CAFO questions near Castleford

Residents concerned over site expansion

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

Neighbors of a dairy set to be converted into a heifer operation near Castleford are attempting to appeal Twin Falls County's approval of the facility. But first, the nearly 20 individuals who signed an appeal form filed with the county's Planning and Zoning Department must convince county commissioners that they filed the appeal on time. On Sept. 23, P&Z Administrator Rick Dunn approved a request from John, Agnes and B.J. Schilder to increase the number of animals permitted at an 80-acre confined-animal feeding operation just a couple of miles southeast of Castleford. The Schilders purchased the site, formerly a dairy, and plan to turn it into a heifer operation, in the process increasing its permit from 420 to 999 animal units, said P&Z Director Bill Crafton. Requests for fewer than 1,000 animal units don't require approval by the Planning and Zoning Commission. The permit will allow the equivalent of more than 1,110 animals to be housed on the land, a significant increase. But, Crafton noted, heifer operations require less water and produce less waste than dairies. And though a state CAFO siting team initially rated the site a high risk, the Schilders agreed to a number of measures that significantly lowered that score, he said. Still, a number of nearby residents are concerned about the operation. Their appeal filed Thursday lists 36 different concerns, ranging from the facility's setbacks and water use to the conduct of Dunn and Crafton — who, it alleges, tried to make each resident file a separate $400 appeal and tried to "intimidate" them by saying the appeal had to be turned in sooner than required. It also argues that Dunn does not have the authority to approve small CAFOs, an issue Crafton said was sorted out and legally upheld nearly a decade ago after a couple of court challenges. Some arguments regarding procedures and the need for a public hearing reference the

Otter to make M.V. appearances this week

By Damon Hunzeker

Anybody who enjoys governors and seismographs may want to be in Jerome on Wednesday. In a series of Magic Valley appearances, Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter will observe a 3 p.m. Idaho Education Network demonstration of a new seismograph at the Jerome High School Library.

"We're one of 10 high schools in the state that are connected with a high-speed, fiber-optic system that allows us to interact with educational programs all over the world," Principal Eric Anderson said.

Otter

Because of an education grant, JHS is one of two schools in the state with high-tech seismograph equipment.

"We'll have a camera on our science teacher that we'll be transmitting to the high school in Weiser, so they'll at least get an idea of how it works, and we'll be able to share data with other schools. The governor is just going to observe the demonstration," Anderson said.

It's also part of an effort to expand the network of connected schools.

"Eventually, the state will connect more high schools. They've only had the funding for 10 so far," Anderson said, "but we hope to be connected to schools all over the nation."

In August, he said, the system was used for a less-educational purpose — providing JHS students with a virtual tour of the Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio.

Otter will also tour the Hilex Poly Co. plant at 10:30 a.m. in Jerome and address the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce at noon in the Canyon Crest Dining and Event Center. The topic is "Building Our Economy: The Idaho Way."

TIDYING UP

MEAGAN THOMPSON/Times-News

Twin Falls farmer Art Requa moves bean plants that had been strewn about his field back into neat rows in preparation for the thresher. Requa said he worked most of the day on Thursday to correct what the wind had done to the rows of beans. He said he isn't sure what will come of the beans harvested this year due to the snow and rain that fell on the crop last week, leaving plants at the bottoms of the rows damp from the moisture.

Weapons failed U.S. troops during Afghan firefight

By Richard Lardner
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — In the chaos of an early morning assault on a remote U.S. outpost in eastern Afghanistan, Staff Sgt. Erich Phillips' M4 carbine quit firing as militant forces surrounded the base. The machine gun he grabbed after tossing the rifle aside didn't work either.

When the battle in the small village of Wanat ended, nine U.S. soldiers lay dead and 27 more were wounded. A detailed study of the attack by a military historian found that weapons failed repeatedly at a "critical moment" during the firefight on July 13, 2008, putting the outnumbered American troops at risk of being overrun by nearly 200 insurgents.

Which raises the question: Eight years into the war against the Taliban in Afghanistan, do U.S. armed forces have the best guns money can buy?

Despite the military's insistence that they do, a small but vocal number of troops in Afghanistan and Iraq has complained that the standard-issue

M4 rifles need too much maintenance and jam at the worst possible times.

A week ago, eight U.S. troops were killed at a base near Kamdesh, a town near Wanat. There's no immediate evidence of weapons failures at Kamdesh, but the circumstances were eerily similar to the Wanat battle: insurgents stormed an isolated stronghold manned by American forces stretched thin by the demands of war.

Army Col. Wayne Shanks, a military spokesman in Afghanistan, said a review of the battle at Kamdesh is under way. "It is too early to make any assumptions regarding what did or didn't work correctly," he said.

Complaints about the weapons the troops carry, especially the M4, aren't new.

Army officials say that when properly cleaned and maintained, the M4 is a quality weapon that can pump out more than 3,000 rounds before any failures occur.

The M4 is a shorter, lighter version of the M16, which made its debut during the Vietnam war. Roughly 500,000 M4s are in service, making it the rifle troops on the front lines trust with their lives.

Sen. Tom Coburn, R-Okla., a leading critic of the M4, said

MORNING BRIEFING

Pat's Picks

Three things to do today

Pat Marcantonio

• In these economic times, my pick is to make money. The "Building Your Financial Portfolio on $25 a Month (or less)" class is taught by Bobbie and Eric Christensen who have appeared on PBS' "Smart Money" and many TV and radio shows. It is offered by the College of Southern Idaho. Cost is $40 and $15 if you want to buy the book. What an investment. It starts Tuesday in Twin Falls. Call 732-6442 to register.

• If you want to be adventurous without taking on Wall Street, take the Mesa Falls Scenic Byway. It starts at Ashton — I know, it's way out there — but along the 28-mile byway you'll find the Lower and Upper Mesa Falls and Henry's Fork of the Snake River. There are also trails, boardwalks and viewing areas. Get going before the snow flies — again.

• The Company of Fools presents "The Laramie Project: 10 Years Later" at 6 p.m. with a live webcast hosted by Glenn Close followed with a staged reading at Liberty Theatre, 110 N. Main St. in Hailey. Some 120 theater companies around the world are presenting the play on the 11th anniversary of Matthew Shepard's murder. Tickets are $15 and proceeds go to the Matthew Shepard Foundation.

Have your own pick you want to share? Something that is unique to the area and that may take people by surprise? E-mail me at patm@gmagicvalley.com.

Council to take up golf-course name, appoint committee members

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

The Twin Falls City Council will consider appointees to various city boards, a new name for the Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course and a slew of routine business items at its 5 p.m. meeting today.

The council in May approved a request from the Golf Advisory Commission to hold a contest to rename the course, receiving 74 entries with 63 different names by the Aug. 1 deadline. Golf commission members in September, however, decided to drop all of the contest entries in favor of "Twin Falls Golf Club," fearful that some other golf course would end up using "Twin Falls" in its name. The commission also recommended the city council approve holding a random drawing for the people who entered the contest, with the new prize being a 2010-season punch card worth $150.

Along with a request to appoint Gary Rowland to the golf commission, the council will also be asked to fill a new seven-member commission that will track and provide reimbursements to private developers who install public-works infrastructure. Reimbursements are made by subsequent developers or property owners who connect to the new systems.

The council will also review two deferral agreements, including one request from Riverhawk Subdivision and the Twin Falls School District to delay building a road providing maintenance access to the public sewer line in an area being developed near the new Canyon Ridge High School.

One of a number of items on the council's consent calendar is a request to approve the 19th annual Christmas in the Nighttime Sky, the charity event and fireworks show sponsored by Kimberly Nurseries and set for Nov. 27, the day after Thanksgiving. A little more than $2,500 has already been included in the Twin Falls Police Department's overtime budget for the event, which requires 11 officers, four non-sworn department employees and members of the Citizens on Patrol, reserve officers and other law enforcement agencies.

The amended agenda available on the city's Web site also includes a closed-door session at the end of the meeting, citing the exemption to conduct deliberations concerning labor negotiations or acquire an interest in real property not owned by a public agency.

The meeting will be held at the council chambers, 305 Third Ave. E.

section of the county code for larger CAFO operations than the Schilders'.

John Schilder could not be reached for comment about the document in time for this report.

The appeal will now be passed on to the board of county commissioners, who will also decide if it was filed in time to be considered.

County code requires appeals to be filed 15 days "after notice of the decision." Crafton argued that Sept. 23 is counted as the first day, placing the deadline as last Wednesday. One of the appellants, Amy Scott, said the group believes the wording should have allowed appeals one day later, when their appeal was filed on Thursday.

Some of the issues such as the water right would have to be addressed by other agencies, Crafton said, as the county does not have jurisdiction over them.

during the colder winter months."

The letters, similar to ones mailed to parents in Minidoka County on Sept. 28, said that students should cough into their elbows to reduce exposing others to germs and if a student has a fever of 100 degrees or higher they should wait 24 hours before returning to school.

Forms were also given to parents to sign if they intend to get their children immunized during the H1N1 clinics that will be held at the school, so the health district can determine how many people will participate.

Although the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recommend vaccination against the H1N1 virus, the vaccinations are not mandatory, the letter says. The consent form given to parents does not obligate parents to follow through with the vaccinations if they change their mind. Children are expected to require two doses of the vaccination spaced three weeks apart. There will be no cost for the vaccinations.

Smyer said the district has not yet been notified of the clinic schedule. Officials with the South Central Public Health District, which will distribute the vaccines, told the Times-News late last month that they may not be able to hold a mass immunization clinic until around Oct. 24.

"It is my understanding the number and timing of the arrival of the doses is driving the schedule," Smyer said. "They are pooling doses until they have sufficient quantities to conduct the clinics."

Minidoka County School District Superintendent Scott Rogers said the issue does not just affect Minidoka and Cassia counties but other districts as well. He said school officials are in daily contact with the health district, as well as local doctors and nurses.

"Our attendance has also been slipping mostly due to the flu," Rogers said.

During the week ending Oct. 2 the district's had 87 percent attendance compared to an average of 94 percent.

"We've taken many preventative steps regarding the situation," Rogers said.

The district implemented an H1N1 plan for dealing with sick children and staff earlier this year.

Weapons

Thursday the Army needs to move quickly to acquire a combat rifle suited for the extreme conditions U.S. troops are fighting in.

U.S. special operations forces, with their own acquisition budget and the latitude to buy gear the other military branches can't, already are replacing their M4s with a new rifle.

"The M4 has served us well but it's not as good as it needs to be," Coburn said.

Battlefield surveys show that nearly 90 percent of soldiers are satisfied with their M4s, according to Brig. Gen. Peter Fuller, head of the Army office that buys soldier gear. Still, the rifle is continually being improved to make it even more reliable and lethal.

Fuller said he's received no official reports of flawed weapons performance at Wanat. "Until it showed up in the news, I was surprised to hear about all this," he said.

The study by Douglas Cubbison of the Army Combat Studies Institute at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., hasn't been publicly released. Copies of the study have been leaked to news organizations and are circulating on the Internet.

Cubbison's study is based on extensive interviews with Phillips and other soldiers who survived the attack at Wanat. He describes a well-coordinated attack by a highly skilled enemy that unleashed a withering barrage with AK-47 automatic rifles and rocket-propelled grenades.

The soldiers said their weapons were meticulously cared for and routinely inspected by commanders. But still the weapons had breakdowns, especially when the rifles were on full automatic, which allows hundreds of bullets to be fired a minute.

The platoon-sized unit of U.S. soldiers and about two dozen Afghan troops was shooting back with such intensity the barrels on their weapons turned white hot. The high rate of fire appears to have put a number of weapons out of commission, even though the guns are tested and built to operate in extreme conditions.

Cpl. Jonathan Ayers and Spc. Chris McKaig were firing their M4s from a position the soldiers called the "Crow's Nest." The pair would pop up together from cover, fire half a dozen rounds and then drop back down.

On one of these trips up, Ayers was killed instantly by an enemy round. McKaig soon had problems with his M4, which carries a 30-round magazine.

"My weapon was overheating," McKaig said, according to Cubbison's report. "I had shot about 12 magazines by this point already and it had only been about a half hour or so into the fight. I couldn't charge my weapon and put another round in because it was too hot, so I got mad and threw my weapon down."

The soldiers also had trouble with their M249 machine guns, a larger weapon than the M4 that can shoot up to 750 rounds per minute.

Cpl. Jason Bogar fired approximately 600 rounds from his M-249 before the weapon overheated and jammed the weapon.

Bogar was killed during the firefight, but no one saw how he died, according to the report.

Six vie for Filer City Council seats

By John E. Swayze
Times-News correspondent

FILER — The Nov. 3 elections for three seats on the Filer City Council will give voters a field of candidates with varying experiences and perspectives to choose from.

