BIG PRICE TAG FOR BIG CHANGES

$10M cost overrun for Canyon Ridge led school district to adjust other projects

By Damon Hunzeker
Times-News writer

It’s not unusual for a government project to end up costing more than expected, but $10 million is a lot of money.

In 2006, voters approved a $49.7 million bond for the Twin Falls School District to construct a $37.6 million second high school in the city and fund sweeping improvements at the district’s existing facilities.

The total for all projects, expected to be $48,296,795, has ended up costing $58,482,859, largely attributed to about $10 million in cost overruns at Canyon Ridge.

In March 2008, voters again agreed to fund school improvements when they passed a $33 million plant-facilities levy for the district. The combined levy and bond were for the new high school, as well as other district projects, including multipurpose rooms at Bickel, Perrine, Morningside and Harrison elementary schools and remodeling the chemistry lab at Twin Falls High School.

Twin Falls School District Superintendent Wiley Dobbs and district spokeswoman Beth Pendergrass both emphasized that expenses were driven by inflation — which, they said, caused building costs to increase 30 percent above projected numbers from 2006.

Recent school construction in other Magic Valley locations — the new Kimberly Middle School and the College of Southern

I.B. Perrine Elementary School students make their way Tuesday along a climbing wall in the new multipurpose room finished last December at the Twin Falls school. The multipurpose room expansion was part of the district’s 2006 bond facility vote for $49.7 million. The climbing wall was not part of that bond, but was added last March after the school’s Parent Teacher Organization raised $10,000.

Idaho’s Health Sciences and Human Services building, for example — have run according to projected costs and on time.

The current numbers for Canyon Ridge have been, for all practical purposes, finalized — but, Dobbs said, some of it could change over the next few months as details are reviewed.

4 police officers killed at Wash. coffeehouse

Police seeking man

long rap sheet as a

By Gene Johnson
Associated Press writer

PARKLAND, Wash. — A man with an extensive criminal past — whose 95-year prison sentence was commuted in Arkansas nearly a decade ago — was being sought Sunday as a “person of interest” in a deadly ambush on four police officers who were gunned down inside a coffee shop.

Pierce County sheriff’s spokesman Ed Troyer told reporters that Maurice Clemmons, 37, was one of several people investigators want to talk to and that he could not be called a suspect at this point.

In a news release, the sheriff’s office said Clemmons has an extensive violent criminal history from Arkansas, including aggravated robbery and theft. Clemmons also recently was arrested and charged in Pierce County in Washington state for third-degree assault on a police officer, and second-degree rape of a child.

In 1989, Clemmons, then 17, was convicted in Little Rock for aggravated robbery. He was paroled in 2000 after then-Gov. Mike Huckabee commuted Clemmons’ 95-year prison sentence. Huckabee, who BOISE — Idaho Secretary of State Ben Ysursa is a Republican from one of the union’s reddest states. Bernard Ysursa is a Democratic activist and financial booster of President Obama.

But these Basque brothers from Boise share at least two things: Their St. Louis Cardinals baseball team — and a touch of enjoyment at the foibles of politicians from each other’s state and party.

In 2007, then-U.S. Sen. Larry Craig, an Idaho Republican, was arrested in a gay sex sting in a Minnesota airport bathroom. Then Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich, a Democrat, got busted in December 2008; federal prosecutors say he tried to sell Obama’s U.S. Senate seat to the highest bidder.

In this photograph taken on Nov. 11, Daniel Suelo heads back to his cave outside Moab, Utah. Suelo has a masters degree in anthropology from the University of Colorado and had embarked on a promising career when, in the year 2000, he began what he calls ‘an experiment.’

By Jason Blevins
The Denver Post

MOAB, Utah — Daniel Suelo gets the same question, all the time.

“Why?”

The 48-year-old kneels in front of the desert cave he calls home, sips cedar tea from a chipped mug and explains, again, why he has intentionally lived the past nine years without using money.

It’s instinctual to live without money; it’s the way we were born, he says. It’s political. The addiction to money fuels corruption, he says, and he refuses to support a corrupt system. There’s also a spiritual basis for his life, a philosophical framework.

“The understanding that, really, we all possess nothing is the cornerstone of all spiritual endeavors and religions,” he says.

And there are health reasons. Suelo, who was born with the last name Shellabarger, is unfettered with worries about a mortgage or bills or income. Tanned, with a mop of gray locks framing his Buddy Holly glasses, he is a picture of contentment, his lithe frame stretched in the fall sun amid prickly pear cactus and red rock.

“I think taking things as they come naturally is the key to good health,” he says.

A decade ago, Suelo was dizzy with depression. His University of Colorado degree in anthropology wasn’t fulfilling. He had just returned from two years as a Peace Corps

"I can't imagine it will be any different, but we're reviewing everything to make sure what we paid for is what we got," he said, referring to relatively minor issues such as asphalt grading that may need to be corrected.

In those cases, however, the corrections will be billed to the construction company in charge of particular projects and not the school district, Dobbs emphasized.

The $800,000 multipurpose room at Sawtooth Elementary, now under construction, is the final project from the original 2006 bond and is expected to be complete sometime early next year.

Some of the ancillary projects — including landscaping plans and bleachers on the upper level of the Canyon Ridge gym — were put on hold or canceled, primarily because of financial impediments but, in some cases, because schools simply decided they weren't necessary.

"When we created this plan and put it in place, the committee examined all of the projects and asked principals, 'Do you still need this?'" Dobbs said. "In some cases, they decided they didn't want certain projects if it meant knocking down walls and limiting classroom space."

Several improvement projects at Twin Falls High School, Dobbs said, will be finished within the next five years by using funds from the facilities levy, but he estimated that about half of the improvements proposed to voters are complete.

"We're looking at this as a promise made to the community. Having said that, over the course of time, we checked back and tinkered with some of it," Dobbs said. "We've had to make some changes but not to encumber future taxpayers ... We know things can change in the future, and we may have to add some things."

Dobbs said that much of the $10 million in overruns for the high school can be offset by selling a few of the 80 acres of land owned by the district in the Canyon Ridge area.

Earlier this month, the Twin Falls City Council approved commercial development on land near Canyon Ridge. The district intends to subdivide 4.2 acres — leaving plenty of property for future expansion, Dobbs said — on the southwest corner of Cheney Drive West and Washington Street North and sell the property as five commercial lots, which, district officials said at the time, will attract more buyers than trying to sell the entire parcel to one buyer.

Dobbs estimated that about $6.5 million of the $10 million in overruns will be augmented by selling the land for $2-3 million and from $5 million in various district investments.

He acknowledged, however, that selling the land isn't guaranteed.

Pendergrass emphasized that the rest of the overruns will be folded into the facilities levy.

"So taxpayers don't have to worry about another levy," she said.

Mini-Cassia schools, the Idaho Migrant Council, South Central Head Start, South Central Community Action Partnership and the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare. Approved applicants will be given a time to pick up their box on Dec. 12.

Frost said the organization has been operating in the area for more than 35 years. This year, she said, they are seeing more people who want to volunteer and they are seeing a shift of those who are in need.

"We are seeing more men out of work than in the past," Frost said.

Frost said often they see people shift from recipient to volunteer as their circumstances improve and they want to help others.

Dolly Freiburger, who has also volunteered for many years, said the items most needed by the council include gifts for teen boys and men, nonperishable food, coats, sweaters, blankets, and cash. The council does not give out other clothing items and all donations should be clean and in good condition. All of the food is given out each year.

Gifts to the nonprofit organization are tax-deductible and none of the volunteers are paid.

"This time of year people have a different outlook on things and they have a desire to help," Frost said. "They step up to the plate and the whole community is blessed by it."

was criticized during his run for the Republican presidential nomination in 2008 for the number of clemencies and commutations he granted, cited Clemmons' age at the time of the sentence.

After his release from prison, Clemmons violated his parole and was returned to prison in July 2001. He was released March 18, 2004, according to the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette newspaper.

The four officers were with the 100-member police department of Lakewood, which adjoins the unincorporated area of Parkland, where the shootings took place. The city identified the victims as Sgt. Mark Renninger, 39; Ronald Owens, 37; Tina Griswold, 40; and Greg Richards 42.

Troyer said one of those officers fought with the gunman and may have wounded him before the officer died just outside the doorway. He told reporters that investigators were asking area medical providers to report any people wounded by gunshots.

Troyer said investigators believe two of the officers were shot dead while sitting in the shop, and a third was killed after standing up. The fourth apparently struggled with the gunman out the doorway and "gave up a good fight," getting off a few shots before he was either shot there or succumbed to earlier wounds.

"We believe there was a struggle, a commotion, a fight ... that he fought the guy all the way out the door," Troyer said.

He added, "We hope that he hit him."

Troyer said the gunman entered the coffee house and walked up to the counter as if to place an order. A barista saw a gun when the man opened his jacket and fled out the back door. The man then turned and opened fire on the officers as they sat working on their laptops, killing the three men and one woman in what Troyer described as a targeted ambush.

Troyer said the attack was clearly targeted at the officers, not a robbery gone bad.

"This was more of an execution. Walk in with the specific mindset to shoot police officers," he said.

Troyer said the officers were catching up on paperwork at the beginning of their shifts when they were attacked at 8:15 a.m. Sunday.

"There were marked patrol cars outside and they were all in uniform," Troyer said.

There was no indication of any connection with the Halloween night shooting of a Seattle police officer. The suspect in that shooting remains hospitalized.

prison wing with some of their politicians," says Ben Ysursa, 60, Idaho's top election official since 2003.

In this tale of two brothers, however, the political abyss that separates their states hasn't muted their friendship.

Ben followed Bernard to St. Louis University law school in the early 1970s, where they lived together for a year. After golf this summer in Boise, they'll see each other again in January with family in Jupiter, Fla., where Bernard owns a condominium near the Cardinal's spring training home. There, they'll celebrate the 90th birthday of their father, Ramon.

"We're smart enough not to get too immersed in political discussions, they just lead to agreeing to disagree," Ben said. "There's a heck of a lot more to talk about, with family and grandkids."

In the mid-1960s, Bernard Ysursa graduated from St. Teresa's Academy in Boise, the local Catholic school favored by southwestern Idaho's old Basque families. There, he was a classmate of Idaho Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter. While attending the University of Notre Dame before law school, he had every intention of returning to Idaho.

"I used to tell people, 'I'm going back to Boise to run for governor,'" Bernard Ysursa remembers. "Then, I got drafted. I got a job offer from my law school friend. That's why I stayed in Illinois. This is where I was married, this is where my children were born."

