Neighborhood safety worries regional head office of Girl Scouts

By Andrea Jackson Times-News writer

The Girl Scouts are leaving their Twin Falls headquarters on Fourth Avenue West and downsizing, citing concerns about neighborhood safety.

The office of five to six years at 143 Fourth Ave. W. is situated near an uncomfortably high number of registered sex offenders, said Shelli Rambo Robertson, CEO for Girl Scouts of Silver Sage Council, which serves more than 5,000 girls in Idaho, Oregon and Nevada.

"Do we feel this is the safest environment for girls being served in the area?" Robertson asked. "We did not."

Last month, the Girl Scouts stopped meeting at their Fourth Avenue headquarters, which is next door to a tattoo parlor in an industrial part of town. That was after discovering that dozens of convicted sex offenders live nearby, said Robertson.

The old office was a venue for sleepovers, crafts and gatherings, but that will change, leaders said. The new office space, at 450 Falls Ave. near the College mentors were served through the cenof Southern Idaho, has room enough for ter for all of south-central Idaho, only an office.

Become part of domestic violence prevention

K, here it is - the final part of my series on domestic violence.

If you haven't figured it out by now, I believe that slowing domestic violence benefits us all. I've told you about what domestic violence is, why victims stay in abusive relationships and how children are affected by domestic violence. That leaves us with discussing what you can do to help victims of domestic violence and hopefully reduce the crimes that stem from it. The first and most important thing you can do to help victims of domestic violence is to let them know that you will always be there for them, even if they have gone back time and time again. Victims will feel an avenue of escape is possible if they know there's a true friend that will be there for them at the end of that escape route. Victims who don't feel supported will likely stay in a violent relationship.

munity leaders play a more active role in the prevention of domestic violence. Some leaders think domestic violence isn't a big problem because nobody talks about it or brings it to their attention daily. Community leaders need to know that deterrence of domestic violence needs to be pursued both criminally and in the community. Victims of domestic violence need not be the sole reasons that charges are pursued. Community leaders can be the spark that starts a fire that could burn down barriers to preventing domestic violence.

I'd also encourage getting involved with local domestic violence shelters. You don't have to be an everyday volunteer – it's good enough to attend a benefit here and there. The job of being an advocate carries rewards of helping somebody in great need. You could end up being the person who helps a victim and also prevents future crimes that could stem from the same incident.

Finally, I want to leave you with this idea: involvement could be as simple as calling police when domestic violence is witnessed. You never know if that will be a call that saves lives. It might also get an abuser the help needed to move toward a normal, nonviolent life.

reducing it and its effects can start with you. Help prevent abuse – get involved.

Cause of abdominal fluid needs to be found

DEAR DR. GOTT: I am hoping you can give me some answers.

My stomach filled up with about 6-1/2 liters of fluid. The doctor said it was the same as carrying a 6-1/2pound baby.

I have been to two different hospitals about this. The first took the tests, and that doctor told me they could not find the cause and claimed the fluid would eventually leave on its own, not to worry, and then discharged me.

Four days after that, I had terrible abdominal pains and noticed that the fluid was increasing. I called a relative, who took me to the ER of the second hospital. I underwent numerous tests again. The doctor there then ordered that the fluid be removed.

Once the fluid was gone, another surgeon came in and performed a special procedure that involved several small incisions in my abdomen so a camera could be used. I assume it was similar to an exploratory surgery but without a huge incision.

Ask

They found that there appeared to be a mesh net connected to my liver, intestine and some other organs. Biopsies were taken, but they thought it was cancer and told me as much. Turns out the tests were negative. I was told that it would probably kill me if they tried to remove it. I wanted to go home and so was allowed to leave as long as I had 24/7 care (from family). They also sent a nurse to my home three times a week. They did one final draining before sending me home.

It has now been 10 weeks, and I still have the fluid. I still don't have any answers. I am 80 years old and take several prescriptions (Lasix, Aldactone, potassium, Synthroid, Florinef, Sotalol and Xanax). I mostly eat fruits and vegetables. I have lost some weight and, at 5 feet, 7 inches, now weigh 132 pounds. My stomach has reduced three inches since it was first drained, but it is still swollen. The pain has decreased.

Is this mesh net something I have to live with? Do you know of a reason why this would happen or even have a solution?

DEAR READER: This is a complicated situation, and I don't believe you are getting appropriate care. Your letter is vague about what testing you have had other than a biopsy. Without knowing what was done, I cannot provide specific information.

That said, I might be able to at least point you in the right direction for getting further help. Based on your description, I believe you are suffering from ascites, which is excess fluid within the abdominal cavity. It is often the result of liver disease but can also be associated with various cancers, congestive heart failure, kidney disorders, pancreatitis and obstructions.

