security Council, which includes the U.S., calling it a "terror council" and accusing it of treating smaller nations as "second class, despised."

included — have come to the United Nations year after year with a wish list of action items and preaching the gospel of working together. The U.S. is rich and powerful, but cannot solve problems without help, they say, whether Democrat or Republican.

So Obama's message was not new.

But it was delivered in an unmistakably new, more humble tone.

Following a president criticized for making my-way-or-the-highway "requests" of allies, Obama didn't demand so much as he chided and cajoled. It's now an inextricably interconnected world, he said, so that each country's problems become the others'.

"In the year 2009 — more than at any point in human history — the interests of nations and peoples are shared," Obama said.

Following a president pilloried for arrogance, Obama talked more modestly about the United States.

To be sure, he listed American contributions. But this was no chest-thumping bragging; instead it was a more lawyerly argument aimed at convincing the jury of Obama's world peers that the U.S. has heard the complaints and, under his leadership, is addressing them. That ranges from banning torture to winding down the Iraq war, working to rid the world of nuclear weapons, aggressively pursuing Mideast peace and bringing new energy to the battle against climate change.

And he delivered the message that America will not behave as if it is better.

"No one nation can or should try to dominate another nation," Obama said. "That is the future America wants — a future of peace and prosperity that we can only reach if we recognize that all nations have rights, but all nations have responsibilities as well."

Ohio couple gets wrong embryo, will give baby to biological mom

By John Seewar
Associated Press writer

TOLEDO, Ohio — Carolyn Savage didn't know what to think, what to say, where to look as the ultrasound wand glided over her belly. It was supposed to be her baby inside. Not someone else's.

Yet here she was in her doctor's office with the baby's biological mother, both brought together by a terrible error at a fertility clinic. A doctor, they said, had given Savage the wrong embryo, and now she was carrying the other woman's child.

"The wand is on my abdomen and the technician's talking to someone else: 'There's your baby's nose. There's your baby's head,'" she said. "It was surreal."

Embryo mix-ups at fertility clinics are extremely rare. In those few instances, they've degenerated into custody battles, ugly lawsuits and at least one abortion. But not this time. Savage and her husband decided that the right thing — the only thing — to do was to give the baby to the biological parents.

"This was someone else's child," she told The Associated Press on Wednesday. "We didn't know who it was. We didn't know if they didn't have children or if this was their last chance for a child."

"We knew if our child was out there, we'd go to the ends of the earth to get our child back," she said.

Savage, 40, is due to give birth to a boy within the next two weeks via cesarean section. When it happens, biological parents Paul and Shannon Morell, of the Detroit suburb of Troy, Mich., will be nearby, waiting to meet their son.

"How do you thank somebody for what they've done?" Shannon Morell said. "I could say thank you a million different ways."

The Savages say the fertility clinic transferred the wrong frozen embryo to Carolyn's womb in early February. Ten days later, Sean Savage got a call from a doctor saying his wife was pregnant with someone else's child.

"By God's grace, there was never a moment where we thought we were going to have another baby of our own," Carolyn Savage said.

The doctor told them they could abort, but the couple didn't consider that a viable option.

"It wasn't even something we had to discuss," said Sean Savage, 39.

The Savages won't reveal the name of the fertility clinic, saying only that it's not in Ohio. They have hired attorneys who say they are working to make sure the clinic will accept full responsibility.

A message was left Wednesday for the Savages' Detroit attorney, Brian McKeen.

The Morells, who live north of Detroit, learned of the mistake a day after the Savages. They were just about to start the process of having another baby with their last embryos when the clinic called.

The two couples knew nothing about each other. Shannon Morell feared that the pregnant woman would choose abortion, ending their chance to give their 2-year-old twin girls a sibling.

"I didn't think she'd want to carry the baby to term," Shannon said. "I felt helpless."

A few days passed before they learned that the Savages were not only willing to continue with the pregnancy, but also to hand over the baby without hesitation.

In the first few weeks, the Savages sent e-mail updates after every doctor's visit. The couples finally met about three months into the pregnancy.

They shook hands, held back tears and began to form a bond. Phone calls followed.

Then in August, Carolyn Savage asked Shannon Morell whether she wanted to be with her for the ultrasound.

Shannon felt funny, too, being in the same room with Carolyn and her husband.

"I felt like the third wheel," she said. "Although I knew that child inside her was mine, it wasn't the same feeling I had with the twins."

After setting sprinklers on the edge of avocado and citrus groves, an unidentified ranch employee drives away from a flareup of the Guiberson wildfire Wednesday near Bardsdale, Calif., about 45 miles northwest of Los Angeles.

Winds, heat stoke S. California wildfire

By Jeff Wilson
 Associated Press writer

MOORPARK, Calif. — Firefighters guarded rural homes, ranches and orchards Wednesday as a wind-driven wildfire grew to more than 25 square miles on a march through rugged land between small Southern California communities.

The fire was stoked by hot and dry Santa Ana winds but firefighters said the windspeeds were lower than on the first day of the blaze.

Containment of the fire, about 40 miles northwest of downtown Los Angeles, also increased to 40 percent, but it was not expected to be fully surrounded until Saturday. Firefighters cut and burned away brush along a canyon road to try to corral part of the fire's western flank.

Fire officials said the blaze began Tuesday in the area of an agricultural mulch pile, but the cause remained under investigation. The Sheriff's Department earlier said it was apparently caused by spontaneous combustion in manure.

Winds and fuels such as grasses and light brush made the fire dangerous, said incident commander Robert Lewin.

"Our firefighters need to be on guard, make sure they're out of harm's way when they're engaged in this fire, and so do the citizens," he said.

About 1,000 homes were considered threatened as the fire burned east and west just north of Moorpark, a city of 37,000. The 15,000-student Moorpark College was closed because of its proximity to the fire.

Reverse 911 calls recommending evacuations were made to 2,200 phones in unincorporated areas, but officials couldn't say how many people actually left.

One of those calls went to the home of school bus driver Maria Kadowaki in Somis, west of Moorpark.

"I wasn't too frightened but my husband freaked out," she said. "He ran outside and started watering the garage in the dark."

They chose not to leave their home, and Wednesday afternoon she and another driver were out checking which roads would be open or closed when they took children home after school.

Two outbuildings were destroyed but no homes had been damaged.

The fire was also threatening agricultural properties, a major concern in a county where the industry was valued at $1.6 billion last year.

"There are very, very valuable avocado groves and other agricultural values out there, and we are doing everything we can to protect those," Lewin said.

Helicopters dumped water on flames moving toward orchards and ground crews put out burning shrubbery at the edges of groves. County fire Capt. Ron Oatman said the fire likely had burned some peripheral trees but agricultural damage had not been confirmed.

Firefighters were also concerned about five major electrical transmission lines, a 36-inch natural gas pipeline and oil production fields within the fire perimeter, he said.

Firefighting costs surpassed $1 million as nearly 900 firefighters, 18 air tankers and 12 helicopters worked the blaze. Four injuries were reported but all were minor.

The blaze was the largest of several fires that erupted in Southern California on Tuesday as the Santa Anas blew in from the northeast, pushing back the normal flow of cool and moist ocean air.

Dust storm shrouds Sydney

By Rohan Sullivan
 Associated Press writer

SYDNEY — Red Outback grit shrouded Australia's largest city Wednesday, blotting out such landmarks as the Sydney Opera House and Harbour Bridge and even reaching underground to coat subway stations. The country's worst dust storm in 70 years diverted planes and produced an eerie orange sky.

The haze was visible from space, appearing as a huge brown smudge in satellite photographs of Australia.

By afternoon, the dust had moved on from Sydney, heading north to the Queensland state capital of Brisbane, where the sky was clogged into the evening.

No one was hurt as a result of the pall that swept in overnight, bringing an eerie orange dawn to Sydney, but ambulance services reported a spike in emergency calls from people with breathing difficulties, and police warned drivers to take it easy on the roads.

The dust clouds formed in Australia's interior — parched by the worst drought on record — when gale force winds snatched up tons of topsoil and threw it high into the sky before carrying it hundreds of miles eastward.

The Sydney Morning Herald called it "the day the country blew into town."

The dust so thoroughly blanketed everything in its path — clothes, cars, train seats — that Queensland promised to lift water restrictions, imposed because of the drought, so residents could clean their homes and vehicles.

A man walks past the Sydney Harbour Bridge during a dust storm Wednesday in Sydney, Australia. Flights were diverted and ferries canceled after a blanket of red dust blew in from central Australia and shrouded most of Sydney.

Suburban rail trains carried the dust into underground stations in Sydney.

"When I got on the train at Cronulla, our seats were covered in this red dust," Robyn Jaques said, referring to a station south of the city. "It's got over all of my clothes."

International flights were diverted from Sydney to other cities and domestic schedules were thrown into chaos as operations at Sydney Airport were curtailed by unsafe visibility levels.

Helicopters carrying water to douse bush fires raging in Queensland were grounded in the afternoon because of poor visibility.

Even after Sydney's skies cleared, severe flight delays persisted because of diverted and late-running planes, according to national carrier Qantas. Passenger ferries on the city's famous harbor were also stopped for several hours for safety reasons.

But forecasters predicted normal conditions would return to Sydney today, and flights were expected to be back on schedule.

Such thick dust is rare over the city, and came with other uncommon weather conditions across the country in recent days. Hailstorms have pummeled parts of the country this week, while other parts have been hit with an early spring mini-heatwave, and wildfires.

"It did feel like Armageddon because when I was in the kitchen looking out the skylight, there was this red glow coming through," Sydney resident Karen told Australian Broadcasting Corp. radio.

The storms are the most severe since the 1940s, experts said. One was recorded traveling from southern Australia all the way to New Zealand some 1,400 miles away.

Officials said particle pollution in Sydney's air rose to the worst on record Wednesday, and the New South Wales state ambulance service said it had received more than 250 calls before midday from people suffering breathing problems.