Incumbent Councilmen Don Barkley and Bob Parent are seeking re-election for their four-year seats and face challenger Tara Wiggins. Running for one two-year term are incumbents Rick Dunn and challengers David Gaither and Jenine Coelho. City council members are paid $300 a month.

Barkley, 74, believes his 12 years of service on the council have given him a record of community involvement voters can trust for another four years.

"I've lived in the city of Filer for 26 years and still think I have something to offer," he said. "In 2005, we finished our water system upgrade and now we're working on the sewer. That's something I would like to see through to completion."

In anticipation of continued residential growth, a $12.5 million bond levy was passed in 2006 to fund the construction of a membrane bioreactor sewer treatment facility that will replace the current system of settling ponds.

Moving such large-scale projects from concept to reality means interacting with government entities on the state and federal level, and the former Filer police chief said his time on the council has given him the opportunity to develop needed relationships.

Parent, 54, is a 12-year veteran of the council and said he's realized that patience is the key to success in city government.

"You've got to be willing to sit back and see how things unfold a little before making decisions," he said. "Realistically, I think we've done a good job financially and with our infrastructure. Instead of being at the mercy of the contractor, we're in a buyer's market and ahead of other communities facing some of the same problems."

Last year's $7.50 increase to the monthly $40 sewer rate and raising the $25 water rate to $27.50 are two decisions Parent, a math teacher at Filer Middle School, says has placed the city in a better position.

Challenger Tara Wiggins, 27, hopes her bid for a four-year term will be the start of something new on the council.

Wiggins and her husband moved their family to Filer in 2001. As the mother of three, one of the real estate agent's biggest concerns is the city's ability to keep pace with population demands and sustain quality education.

"I don't think there'll be much growth before Pole Line (the U.S. Highway 93 interchange project) is finished but we need to get the sewer updated and be looking to the future," she said. "Our schools are going to have to grow and we need to bring the city and school district together."

Incumbent council appointee Dunn, 55, was selected to complete a vacancy left by the 2008 resignation of Darin Stoddard.

"It's been a real learning experience and we started a lot of things with the sewer treatment plant, land use and zoning issues," Dunn said.

He is the administrator for Twin Falls County's planning and zoning and building departments, and also sits on the board of directors of the Idaho State Board of Building Officials. He said Filer may have to re-examine arsenic issues in the future.

"We've been extremely fortunate that we have three water sources that can be blended, but we may have to come up with a different solution down the road," he said.

Coelho, 46, works as a real estate agent and administrative assistant with the College of Southern Idaho Foundation.

She said she's seen what works in other towns and would use that knowledge to help encourage business growth to balance out recent residential expansion. She believes one solution might be grant funding incentives to attract business owners to downtown.

"I have two teenagers and would like to see more community-oriented activities for the youth," Coelho said. "We need something like a theater ... so parents wouldn't have to drive their kids to Twin Falls."

She said she is concerned about the recent increases to monthly city sewer and water rates.

"I don't know the rationale for the decision, but there might be a way to alleviate (costs)," Coelho said.

Gaither, 57, is looking to get his feet wet with a two-year term on the council.

"I've never done this kind of thing before and I'm kind of in the dark about issues facing the city," he said. "I'm running to find out if this is something I could or would enjoy doing before committing to a full four years."

Before retiring to Filer in 2007, Gaither worked on setting up data centers and developed programming in Washington, D.C., and London.

"I know how to handle big projects, set up meetings, deliver goals, build consensus and figure out compromises," Gaither said. "It seems the city doesn't know quite how to do some of this. Its comprehensive plan was finished two years ago but instead of being adopted, it just sits on a shelf."

Voting for the council seats will take place from noon to 8 p.m. Nov. 3 at the Filer Fire Department, 300 Main St.

Air Force base seeks to expand over Nev.

ELKO, Nev. (AP) — Officials at Mountain Home Air Force Base in Idaho say Nevadans have nothing to fear about a plan to expand the base's airspace deeper into their state.

Bryon Schmidt, chief of airspace management at the base, told Elko County commissioners last week that the plan would not have much of an effect on their county or Humboldt County.

The proposal follows a request by Hill Air Force Base in Utah to extend a supersonic operations area by 1.6 million acres north of Ely in eastern Nevada.

That earlier plan has been criticized by environmentalists, who say it would increase the frequency of sonic booms and litter from training operations.

Schmidt said the latest proposal involves pilots who fly at supersonic speeds above 30,000 feet and the chances of hearing a sonic boom will be slim to none.

Pilots can fly on lower routes, but can't go below certain altitudes unless they have completed special requirements.

Schmidt said the Air Force already uses aerial training routes over Elko and Humboldt counties, including the towns of Midas, Tuscarora and Mountain City.

"We are asking to operate in the same way, but move a little more east and south," Schmidt said.

"We don't know what kind of noise complaint could arise," he said, adding the base will address issues on a case-by-case basis.

If approved by the Federal Aviation Administration, the expansion would increase the airspace by nearly 30 percent.

Base officials have said the expansion is necessary to provide better training to pilots as they prepare for deployments to Iraq and Afghanistan.

Commissioner Charlie Myers said most commission members are veterans who are supportive of the U.S. military.

Commissioner Warren Russell said he wanted the base to commit to making an update to the county at least once a year.

Environmentalists and others scuttled a similar proposal by the Idaho base in the 1990s. That prompted the Air Force to retool and scale back that request, and it was later approved.

Base officials say the current proposal would double the effectiveness of the airspace and the training offered in Idaho, making the base comparable to Nevada's Nellis Air Force Base.

4-Hers make their own ethanol

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — Twelve-year-old Real Weatherly thumbed her nose at fossil fuels this week as she created what could be the fuel of tomorrow in a plastic soda bottle.

Fossil fuels belong with the dinosaurs, she declared. There are fuels like biofuel that could be a boon to a world running short on petroleum.

"It's experiments like these that give us clues about what a car might be able to run on besides gasoline," she said.

Weatherly and her 12-year-old friend Riley Mae Clark took part in the national 4-H Biofuel Blast on Wednesday.

It was part of the second annual National Youth Science Day for 4-H, the nation's largest youth development organization.

But the 4-H office in Hailey is offering youth the opportunity to try the experiment for themselves through the month of October.

The idea is to show students how cellulose and sugars in plants such as sorghum corn can be converted into ethanol fuel.

To do that, Weatherly and Clark added yeast to different forms of sugar, including Karo syrup, granulated sugar, brown sugar and honey, in a plastic soda bottle. They then poured hot water into the bottles and

KAREN BOSSICK/For the Times-News

Riley Mae Clark and Real Weatherly, both seventh-graders at Wood River Middle School, conduct experiments to see whether Karo syrup will outperform granulated sugar or honey when it comes to making biofuel.

TRY IT YOURSELF

You can try the experiment for yourself through the end of October between 9 a.m. and 6 p.m. weekdays at the 4-H office in Hailey. The University of Idaho Co-Op Extension is located at 302 1st Ave. S. Phone: 208-788-5585. To conduct the experiment at home or in your own organization: www.4-H.org/NYSD.

capped the bottles with balloons.

That accomplished, they shook the bottles, releasing CO2 into the balloons. The balloons gradually filled with air as the yeast broke down the sugar, creating energy and releasing carbon dioxide and ethanol — a biofuel.

"It actually releases ethanol that you can smell the next day," said Amanda Kumiko Kent, associate extension educator for the University of Idaho's Blaine County Extension Office.

Kent said it's the hope of 4-H leaders that these kinds of experiments will hook kids on science and maybe inspire them to become bio-fuel scientists.

Weatherly didn't need much convincing.

"I have some experiment books at home and yesterday was real fun at school — we dissected geese," she said.

Tough choices for feds giving out broadband money

N. Idaho tribe among many groups vying for billions

By Joelle Tessler
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The federal government will soon start handing out the first $4 billion from a pot of stimulus funds intended to spread high-speed Internet connections to more rural communities, poor neighborhoods and other pockets of the country clamoring for better access. The challenge is that the government has received $28 billion in requests.

So the reviewers at the Commerce and Agriculture Departments who will award the broadband money must make hard choices. The 2,200 applications each envision something different — more fiber-optic lines, for example, or computer labs or municipal wireless networks. But they all promise that their proposals will create jobs and bring new economic opportunities.

What follows are snapshots of four projects representing a cross section of the broadband stimulus hopefuls. It's too soon to know which plans will win federal grants or loans, either in this round of funding or in the next, as the total broadband stimulus expands to $7.2 billion. Those that do get picked may not get the full amount they are seeking.

But perhaps one — or more — of these projects has a chance.

For the Coeur d'Alene Indian tribe in the Idaho panhandle, the stimulus money could mean a lifeline to the outside world.

The tribe is asking for $12.2 million for a ring of fiber-optic lines that could connect up to 3,500 homes on one side of its rural reservation, which is about half the size of Rhode Island.

Right now, the tribe's landline broadband options are limited. The local cable company has pulled out of the market. And the phone company, Verizon Communications Inc., offers digital subscriber line (DSL) service to just a small slice of the reservation.

Although the tribe launched its own wireless network in 2005 with the help of Agriculture Department funding, that network reaches less than half the reservation and slows to a crawl whenever too many people get online at once.

Valerie Fast Horse, the tribe's information technology director, says stimulus money would let the Coeur d'Alene Indians build a network that is "more stable and more reliable" and could deliver faster connections at lower prices.

The tribe's wireless network currently offers top speeds of 1.5 megabits per second, comparable to standard DSL service available elsewhere. But it charges users about $100 a month, about four times the standard price. The proposed fiber network would deliver a 20-megabit connection — faster than what most cable subscribers get — for $100 a month. Or tribe members would be able to get a 1.5-megabit connection for $25 a month.

Fast Horse envisions all sorts of uses for the fiber lines, including distance learning. Tribe members already use video conferencing to participate in classes at North Idaho College, about 35 miles away, when the roads are too icy to drive. But that requires them to travel to the tribe's education center, which has a landline connection to the Internet. A fiber-to-the-home network would let tribal members take classes without leaving their kitchens, she says.

It would also enable Coeur d'Alene members to consult with medical specialists around the country. And it would help the tribe preserve its language and culture, by allowing more members to access the tribe's video-sharing Web site, Reicast. Among other things, the site features clips of powwows and online tutorials with tribal elders speaking their native language.

Clearwire Corp., a company pioneering the use of a next-generation wireless technology known as WiMax, is upfront about the fact that some markets don't make sense for telecom providers that need to show a profit.

So Clearwire is asking for $19.4 million to build a high-speed wireless network in a handful of poor Detroit neighborhoods that it otherwise might not serve anytime soon.

Although those neighborhoods have more than 800,000 people, high unemployment and poverty levels make for a tough business case. But federal dollars would change the equation, says John Bunce, president of the Clearwire unit applying for stimulus funding.

And with that seed money as a starting point, the company pledges to spend its own capital to expand the wireless network across metropolitan Detroit, including more lucrative suburban markets.

Gay rights advocates march on D.C., divided on Obama

By Brett Zongker
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Thousands of gay rights supporters marched Sunday from the White House to the Capitol, demanding that President Obama keep his promises to allow gays to serve openly in the military and work to end discrimination against gays.

Rainbow flags and homemade signs dotted the crowds filling Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the White House as people chanted "Hey, Obama, let mama marry mama" and "We're out, we're proud, we won't back down." Many children were also among the protesters. A few counter-protesters had also joined the crowd, which stretched several blocks by the afternoon.

Jason Yanowitz, a 37-year-old computer programmer from Chicago, held his daughter, 5-year-old Amira, on his shoulders. His partner, Annie, had their 2-year-old son, Isiah, in a stroller. Yanowitz said more straight people were turning out to show their support for gay rights.

"If somebody doesn't have equal rights, then none of us are free," he said. "For all I know, she's gay or he's gay," he added, pointing to his children.

Some participants in the National Equality March woke up energized by Obama's blunt pledge to end the ban on gays serving openly in the military during a speech to the nation's largest gay rights group Saturday night.

The chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee said Sunday that Congress will need to muster the resolve to change the "don't ask, don't tell policy" — a change that the military may be ready for.

"I think it has to be done in the right way, which is to get a buy-in from the military, which I think is now possible," said Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich.

Winter descends on Yellowstone

CODY, Wyo. (AP) — Winter has descended on Yellowstone National Park in full force, blanketing the region that includes northwestern Wyoming, southern Montana and eastern Idaho with snow.

Managers of America's first national park say late-season visitors should expect winter weather and driving conditions, including temporary road closures and delays.