Based on your description of a meshlike net of tissue connecting several of your abdominal organs together, I believe the underlying cause may be due to adhesions abnormal scar tissue attaching two or more organs inappropriately. Most people with adhesions never know they are there. Others may experience pain or other complications depending on the location of the scar tissue. They are caused primarily by prior abdominal surgery, but can also result from certain infections, appendicitis, radiation treatment, and rarely, for no known reason. If the intestines are involved, it can result in obstruction.

Seek out another opinion. You should be examined thoroughly and undergo blood work, imaging studies such as X-rays and MRIs, perhaps have another biopsy of the lesion previously noted, and also have some of the fluid removed and examined, which may help determine the cause.

In the meantime, continue your medications.

Burley leaves veterans in the cold

JEERS: To Burley city officials, for turning off the gas - without notice - in a cityowned building used as a veterans service office because the city didn't want to pay the utility bill anymore.

The office is used by about 6,000 Mini-Cassia veterans seeking information about benefits. It also coordinates rides to the veterans hospital.

Jointly operated by Minidoka and Cassia counties and mandated by state law, the office has been in the old Bureau of Land Management building since 1996. The BLM gave it to the city in 2001.

The utility bill runs about $255 a month.

Councilman Jay Lenkersdorfer asked for the gas to be shut off, according to Mayor Jon Anderson.

Mini-Cassia Veterans Advisory Board Vice

Chairman Ron Beedle contends the city was supposed to draft a utility agreement with the counties, but it was never done.

There was no disrespect intended, Councilman Steve McGill said, though he adds that "Maybe we had a poor process."

McGill got that part right, but the issue is indeed a lack of respect - and the fact that the city didn't bother to warn the veterans.

This facility is used by citizens who put their lives on the line for their country and their community. The city should turn the gas back on while the issue is resolved.

CHEERS: To Idaho's congressional delegation, for pushing a proposal to require bills be posted on the Internet at least 72 hours before Congress votes on them.

U.S. Sens. Mike Crapo and

Jim Risch, along with Reps. Mike Simpson and Walt Minnick, say such a provision would give voters more chances to weigh in on hotly debated measures, including the 2009 American Reinvestment and Recovery stimulus act.

That bill, they said, was only public a few hours earlier this year before it was approved by Congress.

All four members of Idaho's delegation voted against it and they say "the public did not get as much opportunity to weigh in on the final bill" as it should have.

"It simply isn't right to write legislation without giving the public – let alone members of Congress - the ability to read it first." Amen.

JEERS: To Nampa Classical Academy leadership for a conflict of interest that calls into question whether there's enough oversight of the independent boards running Idaho charter schools.

Three board members resigned amid a power struggle with the school's founder and director, Isaac Moffett. Now the Public Charter School Commission is questioning how board vacancies are filled at the academy and if teachers are appropriately certified.

The resignations included board chairman Kyle Borger. Moffett's brother, Michael, plans to fill that role.

The conflict arose after a motion to remove Michael Moffett from the board because of what Borger contends was his inability to put the academy ahead of Isaac Moffett.

Borger argues that rather than making independent decisions, trustees were expected to follow Isaac Moffett's advice.

At a time when Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna plans to ask the Legislature to lift the cap on the number of new charter schools in Idaho, and when public school districts statewide are considering switching some of their schools to charters, the Nampa Classical Academy case is troubling.

It calls into question whether the state is paying enough attention to whether charters are doing their jobs fairly – and obeying the law.

A new Winnie-the-Pooh? Oh, bother

s one who can see a cloud in any silver lining, I have a soft spot for Winnie-the-Pooh's melancholy friend, Eeyore. So I wasn't surprised to find myself agreeing with the donkey's gloomy prediction in the introduction to author David Benedictus' new book of Pooh stories, "Return to the Hundred Acre Wood," which was released this week. "He'll get it wrong," Eeyore says of the writer. "See if he doesn't."

This is the first authorized sequel to A.A. Milne's tales of the beloved bear, and it was clearly penned with all the care a conscientious and talented author could muster. And yet, even if Benedictus got it right, with great attention to the nuances that made us love Milne's original stories from the 1920s, he got it wrong. The guileless Pooh and his pals were just fine as we left them decades ago in the enchanted forest, where "a little boy and his Bear will always be playing." Literature belongs to its era and can't simply be added to decades later, especially after the author has died. Call me cranky, but I don't think we need another Pooh book. And we certainly don't need a new character like the otter, Lottie, that Benedictus has added, even if she helps address a gender imbalance in the Hundred Acre Wood. Why couldn't Benedictus have made the haughty otter the hero of her own book, giving future generations of children a new story, while leaving intact the Pooh tales their parents and grandparents treasured?

course, that the offense to Milne's characters was committed long ago. After his death in 1956, Milne's widow sold the rights to the Pooh characters to the Walt