Beatles sell more than 2 million albums in 5 days

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Nearly 40 years after breaking up, The Beatles are still breaking records for album sales. EMI Group PLC says consumers in North America, Japan and the U.K. bought more than 2.25 million copies of the Fab Four's re-mastered albums in the first five days after their Sept. 9 release.

Most of the records were broken for most simultaneous titles in the top-selling charts by a single artist.

On Billboard magazine's pop catalog chart the band had 16 titles in the top 50, including all 14 re-mastered CDs and two box sets.

The albums were released to coincide with the sale of "The Beatles: Rock Band" for the Xbox 360, PlayStation 3 and Wii.

Fall — the season when temperatures start to cool and summer green is replaced with hues of red and gold.

This weekend members of the Magic Valley ATV Riders Club plan to ride the South Hills to enjoy nature's artistry and assist the U.S. Forest Service with trail improvements.

"We're going to do some riding, some working and some eating," club President Stan Mai said. "Our club formed two years ago and has grown to about 350 members who enjoy each other's company and want to promote and protect responsible ATV activities."

Members of his group had planned to spend Friday hauling loads of fractured rock from the trailhead campground at FS Flats to approximately three miles southwest to where Trail 912 crosses Goose Creek. Over time, motorized recreational use has widened the Goose Creek 912 trail crossing and created a condition where the trail is now lower than the creek and needs to be built back up and stabilized with rock.

The rock haul, however, has been postponed until next month. Forest Service hydrologist Mark Dallan, who is in charge of the Goose Creek project, says a mix-up at the gravel pit resulted in delivery of the wrong size gravel. So this weekend's work session could involve clearing brush from tails.

Where have all the dune buggies gone?

I saw a dune buggy recently, but somehow I couldn't help but wonder if it was a special effect.

I saw it on the Web, and it got me thinking: Maybe it's just me, but it's been a while since I've seen someone actually drive a dune buggy.

A RIDER'S NOTEBOOK

Andrew Weeks

It's been a long time since I've been in one. The last time, well, I must have been a teenager. I'm not talking centuries, here, but it's been a decade or two.

I thought maybe they had gone out of style.

But then, while surfing the Net recently, I saw the sleek-looking BMS Powerbuggy 800, and began to salivate. My first thought was that somewhere between puberty and manhood I had lost out on something in the off-road world. Where had I been with my dirt bikes and three-wheelers, while the dune buggy evolved into Jamey Wills of Action Cycles 'n Sleds uses an extended allen wrench to demonstrate draining the fuel from the carburetor on a KLX 450R. The less fuel inside the gas tank, the better it is for motorcycles that sit unused over the winter months. Owners also may use a fuel stabilizer in gas tanks, which helps keep the gasoline from varnishing, Wills says.

Story and photos by Andrew Weeks • Times-News writer

You've had fun with your motorcycle over the summer. But as the days shorten and the nights chill, it won't be long before you'll likely be storing your bike away for the winter.

Before you tuck it to bed, there are certain things you should do to help protect your bike while it hibernates through the cold months.

"The three main things," Rob Glodowski, vice president of Action Cycles 'n Sleds in Twin Falls, said "is removing the battery, stabilizing the fuel and putting fresh oil in your bike."

If the bike is unused for more than a month, old oil can cause contaminants and even condensation in the engine, he said. Fresh oil will help prevent this from happening.

Riders should make sure their liquid-cooled machines have antifreeze that's 'up to snuff' as the the cold months approach, Jamey Wills says. 'Make sure your antifreeze has a freeze rating of 30 below,' he says.

Draining the fuel from your machine — not just dirt bikes — is a good idea, too. Otherwise, you can use a stabilizer in the fuel that will help keep it from varnishing inside the tank. It's also important to remove the battery, to help preserve its life.

"Freezing will shorten the life of the battery by quite a bit," said Glodowski, who's been riding motorcycles since childhood. "There's a fair chance that (after freezing) it might not even bring a charge back the following spring. And if it freezes hard enough, it can break the battery."

Batteries should be removed and stored in a dry, warm place, he said.

There also is another option, according to Jamey Wills, the shop's sales manager. Bikers can buy a self-metering charger that will help protect the battery through Jack Frost's yearly visits.

The charger plugs into the battery and keeps it charged through the winter. When temperatures drop, batteries can discharge. When that happens the charger's sensor kicks in and keeps the battery at full charge.

A self-metering charger retails for about $50, Wills said, and is available at most motorcycle shops.

Wills also recommends that off-roaders make sure to drain water from and check the antifreeze levels of their liquid-cooled machines before storing them away. Otherwise, damage caused by ice formed in the radiators and elsewhere on the machine can lead to hefty repair costs. This is especially important for watercraft, he said.

"Make sure your antifreeze has a freeze rating of 30 below," he said.

Don't remove spark plugs from your machine, as this can cause dirt to get into the carburetor.

Winterizing your machine takes little time — one, maybe two hours at most, Wills said — and will help prevent mechanical problems and repair costs come springtime.

For those who plan to ride through winter — if Mother Nature doesn't turn a cold shoulder, for instance, and your bike doesn't sit unused for longer than a month — than winterizing should be minimal. Regular maintenance such as lubing chains and changing oil should suffice. There'd be no need to stabilize the fuel, Wills said.

Check your bike's tires, though, as cold temperatures can cause them to lose air.

WINTERIZE YOUR MACHINE

Motorcycle batteries should be removed from bikes and stored in a dry, warm place. If they are not removed, users can plug them into a self-metering charger like this one to help preserve the life of the battery.

Celebrate with the MNWR

Celebrate 100 years of conservation at the Minidoka National Wildlife Refuge.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service will host a public celebration for the Refuge's centennial from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday at Walcott State Park. Admission is free.

The event will include historical and educational exhibits, children's activities and refreshments. Entertainment will be provided by historian Case Hicks, who'll portray President Theodore Roosevelt.

Hicks' performance will feature accurate period clothing for the various stages of Roosevelt's adult life.

The National Wildlife Refuge System, managed by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, is the world's premier system of public lands and waters set aside to conserve America's fish, wildlife and plants. Since President Roosevelt designated Florida's Pelican Island as the first wildlife refuge in 1903, the System has grown to more than 150 million acres, 550 national wildlife refuges and other units of the Refuge System, plus 37 wetland management districts.

Botulism's for the birds: Death toll now 5000 fowl

AMERICAN FALLS — The number of birds killed by botulism in a southern Idaho reservoir continues to rise, with biologists now tallying more than 5,000 waterfowl deaths.

Idaho Department of Fish and Game regional manager Toby Boudreau says the outbreak will likely continue until the region gets about a week of cold weather — long enough to kill off the toxic bacteria in the American Falls Reservoir.

Workers are collecting the dead ducks, seagulls, ibises and other birds for disposal, the Idaho State Journal reported. Meanwhile, the Fish and Game Department is warning people to keep dogs away from the northern shore of the reservoir. Boudreau also says hunters should avoid touching or shooting any sick-looking ducks.

Boudreau says this is the first botulism outbreak at the reservoir since 1996, when about 10,000 birds died.

Utah proposes moving more bison to Book Cliffs

SALT LAKE CITY — State wildlife officials want to move bison from the Henry Mountains over to the Book Cliffs.

Biologists in the Henry Mountains this summer found about 450 bison, roughly 35 more than expected and far more than the goal of about 275.

To take the pressure off that area, the Utah Division of Wildlife Resources is proposing to move about 40 bison to the Book Cliffs, where a newly formed herd now numbers fewer than 50. If approved, the move would likely happen in January.

The other option for reducing the Henry Mountains herd is to increase the number of hunting permits in that area. That step, though, would require changes in the structure of the hunting season.

The Utah Wildlife Board is expected to discuss the proposals Oct. 1 in Salt Lake City.

Wyo. officials ask hunters to check moose for parasite

RAWLINS, Wyo. — The Wyoming Game and Fish Department is asking moose hunters to check their animals for a blood parasite.

Sinclair wildlife biologist Greg Hiatt says carotid artery worms are causing moose losses in western Wyoming, and the department wants to find out if the parasite is also present in Snowy Range moose.

The department wants hunters to bring their moose to a Game and Fish office or to a check station to have a sample taken. The entire head can be brought, or hunters who are having a trophy photo mounted can ask for a Game and Fish employee to pick the head up at the taxidermist after it has been caped.

The parasite also affects deer, but isn't harmful to humans.

Continued from Outdoors 1 is too small for the project, so it looks like work on the trail might happen around the third week in October," Dallon said Wednesday. "We'll still need their help, and there was talk about what else we could have the group do, but I don't know if that's been decided."

Saturday's activities will still include a 50-mile club fun ride, extending from Trout Creek, Swanty, Wine Cup Meadow Springs and back to Goose Creek, as well as a potluck meal at the FS Flats campground.

"We'll play Sunday by ear, but it'll probably include some more riding," Mai said. "There are still several things that could be done up there, but we'll wait to see how many (members) show up and what there is before we decide."

Hill climb provides big thrill

Idaho Press-Tribune

NEW PLYMOUTH — It's loud. The dust is thick and the rides and crashes are fast-paced and treacherous. For riders and their die-hard fans alike, the seventh annual Big Nasty Hillclimb that ended Sunday was just what they'd been waiting for.

"It's like the Woodstock of hillclimbing," Oak View, Calif. rider Greg Webster said while taking a break after a run during Sunday's finals. "I love defeating the law of gravity and Mother Nature."

Waiting for his turn at the base of a near 600-foot hill that had been throwing riders consistently as they braved loose dirt and pitches nearing vertical in certain spots, Webster made it sound almost easy.

Even with heavily modified bikes pumping more than 150 horsepower to rear wheels equipped with paddles, chains and bolts to add any kind of traction possible, topping the hill was no easy task. And all the cliffs, dips and bumps along the way made a quick run even more difficult.

Even Nampa Mayor Tom Dale got in on the action near New Plymouth, making it about 175 feet up a hill on Saturday before being edged out by television meteorologist Brian Carrington, according to organizers.

