CLOVER, MEET BLUE JACKET

MEAGAN THOMPSON/Times-News

Garrett Guinn, a member of both the FFA and 4-H, feeds his registered Texas longhorns Wednesday afternoon near his home in Castleford. State 4-H and FFA programs are planned to merge under the direction of University of Idaho Agricultural Extension Education. Guinn said he thinks the groups are important because they help him to build valuable skills. 'And you get to have fun while you're doing it,' he said.

FFA, 4-H PROGRAMS TO MERGE UNDER ONE STATE DEPARTMENT

By Damon Hunzeker
Times-News writer

The Idaho 4-H and FFA programs will be merged into one department through the University of Idaho's Agricultural and Extension Education, but it's unclear how it will work.

A committee appointed by the university to implement the integration will meet over the next few months to develop a plan that somehow keeps the two groups distinct. FFA is already administered by the department, so the change will affect 4-H — currently its own department — most notably.

Both programs provide agricultural education, but 4-H students nowadays are just as likely to build robots as feed pigs.

"It's something that will be happening, merging the two, but we're hoping that, at the county levels, people won't be able to tell the difference," said Mary Davidson, president of 4-H Family and Consumer Services in Twin Falls. "If we're going to do this, we want a smooth transition and not to lose our identity."

In 2008-09, 65 4-H clubs in Twin Falls County included 969 youth participants and 220 adult leaders. Cassia County's 70 clubs included about 100 leaders and 525 youth participants during the same time frame.

The merger is part of a university-wide effort to merge small departments and possibly save some money in the process.

"Our budget is down $4.7 million in state appropriations, so obviously, that's a large concern for us ... but it's not the overriding factor," said Bill Loftus, U of I College of Agricultural and Life Sciences spokesman. "We're meeting a university requirement that we find a way to deal with small departments so that we don't have departments with just a few faculty members working alone."

Because the transition plan hasn't been implemented, Loftus said, the amount of money to be saved is unknown.

"Most likely, we'll lose positions through attrition. It's an evolutionary process ... If there's ever a time to be

Blue Hadden admits to property crimes in grandpa's shooting

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

SHOSHONE — Sixteen-year-old Blue Hadden admitted Wednesday to new juvenile charges connected to the nonfatal shooting of his grandfather, including grand theft by possession and malicious injury to property.

Shoshone businessman Craig Hadden was shot outside of his Lincoln County home on April 1, 2009, but survived. Blue's friend Michael Cannon, 16, recently pleaded guilty to an adult charge of attempted murder in the attack and faces up to 15 years prison when sentenced on April 2 in Shoshone.

When Blue is sentenced on Jan. 20, he faces incarceration and probation on each count, along with the possibility of up to five years of commitment up to his 21st birthday, said Judge Mark Ingram in court Wednesday.

The new juvenile petition against Blue asserts he possessed two of Craig Hadden's stolen ATVs and destroyed them by filing off serial numbers, Ingram told the court.

Blue's dad, Brooker Hadden, and his grandfather Craig Hadden were both in the courtroom Wednesday. There are allegations in the court record that Blue wanted his

S.V. airport consultant recommends delaying fiscal study until 2012

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

HAILEY — It's going to be a while longer before concerned members of the public will get a new study on the financial impact of relocating Friedman Memorial Airport.

At least, that's the recommendation of Friedman Memorial Airport Authority consultant Geoff Wheeler of Chicago-based Ricondo & Associates, during a presentation to the authority on Tuesday.

He suggested that because of the shifting economy and Federal Aviation Administration rules, a financial study should be delayed until just before the FAA issues a final Environmental Impact Statement on the new airport, expected in January 2012.

A draft environmental statement is due this June, which will likely include a preferred site of the three under consideration. That statement will include the results of an FAA-approved 2007 financial study, which has been questioned for both its methods and its dated results. Any study used as part of the government approval process must be FAA approved.

"A wall of worry has been built around this project. Lay that wall flat, and you have a runway."

— Blaine County Commissioner Larry Schoen

FMAA member Ron Fairfax said he has heard from many worried about the viability and impacts of the new airport. "The public wants to see a financial model, and we want to see a financial model ... the sooner, the better," he said.

"They're right to be concerned (about finances), but we shouldn't be spending the public's money and energy on things that are not productive," said Blaine County Commissioner Larry Schoen, who also sits on the FMAA, agreeing with Wheeler. He said the FMAA should avoid defensive postures, trusting that the best choices for the process can be justified to the public. "What are we gaining for our impatience?"

Former clinician Pate gets 5-month sentence

Judge imposes full sentence for battery after probation violation

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

Magistrate Judge Mick Hodges sent former state clinician Gary Pate back to jail for more than five months on Wednesday following a probation violation.

"I wish I could give you more," said Hodges, after revoking Pate's probation and imposing 163 days of jail.

Pate had already served 14 days for a battery conviction against a step-child, along with additional time connected to a probation violation last month. The jail time imposed Wednesday had been previously suspended pending Pate's completion of probation.

Hodges imposed the suspended time on Wednesday after Pate apologized.

Pate said in court that his behavior after serving 14 days jail "was in no way a contemptuous act."

Pate was designated by the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare as a medical examiner to diagnose and treat mental illness. He was involved in mental-health commitment proceedings while working as a designated examiner in south-central Idaho's 5th Judicial District.

In December, Pate voluntarily resigned from IDHW and was jailed twice. He did 14 days for misdemeanor battery and then was jailed again after admitting to probation officers that he consumed alcohol in violation of his 12-month probation for the misdemeanor conviction.

Hodges told Pate before sending him for the first time to jail that he would not be allowed to drink alcohol during his probationary period. Pate had told

Wave of Democrat retirements speak to uncertainty about 2010 elections

By Dan Balz
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Democrats have long known that 2010 will be a difficult year politically, but the opening days of the New Year have brought home that reality with unexpected intensity.

The surprise retirement announcements by a pair of veteran senators and a first-term governor often lauded as a rising star in the West underscored the degree to which the party begins this election year on the defensive.

The euphoria among Democrats that accompanied President Obama's inauguration a year ago has disappeared. They face the possible loss of their governing majorities in the House and Senate and becoming the minority among the nation's governors. Survival is now the watchword.

Gov. Bill Ritter collectively sent a message that speaks to the nervousness of incumbents — particularly Democratic incumbents — in a year in which voter dissatisfaction is palpable. Six Republican senators said last year that they will not seek re-election.

In some Democratic circles, including at the White House, there is a hope that by next fall the landscape will look less forbidding. That is based on two assumptions. First, that the economic outlook will be brighter and that unemployment may be lower than it is today. Second, that, with the expected passage of comprehensive health-care reform, the public will look more favorably on the changes than they do today. But even optimistic Democrats fear that may not be enough to head off potentially sizeable losses. After two big elections, Democrats are due for a setback. The decisions by Dodd, Dorgan and Ritter speak to that calculus. For their own reasons, looking for efficiencies, it's now," he said, adding that the merger will allow 4-H and FFA to maintain separate cultures but also provide "more opportunities to collaborate when possible."

One member of the advisory committee, 4-H volunteer Andy Smyth, said the directive from the university is vague and that administrative coordination of the 4,000 volunteers across Idaho — one of the chief operational differences between 4-H and FFA — could present an obstacle.

"At this point, the dean has charged us with 'making it work,'" Smyth said. "Logistically, that's going to be very difficult ... With the conditions of the merger, we'll no longer be separate. All decisions will be signed off on by the ag director, who may or may not be a 4-H person."

Loftus emphasized the university is aware of the concerns and fully appreciates "how valuable 4-H is to Idaho youth."

Smyth remained skeptical and, in a letter to University of Idaho President Duane Nellis, wrote: "I have yet to see or hear anything of this proposed merger which will result in a benefit to either party ... If someone could point to various distinct, real benefits from such a merger, it would be much more palatable for some of us to enter into this process as enthusiastically as possible to try to achieve the best result at the end of the day."

grandfather killed for inheritance money.

Blue's mom, Traci Hadden, faces trial next month on three felony charges connected to the shooting — attempted murder, criminal solicitation and theft — and is accused in court records of plotting the attack on her ex-father-in-law.

Cameras were not allowed in the courtroom Wednesday as they are prohibited in juvenile matters. Hadden's case was only recently transferred to juvenile court from adult court, after its original filing in the juvenile realm.

Hadden had been charged with criminal solicitation, grand theft by possession and accessory to a felony in adult court, all felonies.

Lincoln County Prosecuting Attorney E. Scott Paul amended the petition Wednesday before the hearing, Ingram told the court.

When charged as an adult, Blue faced a stiffer penalty of up to 33 years in prison, according to court records. Wednesday's amended juvenile petition arose after both the prosecution and Blue's defense agreed to move the case back into juvenile court.

Blue confirmed Wednesday in court that no promises were made to him for the admissions, and without hesitation said "I admit" to both juvenile counts.

New Jerome mayor appoints Soto to council

By John Plestina
Times-News writer

JEROME — After 5th District Court Judge Thomas Borresen administered the oath of office to new Jerome Mayor John Shine Tuesday night, Shine's first order of business was to appoint Dawn Soto to fill the City Council seat he vacated.

Shine won election in a three-way contest in November after serving three years on the council. He replaces Charles Correll, who didn't seek re-election. Soto will serve the remainder of Shine's council term.

Shine, 64, is a retired business and financial planner with IBM and has about 40 years of business experience.