That goes for the next few days, when storm systems could drop additional snow and could make driving on the park's roads

A darker side of Columbus emerges in U.S. classrooms

By Christine Armario
Associated Press writer

TAMPA, Fla. — Jeffrey Kolowith's kindergarten students read a poem about Christopher Columbus, take a journey to the New World on three paper ships and place the explorer's picture on a timeline through history.

Kolowith's students learn about the explorer's significance — though they also come away with a more nuanced picture of Columbus than the noble discoverer often portrayed in pop culture and legend.

"I talk about the situation where he didn't even realize where he was," Kolowith said. "And we talked about how he was very, very mean, very bossy."

Columbus' stature in U.S. classrooms has declined somewhat through the years, and many districts will not observe his namesake holiday today. Although lessons vary, many teachers are trying to present a more balanced perspective of what happened after Columbus reached the Caribbean and the suffering of indigenous populations.

"The whole terminology has changed," said James Kracht, executive associate dean for academic affairs in the Texas A&M College of Education and Human Development. "You don't hear people using the word 'discovery' anymore like they used to. 'Columbus discovers America' because how could he discover America if there were already people living here?"

In Texas, students start learning in the fifth grade about the "Columbian Exchange" — which consisted not only of gold, crops and goods shipped back and forth across the Atlantic Ocean, but diseases carried by settlers that decimated native populations.

In McDonald, Pa., 30 miles southwest of Pittsburgh, fourth-grade students at Fort Cherry Elementary put Columbus on trial this year — charging him with misrepresenting the Spanish crown and thievery. They found him guilty and sentenced him to life in prison.

"In their own verbiage, he was a bad guy," teacher Laurie Crawford said.

Of course, the perspective given varies across classrooms and grades. Donna Sabis-Burns, a team leader with the U.S. Department of Education's School Support and Technology Program, surveyed teachers nationwide about the Columbus reading materials they used in class for her University of Florida dissertation. She examined 62 picture books, and found the majority were outdated and contained inaccurate — and sometimes outright demeaning — depictions of the native Taino population.

The federal holiday itself also is not universally recognized. Schools in Miami, Dallas, Los Angeles and Seattle will be open; New York City, Washington and Chicago schools will be closed.

In today's viral world, who keeps a civil tongue?

By Ann Gerhart
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Late last month, Charisse Carney-Nunes fired up the computer at her home in Washington to check her e-mail. Her brain already was on morning drive time: breakfast for the kids, her day's work at a government agency. She glanced down at her screen, then froze.

"Ms. Carney-Nunes," began the e-mail from Michelle Malkin, a best-selling and often inflammatory conservative writer with a heavily trafficked Web site. "I understand that you uploaded the video of schoolchildren reciting a Barack Obama song/rap at Bernice Young elementary school in June. I have a few quick questions. Did you help write the song/rap and teach it to the children? Are you an educator/guest lecturer at the school? Did you teach about your book, 'I am Barack Obama' at the school? Your bio says you are a schoolmate of Obama. How well-acquainted are you with the president?"

Carney-Nunes looked at the time stamp — 6:47 a.m. — and closed the file without replying. She knew Malkin had driven criticism of President Obama's back-to-school speech, streamed nationwide, as an attempt to indoctrinate students. Now Malkin was asking about a YouTube video of New Jersey public school children singing and enthusiastically chanting about Obama from a Black History Month presentation.

By nightfall, Carney-Nunes' name was playing on Fox News and voice mails on her home phone and cellphone were clogged with the furious voices of strangers. The e-mails kept pouring in, by the hundreds, crammed with words spam filters try to catch: She was a "nappy-headed" traitor; she would lose her job and go to jail; she was

LONG HISTORY OF POLITICAL ATTACKS

The Washington Post

- The Rev. Charles Coughlin often railed against the "great betrayer and liar Franklin Double-Crossing Roosevelt."
- Left-wing activists flouted decorum in their relentless pursuit of Bush administration officials such as Condoleezza Rice.
- Talk show host Glenn Beck accused President Obama of putting the country on a path "to socialism."
- Alexander Hamilton paid a price for his rhetorical attacks on Aaron Burr — Burr killed him in a duel.
- South Carolina Republican Rep. Joe Wilson shouted "You lie!" during Obama's health-care speech to Congress.

Leni Riefenstahl, the filmmaker who glorified Hitler.

It has been nearly a year since Barack Obama, running as a uniter and not a divider, was elected president by the largest margin in 20 years. The loop on cable news of thousands of beaming faces in Chicago's Grant Park has given way to a summer and fall of thousands of other faces contorting in defiance and fear. A congressman yelled "You lie!" at the president on national TV. A liberal bit off the finger of a conservative during a confrontation over public health insurance.

On Friday, just hours after Obama was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize, Republicans and Democrats were at their battle stations again.

The nation's political discourse seems sour, angry, even dangerous; "uglier than it's ever been" is a phrase often volunteered — as if President George W. Bush had never been depicted as Hitler, declared a dunce and heckled by Code Pink during his second inaugural address.

Critics are using the YouTube video of the children's song to argue that Obama is becoming a brainwashing dictator. To raise money for the Republican National Committee, Chairman Michael S. Steele has compared the song to "the type of propaganda you see in Stalin's Russia."

Carney-Nunes, swept up in a viral tornado of vitriol, had nothing to do with the children's song. She was doing an author's reading in the school that day.

Raucous rhetoric against presidential power is a tool of both ends of the political spectrum, of course, most vociferously used by the party out of power.

"In a free and republican government, you cannot restrain the voice of the multitude. Every man will speak as he thinks," wrote George Washington, "or more properly, without thinking."

And that quote is right there on one of Glenn Beck's Web sites.

"There are enough good people who believe in the flag and the Bible to seize and control the Government of America! ... We must make our choice in the presence of atheistic Communist influences! It is Tammany or Independence Hall! It is the Russian primer or the Holy Bible! It is the Red Flag or the Stars and Stripes! It is Lenin or Lincoln — Stalin or Jefferson!"

That rousing call to action against a president could be stripped straight from the Web sites of today's Tea Party protesters, and it brought lusty cheers from 10,000 Americans outraged over what they perceived as invasive federal power.

It was the summer of 1936, and Franklin Delano Roosevelt was seeking his second term as president. He already had closed the banks in an effort to pry the country out of the Depression and established the sweeping safety net of the New Deal. Gerald L.K. Smith, the minister who delivered that jeremiad at a third-party convention in Cleveland, was merely a warm-up act for the invective to come from the Rev. Charles Edward Coughlin. An early Roosevelt supporter, Coughlin turned on the president and depicted him as a tool of the devil in weekly radio addresses that reached 40 million people. Still, Roosevelt won by a landslide.

"From time to time, I go back to find the golden age of civility," said Michael Barone, lead author of the authoritative Almanac of American Politics, "and it has proved elusive." He cites Coughlin. He cites fistfights over policy at the mid-century Georgetown dinner parties so often lauded for their bipartisan bonhomie. "I'm not sure we are in a greater era of incivility."

A supporter of Thomas Jefferson once called John

Adams "a hideously hermaphroditical character." Former Treasury Secretary Alexander Hamilton called Vice President Aaron Burr "bankrupt by redemption except by the plunder of his country," an attack so heinous that the men duelled, and Hamilton died.

Go through the nation's history, and the noise and heat in public political discourse have always been there, rising with the cycles of economic distress, immigration and cultural upheaval — illustrated in recent decades by the contentious judicial confirmation fights. Conservatives say those fights began with the Democratic-led verbal savaging of Supreme Court nominee Robert J. Bork in 1987.

Smart grid gets island test in Maui resort area

By Mark Niesse
Associated Press writer

HONOLULU — A 4-square-mile patch of Maui in the nation's most fossil-fuel dependent state soon will be home to a new kind of power grid, one that saves energy by turning off household appliances when electricity is expensive and makes better use of wind and solar power.

General Electric Co. recently announced it would test its "smart grid" technology in the luxury resort community of Wailea, hoping to reduce peak electricity consumption there by 15 percent by 2012.

Planners envision installing a new kind of power meter in homes — a wall-based unit that can monitor how much electricity is being used by various appliances and turn them off at peak times during the day or night when demand for energy is higher, and thus costlier to consume. The project also would upgrade the utility's computer systems so that it can integrate more renewable energy.

There are about 70 smart grid pilots nationwide, including Miami, Seattle, Houston and Boulder, Colo. But Wailea is one of the only resort communities where the test is being conducted.

"There's a lot of opportunities for us to improve our knowledge of what's using power, and making it easier for us to shut off the power when we're not around," said Bob Gilligan, vice president for transmission at GE Energy. "Most consumers aren't really aware of how much energy they're using at any time of day."

For example, if customers knew what times electricity was most expensive, they could automatically adjust air conditioning and refrigerator temperatures, or they could choose to delay turning on the dishwasher until power demand drops.

That would save money for power users. It would also reduce the strain on the grid, allowing the electric utility to absorb more renewable energy from wind turbines and solar panels.

Located on the slopes of Haleakala, Wailea was chosen for the smart grid because rapid construction growth in the area and its isolation make it a fertile testing ground, said Peter Rosegg, spokesman for Hawaiian Electric Co., a shareholder-owned utility and the parent of Maui Electric Co.

Johnson rolls to victory, Sprint Cup lead

By Will Graves
Associated Press writer

FONTANA, Calif. — Jimmie Johnson is back in control of NASCAR's Chase for the Championship.

The three-time defending Sprint Cup champion easily pulled away from Jeff Gordon following a restart with three laps left to win the Pepsi 500 on Sunday at Auto Club Speedway for his fifth victory of the year and 45th overall.

The win was Johnson's fourth at the 2-mile oval and sent a message to the rest of the contenders he has no plans of giving up his spot atop the series easily.

"What else can you say? They're the best out there," Gordon said. "They've won the last three championships. They're going to be hard to beat for this one. Really, unless they make a mistake, I don't see how they lose it."

Johnson, who led 126 laps, dominated the second half of the race but had to sweat out a series of double-file restarts following a number of late-race collisions, including an eight-car pileup that forced a 22-minute red flag with six laps remaining.

Waiting out the delay, Johnson worried he didn't have enough car to hold off Gordon. He shouldn't have. His No. 48 Chevrolet roared away from his Hendrick Motorsports teammate on the restart as he quickly put the rest of the field in his rearview mirror to vault him into the points lead for the first time all season.

"That's it, that's what we want," Johnson said. "We've just got to keep chipping away."

Juan Pablo Montoya was third, his fourth straight top-five finish. Mark Martin, who started the day with an 18-point lead over Johnson, was fourth and now trails Johnson by 12 points heading into Saturday night's race at Charlotte.

Tony Stewart rallied from an early pit-road speeding penalty to finish fifth.

Gordon briefly slipped by Johnson in the later stages but held out no real hope of catching him.

U.S. team wins the Pres. Cup

SAN FRANCISCO — Tiger Woods provided a fitting conclusion Sunday to a perfect week at the Presidents Cup, for him and an American team that remains perfect at home.

With a flop shot out of the trees to set up one last birdie, Woods won the point that clinched the cup and made him only the third player in the Presidents Cup to win all five of the matches he played.

His 6-and-5 victory over Y.E. Yang was a tiny token of revenge for Woods blowing a final-round lead to him in the PGA Championship this summer.

Even so, it was the first time in either the Presidents Cup or Ryder Cup that Woods earned the decisive point.

And he didn't even know it.

"Oh, perfect," Woods said, an apt choice of words.

"All I knew was I was trying to get my point, and I was 5 up trying to make it 6."

Phil Mickelson wrapped up another anticlimactic finish with a 7-foot birdie putt for a 2-and-1 victory over Retief Goosen, leaving Lefty unbeaten (4-0-1) in the Presidents Cup for the second time in the last three contests.

Broncos top Pats in OT to go 5-0

By Eddie Pells

DENVER — On a day that was all about Broncos history, this might ring a bell: A 98-yard, fourth-quarter drive to save the game and get a city thinking Super Bowl.

Kyle Orton moved Denver from its 2 to the end zone to tie it Sunday, then Matt Prater kicked a 41-yard field goal in overtime for a 20-17 victory over New England that made rookie Broncos coach Josh McDaniels a winner over his old boss, Bill Belichick.

The Broncos wore mustard-yellow jerseys and vertically striped socks to celebrate their 50th anniversary, then played better than they looked — improving to 5-0 for the first time since 1998, their last Super Bowl season.

Orton threw for 330 yards and two scores and did his best John Elway impression. McDaniels waved to Belichick after the game-winning field goal, then pumped his fist over and over as he ran toward the stands where his family sits. And the defense — it held New England (3-2) scoreless in the second half and looked a lot like the Orange Crush of yore.