There is an argument, of Disney Co., which went on to produce bastardized Pooh designs likely to confuse movies and every imaginable piece of merchandise, much of it bearing little resemblance to Milne's spirit or to Ernest H. Shepard's drawings in "Winnie-the-Pooh" and "The House at Pooh Corner," the only two books in the original series. Imitation being the highest compliment, sequels and prequels are considered by many to be an homage. They are almost de rigueur. as Sherlock Holmes and Mr. Darcy know only too well. But to my mind there is a difference between this addition to the Pooh stories and something like Alice Randall's "The Wind Done Gone," which retold the "Gone With the Wind" story through the eyes of a slave, or Seth Grahame-Smith's Austen parody, "Pride and Prejudice and Zombies." Parody and reinvention are one thing; this, however, is but another example of the Hollywood malaise, an attempt to take a profitable brand and add with nearly identical kids – or the adults who are buying.

"Who cares?" you ask. "What if the book is good?" Well, here's one reason. Imagine if Milne had dedicated himself to a sequel to Lewis Carroll's "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland" because it was sure to sell. We never would have known Pooh, Piglet and Eevore, and would have been poorer for it.

The genius of the Pooh classics is that Milne invented a magical place and unique characters, and he told us their stories in his own tiddley-pom voice stories about a poetry-loving bear who thinks Grand Thoughts about Nothing when he can get his mind off honey. Milne brought us Eeyore, whose most positive offering is that "we haven't had an earthquake lately." I know what to expect from them, in part because they were playing out Milne's vision of who they were and how they would behave. In the new Harvest Festival. It's unsettling. How's a kid reading that to know what you mean when you call someone Eevore?

And then there are the drawings. Shepard's Pooh is whimsical and muddled; his Christopher Robin is a bov of Britain between the wars, with his pageboy haircut, smock-like shirts and rain slicker. Shepard's lovely watercolor of Eeyore floating on his back will break your heart. And Piglet's anxiety is perfectly captured. In the new book, illustrator Mark Burgess gives us an honest effort to re-create the characters. They're sweet. They're not the same.

At the end of the new book, Piglet murmurs philosophically, "I wonder why things have to change?" The ever-hopeful Pooh responds, "It gives them a chance to get better." Sometimes, perhaps. But in this case, I'm with Piglet.

The philanthropist next door balks during recession

By Stephen Singer Associated Press writer

As charities prepare for year-end donation drives, the worst recession in decades has given pause to the philanthropist next door.

Investors who use donoradvised funds - an investment vehicle used for managing charitable donations have been stymied because of stock losses.

Money given to charities from donor-advised funds, with assets conservatively estimated at $21 billion, is a charitable giving.

Still, hoping to blunt the impact of the downturn, donors are giving to their favorite charities at rates similar to their grants before the recession. They're doing so even if they often haven't been able to make new contributions to their fund. The stock market rally since last spring, also made some donors feel a little richer and poised to start giving more this year and in 2010.

Individuals make contributions to a fund account, and as it rises in value, more money is available for charitable giving. But when they lose money, as they did from late 2008 to last spring, donors are hard-pressed to replenish their accounts.

Gillian Howell, an executive at Bank of America Merrill Lynch Philanthropic Management in Hartford, Conn., said she is seeing an increasing number of donors deposit cash into their funds. But customers can also deposit tangible assets such as farmland, residential and commercial real estate, artwork and antiques and even businesses, she said.

their name because fund operators make the final decision on donations after vetting charities to make sure they comply with laws governing charitable giving. Money may not be withdrawn except as contributions to qualified charities.

The funds offer donors tax and estate planning benefits. Donors may claim a tax deduction immediately upon depositing assets into a fund – not when the money is donated - letting the assets grow in value before being granted to charities. Donors also are shielded from capital gains taxes that would otherwise apply to appreciated assets.

Robert Sharpe of the Sharpe Group, a Memphis, Tenn., philanthropic consulting group, said charities sometimes have a "lovehate relationship" with donoradvised funds. Because donors get a tax deduction when they put money into a fund rather than when they make a grant, they are free to donate to charities when they choose.

But instead of receiving money outright in a good year, a charity may get nothing from a donor. "It's a way to park money," Sharpe said.

However. Howell wouldn't characterize it that way because she says donors are giving more

Since the start of the recession, donors who rely on the rising value of their portfolios pulled alma mater, Boston University, back on charitable giving, and less money was deposited in several of the largest donor-advised funds.

hand for Feinberg's decision.

Feinberg did not detail how he plans to tackle the politically sensitive issue of nearly $200 million in bonuses due in March to employees at AIG Financial Products, the unit whose complex derivatives contracts led to the collapse of AIG last fall. Feinberg has urged the company to find a way to scale back the bonuses in hopes of preventing another round of public outrage.