Soto, 42, is an officer of First Federal Savings Bank, serving as an assistant vice president and branch manager in Jerome. Her community involvement includes the Jerome Chamber of Commerce, Jerome Rotary Club, serving as secretary-treasurer of Saint Benedicts Family Medical Center Foundation and as a board member of Youth Interactive Prevention Services, an in-school drug- and alcohol-prevention education program. She has never run for public office.

"She has a vision of progressive municipal policy," Shine said after the council meeting.

Borresen also administered the oath of office to Soto, re-elected council members Chris Barber and Bob Culver and Ross Hyatt who will serve as city treasurer in addition to finance director.

The city created the position of finance director and hired Hyatt, a certified public accountant and a qualified auditor, five months ago to keep the city within compliance of new financial reporting regulations. The council reappointed Marj Schmidt as council president.

Gooding girl returned home after alleged kidnapping

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

A Gooding girl has been returned home after her alleged kidnapper's vehicle broke down Tuesday morning on Interstate 15 about 130 miles south of Salt Lake City.

The girl, whose identity is not being released by police, was reported missing Monday evening.

Millard County (Utah) Sgt. Scott Corry said deputies found the girl because a patrol had stopped to check on a Chevy pickup pulled to the side of the road at mile marker 182, about 16 miles north of Fillmore, Utah.

"We were alerted, through her identification, that she was listed as an endangered runaway," Corry said. "The 20-year-old male she was traveling with was booked on the misdemeanor charge of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. He is being held at the Millard County Sheriff's Office Correctional Facility."

The girl was released into the custody of her parents.

Corry said U.S. Customs and Boarder Protection was contacted, as the suspect's immigration status was not immediately known.

The arrest was met with relief by Gooding Police Chief Jeff Perry.

"I'm glad she's back with her family and I wish them the best," he said.

The girl will not be charged with any crime, Perry said, but her alleged kidnapper will likely face extradition and charges of first-degree kidnapping.

Perry declined to identify the alleged kidnapper to "uphold the wishes of the family, out of respect to the victim," but said his name will likely be released during the coming days.

Gooding County Sheriff Shaun Gough said he was alerted of the situation and had "the school resource officer and another officer ready to help."

Second power line reassessed following Christmas outage in Blaine County

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

SPEAK UP

Want to talk about it? Idaho Power will be at a Blaine County Commission meeting at 9:15 a.m. Tuesday at the Old County Courthouse in Hailey, to discuss the Christmas power outage and future power development in the Wood River Valley.

HAILEY — In the wake of a valley left cold and dark on Christmas Day, residents of Blaine County are reassessing the need for a second transmission line between Hailey and Ketchum.

The outage, billed by Idaho Power as a "perfect storm," took out two redundant lines south of Hailey, one by ice and one with a mechanical failure, for about 24 hours starting Christmas Eve.

"Certainly it was bad timing," said Idaho Power spokeswoman Lynette Berriochoa, who lauded the efforts of power crews to find and fix the failures as quickly as they could. "We've received a lot of concerns, complaints, questions, kudos for our guys who were out there all night."

Some residents were angry about spending Christmas in the dark and concerned for fragile neighbors as temperatures fell, while others saw the outage as proof the county needs another transmission line.

"It highlights the need for some redundancy, unless the public is prepared to live with the power outages," said Blaine County Commission Chairman Larry Schoen. "I heard from one lady who said, 'The (county commission) board has to do everything in its power to get this done, and why hasn't it been done already?'"

However, others are unconvinced.

"Redundancy didn't help," said Karen McCall, spokeswoman for the new Ketchum-based Dynamic Energy Systems Institute. "Redundancy is what they had with the Midpoint line and the King line, and they both went out. In my mind it's an argument for local renewable generating facilities within this valley."

McCall is an advocate for local generation of solar, wind, geothermal and biomass energy. She said locally-produced energy would be safer in case of terrorism and large-scale grid failures like the one that put the Eastern seaboard in the black in 2003.

"That gives us security and independence and provides jobs for people," she said. "Maybe it is just a backup, but it's in our valley."

Many in the area are also concerned the new line required to create redundant transmission would be very large, affecting views and visitors' perceptions of the valley. This has been the major argument against residential-scale wind turbines along the Idaho Highway 75 corridor.

It is possible to put the power lines underground, but costs 10 times as much as overhead lines, Berriochoa said. The utilities commission that regulates Idaho Power won't allow the increase in rates that would be required to pay for burying the lines, so any city or county that would like to eliminate overhead lines would have to pay for the difference in cost, as much as a million dollars a mile.

Berriochoa said the Wood River Electrical Plan, developed with community involvement in 2007, calls for a redundant line but doesn't recommend whether it be overhead or underground.

"That's where we will go to the community and say, 'Here are the constraints, here are some of the areas we're looking at routing them,'" she said.

McCall is also calling for more community involvement, but with a wider scope.

"The whole region needs to come together — environmentalists and Idaho power, municipalities and the county — and have an energy summit to talk about where we're headed and what our future needs are going to be in a changing world," she said. "This is a perfect way to look at how we can live our lives differently."

No such summit is currently planned, but the county commissioners are opening up their session next Tuesday morning for the public and elected officials to address the issue with representatives for Idaho Power.

McFall goes it alone, but will SIRCOMM get the message?

Jerome County’s Doug McFall isn’t the first sheriff to express frustration with the way the Southern Idaho Regional Communications Center goes about its business, but he’s the first to express his frustrations quite so pointedly.

Good for McFall. The SIRCOMM leadership needs to make some changes.

At a Dec. 14 meeting, McFall said he’s partnering with the state and using a $200,000 grant to upgrade a repeater station in the 700-megahertz range, the same frequency state law enforcement is moving to. And he’ll do so whether or not SIRCOMM ends up using the same hardware.

The first-term Republican sheriff has also quit a SIRCOMM advisory committee researching the upgrade.

The joint dispatch center handles all emergency-services agencies in Gooding, Jerome, Lincoln and Twin Falls counties, except for the city of Twin Falls. Like all other dispatch centers in the nation, it must upgrade much of its equipment by the end of 2012 to meet new federal standards.

“So quite frankly, Twin Falls County, Gooding County, you guys are on your own, so figure it out ’cause ... I’m tired of fighting the system and my time is too valuable to come to these meetings,” McFall said in a recording of the December meeting. “I’ll see if somebody, one of the other sheriffs, wants to get on here because we are spinning our wheels.”

McFall also pledged to fight “tooth and nail” any system using Jerome County tax dollars that won’t benefit his county.

The sheriff had already voiced concerns once about the committee; during a Joint Powers meeting in October, he criticized board Chairman Tom Mikesell, a Twin Falls County commissioner, for appointing Twin Falls County Undersheriff Sam Walker to the panel.

The source of McFall’s frustration, he said, was past SIRCOMM leaders who didn’t do enough to prepare for changes years before.

SIRCOMM’s management problems — the dispatch center’s most pressing issue — may be behind it. An audit last year found several financial problems at the dispatch center, but Director John Moore — hired in June — seems to have corrected those problems and SIRCOMM ended the last fiscal year with a surplus.

But it’s clear that SIRCOMM’s leadership and its law enforcement agencies are far too often at cross purposes.

Our view:

The Southern Idaho Regional Communications Center couldn’t make a decision about technology, so Jerome County Sheriff Doug McFall made his own.

The high cost of ‘diagnostic creep’

To the list of reasons Congress may find it difficult to rein in health-care costs, add “diagnostic creep.”

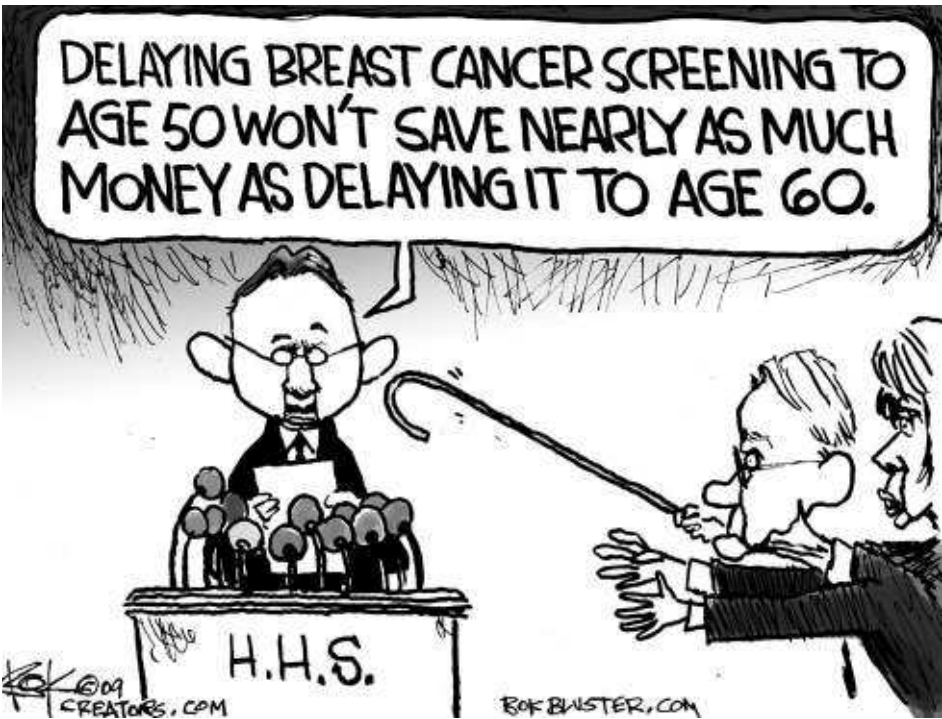

Charles Lane

Step One: Society medicalizes imperfections that formerly were either not defined as disease or thought to be too minor or too intractable for treatment. Rambunctiousness becomes attention-deficit disorder; impotence becomes erectile dysfunction; snoring becomes a symptom of sleep apnea.