Denver's fourth-quarter drive certainly wasn't "The Drive" — Elway's classic, 98-yard march that helped beat the Browns 23-20 back in 1987 — but it will go down as one of the best in this franchise's history.

This start?

Easily the most surprising since the Broncos took the field half a century ago. Even the 1977 Super Bowl team — the team that coined the term "Orange Crush" — was viewed as an up-and-comer back then, something the turmoil-wracked Broncos certainly were not heading into 2009.

Trailing 17-10 with 9:59 left, Orton was at his patient best during the game-tying drive. A 14-yard completion to Jabar Gaffney, a screen to Knowshon Moreno that sprung for 27. A 7-yard completion to Eddie Royal, who finished with 10 catches for 90 yards.

Brandon Marshall, who scored the game-winner last week against Dallas, did the honors this time, too, catching a pass on the sideline, then spinning and breaking a tackle for an 11-yard score that tied the game.

AMERICAN LEAGUE DIVISION SERIES

Angels rally to sweep Red Sox Yankees polish off Twins

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press writer

BOSTON — Torii Hunter emerged from the visitors' clubhouse at Fenway Park to spray champagne over the fans and family gathered there. Erick Aybar did him one better, handing over bottles of bubbly to those who came from California to see the Los Angeles Angels go for the sweep.

History gave no reason to hope for such a celebration. The Angels and Vladimir Guerrero shrugged off their postseason failures and swept away the Red Sox on Sunday, scoring three runs off Jonathan Papelbon in the ninth inning to beat Boston 7-6 and advance to the AL championship series.

It was the first postseason sweep in Angels franchise history. And they did it against the team that has knocked them out of the playoffs the previous four times they met.

"I told you guys earlier: It's going to be a different scene," Hunter said in the clubhouse afterward. "Vladdy came through. That's probably one of the biggest hits of his career. They've been waiting for him to do it, and he did it."

Papelbon was one strike away from extending the series with three different batters, but Aybar singled on a two-strike pitch, Chone Figgins walked after fouling off a full-count offering and Bobby Abreu fouled off three straight pitches before doubling in one run.

MINNEAPOLIS — After so many October misses, Alex Rodriguez delivered the playoff performance his talent demanded.

Rodriguez and Jorge Posada hit seventh-inning home runs to spoil Carl Pavano's opportunity to frustrate New Yorkers one more time, and the Yankees advanced to their first AL championship series in five years with a 4-1 victory and sweep of Minnesota on Sunday night.

Mariano Rivera closed out Game 3 — the last baseball game at the Metrodome — to preserve Andy Pettitte's record-tying 15th career postseason win.

Game 1 of the ALCS against the Los Angeles Angels will be at Yankee Stadium on Friday night. The teams were 5-5 against each this season. The Angels swept Boston earlier in the day.

"It's exciting," Rodriguez said. "We were very disappointed last year when we went home, and ownership got us some good players. We came out and played like a team, like a group of brothers."

This pitching duel between former teammates Pettitte and Pavano ended with another first-round playoff victory in Minnesota for the Yankees, who also eliminated the Twins here in 2003 and 2004.

Hasselbeck, Seattle shred Jags

SEATTLE — Matt Hasselbeck returned from being sidelined two games with broken ribs to throw four touchdown passes, and the Seahawks rolled to their biggest home shutout in 25 years with a 41-0 win over Jacksonville on Sunday.

The Seahawks (2-3) were still missing seven starters, including three-fifths of their starting offensive line. Didn't matter: Hasselbeck was back.

COWBOYS 26, CHIEFS 20 OT

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Miles Austin scored the winning touchdown in overtime on a 60-yard catch-and-run to cap a huge game in place of the injured Roy Williams. Austin had 10 catches for 250 yards as the Cowboys survived numerous mistakes against the winless Chiefs.

Austin also had a tackle-breaking 59-yard touchdown catch to give the Cowboys (3-2) a 20-13 lead with 2:16 left in the fourth quarter. On both plays, he slipped the grasp of cornerback Maurice Leggett and then made safety Mike Brown miss.

FALCONS 45, 49ERS 10

SAN FRANCISCO — Roddy White had a 90-yard catch-and-run for a touchdown and a 31-yard TD reception, and Michael Turner ran for three scores to end San Francisco's five-game home winning streak.

CARDINALS 28, TEXANS 21

GLENDALE, Ariz. — Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie returned an interception 49 yards for a touchdown with 2:20 to go and the Arizona defense stopped the Texans three times at the 1-yard line in the final minute.

Matt Schaub brought the Texans back from a 21-0 halftime deficit to tie the game and had completed 11 straight when Rodgers-Cromartie, playing with a fractured right index finger, stepped in front of intended receiver Kevin Walter.

BENGALS 17, RAVENS 14

BALTIMORE — Carson Palmer threw a 20-yard touchdown pass to Andre Caldwell with 22 seconds left to cap an 80-yard drive fueled by Baltimore penalties.

All five of Cincinnati's games this season have been decided by seven points or fewer. It appeared Palmer would be in place of injured Correll Buckhalter — and finished with 88 yards rushing.

Rookie Jeremy Maclin had two TD catches and the lopsided score allowed Michael Vick to take extra snaps at quarterback in the fourth quarter. He completed his first pass in 33 months and had an 11-yard run.

Fewer uninsured kids in Idaho; government didn't do it alone

Here's one Idaho got right: While the number of Americans without health insurance has been rising for a decade, the picture is different in Idaho, where the percentage who lack insurance has stayed roughly the same — except when it comes to children.

Far more of Idaho's children were covered by health insurance in 2008 than in 1999, according to the latest U.S. Census data. The percentage of uninsured kids dropping to 8.9 percent last year, from 19.8 percent in 1999.

"Government programs really saved the day for children — that's really about the one difference," Harriet Shaklee, a University of Idaho professor and Extension family development specialist, recently told the Spokane, Wash., Spokesman-Review. "There is a program specifically for children, and there are private funds specifically for promoting that."

And those private funds were the key.

"Back in 2001 and 2002, the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation provided just a lot of outreach, in the form of television and radio commercials and such," said Tom Shanahan, spokesman for the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare. "And basically what we saw was just a huge increase in children."

Based in Princeton, N.J., the RWJF is the country's largest philanthropy devoted exclusively to health and health care.

Many of those who responded to the promotions didn't qualify for the Children's Health Insurance Program — they qualified for regular Medicaid.

"For every four calls we got about CHIP, three of the people actually got in Medicaid because their incomes were lower," Shanahan said. "So we saw a huge increase, mostly in regular Medicaid, that's mostly all children."

CHIP is a joint federal-state program in which the federal government pays 80 percent of the cost and the states 20 percent, started in 1997 to insure children whose parents made too much to qualify for Medicaid but not enough to afford insurance.

Americans are used to looking to government to solve problems, but that's a job government isn't always very good at.

It often requires flexibility, initiative and an ability to concentrate resources — things the private sector usually does better.

In this case, the RWJF came along at exactly the right time. It's a textbook lesson on the type of approach that public policymakers should consider more often.

Our view:

Government is an efficient provider, but not always a good problem-solver. That's where the private sector comes in.

The anger industry's e-mail

It has come to our attention, via e-mail, that "the Democratic Congress" decreed that Social Security recipients will not get a cost-of-living increase next year.

Tom Blackburn

Truly, there will be no increase in Social Security payments in 2010. Just about every newspaper reported that probability months ago. The current Congress, however, has nothing to do with it.

The e-mail doesn't pass the smell test. Democrats started Social Security over Republican opposition. Democrats expanded it to the point of insolvency. Republicans decried it, except once when they passed a drug benefit in the middle of the night in a bill no one had time to read. Why would Democrats suddenly, in 2009, abandon senior citizens?

The dull, old facts: In 1975, Congress gave up control over Social Security payment increases. Democrats voted for change because they saw how nutty they get in election years, Republicans because they don't like Social Security. The new law tied increases to the inflation rate, the Consumer Price Index (CPI). This year, for the first time since then, the CPI fell. The law provides that in such cases Social Security payments remain unchanged in the following year.

But does Congress love you? It does. Social Security recipients have a co-pay for Medicare Part B. The co-pay is deducted from their Social Security. This year, despite the overall inflation rate falling, the cost of medical care continues to rise because the American health care system is impervious to downward pressure on prices. So the co-pay is due to increase. That would give seniors lower Social Security benefits. The House overwhelmingly voted not to collect that increase next year. The Senate will agree, never fear.

It is worth noting that the CPI is based on spending by the general population, but expenses are not alike for young and old. Youngsters shop at a mall; seniors shop at a pharmacy. Because nothing holds down the cost of medications, seniors usually are hit harder than the CPI would indicate. The AARP has lobbied Congress for a separate CPI for seniors, to no effect.

Having it, I can tell you that old age doesn't make a heckuva lot of sense. But I can also tell you that, next only to investment bankers and professional athletes we are the most coddled group in America. Children get lip service; we get monthly checks. With 15.1 million people paying for the recent financial follies by being unemployed, and after 21 straight months of rising unemployment, it would be ungracious for seniors to gripe about not finding a little extra in their checks next January.

The e-mail going around tries to get them to gripe. It is written to inflame rather than explain. It is another product or byproduct of what Melinda Henneberger, editor-in-chief of politicsdaily.com, named "the anger industry."

A lot of money is raised for political campaigns by ratcheting up hatred toward people and symbols of the other side. The anger industry takes stereotypes and biases and magnifies them to make our country a nastier place.

E-mail needs to be recognized as mass gossip. It must be treated accordingly and not swallowed whole. It is used for propaganda because the users know people are prone to believe gossip and pass it on.

Now that you know the facts, though, ask yourself: Who first put out that e-mail about Social Security? He knew that there would be no cost-of-living increase next year. How did he know? Does he know the law? Did he read about it in a newspaper? But if he knew, why did he blame "the Democratic Congress" for something it had no part in?

And ask yourself why whoever forwarded the e-mail to you found it "frightening" or "informative," as he failed to smell it, much less check it out, before passing it on. Be sure to tell the forwarder your answer to that question.

We owe thanks to Twin Falls' Armenians

Six months ago I am sure I was like most Twin Falls residents. I knew almost nothing about the country of Armenia. Within the past few months I have had the great fortune to have met some recent Armenian emigrants to our Twin Falls community. They are a fascinating people with a rich culture, strong family values, and great pride in their history.

Not that the Armenians have had an easy time of it. In the early part of the last century as our community was being formed, communities in Armenia were under a brutal policy of genocide by the Ottoman Turks who were allies of the Germans during World War I. Many historians point to the persecution of the Armenians by the Turks and world's ambivalence to it as a direct link to the Nazi persecution of Jews and others during WWII.

How did this effect Twin Falls? Many of our local men and women were called to fight their way through Europe during World War II and free the world from Nazi aggression and liberate the many concentration camps the Nazis set up. These veterans saw the horrors and brutality first hand and have had to live with those memories their entire lives. Today our local servicemen and servicewomen still serve in foreign lands to fight the aggressive policies of brutal regimes and to protect the innocent.

City Councilmen Trip Craig, Lance Clow, Don

Hall and Greg Lanting showed what great leadership they have given this community by voting to allow our new Armenian friends to plant a tree and donate to us a plaque to put in our city park for us to learn a very valuable lesson. This is not a trade of a tree for some form of sympathy. It is the gift of a tree and most importantly the gift of a plaque that we can all learn from and hope we can prevent this cycle of man's inhumanity to man.

We owe thanks to our local Armenians for their generosity.

Woman offers copies of '49 Carey yearbook

My parents once owned a cafe in Carey.

The Class of 1949 sold my parents space in the Carey yearbook. If there are any '49ers who would like a copy of the yearbook, I will copy it for them.

It is intact except the cover — I loved that off years ago looking at it. I spent many happy summers in Carey and would like to do this for the community.

OTHER VIEWS

Here's what Idaho newspapers are saying about ...

... a choice or not?

Lewiston Tribune

Idaho Democratic Party Chairman Keith Roark recently expressed the right message on behalf of the loyal opposition. He credited part of the state's budget woes to a decade and a half of Republican tax cuts for the well-connected and the well-heeled.

Rising unemployment and a tough economy are the primary culprits. But so are GOP's tax changes. One leading example was reducing income taxes for businesses and wealthy Idahoans in 2001. Another was shifting schools off property tax support and onto the sales tax in 2006, which also helped businesses and wealthy families, to the detriment of lower and middle-income Idahoans.

Both moves left less money for state programs. And in both cases, a recession was looming ...

Pointing that out does little good unless Roark's party produces a candidate for governor.

... Idahoans have no alternative to a ruling philosophy that holds most if not all government deserves to be trimmed. The same goes for Idaho schools ...

Without a Democratic gubernatorial candidate, no one can challenge the prevailing political view that most taxes are bad, but the best ones regressively squeeze consumers and wage-earners.