"The spectators come out because every seat is the best seat in the house," organizer Ron Dillon said from the base of the hill. "The riders are here because it's the only professional motorcycle hill climb in the Northwest. This is a tricky hill, with a series of ledges on it. This is a really tough place, a challenge for everyone."

Officials estimated 15,000 people came out over the weekend to watch, camp and enjoy the spectacle on part of a 1,000-acre ranch outside New Plymouth. Live music, air boat and helicopter rides, vendors, a mechanical bull, pumpkin shoot and riding under the nighttime lights helped make the event a success.

"It's the fun of competing and beating the hill," Meridian rider Pete Treadwell said. "The power's addicting."

Jennifer Winfrey, who came to the event from Boise with her 5-year-old son Brayden, says she "loves the rush."

"There's always excitement," she said. "It's just a great time."

THE NORTH POLE GEAR TEST

From a starting point on Canada's Ellesmere Island, it took two long months of skiing, hauling, cooking, camping, scouting lines and meandering steadily north on fractured ice. But on April 25, John Huston and Tyler Fish reached the North Pole by ski — the first Americans to pull off the unsupported feat, which, at 475 miles, has been dubbed "the hardest trek on the planet."

Indeed, to cross the arctic void, Huston and Fish, from Chicago and Ely, Minn., had to haul 650 pounds of food, fuel and gear. Each man pulled two sleds and trudged for hours a day, leaning into wind and bearing temps as low as minus-60 degrees Fahrenheit.

Like all polar trips, Huston and Fish's Victorinox North Pole '09 Expedition necessitated some unique gear. The pair cherry-picked from standard outdoors items, including a DeLorme PN-40 GPS unit and, from their sponsor, the Victorinox Swiss Tool Spirit Plus Ratchet multi-tool.

But they also brought unexpected things like a teapot. "We called it the Fat Lady," Huston said. They bought the bulbous stainless steel pot in the village of Iqaluit, Nunavut, before departure. It is a $40 item Huston said was essential on the trip.

The teapot is big and moderately heavy at about 26 ounces. But Huston swears by the seven-liter pot for melting snow blocks and boiling water in some of the worst conditions on the planet.

Esoteric polar gear comprised a bulk of Huston and Fish's haul. The Alfa Mordre Extreme Boots are a simulacrum to footwear worn a century ago by explorers like Roald Amundsen. But the Alfa Mordre Extremes, which are handmade and cost $1,000 a pair, employ modern materials alongside leather and wool.

Bergans of Norway supplied outerwear, sleeping bags and backpacks.

THE GEAR JUNKIE

Stephen Regenold

The main parka for the trip, Bergans' Antarktis Jacket, comes down long over the legs. It has large mesh pockets inside, a baggy fit, and fur on the hood. Just in case the main zipper breaks on a trip — a potentially game-over gear flaw — Bergans includes strong Velcro as an alternate way to seal out the cold.

The Bergans Helium Backpack doubled as a piece in the team's hauling system. Huston and Fish had the pack's harness modified and reinforced, and tow ropes were custom-stitched onto the backpacks' hip belts. Huston wore his pack for up to 17 hours some days. Inside the pack he stashed items including survival gear and bags of freeze-dried cheese.

Most of the expedition's gear was stowed in the four tow-behind sleds.

The Acapulka Arctic Challenge sleds, which slide on snow as well as float on water, are made for expeditionary settings. They cost about $4,000 apiece and are constructed with Kevlar shells.

The polar choo-choo train that was the Victorinox North Pole '09 Expedition — two men on skis, tow ropes, and four sleds behind — chugged at a pace of less than one mile per hour many days.

But add up 55 of those long polar days — battling the elements, fighting drifting ice, scouting for bears and open water — and Huston and Fish made it into the history books. Old-school boots, custom-stitched pack belts, and a big teapot helped out along the way.

My second thought was that what I saw on the monitor was just a digitalized rendition, a special effect created

Am I just hitting the wrong trails and dunes? All I ever see are dirt bikes, four-wheelers

Hunters find ATV restrictions in Cloquet forest

DULUTH, Minn. (AP) — More than a thousand miles of ATV trails crisscross the Cloquet Valley State Forest north of Duluth, a web that hunters have long used in their pursuit of deer and grouse.

But this fall there are more than 500 signs that mark about one-fifth of that network as off-limits to all-terrain vehicles — something many hunters aren't happy about.

"I know there are going to be a lot of people who drive up there right before deer season and say, 'What the heck is this?'" said Phil Keppers of Duluth, who has hunted deer and grouse in the forest.

The Minnesota Department of Natural Resources completed the forest-management plan for the state forest in December. Under it, about 232 miles of the 1,017 miles of ATV trails in the forest are closed because they pass through wetlands, are redundant or cannot sustain ATV use.

Hunters use their ATVs in the 300,000-acre forest to hunt ruffed grouse, to get to their hunting shacks and deer stands and to haul game out of the woods.

Some are taking their unhappiness with the restrictions out on the new signs.

"They're being spray-painted, being bent over or being picked up, removed — gone," said DNR conservation officer Kipp Duncan. "There haven't been a lot shot yet, but that's because people aren't carrying guns yet. That will happen."

The firearms deer season starts Nov. 7 in Minnesota.

Although the implementation for the Cloquet Valley State Forest plan will happen officially on Dec. 31, enforcement of the new regulations can begin when closure signs are posted, said Brian McCann, a DNR planner in St. Paul.

That process will prove trickier if some signs have been taken down, but not impossible. "Even if the signs are gone, they have been posted and it would still be an illegal operation (of an ATV)," Duncan said.

The reclassification of trails in the forest was part of a statewide mandate to classify all state forests. It was done by a committee that included representatives of the DNR and St. Louis County.

"The reason we did it

AP photo

Jason Meyer, a land manager for St. Louis County, walks near a wet spot in a trail in the Cloquet Valley State Forest north of Duluth, Minn., Sept. 15. That portion of the trail is being closed to ATVs because silt and clay prevent the trail from draining well.

(closing some areas to ATV use) was to try to provide some balance," said Rich Staffon, DNR area wildlife manager at Cloquet. "We get a fair amount of people who call and are looking for a place to hunt where they don't have to deal with crowds and ATVs. This is an effort to provide that option."

Within the state forest, more than 400 private cabins — mostly deer shacks — are on land leased from the county.

"The Cloquet Valley forest is a checkerboard ownership," said Dennis Fink, chairman of the St. Louis County Board, explaining why the county participated in the management plan. "For us to manage it differently would not have been consistent with the law."

The forest plan allows

ATV access to deer shacks in nearly all cases, but some of the now-closed trails were used by hunters to travel to their deer stands or to haul deer out of the woods.

"The thing that really gets me is that you can't haul a deer out of there on an ATV," said Duluth's Keppers. "For me, personally, they've made this large area I've been hunting for many years not huntable anymore."

A long route to a close planet

My formative years as a budding astronomer spanned the 1970s and '80s, decades that saw the first explorations of the solar system beyond the asteroid belt. The Pioneers (10 and 11) and Voyagers (1 and 2), sent home stunning vistas of the giant planets and their moons. Throughout those decades, as well as the '90s, much of Mercury remained unseen.

SKYWATCH

Chris Anderson

At first blush, it seems odd. In 2004, the Cassini probe entered orbit around Saturn and dropped a probe onto Saturn's largest moon, Titan. And still, over half of Mercury's surface was terra incognita since 1974-75, when Mariner 10 — the lone spacecraft to have flown past the planet — imaged about half the planet. Venus, Mars, Jupiter and Saturn have all had artificial satellites: Why not Mercury?

The Sun's heat, nearly seven times more intense at Mercury than at Earth, is only part of the reason. More significant is Mercury's orbital speed.

In order for a spacecraft to orbit a planet, it must nearly match the planet's speed. To orbit Saturn, the Cassini probe had to slow down by 45,000 mph. It accomplished this, in part, by slingshotting past Venus (twice), Earth, and Jupiter, allowing each planet's gravity to steal some of its speed.

To match Mercury's speed requires an Earth-launched spacecraft to gain 40,000 mph. Unfortunately, there's no gravitational giant like Jupiter between Earth and Mercury to help.

That's why the MESSENGER spacecraft, launched in 2004, will have executed no fewer than six planetary fly-bys (Earth, Venus twice, and Mercury three times) before it gains enough speed to pace the innermost planet. MESSENGER will fly past Mercury for the last time on Tuesday in preparation to become the fastest planet's first artificial satellite in March 2011.

Next week: Seasonal moon watching.

Fish fry: Payoff is small, work is hard, to ensure native fish's survival

By Brett French
The Billings Gazette

After driving five dust-choked miles by ATV, hiking three miles while crossing Lower Deer Creek 21 times and losing and then gaining almost 2,000 feet elevation, Jeremiah Wood was elated to see two inch-long cutthroat trout fry dart across a boulder-formed pool.

"Whoo hoo!" he yelled, raising his arms in triumph like a new father in the maternity ward.

Minutes later the Fish, Wildlife and Parks fisheries biologist and technician Ben Bailey had found more of the fry finning in shallow side channels.

"I counted 15 in 50 feet of stream," Wood said, with a wide smile. "I'm going to call this a success. There could have been none."

Squeezed out

Lower Deer Creek's native Yellowstone cutthroat trout have suffered some tough times lately.

In 2006, the Derby fire swept through much of their habitat, leaving many of the steep hillsides southeast of Big Timber in the foothills of the Beartooth Mountains barren of green trees. Fearful that runoff would choke the stream with debris after the fire, that fall Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks moved some of the cutthroat to a stream near Luther to ensure a few were protected.

But even before that, the fish had faced competition from nonnative rainbow and brown trout. Brown trout feed on the cutthroat fry and rainbows will interbreed.

"The cutthroat are getting squeezed," Wood said. "In Lower Deer Creek, we're starting to see more hybridization with rainbows and they're moving up the drainage. We're seeing more and more brown trout, probably because of the drought."

One previous attempt to remedy the situation involved introducing hatchery-raised Yellowstone cutthroat farther upstream, above a 30-foot waterfall that would provide a natural barrier to nonnative fish. But there was no evidence the hatchery trout ever reproduced.