Step Two: Scientists discover treatments; government approves them; companies market them; physicians prescribe them; patients demand them.

Step Three: Disease definitions expand to encompass more marginal cases and treatments while testing expands to deal with more nuanced symptoms. Ritalin gives way to time-released stimulants; Viagra gives way to Cialis; sleep apnea comes in three varieties, mild, moderate and severe, identified through millions of dollars worth of high-tech sleep studies.

Diagnostic creep sounds bad, but it obviously can be very good. Many children (and adults) have been helped by increased awareness of ADD and other previously unrecognized psychiatric conditions; drugs can indeed resolve their symptoms. People who don’t snore get better sleep; they’re at diminished risk for conditions such as high blood pressure; they produce more at work; they are more alert behind the wheel. Who am I, or anyone else, for that matter, to draw the line between the common and milder form of bone loss known as osteopenia and dangerous osteoporosis, both of which Merck has pushed to treat by expanding the marketing of its bone-strengthening drug Fosamax, as NPR’s Alix Spiegel noted in a fascinating recent report?

But that’s just the point. Health-care cost containment is all about separating problems that are dangerous enough to warrant coverage from those that aren’t. Americans have become accustomed to the opposite of line drawing. In large part because someone else — insurance — pays, they have been habituated to consuming more and more life-improving treatments. Indeed, they’ve come to feel entitled to do so.

The health-care legislation being negotiated proposes to deal with spiraling costs via an excise tax on “Cadillac insurance plans” and a government panel to define what works best medically. I suppose those will have an impact. But to the extent they do, it can only be by pushing back against the public’s sense of entitlement. We’ve already seen the reaction against a study that suggested many mammograms are unnecessary or counterproductive. Is government going to stop covering bone-density tests, much less deny women with osteopenia their Fosamax? I’ll believe it when I see it.

The first demagogue of the information age

His nightly diet of falsehoods and conspiracies on Fox, and his daily outrages on the radio, have propelled (Glenn Beck’s) popularity past even Rush Limbaugh, Bill O’Reilly and Sean Hannity.

Dana Milbank

should read Hitler’s “Mein Kampf” to prepare for Obama’s health-care plan — and that’s in addition to the 28 times the Fuhrer made an appearance on Beck’s Fox show in 2009. The Anti-Defamation League identified the secret to Beck’s success when it noted that he, unlike other prominent right-wing talkers, was willing “to give a platform to the conspiracy theorists and anti-government extremists.”

His critics during his ascent over the year have compared the pudgy Fox News host to Father Coughlin, George Wallace and Joe McCarthy. Time magazine put Beck on its cover and asked: “Is Glenn Beck Bad for America?”

A better question might be: “Is Glenn Beck America?” All ages have their charlatans. The fact that Beck’s stew of venom and fabrication has been such a triumph probably says less about Beck than about us. He has merely captured the moment.

There’s scant evidence that Beck holds his zany views with any conviction — even if he often breaks into tears on the air to demonstrate his passion. At the very least, he has come to his views recently, after years as a morning-zoo radio DJ with libertarian leanings. The Atlantic’s James Warren reported that the comedian Stephen

Colbert recently spoke about the difficulty of lampooning Beck, reasoning that “if somebody doesn’t believe what they’re saying, it’s very hard to out-stupid them.”

But if Beck isn’t a true believer, he’s a brilliant entertainer, and he has calculated, correctly, that a large number of Americans would turn on cable news for more of the insults and conspiracies they get online.

In terms of the political culture, he’s more parasite than host. Yet, by any measure, he’s had a huge impact on the body politic.

• Viewers: The former DJ is getting nearly 3 million a night, besting even the likes of O’Reilly among the viewers most valuable to advertisers, even though there are far fewer people watching TV during Beck’s 5 p.m. slot than during prime time.

• Cultural impact: At The New York Times, where Beck’s frequent books often top the best-seller list, Motoko Rich reports that novelists are calling Beck the “new Oprah,” and some entertainment industry executives consider him a possible replacement for Oprah herself.

• Scalps: He single-handedly brought down Obama adviser Van Jones over the official’s far-left past.

• Followers: He launched the 9.12 Project, which held a large protest in Washington, was a major promoter of the tea party movement and is planning conventions and rallies in 2010.

In a hearing on “policy czars” by the Senate Homeland Security committee this fall, Sen. Claire McCaskill, D-Mo., declared that Beck had forced them to hold the hearing. “This all began from a rant by He Who Shall Not Be Named,” she said. The chairman, Joe Lieberman, I-Conn., insisted the topic had come up before “it got to be a hot topic on the airwaves, particularly from He Whose Name Shall Not Be Mentioned, who is my constituent and longtime acquaintance, since he had a morning radio show in New Haven, Connecticut.”

Lieberman didn’t mention that he wrote a letter of recommendation that helped get the high-school-educated Beck into a non-degree program at Yale. Beck quit after just one course in religion — and now this theology dropout has earned a status in America more exalted than the Holy Father’s.

As Glenn Beck likes to say: I fear for my country.

Cap and trade will totally disrupt economy, our way of life

I have been following the discussion of cap and trade and climate change for a number of months now. I continue to have concerns about the cap and trade approach to meeting our climate goals. Our current government seems to be taking a very unproven, expensive and burdensome approach to reach these goals. With a cap and trade system, we will only be growing government and allowing markets run by self-interested investment bankers to manage the cap and trade system. If we take this approach, we will also be adding to our government bureaucracy and the delays and expenses that go along with it. We can't afford to spiral into more debt and add yet another financial burden on the American consumer. This cap and trade tax will surely cost the American consumer considerably more for their fuel, food, heat and all manufactured goods. This is all because global warming is thought to be man-caused. The changes will totally disrupt our economy and way of life and will accomplish little. There seems to be no economic sense in Washington, D.C., and I suspect the science involved. Recently, the Obama administration attended the Copenhagen summit and the headlines that I read are promising climate goals with an enormous price tag. I am not convinced that this administration will be able to deliver on the big talk, and big price tag with these other countries. My hope is that our federal government will take a more citizen-friendly approach to the climate issue, and move towards a system that has transparency and predictability.

Are we becoming a stand-pat society?

One insistent question at the start of a new decade involves the lingering effects of the old: What scars will the Great Recession leave? We are already seeing some. Americans are moving less than at any time since World War II, reports demographer William Frey of the Brookings Institution. People are tied to existing homes, can't get loans for new ones and won't move to places without job commitments, says Frey.

Only 1.6 percent of Americans are now moving across state lines, half the rate of a decade ago.

With a grim job market, the young also seem more cautious. A new survey by Fidelity Investments found that a quarter of workers from ages 22 and 33 want to stay with their present employer until retirement; in 2008, that was only 14 percent. John Irons of the liberal Economic Policy Institute worries that many young Americans, lacking tuition, will delay or abandon attending college, lowering their long-term earning power.

So the Great Recession's nastiest scar could be an era of economic frustration, characterized by slower growth and contentious competition for scarce resources. Stunned by huge wealth losses in stocks and real estate, Americans save more and spend less. Businesses suffer from weak demand.

Hiring remains sluggish. Worse, the slowdown coincides with an aging population, which could compound the effect. In 2020, the projected number of Americans 55 and older will reach almost 100 million, 29 percent of the total, up from 59 million, or 21 percent, in 2000.

"Younger people ... tend to be more innovative, more willing to take risks, more willing to do things differently," says Stanford University economist Paul Romer in an interview for the book "From Poverty to Prosperity" by Arnold Kling and Nick Schulz. As noted, today's turmoil could make even the young more risk-averse. Or older and middle-aged people could increasingly dominate corporate hierarchies and university research grants, as Romer worries. An aging society could become a stand-pat society, protective of the status quo and resistant to change.

Against this glum prospect, the standard rebuttal evokes history. The U.S. economy is amazingly resilient, the argument goes. It's been a consistent job creator: 21 million in the 1970s, 18 million in the 1980s, 17 million in the 1990s, 12 million in this decade through 2007. (Lower gains reflect slower labor-force growth, not less dynamism.)

A "can-do" culture — combining intense ambition with a flexibility to adapt and an instinct for innovation — ensures that the economy will ultimately rebound strongly.

The harsh recession may have actually improved the long-term outlook by purging high-cost firms and forcing efficiencies. Productivity (output per hour worked) has risen 4 percent in the past year. Profits are already up 21 percent from their low; surviving firms will soon expand. Which vision will prevail? The answer may hinge on two things: trade and entrepreneurship. Most economists see stronger exports as a substitute for weaker consumer spending. Unfortunately, that depends heavily on economic growth and trade policies abroad. By contrast, entrepreneurship is a sleeper issue that depends on what Americans do.

If you doubt its importance, consider this: All net job creation from 1980 to 2005 came from firms that were five years old or less, according to a study by economists John Haltiwanger of the University of Maryland and Ron Jarmin and Javier Miranda of the Census Bureau. In any one year, that may not be true; but over time, mature firms lose more jobs than they create. "It's not small firms but young firms that count," says economist Robert Litan of the Kauffman Foundation, which sponsored the study.

If Americans don't continue to create new firms — not just high-tech startups such as Facebook but construction companies, florists, restaurants, dry cleaners, engineering firms — the economy may languish.

Some harbingers of growth look unpromising. In 2009, disbursements by "venture capital" firms — investors in startups — to first-time recipients hit an all-time low since statistics began in 1995. True, VCs support only a tiny fraction of new firms, mostly high-tech startups. But "angel investors" — friends and family of entrepreneurs who support many more — have also suffered huge losses in stocks and homes. They, too, have less to invest.