A Democratic standard bearer could question the GOP's schizophrenic view of the marketplace — which smiles upon competition for workers and small businesses, but assures any industry big enough to employ a lobbyist of more tax breaks ... and all in the name of economic development.

Not all Republicans subscribe to these views. But enough do, especially those who dominate the GOP's primary elections as well as influence its legislative leadership ...

Is this where most Idahoans wish to be? Are they traveling this path by default?

Only a robust, gubernatorial campaign will tell. Conventional wisdom says running as a Democrat is a fool's errand because Idaho is so reliably Republican ...

Democrats contend they're progressing toward successfully recruiting a candidate who can wage a credible campaign against Otter. More important than some arbitrary deadline is finding the right individual and then launching his candidacy properly ... There's still time, they say.

But not much.

... educate, don't mandate

Post Register, Idaho Falls

Let's give credit to the

There is a great temptation, given the collective nature of our health care system, to try to convince people to live safer and healthier lives, and that's a good thing.

Coalition for a Healthy Idaho, a consortium of businesses, medical professionals and educators that wants to protect the public from secondhand smoke.

The coalition presented some hard evidence ... concerning secondhand smoke in the Treasure Valley. It tested the air in 19 bars that allow smoking and found pollution inside was 36 times greater than outside. That equals a lot of lung butter for the folks who work in and frequent those establishments.

That coalition's findings are well-timed. Last month, a comprehensive study showed that American,

Canadian and European cities implementing smoking bans had an average of 17 percent fewer heart attacks in the first year when compared with cities that did not implement a ban.

Preventing secondhand smoke from reaching innocent lungs is a worthy goal ... Idaho taxpayers spend roughly $300 million per year to combat smoking-caused illnesses, according to the Campaign for Tobacco-Free Kids. That works out to $542 per household ...

And so the question must be asked: Should Idaho expand its smoking ban to include bars, the one major group exempted?

We think not.

Rexburg Republican state Sen. Brent Hill, who championed Idaho's 2004 ban on smoking in most public places, left bars out of his bill for one very good reason. Children aren't allowed in them.

Hill's intentions were excellent and appropriate. He sought to protect innocent children from breathing harmful cigarette smoke in public places such as restaurants and around the entrances of large gathering places like shopping malls and hospitals.

Hill correctly assumed that adults frequenting places that don't allow minors could take care of themselves. Don't like smoke? Exercise your freedom not to frequent or work in places that allow it.

There is a great temptation, given the collective nature of our health care system, to try to convince people to live safer and healthier lives, and that's a good thing.

The coalition's study and the publicity surrounding it might convince some Idaho tavern owners to go smoke-free. We hope it does ...

Even if the freedom in question is the freedom to kill yourself.

Why business is sitting on its hands on health care

WASHINGTON — One of the intriguing mysteries of this year is why the initial broad support from American business for overhauling the health care system has not translated into more than a handful of votes from Republicans in the House and Senate.

As a rule, when the business community decides it wants something in Washington, Republicans listen and respond. Much of their funding comes from the corporate sector and their philosophy attunes them to the bottom-line concerns of those who live in the world of market competition.

When this year's health care debate began, there was every reason to think that much of the corporate world had moved off the opposition that helped doom the Clinton reforms of 1993-94. The intervening years had seen medical insurance bills for companies, as well as individuals, soar far faster than inflation, forcing many firms to cut back their employees' coverage or even abandon it.

The auto companies and many others complained that they were losing sales to foreign competitors who did not face the cost of health insurance, and were paying the price in their bottom line. The Obama White House recognized the opening and reached out to business, striking deals with hospitals, pharmaceuticals and doctors.

In the last few days, such notable Republicans as former Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, former Wisconsin Gov. and Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson and California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger all have urged their party to back reform, rather than settle for the status quo.

But far more common in the Capitol is what I heard from Rep. Roy Blunt of Missouri, the former GOP whip. "There has been no real pressure from business" to move the legislation forward, he said, and growing skepticism about what business can expect from any reforms. "The House and Senate (Democratic) leaders say they are not bound by any agreements the White House has made," Blunt said.

Rep. Fred Upton of Michigan, a moderate Republican with close ties to business, said, "I've not been lobbied" by any corporate supporters of reform. "They are preoccupied by deficits and debt."

Smart lobbyists such as former Reagan White House chief of staff Ken Duberstein, former Rep. Vin Weber and Karen Ignagni, who represents the health care insurers, offer a variety of reasons for the seeming gap between business and the GOP members. Weber and Duberstein both said they hear congressional Republicans expressing distaste for the business groups that have cut deals with Obama. Ignagni said more and more businessmen have grown leery that they may be stuck with the bill for Democratic plans.

Spokesmen for the Business Roundtable and the Committee for Economic Development, two corporate groups that early on called for reform, said many others in business worry about the overall cost of the program, and the possibility it will segue into a single-payer, government-controlled scheme. As a matter of principle, others oppose mandates for employers to provide insurance or for individuals to buy it.

And several of these people, after asking to speak off the record, made the point that while business has no choice but to make its best accommodation with the Democrats now in power, congressional Republicans are motivated primarily by a desire to reverse those Democratic majorities.

"They remember how defeating Clinton's health reform set the stage for taking over Congress in 1994," said one pro-reform consumer lobbyist.

"Their gamble is that history can repeat itself."

It is not a single factor, then, that explains why many parts of business and the Republicans don't seem to be on the same page. Some of the pro-reform business groups have had second thoughts as the shape of the proposed legislation has become clearer. Few business leaders are lobbying actively for the bills nearing floor votes, and such key players as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce are vocally opposed.

And congressional Republicans are rejecting the pro-reform arguments from business, either because they scorn their erstwhile allies who are making deals with the Democrats or because they have decided that "just say no" may offer them more political rewards.

How President Obama became organized labor's lackey

President Obama says the big problem in Washington is that politicians focus on pleasing special interests at the expense of the general public. But his curious definition of "special interests" exempts one key political force: organized labor.

Even during a recession, the public is ambivalent toward organized labor. In September, a Gallup poll found that 48 percent of Americans approved of unions. This was an 11-percentage-point drop from the previous year's approval rating and the lowest recorded since Gallup started asking the question in 1936. In 2008, just 12 percent of all workers belonged to unions, and the number of unionized private-sector employees was even smaller, at 7.6 percent.

So why, then, does organized labor hold more political power today than it has in decades?

In part, it's thanks to Obama. The president has put on his Santa Claus cap and lavished unions with gift after gift. Days after taking office, he issued three executive orders reversing Bush-era labor policies. In February, he approved a stimulus bill that contained "buy American" provisions. In a move that would have made Jimmy Hoffa proud, the $400 billion omnibus spending bill that Obama signed into law in March eliminated funding for pilot programs allowing Mexican trucks in the United States as mandated by the North American Free Trade Agreement.

In June, the president oversaw a restructuring of General Motors that left the UAW owning 17.5 percent of the company. The union is GM's second-largest shareholder (the largest is Uncle Sam). Early in September, in a speech to the AFL-CIO convention in Pittsburgh, Obama said he was "standing behind" the Employee Free Choice Act, which would make it easier for workers to organize by seriously diminishing the secret ballot in union elections. And on Sept. 11, the president imposed a 35 percent tariff on Chinese tire imports, a policy straight from the wish list of the United Steelworkers.

Now, a cynic might say that Obama feeds labor a steady diet of goodies in order to secure its backing for health care reform, or maybe to reward it for its efforts in the 2008 election. But it's just as likely that Obama thinks higher unionization will lead to middle-class stability.

The problem with this argument is that despite the recession, the middle class has done pretty well during the period of low unionization. Don't take my word for it. When Obama's budget director, Peter Orszag, ran the Congressional Budget Office, he released studies that showed the average income of the poorest families grew by 35 percent between 1991 and 2005, and there was no substantial income volatility recorded between 1980 and 2003.

The costs of a heavily unionized work force outweigh the benefits.

Once a workplace is unionized, it's more difficult to fire unproductive workers, and thus much harder to hire good ones. In their new book, "Rich States, Poor States," Arthur Laffer, Stephen Moore and Jonathan Williams rank all 50 states based on economic performance over the last decade. Seven out of the 10 best performing are right-to-work states. Eight of the 10 worst performing are not.

Nor is it an accident that as union membership has declined, global markets have become increasingly integrated and the price of consumer goods has fallen. Unions seek to close markets to bid up wages. This is good for the union members but lousy for the rest of us, because it means we pay higher prices for the stuff we buy.

When union membership was at its height in the 1950s, the American economy was highly regulated and dominated by men in gray flannel suits who worked at corporate behemoths like GM and GE. Today, union membership is at a low, and the global economy encourages diversity, individuality, adaptability and innovation. Not only U.S. citizens but people around the globe are richer. They live longer. They have more options than ever before. Would we really want to trade all this for a 1950s-style economy?

The best thing Obama could do for the middle class is to pursue economic policies that create jobs. Unfortunately, he's been doing the exact opposite by playing to organized labor. The rest of us will foot the bill.

U.S. choppers bring aid in stricken Philippine city

BAGUIO, Philippines (AP) — U.S. Marine CH-46 helicopters loaded with rice, sardines and drinking water flew Sunday into a stricken Philippine mountain city where supplies are running short after landslides triggered by a storm blocked roads and buried dozens of residents.

Three days after tons of mud and rock cascaded down hillsides in Baguio because of heavy rains, rescuers were still digging for survivors. Meanwhile, panic buying of canned goods emptied several stores in the city, and authorities were forced to ration gasoline.

"There is nearly zero gasoline supply now, and we're running low on food," city police chief Agrifino Javier told The Associated Press.

But as Tropical Depression Parma blew out late Saturday after drenching the country's north for a week, the overwhelmed government, helped by the U.S. military, was able to step up relief efforts.

Back-to-back typhoons in the past two weeks have killed more than 600 people in the northern Philippines, posing a severe test to the authorities. Hundreds of thousands are still displaced from their homes, and the damage caused runs into hundreds of millions of dollars.

Attacks demonstrate Taliban resurgence in Pakistan

By Ravi Nessman
Associated Press writer

ISLAMABAD — A week of terror strikes across Pakistan, capped by a stunning assault on army headquarters, show the Taliban have rebounded and appear determined to shake the nation's resolve as the military plans for an offensive against the group's stronghold on the Afghan border.

The 22-hour attack on Pakistan's "Pentagon" in the city of Rawalpindi, which ended with 20 dead Sunday, was the third terror attack in a week to shake this nuclear-armed nation. It demonstrated the militants' renewed strength since their leader was killed by a U.S. missile strike in August and military operations against their bases.

The U.S. has long pushed Islamabad to take more action against Taliban and al-Qaida militants, who are also blamed for attacks on U.S. and NATO troops in Afghanistan, and the army carried out a successful campaign against the militants in the Swat Valley in the spring.

But the army had been unwilling to go all out in the lawless tribal areas along the border that serve as the Taliban's main refuge. Three offensives into South Waziristan since 2001 ended in failure and the government signed peace deals with the militants.

Pakistani commandos raided their own army's headquarters Sunday to free 30 people held hostage by Islamist fighters who staged a brazen attack on the compound while wearing military uniforms.

On the heels of the Swat victory, the military launched a campaign of airstrikes on the militants in Waziristan and in recent weeks officials said they were preparing a full offensive there.

That was before the embarrassing attack on army headquarters bolstered militants' assertions they are ready to take on the military, and threatened to deflate the army's newfound popularity.

In the wake of the siege in Rawalpindi, the government said it would not be deterred. The military launched two airstrikes Sunday evening on suspected militant targets in South Waziristan, killing at least five insurgents and ending a five-day lull in attacks there, intelligence officials said.

"We are going to attack the terrorists, the miscreants over there who are disturbing the state and damaging the peace," Information Minister Qamar Zaman Kaira said. "Wherever they will be, we will follow them. We will pursue them. We will take them to task."

In London, U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton said the insurgents are "increasingly threatening the authority of the state, but we see no evidence they are going to take over the state." She and British Foreign Minister David Miliband said there was no sign Pakistan's nuclear arsenal was at risk.

Series of car bombs kills 19 in western Iraq

By Rebecca Santana
Associated Press writer

BAGHDAD — A series of car bombings killed 19 people in western Iraq on Sunday, in attacks that spotlight an uptick in violence in Anbar province, once a hotbed of the insurgency that has since become a showcase for restoring peace.

The province was the scene of some of the most intense fighting by U.S. troops during the insurgency. Violence tapered off significantly after local tribes decided to align themselves with U.S. forces instead of al-Qaida in what is widely considered to be one of the key turning points of the Iraq war.