Another attempt to protect the fish involved removing cutthroats from Lower Deer Creek and releasing them above the barrier falls, but those fish seemed to have all returned downstream.

The Lower Deer Creek fish have also suffered through low stream flows from drought. Low flows, in addition to restricting habitat, can also mean warmer water. Irrigation use of the stream typically dewater the lower portion of the creek every summer, cutting it off from the Yellowstone River.

New technique

This spring, taking a new tack, FWP decided to take eggs from spawning Lower Deer Creek cutthroats, fertilize them, and rush them upstream to establish a new population.

To hold the eggs in the gravel, Wood and others built small cups made from perforated polypropylene pipe. Inside the 4-inch pipes, which are capped on one end, the fisheries biologist and technicians laid a layer of gravel, then eggs, then gravel and eggs until the cup was filled. Then the cups were buried in the gravel of Lower Deer Creek, a stake holding them in place with an attached wire.

"They allow you to place the eggs in the gravel easily and provide some protection from predators," Wood said.

The egg incubation is a technique that has proven successful in the Elkhorn Mountains, south of Helena.

In all, an estimated 3,000 eggs were gathered and fertilized. They were hauled into their incubation site by backpack on a hot June day. The crew had to stop at stream crossings to add cool water to keep the eggs viable.

"There's only a short period of time to move them before they get sensitive," said Ken Frazer, fisheries manager for south-central Montana.

The creek was high in June, but had dropped substantially when Wood returned in July to check on the egg incubators. He moved them deeper to ensure they'd be under water when the fish finally emerged.

The stream had dropped substantially by last Thursday, when Wood again made the trek to check on the fish, but apparently all the hard work had paid off. He counted a total of about 30 fry in a short section of the stream.

Important to protect Frazer said projects like the one on Lower Deer Creek are important to preserving local fishes' adaptations to specific waters.

"We're always looking to see whether there are local adaptations," Frazer said. "Our goal is to preserve these species as best we can."

The agency also is trying to prevent an endangered species listing of the fish, which would bring with it a host of federal restrictions. Yellowstone cutthroats have seen a substantial decline in their population base, especially in Yellowstone Lake, from disease and competition from nonnatives. A 2007 FWP assessment showed the fish occupied only 43 percent of the streams they historically lived in, but now occupied

Idaho foundation aims to help improve wildlife

Times-News

The Idaho Fish and Wildlife Foundation has purchased 1,113 acres that will improve wildlife habitat and provide public access to open lands in Elmore County.

The property, purchased from a local rancher, is dominated by sagebrush-grassland habitat, providing important low-elevation big game winter range. The property is adjacent to the Charcoal Creek segment of the Boise River Wildlife Management Area and will be managed by the Idaho Department of Fish and Game as part of the wildlife management area.

This property solidifies perpetual access to a mix of public lands, including Fish and Game, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, U.S. Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management lands. Idaho Fish and Game will lease the land from the Idaho Fish and Wildlife Foundation for the next 10 years in a lease-to-purchase agreement to acquire the property.

"This funding partnership is a win," Fish and Game Director Cal Groen said. "It preserves valuable habitat and provides public access to open lands for hunting and other outdoor recreation"

The Idaho Fish and Wildlife Foundation Inc. is a non-profit organization established in 1990 to protect and sustain Idaho's fishing, hunting and wildlife heritage. Board members represent each region of the state.

Jerome Co. Commission cuts property tax

By John Plestina
Times-News writer

JEROME — While the adage that nothing is certain except death and taxes still rings true in Jerome County, county commissioners on Monday took some of the sting out of the portion of that certainty they have control over.

Commissioners voted to amend the county's fiscal year 2010 budget, reducing levied property tax by 36 cents per $1,000 of assessed valuation. A property owner with property valued at $100,000 would save $36 for the year.

County Clerk Michelle Emerson explained that the tax levy cannot increase once it is set but it can still decrease.

Emerson said a miscalculation of the Jerome County Ambulance District budget early in the budgeting process led to an excess in the county budget and the increased tax levy.

"What we found is we have to decrease that budget by about $35,000," Emerson said.

She requested that the commission pass a resolution accepting the new calculations that would result in the tax decrease, which it did.

"So that's always good news," Emerson said. "I just wish that I had caught it earlier."

In other business, Emerson told the commission that direct deposits of county employees' pay should be made available, but advised against making it a mandatory process.

"The cost to the county would be minimal," Emerson said.

Jerome wastewater treatment plant 'limping along'

By John Plestina
Times-News writer

JEROME — If you think something smells bad on the north side of Jerome, it might not be your imagination. The city is working to alleviate the latest round of problems at its wastewater treatment plant.

The cause is and has been industrial discharges into the sewer system that eventually flow into the wastewater treatment plant, stressing an infrastructure that city officials say is otherwise adequate.

"It's an ongoing problem," said City Administrator Ben Marchant.

He said continuing overflows at the treatment plant have revolved around the new Idaho Milk Products plant on the 220 block of South Tiger Drive since it opened in March.

A discharge by Idaho Milk Products into Jerome's sewer system created a stinky situation Aug. 12 with an overflow at the wastewater treatment plant.

Odor problems are back, apparently.

"I did get a complaint on Friday about it," Marchant said.

Marchant said an overflow caused damage to the plant.

"The plant is limping along ... Our system failed and we have been discharging overflows into drying beds," Marchant said, explaining that the city is temporarily using an old method until repairs are made.

"We've been having greater odor problems while we've been trying to repair air membranes that have been damaged," he said.

Marchant said the city discussed plans to resolve the issues at a meeting with the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality last week.

"Idaho Milk Products has taken corrective actions," he said.

Marchant added that there were similar issues with other milk product processors when they first opened.

The Jerome-based milk processor's business manager, John Martin, told the Times-News in August that Idaho Milk Products cooperates fully with the city to ensure that its flows are within permitted levels, and hopes to resolve all of its wastewater issues.

New Jerome Fire Chief Mike Hatfield stands at the fire station on West Yakima Avenue on his third day on the job in Jerome.

Jerome fire chief hopes to add stability, focus

By John Plestina
Times-News writer

JEROME — Taking the helm of the Jerome Fire Department, the city's new fire chief said he hopes to add stability to the department and more outreach into the community.

Raymond Michel "Mike" Hatfield, 54, takes over the department that currently has 11 full-time firefighters and 11 on-call members.

He said he plans to add four or five full-time firefighters funded by a federal grant the city has obtained and build the on-call roster to 24 people.

"I've had some discussions with staff. I get the sense from the staff and people in the community that there hasn't been direction," Hatfield said of the city's lack of a fire chief for more than a year.

He commended Deputy Chief Karine Aebi for doing a "great job pinch hitting." Aebi joined the Jerome department in March.

Hatfield plans to staff the fire station on West Yakima Avenue. Built about five years ago, the modern facility has been used for storage for most of that time.

"It's a great facility," he said.

Hatfield retired from the fire department in Cathedral City, Calif., where he was a division chief and fire marshal for seven years. He is a 34-year veteran firefighter and fire service manager. All of his previous service was in California.

Hatfield's wife, Kristi, will soon join him in Jerome, where they are in the process of buying a home.

"We're empty nesters," he said of the absence at home of his two children in California, a son, 34, and daughter, 26.

"Here, in Idaho, there is a different sense of values. I feel like I've come home," Hatfield said.

Hatfield said he wants to add stability to the department and outreach into the Latino community with a fire prevention message.

"I want other cultures to be a part of the fire service. We're here to serve them. We're their fire service," he said.

With October and Fire Prevention Week coming up, Hatfield said he plans to encourage parents to buy reflective and nonflammable Halloween costumes, to encourage safety with candles and pumpkins and to encourage homeowners to have furnaces serviced and chimneys cleaned.

"Our ability to do our job is directly predicated on the community doing their job," he said. Before landing the position in Jerome, Hatfield was a finalist for the fire chief position at the East Valley Fire Department near Yakima, Wash.

How much education does it take to become a doctor?

DEAR DR. GOTT: What education does a primary doctor have and what does he or she have for an education to be certified?

Today, if I want to know anything about myself, I have to go to a hospital or specialist. Why is this? It's very costly for me. I'm going on 89, and in my past life, my doctor could give me all the answers and help

I needed. Things are expensive and scary.

DEAR READER: Your question is an excellent one. I hope I can do it justice.

A primary-care doctor in the United States goes through eight to 10 years of grammar school (pre-kindergarten to eighth grade), four years of high school, four years of college and four years of medical school. A one-year period of training in a hospital setting under the supervision of attending physicians is known as an internship.

During this period, an appreciable amount of time is also spent attending lectures and conferences. A United States Medical Licensing Examination (USMLE) is then taken prior to applying for a residency program in the United States. Most programs are between four and six years, depending on the field a future physician chooses to enter. Thus, a minimum of 25 years is required before a person can be qualified as a practicing physician. This is a long-winded way of saying your former physician was well qualified to handle your case in a "one-stop shopping center."

Medicine as we know it today is not what it was several years ago. To begin with, we relied extensively on a patient's verbal history, performed a hands-on examination of the body part in question, and did everything possible to bring relief as quickly as possible. I'm not implying we didn't have X-ray machines and laboratories. We had state-of-the-art

University of Illinois president White resigns after scandal

By David Mercer and Deanna Bellandi
 Associated Press writers

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — University of Illinois President B. Joseph White resigned Wednesday following reports that the school admitted politically connected applicants over more qualified ones at its Urbana-Champaign campus.

White

White said he sent a resignation letter to Christopher Kennedy, the chairman of the university's board of trustees.

"I take this action to enable you as a newly constituted Board to select University leadership going forward," White wrote in the letter. "It has been a privilege for my wife, Mary, and me to serve the University community. We remain highly committed to the University of Illinois."

According to a university news release, White will remain with the central Illinois school to teach and raise funds.