It turns out, Southern Illinois, where railroaders, unions and trial lawyers have set the tone for a century, was this Idaho boy's natural political home.

His law firm, Cook, Ysursa, Bartholomew, Brauer & Shevlin Ltd., is a powerful force in the Democratic politics of St. Clair County on the Illinois-Missouri border. In recent years, Ysursa and his partners contributed more than $70,000 to candidates like Obama, Blagojevich, former U.S. Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle and U.S. Sen. Richard Durbin, D-Ill.

"We support labor, we're the opposite of Idaho on that one, on the right-to-work thing," said Bernard Ysursa, whose clients include injury victims and chemical giant Monsanto Co., headquartered in St. Louis. "I was always on that side, even as a high school kid in Boise."

volunteer in Ecuador. He was disillusioned with his job working at homeless shelters and enclaves for battered women in Denver and Boulder.

Eventually, he concluded his growing despair was tied to fretting over his financial ability to maintain his stuff. Stuff, he realized, he didn't need. So, he gave it all away.

"We use all our energy to maintain our possessions, and it becomes an ugly cycle," he says.

He doesn't barter or work for food or rent. Barter is another form of money, and Suelo doesn't deal with any form of currency. Today, he embraces an ascetic life of "art and philosophizing." He's hardly the growling hermit, instead circling town on his trash-bin-built bike, engaging a wide circle of pals.

"He is truly the happiest person I have ever met. He is so deeply peaceful, it's contagious," says Damian Nash, Suelo's college roommate and a high school teacher in Moab. "He is living proof that money can't buy happiness."

Every summer, when the heat in Moab reaches unbearable — especially for a cave-dweller — Suelo hits the road, visiting friends and gatherings along the West Coast, where he is known only as "Suelo."

"I have no idea what the future holds, and I don't worry about it. But the longer I do this, it seems absurd to go back," he says. "It would be like going back to slavery. There's just too much of a price to pay."

His cozy cave is an hour's stroll from town.

Maybe 15 feet by 5 feet, the one-man crevice is crammed with buckets holding a few days' worth of rice and beans, books and cooking pots.

The hole in the wall is tidy, with his bedroll neatly folded into a nook. Cupped ridges on the wall hold knickknacks. While the cave carries a strong smell of patchouli oil, Suelo doesn't import any odoriferous whiff of homelessness. He bathes daily in the stream below his cave. His clothes — which he found in the trash — are uncommonly formal for a man who camps year-round. Dress shoes and slacks, shirt buttoned to the top and a fresh wide-brimmed hat form a Suelo style that is more Bohemian chic than homeless bum.

Suelo lives an abundant albeit frugal life, thriving on the waste of a small town. Every week, he inspects Moab's trash, finding more than he needs. Supermarket throwaways keep him well-fed. He eats healthily, often eschewing the abundant supply of day-old doughnuts or expired sweets — although, he says, chocolate is "my gold."

The wild onions, watercress, prickly pear fruit, serviceberries, globe mallow and pine nuts that grow near his home add fresh-grown flair to the trash-bin-derived dishes he cooks over fire-branded coffee cans molded into stoves. He occasionally cooks roadkill gathered around Moab, and says he has never fallen ill from spoiled food.

The piles of trash behind Moab's half-dozen self-storage facilities provide a steady supply of clothes, tools, bedding and utensils.

"People don't realize how much perfectly good stuff is thrown away with just a blemish," he says. "Even after all these years, I'm still asking myself, 'Why would anyone throw this out?'"

National parks will share in profits from research in parks

By Mead Gruver
Associated Press writer

CHEYENNE, Wyo. — A soon-to-be-implemented policy for scientists who are permitted to conduct research in national parks will give the National Park Service a share of any profits from their work.

The policy is expected to go into effect early next year following more than a decade of concern and a lawsuit over “bioprospecting” in Yellowstone National Park. Bioprospecting — a hybrid of the words “biodiversity” and “prospecting” — is the search for organisms that promise scientific breakthroughs in medicine and chemistry.

“This is about the public, which owns places like Yellowstone, getting some kind of benefit if someone has a commercial product based on research which started in the park,” said Yellowstone spokesman Al Nash.

The new “benefits sharing” policy doesn’t specify what percentage of profits the National Park Service should receive in every case. But a document released Monday outlining the policy offers a rough estimate of the potential benefit to the park system — between $635,000 and $3.9 million a year, eventually.

The new policy applies to all 84 million acres in the national park system, including the more than 200 parks hosting independent research. In many of those parks including Yellowstone, the main quarry of bio-prospectors is bacteria.

An organism living in the wilderness and visible only with a microscope might seem an unlikely source of big money. But keep in mind how much DNA testing has helped to diagnose disease, solve crimes, study plants and animals, and even solve old archaeological mysteries over the last 20 years or so.

In the mid-1980s, scientists discovered that a bacteria species from a Yellowstone hot spring could make DNA testing much more practical. Because of that Nobel Prize-winning research, DNA testing has since become commonplace — an industry worth hundreds of millions of dollars a year.

The National Park Service hasn’t directly shared in those profits even though the bacteria species, Thermus aquaticus, arguably belonged the American public.

“It’s been a long time coming,” Frank Roberto, a microbiologist who’s been studying Yellowstone bacteria for nearly 20 years, said of the benefits sharing policy.

Roberto works for the Idaho National Laboratory, a federal lab 70 miles southwest of Yellowstone. The lab near Idaho Falls holds several patents derived from research involving Yellowstone bacteria.

Recent science includes looking for ways to more efficiently break down organic matter for use in biofuels, such as ethanol. The lab allows its scientists to share in any profits from discoveries they patent.

In Yellowstone, just about all research involves collecting no more than a test tube or petri dish of microscopic organisms — not nearly enough to cause environmental damage, Nash said.

Also, the Park Service isn’t looking for new revenue, he said, for “filling potholes.”

Roberto said it seems reasonable to him to give the National Park Service a share of profits related to research in national parks. But not everyone agrees that private concerns should be profiting from the parks.

“The parks would probably do better financially if they just rented out to Disneyland. But Americans, I would argue, wouldn’t want them to do that,” said Michael Garrity, executive director of the Alliance for the Wild Rockies based in Helena, Mont.

Allowing companies to profit from research in the parks amounts to privatizing park resources, Garrity said.

“It’s a public resource and should continue to be a public resource,” he said.

The alliance and others sued the Park Service in 1999 over an agreement between Yellowstone and Diversa, a San Diego company that was allowed to bioprospect in exchange for sharing any profits. It was the first agreement between a national park and a research company involving the for-profit collection of park organisms.

A federal judge in Washington, D.C., sided with the Park Service in 2000 but ordered an environmental analysis of bioprospecting in the park system. That process resulted in the new policy.

A deer Saturday night near Wendell sparked a series of crashes along Interstate 84 around 6:30 p.m., according to Idaho State Police.

The first involved 23-year-old Micah Spillman from Hyrum, Utah, who swerved his vehicle to miss the deer in the road, overcorrected, drove off the roadway and flipped. Spillman and his passenger, Catherine Spillman, 21, were belted and uninjured in the crash, though speed was likely a factor, according to a press release Sunday from ISP.

Two other vehicles crashed causing only minor damage after hitting debris from Spillman’s wreck, police said.

Health providers seek to increase scope of lawsuit

By Rebecca Boone
Associated Press writer

BOISE — A group of private agencies that serve hundreds of severely developmentally delayed people across Idaho have asked a federal judge to allow them to broaden their lawsuit against the state and Medicaid over reimbursement rates.

The groups sued in April after the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare decided to cut Medicaid reimbursement payments by as much as 55 percent, contending the change would put them out of business, infringe on the care provided to more than 2,000 adults and children, conflict with federal law and violate state law because the rate structure was never vetted by the Idaho Legislature.

U.S. District Judge Justin Quackenbush temporarily blocked the scheduled cuts while the lawsuit went forward. And the state followed up with a surprising move: It asked the judge to make the injunction permanent.

“It was taking a lot of staff time, and we need to move forward. We need to work with the providers and come up with an equitable fee-for-service arrangement,” Idaho Department of Health and Welfare spokesman Tom Shanahan said.

James Piotrowski, the attorney representing the health care groups, said the state wanted the lawsuit to end rather than to comply with discovery requests from his clients, who wanted records of rate-changing decisions made back to 1997.

“We think we’re going to find that previous rate cuts were just as illegal as the rate cut attempted in 2009,” Piotrowski said last week. “We want to amend the complaint to say not only was the 2009 rate change invalid but some of the prior rate changes going back to 1997.”

The state can’t just change the reimbursement rates based on the money available in the budget, Piotrowski said — it must make the changes based on methodology, and that methodology must be described in federal and state documents. The most recent methodology listed in the state plan and federal documents is from 1995, he said.

“We think we’re going to find that the description of the rate-setting methodology hasn’t changed until recently, despite rate changes so significant that they couldn’t have been based on the methodology from 1995,” he said.

The private providers don’t want retroactive pay, he said.

“My clients have been paid the same rates for seven years, with no adjustments for new regulatory requirements, no cost of living increases,” he said. “We just want to get to a legally valid rate-setting process.”

Shanahan said the rates were set using methodology requested by the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services — the federal agency that pays the bulk of Idaho’s Medicaid bill.

“They want states to go for a fee-for-service arrangement, and we were paying $795 a day to the providers for technical support services. If you average that out, it’s probably about $2,900 a year for each client,” Shanahan said. “So what our methodology proposed, and what was approved by CMS (the federal agency), is that we pay in 15-minute increments when the services are actually provided.”

The department also set a limit on the amount of services provided each year, for a total amount of just over $1,500 the first year and just over $1,300 in subsequent years.

“We developed what we thought was an equitable rate, and they preferred to stay with the $7.95 a day. Our rules only say they have to be in the home once a quarter, so we didn’t know how often they were actually providing the service,” he said.

UAE central bank offers more cash
amid panic over
Dubai debt crisis

DUBAI — The United Arab Emirates has pledged to stand behind foreign and domestic banks in the country, offering additional money while extolling the strength of the Gulf nation's financial sector as world markets brace for a potential day of reckoning Monday over Dubai's crushing debt.

The UAE's immediate priority was arguably to avert any run, however unlikely, on banks by panicked depositors. But the promise of cheap funds also signaled to global investors that the country's federal government — backed by oil money — will do what it can to limit the fallout from its indebted emirate's woes.