In his written ruling Thursday, Feinberg noted that the firm had played a role "in the events necessitating taxpayer intervention," and concluded that AIG Financial Products employees should be paid only what their base salaries were on Dec. 31, 2008. In addition, he said that he continues to urge company officials to recoup the bonus payments that some Financial Products employees pledged to repay earlier this spring but did not. Until that issue is resolved, he wrote, employees should receive no pay in addition to their base salaries.

On Wall Street, reaction to Feinberg's ruling was swift, with some executives arguing that it will further handicap the most troubled firms by driving away top employees while making companies unwilling to promote rising stars for fear of bringing them to Feinberg's attention.

almost 8 percent to 3.6 million. That's less than an eightmonth supply at the current sales pace, and the lowest level since March 2007.

The competition for lowpriced foreclosures has become fierce in places like Las Vegas and Southern California. "You have so many buyers in that lower price range," she said. "Sometimes my agents are writing five offers for one buyer on different properties just trying to get one property – and not getting accepted. It's a little crazy."

Still, economists caution that the pain from the worst housing bust since the Great Depression probably isn't over yet.

While home sales and housing construction have risen steadily after hitting bottom earlier this year, most economists believe that prices, which recently stabilized, will resume their descent. The median sales price last month was $174,900, down almost 9 percent from $191,200 a year earlier, and slightly lower than August's median of $177,300.

The main reasons prices are weak: Unemployment and foreclosures are still rising. With the current 9.8 percent jobless rate expected to rise as high as 10.5 percent next year, foreclosures will continue to set records.

Nationwide, more than 3 million households are either three months behind on their payments or in foreclosure, according to First American CoreLogic, a research firm.

Many delinquent borrowers are still being evaluated for help under the Obama administration's mortgage assistance plan. If they don't qualify, the odds are high they will lose their homes.

Fears about job losses are stifling some sales, said David Hudson, an agent with Exit Realty Platinum outside Atlanta.

"Buyers are still nervous," he said. "They're worried about buying a house, and then all of a sudden, I might not have a job."

BSU quaterback Kellen Moore rates as the nation's efficient passer most (171.18). His Broncos (6-0, Western Athletic 1-0 Conference) own one of the most efficient offenses in college football. With receivers Austin Pettis and Titus Young spreading the field and a litany of underneath targets, Moore should have a big day at Hawaii (2-4, 0-3 WAC).

More importantly, the Broncos can take one step closer to their main goal every season: winning the downtrodden WAC.

RUPERT - Twin Falls didn't beat Minico Friday night. And for the first time in four weeks, Minco didn't beat Minico, either.

The Spartans cleaned up three of their biggest pitfalls - turnovers, sacks and penalties - and beat Great Basin Conference champ Twin Falls 14-13 in the regular-season finale.

"What a great way to send out these seniors in their final game at Bill Matthews Field," said Minico coach Tim Perrigot. "They've had a great run here."

The win clinched a playoff berth for Minico (4-5 overall, 3-2 GBC), which will make its sixth consecutive trip to the postseason. The third-place Spartans travel to Hillcrest, the top seed from District VI. next week for the Great 8.

Despite dropping its first conference game of the season, Twin Falls (4-4, 4-1 Minico running back Brady May avoids the tackle of Twin Falls' Tyler Wolters Friday night at Minico High School. The Spartans won 14-13. GBC) is still the champion Great 8 next week.

RENO, Nev. – Few would have predicted before the season began that the Idaho Vandals would be sitting atop the Western Athletic Conference by the time they traveled to Nevada for today's 2 p.m. (MDT) game.

The Vandals (6-1, 3-0 WAC) already have won twice as many games this vear as they won the previous two seasons combined as they prepare to face the Wolf Pack (3-3, 2-0), which has won three in a row after losing their first three.

"This is a big-time showdown this week with two undefeated WAC teams," Idaho coach Robb Akey said. "It will be a wild football game and one people might be excited about."

Akey said his team started showing significant improvement toward the end of last season.

"The kids have done everything we've asked them to do," he said. "They've kept playing their tails off. There is no magic pill to take. They just kept working."

'Skins 'soap opera' twist: Zorn's job safe

WASHINGTON - Well, that should quiet around here," Cerrato said. "But the relathings down for a while.

The Jim Zorn unemployment watch is over. Jerry Gray, as it turns out, isn't a coachin-waiting about to get promoted any day now. Another week of Washington Redskins craziness ended with an actual message of stability Friday: The front office said Zorn will be the coach for the rest of the season.

"We were the soap opera for the NFL the last two weeks," quarterback Jason Campbell said, "so hopefully it'll calm down a little bit."

The unexpectedly strong vote of confidence was delivered in the morning by executive vice president of football operations Vinny Cerrato. After letting anxiety build for several days following last week's loss to Kansas City, Cerrato opened his ESPN980 radio show by saying: "Jim Zorn is the head coach of the Washington Redskins and will be for the rest of this season, and hopefully into the future."