News reports first surfaced in May that political-connected applicants for spots at the university's flagship campus in Urbana-Champaign were given special attention and tracked through a list known as Category I. Those reports and documents later released by the university showed that some of those connected applicants were admitted over more qualified ones. Among the e-mails was one from former Gov. Rod Blagojevich backing an applicant. White forwarded the e-mail to Urbana-Champaign Chancellor Richard Herman. That applicant, initially denied admission but later accepted, turned out to be a relative of Tony Rezko, the convicted political influence peddler who is a key figure in the federal government's investigation of Blagojevich.

White has said he didn't know at the time who Rezko was when he sent along the e-mail in 2005.

Six members of the university's board of trustees also were replaced this summer over the admissions scandal.

Earlier Wednesday, Gov. Pat Quinn said he expected

White to resign. He said trustees would name an interim president and a search would begin for a permanent replacement.

Kennedy, one of the board's newest members, said he doesn't relish seeing White resign.

"I would not take any joy or pleasure in President White's resignation," he said early Wednesday. "I think it's a terrible toll this process has had on a lot of people."

Last week, the University of Illinois Faculty Senate approved a resolution calling for White and Herman to be replaced. Herman did not return calls or e-mails from The Associated Press seeking comment. Neither the Senate chair, assistant Spanish professor Joyce Tolliver.

Study: Flu shot better than nasal spray in adults

By Alicia Chang
 Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — Hate to get flu shots? A new comparison of flu vaccines gives adults a good reason to roll up their sleeves and get a jab in the arm instead of a squirt in the nose.

In a study of nearly 2,000 healthy adults during a recent flu season, standard shots were twice as effective against regular winter flu as the newer nasal spray, researchers found.

That may not be true, however, for swine flu vaccines, which may be available first in a spray. Experts say both kinds might be equally effective against the swine flu in children and adults.

Flu shots are made of killed flu viruses that are usually injected into the arm. FluMist, the only government-approved flu nasal spray, delivers a live but weakened strain to the nostrils.

FluMist is mainly targeted for use in children, and studies have suggested that it works better than shots in children. But adults are increasingly opting for the spray version as well.

The latest shot vs. spray study echoes previous research that found shots to be superior in adults.

It's not clear why the spray is less effective against seasonal flu in adults, but the same may not hold true for swine flu vaccines, said Dr. Jay Butler, swine flu vaccine chief with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The swine flu virus is so novel that the immune system should still mount a strong response, he said.

Federal health officials have said they expected the first shipments of swine flu vaccines next month to be the nasal spray version. The spray is approved only for healthy people ages 2 to 49.

So should adults wait until they can get a shot that may offer more protection?

"I wouldn't recommend that," Butler said. "Even if it's less, it's not zero."

University of Michigan epidemiologist Dr. Arnold Monto, who led the latest flu study, agreed. If there was a difference in effectiveness between the swine flu shot and spray, Monto said, it probably would not be as dramatic since the pandemic strain — 2009 H1N1 — is so new.

The study compared regular flu vaccines during the 2007-2008 flu season. Healthy volunteers, ages 18 to 49, were given either a flu shot made by Sanofi Pasteur of France, a dummy injection, FluMist made by Maryland-based MedImmune LLC, or a fake nasal spray.

Since the 1,952 participants were randomly divided into four groups, exposure to the flu in each group was similar, Monto said.

The flu shot was 68 percent successful at preventing the flu compared with the nasal spray, which was 36 percent effective, the researchers reported.

The 2007-2008 flu season was severe, partly because the vaccines did not work well against the circulating viruses, the CDC has said.

Results were published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine. The study was funded by Sanofi. Monto and several other researchers have reported receiving grants from the drugmaker.

Dr. Chris Ambrose, senior director of medical affairs at MedImmune, said the jury is still out on the issue. He cited studies that have shown FluMist to work just as well as the flu shot in adults.

MedImmune has completed studies on its new swine flu nasal spray in children and adults and have submitted results to the Food and Drug Administration. Details have not been released. Ambrose said early results indicate the new nasal spray vaccine is safe and effective.

This week, the FDA said because the swine flu shots are behaving so much like seasonal flu shots in tests, it expects the swine flu nasal spray to work the same, too.

Wash. authorities hunt for notorious teen burglar

EASTSOUND, Wash. (AP) — Colton Harris-Moore's rap sheet already spans a good chunk of the teenager's life, including convictions for theft, burglary, malicious mischief and other crimes.

But the list may be growing longer by the week, authorities say, as the 18-year-old eludes officials on a crime spree they believe includes store break-ins, boat thefts and even joyrides in airplanes.

"He's more than a menace," said Bill Cumming, the sheriff in San Juan County, where authorities say he may be to blame for 14 thefts and burglaries on their islands. "He's an incredible liability to people's safety."

In 2004, at age 12, Harris-Moore was convicted of possessing stolen property in Snohomish County. Over the next three years came convictions for theft, burglary, malicious mischief, and assault, among other crimes.

In 2007, the boy was sentenced to three years in a juvenile lockup after pleading guilty to three burglary counts in Island County. But he fled the minimum-security facility in April 2008.

Since then, he is suspected in a string of burglaries in the Camano Island, north of Seattle, and recently may have moved on to the San Juan Islands, where he is being investigated for the store break-ins and boat thefts.

Cumming also told The Seattle Times that Harris-

Moore may have stolen a boat on Sept. 13 and taken it to Point Roberts, in Whatcom County, where several subsequent burglaries occurred.

Harris-Moore's mother, Pam Kohler, who lives in a rural home on south Camano Island, told The Herald newspaper in Everett that she doesn't believe her son is responsible for the crime wave.

"Anytime anything is stolen they blame it on Colt," Kohler said.

equipment for the time and used it whenever necessary. However, today, we have extremely sophisticated tools, access to superb specialists in almost every field and often demand a second opinion. Why? So we won't get sued! Sadly, our country has turned into a sue-first, talk-later society. If anything goes wrong, blame the doctor. After all, it's his fault, isn't it? He's the one first consulted. If we refer a sick person to the emergency room of our local hospital, we can share the blame. If your primary-care physician is uncertain of a diagnosis or what to do next, he or she will do exactly what yours is attempting — share the burden of responsibility. And it's an arduous, long and expensive process.

Speak with your physician, explain your concerns, and ask whether he or she can work with you so you don't have to be referred out. At almost 89, you deserve to have your wishes honored if possible. Just be levelheaded so that if a medical situation truly calls for a specialist or hospital, you follow the advice of your doctor.

If your physician is unwilling, you are free to find another physician. Small-town physicians are a dying breed, but there are still some out there. There are even some younger physicians who take issue with the way health care is moving into the future and want to get back to when patient care was more important than health-insurance payments.

The costs of repairs and who will pay for the damage to the treatment plant are not determined, according to Marchant.

"We're just trying to get the plant back up and running," he said.

Marchant acknowledged that the current problems at the sewage treatment plant have put the city out of compliance with the DEQ and the federal Environmental Protection Agency. So far, no finances have been levied against the city. He attributed that to the fact that the city is addressing the problems.

"We're being forthright with the DEQ and the EPA. At this point (Monday), we have not received a fine for violations. We still could but we're doing everything we can," Marchant said.

Sweden launches manhunt after helicopter heist

STOCKHOLM (AP) — With cinematic flourish, the masked robbers dropped from a helicopter onto the roof of a Swedish cash depot before dawn, broke into the building through a glass pyramid, set off explosions to get to the millions inside and escaped by hoisting themselves and their haul back up on rope lines.

All in 20 minutes, and all while Stockholm police were grounded by a fake bomb planted outside their own helicopter hangar.

Sweden has had its share of high-profile heists against cash storage facilities, post offices and armored cars in recent years, but police said Wednesday's commando-style robbery was the first to use a helicopter.

"There are about 100 hardcore criminals in this country who have specialized in this type of serious robbery," said Jerzy Sarnecki, professor in criminology at Stockholm University. "They are definitely no amateurs."

He said every successful heist inspires others to follow suit, which explains why they have become relatively frequent in Sweden. "When you have a group of people doing these things, others are inspired by them," Sarnecki said.

A nationwide manhunt was launched for the suspects. Investigators believed at least 10 professional outlaws were involved.

"These are people who most likely have committed similar crimes before," police spokesman Ulf Goranzon said. "We have naturally activated police throughout Sweden as much as possible, especially when it comes to border controls: airports, bridges and ferries."

The company that owns the high-security facility, G4S PLC, said the thieves made off with "an unconfirmed sum of money" and added it would offer a large reward for information leading to their arrest and the return of the loot. The company did not give an exact amount for the reward.

Britain-based G4S PLC is one of the world's largest security companies. The Vastberga facility stores cash that is transported to banks and other businesses in Sweden. G4s declined to say how much money was in the cash depot when it was attacked.

As Gadhafi deal goes south, should Trump be fired?

By Jim Fitzgerald
Associated Press writer

BEDFORD, N.Y. — Did The Donald and the dictator make a backdoor deal? If so, the plan to pitch a tent in this suburb for Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi went south pretty fast. Maybe someone should be fired.

A tent erected by the Libyan government on Donald Trump's estate in Bedford was dismantled Wednesday, and both Trump and the Secret Service said Gadhafi wasn't coming.

For Gadhafi, it was just another failed attempt to find a place to spend time during the UN General Assembly — after his requests for space in Central Park, Englewood, N.J., and Manhattan's Upper East Side were all rejected.

Long unpopular in America, the Libyan leader is now particularly unwelcome after he gave an effusive welcome-home reception for Abdel Baset al-Megrahi, the Libyan convicted of the bombing Pan Am Flight 103. Al-Megrahi was recently freed from prison because he's dying of prostate cancer.

For Trump, questions persisted.

Did he know he might be handing over the use of his lush, 213-acre Seven Springs estate to Gadhafi? Or was the mogul unwittingly renting some upscale digs on his suburban lawn 33 miles north of the United Nations?