In a statement Sunday, the UAE's central bank said it had sent notice to Emirati banks and foreign banks with branches in the country making clear they would have access to “a special additional liquidity facility?”

The offer comes after Dubai World, the conglomerate that has long been the chief engine behind Dubai's explosive growth, on Wednesday announced it needed at least a six-month reprieve from paying its roughly $60 billion debt. The news sent global markets tumbling.

Mid-east markets were unaffected because of an extended Islamic holiday, but they reopen today.

WASHINGTON
Senator: Obama's war plan needs to be clearer

The leading Senate Democrat on military matters said Sunday that President Obama's anticipated plan for significantly expanding U.S. troop levels in Afghanistan must show how those reinforcements will help increase the size of the Afghan security forces.

Sen. Carl Levin, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said that more Afghan army and police are central to succeeding in the 8-year-old war and more U.S. trainers and equipment can help meet that goal. But it's unclear, Levin said, what role tens of thousands additional combat troops will play and Obama has to make a compelling case during a national address he's scheduled to give Tuesday night from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y.

“The key here is an Afghan surge, not an American surge,” said Levin, D-Mich. “We cannot, by ourselves, win (the) war.”

Levin's remarks are a preview of the possible roadblocks Obama faces from his own party as he prepares to sell a broader, more expensive battle plan for Afghanistan to an American public weary of the conflict that began just weeks after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

At West Point, Obama is expected to announce an increase of up to 35,000 more U.S. forces to defeat the Taliban-led insurgency and stabilize a weak Afghan government. The escalation, which would take place over the next year, would put more than 100,000 American troops in Afghanistan at an annual cost of about $75 billion. Democrats concerned over the price tag have proposed a war tax to pay for operations.

With divisions on health care, Senate Dems now need 60 votes more than ever health care overhaul, the all-hands-on-deck Democratic coalition that allowed the bill to advance is fracturing already. Yet majority Democrats will need 60 votes again to finish.

Some Democratic senators say they'll jump ship from the bill without tighter restrictions on abortion coverage. Others say they'll go unless a government plan to compete with private insurance companies gets tossed overboard. Such concessions would enrage liberals, the heart and soul of the party.

There's no clear course for Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., to steer legislation through Congress to President Obama. You can't make history unless you reach 60 votes, and don't count on Republicans helping him.

But Reid is determined to avoid being remembered as another Democrat who tried and failed to make health care access for the middle class a part of America's social safety net.

For-profit colleges reaping rewards of surge in government aid to poor students

RALEIGH — Students aren't the only ones benefiting from the billions of new dollars Washington is spending on college aid for the poor.

An Associated Press analysis shows surging proportions of both low-income students and the recently boosted government money that follows them are ending up at for-profit schools, from local career colleges to giant publicly traded chains such as the University of Phoenix, Kaplan and DeVry.

Last year, the five institutions that received the most federal Pell Grant dollars were all for-profit colleges, collecting over $1 billion among them. That was two and a half times what those schools hauled in just two years prior, the AP found, analyzing Department of Education data on disbursements from the Pell program, Washington's main form of college aid to the poor.

This year, the trend is accelerating: In the first quarter after the maximum Pell Grant was increased last July 1, Washington paid out 45 percent more through the program than during the same period a year ago, the AP found. But the amount of dollars heading to for-profit, or “proprietary,” schools is up even more — about 67 percent.

For-profit colleges say the country has little choice but to accept their help to achieve President Obama's goal of getting every American to enroll in some form of education beyond high school. The for-profit schools have space while community colleges are Fighting swine flu, companies dole out hygiene tips, hand sanitizer

TRENTON — Big businesses are spending serious time and money trying to limit the swine flu pandemic's impact on operations, from bankrolling video on good hygiene to training employees to cover for co-workers with critical jobs.

INSIDE
Flu vaccine made in 1976 led to outbreak of paralysis.
See Main 10

Companies from health insurer UnitedHealth Group Inc. to beverage can maker Ball Corp. are arranging for employees with flu symptoms or sick family members to work from home where possible, holding fewer in-person meetings, even discouraging handshakes. And hand sanitizers, disinfectant wipes and tissues are at the ready everywhere as employers make keeping workers healthy their first line of defense.

Employers are playing Dr. Mom, teaching about hygiene, distributing information about the pandemic, telling folks to stay home if they get sick — generally with pay — and scrapping the required doctor's note. Some companies have even distributed “wellness kits” with thermometers and face masks.

Whether those efforts and other measures will protect businesses will depend largely on whether the swine flu mutates into a more-dangerous virus.

‘12 Days of Christmas’ items’ cost would top $87K, up slightly from last year

By Dan Nephin
Associated Press writer

PITTSBURGH — Making one's true love happy will cost a whopping $87,403 this year, a minuscule increase from last year, according to the latest cost analysis of the items in the carol “The Twelve Days of Christmas.”

That's the grand total for the single partridge in a pear tree to the 12 drummers drumming, purchased repeatedly as the song suggests, according to the annual “Christmas Price Index” compiled by PNC Wealth Management. The price is up a mere $794, or less than 1 percent, from $86,609 last year.

The cost of buying each item just once is increasing this year to $21,466, up 1.8 percent from last year's $21,081.

Jim Dunigan, managing executive of investment for PNC Wealth Management, which has been calculating the cost of Christmas since 1984, attributed the modest increase to lower energy costs and fewer wage increases.

It's the smallest increase since 2002, when the cost actually decreased, according to PNC.

The main driver behind the higher cost is that the price of gold has increased 43 percent, bringing the five gold rings up $150 to $500.

Although wage increases were modest, nine ladies dancing, at $5,473 per performance, is the costliest item, surpassing that of any of the material goods.

The most expensive goods are the seven swans a-swimming at $5,250, but their cost decreased 6.3 percent from last year's $5,600. Dunigan said their cost tends to be the most volatile because of supply and demand; they were up 33 percent last year over 2007.

Costs for the 10 lords a-leaping ($4,414 per performance), 11 pipers piping ($2,285 per performance) and 12 drummers drumming ($2,475 per performance) remained the same as last year. Dunigan says that reflects the labor market in which the unemployment rate rose to near 10 percent after sitting below 5 percent for much of the decade.

And for those who would shop online, a word of caution.

PNC says you'll pay $31,435, which is down from last year's online price, but still about $10,000 more than in the traditional index.

“In general, Internet prices are higher than their non-Internet counterparts because of shipping costs for birds and the convenience factor of shopping online,” Dunigan said.

PNC Financial Services Group Inc. checks jewelry stores, dance companies, pet stores and other sources to compile the list. While it is done humorously, PNC said its index mirrors real economic trends.

Besides putting out the list for fun, PNC makes it available to teachers across the country to teach economic trends.

While it's unlikely anyone would buy the items, Dunigan said one item is likely to please.

“We don't necessarily suggest picking just one, but it's hard to believe that gold rings wouldn't lead the list on a year-to-year basis,” Dunigan said.

Favre leads Vikings past Cutler, Bears 36-10

By Dave Campbell
Associated Press writer

MINNEAPOLIS — Brett Favre and Jay Cutler provided more evidence that Minnesota's new quarterback experiment is working out much better than Chicago's.

Favre passed for a season-high 392 yards and three touchdowns, and the Vikings intercepted Cutler twice in a 36-10 victory over the Bears on Sunday.

Favre went 32 for 48 without a turnover and was 10 yards off his career best, throwing touchdowns to Visanthe Shiancoe, Chester Taylor and Percy Harvin, the unflappable rookie who had his best game yet.

The Vikings (10-1) outgained the Bears by a whopping 537 yards to 169 and breezed to their fifth straight win, despite two more fumbles and a pedestrian 85 yards on 25 carries by Adrian Peterson.

His short, late touchdown run put Minnesota over 32 points for the sixth time this season. The Vikings had 31 first downs, the Bears just eight.

Cutler was precise in the short passing game and effective in the no-huddle, keeping the Bears (4-7) in it until late in the second quarter.

He was picked off by a diving Cedric Griffin in the end zone.

Then on the next possession, E.J. Henderson got his hand on a ball over the middle that Jared Allen jumped up and caught with 57 seconds left in the half.

Favre drove the Vikings 70 yards for a 24-7 advantage, and Ryan Longwell kicked two of his three field goals after halftime to further stretch the lead.

Cutler reached his career high with 20 interceptions, with 15 of those coming in the last seven games.

BCS needs the Broncos

Boise State is good medicine for BCS

Analysis

By Ralph D. Russo
Associated Press writer

By process of elimination, Boise State moves in on a BCS bid.

The BCS officials need to approach Boise State the way one might approach cough medicine. It makes you cringe at first, but in the long run it's good for you.

No matter what the bowl executives in the brightly colored jackets say, they can't be thrilled with the idea of having Boise State in the BCS — even though it's clear that's the direction the Broncos are headed.

Bowl organizers like marquee teams, brand names with national followings. But those type of teams have spent the last month and a half playing themselves out of Bowl Championship Series contention — with Oklahoma State (yes, calling the Boise State (12-0) still has to beat lowly New Mexico State to finish its regular season undefeated, but that shouldn't be a problem.

It seems only a Nebraska victory over Texas in the Big 12 title game can keep Boise State from landing the BCS at-large bid its fans have been crying for and its conference has been lobbying to get.

A Nebraska victory would send the Cornhuskers to the Fiesta Bowl, the Longhorns into the at-large pool — where they could snatch Boise State's spot — and create a crazy debate over who should play the SEC champion for the national title.

The Western Athletic Conference hired a public relations firm to handle its "Boise State belongs in the BCS" campaign.

While some might hail the Broncos' inclusion as a victory for the little guys and a blow to the system, really this is just about the best thing that can happen for the BCS.

If the blue-turf Broncos get in, it helps BCS supporters

Top 5 intact; BSU still No. 6

There was no movement among Nos. 1 through 5 in any of the college football polls or the Bowl Championship Series standings following this weekend, meaning Boise State is still No. 6 in them all.

Florida, Alabama, Texas, TCU and Cincinnati all held their respective spots — Alabama and Texas split the No. 2 and 3 spots in different polls — in the Associated Press Top 25, the USA Today Top 25, the Harris Top 25 and the BCS standings.

The polls are guaranteed to shake up following this weekend: Boise State plays New Mexico State Friday, but on Saturday, Florida and Alabama will face off for the SEC Championship, while Texas plays Nebraska in the Big 12 title game. Cincinnati plays Pittsburgh. The complete BCS standings and other polls are on Main 7.