A reinvigorated insurgency would pose a grave danger to Iraq's fragile stability as it prepares for crucial parliamentary elections early next year.

The explosions Sunday occurred in Ramadi, the capital of Anbar province about 70 miles west of Baghdad. According to a local police official, a parked car exploded near the Anbar province police headquarters and the provincial council building.

The second car bombing took place as police and bystanders rushed to the scene to help, while a third car exploded about an hour later at the gates to the Ramadi hospital, the police official said.

Police and hospital officials spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to speak to the media.

One bystander, Musaab Ali Mohammed, said he was buying cigarettes from a nearby shop when he heard a big explosion and saw smoke billowing out from the parking lot.

Priest who lived with leprosy now a saint

By Frances D'Emilio
Associated Press writer

VATICAN CITY — A 19th-century priest whose courageous work with leprosy patients in Hawaii has been likened to the efforts of those battling the stigma of AIDS was elevated to sainthood Sunday by Pope Benedict XVI, along with four other Catholics he hailed as heroes of holiness.

Among the 10,000 pilgrims packing St. Peter's Basilica was Hawaii resident Audrey Toguchi, an 80-year-old retired school teacher whose recovery from lung cancer a decade ago stunned her doctor and was ruled a miracle by the Vatican.

Toguchi has credited her survival to praying to Belgium-born Jozef De Veuster, also known as Father Damien, who himself died from leprosy in 1889 after contracting the disease while working with ostracized patients living on Molokai island.

Some 40,000 faithful who couldn't fit inside the vast church filled St. Peter's Square on a warm, sunny morning. Many women from Hawaii wore headpieces made of roses and large beaded necklaces over floral-print loose gowns.

Among the five Benedict added to the church's roll call of saints is French nun Jeanne Jugan, who helped the elderly, including some abandoned by their families. Jugan, also known as Marie de la Croix, was "an authentic Mother Teresa ahead of her time," Vatican Radio said. Her Little Sisters of the Poor order of nuns today runs homes for impoverished old people worldwide. She died in 1879.

Toguchi and her doctor, Walter Chang, joined in one basilica procession, and two leprosy patients participated in another.

The new saints had heeded Jesus' call to "the heroism of sanctity," sacrificing themselves for others without "calculation or personal gain," the pope said.

"Their perfection, in the logic of a faith that is humanly incomprehensible at times, consists in no longer placing themselves at the center, but choosing to go against the flow and live according to the Gospel," Benedict said in his homily.

Official delegations included King Albert II and Queen Paola of Belgium; U.S. President Obama's new envoy to the Vatican, Miguel H. Diaz; and Hawaii Sen. Daniel Kahikina Akaka. Poland's president, France's prime minister and Spain's foreign minister also attended.

Key Dem wants boost in forces in Afghanistan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. mission in Afghanistan is in "serious jeopardy" and needs more troops to turn the tide against an increasingly potent Taliban insurgency, the head of the Senate Intelligence Committee said Sunday, putting her at odds with an influential Democratic colleague on military matters.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein's views are more closely aligned with those of key Republicans than members of her own party. Sen. Carl Levin, chairman of Senate Armed Services Committee, urged a more methodical approach that begins with crafting a new, comprehensive strategy for Afghanistan.

"I'm saying at this time, don't send more combat troops," said Levin, D-Mich., who wants the emphasis to be on strengthening Afghanistan's own security forces so they can bear a greater share of the security burden.

But Feinstein, D-Calif., whose post gives her access to sensitive information about the war's progress, said delaying the reinforcements also puts the forces already in Afghanistan at greater risk. She pointed to an Oct. 3 battle in north-eastern Afghanistan in which eight U.S. soldiers were killed during an enemy attack on their outpost.

The diverging opinions came as President Obama and his war council wrestle with how many more troops might be needed in the 8-year-old Afghanistan conflict. Key to the deliberations are whether to focus the fighting more narrowly on al-Qaida or more broadly on Taliban insurgents.

Obama's military commanders are pressing him to escalate the war despite slipping U.S. support for the fight. Army Gen. Stanley McChrystal, the top U.S. commander in Afghanistan, is believed to have presented Obama with a range of options, from adding as few as 10,000 troops to — the general's strong preference — as many as 40,000. There are already about 68,000 American forces in Afghanistan.

Braving cold and old age

Chuck Breault, left, and his brother, John, wind their way to the top of Galena Summit. The 35-mile ride started in Ketchum, and the riders encountered freezing temperatures along the way.

ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News

Chuck Breault, 65, left, of Twin Falls and his brother, John Breault, 67, of Venice, Calif., tackle the ride to the top of Galena Summit on Oct. 2. They were riding in the Sawtooth Cycle Challenge Bike Ride and Race to benefit the Leukemia & Lymphoma Society of Idaho.

Two brothers reap the benefits of long-distance cycling

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

Many Wood River Valley residents spent Oct. 2 avoiding the bitter cold, but brothers Chuck and John Breault were pedaling up Galena Summit.

The 35-mile ride wasn't the first for the two seniors. They meet up for long-distance rides every year, not only strengthening their brotherly bond but reaping the benefits that cycling can give to older bodies.

Chuck, 65, and John, 67, started their long distance cycling in 2001. John lives in Venice, Calif., and Chuck lives in Twin Falls.

"Every summer, we try to get together," Chuck said. The two meet up to go on long-distance rides, and their previous conquests have included three passes in Wyoming and riding across Nevada.

"We just said we're getting old, we'd better start doing something," Chuck said.

This month's Galena Summit ride was for charity. The Sawtooth Cycle Challenge raised money for the Leukemia & Lymphoma Society. The brothers saw the ad in a cycling magazine and decided to make the ride this year's challenge.

Eric Snow, fitness director at YMCA Twin Falls, said that cycling can provide seniors with a great aerobic workout while being easy on the joints. It also strengthens core and lower body muscles, Snow said, "which as we age, is a huge thing when it comes to balance and preventing falls."

If seniors — or others — are interested in starting long-distance cycling, Snow recommended starting slowly, and adding distance as your body becomes more accustomed to the exercise. Also, new cyclists should make sure their bikes are fitted properly, ensuring a comfortable and safe ride.

Not interested in biking up mountains in the freezing cold? Try a spinning class, Snow suggested. It offers the same benefits in a controlled environment.

But Chuck and John are a little more hard-core.

They brave the weather and road conditions and monitor their heart rates, altitude and distance covered.

"It keeps us fairly fit," John said.

Breast cancer awareness uses sex to sell message

By Solvej Schou
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — A woman in a skimpy white bikini sashays next to a swimming pool. Onlookers gawk, men's tongues roll and music blares in the background.

The camera zooms in slow motion to her jiggling chest as a message spreads across the screen: "You know you like them/Now it's time to save the boobs."

It may resemble a beer commercial, but it's really a public service announcement for Toronto's annual Boobyball party to benefit the charity Rethink Breast Cancer, and it's gone viral, with more than 350,000 hits on YouTube. It's just one of the edgier ways awareness is being promoted among younger women during National Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

"Generally, with people my age, who watch MTV, there's no association between the breast and breast cancer. They think the boobs in beer commercials are different," said MTV News Canada host Aliya-Jasmine Sovani, 27, who stars as the bikini-clad gal and wrote and co-directed the clip.

"But everyone uses sexy imagery for commercials," said Sovani. "I thought guys would watch it because they would watch it naturally, and girls would like the humor and irony. ... We all like boobs, so let's save the boobs."

Similar messages are showing up on feisty T-shirt lines and at events aimed at younger women. According to leading breast cancer organization Susan G. Komen for the Cure, about 5 percent of all breast cancer in the U.S. occurs in women under age 40. Worldwide, about 465,000 women die from breast cancer each year.

Julia Fikse, a bubbly 37-year-old, started her cheekily named T-shirt business Save the Ta-tas in 2004 after years of working as a fashion designer at Levi's, Gymboree and Adidas.

Her Southern California company now has 12 full-time employees producing T-shirts that proclaim "caught you lookin' at my ta-tas" and "I love my big ta-tas." Five percent of every sale goes to breast cancer research and awareness. About $340,000 have been donated so far, Fikse said.

The idea came after seeing people close to her battle breast cancer.

Fikse's grandmother had a double mastectomy in the '70s. In 2004, her husband's aunt was diagnosed.

In cancer treatment, appearance isn't skin deep

By Samantha Critchell
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Lipstick, moisturizer and a wig can't cure cancer. But beauty — and beauty products — can help heal wounded self-esteem, which often takes a big hit as patients undergo cancer treatment.

Experts say hair loss, skin discoloration and skin dryness can undermine an already physically difficult and emotionally draining process.

"Some days I didn't want anyone to see me or even have my husband look at me," says Michele VonGerichten, a breast-cancer survivor. "When you are waiting for your hair to grow, you spend a lot of time looking into the mirror, just waiting for a sign that you're going back to normal."

In interviews, survivors and counselors both say the moment a person doesn't recognize herself in the mirror because of physical changes caused by treatment can be one of the lowest points of the process. College of Southern Idaho's Community Education Center offers "Live Healthy - Nutrition," the final class of the Learn to Live Healthy series, 5:30-7 p.m. Tuesday in Room 204 of CSI's Shields Building.

Topics: the energetics of food and the role it plays in the balance and health of your body.

Cost is $35. Register: 732-6442 or communityed.csi.edu.

About Alzheimer's

Alzheimer's Support Group meetings, 6-7 p.m. Wednesday, at Rosetta Eastridge, 1177 Eastridge Court in Twin Falls.

Open to Twin Falls County residents who have family members with Alzheimer's.

Information: Lisa Junod, 734-9422.

Mammograms

As part of Breast Cancer Awareness Month, St. Luke's Wood River Medical Center is encouraging women in the Wood River Valley to schedule their mammograms.

Organizers say the risk of developing breast cancer increases as you age, and it is important for women over age 40 - especially women who are menopausal or post-menopausal - to get a mammogram every year, or as recommended by your doctor. Testing may be recommended before age 40, depending on risk factors such as a strong family history or a positive genetic profile for breast or ovarian cancer. Other risk factors include having a prior breast cancer, long-term use of combined hormone replacement therapy after menopause, excessive alcohol intake, obesity, a sedentary lifestyle and smoking.

Scholarships programs are available to provide funding for screening mammograms or diagnostic breast studies for women age 25 or older with limited incomes.

To schedule an appointment: 727-8190. Information on scholarship programs: 381-2095.

Childbirth refresher

Childbirth refresher course, 6:30-9 p.m. Wednesday, in the lobby at St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center's downtown campus, 660 Shoshone St. E. in Twin Falls.

Topics: Review of childbirth preparation and breathing techniques and a video tour of the Women's and Infants Center.

Cost is $20. Pre-registration required; 732-3148.

Asthma education

Asthma education class for people with asthma, their families and caregivers, 6-7 p.m. Thursday, in the Sage Room at St. Luke's Education Building, 588 Addison Ave. W. in Twin Falls.

Free. Pre-registration required: 737-2007.

About childbirth

Prepared childbirth classes, 6:30-9 p.m. Thursdays, this week to Nov. 12, in the lobby at St. Luke's downtown campus, 660 Shoshone St. E. in Twin Falls.

Topics: wellness of the mother; labor and delivery process with relaxation and breathing techniques; care of the postpartum mother and newborn; breastfeeding and bottle feeding; and a video tour of the Women's and Infant Center. Bring a labor support person, if possible.

Cost is $60. Pre-registration required; 732-3148.

About childbirth

The labor support class of St. Benedicts' prepared childbirth series, 7-9 p.m. Thursday, at Jerome Ambulance Building, 240 E. Main St.

Topic: understanding the labor process. Bring a labor support person, if possible. Mothers may enroll even if their babies will be born at a different hospital. The class is offered separately, or as part of the childbirth series.

Cost is $5. Register: 324-6133.

Happy, healthy life

Dr. Jack Adams presents "Why We Are Here," 7:30 p.m.

Oct. 20. at Red Lion Canyon Springs Hotel, 1357 Blue Lakes Blvd. N. in Twin Falls.

Adams shares the wisdom he has gained through his life experiences and provides insight for new awareness in one's life. Organizers say that with new understandings, participants can transform their attitudes and concepts to live a happier, healthier life. Adams has maintained a dental practice for more than 45 years and has 35 years' experience in personal counseling. Admission is $10. Information: Jack Adams, 539-4854 or 324-4854, or Diane Adams, 539-1172.

Fitness for adults

"Active Adults" fitness class, with two sessions, 9-10 a.m. or 10-11 a.m., Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, Oct. 19 to Nov. 9, at the Harmon Park Recreation Building.