The news dampens the rampant speculation that began when Zorn was asked to give up his play-calling duties following the 14-6 loss to the previously winless Chiefs. Zorn called the move "uncomfortable" and players expressed general concern over the state of the franchise, yet the powers-that-be remained silent until Friday.

"The frustration is very high, everywhere tionships internally within this organization, quite frankly, remain the same."

Cerrato did not deliver a similar message to Zorn in person, but Zorn didn't feel the need for it. The coach appeared to take the news in stride.

"I don't necessarily have a reaction to that because I am the head coach," Zorn said. "I want to be here for the next 10 years. That's my story."

The Redskins are 2-4 despite playing one of the weakest schedules in the league over the last five weeks. The offense, overseen by Zorn, has yet to score more than 17 points in a game and has twice failed to score a touchdown at home.

PROVO, Utah - TCU can't reach the BCS without a win over BYU.

With all those letters, it almost sounds like an algebra equation with an answer that may not be reached for another month. solved Saturday when No. 10 TCU visits 16th-ranked BYU.

The Horned Frogs (6-0, 2-0) are the only unbeaten team left in the Mountain West and are trying to remain in contention for a Bowl Championship Series takes one loss to knock them out of the running.

Sound familiar? BYU was in a nearly identical position a year ago entering a highly anticipated show-32-7 rout for TCU.

The Cougars (6-1, 3-0) haven't forgotten the humbling trip to Texas and how it derailed BYU's best start in seven years.

"I learned a lot of things," BYU coach Bronco Mendenhall said. "I remember how I was feeling going into the game that some of the attention was starting to affect not only myself as a coach, but our players. And I think we had maybe a false sense of security that we were a little better than what we were."

The game was on a Thursday night, so the Cougars' poor performance and the way the Frogs dominated got plenty of airtime. The rematch has game of the week nationally, not just in the Mountain West.

"I won't even have to talk about how important BYU is. They know what this game is about," TCU coach ranked Gary Patterson said. "Our job will be to keep them more grounded than it will be to get them fired up."

BYU is welcoming the But at least part of it will be exposure and chance to atone both for last year's loss at TCU and the Cougars' only blemish on this season, which was a big one. Florida State essentially ended the Cougars' BCS aspirations with a 54-28 win in Provo on Sept. 19.

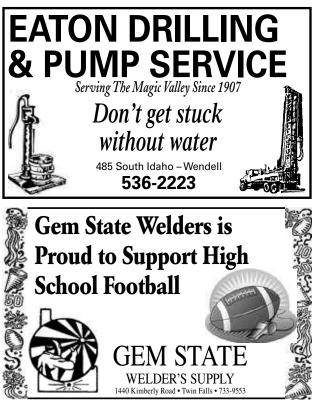

"We've had games in the berth, knowing that it only past when we've played well in the spotlight and we've had games when we haven't played well. We're trying to build a great program where we consistent ly can win big games and down that ended up being a constantly compete and win conference championships," BYU quarterback Max Hall said. "This game is a big step in both of those directions. I don't think it's kind of like a do-or-die for us right now but it is a big game."

It's especially big for Hall, a senior who wants to end his college career with a second Mountain West title in three years. The Frogs flustered Hall last year, sacking him six times and intercepting two of his passes. He also fumbled on the opening drive and TCU quickly converted the turnover into a touchdown.

TCU scored the first 26 points and the Cougars never recovered.

"I'm pretty sure they're been widely tabbed as the going to come out there, coming after us," said TCU defensive end Ierrv Hughes, who had four of TCU's six sacks against BYU last year.

> BYU is 2-6 against teams under Mendenhall, most recently opening the season with a 14-13 upset of then-No. 3 Oklahoma.

Line: Alabama by 16<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>. Series record: Alabama leads 48-36-7. Last meeting: 2008, Alabama 29-9. What's At Stake

Alabama wants to avoid stumbling after claiming the No. 1 ranking and is seeking its first three-year winning streak over the Volunteers since winning seven in a row from 1986-92. Lane Kiffin and Tennessee could make a big statement about the program's direction with an upset.

Key Matchup

Jonathan Crompton and Tennessee's passing game against the nation's No. 1 defense. The Vols' strength has been running the ball, but 'Bama is giving up only 63 yards a game on the ground. That means Crompton will need to test a defense that has 10 interceptions and allowed only four touchdown passes. He had his best game against Georgia.

Revenge. Oregon State jumped to a big early lead and held off top-ranked USC's late charge for a six-point victory on a Thursday night last September. The Trojans' only loss scuttled any chance to play for a national title. Saturday's winner emerges as Oregon's top rival for the Pac-10 title, and USC can't get caught looking ahead to next week's showdown with the Ducks.