Neither explanation would fly on Trump's former hit reality show "The Apprentice," said Rabbi Shmuley Boteach, an author who helped kill plans for Gadhafi to set up a tent on the grounds of a Libyan compound next door to Boteach's home in Englewood, N.J.

Trump "would say 'You're a loser, and you're fired,'" Boteach said.

Trump returned a reporter's call Wednesday but refused to answer questions on the record.

In a statement about the dismantling of the tent, he did not name "the tenant." On Tuesday, the Trump Organization hinted he had been hornswoggled when he agreed to rent his prime acreage.

"We have business partners and associates all over the world," it said. "The property was leased on a short-term basis to Middle Eastern partners, who may or may not have a relationship to Mr. Gadhafi. We are looking into the matter."

Rhona Graff, a Trump vice president, said Wednesday she had nothing to add about the deal.

"It's a very sensitive, very delicate matter," she said. "I want to make sure I'm 100 percent correct before I get anything to you."

She did not immediately respond to e-mailed questions about what Trump knew and how he felt about a Gadhafi tent on his land.

Bedford officials — who learned the tent had been pitched on Tuesday — grew impatient with the real estate titan. Before the tent was dismantled at about 4:45 p.m., town attorney Joel Sachs said Trump's people were not cooperating.

Sachs threatened criminal charges for violating zoning and housing laws, with financial penalties, if the tent was not taken down. Trump could pitch a tent once he obtained the necessary permits, which would take longer than Gadhafi's weeklong trip to New York.

Residents of the upscale suburb said Gadhafi was unwelcome in Westchester.

"We are outraged that this known criminal would attempt to set up camp in our community, and we intend to do everything in our power to deny them temporary residence," town Supervisor Lee Roberts said.

T.F. scores four goals in first 15 minutes

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

When high-flyer meets cellar dweller in competition, the upset comes off more often than anticipated.

Not so on Wednesday.

The Twin Falls girls soccer team scored four times in the first 15 minutes to put Burley to the sword from the opening whistle, cruising to a 9-0 Great Basin Conference win.

Allie Webb and Claire Goss both had hat tricks to pace the Bruins (10-2-2, 5-1-0 GBC, 15 pts.), who led 6-0 at halftime. It was an ideal first half for Twin Falls, which came out determined to squelch any thoughts of an upset.

"You just have to pass a lot, and make sure that you aren't taking any unnecessary long shots," said Goss, who opened the scoring and finished off her hat trick in the second half. "It was a good game for us because we got to work on our foot skills, shooting and passing a lot."

The second half saw the Bruins throw a little more deliberation and flair at Burley (0-9-1, 0-5-1, 1 pt.), where they tried to convert corner kicks and crosses from out wide. In the first half Twin Falls played through-balls up the middle of the field for most of its scoring chances.

Brooke Wagner, who scored two for the Bruins, netted the best of the nine goals with her second strike of the first half, and of her high school career. Goss took the ball out on the left before sending a cross through the heart of the penalty area. It bounced twice, and Wagner rifled in a

Burley boys win physical battle

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

BURLEY — With a defender on his back, Burley's Cesar Mendoza drove the ball past a charging keeper in the 69th minute to put the final touches on the Bobcats' 3-1 win over Twin Falls Wednesday at Burley's Skaggs Events Center.

However, Twin Falls lost much more than a Great Basin Conference game. At the same moment Mendoza found the net, Bruin forward Steven Sanchez was being carted off on a stretcher.

In what both sides characterized as a "physical" contest, Sanchez went down with a serious leg injury on what appeared to be a fair challenge.

"That hurt," said Twin Falls' Colton Stott of losing Sanchez. "He plays well for us. He's a person we need. We'll be missing him."

It was Sanchez who scored in the 11th minute to put the Bruins up 1-0. Early on, it felt like the game was unfolding much like the teams' first meeting, a 1-0 Twin Falls win on Aug. 31.

But Burley benefitted on a hand ball in the box in the 23rd minute, setting up Angel Anguiano's equalizing penalty kick.

"That penalty was huge," said Burley coach Wes Nyblade. "After that, the kids felt like they had it. We pass well, the kids are talking well. We're not really finishing well yet, but we haven't had a complete team healthy?"

Pablo Gonzalez gave Burley the lead in the 35th minute.

Burley's Cesar Mendoza gets by Twin Falls defender Jesse Hoffman to score a goal in the second half of the Bobcats' 3-1 win Wednesday at Burley High School.

"We're controlling most of the games we're playing, and we're just working on finishing," said Burley captain Brent Lee.

The Bruins (4-8-1, 1-4-1, 4 pts.), avoiding the distraction of EMTs attending to their teammate on their bench, had several chances to tie in the second half. But when Mendoza's goal found the net, it deflated Twin Falls and put the contest out of reach.

"Playing on this (artificial turf) field is different, we're not used to it, but that's not a good excuse," said Stott. "We just couldn't put the ball in the back of the net, we had plenty of opportunities."

The win starts Burley (7-2-2, 3-2-1, 10 pts.) on a tough stretch of five games in seven days. The Bobcats travel to league-leading Jerome on Friday.

"It's amazingly brutal," Nyblade said. "What we're hoping to do is come out healthy because the district tournament is only a couple weeks away."

Twin Falls hosts Pocatello on Friday.

What we learned from CSI's early slate

Last weekend's Starr Corporation Invitational proved to be the crown jewel in a rigorous pre-conference slate for the College of Southern Idaho volleyball team.

A five-team setup brought four of the top six teams in the NJCAA Division I Volleyball Poll to Twin Falls, including the top three teams. There was little doubt in the minds of many observers that the three best teams in the country were present.

David Bashore

CSI went 3-1 at the weekend tournament, improving its record against ranked opponents to 8-2 on the season. An 11th match involving rankings came against a team that cracked the rankings after CSI beat it.

What we learned from this rough 18-match stretch ahead of the Scenic West Athletic Conference schedule is this: At 16-2, CSI has the tools to win both the SWAC and the national championship, and could be considered slight favorites for each. But the Golden Eagles are not invincible — and their greatest enemy just might be themselves.

Five reasons the Golden Eagles can win the SWAC

1. Battle-tested: CSI has played a far tougher pre-conference schedule than it did last season. It's always a good thing when your schedule gets easier by moving into conference play.

2. Teamwork: Last year's team seemed more of a collection of individual talent than a cohesive unit, and it showed when things got tough. This season the group rallies around each other and each player is willing to sacrifice for the team objective.

3. Defense: Serve receive was a trouble spot last season but has been shored up nicely, and the back-row defense has improved. More importantly, the blocking is leaps and bounds better than in 2008. The middles are quick to the outside, and the outside hitters anchor their blocks with aplomb.

4. Heady setter: Barbara Alcantara has been a godsend for the Golden Eagles, a vast upgrade over what they had last season. Alcantara has multiple hitters at her disposal, rarely wastes a set, and possesses blocking skills her predecessor didn't show.

Amazing: CSI hoops squad races around town

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

As members of the College of Southern Idaho men's basketball team stood on the steps outside CSI Gymnasium and vehemently argued who had really won their version of "The Amazing Race," athletic director Joel Bate just watched and smiled.

"I hope they care this much about beating Salt Lake," he said.

If that's the case, the Bruins won't stand a chance.

"They're very competitive, and I think that's going to translate into some really good results this year."

— CSI head basketball coach Steve Gosar

The Golden Eagles traded time in the gym Wednesday afternoon for a team-building exercise featuring a six-mile course with eight different stops — all covered on foot. Four groups consisting of four players and one coach each took on the challenge, which included stops at La Fiesta, Blockbuster, The Car Store at Five Points, Fuller Law Offices, Twin Stop Chevron and Domino's Pizza. Each stop offered a challenge and a clue to the next stop.

In the end, three different groups claimed they had won the race, which came with a valuable prize: the chance to get out of conditioning on any one day they choose.

"They're very competitive, and I think that's going to translate into some really good results this year," said Gosar, as his players continued to debate the finish.

"It was fun," said freshman center Kenny Buckner of Washington, D.C. "It's a long way to run."

Buckner's favorite stop? Blockbuster. For one simple reason: "It had air conditioning."

Gosar ultimately decided

"I CAN'T THINK OF ANY BETTER WAY OF SAYING GOODBYE TO THE SPORT!"

— Kristin Armstrong, after winning a time trial at the road cycling world championships and then deciding to retire

Kristin Armstrong wins world title, announces retirement

MENDRISIO, Switzerland (AP) — Kristin Armstrong won the women's time trial at the road cycling world championships Wednesday, then confirmed she will retire after competing in this weekend's road race.

The reigning Olympic champion timed 35 minutes, 26.09 seconds over two laps of the 16.7-mile course, beating Noemi Cantele of Italy by 55 seconds. Linda Villumsen of Denmark trailed by 58 seconds to take the bronze medal.

"I can't think of any better way of saying goodbye to the sport," Armstrong said, cradling her gold medal with both hands as she spoke. "I had a little bit of motivation today. Now I hope another American can come out on top on Saturday."

The 36-year-old Armstrong dominated the 41-rider field to win her second time trial world title. The first came in 2006.

"It doesn't matter how many times you become world champion, it's always the best feeling in the world," Armstrong said. "I just wanted to focus on going as hard as I could possibly go."

Armstrong led at every time check and extended her lead the farther she went, recording an average speed of 28 mph. The effort on a hot day in the Swiss Alps left her slumped over her handlebars after crossing the finish line.

One year after a disappointing fifth at the worlds in nearby Varese, Italy, Armstrong said she'd had trouble motivating herself so soon after her gold medal triumph in Beijing.

"I wanted to support the sport and come back for the worlds," Armstrong said. "I had one year to prepare and I had a perfect day."

Cantele, who started three riders before Armstrong, said her coach told her with 3.11 miles left that she was setting the fastest time splits. "I gave everything," the 28-year-old Cantele said through a translator. "The gold medal was pretty far away from me."

Defending champion Amber Neben of the United States finished sixth, trailing her teammate by almost 90 seconds. French veteran Jeannie Longo-Ciprelli finished 10th, one minute 48 seconds behind. The 50-year-old Longo-Ciprelli is a four-time champion.