Woods cancels meeting with police for 3rd time

By Fred Goodall
Associated Press writer

WINDERMERE, Fla. — Tiger Woods finally gave his side of the story Sunday — on his Web site, not to police — and took the blame for an "embarrassing" car crash that gave him cuts, bruises and public scrutiny like never before.

His statement failed to clear up any questions about the middle-of-the-night accident outside his Isleworth estate in which his wife told police she used a golf club to smash the back windows of the Cadillac SUV to help him out.

"This situation is my fault, and it's obviously embarrassing to my family and me," Woods said on his Web site. "I'm human and I'm not perfect. I will certainly make sure this doesn't happen again."

The statement was posted around 2 p.m. Sunday, about an hour after Woods' attorney told the Florida Highway Patrol that for the third straight day golf's No. 1 player would be unavailable to talk to troopers.

This time, the meeting was not rescheduled.

Even so, Sgt. Kim Montes of FHP said troopers went to Woods' $2.4 million estate anyway, only for attorney Mark NeJame to turn them away. The attorney gave troopers Woods' driver's license, registration and insurance as required by law for such accidents.

Woods said the crash was a private matter, and he intended to keep it that way.

"Although I understand there is curiosity, the many false, unfounded and malicious rumors that are currently circulating about my family and me are irresponsible," he said. "The only person responsible for the accident is me. My wife, Elin, acted courageously when she saw I was hurt and in trouble. She was the first person to help me. Any other assertion is absolutely false."

Woods is scheduled to compete at his Chevron World Challenge, which starts Thursday in Thousand Oaks, Calif., although his tournament director did not know Woods' status for the tournament — whether he would play or even attend.

Even with his first public comments on the 2:25 a.m. Friday accident, Woods left several questions.

- Where he was going at that time of the night?
- How did he lose control of his

SUV at such a speed that the air bags didn't deploy?

- Why were both rear windows of the Cadillac Escalade smashed?

- If it was a careless mistake, why not speak to state troopers trying to wrap the investigation?

"We have been informed by the Florida Highway Patrol that further discussion with them is both voluntary and optional," Mark Steinberg, his agent at IMG, said in an e-mail. "Although Tiger realizes that there is a great deal of public curiosity, it has been conveyed to FHP that he simply has nothing more to add and wishes to protect the privacy of his family."

Woods' wife turned troopers away from their home in the exclusive gated community outside Orlando on Friday, the day of the accident, because she said he was sleeping. Steinberg called troopers en route to Woods' house on Saturday and postponed the meeting until Sunday.

She said the 911 caller was interviewed Saturday, and investigators might speak with other people who were at the scene as well.

The FHP released the 911 call from an unidentified neighbor on Sunday.

IDAHO, BSU WOMEN'S HOOPS Bronco women win tournament title

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — The Boise State women's basketball team remained perfect at 7-0 by defeating Washington State 68-64 Sunday in UNLV's Lady Rebel Round-up championship game at Cox Pavilion.

Tasha Harris led the Broncos with 23 points, hitting 9 of 12 from the free-throw line, nine rebounds, three assists and three steals. Jessica Van Hoogen added 18 points (8 of 12 free throw attempts), two assists and two steals.

EDITORIAL

It will be a grand Highway 93 overpass, but do the deer care?

We’re all for stimulating Elko County’s economy and for doing something to reduce the too-frequent encounters along U.S. Highway 93 between deer and motor vehicles.

But a $1.8 million deer overpass?

The Nevada Department of Transportation is building a wildlife viaduct about 10 miles north of Wells and 59 miles south of the Idaho border.

When finished, the concrete structure will measure 66 feet wide, 162 feet long and almost 23 feet tall and will be covered with dirt and natural vegetation.

The structure’s base was completed last week, ending traffic delays that lasted up to two hours. A fence will eventually direct wildlife up and over the 26 precast concrete rings, each weighing 50,000 pounds, that make up the structure.

The bulk of the rest of the project — which includes weather-proofing the rings, building wing walls out from the structure, back-filling dirt and putting up the remainder of the fence — is expected to be completed before New Year’s Day, weather permitting.

Trouble is, NDOT isn’t even sure deer will use the structure when it’s finished. State officials and the University of Nevada-Reno will determine that with a study.

That’s a big “if” for $1.8 million.

NDOT says wildlife crossings have proven effective elsewhere, and that six highway underpasses in Wyoming practically eliminated deer-vs.-vehicle collisions. The Wyoming Department of Transportation wants to construct a network of 30 or more wildlife underpasses and overpasses along stretches of U.S. Highway 191 near Pinedale, on U.S. Highway 189 near Kemmerer, and on Interstate 80 near Elk Mountain and Wamsutter.

But along a two-lane blacktop in Nevada’s basin-and-range country, there’s no guarantee that deer won’t continue to barge right across Highway 93 — and into traffic — overpass or not.

As it stands, the danger to both motorists and wildlife is real enough. Researchers chronicled 290 deer-vs.-vehicle collisions along the highway from 2000 to 2004. Another 40 accidents happened between 2008 and last year.

But shouldn’t lower-tech — and less expensive — solutions such as enhanced fencing or even a “deer crosswalk” have been tried before the evidence is more substantial that a wildlife overpass might really work?

Our view:

Nearly $2 million for technology we don’t know will work? Sounds like a government project.

What do you think?

We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

If you can’t join ’em, beat ’em

I hereby forfeit my claim to a right-wing conspiracy decoder ring by offering two cheers for the Democrats. I congratulate them on their victory earlier this month in the Senate, and while I can’t quite wish them continued success on the course they are following, I’m beginning to make peace with the possibility that they’ll win.

For years, conservatives and liberals have flirted with the idea of disposing of the fool’s errand of bipartisan-ship. Seeking compromise with partisans across the aisle is a recipe for getting nothing important done.

Jonah Goldberg

For liberals, New York Times columnist Paul Krugman has been a leader of this school. In 2007, Krugman wrote in Slate magazine that progressives should abandon any pretense at working with Republicans. The “middle ground,” he wrote, “doesn’t exist — and if Democrats try to find it, they’ll squander a huge opportunity. Right now, the stars are aligned for a major change in America’s direction. If the Democrats play nice, that opportunity may soon be gone.”

“If one thing is clear from the stimulus debate,” he wrote earlier this year, “it’s that the two parties have utterly different economic doctrines.” Krugman went on to describe the different views in his typically tendentious manner.

He’s right on the basic point. While there are plenty of hackish, opportunistic deal makers in both parties, the core visions — one progressive, the other conservative — that animate the rank and file are increasingly, and fundamentally, irreconcilable.

Hence, the quest for the middle ground usually rewards the worst kinds of politicians — those devoid of any core convictions and only concerned with feathering their own nests — and yields the worst kinds of policies. Blending the two visions is like trying to marry two different recipes. You don’t get the best of both so much as a huge mess — say, peanut butter and caviar — or a fraudulent meal, like a “vegetarian” cheesesteak. Better to stay pure, have your way and convince the American people that your way is the best way.

In short, if you can’t join ’em, beat ’em.

Now, the appeal of such an argument depends a great deal on your proximity to power. When your side is out of power, half a loaf is more appetizing than nothing. When in power, the thought of hogging the whole loaf for yourself instead of sharing is seductive.

I may be talking about team dynamics, but I don’t mean that there’s no difference between the teams. Far from it. The Democrats sincerely believe that nationalized health care, in one form or another, is the best thing for America and that if they can get it passed, voters will fall in love with it.

Politically, there is a real danger they’re right. Americans are loath to relinquish entitlements once they’ve secured them. That’s the Republicans’ gamble.

Then again, Democrats run the very serious risk that before the imagined joys of health care reform can be realized, voters will revolt over its tax hikes, massive Medicare cuts, increased bureaucracy and/or its budget-exploding costs. That’s the Democrats’ gamble.

Some moderate Democrats are making a side bet that they can vote for it out of solidarity and then run back to the center come the 2010 elections.

Well, I say let it ride. And just to make it more interesting, Republicans should promise to repeal “Obamacare” if they get a congressional majority in 2010. As National Review’s Ramesh Ponnuru argues, that way moderate Democrats won’t be able to run away from their votes come 2010. They’ll be on notice that this will be the campaign issue of the election. And moderate Republicans will be on notice to resist the temptation to tinker with Obamacare rather than demonstrate it once it’s passed.

Sure, I’d rather see this health care proposal die stillborn (and that’s still quite possible). But if it passes, the upside is that Americans will finally be given a stark philosophical choice on a fundamental issue. That’s much rarer than you might think (recall that the Iraq war and the bailouts were bipartisan affairs).

Obamacare is a vast, deeply polarizing demonstration project for progressive ideas. It is terrible policy, but because I think it’s terrible policy, it may well result in a beneficial backlash. “Example is the school of mankind,” proclaimed Edmund Burke, “and they will learn at no other.”

Democrats insist they’re pushing for health care reform against a political headwind because “history” compels them to. Republicans are standing athwart “history” yelling, “Stop!”

Politically, one side will be proved right, and the side proved wrong will pay a staggering price. Everyone’s all in.

Charter schools don't pick the best students

The anti-charter school folks have always made the charge that the reason charter school students typically outperform their traditional school counterparts is due to the erroneous assumption that charter schools cherry-pick the best students. However, a new study by Caroline Hoxby, a Stanford University economist, reveals data which provides great news for charter school supporters.

Her new study, “How New York City’s Charter Schools Affect Achievement,” shows that charter students, typically from more disadvantaged families perform almost as well as students in affluent suburbs. The study nullifies any self-selection bias by comparing students who attend charters only with those who applied for admission through the lottery, but did not get in. “Lottery Based Studies,” notes Ms. Hoxby, “are scientific and more reliable.” While Idaho students were not included in the study, test results have shown that Idaho charter school students routinely outperform their traditional school counterparts.

Another erroneous assumption is that charter schools take more taxpayer dollars. Actually nationwide on average, charter school per-pupil spending is 61 percent that of surrounding public schools. In Idaho, charter schools cost taxpayers less per student as charter schools do not have any property-tax levying authority in the form of bond, plant facility, emergency and supplemental property tax levies.

Little wonder President Obama is pressuring states to relax or eliminate rules that limit the number of charter schools. It is too bad that our national and state policymakers can’t or won’t see the evidence to other effective school choice reforms, such as vouchers and tax credits.