The fitness program is a progression of strength and endurance. The program is geared for ages 40 and over; all fitness levels are addressed. Cost is $30 per session. Pre-registration required; 736-2265 or stop by Parks and Recreation office, 136 Maxwell Ave. E.

Information hotline for H1N1, vaccines

South Central Public Health District has established a public health information hotline for concerned citizens with questions about H1N1 and vaccine availability.

The toll free hotline number is 1-866-450-3594.

Mammograms

As part of Breast Cancer Awareness Month, the "900 Women - A Campaign to Save Lives!" program is under way at St. Luke's, 650 Addison Ave. W. in Twin Falls, for women ages 40 or older who have not had a mammogram in the past 12 months.

Organizers said 54 percent of southern Idaho women 40 and older do not get their annual screening mammograms. For an appointment and information: 737-2615.

'Breastfeeding and employment'

St. Benedicts is offering a two-part class to help combine breastfeeding and employment. Does not replace a basic breastfeeding class.

The first class, before birth, helps with pump selection and milk storage. The second, after birth, helps choose appropriate bottle nipple and pump schedule. Cost is $25 for the two-part class. Preregister for date, time and location: Amy Peterson, 308-1350.

"To do for you" is a listing of health-related activities, events and education. Submit information by Thursday for publication in the following Monday's Healthy & Fit section. E-mail notices to ramona@magicvalley.com.

FOOD - BORNE ILLNESS:

More than meets the eye

By Jennifer LaRue Huget
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Luke and Chloe Bennett are celebrating their 10th birthday. The twins, born Sept. 30, opted for separate parties: Chloe and friends romped in an inflatable moon bounce, and Luke invited pals to a baseball game.

Nothing too out of the ordinary, right? But to their mom, Trissi Bennett, the fact that her babies lived to see their 10th birthday is nothing short of a miracle.

A decade ago, Bennett was fighting for her own life at suburban Inova Fairfax Hospital as her newborns, delivered by emergency C-section, struggled for theirs. A quick-thinking nurse recognized that Bennett's premature labor and subsequent illness were caused by listeria, food-borne bacteria that most commonly taint deli meats and soft cheeses. Bennett apparently was infected by eating store-bought pate.

The contamination caused Bennett's body to go into sepsis; her son suffered seizures for which he needed medication for months. The Bennetts waited five days after the babies were born to spread the news, so uncertain were they that both would live.

Listeria is one of the more dangerous but less common food-borne pathogens, unusual in that it thrives in cool environments. More common culprits are Campylobacter, salmonella and E. coli O157:H7, infecting everything from produce to raw eggs and causing a range of symptoms, from fever, cramps and diarrhea to, in the case of E. coli, a potentially deadly kidney condition. The most frequent offender may be a pathogen known as Norwalk-like virus, but it is rarely diagnosed because its gastrointestinal symptoms come and go quickly.

Bennett's nurse had been in California during a cheese-related listeria outbreak in the early 1990s; her recognition that little Luke's symptoms were similar led to the correct prescription of antibiotics that eventually saved the mother and children.

"We are absolutely the lucky ones," says Bennett, who joined the advocacy group Safe Tables Our Priority (www.safetables.org). STOP has several goals: to teach people how to lower

A food-safety quiz for consumers

The Washington Post

How sharp are your food-safety skills? Check them against these guidelines provided by the Partnership for Food Safety Education, a coalition of private groups and public agencies. Answer each question true or false.

1. Before being cooked, chicken should be rinsed thoroughly under running water and patted dry.

FALSE: Rinsing poultry increases the risk that you'll splatter salmonella and other contaminants around, outweighing the benefits of washing. Your best bet is to cook it until the meat inside is 165 degrees as measured by a food thermometer.

2. The best way to make sure a hamburger's safe to eat is to cook it until the inside meat is brown.

FALSE: Cook ground meat just until a food thermometer says it's 160 degrees. This will also keep you from overcooking your food.

3. You should wash cantaloupes and other melons before cutting them.

TRUE: This is true for any vegetable with a skin or rind, their risk of being poisoned by food, to document the sometimes devastating long-term consequences of food-borne illness by maintaining a national case database, and to press the federal government to improve the nation's food-safety system.

For all the attention food-borne illness has received in the wake of deadly outbreaks related to peanut butter and refrigerated cookie dough, nobody seems to have a good handle on the number of people affected. The latest government statistics - citing an estimated 76 million cases, 325,000 hospitalizations and 5,000 deaths annually - are from 1999.

Part of the trouble is that most cases probably go unreported, as people don't always associate a gastrointestinal ailment with something they have eaten. But STOP's executive director, Donna Rosenbaum, thinks they should. "There is no such thing as a stomach flu," she says. "When you're sick with a stomach bug, it's usually something contaminated you ate or drank."

Rosenbaum, whose daughter's best friend died after being contaminated with E. coli in the 1993 outbreak related to Jack in the Box restaurants, says people who think they have food poisoning typically assume it's from a food eaten recently. In fact, a pathogen can take days or weeks to colonize sufficiently in the gut to make you sick. Listeria can take up to 70 days to cause symptoms, she says; most harmful bacteria incubate for at least 12 to 24 hours before causing problems.

These pathogens aren't visible to the naked eye, and many reside in foods where they can't be washed away. Cooking kills most, but that doesn't help when you're eating, say, lettuce or raw tomatoes.

STOP is watching legislation pending in Congress that is aimed at bolstering the national food safety net. The Food Safety Enhancement Act, passed by the House in July, would make companies do a better job of anticipating risks and figuring out how to prevent them. It would also give the Food and Drug Administration the power to issue recalls, currently issued whether you eat it or not. Your knife blade could carry pathogens into the part you eat.

4. If you eat something suspicious but haven't fallen ill after 48 hours, you're in the clear.

FALSE: Incubation periods for food-borne illnesses range from 12 hours to a week or more; listeria can take up to 70 days.

5. Cutting boards must be sanitized in the dishwasher or with chlorine bleach.

TRUE: It's not necessary every day, but the board should be sanitized. Outside the dishwasher, use soap and hot water, then coat it with a solution of one tablespoon of unscented bleach to one gallon of water. Let it stand a few minutes, then rinse and dab dry with paper towel.

6. You can make sure sprouts aren't contaminated by rinsing them thoroughly.

FALSE: The seeds from which sprouts sprout are often contaminated with E. coli or salmonella, and even thorough washing won't help. People with compromised immune systems in particular should avoid eating raw sprouts.

7. You should never put hot food in the fridge.

FALSE: If you're not going to eat it right away, you should divide hot food into small portions in shallow containers and refrigerate them. Bacteria multiply at temperatures between 40 and about 140 degrees, and food left in that range for more than about two hours is no longer safe to eat.

When to consult your doctor

The Washington Post

It's the easily overlooked recommendation that appears at the beginning of most workout videos or in small type on your treadmill: Consult your doctor before beginning a new exercise regimen. But how do you know when this is necessary? The Mayo Clinic suggests you talk to a physician about your workout plans if any of the following apply:

- You've had a heart attack.
- You have asthma; diabetes; or lung, heart, liver or kidney disease.
- You have arthritis or osteoporosis or have had joint replacement surgery.
- You experience dizziness or loss of consciousness.
- You smoke or recently quit smoking.
- You take medicine to manage a chronic condition.

Of course, once you begin your exercise program, persistent pain, shortness of breath or dizziness are all very good reasons to pay your doc a visit.

Beauty

says she'll also never go back to the very long hair that she had before chemotherapy began last March. Her hair is now "a really short version of the Jamie Lee Curtis cut."

VonGerichten is one of 650,000 female cancer patients in this country to participate in the 20-year-old Look Good, Feel Better campaign, sponsored by the Personal Care Products Council Foundation. Free to any cancer patient, the program offers tips from 14,000 makeup and hair professionals from across the country on all things cosmetic. Topics include how to style a wig, tie a head scarf, fake eyebrows and even out discolored skin.

The beauty industry has long been aligned with breast-cancer charities, but this isn't about research to find a cure; it's about quality of life, explains executive director Louanne Roark. It's also a non-branded program, but industry leaders like Estee Lauder and Avon eagerly participate and have donated $10 million worth of product over the years.

Most women participate through workshops at 2,500 hospitals, cancer centers, American Cancer Society offices or other community facilities per year. There are self-help videos, workbooks and a Web site for those who don't feel comfortable in a group setting or can't get to one of the classes.

"The goal is we send everyone home having had a wonderful experience and learning the tools and tricks they can replicate on a daily basis," says Roark.

Cancer

"For the first time in my life, I thought about what it must be like to lose your breasts and how horrible that must be," she said. "My husband and I were in this dark place, thinking of her. Then we started to joke about boobs. The levity of the boob jokes turned that dark spirit around."

Fikse got a list together of 10 slang words for breasts, and bounced the names off of her husband. He laughed at the word "ta-tas," and it stuck.

Men's involvement, noted Fikse, was paramount. Her

APPEARANCE QUICK TIPS FOR CANCER PATIENTS

For Michele VonGerichten, hearing that she needed chemotherapy was almost as devastating as the diagnosis of breast cancer itself. She didn't know exactly what the side effects would be, but she knew that they would drastically change her appearance.

VonGerichten participated in a program called Look Good, Feel Better, a national public service program for cancer patients that addresses the physical changes that are likely to come with treatment, such as hair loss, skin discoloration and dryness. And the workshop she attended near her South Florida home was time well spent.

"I hadn't thought about by eyebrows or lashes. ... My hair had started to grow back, but I lost them almost overnight. It was a crippling blow to my self-esteem," she says. "But I remembered I had been taught how to deal with this."

The key to recreating brows is placement, according to the Look Good campaign. The spot where a pencil, held straight against your nose, hits the brow bone would be the start of the brow. Use the pencil to create a diagonal line from the bottom corner of your nose to the outside corner of your eye. That's the end point. VonGerichten penciled in her brows with eyeliner, and no one but her seemed to notice the change, she says.

Teresa Lopuchin, a Philadelphia-based makeup artist and volunteer with Look Good since its launch 20 years ago, offers other strategies:

- Tiny dots of eyeshadow along the lashline, preferably applied with a disposable brush or cotton swab, can mimic lashes.
- Use a cream eyeshadow instead of a powder, because the skin is very sensitive and powder is more likely to flake.
- The best color for lashes and brows would match or be just slightly darker than your natural hair or wig color.
- Patches of dark skin, which range from the size of freckles to much larger, are best camouflaged with a cream concealer slightly lighter than natural skin tone. Lopuchin suggests sticking to peachy shades.
- The Look Good Web site also recommends color-correcting concealers for more specific issues: a green shade will help with redness, and a yellow can mask blue discoloration.
- Dry skin needs gentle moisturizer and gentle lip balm — and a very gentle cleanser. That's the step often missed, Lopuchin says.

The emphasis is hardly on glamour or vanity, adds Dr. Mary Jane Massie, a psychiatrist at New York's Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center and a spokeswoman for the Look Good program. But even the least fussy person craves some normalcy, and grooming helps.

Sometimes it's the woman who really had never paid much attention to makeup and hair before who seems to get the most out of it. "You might not feel like a full functioning person in a family or a community when you're undergoing treatment," Massie says. "This program has helped people learn tips to prepare themselves to present to their world in a way that's comfortable to them."

She adds: "I saw a beautiful young woman yesterday with hair probably 5 inches long. It looked beautiful, but she had long, beautiful hair her whole life and she thinks people see her as bald and as a 'cancer victim.'"

Marybeth Maida, a breast cancer survivor, says she wished every day during her treatment that someone would not comment about the way she looked — no matter if the comment was going to be positive.

Maida recently teamed with an old friend, Debbie Kiederer, to write the book "Beauty Pearls for Chemo Girls" (Citadel) and launch a companion Web site.

"Our whole point is that you can't get away from what is happening to you, but you can embrace it, find the beauty inside of you and bring it out," she says. "Chemo doesn't change who you are, just what you look like."

Appearance might seem trivial in a life-or-death situation, but there are known links between stress and the immune system, notes Katherine Puckett, national director of the mind-body medicine program for the Cancer Treatment Centers of America.

"Looking good helps with confidence, which helps with stress, which helps immunity, which helps treatment," she says.

Quick Study

The topic: kidney stones

Healthy eating seems to lower risk for kidney stones

THE QUESTION

To what degree does a healthful overall diet, rather than consumption of a specific food, affect the development of kidney stones?

THIS STUDY

It analyzed data on 241,766 adults, comparing what they ate with the DASH (Dietary Approaches to Stop Hypertension) diet, designed to help control blood pressure by being high in fruits and vegetables, moderate in low-fat dairy products and low in protein from animal sources. People whose eating pattern adhered most closely to the DASH diet were less apt to have kidney stones. Men were 45 percent, older women 42 percent and younger women 40 percent less likely to develop stones if their diets followed the DASH principles than were their peers whose eating patterns were least like DASH.