Armstrong said she will return to the U.S. to help young riders develop their careers. She recently launched a cycling academy in her home city of Boise and will work with a professional team based in California.

"I will be helping young riders come over to Europe," she said. "I want to give back to the sport and spend some time at home."

Yankees get past Angels on the road

ANAHEIM, Calif. — A.J. Burnett struck out 11 in his second win since July, and New York won a series at Anaheim for the first time since May 2004 with a 3-2 victory over Los Angeles on Wednesday.

On Tuesday night, New York became the first major league team to clinch a play-off berth.

Robinson Cano hit a two-run single, and Melky Cabrera followed with an RBI double in the fourth inning for the Yankees.

RAYS 5, MARINERS 4

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — B.J. Upton had three RBIs, including a go-ahead two-run single in the eighth, for Tampa Bay.

The Rays loaded the bases on a single and two walks with one out against Mark Lowe (2-7) in the eighth and Upton gave the Rays a 5-4 lead on his single to left.

TIGERS 11, INDIANS 3

CLEVELAND — Carlos Guillen hit two of Detroit's three home runs and the Tigers sent Cleveland to its season-high 10th straight loss.

Rick Porcello (14-9) allowed one run and six hits over five innings as the Tigers won their third straight.

BLUE JAYS 7, ORIOLES 3

TORONTO — Travis Snider homered and had two RBIs and Scott Richmond won for the first time since June 24 as Toronto completed a three-game sweep.

TWINS 8, WHITE SOX 6

RED SOX 9, ROYALS 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — David Ortiz homered and drove in four runs, and Josh Beckett allowed two runs over six innings to lift Boston.

Jason Bay and Jacoby Ellsbury both drove in two runs and Ortiz had a run-scoring single in Boston's six-run fifth inning off Luke Hochevar (7-11). Ortiz added his 25th homer in the eighth, a three-run shot to give Boston 90 wins for the third consecutive season.

NATIONAL LEAGUE AUSTON 3, CARDINALS 0

HOUSTON — Houston's Bud Norris went six innings in a 3-0 victory over St. Louis on Wednesday night, and the Cardinals missed a chance to win the NL

Central title.

The magic number for St. Louis dropped to one when Chicago lost in Milwaukee before this game ended. But Norris (6-3) didn't allow St. Louis to score for the second straight outing and Jose Valverde pitched the ninth for his 28th save.

PADRES 6, ROCKIES 3

DENVER — Will Venable homered and tied a career high by driving in four runs in San Diego's win over Colorado that snapped the Rockies' eight-game home winning streak.

The Rockies' lead in the NL wild-card race was whittled to four games over Atlanta.

BREWERS 3, CUBS 2

MILWAUKEE — Prince Fielder hit his 42nd homer to give him a majors-best 131 RBIs and Milwaukee rookie Chris Narveson struck out 10 for his first win as a starter.

BRAVES 5, METS 2

NEW YORK — Tim Hudson pitched six effective innings for his second win since major elbow surgery and Atlanta completed a three-game sweep.

COX TO RETIRE AS BRAVES MANAGER AFTER NEXT SEASON

NEW YORK (AP) — After 50 years in baseball, Bobby Cox figured the only way he would ever give up managing was to pick a specific time and announce it publicly. So that's what he did Wednesday, revealing his plans to retire as manager of the Atlanta Braves after next season.

Now comes the hard part: sticking to it. "There is a little bit of relief once you come to grips with announcing it," Cox said. "I've never lost the love to manage, period. But you have to make a decision. At my age, you have to make a decision. Somebody a little younger can start up."

The 68-year-old Cox, a four-time Manager of the Year, agreed to a one-year contract extension for 2010, the Braves announced before Wednesday night's game against the New York Mets. He will start a five-year consulting agreement to advise the team in baseball operations after he steps down as manager.

During an illustrious career on the bench, Cox guided Atlanta to 14 consecutive postseason appearances (1991-2005) and the 1995 World Series title.

Tiger only looking at one trophy at East Lake

ATLANTA (AP) — So many scenarios. So many good players. So much money on the line.

Tiger Woods is keeping it so simple.

He tees it up Thursday in the Tour Championship against a 30-man field at East Lake. His goal is to shoot the lowest score.

"You always have the same approach and same attitude that you try and win every tournament you enter," Woods said. "Whether it's a regular tour event, a playoff event, World Golf Championship, Players, whatever it may be, it's the same intensity. You bring the same attitude to play. ... You win it, and you take care of everything else."

Everything else includes a $10 million bonus — $9 million in cash — for capturing the FedEx Cup, which in its third season appears to have finally delivered a compelling conclusion.

Woods is the No. 1 seed by virtue of his five PGA Tour victories that put him atop the standings, and a sixth victory in a playoff event two weeks ago at the BMW Championship.

The next four seeds — Steve Stricker, Jim Furyk, Zach Johnson and Heath Slocum — don't have to look at a leaderboard. If they win the Tour Championship, they win the FedEx Cup.

The points can get confusing, and there are a couple of wild possibilities.

—Furyk and Padraig Harrington can capture the FedEx Cup without having won a single tournament all year.

AP photo

Tiger Woods speaks during a news conference after playing in a practice round for the Tour Championship golf tournament at East Lake Golf Club in Atlanta on Wednesday.

—Marc Leishman can win the FedEx Cup provided Woods finishes 10th or worse, and the next four seeds finish fifth or worse.

How did Leishman get in this position? Furthermore, who is Leishman?

He's a PGA Tour rookie from Australia with a strong swing and beautiful touch with the putter. He was on the verge of being eliminated from the playoffs outside Boston three weeks ago until making an eagle on the final hole. His only way into the Tour Championship was to finish third in Chicago, and he played bogey-free the final round with Woods at his side to tie for second.

—Slocum could win the FedEx Cup by winning the Tour Championship. He wasn't even sure he would make the 125-man field at the start of the playoffs until his wife did the math and realized he qualified at No. 124 by two points. A week later, he won The Barclays over a world-class cast of runner-ups — Woods, Harrington, Stricker and Ernie Els.

The Tour Championship

11 a.m., The Golf Channel

—And the most bizarre scenario of all? There could be two sudden-death playoffs on Sunday — one to decide the Tour Championship, another to decide the FedEx Cup. It might even be the same two players.

Imagine Furyk and Scott Verplank tied after 72 holes. They would have a playoff for the Tour Championship. If Verplank were to win, that would leave them tied in the FedEx Cup standings, and they would return to the par-3 18th for a playoff with a much bigger payoff.

Furyk has heard all the possibilities and is ready to stick a peg in the soggy turf of East Lake.

"The thing I probably haven't enjoyed for the whole week is the 'what if?'" Furyk said. "I've had people ask me, 'What if? What if? What if?' All the way down the line. It all doesn't really matter until we tie it up and go figure it out."

The points and possibilities might be hard to digest. Still, the Tour Championship is significant for the first time in six years, and suddenly is elevated in stature.

Miami trying to make it 'back' vs. Va. Tech

By Ralph D. Russo

winning four of five ... CALIFORNIA 34-30.

It's one of the most asked questions by college football fans and media members: Is (insert lagging program name here) "back?" — as in back to being one of the elite programs it once was.

Alabama has been back and forth a bunch over the last decade or so. Notre Dame was back in Charlie Weis' first two seasons, then gone again.

Michigan is already showing signs of being back after a year away. Nebraska has been trying to get back for almost a decade now. Every time the Huskers get close, well, see last week at Virginia Tech.

This week, Blacksburg, Va., is again the site of a possible "they're back" game as No. 9 Miami faces No. 11 Virginia Tech.

The Hurricanes (2-0) have already beaten two teams (Florida State and Georgia Tech) ranked in the preseason and cracked the top 10 of the AP poll for the first time since 2005.

If they move to 3-0 against the Hokies on the road, the 'Canes will grab hold of the Atlantic Coast Conference's Coastal Division race and talk of a national title run will ramp up heading into next week's home game against Oklahoma.

The Hurricanes, with five national championships since 1983, went 19-19 the past three seasons.

But Randy Shannon has stocked up on blue-chip recruits in his first two years as coach and that talent has produced the first two games of this season. Jacory Harris is the third-ranked passer in the country and a defense that allowed more than 400 yards rushing to Georgia Tech's option offense last season held the Yellow Jackets under 100 last week.

Miami might not be "back" yet, but it certainly looks as if it's on the way.

Favre says NFL fines for Jets 'very unfair'

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. — Brett Favre said Wednesday he believes the fines handed down by the NFL for his absence from last year's New York Jets injury reports were "very unfair."

Favre was asked by reporters for the first time about the $125,000 in penalties levied on the Jets organization ($75,000), general manager Mike Tannenbaum ($25,000), and former head coach Eric Mangini ($25,000).

"I just think it's wrong," Favre said. "They did everything that I felt they were supposed to."

Favre earlier this month revealed the process he and the Jets went through in assessing the health of his throwing arm last December. He played through a torn biceps tendon, and his performance suffered. The NFL investigated and announced the fines last week for Mangini's failure to list Favre on the injury report.

Favre said he discussed his condition with the Jets last year because he wanted the team to know he wasn't at his best.

"I felt like maybe there were some throws where I could've played better because of this injury," Favre said. "I just wanted to let them know that. I never asked them to put me on the injury report. I can't tell you how many times I probably should've been on the injury report. I practiced. I played. I knew I was going to play."

"I wanted them to know that I wasn't too proud to play just to play," Favre said he told Tannenbaum and Mangini, who now coaches the Browns, that he was sorry about the way the season went sour. Favre led the Jets to an 8-3 start and first place in the AFC East, but he threw nine interceptions down the stretch and the team lost four of its last five games to miss the playoffs.

VICK READY FOR FIRST REGULAR-SEASON GAME

PHILADELPHIA — After spending 18 months in federal prison and sitting out

Minnesota Vikings quarterback Brett Favre believes $125,000 in fines levied by the NFL for his absence from last year's New York Jets injury report were 'very unfair.'

the first two games as the final league penalty for his role in a dogfighting ring, Michael Vick is eligible to play his first regular-season game in 33 months when the Philadelphia Eagles host the Kansas City Chiefs on Sunday.