Key Matchup

Oregon State RB Jacquizz Rodgers vs. USC S Taylor Mays. Few teams respect the Beavers' undersized running back more than the Trojans after he rushed for a career-high 186 yards and two TDs on them last year. USC coach Pete Carroll likens him to Emmitt Smith and warns his defense to keep its discipline and aggressiveness on every play. Mays, the All-American safety, will take charge of the effort to limit Rodgers' chances to break free.

Line: Utah by 91/2 Series Record: Air Force leads 14-11. Last Meeting: 2008, Utah 30-23. What's at Stake

Utah has won 10 straight Mountain West Conference games and is trying to remain among the front-runners. Only the Utes, TCU and BYU have unbeaten conference records and the other two play Saturday in Provo.

Key Matchup

Air Force's offense vs. Utah's defense. The Falcons are dead last in Mountain West in passing, but run the ball better than anyone with a 279-yard average. The Utes are third in the conference in total defense. Notes: Utah has won five of the last six against Air Force. ... # Angels fly to the Bronx with ALCS comeback in mind

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) -Chone Figgins and the Los Angeles Angels know they're heading straight into more than one kind of storm, and they can't wait to get wet.

Game 6 Angels at Yankees 5:30 p.m., FOX

Heavy showers in today's New York forecast are threatening to wash out Game 6 of the AL championship series, yet that's a minor drizzle compared to the high-pressure system the Angels created for both themselves and the Yankees by extending the ALCS to the weekend.

Rejuvenated by a ramshackle win in Game 5 that cut the Yankees' series lead long odds to make the seldom-seen comeback from a 3-1 series deficit against before flying to New York. their star-studded opponents. Yet Figgins still senses a team-wide confidence the Yankees' 27th championship parade.

than this, especially going into that ballpark," said Figgins, the Angels' leadoff hitter. "It's going to be another crazy game, I can tell you that. You go back and just enjoy it. The pressure is on both teams."

The Yankees arrived back in New York early Friday morning and held an "optional" workout - "In the playoffs, it's not optional," catcher Jorge Posada said with a grin – under an overcast sky in the Bronx that afternoon. A chilly wind rippled the flags that line the top of the stadium and jostled the ceremonial redalong each deck.

It was a much different scene than the picturesque weather they had in S. California, and they still were thrilled to be back.

Figgins and his teammates all packed the cold-weather gear that did little good in that the Angels can rain on their last trip to Yankee Stadium, when they lost the series' first two games with "It doesn't get any better poor hitting and sloppy The Angels' defense. defense and pitching mostly got back to normal in Anaheim, but their hitting manager Mike Scioscia says didn't improve until Game 5, when they scored seven runs after mustering just 10 in the entire series beforehand.

"They are the favorites, but after this one, we've got obviously a lot of confidence, a lot of momentum," said Joe Saunders, the Angels' Game 6 starter. "It's going to be the usual Yankee hostile environment. It's going to be a lot of fun. They're going to be all over us."

white-and-blue bunting league-best 57-24 record at their new home this season, including a 36-10 mark since June 30. They lost consecutive home games only once in that stretch.

New York has won each of "Our guys feel very good its four playoff games in the Bronx, outscoring the Twins and Angels 19-9 in its $1.5 billion ballpark.

"We feel comfortable here soon-to-be free agent with going out there and playing good baseball," outfielder Nick Swisher said.

It will be hard for anyone to be comfortable if the forecast is accurate. If Saunders has to wait a day to pitch, it could create another possibility in the series – one that might make the Yankees push even harder for a closeout victory.

If Game 6 is postponed, the Angels would consider bringing back ace John Lackey on three days' rest to pitch a potential Game 7 as a counter to Yankees stalwart CC Sabathia, who already has shut down the Angels twice in the series.

"Yes, we've talked about a lot of different scenarios," Scioscia said before the Angels' flight. "We're going to let this thing unfold a little bit and see how the weekend goes. If there is an opportu-The Yankees had a major nity to look at bringing a guy like John back, it's something we certainly would consider. We've talked about a bunch of things."

Jered Weaver, who pitched an outstanding eighth inning of relief in Game 5, is the scheduled starter for Game 7 - but Lackey is the Angels' best, most experienced pitcher. every motivation to star in the playoffs, confounded the Yankees for six innings of Game 5 before Scioscia removed him with the bases loaded and two outs in the seventh, precipitating New York's six-run comeback. But the Angels made a three-run comeback of their own in that sublime seventh. Closer Brian Fuentes slept soundly after finding trouble and escaping it in the ninth inning of Los Angeles' 7-6 comeback victory, retiring Swisher on a bases-loaded popup with a full count and two outs.