WHO MAY BE AFFECTED?

Adults. Kidney stones affect men more often than women. The proportion of people in the U.S. who have kidney stones has been increasing since the 1970s, to more than 5 percent of the population today.

CAVEATS

Most people in the study were white. Dietary data came from their responses to questionnaires. The chemical content of kidney stones can vary, but the study did not determine whether adherence to the diet reduced risk for particular types of kidney stones.

FIND THIS STUDY

It's in the Aug. 13 online issue of the Journal of the American Society of Nephrology.

LEARN MORE

Learn about kidney stones at www.kidney.niddk.nih.gov and www.mayoclinic.com.

The research described in Quick Study comes from credible, peer-reviewed journals. Nonetheless, conclusive evidence about a treatment's effectiveness is rarely found in a single study. Anyone considering changing or beginning treatment of any kind should consult with a physician.

Your pills are in the mail. Or are they?

By Jennifer LaRue Hugst
The Washington Post

Mail-order prescriptions are supposed to offer convenience and save money, but a new survey reveals that in many cases they do neither.

The National Community Pharmacists Association — admittedly not an unbiased source — created a mail-order-drugs questionnaire that its members left on counters for customers to fill out. Of the 400 surveys collected, nearly half came from respondents who reported having missed taking medications because of late deliveries. Eighty-five percent reported running to a pharmacy for an emergency fill when their mail-order meds didn't arrive in time.

Another problem involved mail-order pharmacies' common requirement that prescriptions be written for 90-day supplies: Some survey respondents said they'd been stuck with medicines they couldn't use after their physicians had them switch medications before the 90-day supply was used up, sometimes after just two weeks.

Caffeine fix

The Washington Post

Reaching for coffee, soda or other caffeinated drinks in the middle of the day may not give you quite the boost you hope it will. Though caffeine may enhance your alertness and concentration, researchers at the University of California in San Diego say it probably doesn't do much to help your memory. In fact, caffeine may actually interfere with tasks such as remembering specific words or performing learned motor skills.

In a study of 61 participants taught new words and a finger-tapping task in the morning, those who did not have caffeine in the middle of the day were able to remember the tasks better than afternoon than those who did have caffeine. Participants who took a nap in the middle of the day were even better at performing the tasks later.

The monthly installments of principal, interest, and impounds (if applicable) of $1,019.49, due per month for the months of 5/1/2009 through 8/31/2009, and all subsequent installments until the date of sale or reinstatement. The principal balance owing as of this date on the obligation secured by said Deed of Trust is $116,800.19 together with interest thereon at the current rate of 8.1250 per cent (%) per annum from 4/1/2009. All delinquent amounts are now due, together with accruing late charges, and interest, unpaid and accruing taxes, assessments, trustee's fees, attorney's fees, and any amounts advanced to protect the security associated with this foreclosure and that the beneficiary elects to sell or cause the trust property to be sold to satisfy said obligation. If the Trustee is unable to convey title for any reason, the successful bidder's sole and exclusive remedy shall be the return of monies paid to the Trustee, and the successful bidder shall have no further recourse. If the sale is set aside for any reason, the Purchaser at the sale shall be entitled only to a return of the deposit paid. The Purchaser shall have no further recourse against the Mortgagor, the Mortgagee, or the Mortgagee's Attorney. Freelance News Correspondents, Times-News

The Times-News and Magicvalley.com are seeking freelance news correspondents in Gooding, Kimberly and the Mini-Cassia area to assist the Magic Valley's top news provider in coverage of city and county government, community news and special features.

Freelance correspondents are contracted workers paid on a per-story, per-photo basis, and are an important part of the Times-News' overall coverage plan. They will be expected to file weekly stories and photographs, as assigned by an editor, and develop and pitch additional stories pertaining to local news and feature stories.

Prior newspaper experience is not necessary, but the ability to quickly and accurately report and write on tight deadlines is essential. Correspondents must have their own computer with internet access, along with a cell phone and their own transportation. Strong organizational and photography skills are also preferred.

To apply: e-mail a resume writing samples to elarsen@magicvalley.com or mail to Eric Larsen, assistant city editor, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, ID 83303. Information: Larsen, 208-735-3220.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne
Phillips

DEAR ABBY: The other day my kids asked me why I'm always so angry. I didn't know how to respond. I'm angry that they think their dad is "wonderful" because he plays with them all day (he's not working), takes them to get fast food (instead of cooking something healthy), and because he's their coach (he is having an emotional affair with one of the parents).

I assign chores to the kids because things never get done when I ask my husband to do them. If I remind them "It's trash day" or "Don't forget to vacuum the living room," my husband steps in and says, "I'll do it for you, Billy/Jane" which makes me the bad guy. I know if I ask for a divorce, the kids will want to live with him.

How do I explain this to them? And what do I tell my friends when they ask what a pretty, fit, successful woman like me is doing with an overweight, unemployed, lazy man like him? He's more personable than I am, but the stress of being the sole breadwinner has taken its toll on me.

— NEEDING ANSWERS
LEVVITOWN, PA.

DEAR ANSWERS: You're overwhelmed right now, and with the load you're carrying, it's no wonder. You, your husband and the children are overdue for a frank sit-down chat.

It would not be out of line to tell them that the reason you appear to be angry is you are doing it all — carrying the load financially and being the responsible parent. It would also not be out of line to let them know that every member of the family is expected to do their part, which is why you have assigned them chores — because Dad is too busy coaching to remember to do it.

As to the fast-food diet, your husband is doing the children — and himself — no favors, and he is setting a terrible example.

Now, about your friends: Be honest. Tell them that you married your husband because you loved him at the time, and you are sticking with it because if you dump him, you may wind up supporting him anyway.

DEAR ABBY: I am 14 and have just started high school.

I have been told I'm beautiful. Most times I feel that way, except for one thing — I hate my nose! I don't want to sound ungrateful for my looks. I know I'm not the only girl who has a flaw and wants to change it. I just want your opinion.

From the front you can't tell my nose is messed up. But viewed from the side, there's a bump in the middle. It's also sort of crooked and just too big. I'm starting to be self-conscious about it. I don't like people looking at me from the side, but it's hard to prevent.

I have been researching plastic surgery online. At my age, my parents won't let me get a nose job, but I don't want to wait until I'm 18. Some kids have commented about my nose, but mainly I want to do this for me. It would make me feel better about myself. What am I supposed to do?

— SELF-CONSCIOUS
IN MINNESOTA

DEAR SELF-CONSCIOUS: For now, stop looking at yourself in a magnifying mirror and obsessing about your "flaws." You may — or may not — want to consider plastic surgery in a few years. I say in a few years because at 14 your features are not yet fully developed. A nose that seems "too big" now may be exactly the right size in a couple of years. If you are still displeased about the bump, there is time to have it smoothed out.

But for now you should wait and develop your personality and your intellect so that people notice you for more than your looks. I'm sure you have many qualities that make you special — and remember, what makes you unique is sometimes what we mistake as our "flaws."

IF OCTOBER 12 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: The next several weeks may bring you an opportunity to improve your life permanently. You are particularly blessed by sage advice and helpful companions in mid-November and if you need to make a pressing decision will make the most beneficial choice. January is a fabulous month for parties, public appearances, or for job interviews. People will find you trustworthy and are likely to appreciate your talents and ignore your deficiencies. January is also a good time to join a group or organization that will enhance your reputation.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): If you can't laugh at yourself, then you have no business laughing at other people. You might need to fine-tune your sense of humor.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Patience isn't just a virtue; it could be a necessity under these stars. Loved ones may have serious mat-

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You can pack a lunch if short on cash or ride the bus rather than hailing a taxi, but it don't be economical with warmth and kindness.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Think outside the box and in more than one dimension. There's probably an alternative you haven't considered. Be a creative thinker.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Just as Batman needs Robin, you, too, can be successful at caped crusading if you have a reliable and trusted companion by your side.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): When striving for excellence, don't confuse it with perfection. Nothing is perfect, but you can do something as perfectly as possible.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You don't need to storm the castle when a simple knock on the door will do the trick.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You can offset occasional extravagance by developing an appreciation of retro fashions. Try to be more resourceful and recycle.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You might be in the mood for love, but love might not be in the mood for you. If you want to fly a kite, do it on your own time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may waver between complete certainty to partial doubt. Whatever begs for tweaking or alteration is best left alone right now.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take pride in having integrity. If you prove your trustworthiness, people will learn to have faith in you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Practice what you preach. Remember that you will only be judged by your actions and the results, not merely by good intentions.

Today is Monday, Oct. 12, the 285th day of 2009. There are 80 days left in the year. This is Columbus Day in the United States, as well as Thanksgiving Day in Canada.

Today's Highlight:
On Oct. 12, 1492, Christopher Columbus arrived with his expedition in the present-day Bahamas.

On this date:
In 1870, Gen. Robert E. Lee died in Lexington, Va., at age 63.

In 1915, English nurse Edith Cavell was executed by the Germans in occupied Belgium during World War I.

In 1918, the Cloquet Fire erupted in Minnesota, claiming some 450 lives.

In 1933, bank robber John Dillinger escaped from a jail in Allen County, Ohio, with the help of his gang, who killed the sheriff, Jess Sarber.

In 1949, Eugenie Anderson was nominated by President Harry S. Truman to be the U.S. ambassador to Denmark; she became the first American woman to hold an ambassadorship.

In 1960, Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev disrupted a U.N. General Assembly session by pounding his desk with a shoe when a speaker criticized his country.

In 1968, the Summer Games of the 19th Olympiad officially opened in Mexico City. Equatorial Guinea became independent of Spain.

TODAY IN HISTORY

In 1984, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher escaped an attempt on her life when an Irish Republican Army bomb exploded at a hotel in Brighton, England, killing five people.

In 2000, 17 sailors were killed in a suicide bomb attack on the U.S. destroyer Cole in Yemen.

In 2002, a bomb blamed on Islamic militants destroyed a nightclub on the Indonesian island of Bali, killing 202 people, many of them foreign tourists.

Ten years ago: Pakistan's military overthrew the democratically elected government of Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif. Ahmed H. Zewail of the California Institute of Technology won the Nobel Prize for chemistry; Dutch scientists Gerardus 't Hooft and Martinus J.G. Veltman won the Nobel Prize for physics.

NBA Hall-of-Famer Wilt Chamberlain died at his Los Angeles home at age 63.

Five years ago: A jury in Baton Rouge, La., took 80 minutes to find suspected serial killer Derrick Todd Lee guilty of first-degree murder in the death of 22-year-old Charlotte Murray Pace. (Lee was later sentenced to death for Pace's killing.) The Seattle Storm won their first WNBA title with a 74-60 victory over the Connecticut Sun.

One year ago: Global finance ministers meeting in Washington kept searching for ways to tackle the unfolding financial crisis; in Paris, nations in Europe's single-currency zone agreed to temporarily guarantee bank refinancing and pledged to prevent bank failures. North Korea said it would resume dismantling its main nuclear facilities, hours after the United States removed the communist country from a list of states that sponsored terrorism. A Soyuz space craft carrying Richard Garriott, the sixth paying space traveler, along with another American and a Russian crew member, lifted off from Kazakhstan for the international space station. The Arizona Cardinals became the first team in NFL history to block a punt to score the winning TD in overtime in their 30-24 victory over the Dallas Cowboys.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

"Don't get mad, get even."
—Joseph Kennedy

In today's deal look only at the East cards and the dummy. Against South's contract of four spades your partner leads the diamond king, to which you follow with the jack. Declarer wins with the ace, then leads the heart two to dummy's 10, West contributing the nine. What do you return at trick three?

If you are on lead at trick three, you have already handed your opponents the contract! Partner showed an even number of hearts when he followed with the nine, almost certainly a four-card suit, for if South held four hearts, he might well have bid them over the no-trump response.

You cannot prevent declarer from gaining access to dummy to take the spade finesse, but you do not have to give him anything extra in hearts. If you duck the first heart but take the second, declarer is restricted to one heart trick. However, if you win the first heart, South can later overtake his heart queen and score two heart tricks while discarding a loser from hand. He can then take the spade finesse for 10 tricks.

If you let the heart 10 hold at trick two, declarer will successfully take the spade finesse, run some trumps, then exit with the heart queen. Now, so long as East and West have thrown away their losing hearts, they will prevail, taking one trick in each red suit and two club tricks.

ANSWER: When dummy has made no attempt to play in declarer's first-bid suit, there is an inference that dummy will be short in that suit. And since declarer did not repeat his hearts, I would lead a low heart. I might consider a spade if my intermediates were much better. Leading either minor suit seems more likely to cost than to gain.