The three-time Pro Bowl quarterback was so excited Wednesday he ran full speed in the morning walk-through.

"I've been watching football from afar the last two years and this is a dream come true to me," Vick said.

His role is uncertain because the Eagles have a complicated situation at quarterback. Donovan McNabb did not practice Wednesday because of a broken rib that forced him to miss last Sunday's 48-22 loss to New Orleans.

Kevin Kolb would make his second straight start if McNabb, injured in the season opener at Carolina, can't play against the Chiefs. Kolb made his first NFL start against the Saints, throwing for 391 yards, two touchdowns and three interceptions.

Coach Andy Reid isn't sure whether Vick or Jeff Garcia would be the backup quarterback. Reid wouldn't even say that Vick is definitely playing against Kansas City. Vick said he will be in uniform, so that means he'll at least serve as the No. 3 QB. "One thing we do know is I'm going to be dressed up, so that's a great opportunity," Vick said. "This is Andy's team. He's a smart guy. He knows what to do and when he comes up with the game plan. If it doesn't include me, I'm cool. But, I will make sure that mentally I'm aware of what's going on and I'm ready in case something happens. You never know what can happen."

HASSELBECK COULD PLAY DESPITE BROKEN RIB

RENTON, Wash. — Just before listing injuries to 12 starters, a damning dozen that includes quarterback Matt Hasselbeck and is already putting the Seahawks' 2009 season in jeopardy, Jim Mora laughed. "OK, what I thought we could do is get the injury stuff out of the way, and then if we have any time left for questions we can get to that," Seattle's coach joked Wednesday.

Mora then launched into a four-minute monologue detailing the pile of pain, which he calls the worst situation he's had in 26 years of football.

Hasselbeck didn't practice, and may not at all this week because of his broken rib. Yet Mora said the three-time Pro Bowl quarterback is feeling better, "so we're not ruling him out at all" for Sunday's game against the Chicago Bears (1-1).

"But I'm not saying he's going to play, either, OK?" Mora added.

Hasselbeck watched backup Seneca Wallace run practice. Wallace, who gives the Bears a running threat to worry about, started eight games last season while Hasselbeck was out with a bad back. He is preparing as if Sunday will be his 13th career start for Seattle (1-1).

COWBOYS' ADAMS FINED $12,500 FOR PLAYS VS. GIANTS

IRVING, Texas — Cowboys left tackle Flozell Adams has been fined $12,500 by the NFL for kicking two New York Giants on Sunday, making it two straight games he's been fined.

Adams was punished not only for the second-quarter play that left Justin Tuck with a shoulder injury, but also for doing it to Osi Umenyiora in the fourth quarter.

Adams was flagged for kicking Tuck, but not for the swipe at Umenyiora. After the game, Tuck called it a "bush league play," and Adams shot back Monday, saying he didn't know Tuck was hurt, adding, "From a supposed kick? Tell him to stay up. It ain't my fault!"

Ex-Canes coach Coker back in football, on smaller stage

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Former Miami coach Larry Coker describes his fall from the leader of a college football powerhouse to the man in charge of a start-up program at the University of Texas-San Antonio in almost biblical terms.

Sort of like Moses, with a national championship ring. "I've been in the palace. I've been with kings and wealth, and I was able to hold up that crystal ball as a champion," he said. "Then there is the other side of the desert."

Cast into coaching exile in 2006 when the Hurricanes fired him following a season marred by violence, off-field troubles and more losses than Miami was used to, Coker arrived at UTSA this spring after wandering the college football landscape for two years in search of another chance.

He found one with the Roadrunners, who won't play their first game until 2011. UTSA hired the 61-year-old as its first football coach in March to build the program from the ground up.

The Roadrunners have yet to sign a single player, have no football facilities or a schedule for their first season ironed out.

Between a busy schedule of fundraisers to raise money for a fledgling program, Coker works out of an unremarkable office with barely enough room for two chairs. A football from Miami's national championship team above his desk is one of the few decorations.

Caregiver's grief began long before her husband's death

DEAR ABBY: I am responding to "Alone But Happy in Canada" (July 12), who feels guilty because she feels relieved following the death of her husband from a long, difficult illness.

though my husband's death has only just occurred. Our son put it best when he said at my husband's bedside, "I lost my dad several years ago, but my father died tonight." He, too, understands that his grief began a long time ago.

Everyone grieves differently, but I don't think grieving a loved one's loss BEFORE his or her death is uncommon. I've known several people who watched loved ones wither away into helpless, needy and miserable individuals. I can't think of one who didn't feel the same as "Alone But Happy."

disappear over a long time, losing the history you share together, making hard decisions alone, and rebuilding an identity not tied to the past. Every morning brings a new bout of grief from the moment of waking — every day another day you don't want to face.

— MOVING FORWARD
DEAR ABBY: Having to put another person's needs and wants before one's own can be very stressful. Not everyone is able to do that and stay pleasant and patient at all times. Fortunately, I found a local caregivers' support group. Our weekly meetings help us see that we are not alone in experiencing the trials and tribulations of family caregiving.

I have begun referring to it as "grieve-as-you-go guilt." A person grieves through the decline and eventual demise of a beloved mate, and when she fails to feel sadness, she substitutes guilt where she believes her grief should be. But actually she has been grieving all along, and needs to acknowledge that fact. Only then will she be able to enjoy not only her clean house, but her clear conscience as well.

Keeping healthy and planning ahead for yourself, not as a caregiver but as a participant in the "real world," is the only way to maintain sanity sometimes. Though I love my husband dearly, I look forward to having a life again that is not centered on his disease. No one should be made to feel guilty for restarting life when he or she has given so much.

For those who are laboring to do their best for their sick or disabled loved ones, let me suggest they find a Senior Information and Assistance office in their area. Another resource is the National Family Caregivers Association (www.thefamilycaregiver.org; phone (800) 896-3650). These may be helpful in allowing caregivers mental and physical relief by connecting them with hourly in-home care services.

— AZY IN WASHINGTON

DEAR AZY: You have been insightful. Other readers wrote wanting to offer reassurance to "Alone But Happy."

— DAY AT A TIME

DEAR ABBY: I also lost my husband of 35 years just a month ago. He endured several years of health problems and as his caregiver, I, too, felt a great sense of relief with his passing. I do not, however, feel guilty about it.

It is important that people experiencing this kind of stress get respite time to themselves, away from their care recipient, in order to be able to keep on helping them.

Read on:
DEAR ABBY: Your answer to "Alone" was appreciated by all caregivers, I'm sure. Nobody knows, unless they have walked that particular path, how difficult and lonely it is to watch a spouse

I realize that I have been grieving for several years already, as I knew this time would be coming. In many ways it is as if I am in the final stage of the process even

IF SEPTEMBER 24 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY:

Your desire to succeed may occupy every waking moment for the next several weeks. But because your ambitions might blind you to pitfalls, it is not a good idea to launch any significant project, business or relationship between now and December. During January you can make plans, make decisions and gather helpful advice from others because Lady Luck is likely to be looking over your shoulder. Hold off on making key changes or decisions during April and May because you will benefit from new information that comes to you in June.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can get cooperation from others late in the day, but you can set an example to be followed all day long. Put off major decisions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Numerous paths and choices can lead you in many different directions. Soar high like an eagle to see which one leads to success.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You'll be at your best with a partner. Your evening will be spent in pursuit of simple entertainment and minor amusements.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The right person by your side will make the time fly by effortlessly and the old salt mines will seem like a luxury vacation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Throw out the old routine and embrace radical new ideas. Your talent for discovering ingenious new techniques will bring you kudos.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Good news and friendly people could brighten your whole day. An exciting new acquaintance could lead to a bit of fun.

Today is Thursday, Sept. 24, the 267th day of 2009. There are 98 days left in the year.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Use a light touch when dealing with important issues. Humor lightens the workplace. Spend some time socializing at the water cooler.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Small projects are almost effortless today. Offer imaginative ideas and dynamic viewpoints to hardboiled problems.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Social butterflies can soar high. Use your gift of gab to loosen up your co-workers and make the workplace a little friendlier.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Too many cooks don't always spoil the broth. Today it will be better to be part of the group than to try and tackle tasks solo.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Don't slow down and try to catch up later. Keep up your pace and try to knock out as much work as you can. Act on your imagination.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"Believe me, wise men do not say, 'I shall live to do that'; tomorrow life's too late: live today."
— Martial

Consider the play in four spades today, a contract that looks likely to be comfortable until the heart ace turns up offside. The defenders lead three rounds of hearts, forcing you to ruff in hand. Have you formed a plan yet?

Well, if you ruffed the third heart low (sacrificing your only entry to dummy), you can kiss your contract goodbye. You must ruff high, then plan how to dispose of either your club or diamond loser.

One chance is simply to rely on the club finesse after ruffing a fourth diamond high in dummy; but that is no better than a 50 percent chance. Can you do better?

An alternative approach would be to guess to lead out the club ace, then the queen, hoping to draw trumps ending in dummy, then pitch your diamonds on the two winning clubs. Alas, the defenders can lead a third round of clubs when in with the king, ruffing away one of your potential parking places for a diamond loser. It would be unlucky to run into this bad club break, but hardly unexpected.

Better still is to cash precisely one high trump, then lead out the club queen. If West wins the trick, you will win the return and unblock the club ace, then draw trumps ending in dummy and claim. If West ducks, you play the club ace, then three rounds of diamonds. You can now arrange to ruff the diamond loser in dummy for your 10th trick.

ANSWER: Your partner's bids suggest 16-18 and real clubs and spades (else he would have opened one no-trump or jumped to two no-trump at his second turn). With less in high cards, he would have simply passed two clubs. You have decent playing strength, enough to move to game, and I guess that three no-trump will play as well as five of the minor. So bid three no-trump