Fuentes is no stranger to high stakes, and the major leagues' saves leader knows his teammates also thrive in such straits. Ever since the tragic start to the seasonwith the death of pitcher Nick Adenhart, the Angels have tapped wells of strength on the way to an AL West title, 97 victories, a first-round series win over Boston – and now an ALCS that gets more tense by the inning.

"Pressure is something you put in your car tires," Fuentes said.

"I don't feel like it's any different now. We've still got to keep playing, still got to keep doing our work for another game."

Despite Gove's game-saving play that forced her to stretch out and make a heart-stopping block, it would still be another 20 minutes before she turned that thought into a cold hard fact.

After a 0-0 result following regulation and two overtime periods, Gove only needed to block one more shot to give the Wood River Wolverines a 5-4 victory on penalty kicks Friday afternoon in the consolation round of the Class 4A girls soccer state tournament.

"I like being the last person in the line of defense," Gove said. "When you have no one else to count on, I like being that person you know is going to get it done for you."

Gove got it done in electrifying fashion again, shutting out her opponents for 100 minutes for the second time in a week - a feat she duplicated in the district tournament.

"Madison did a fantastic job for us," said Wood River coach Jenni Conrad. "She was ready for whatever they threw at her."

"We played our hearts out the whole game and then in overtime, too," Gove said. "I just didn't want to let anyone down."

In the penalty kick session, Wood River and Century both scored on their first three kicks before Gove made a diving stop on the fourth kick to open the door for Wood River to claim the victory.

Tied 4-4, Wood River's Shaylee Foley buried the final shot to set off a wild celebration by the Wolverines.

"This is the game we like to play," Conrad said. "In our first game, we just came out flat, but not today. We played hard and fought the whole game. It was great to see this group of girls earn a victory a like this."

Bishop Kelly struggled early. The Knights led 1-0 at halftime before Twin Falls ran out of gas and Christa Saur and Julie Zamzow scored a pair of goals apiece to help put the game away.

"We came out really flat in the second half," Twin Falls coach Katie Kauffman said. "At this point in the season, you can't be flat against anyone and expect to beat anybody."

Despite the loss, Kauffman believes Twin Falls (14-7-2) has a successful future ahead.

"This wasn't exactly the way we were hoping to end our season," Kauffman said. Pope Benedict XVI approved a new church provision that will allow Anglicans to join the Catholic Church while maintaining many of their distinctive spiritual and liturgical traditions, including married priests. # Vatican seeks to lure disaffected Anglicans

By Nicole Winfield Associated Press writer

VATICAN CITY - The Vatican is making it easier for Anglicans to convert to Roman Catholicism – a surprise move designed to entice traditionalists opposed to women priests, openly gay clergy and the blessing of same-sex unions.

The decision, reached in secret by a small cadre of Vatican officials, was sure to add to the problems of the 77-million-strong Anglican Communion as it seeks to deal with deep doctrinal divisions that threaten a permanent schism among its faithful.

The change means conservative Anglicans from around the world will be able to join the Catholic Church while retaining aspects of their Anglican liturgy and identity, including married priests. The new provision also allows married Anglican priests and even seminarians to become ordained Catholic priests – much the same way that Eastern rite priests who are in communion with Rome are allowed to be married. However, married Anglicans cannot become Catholic bishops.

A model for the future exists in the United States, where a handful of such parishes function – including three in Texas – thanks to a 1980 Vatican decision to accommodate Episcopal faithful and priests who wanted to convert. These parishes use a Vaticanapproved Book of Divine Worship, based on the Book of Common Prayer, that includes Catholic and Anglican rituals, said Monsignor William Stetson, who manages the initiative.

Anglicans split with Rome in 1534 when English King Henry VIII was refused a marriage annulment.

Since then, the Anglican Communion, which includes the Episcopalian Church in the United States, has fashioned itself as a kind of big tent of fellowship with a wide variety of worship styles and theological outlooks that include Anglo-Catholics.

It's not known how many Anglicans consider themselves Anglo-Catholic. However, the biggest impact of the Vatican announcement is likely to be felt in England, where the Church of England has been involved in a bitter battle over whether female priests can become bishops. British Anglicans opposed to the ordination of women simply leave and join the Catholic Church.

The announcement is likely to have far less impact in the U.S., where many Anglo-Catholics left the Episcopal Church more than a decade ago. More recently, four theologically conservative Episcopal dioceses and dozens of individual parishes broke away and formed a rival church in North America.

The Episcopal Church issued a statement saying it In addition, within the will "continue to explore the

Pie-splattered comedian Soupy Sales dies at 83

By David N. Goodman Associated Press writer

DETROIT - Soupy Sales, the rubber-faced comedian whose anything-for-achuckle career was built on 20,000 pies to the face and 5,000 live TV appearances across a half-century of laughs, has died. He was 83.

Sales died Thursday night at Calvary Hospice in the Bronx, New York, said his former manager and longtime friend, Dave Usher. Sales had many health problems and entered the hospice last week, Usher said.