That lack of vision can only be explained by the power that the education establishment has over the policy makers. It is very clear that charter schools out perform traditional schools and that education choice is at least part of the answer to improving all of our schools. For that answer we look to our education leaders at all levels to eliminate those barriers to school choice. How much longer will we have to wait?

Twin Falls takes care of its own

Today (Nov. 20), I attended the funeral of my nephew

Matthew C. Heffelfinger. I was very touched by the outpouring of love and support the community gave to the Heffelfinger family. Signs on businesses remembered Matt; flags were flown at half-mast; citizens stopped what they were doing and stood solemnly with hands over hearts as the funeral procession made its way to Matt’s final resting place.

It is clear that Twin Falls takes care of its own. Most of the people who lined the streets could not have known who Matt was until his death; but that did not matter. What mattered was they took the time to pay tribute to a fallen hero who gave his life protecting and defending his country and the very town that came out to honor him.

As a visitor to your town, I was very touched to see this type of patriotism and to know that Matt neither died in vain, nor will he be forgotten.

Iran plans enrichment sites in defiance of UN

By Ali Akbar Dareini
Associated Press writer

TEHRAN — Iran approved plans Sunday to build 10 industrial scale uranium enrichment facilities, a dramatic expansion of the program in defiance of U.N. demands it halt enrichment and a move that is likely to significantly heighten tensions with the West.

The decision comes only days after the U.N. nuclear watchdog agency censured Iran over its program and demanded it halt the construction of a newly revealed enrichment facility. The West has signaled it is running out of patience with Iran’s continuing enrichment and its balking at a U.N. deal aimed at ensuring Tehran cannot build a nuclear weapon in the near-term future. The U.S. and its allies have hinted at new U.N. sanctions if Iran does not respond.

The White House said the move “would be yet another serious violation of Iran’s clear obligations under multiple U.N. Security Council resolutions and another example of Iran choosing to isolate itself.”

“Time is running out for Iran to address the international community’s growing concerns about its nuclear program,” White House press secretary Robert Gibbs said.

British Foreign Secretary David Miliband described Iran’s move as a provocation.

“This epitomizes the fundamental problem that we face with Iran,” he said. “We have stated over and again that we recognize Iran’s right to a civilian nuclear program, but they must restore international confidence in their intentions. Instead of engaging with us Iran chooses to provoke and dissemble.”

On Friday, the U.N.’s International Atomic Energy Agency issued a strong rebuke of Iran over enrichment, infuriating Tehran. Parliament speaker Ali Larijani threatened on Sunday to reduce cooperation with the IAEA.

“Should the West continue to pressure us, the legislature can reconsider the level of Iran’s cooperation with the IAEA,” Larijani told parliament in a speech carried live on state radio.

Vice President Ali Akbar Salehi, who is also Iran’s nuclear chief, said Sunday’s decision was “a firm message” in response to the IAEA. He told state TV that the agency’s censure was a challenge aimed at “measuring the resistance of the Iranian nation.”

Swiss ban mosque minarets in surprise vote

By Alexander G. Higgins
Associated Press writer

GENEVA — Swiss voters overwhelmingly approved a constitutional ban on minarets on Sunday, barring construction of the iconic mosque towers in a surprise vote that put Switzerland at the forefront of a European backlash against a growing Muslim population.

Muslim groups in Switzerland and abroad condemned the vote as biased and anti-Islamic. Business groups said the decision hurt Switzerland’s international standing and could damage relations with Muslim nations and wealthy investors who bank, travel and shop there.

“The Swiss have failed to give a clear signal for diversity, freedom of religion and human rights,” said Omar Al-Rawi, integration representative of the Islamic Denomination in Austria, which said its reaction was “grief and deep disappointment.”

About 300 people turned out for a spontaneous demonstration on the square outside parliament, holding up signs saying, “That is not my Switzerland,” placing candles in front of a model of a minaret and making another minaret shape out of the candles themselves.

“We’re sorry,” said another sign. A young woman pinned to her jacket a piece of paper saying, “Swiss passport for sale.”

The referendum by the nationalist Swiss People’s Party labeled minarets as symbols of rising Muslim political power that could one day transform Switzerland into an Islamic nation. The initiative was approved 57.5 to 42.5 percent by some 2.67 million voters. Only four of the 26 cantons or states opposed the initiative, granting the double approval that makes it part of the Swiss constitution.

Muslims comprise about 6 percent of Switzerland’s 7.5 million people. Many are refugees from the Yugoslav wars of the 1990s and about one in 10 actively practices their religion, the government says.

The country’s four standing minarets, which won’t be affected by the ban, do not traditionally broadcast the call to prayer outside their own buildings.

Seeking lessons from 1976 flu outbreak

Vaccine made then left about 400 with paralysis

By David Brown
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — As more people receive the H1N1 shot, an earlier vaccine is casting a mysterious shadow over the attempt to immunize 200 million people in the next few months.

A vaccine made in 1976 in response to a different strain of H1N1 influenza led to an outbreak of a rare form of paralysis. Of the 43 million people who were vaccinated, about 400 developed Guillain-Barre syndrome (GBS), and 25 died.

Whether an equally unexpected surprise might be lurking in this year’s swine flu shot is a big — although not publicly acknowledged — question hanging over the current immunization effort. That possibility is why the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention routinely reports, as it did Wednesday, on whether any notable side effects to the new vaccine have been discovered. (None have.)

Unlike today’s bug, the 1976 virus never took off from where it originated at an army base in New Jersey. With nothing to be gained from vaccination, the widespread campaign was halted after less than three months.

For the 15 years after the “swine flu affair,” scientists sought to nail down whether and how much the 1976 vaccine increased a person’s risk of GBS. Almost nothing, however, was done to figure out how and why the flu shot had that effect. It’s an oversight some public health officials are coming to regret.

“We should have made an exhaustive attempt to understand what happened from a biological standpoint,” said Michael Osterholm, a physician who heads the Center for Infectious Disease Research and Policy.

Both the 1976 strain and the new H1N1 strain are closely related to viruses carried by pigs, making some wonder whether that “swinishness” makes their vaccines more likely to cause unusual effects.

“That is the right question to ask,” said Peter Palese, an influenza virologist at Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York. “And I would like to say that no one really knows.”

Researchers stopped looking back at 1976, Osterholm said, when there were no subsequent problems with flu vaccines. “After we had a couple of seasons under our belt when there was no unusual risk to regular flu vaccines, we just let it go,” he said.

Barbara Arndt leads an arthritis-specific water aerobics class on a recent Friday at the YMCA city pool in Twin Falls. December's weather and holiday stress can aggravate arthritis inflammation, but exercises can help relieve the pain.

Cold weather, stiff joints

Fran Kittridge goes to water aerobics class three times a week and says it helps with circulation and allows her to have a more aggressive workout than in a gym, where she worries about falling.

How to cope with arthritis in winter

By Melissa Davlin

Falling snow and Christmas lights aren't a welcome sight for all southern Idaho residents.

Cold weather, holiday stress and seasonal changes aggravate inflammation for arthritis patients. And although there is no changing the weather, arthritis-specific exercises and therapies can help relieve the pain.

Some senior centers and fitness clubs offer arthritis-specific classes for sufferers, like the one held Nov. 20 at Twin Falls' city pool. Participant Fran Kittridge of Twin Falls said the water aerobics helps her with arthritis as well as peripheral neuropathy and balance issues related to diabetes.

"Not only do we have the water, but we have camaraderie with the people there," Kittridge said.

Classmates Rosie Bedwell and Minerva Benavides agreed. When Benavides stopped taking water aerobics classes on an extended trip to Texas, her symptoms were much worse.

"I really missed it," she said.

In addition to exercising, Bedwell avoids stress, which can cause arthritis flares.

"I have learned in my old age to just let it happen and just keep on moving," Bedwell said.

Kristin Biggins, a certified hand therapist at St. Luke's Idaho Elks Rehabilitation Services in Ketchum, said cold weather aggravates anyone's joints. Coupled with arthritis inflammation, that cold weather means a lot of suffering for some patients. Mornings are often the worst, as people don't Relief comes in many forms. Biggins recommends non-weight-bearing exercise, like water aerobics, cycling or elliptical training. Warm up before doing any activity, Biggins said, so your whole body is as limber as possible.

Moist heat works, too. Hot paraffin wax soaks offer deep relief for hands. For the whole body, warm baths or pools work well. Electrical blankets or heating pads offer a little relief but don't get as deep as moist heat, Biggins said.

Whatever you do, don't stay still, Biggins said. Movement eases joint stiffness.

"As you lubricate the joints and they warm up, either through motion or through heat, it tends to feel a little better," Biggins said.

'Lose Big, Win Big' contest returns to CSI

Sign up this week to compete for cash

Times-News

Planning on a weight loss resolution in 2010? Why not make a little money while you're at it?

College of Southern Idaho is revisiting its "Lose Big, Win Big" competition. The class, held from 3 to 4:30 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays, runs from Jan. 20 to May 12. Whoever loses the biggest percentage of body weight wins $1,000 at the end of the semester.

Last year, participants lost more than 250 pounds combined in nine weeks. Student Dan Hird, then 54, reached his goal of losing 35 pounds within eight weeks and lost a total of 50 pounds throughout the semester.

"Words cannot explain the greatness that is received from the people in the 'Lose Big, Win Big' class," he said in an April interview.

The class is open to community members as well as CSI students and faculty. In addition to the grand prize of $1,000, instructors Jaime Tigue and Scott Rogers will present weekly prizes to those who lose lots of weight.

Whether students want to compete for the $1,000 cash prize or just take the class, they should register for the one-credit "PHYE 199 C17" at CSI.

If interested in competing in the challenge, participants must write a two- to three-page essay describing why they should be a contestant, what motivates them to lose weight, and how they will maintain a healthy lifestyle after class. The essay must include a profile with a recent picture, height, current weight, goal weight, age, gender and contact information. Submit your essay to Judy Thom in Taylor 123 or e-mail it to jthom@csi.edu by the end of the day Friday.

Information: Jaime Tigue, 732-6479 or jtigue@csi.edu.

"We're on the cusp of some major advances in how we conceptualize alcoholism."
— Dr. Mark Willenbring, director of treatment and recovery research at the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism

KIRK MCKOY/Los Angeles Times

Top addiction experts say many drinkers can evaluate their habits and — using new knowledge about genetic and behavioral risks of addiction — change those habits if necessary.