There's a warning here for the Obama administration: Complex regulations or high taxes may discourage startups and job creation. As for broader questions, the answers may remain murky for years.

Has the mix of economic trauma and aging made us prudent or merely fearful? Has economic resilience survived or given way to a stand-pat society?

OTHER VIEWS

Here's what Idaho newspapers are saying about ...

... irrigators should pay

Lewiston Tribune

Idaho agriculture uses 85 percent of the water in this state. If irrigators paid the full cost of administering the use of an increasingly scarce resource, they would have a more robust Department of Water Resources to work with. And ordinary Idahoans would have millions more to spend on their schools.

Instead, those tax dollars are subsidizing the adjudication and administration of hundreds of thousands of Idaho water rights. In a time of shortage, senior water rights are honored first. It's up to the Department of Water Resources to make certain the process is lawful, orderly and operates to the highest economic benefit possible.

Of DWR's $22.2 million budget, more than half comes from people who have little idea what a water right is, let alone own one. The state taxpayer kicks in $12.4 million. User fees generate another $6.8 million. Federal funds provide the rest.

On top of that, one pending resolution to southern Idaho's water war between those who draw water from a canal and those who pump it from the ground would siphon another $3 million each year from the taxpayer. The plan, which would recharge the Eastern Snake Plain Aquifer, would draw $5 million a year from irrigators, utilities and industry.

Taxpayers are required to provide that money because water users pay no annual fee. They're charged for some services, such as filing a transfer of water use. But such filing charges rarely pay more than the expense of publishing formal notice. It's up to the taxpayer to cover the cost of administering, analyzing and resolving water right disputes.

Idaho may need $175 million just to balance the budget next year after spending all of the cash it has in reserve. How can lawmakers justify pulling around $15 million into a program that benefits a special interest, albeit a well-connected one, such as water users, if the result is a deeper cut in public schools?

You'll hear the argument that all of Idaho benefits from a healthy agricultural economy. But the producer will feel pain early and more deeply from any escalation of litigation or when acreages are forced out of production.

Moreover, recent budget cuts have only reiterated what former Water Resources Director Karl Dreher once suggested before retreating in the face of stiff resistance: The state water resources department needs a more stable source of money ...

Left unchanged, the agency will share in additional budget losses next year and reduce its services accordingly. The special and the common interests share mutual concerns. Irrigators want a healthy water program. Idahoans want to spare their schools from unnecessary cuts.

A $15 million user fee spread among water users would serve both.

... U of I's botched ethics probe

Idaho Statesman, Boise

The University of Idaho spent six months investigating the controversial coordinator of its Caldwell veterinary center, and managed to duck the big question.

Here's the question the UI missed: Marie Bulgin told a federal court and a legislative committee that there was no evidence wild bighorn sheep die from diseases passed on from domestic sheep. But when she said that, was she aware of her center's own 1994 research to the contrary?

That's a fairly important question. It's the issue that landed Bulgin on paid administrative leave. Yet this week, in reinstating Bulgin, UI officials said that was beyond the scope of their review.

Here's the key piece of the UI statement issued Monday:

".... The university's policy defines scientific misconduct as 'fabrica-

... try, try again

Idaho Press-Tribune, Nampa

Canyon County commissioners ruffled some feathers right after last month's election. About 24 hours after the votes had been counted and the $46 million jail bond failed to garner the two-thirds majority needed to pass, they were already talking about putting the issue up for another vote in May.

While the majority of Canyon County voters — 58 percent — did vote in favor of the bond, opposition to the measure was visible and vocal. But even some of those opponents agreed a new jail was needed ...

An economy as troubled as the one we're in isn't likely to get a whole lot better by the spring, so the county's prospects of getting almost 10 percent of the voters to change their minds on the exact same proposal would seem slim. So give commissioners credit for asking the architect and jail officials to explore cutting the size of planned administrative areas of a new jail in order to lower the overall price tag.

... Commissioners haven't given a cost estimate yet for a possible May vote. The county faces an uphill battle, even with a further markdown. Voters appear to be reluctant to approve anything that will raise their taxes, and the two-thirds supermajority is a tough obstacle ...

Wyo. bison hunt kills 140; take down 46 percent

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — Jackson Hole's bison are learning to avoid open hunting areas, resulting in a roughly 46 percent drop in the number of animals killed in 2009-10 compared with the year before, wildlife managers say.

Hunters killed roughly 140 bison during this season's hunt in Bridger-Teton National Forest and the National Elk Refuge. Hunting began Sept. 1 and ended Sunday.

In 2008, 258 animals were killed; in 2007, 266. About 40 of this year's animals were harvested with cow tags, although 10 percent to 15 percent of those were likely calves. This season's numbers could increase slightly as hunters continue to turn in their tags.

The hunt likely won't cut into the herd's population as it did the past two years, said Wyoming Game and Fish Department wildlife manager Doug Brimeyer.

"It didn't reduce the population, but probably held the population in check," Brimeyer said. "(We might see) a slight increase this year.

"But we still achieved a level of harvest that helps us from a management standpoint. It helps (keep) the population from growing too much."

One goal of the hunt is to reduce the size of the herd from more than 1,000 bison to about 500 to reduce their impact on refuge forage. By preserving forage for elk, managers can delay the onset of supplemental feeding, alleviating the crowding that exacerbates diseases such as brucellosis.

Groups sue to end wilderness copter landings

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Environmental groups hope to prevent state helicopters from landing to collar wolves in central Idaho's Frank Church River of No Return Wilderness, arguing in a federal lawsuit it violates a 1964 law that created backcountry preserves.

State biologists aim to land the helicopters up to 20 times this winter during their annual big game count, and maintain the flights will be unobtrusive, with aircraft touching down for a few seconds while crews mount radio collars on up to 12 tranquilized wolves.

The Wolf Recovery Foundation in Pocatello and Western Watersheds Project in Hailey contend the U.S. Forest Service's decision last month to let the Department of Fish and Game land the choppers in the 2.24 million acre wilderness was also done without the required environmental analysis. They've asked a judge to prevent the flights that are set to start in mid-January.

This latest clash over predator management comes as a federal court judge in Montana weighs restoring Endangered Species Act protections to some 1,650 gray wolves in Idaho, Wyoming and Montana. Wolf hunts in Montana and Idaho, as well as sanctioned killings in response to livestock attacks, resulted in the deaths of more than 500 wolves last year.

"Such use of helicopters to hover above the ground and land in wilderness threatens to cause irreparable harm to plaintiffs and other members of the public, including by destroying their wilderness experiences and subjecting wild wolves to further persecution," according to the group's lawsuit.

The use of motorized or mechanized travel is not normally allowed in congressionally mandated wilderness areas like the Frank Church.

But Idaho officials said trapping wolves from the ground isn't effective, so they want to do it while they're flying on annual winter deer and elk counts over the wilderness from January to April.

The Forest Service dumped a broader request from Idaho in 2006. But Harv Forsgren, the Forest

Service's regional forester in Ogden, Utah, concluded in late December that state and federal agents would glean valuable information about the wolves, their denning sites and movements with the Fish and Game's latest proposal.

Jim Unsworth, deputy director of the state wildlife agency at Boise, declined to comment on the lawsuit, saying in an e-mail response to The Associated Press that it's premature to speculate on how U.S. District Judge Lynn Winnill will rule.

Forsgren also didn't respond to a request for comment.

Salazar unveils tougher rules on drilling

By Matthew Daly
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Interior Secretary Ken Salazar on Wednesday announced policy changes he said will bring more scrutiny and a greater public voice in how oil and gas leases are awarded on public lands.

Salazar said the changes should ensure stricter environmental standards in oil and gas leasing while bringing more clarity to the process to energy companies hoping to drill on public lands, mostly in Western states.

"We don't believe we ought to be drilling anywhere and everywhere," Salazar said at a news conference. "We believe we need a balanced approach and a thoughtful approach" that allows development of oil and gas leases on public lands while also protecting national parks, endangered species and municipal watersheds.

Salazar, a former Democratic senator from Colorado, criticized the Bush administration for what he called a "headlong rush" to lease public lands. Early last year, Salazar suspended 60 of 77 leases in Utah approved in that administration's waning days.

The changes announced Wednesday are intended to bring greater consistency and public engagement to onshore oil and gas leasing, Salazar said, with a goal of reducing legal challenges that have cost taxpayers millions of dollars and energy companies months or even years of delays.

About 1 percent of oil and gas leases on public lands were protested in 1998, he said — a figure that jumped to about 40 percent in 2008. The main reason for the increase was that leases were offered in places where they should not have been or without enough agency scrutiny or public participation, Salazar said.

"In the prior administration the oil and gas industry were the kings of the world. Whatever they wanted to happen, happened," Salazar said, adding that those days are over.

The Bureau of Land Management, which oversees oil and gas rights beneath federal property, will issue new guidelines to its field staff on how to review proposed parcels for development. A recent report by the Government Accountability Office found that previous decisions had been made arbitrarily and with little consultation with other agencies. Under the new guidelines, teams from several agencies will consult and officials will physically inspect the sites rather than making decisions from behind their desks, said Bob Abbey, the bureau's director.

The agency also will issue guidance regarding the use of "categorical exclusions," which allow for expedited oil and gas drilling without detailed environmental reviews that normally are required. The GAO found that the land management bureau has frequently misinterpreted and violated a federal law allowing categorical exclusions.

Hailey man convicted of sixth DUI

HAILEY (AP) — A south-central Idaho man with six drunken driving convictions was sentenced to eight years in prison.