At the peak of his fame in the 1950s and '60s, Sales was one of the best-known faces in the nation, Usher said.

"If President Eisenhower would have walked down the street, no one would have recognized him as much as Soupy," Usher said.

At the same time, Sales retained an openness to fans that turned every restaurant meal into an endless autograph-signing session, Usher said.

DEAR ABBY: I was raised from an early age that if you play a game, you have to play fair and obey the rules. Those rules were never bent regardless of what the game was or who we played with.

Over the years I have played games with many people, and while I realize it's possible for people to play the same game slightly differently, the rules still applied. What I don't understand is cheating.

A couple I know allow their children to play games with adults and let them cheat. What they're doing is obvious, and their parents even joke about it. I no longer enjoy playing with this family, but I don't know what to do or say. I have tried to subtly discourage and stop the deceptions, but I don't want to seem like a sore loser. Any suggestions?

- PLAYS BY THE RULES URBANA, OHIO DEAR PLAYS BY THE RULES: Yes. Do not play games with the family if the children are involved. It's not about being a sore loser; it's about not being a chump. By allowing their children to ignore the "rules," these parents are sending the message that rules don't apply to them. Because the children cheat when they play with you, it's safe to assume that they think it's acceptable to do it with other kids. And when their contemporaries realize what's going on, who do you think won't be allowed to join their games or anything else? Look at it this way: From little cheaters, big cheaters grow.

DEAR ABBY: My sisterin-law has just informed me that she doesn't think it is as important for her daughters to attend college as it is her sons.

My mother-in-law recently made a crack about my finances because she knows I'm paying off my student loans for two degrees.

My father-in-law can't understand what "all the fuss is about" now that my oldest daughter is preparing for college.

Abby, I have friends in their 30s and 40s who, for one reason or another, are

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"I begin with the principle that all men are bores. Surely no one will prove himself so great a bore as to contradict me in this."

— Soren Kierkegaard

Today's deal has an Australian feel to it. Played by Tim Seres and reported by Dick Cummings, it comes from a rubber game at the Double Bay Club in Sydney and dates to a period when strong two-bids were in use.

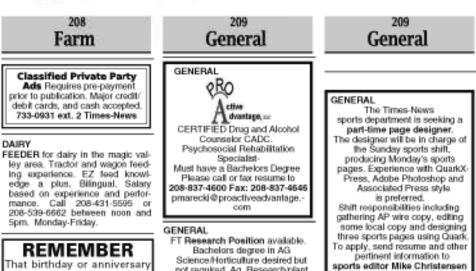

West led a fourth-highest diamond against six hearts, and Seres was faced with a series of possibilities, none of which looked attractive. The simplest one might be to play to ruff a spade in dummy, and that was what Seres went for. But which diamond should he play to the first trick?

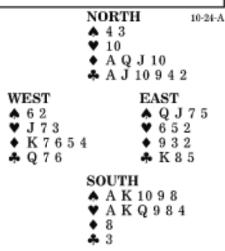

Seres made the critical play when he inserted dummy's queen. Then he cashed the two top spades and led a third round, which West was compelled to ruff with the jack. To prevent declarer from ruffing a spade in dummy, West now had to play back a heart.

Seres won the 10 in dummy, then played the diamond ace (pitching a spade), ruffed a diamond, and ran all of his trumps. As the last trump was led out, Seres had a club and the spade 10 in hand, while dummy had the diamond jack and two clubs. To keep his master diamond, West had to reduce to just one club, so a diamond was pitched from dummy. Now East was squeezed between his spade queen and his clubs. When he discarded a club, Seres took the last two tricks with dummy's ace and jack of clubs.

ANSWER: On some hands, you just have to give up and resist the urge to compete any further. The opponents are likely to hold the balance of high cards here, and your side has nothing special in the way of fit. To top it all, the opponents have the boss suit too. So why fight against the odds? Give up this time, and pass.

single women supporting themselves. Even some who have degrees are struggling, but they are able to own their own homes because they are able to earn decent salaries.

What should I say when my mother-in-law and sister-in-law put me down for higher learning? Neither of them went to college or has ever worked. They would be on welfare if they didn't have their husbands' income. By the way, I'm not having any problem paying back my student loans, and my husband is proud of my accomplishments.

EDUCATED IN TENNESSEE DEAR EDUCATED: Your mother-in-law and sisterin-law are misguided. They do not understand the financial realities that exist for women today because they have never been exposed to them. Nothing that you can say to them will change their mind-set.

So rather than respond to their naive comments, take every opportunity to encourage your nieces to pursue their educations so they can live independent lives. And pray that your father-in-law and brotherin-law leave their wives well-provided-for should tragedy strike, because otherwise they could wind up on your doorstep.