Cutting back on alcohol

By Shari Roan
Los Angeles Times

RISK PREDICTORS

There are clues that can presage alcohol problems — and should be taken into account when people assess their alcohol consumption:

- Young age at first drink. Perhaps because of changes in the still-developing brain and because they associate with peers who are also heavy drinkers, people who drink at age 15 or younger are at particularly high risk of developing an alcohol problem. The national survey found that nearly half of people who become alcohol-dependent do so by age 21 and 75 percent by age 25.
- Flushing reaction to alcohol. Some people carry a gene mutation — ALDH2 — that affects alcohol metabolism and causes them to turn red when they drink. Seen mostly in people of Asian descent, the gene is linked to a higher risk of alcohol-use disorders but, conversely, the uncomfortable flushing effect often dissuades these people from drinking.

- Low sensitivity to alcohol. Some people need to drink more to feel an effect compared with the typical person — often referred to as the ability to "drink everyone else under the table." At least five genes are thought to be linked to this proclivity. An estimated 40 percent of children of alcoholics carry this trait.
- Specific gene mutations. They include a mutation of the 5HTT gene, which is linked to low serotonin levels in the brain and is found in 60 percent of people who were alcoholics at age 40, and a mutation of the GABA (A) gene that is linked to a low sensitivity to alcohol.
- The presence of behavioral, emotional or psychiatric disorders — or smoking dependence.

Any of these factors, when combined with a pattern of exceeding drinking limits, should help people gauge their personal risk, experts say.

develop disorders that are ultimately fatal to them."

The other key finding from the survey is that, at least once in the previous year, 28 percent of adults had exceeded the daily or weekly limits at which drinking is considered low-risk.

For men, low-risk drinking is defined as no more than four drinks on any given day or no more than 14 drinks per week. For women, the limit is three drinks per day or seven drinks per week. (A standard drink is 12 ounces of beer, eight to nine ounces of malt liquor, five ounces of wine or 1.5 ounces of 80-proof spirits.) The majority of Americans who drink beyond these limits have mild to moderate disorders, meaning they occasionally have trouble controlling their intake, Willenbring said.

That's where the overall risk assessment comes in. Willenbring compares it to treating high blood pressure or cholesterol before the condition develops into heart disease.

"It can be a chronic, relapsing disease. But it isn't usually that," Willenbring says.

Alcohol abuse is defined as use that repeatedly contributes, within a 12-month period, to the risk of bodily harm, relationship troubles, problems in meeting obligations and run-ins with the law. Alcohol dependence includes the same symptoms, plus the inability to limit or stop drinking; the need for more alcohol to achieve the same effect; the presence of withdrawal symptoms; and a consumption level that takes increasing amounts of time.

"For a long time there was an emphasis on alcoholism as if it were one thing," says Carol Prescott, a psychology professor at the University of Southern California who has studied alcohol-use disorders. "I think that has been abandoned. People with alcohol-related problems don't all look the same at all. Some people only have problems for a short time. Others people 18 and older in 2001 and 2002, and again in 2004 and 2005, with the results released in increments beginning in 2006.

This survey alone has been enough to convince even national addiction experts that they've been too narrow in their approach to alcohol disorders. But the findings are being further bolstered by research in genetics and psychology.

Perhaps the most remarkable finding of the epidemiologic study was how many Americans experienced an alcohol-use disorder (either abuse or the more severe dependence) at some point — and how many recovered on their own. About 30 percent of Americans had experienced a disorder, the research showed, but about 70 percent of those quit drinking or cut back to safe consumption patterns without treatment after four years or less.

Only 1 percent of those surveyed fit the stereotypical image of someone with severe, recurring alcohol addiction who has hit the skids.

The data suggest that there are two forms of alcohol disorders: one that fits the traditional view of alcoholism, in which the need for a drink takes over a person's life, and a time-limited form in which people drink heavily for a period but then cut down and recover.

Smaller plates may be key to diet success

By Jennifer LaRue Huget
Special to The Washington Post

The holiday season brings with it an overabundance of advice on how to avoid gaining weight in the face of all those festive meals, cocktail parties and plates of cookies brought in by co-workers. Depending on whose advice you're inclined to heed, you can cut back on carbs, mind the glycemic index of the foods before you, fill up on fat or count every calorie.

Or maybe you could just use smaller plates.

That's the premise of "The 9-Inch 'Diet'" (Power-House), a book published last November by a pair of advertising executives that makes a strong visual and verbal argument that much of America's weight problem stems not from eating the wrong foods but from eating too much.

Alex Bogusky, who wrote the book with Chuck Porter, is best known for his work on the "Truth" anti-tobacco ad campaign. He starts the book with a simple tale. Having just bought a lakeside cottage built in the 1940s, he and his wife went out to stock up on dinnerware. But the plates they bought didn't fit, no matter which way he tried to jam them in the cupboards. Slowly it dawned on him that those cupboards had been built with much smaller plates in mind. Further research revealed that while most dinner plates today measure 12 inches, in the middle of the past century the standard was nine inches.

And so a "diet" was born. (Bogusky notes that it's not a diet at all — and thank goodness, as most diets don't work in the long run, he observes.) Bogusky replaced his plates with vintage nine-inchers, and he and his family adjusted their serving sizes accordingly. "Research has proven," Bogusky told me in an e-mail, "the mind is a much bigger trigger for how and when we feel satisfied and full than anybody had formerly realized. More so than the stomach!" As a result, he says, he's eating considerably less food at every meal.

And you can, too.

"The 9-Inch 'Diet'" is a fun read, chock-full of images that show how the continual super-sizing of American food-serving vessels has led to our consuming ever-increasing portions. Obviously, the diet is just a way of exercising portion control. But it's an elegant and adaptable way.

A way to cut calories

The 2008 book "The 9-Inch 'Diet'" argues that the increasing size of our plates has contributed to the country's weight problem.

People have trouble looking at a portion and knowing whether it's too large or too small, Bogusky says. "If I show you two portions, you can tell me which is bigger, but you won't be able to discern which one is the right size. And today with the size of everything ballooning out of control, there is nothing for us to make a legitimate comparison to. The nine-inch plate is an absolute size reference that we used for a hundred years, and it worked. It can work again."

The beauty of this "diet" is that it doesn't rule out any kind of food. It just gives us a way to gauge how much we should put in our mouths. In fact, several pages of the book are dedicated to color photos showing how meals for various diet plans, from Pritikin and Weight Watchers to Atkins and South Beach, look on a nine-inch plate.

Of course, going nine-inch isn't just a matter of digging Grandma's china out of the attic. First, this approach works only if you commit to it and allow yourself time to get used to using a smaller plate at every meal. The payoff: Once you're in the groove, Bogusky promises, "you won't even have to keep an eye on your portions anymore; your plate will do it for you."

That commitment requires getting rid of your big plates. Bogusky reluctantly suggests that, in a pinch, you can resort to paper plates, whose size is marked right on the package. Bogusky notes that it's not just our plates that have grown larger but also our drinking glasses and flatware; downsizing all of these should, he says, be part of your new campaign.

To make this really work, though, you have to shop for food that will fit on your plate. You may have to ask the butcher to cut a steak into two servings, for instance, or rethink your notion of how big a piece of chicken should be. And, he warns, "don't abuse your nine-inch plate" by filling it to the rim and stacking food high. "Just use common sense," he urges.

That common sense should of course extend to decisions about getting seconds and thirds. Otherwise you might find yourself eating off the equivalent of an 18-inch plate or bigger! And his illustrations imply that your whole meal, no matter how many courses it

A small-plate how-to

The Washington Post

A Q&A interview with "The 9-Inch 'Diet'" co-author Alex Bogusky:

Q: Do you use nine-inch plates all the time now? Or are you able to gauge an appropriate amount of food without needing the nine-inch guide?

A: It's actually funny to think about because it has become such an easy, accepted part of our lives that I forget that people are eating off giant plates still. So at home we're always eating off nine-inch plates. But when we eat out we usually just split a portion. The plate is a great tool that eventually makes it second nature to right-size your portions.

Q: Do you get the sense that this nine-inch-plate thing has caught hold?

A: Well, it certainly hasn't become a national sensation. But it's funny because I do get a lot of people telling me how they made the switch and they love it. Specifically because they've lost weight. That's a really amazing feeling. I've also run across and been sent a lot of articles about smaller plates that are seemingly unrelated to our book. Hopefully, the ripples are still expanding.

Q: Will you be using nine-inch plates at the holidays this season? And will you go back for seconds?

A: We will, and we are having over a ton of people, and they will, too. ... One of the great things about the nine-inch plate is that even if you go back for seconds, you've eaten 30 to 40 percent less than if you did the same thing on a 12-inch plate.

involves, should fit on your plate. As for dessert, well, Bogusky doesn't offer much guidance, other than to suggest that when you eat out and order dessert, you should split it with someone.

Having seen a lot of diet books this year, this one — written by someone who is neither a doctor nor a dietitian — makes more sense to me than a lot of the others. It sets the responsibility squarely on our shoulders to pay attention to how much we're putting on our plates and in our mouths.

And then there's this: I know it works, and I knew so even before reading the book. Last Thanksgiving, feeling sentimental, I dug out of my attic my Grandma LaRue's 1950s-era dinnerware, including her nine-inch plates, in a pattern my husband and I have long referred to as "Hideousware." They looked kind of Thanksgiving-y, so we used them at our celebration.

The plates were indeed tiny. And we all ate less than usual — without really noticing.

How to use NEAT

By Alison Johnson
Daily Press (Newport News, Va.)

That's nonexercise activity thermogenesis, or the energy you burn off doing everything but formal exercise. Researchers say this kind of movement can be just as important to maintaining a healthy weight as official sweat sessions. Here are some ideas:

Stand up. Get up and stretch at least once every 30 minutes. You can stand (and sometimes pace) while talking on the phone, having a meeting or folding laundry. To communicate with co-workers, walk over to their desks rather than sending e-mail — or ask if they'd like to take a walk as you discuss an idea.

Get fidgety. Tap your toes, bounce your legs, wiggle your fingers, turn your head and even clench the muscles in your buttocks while you're sitting at a desk or stuck in traffic.

Make house chores pay off. Alternate between upstairs and downstairs work so you have to climb the stairs often. Listen to music and dance around as you dust or wash windows. And tackle big jobs such as leaf raking, painting and reorganizing packed closets. If you really want to up the calorie burn, wear ankle weights the entire time. Add more steps. Park farther away from a store, take stairs rather than elevators and escalators, and stay off moving walkways at airports.