Fifth District Judge Robert J. Elgee ordered 41-year-old Benito Aguayo Diaz earlier this week to serve at least three years of the prison sentence before he is eligible for parole.

Police have arrested Diaz seven times since the early 1990s on suspicion of driving under the influence of alcohol. He has been convicted six times, most recently in November after pleading guilty to a felony DUI.

Authorities say the Hailey resident is living in the United States illegally and will be deported after his release.

Idaho agriculture took a tumble in 2009

Times-News staff and wire reports

Idaho agriculture's projected cash receipts for 2009 dropped 17 percent to $5.4 billion from 2008, the largest single-year decline in more than 40 years.

The losses were largely led by the dairy and beef industries, which have struggled through nearly two years of price declines, according to a report by the University of Idaho College of Agricultural and Life Sciences.

John Hammel, the college's dean, presented the analysis to the Joint Legislative Economic Outlook and Revenue Assessment Committee Wednesday at Boise.

"Agriculture as a diverse industry is a strong stabilizing force in Idaho's overall economy," he said. "Individual growers experience volatility in the commodity market prices and increasing costs of inputs, both factors that affect their net incomes."

The report showed that receipts are still 16.6 percent

"Agriculture as a diverse industry is a strong stabilizing force in Idaho's overall economy."

— John Hammel, dean of the University of Idaho College of Agricultural and Life Sciences higher than in 2006. However, expenses rose 27 percent during the same period.

Net farm income, the ultimate measure of Idaho agriculture's performance for farmers and ranchers, dropped 47 percent to $1.018 billion from $1.904 billion in 2008. In 2006 net farm income dropped 20 percent, in 2007 it surged 71 percent and in 2008 it rose 19 percent.

Garth Taylor, an economist for the Department of Agricultural Economics and Rural Sociology who wrote the report said the numbers show farmers versatility.

"They'll shift around and grow different crops to respond to market conditions," he said. "Sugarbeets were a prime example of that during 2009."

Higher cash receipts for sugarbeets, barley, potatoes, onions, and greenhouse and nursery crops helped stabilize agriculture's overall performance during a dramatic downturn for its livestock industry.

Crops generated more cash, $2.745 billion compared to livestock's $2.610 billion, for the first time since 2000. Livestock receipts dropped 23 percent, led by a decline in milk receipts from $2.1 billion to $1.4 billion, or more than 33 percent. Cattle and calves declined 8 percent or $98 million to $1.085 billion.

Sugarbeet growers harvested 47,000 more acres in 2009 compared to 2008, producing 55 percent more sugarbeets with an 11 percent average price increase. Those factors boosted sugarbeet receipts to $252 million, a 72 percent increase from the previous year.

T.F. URA reviews proposed strategic plan

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

For years the city of Twin Falls Urban Renewal Agency made land deals and managed development efforts without a guiding plan. But that will change following a draft review Wednesday of the agency's 2010 strategic plan.

The plan proposes to continue investing heavily in downtown redevelopment during 2010, while also marketing underdeveloped commercial and industrial areas in Twin Falls.

City Economic Development Director Melinda Anderson said the emphasis on downtown is part of the agency's belief that downtown can be a powerful marketing tool for economic development. But, she added, the agency will continue strengthening partnerships with regional economic development groups to help attract new businesses to Twin Falls.

"Employers want to be in a place where their employees want to live," Anderson said. "And what we know is that employees want to live in a vibrant community."

She said a thriving downtown will foster a vibrant community.

Burley man to run energy drink company in Brazil

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Until 10 months ago, Dee Jones had never tasted an energy drink. Now he's moving his family to South America for one.

Jones is a shareholder in Burley-based AgriSource, which obtained the license, trademark, recipe and exclusive rights to sell Hiro energy drink in Brazil.

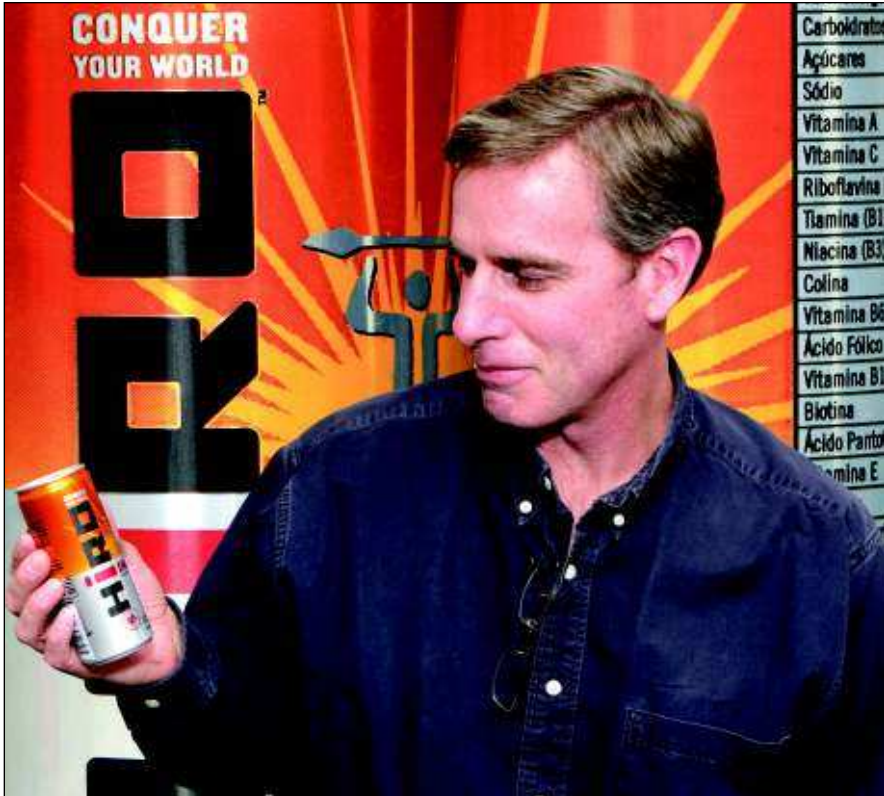

For the past 10 months, Jones has been managing the venture from Burley. But an increase in opportunity and investment has necessitated his closer attention.

"When we got into this, I never intend to go to Brazil," Jones said. "The AgriSource group really looks to me on this to make the right moves. I couldn't in good faith suggest that we throw a million or two at it if somebody wasn't there paying attention to the business."

"I could stay here, but most of the heavy lifting and critical business decisions are going to be in Brazil, so I want to be there," he said.

Jones is no stranger to doing business in Brazil. Since returning from an LDS church mission in the country, he has made over 30 business trips to Brazil for his job with Pickett Equipment.

Ten months ago,

Area businessman Dee Jones is moving to Brazil to pursue an energy drink venture.

a Brazilian friend approached Jones about taking on the energy drink venture. Tahitian Noni International (TNI), which is a direct marketing company based in Utah, had developed the product and was selling it in Brazil. But according to Functional Ingredients magazine, in October 2007 the National Health Surveillance Agency of Brazil banned noni, the key ingredient in Hiro.

TNI reformulated the recipe, substituting noni with acai, acerola, guarana and apple juice. But since the new formula didn't contain noni, and would be sold to retailers rather than direct marketing channels, TNI decided to pull out of Brazil.

That's where AgriSource stepped in, took over the venture and will pay TNI a per-can royalty.

"The cool thing is, when we took this on, they had already been selling the product and had developed a pretty good following, so we knew from a risk standpoint that there wasn't a ton of risk," Jones said. "We knew how the product was going to sell and we didn't have all the investment in developing the product."

For the venture, AgriSource formed a company called Picabo Enterprises LLC. It outsources production to bottlers in Memphis, Tenn., and Sao Paulo.

"We had a marketing company look at this product's potential when we got in," Jones said. "We believe we have a pretty legitimate shot, if we advertise and promote the product well, to get 10 to 20 percent of the energy drink market in Brazil."

According to Jones, Hiro is already out-selling energy drink king Red Bull head-to-head in some Brazilian markets.

Jones will primarily oversee the marketing and promotion of Hiro, which includes a $3.5 million advertising budget.

Investors hope the product has a stronghold before Brazil hosts the 2014 FIFA World Cup and the 2016 Olympics.

Jones plans to move his

Possible dream? Starting a company in a recession

While much of the business world struggled with cutbacks and layoffs during 2009, many people saw opportunity. Undaunted by the recession, they started their own companies.

Entrepreneurs are by and large an optimistic lot, with faith in their ideas and their ability to execute them. So it's understandable that they would find reasons why it made sense to start a business in a sickly economy. Among them: It's easier to rent commercial space at a discount when landlords are hungry for tenants.

Still, many had some scary moments as customers stayed away or money ran low. A look at how four new business owners fared last year:

WAITING FOR THE CONSUMER TO SPEND

Mike Sweeney had what he thought was a great idea for a new product: Clipa, a hook that people use to hang pocketbooks and other bags from restaurant bars or counters.

The recession didn't faze him. "I thought it was actually a good time," said Sweeney, who saw advantages in starting a company during a recession. Rental space was cheaper, suppliers were hungry for business and there was a pool of good job candidates.

But when the Irvine, Calif.-based entrepreneur began selling Clipa April, he discovered how hard the retail business had become. Some consumers were willing to spend the $20 for his product, "but not in the volume we expected."

"We went to some trade shows and the response was less than we expected," Sweeney said. By August and September, he was feeling uneasy because "we were burning through money;" the personal funds he raised to start the company.

Since then, business has

Service sector growing again, but new jobs are few

By Tali Arbel
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — A gauge of the U.S. service sector returned to growth last month, aided by the holiday season's retail sales. The expansion reflected a slowly improving economy — but it was too slight to generate much hiring.