Combine relaxation and sweat. If you don't want an exercise bike or treadmill in front of your television, you can still sit on an exercise ball or even in a rocking chair. You and your kids also can do sit-ups, jumping jacks or silly dances during commercial breaks.

Chew gum. Again, the goal is motion — even if it's small steps. Even chewing up each bite of food more before swallowing can help.

Quick Study

The topic: Diabetes

Lifestyle changes seem to keep diabetes at bay for a decade

THE QUESTION

In the short term, eating more healthfully and losing weight have been shown to be effective at preventing diabetes in people considered at risk for the disease. But does the effect last?

THIS STUDY

It analyzed long-term data on 2,766 adults who had participated in a three-year study that had randomly assigned them to participate in an intensive program of lifestyle changes, to take the diabetes drug metformin or to take a placebo. As a result, the risk for diabetes was reduced by 58 percent among those who made lifestyle changes — eating foods with less fat and fewer calories and exercising 150 minutes a week — and by 31 percent among those who took metformin, compared with the placebo group. In a re-analysis 10 years after the original study began, people who had made lifestyle changes had regained some of the 15 pounds, on average, they had lost initially, but they still had lost an average of 4.4 pounds; those taking metformin maintained a weight loss of 5.5 pounds, on average. Diabetes risk for the lifestyle-change group was reduced by 34 percent (and 18 percent for the metformin group), compared with those who took the placebo. Among people age 60 and older, risk was cut by about half. The onset of diabetes was delayed by about four years for people who had made lifestyle changes and two years for those who had taken metformin.

WHO MAY BE AFFECTED?

People considered likely to develop diabetes. Risk factors include having a family history of the disease, being overweight and being physically inactive, all of which can contribute to having higher-than-normal levels of sugar (glucose) in the blood. The body needs insulin to use glucose for energy, but in people with Type 2 diabetes, the body does not produce enough insulin or cannot use it properly.

CAVEATS

After the initial study ended, all participants were given counseling on lifestyle changes, which might have affected results of the long-term analysis.

Pakistan’s president told to give up powers

ISLAMABAD (AP) — Pakistan’s main opposition party Sunday demanded the president give up the sweeping powers he inherited from his predecessor, setting the stage for political turmoil just as the Obama administration wants the country to focus on fighting the Taliban.

President Asif Ali Zardari’s grip on power is increasingly under threat from opposition lawmakers and elements within the powerful military who want him to resign or divest powers to the prime minister and take on a ceremonial role. Opinion polls show him to be desperately unpopular 15 months into a five-year term.

His presidency suffered another blow Saturday when an amnesty protecting him, several key allies and thousands of other officials from graft prosecution expired. While he enjoys immunity from prosecution as president, opponents could now go to the Supreme Court to challenge his eligibility for office.

Adding to a sense of a government under siege, Taliban militants have unleashed a surge of suicide bombings in recent weeks in response to an army offensive into one of their strongholds close to the Afghan border, killing hundreds of people.

The nuclear-armed country’s Western backers had hoped Zardari and the civilian government he leads would usher in political stability after the chaos that marked the end of the nine-year tenure of his predecessor, military ruler Gen. Pervez Musharraf. Zardari took the presidency months after his wife, former Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto, was killed in a suicide bombing at the end of 2007.

A major factor in his unpopularity are the many presidential powers he took from Musharraf, who staged a 1999 military coup and resigned last year amid nationwide protests. Among the most important are the authority to fire an elected government and appoint top military chiefs.

On Friday, Zardari transferred another Musharraf-era power — the command of the country’s nuclear arsenal — to Prime Minister Yousuf Raza Gilani. The move, which had no impact on nuclear security, was seen as an attempt to allay some of his critics within the military by giving up some authority.

Shahbaz Sharif, the brother of main opposition leader Nawaz Sharif and chief minister of Pakistan’s largest province, Punjab, said Zardari should act to now to transfer the other powers to the prime minister, noting that the president had already promised to do so.

“The nation would appreciate this act,” Sharif told reporters Sunday.

Late Sunday, Zardari said he would make an announcement “soon” on changes to the constitution needed to divest those powers, but the statement gave no specifics. He already promised at least twice give up some of his authority to the prime minister since taking office.

He also took a swipe at his critics, saying the democratically elected government “was being subjected to a vicious campaign to tarnish its image by the remnants of dictatorship.”

The political upheaval comes as President Obama’s administration is expected to announce this week a new strategy for defeating the Taliban in neighboring Afghanistan and on Pakistan’s northwestern border. To have much hope of success, the U.S. needs a stable Pakistani government committed to fighting militants blamed for attacks in both countries.

Thinking globally to save riches of the sea

By Juliet Eilperin
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Given the price a single bluefin tuna can fetch — one sold for a record $173,600 a few years ago at Tokyo’s Tsukiji market — it’s not surprising that the rich, buttery fish is a prized catch. Or that it has prompted a feeding frenzy among international traders.

The money at stake for such things as fish for sushi, the red coral fashioned into jewelry for Italian stores and the shark-fin soup served at Chinese banquets has turned the oceans into a wholesale market — and prompted new concerns about conserving their resources.

A group of nations, including the United States, recently announced a move to add a record number of commercial marine species to the international endangered list, putting them fin by tusk with such iconic land species as rhinos and elephants.

The move reflects both a new global emphasis on ocean conservation and a major failure by the world’s fishery managers, who have been charged with overseeing how we use the ocean. But with significant financial interests at stake, these new efforts are encountering resistance.

“We need to use the arrows in our quiver so we can address the threats that are out there,” said Tom Strickland, who as head of the Fish and Wildlife Service will lead the U.S. delegation to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES) in March. “No one country, even if it takes aggressive action, can make a dent in the problem unless there’s international cooperation.”

It’s easier to protect a species with less commercial value than one that fetches as high a price as the bluefin tuna. Tuna vendors at Tsukiji account for 40 percent of the market’s sales.

“Most people actually like to eat bluefin tuna, and don’t like to eat whales,” said Andrew Rosenberg, professor of natural resources and the environment at the University of New Hampshire.

The convention — the world’s primary mechanism for protecting species endangered through trade — has restricted the trading of a few marketable marine species in the past, including the European eel and seahorses. But when 175 countries convene in Doha, Qatar, they will consider a Too tasty to save?

New proposals would restrict or ban international trade of several marine species used for food or decoration. But some countries are unwilling to give up a lucrative industry without a fight.

Fishing methods

Two main industrial fishing methods are decimating the bluefin population:

Longline: A line up to 60 miles long, with baited, hooked lines dangling from it, is attached to a boat and drawn through the ocean.

Purse seine: A boat surrounds a school of fish with a large, vertical wall of net. A winch pulls the bottom closed like a drawstring purse, trapping everything inside it.

“Shark fins are today’s ivory tusks. Like elephants, the world is realizing that sharks are more valuable alive than dead.”

— Courtney Sakai, senior campaign director at the advocacy group Oceana list that includes eight shark species, 26 kinds of precious red and pink corals, bluefin tuna and the polar bear, a marine mammal.

“You’ll see some very heated and engaged debate, because people know CITES makes a difference,” said David Morgan, the convention’s chief scientist.

Courtney Sakai, senior campaign director at the advocacy group Oceana, said the petitions to include those marine species reflect a radical shift in the way they are viewed. “Shark fins are today’s ivory tusks,” Sakai said. “Like elephants, the world is realizing that sharks are more valuable alive than dead.”

No one questions that these species are in trouble. Over the past 40 years, the adult population of eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean bluefin tuna has declined 72 percent and the same segment of the western Atlantic stock has dropped 82 percent — all while being governed by the International Commission for the Conservation of Atlantic Tunas (ICCAT), which sets catch quotas for the fish and is supposed to curtail illegal fishing. The number of great, smooth and scalloped hammerhead sharks has dropped roughly 70 percent in the northwest Atlantic since 1981.

Jane Lubchenco, who heads the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, which governs marine species in U.S. waters, said international and domestic regulators have not curbed overexploitation of the sea: “The traditional ways of dealing with the oceans, whether they’re commercial species or not, have not been effective.”

So conservationists such as Carl Safina, who heads the Blue Ocean Institute and first pressed for international protections for Atlantic bluefin in 1991, have turned to CITES “as a way of filling that vacuum.” Sue Lieberman, director of international policy at the Pew Environment Group, said listing these species would force exporting countries to “do some science to determine what’s sustainable.”

The United States was going to support a proposed ban on the trade of bluefin tuna, then decided to give tuna’s governing body one last chance to put a stricter limit on the world’s catch.

But at the annual ICCAT meeting in Brazil this month, the group opted for a 2010 eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean bluefin catch quota of 13,500 metric tons, rather than the 8,000 the United States has sought. Rebecca Lent, who heads NOAA Fisheries’ international programs, called the decision “disappointing.”

Japan opposes the proposal to ban the bluefin tuna trade, though some Japanese consumers have begun to worry about the state of a fish they covet. Hiroko Nishi, a securities administrator in Tokyo, said she would back an international ban if it’s “based on a scientific research. It is not like I would die if I didn’t eat tuna. ... Although, I must say, it would be very disappointing if we couldn’t eat it any more.”

Several environmental groups and some U.S. retailers are trying to shift public attitudes, in an effort to curb the consumer demand that drives international trade. The World Wildlife Fund has lobbied Asian buyers to shun shark-fin soup and bluefin tuna, and the Silver Spring, Md.-based nonprofit SeaWeb has launched a “Too Precious to Wear” campaign about the environmental impact of buying coral for jewelry and home decor. Tiffany & Co. no longer sells coral jewelry; neither does Monique Pean, who designs high-end jewelry in New York City.

Lori Arguelles, SeaWeb’s vice president of media and policy, noted that coral species across the globe are already being damaged by climate change, harmful fishing practices and pollution. “With all of the things they’re facing, they don’t need the extra pressure of the coral trade,” she said.

Legitimacy of Honduran vote uncertain

By Alex Renderos and Tracy Wilkinson
Los Angeles Times

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — Hondurans voted Sunday for a new president, many hoping that despite questions surrounding the election they could restore legitimacy to their national government five months after a military-backed coup ousted President Manuel Zelaya.

Exit polls gave the lead to Porfirio Lobo, a wealthy landowning member of Honduras’ political elite and candidate from the conservative National Party.

Who won the election, however, was secondary to the drama swirling around the vote. The international community and the Honduran public are divided over whether the elections should be recognized in the wake of the coup, in which Zelaya was deported June 28.