The Institute for Supply Management, a private trade group, said its service index rose to 50.1 in December from 48.7 in November. A level above 50 signals growth. Seven industries out of 18 reported growth, led by agriculture and retail.

The ISM's employment gauge, which hasn't grown in two years, shrank again in December, though at a slower pace than in November. It reached 44 in December, compared with 41.6 a month earlier.

Job generation throughout the economy has been weak even as layoffs have slowed. Economists expect the Labor Department to report Friday that the unemployment rate ticked up to 10.1 percent in December from 10 percent in November and that the economy lost a net total of 8,000 jobs.

The ISM said the four service-sector groups that added jobs in December were retail, finance and insurance, public administration and a category of other services.

The overall service-sector

Anti-whaling boat damaged during protest at sea

By Rohan Sullivan
Associated Press writer

SYDNEY — A clash off Antarctica between a Japanese whaler and a boat from a protest group partly bankrolled by former TV game show host Bob Barker left the anti-whaling vessel badly damaged and each side accusing the other of life-threatening behavior.

The bow of the Ady Gil — a sleek, wave-piercing power boat that resembles a stealth bomber — was sheared off Wednesday by the Shonan Maru. It was the latest in a series of escalating confrontations between the U.S.-based Sea Shepherd Conservation Society and the Japanese whaling fleet.

Only minor injuries were reported aboard the Ady Gil.

New Zealand's marine safety authority said it was launching an investigation into the clash and that Australia's equivalent body would be cooperating closely.

Japan kills about 1,200 whales a year during the December-February season. Sea Shepherd sends ships to try to stop the Japanese hunt, which Tokyo says is for scientific research but conservationists suspect is a cover for commercial whaling.

"This incident was caused by rapidly approaching our ships and other harassment tactics," Japan's Fisheries Agency said in a statement Thursday. "Our research whaling is conducted in cultivating political allies in parliament.

The activities of Sea Shepherd are generally seen as belligerent in Japan and have garnered little sympathy. Two major newspapers put photos of the clash on their front pages Thursday. "This is what harassment leads to," said one of the captions.

But Sea Shepherd's efforts have spawned the Animal Planet TV series "Whale Wars," which has helped win the group high-profile patrons.

Among the group's financial backers is Barker, the former "Price is Right" host who recently gave Sea Shepherd $5 million. The activists named a vessel the Bob Barker, which was near the scene of the clash and rescued the crew of the stricken Ady Gil.

Paul Watson, Sea Shepherd's founder, vowed to continue to confront the whaling fleet.

"The Japanese whalers have now escalated this conflict very violently," Watson said in a statement from aboard Sea Shepherd's main ship, the Steve Irwin, which he is captaining. The vessel, named for the late Australian conservationist, was about

570 miles away from the Ady Gil.

"We now have a real whale war on our hands now and we have no intention of retreating," he added.

Watson told The Associated Press by satellite phone on Thursday the group was working to get diesel fuel, oil and the engines out of the Ady Gil because fears were high it could sink and pollute the pristine environment.

"That is our priority right now; to make sure there is no pollution from that vessel," he said.

Watson said the group had attempted to tow the Ady Gil but that each time they tried the boat took on more water, so they had stopped.

Barker, a longtime animal rights advocate, said news of the clash came as a shock.

"To think I had just become involved in it, then they had the worst accident that they've had. I thought, 'Barker, what have you brought onto these people?'" he said.

He said he steadfastly supports Sea Shepherd and was grateful that his namesake ship was able to help.

"I knew that they get in there and try to get between the whalers and the whales," said Barker, 86.

Watson and Barker met through a fellow activist.

"He said he thought he could put the Japanese whaling fleet out of business if he had $5 million," Barker said earlier. "I said, 'I think you do have the skills to do that, and I have $5 million, so let's get it on,' so that's what we did."

The two sides involved in Wednesday's incident gave conflicting versions of what happened.

Sea Shepherd said the Shonan Maru deliberately rammed the 78-foot (24-meter) Ady Gil as it sat idle in the water near Commonwealth Bay. Representatives of Japan's Institute of Cetacean Research, which oversees the whaling fleet, said the activists caused the incident when the carbon fiber and Kevlar trimaran veered into the Shonan Maru's path.

Hunting derby raises funds, frustrations

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

An event that aims to offer camaraderie among sportsmen has also sparked controversy. The two-day predator derby kicks off Friday in Twin Falls. It's the third such event held in Idaho in as many months.

Planners want to spark friendships, give hunters a challenge and help protect game animals, according to Sportsmen for Fish and Wildlife-Idaho, the group sponsoring the event.

"It's really designed as a fundraiser for us," said President Nate Helm, noting that money raised will go toward wolf litigation.

SFW has spent "tens of thousands of dollars" to fight for wolf delisting, Helm said, and the battle isn't over yet. However, he expects only between $500 and $1,000 will be raised from the derby. As of Tuesday, the last day to register, only 15 people had signed up.

Derby teams, which comprise one or two persons, receive points for each bobcat, coyote, fox or wolf they legally harvest. Like in other games, the team with the most points wins. Individuals need a valid hunting license to participate.

Similar hunts were held late last year in Pocatello and the Treasure Valley.

The derby is a boon for deer and other game animals, said event coordinator Doug Palmer. By eliminating predators, the group hopes to increase the state's mule deer population and other game animals.

But not everyone likes the idea of a hunting derby, and Helm would not reveal start or check-in locations for fear of protesters. That information, he said, is reserved for those who've registered for the hunt.

"We absolutely oppose contests that have live bait," said Lynne Stone, director of the Boulder-White Clouds Council in Ketchum. "There's no point in killing something for fun in a modern society. It's absolutely barbaric."

Her group was one of many that opposed the derby in November when it was held in Pocatello. Targeting sponsors, the opposition eventually led camera manufacturer Nikon to withdraw its partnership. Stone said her group plans to protest Friday's event by again calling sponsors.

She doesn't agree with SFW's reasoning for hosting the derby, saying that coyotes and foxes eat mostly small rodents, not big game.

"We are certainly against a hunting derby," added Jesse Timberlake of the Boise office for Defenders of Wildlife. "We're not against hunting in general ... we're very much against hunting wolves at this moment."

The group is one of many trying to get wolves listed again as an endangered species. Though the group's main focus is wolves, Timberlake said it does not condone the wanton killing of other animals, especially when there's no meat to be taken from predators.

Helm said he's received e-mails and phone calls from people as far away as Italy, protesting the events.

Most of the controversy Palmer has witnessed about the derby has stemmed "mainly because of the four-letter word — wolf," he said.

"We just kinda threw wolves into the mix as a wake-up call to everyone," he said, noting that if the mule deer population is compromised then Twin Falls and the state lose out on hunting revenue.

"That's a lot of money," Palmer said.

Timberlake says he thinks the derby is an excuse for hunters to pull the trigger.

"There's been a lot of programs that have tried to increase the game population by reducing predator numbers, but that often has been shown to not work," Timberlake said. "Coyotes and deer have been living together quite well for millennia. I don't think (a hunting derby) is particularly wise management."

Helm said while his group's efforts might not make a long-term impact on game populations, he hopes it will at least make a difference in the short term.

"The reality is that the coyote is a very resilient species, and they're going to be around irrespective of some of our management," Helm said. "Our impacts will be scattered and hard to measure."

Play and relax at Quigley

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

Snowshoe and read at the same time? You can do just that at the Quigley Winter Park in Hailey.

The winter park in Quigley Canyon — part of Quigley Nordic Center east of Wood River High School — opened last year with a yurt supplied with hot cocoa and other goodies, a sledding hill and a short ski track offering roller coaster thrills and spills.

And this year it will have a Story Book Walk, as well, said Blaine County Recreation District Trails Coordinator Eric Rector.

"We'll have laminated pages out there so you can walk along and read a page about the trail of the snow bear," he said. "We tried it at the very end of the season last year and it was a big hit so we'll be bringing it back."

Also back this year will be a classic-only ski trail at Quigley. And a Women's-only program will return at noon and 4 p.m. on Mondays.

"The women's program was super popular last year so we have nine coaches lined up, including Muffy Ritz and Olympian Tessa Westbrook," said Janelle Conners, the Recreation District's trails assistant.

Also returning will be the Boulder Mountain tour Training Class, which will start at 4 p.m. on Tuesdays starting this week for four weeks.

There'll be two Ski Free Days this winter for the North Valley Trails, which include Quigley in Hailey and 100 kilometers of ski trails between Galena Lodge and the Lake Creek trails in Ketchum. The Sunday Ski Free Day will feature free lessons and other events at Quigley.

Skiing along groomed skate and classic trails on the Wood River Trails bike path between Ketchum and Bellevue is free day-in and day-out.

This year the Recreation District plans to expand its annual Ski the Rails Day on Jan. 30 to include a bonfire out in front of the Sun Valley Brewery with s'more making and a live band, said Jim Keating, the District's director.

"That event will kick off the week-long Sun Valley Nordic Festival, which runs Jan. 30 through the first week of February," he said. "I'm excited about it and I think it's an extremely timely event. Not only will it bring awareness about the wonderful skiing we have in this valley but it'll bring awareness that Nordic skiing is a healthy affordable activity. It really is a sport for these times."

North Valley Trail passes, good for the Harriman Trail north of Ketchum, the trail system behind the SNRA headquarters, Billy's Bridge, Prairie Creek, the loops around the Galena Lodge, the Lake Creek Trails just north of Ketchum and Quigley Nordic in Hailey, cost $15 for adults and $5 for those 13 through 17. They're free for children 12 and under but a pass is required, available at Wood River Valley ski shops.