Zelaya called for his supporters to boycott Sunday’s vote.

“These elections are illegitimate,” he said in an interview from the Brazilian Embassy in Tegucigalpa, the Honduran capital, where he took shelter after sneaking back into the country Sept. 21. He had been deported to Costa Rica.

It was difficult to determine turnout, but one U.S.-sponsored observation group reported a turnout in Tegucigalpa at less than 50 percent. Army patrols were seen in some poorer neighborhoods, where support for Zelaya is strongest.

The only pro-Zelaya candidate pulled out of the race, leaving two conservative factions with close ties to the military as the front-runners.

Despite the political and diplomatic chaos that has engulfed Honduras, Sunday’s vote was relatively peaceful. In San Pedro Sula, police fired tear gas and water cannon at several hundred pro-Zelaya demonstrators, injuring and detaining an undetermined number of people, witnesses said.

The international community, which failed in its efforts to reverse the first coup in Central America in 16 years, is split over whether to recognize the results of Sunday’s vote — with the United States at odds with much of Latin America.

After initially condemning the coup, the U.S. decided to support elections with the hope that the country could move on. Many other countries, however, argued that a de facto regime like the one that replaced Zelaya could not be trusted to conduct fair elections. No major international election-monitoring agency agreed to attend the vote.

Public corruption law faces major court challenges

By David G. Savage
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The United States’ most potent law against public corruption is in danger of being scaled back or struck down by the Supreme Court.

At issue is a ban on “honest services fraud,” often used to prosecute public officials who accept money, free tickets or jobs for relatives when bribery cannot be proved.

Patrick Collins, formerly a top anti-corruption prosecutor for U.S. Attorney Patrick J. Fitzgerald in Chicago, said that in his region, “Every major public corruption case in the last 10 years relied heavily on an ‘honest services’ charge.”

In Washington, anti-corruption activists fear a court ruling against the law could take away one of the best tools to combat the culture of favors and gift giving between lobbyists and members of Congress and their staffs.

“It would undercut public corruption cases across the board,” said Melanie Sloan, executive director of Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington.

But opponents say the law is vague and ill-defined. It fails to spell out the point where favors to a friend become a criminal scheme.

Julian Solotorovsky, another former federal prosecutor in Chicago, said the court should strike down the law and force Congress to spell out what is a crime.

“There is no vaguer statute on the books than this one,” he said. “I’m surprised it’s taken 21 years to get this before the Supreme Court.”

There are numerous cases that hinge on the Supreme Court’s decision, but the most notorious is that of former Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich, who is facing a federal corruption trial in connection with his alleged attempt to sell the U.S. Senate seat vacated by President Obama. Blagojevich’s trial is set to begin in June.

“If the court were to gut the statute, the prosecution would have to think long and hard about how to restructure the case,” Collins said.

In Washington, a judge has put off a retrial in a case involving Kevin Ring, a former congressional staffer who worked for lobbyist Jack Abramoff, until the Supreme Court rules on the law. A jury could not reach a verdict last month in a series of “honest services fraud” charges against Ring.

In recent decades the Supreme Court has made prosecuting public officials more difficult.

In 1987, the court threw out the use of mail fraud statutes against a Kentucky official who doled out the state’s insurance business to friends, in part, because there were no allegations that taxpayers lost anything in the scheme.

Today is Monday, Nov. 30, the 334th day of 2009. There are 31 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

On Nov. 30, 1939, the Russo-Finnish War, also known as the Winter War, began as Soviet troops invaded Finland. (The conflict ended the following March with a Soviet victory.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1782, the United States and Britain signed preliminary peace articles in Paris, ending the Revolutionary War.

In 1803, Spain completed the process of ceding Louisiana to France, which had sold it to the United States.

In 1835, Samuel Langhorne Clemens — better known as Mark Twain — was born in Florida, Mo.

In 1874, British statesman Sir Winston Churchill was born at Blenheim Palace.

In 1900, Irish writer Oscar Wilde died in Paris at age 46.

In 1936, London's famed Crystal Palace, constructed for the Great Exhibition of 1851, was destroyed in a fire.

In 1949, Chinese communist troops captured Chongqing.

In 1962, U Thant of Burma, who had been acting secretary-general of the United Nations following the death of Dag Hammarskjöld the year before, was elected to a four-year term.

In 1966, the former British colony of Barbados became independent.

In 1981, the United States and the Soviet Union opened negotiations in Geneva aimed at reducing nuclear weapons in Europe.

Ten years ago: The opening of a 135-nation trade gathering in Seattle was disrupted by at least 40,000 demonstrators, some of whom clashed with police.

Five years ago: Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge announced his resignation. NAACP President Kweisi Mfume announced he was stepping down after a nearly nine-year tenure. President George W. Bush tried to repair strained U.S.-Canada relations during a visit to Ottawa. "Jeopardy!" fans saw Ken Jennings end his 74-game winning streak as he lost to real estate agent Nancy Zerg.

One year ago: Space shuttle Endeavour returned to Earth after a nearly 16-day mission to repair and upgrade the international space station. The world's most comprehensive legalized heroin program became permanent with overwhelming approval from Swiss voters, who simultaneously rejected the decriminalization of marijuana.

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.

CUSTOM ROCK PICKING

DEAR ABBY: For 20 years I have gone to considerable thought and expense to carefully select nice holiday cards to send to a varied client base. I have tried to be considerate and sensitive to any cultural and religious differences.

My Christian friends wanted explicitly religious cards, the Hanukkah cards were not religious enough, and the middle-of-the-road "Season's Greetings" were termed "wishy-washy secular." My own family is a feuding stew of different faiths.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

This year? I've had it. I sent Thanksgiving cards with the following quote from Theodore Roosevelt: "Let us remember that as much has been given us, much will be expected from us, and that true homage comes from the heart as well as from the lips, and shows itself in deeds."

It bothers me that a simple delivery of good wishes was met with such a resounding show of bad manners and ill will, and I see no point in continuing. My mother says I expect too much of people and that this will backfire. I'm past caring and have no more cheeks left to turn. I agreed to abide by your advice. What say you?

— STEAMED IN VAN NUYS, CALIF.

DEAR STEAMED: I don't blame you for being offended. The complainers were extremely rude. If you've sent cards only out of fear that if you didn't it would somehow "backfire," then you shouldn't have sent them. And if anyone is presumptuous enough to raise the subject, tell that person it's because your selection was criticized last year, so this year you decided to save your money.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 43-year-old woman with one adopted 16-year-old child. I have never had children of my own, and I'd like to try again. My 44-year-old husband feels we're too old now, and of course society thinks we're too old, too. We have friends whose kids are having kids. Do you think we're too old? — OPEN-MINDED
IN MICHIGAN

DEAR OPEN-MINDED: Yes, I do, but what I think doesn't matter. This is a subject you should discuss at length with your OB/GYN because a pregnancy at your age could be risky not only for you, but also your child. And if your husband doesn't feel up to the challenge, his wishes should be considered.

DEAR ABBY: I am a single mother of a 7-year-old girl. Before we moved to a rural area, my daughter attended a private school where she flourished. However, after three years in public school here, she is struggling academically and her self-esteem has been challenged. Every day I agonize over whether we ought to move or stay. I have a great job, wonderful friends and the lifestyle is comfortable. But the schools are awful. I remember how my daughter used to love going to school, but now she hates it.

I can't decide if we should move back to a larger city where there are more educational choices, or if we should remain here. Have you any thoughts on this? I want my daughter to gain stability, but I don't know if this is the place because school is such an important part of people's lives.

— MUST CHOOSE
IN MARYLAND

DEAR MUST CHOOSE: What's more important to you — your job, friends and lifestyle, or your daughter's future? Once you have answered that question, your choice will be easy.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Men are anxious to improve their circumstances, but are unwilling to improve themselves; they therefore remain bound."

— James Allen

When South (playing a weak no-trump) opened one heart, North responded four diamonds, showing a singleton or void in diamonds, plus primary heart support in a game-going hand. South optimistically bid Roman Key-Card Blackwood. The five-club reply showed one key card — in this case either the ace or king of hearts.

South subsided in six hearts and West led the diamond queen. Declarer won this with the ace, then advanced the heart jack. East took his ace and returned a diamond, ruffed in dummy. A heart to the queen pulled the last trump, then South ruffed his last diamond.

Declarer could count 11 tricks, so it appeared that a black-suit finesse would be needed for the 12th. But which? The only clue South could find was that West had one fewer heart than East, and so was likely to have spade length if they broke 4-2. Since the queen was likelier to be with the longer holding, that was the finesse South took and went one down. Was this unlucky, or did declarer miss something? The answer is: a little of both.

Declarer has seven cards in spades and only five in clubs and wants to combine his black-suit chances by playing for the drop in one suit, then finessing in the other. If a queen is singleton or doubleton, it is more likely to be in spades. So, take the spade ace and king first, and if the queen fails to appear, the club finesse is the last resort.

IF NOVEMBER 30 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Late December and early January are the best times to pursue your business or career dreams. You have the ability to follow your dreams and make them a reality. During February you might overestimate your ability to make wise choices, or could take your good luck for granted. Next March you can make beneficial headway in business, career and your personal life through the good will and assistance of a generous person. That might be a good time to take a vacation or spend some romantic weekends with a special someone. Next fall knuckle down and show how responsible you can be.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You will see what is needed to make things right by examining and acknowledging what is wrong. Friends may point out mistakes.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You must have a firm foundation to support you if you hope to live up to high standards then. Set reasonable limits.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You have to trust to luck sometimes. If you plan too far ahead, you might eventually abandon a project through fear.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Play to your audience. Others prefer to remain calm, cool, and collected while you feel warmed up and raring to go.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The apprentice eventually becomes the master. Today is a good day to master the finer details and to hone your skills.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Get down to brass tacks and quit procrastinating. You'll have the competitive edge if your flair for organization is given free rein.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): If you have cold feet, hook up with someone who knits socks. Don't forget that getting organized is a necessary skill set, too.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Left-brain dominant people dominate. People with a developed sense of logic will thrive under these cosmic conditions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Act like a grownup. If you give in to an urge to horse around when you should be working, your authority may be undermined.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): When your mind is like a steel trap, you are bound to snap up useful knowledge. This is a good time to perform meticulous work.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Business as usual should be all business. You may be sidetracked from business discussions and focus on personalities.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Those in close connection may be focused on climbing the ladder of success. Don't distract your significant others.