Trail fees at Quigley Nordic Center only cost $10 for adults, $5 for youth 13 through 17 and free for children.

Snowshoe passes cost $5 and dog passes $5.

Season passes good for all trails are $199 for adults, $29 for youth and free for children under 12.

A Quigley-only adult pass is $99.

The evolution of a backpack

It stuffs down to a size smaller than a baseball. Its manufacturer, Sea to Summit Inc. of Perth, Australia, suggests using it as a keychain. But unpack the Ultra-Sil Day Pack and its crinkly "siliconized" Cordura nylon quickly takes shape, a backpack materializing from a tiny ball right in front of your eyes.

As outdoors products go, the Ultra-Sil Day Pack is certainly strange.

It is far from technical gear. The backpack, a basic sack equipped with shoulder straps, carries its stowed items with scant support.

THE GEAR JUNKIE Stephen Regenold

Lumps protrude from the thin fabric where a shoe or a water bottle might be stuffed inside. Objects dig into your back.

But what this $28 backpack lacks in performance it gains in improbable convenience. The Ultra-Sil Day Pack weighs just 2.4 ounces. It fits in any pocket. Unzipped and open, there's about 20 liters of space inside — enough area to stow a day's worth of supplies while travelling.

The company (www.seatosummit.com) markets the Ultra-Sil as a "super strong pack that clips on your keychain to shoulder groceries or scramble a summit." You could easily put it in your pants pocket and bike to the store, load in groceries, and wear it home.

Other uses for the water-resistant pack include carrying wet gear after a day outside. Stash your sweaty clothes in the pack after a triathlon or other event. The company mentions using the pack for "messy stuff" like dirty laundry after a week-end of camping.

I might think twice before scrambling to the aforementioned summit with this pack. But in a pinch, if the Ultra-Sil is what's available, this siliconized sack with shoulder straps can do the job. It can carry water, food, some gear, and extra clothing layers for a hike.

Indeed, Sea to Summit has tested the pack for maximum weight. The fabric used for the pack, which has bar-tack reinforced stitching at stress points, resists loads of up to 350 pounds, the company cites.

But a company representative said this much weight far exceeds suggested use amounts. The spokesperson expanded, "It's likely they'll cut their arms off before they reach their destination."

For this fishing guide, work equals play

By Doug Smith
Star Tribune

ISLE, Minn. — “Fish on!” Tony Roach shouted, his ice-fishing rod bent in half as he set the hook. “He slammed it.”

Roach, smiling broadly, eased the fish through the hole in the ice.

“Look at that ... man, oh man,” he said, admiring the 6- to 7-pound brilliant green walleye before slipping it back into the cold waters of Lake Mille Lacs.

Tony Roach, 32, had dreamed of becoming a guide and professional angler since he was in kindergarten. Now the dream has come true. Five years ago, he quit his construction job and moved his family from the Twin Cities to Lake Mille Lacs. Now he’s on the water daily, looking for fish.

And usually finding them. He’s already made a name for himself as a guide, appearing on outdoor TV shows and giving seminars at sports shows. He has a long list of fishing equipment sponsors. He owns Roach’s Guide Service and has a bevy of guides who work with him.

Last week, Roach and two friends — joined by a cameraman from MidWest Outdoors TV and me — found hot walleye action on the recently frozen, snow-swept Lake Mille Lacs. Using four-wheelers to haul portable houses and fishing gear, we motored about five miles out and fished under a blue sky with temperatures barely breaking double digits.

The sprawling lake, which just a week earlier was open water, was void of other anglers. We found about 11 inches of ice — meaning Mille Lacs soon will be covered with thousands of fish houses. Roach doesn’t mind the competition, because he marches to a different drummer.

He employs a method he calls “ice trolling.”

That’s no joke.

‘Trolling’ for walleyes

Winter anglers are much more mobile since the advent of portable fish houses and power augers. But Roach takes that mobility to a new level. He’ll drill dozens of holes and move from hole to hole until he finds fish. He drilled about 50 holes on our outing. The previous day he drilled around 200.

The theory: “Don’t wait for the fish to come to you, go find the fish.”

Said Roach: “If I’m in my boat, I don’t sit in one spot all day, like people do in the winter. I move around. It’s not just drilling a bunch of random holes. It’s systematically drilling holes.”

He looks for structure: reefs, rock piles, mud flats, weedlines. He drills at various depths around those structures. Then he drops his fish locator down, and perhaps a lure. If he doesn’t find fish quickly, he’s off to another hole.

“So many anglers sit out there and say the walleyes only bite at a certain time of day. A lot of times that’s just when they (the fish) are moving through. It’s not that they don’t bite during the day, they just may not be where you are.”

His solution: Go find them. It worked last week. By early afternoon Roach and his two partners had caught about two-dozen walleyes, including some outside Mille Lac’s protected slot limit. Those ended up in a frying pan.

Once you locate fish, stay and catch them, Roach said. But he quickly moves at the first sign that the bite is slowing.

“The reason we had a successful morning is because we were on the right spot, and I came out the day before and drilled a lot of holes and did a lot of looking before we set up and fished,” he said.

Added Roach: “A lot of people get hung up on a secret spot or a secret lure. There is no secret spot or secret lure. It’s just where the fish are going to be at that particular time and what they’re going to bite on. You have to be willing to move around and change.”

It’s in his blood. Roach’s name might sound familiar. Gary Roach, Mr. Walleye, is Tony’s great uncle and influenced his career. “He was a hero,” Tony said. His dad, Mark Roach, also was a professional angler.

“The whole Roach family hunted and fished,” Tony Roach said. “I got to see the promotional side of fishing, too, and saw there was opportunity there.”

“Since I was 5 I knew what I wanted to do: I wanted to be a professional fisherman.”

When he was just 14, he fished in a small local tournament with his dad. “That really got me hooked,” he said.

Roach went to college, thinking he might be a teacher. But he ended up getting into the construction business, living in St. Michael northwest of the Twin Cities. But he guided on the side. And in 2005, he decided to chase his dream. He and his wife, Sonja, sold their home and moved near Malmo, close to Lake Mille Lacs. They have two kids: Hannah, 4, and Robbie, 2.

The new career is going well, Roach said.

“It’s been getting better every year. I like all of it. I like going to seminars and talking about fishing when I can’t be on the water.”

He’s not sure what the future holds, but he enjoys every day.

“I’ve only been doing it for five years. I don’t claim to have all the knowledge in the world. I’m just doing my own thing. And having fun doing it. Who knows where it will take me from here.”

A dream come true? “Absolutely,” he said. “I’m always smiling. Every morning when I wake up I can’t wait to get to work.”

Galena and North Valley Trails Benefit scheduled

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

Picture yourself skiing with the Norwegian cross-country team, arguably the fastest Nordic skiers on Earth.

Both could be yours for your support of the Galena Lodge and cross-country ski trails north of Ketchum.

An opportunity to ski with the Norwegian men’s team, which will train at Sun Valley prior to the 2010 Winter Olympics in Vancouver, is among the auction items up for grabs at this year’s Galena and North Valley Trails Benefit on Saturday, Jan. 16.

The dinner and auction starts at 5:30 p.m. at Sun Valley’s Limelight Room.

This year’s benefit — the 14th — also includes a 10-day stay in a 2,700-square foot Paris apartment just a six-minute walk away from the Champs-Elysees, a cowboy wagon ride and dinner for 16 at Galena Lodge and a Napa Valley wine tasting weekend for four, said organizer Jenny Busdon.

Can’t make the benefit in person? This year for the first time you can bid on silent auction items, including numerous dinners and packages for Boise and Portland, online. To see the items, go to www.bcrd.org.

Tickets are $85 and include dinner and wine. Premier Sponsorship tables for 10 are available for $1,750, regular tables of 10 for $850 and eight-seat tables for $650.

The benefit helps maintain the historic lodge and its surrounding trails, which receive no tax dollars, said Susie Quesnel, spokesperson for the Blaine County Recreation Department.

Tickets are available through the Blaine County Recreation District at 208-788-2117, online at www.bcrd.org or through Jenny Busdon at 208-726-1649.

Utah resorts cautiously optimistic as ski season picks up speed

By Jessica Miller
Standard-Examiner

EDEN, Utah — Despite less-than-usual snowfall so far this winter, ski resort officials are keeping an optimistic outlook for the rest of the season after a successful holiday week.

“Business has been great for us up here,” said Bill Cox, of Wolf Creek ski resort in Eden, on Monday. “We’re zeroing in on 40 days of skiing. Today we had a great crowd. The Utah customers have been coming out in droves.”

Wolf Creek resort opened a week earlier than planned this year, thanks to an early snowstorm and snowmaking machines.

Jodi Holmgren, director of marketing and public relations for Snowbasin ski resort in Huntsville, said business has been good, but down slightly compared to years past.

“I will attribute that to a slow start in the snow season,” she said. “We’re very lucky to have worldclass snowmaking equipment that puts us ahead of the curve. But we need more snow.”

Both resorts held holiday events over the past two weekends. Holmgren said Snowbasin had a Christmas Eve celebration that included a 12-minute fireworks show simultaneous with a torchlight parade and a traditional Christmas dinner. She said nearly 1,000 people attended the celebration.

“It was a good turnout,” she said. “We were prepared with added staff and seating to better accommodate this year. It was very relaxed and festive.”

Cox said Wolf Creek also held a New Year’s celebration. This was the second time the resort held the event, and Cox said the crowd was bigger than last year’s. He said more than 50 people participated in a torchlight parade, several thousand people were skiing during the day and more than 300 were still on the slopes at midnight, enjoying the rare extended hours of lift operation.

Officials at Powder Mountain in Eden did not return calls seeking comment for this story.

Both Cox and Holmgren are optimistic about the rest of the season. Cox said Wolf Creek has had a record number of season pass holders and had an increase of last-minute lodging reservations. He said the resort focuses on providing good deals for families.

“We’ve really reached out to family value,” he said. “We have weeknight specials for the family and kids every weeknight.”

Otter proclaims January ‘Learn a Snow Sport Month’

BOISE — Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter proclaims January ‘Learn a Snow Sport Month’ in Idaho and encourages people to take advantage of the crowdless slopes, untouched mountainsides, pristine groomers, and chest-deep powder that Idaho ski areas have to offer.

Noting that “...recreation is a fundamental part of the Idaho lifestyle and snow sports provide an enjoyable to experience and appreciate the outdoors,” Otter’s proclamation highlights Idaho’s winter amenities as the national spotlight is put on snow sports.

Learn a Snow Sport Month is a collaborative effort among alpine ski mountains, Nordic centers and national parks that encourages people to enjoy their local ski mountain and learn a lifelong sport. Ski Idaho, representing one of 32 states involved in the program, hopes that more people take advantage of the state’s winter recreation opportunities.

“Skiing and snowboarding are lifelong activities that are good for the body, mind and soul,” said Ski Idaho President Rick Certano. “Idaho has amazing terrain and snow conditions that combine to offer unbeatable winter recreation opportunities. Learn a Snow Sport Month offers Idahoans who have yet to experience the soul of skiing a great way to get hooked on a lifelong activity.”

In January, Idaho ski areas will offer first-time skiers and snowboarders the opportunity to learn a snow sport through beginner packages.

Decade may see a dearth of sunspots

It’s been a rough couple of years for sunspot watchers. After only 100 days of 2008 sunspots, hopes were high that the sun would begin to emerge from its doldrums in 2009. No such luck: 2009, with 260 spotless days, took third place for the most spotless days in the past century after 1912 and 2008, with 311 and 266 days, respectively.

Normally, sunspots wax and wane over an 11-year solar magnetic cycle. The typical minimum — when spots are rare or absent — lasts 485 days.

But the current minimum (defined as the span between the first and last days that spots were absent) stands at 771 days, and may not be done yet. That makes the torpor between solar cycles 23 and 24 the longest since the interlude between cycles 14 and 15, in 1912-13, which lasted more than 1,000 days.

While the sunspot cycle averages 11 years, it can actually be as short as nine years or as long as 14. It appears to be tied to gas motions beneath the sun’s surface, as solar physicists announced in June. A sort of “subsurface solar jet stream,” detected by remote studies of sound waves propagating through the sun, appears to be migrating toward the equator slower than normal, and may be delaying the burgeoning cycle’s onset.

A minor flurry of sunspot activity in late December may represent the beginning of the end of this long minimum. But celebrations may be premature: The solar cycles of the second half of the 20th century featured more spots than most of the cycles since the mid-1700s, when good record keeping began. Statistically speaking, we may be due for a regression to the mean, meaning future cycles with fewer spots and longer minima than has been typical in recent decades.

Emily’s ‘cotton tales’

With the Christmas tree and ornaments packed away for another year, it was time to get out of the house and do some hunting. But this late in the season, our options were limited. We could gather up the decoys and waders and try to ambush some ducks and geese at our favorite warm spring fed highway ponds or we could go low tech and chase cottontails. We opted for the latter and that afternoon my eldest daughter, Emily, drove us into the desert brush country to pot some bunnies.

SHOOTING THE BULL

Rich Simpson

Pulling off the highway onto a secondary track, we were immediately encouraged by the number of fresh rabbit tracks zig-zagging through the sagebrush and across the road. We pulled up near an imposing basalt lava wall and cut the engine. After loading our guns, we slowly worked the tall sage flats hemmed in by the basalt rimrock.

We hadn’t gone 50 yards before we bumped a bunny out of a thicket just in front of us and sent it racing towards its burrow. Reaching the safety of the pockmarked lava, the rabbit paused for just a second before dropping into the cavity. That was all the time Emily needed to trigger a 17 grain V-Max bullet from her CZ .17 HMR. The smack of a solid head shot told us that we needn’t hurry to make the retrieve and within a half hour two more rabbits had met a similar fate.

Emily Simpson on a rabbit hunt with her CZ .17 HMR.

RICH SIMPSON/For the Times-News

Emily’s favorite rabbit and varmint-getter is the highly popular Hornady .17 HMR (Hornady Magnum Rimfire). Developed by fabled bullet maker, Hornady Manufacturing working in conjunction with Marlin Firearms and Sturm Ruger, this potent little magnum cartridge absolutely set the rimfire world on fire in 2002.

Its designers had envisioned a new rimfire cartridge capable of outperforming the proven .22 WMR in accuracy, velocity and flatness of trajectory. Additionally, the engineers had specified that the cartridge produce less noise, similar pressures, and function reliably in .22 WMR-proportioned rifles and handguns.

The basic case was fashioned by necking the standard .22 WMR down to .17 caliber (4.5mm). Crimping either a 17 grain poly-tipped or 20 grain hollow point jacketed bullet over a suitable charge of Hodgdon Lil’Gun powder resulted in the fastest rimfire round in history — with velocities between 2300 and 2500 fps. The little wonder met or exceeded all their accuracy and performance expectations.

Here is a cartridge ideally suited for hunting animals such as prairie dogs, ground squirrels, rabbits, tree squirrels, rock chucks and assorted pests. Though considered marginal for larger animals such as coyotes, its extreme accuracy, low report, and explosive upset of its lightweight bullets make the .17 HMR a very practical 150 yard small-game sniper.

Today Marlin, Ruger,

Savage, Winchester, Thompson Center, New England Firearms, Remington, CZ and others offer bolt action, lever action, semi-auto, pump and single-shot rifles in this useful chambering. Handgun makers have also jumped on the .17 bandwagon and offer various single-shot pistol and revolver models.

From the piles of empty .17 HMR casings I see at the shooting ranges and gravel pits, I know that lots of you have taken a fancy to this nifty little 17. So why not begin 2010 by joining Emily and me on the bunny trail with our .17 HMRs.

But remember you need a 2010 hunting license to complete the rabbit season. Good shooting!

Upcoming outdoor events in south-central Idaho

Sportsmen’s chili feed is today

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game will host an upland, turkey and furbearer public open house from 3-9 p.m. today at the Magic Valley Region Fish and Game office, 324 S. 417 E., Jerome.

Proposed changes include:

- Changing the starting time of the pheasant season opener to begin a half-hour before sunrise, instead of noon.
- Requiring steel shot for pheasants on wildlife management areas where pheasants are stocked.
- Eliminating a beaver trapping closure in Lincoln County.

The open house coincides with a chili feed the department is hosting this evening. Participants are invited to bring their favorite chili or just come and try the different flavors.

Fish and Game staff will provide updates on the past year’s activities and answer questions about Magic Valley fishing and hunting opportunities.

For more information: 324-4359.

• Eliminating a beaver trapping closure in Lincoln County.

Learn to cross country ski at Magic Mountain

For those who want to try cross country skiing, your opportunity comes Saturday.

Members of the High Desert Nordic Association will provide necessary skis, boots and poles along with necessary instruction at “Learn to Cross Country Ski – Free Day” at Magic Mountain Ski Resort south of Hansen.

The event will run from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. and is open to all persons interested in becoming acquainted with the sport, said Dale Stewart, president of the nordic ski association. A track will be provided to allow participants to try basic techniques shown during instruction time.

The event, which has been an annual presentation at the ski area for more than 20 years, is a cooperative endeavor involving Magic Mountain Ski Area, the U. S. Forest Service, Idaho State Parks Department and the HDNA.

For more information about the event: 733-1882. For information about the cross country ski organization: www.skihnada.org.

Locals Clinic starts Saturday

Sun Valley is registering skiers and boarders for The Locals Clinic, which starts Saturday. The clinic offers adults two hours of instruction from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. over three days — Jan. 9, 16 and 23 — for $110. Beginner-lower intermediate lessons will be taught from 10 a.m. to noon on Dollar Mountain. Intermediate to advanced lessons will be given from 1 to 3 p.m. on Baldy.

Skiers must sign up in person at River Run Lodge through Friday.

A SnowSports Camp for children encompasses seven lessons, costs $150 and includes lift tickets. The program, for kindergarten through sixth grade, runs from 9 to 11:30 a.m. and 12:30 to 3 p.m. four consecutive weekends: Jan. 9, 10, 16, 17, 23, 24 and 30.

Kids must sign up in person at River Run Lodge by Friday.

Deals at Pomerelle, Magic Mountain

Pomerelle and Magic Mountain ski resorts are offering snow buffs some deals this season.

Pomerelle Ski Resort is offering a four-week program that includes a full-day lift ticket and 90-minute group lesson for $80. Times and dates are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. four consecutive Sundays Jan. 10-March 28.

Magic Mountain Ski Resort is offering a one-hour ski/snowboard clinic and lift ticket for four Saturdays. Price is $70. Times and dates are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Jan. 9, 23, Feb. 6 and 20.

At both resorts, children aged 7-11 must be accompanied by a parent or guardian.

For more information: Parks and Recreation at 736-2265.

Fish and Game to count, capture elk

Wildlife biologists from the Idaho Department of Fish and Game will soon take to the skies in an effort to assess the size and health of elk herds in the Garden Valley and Lowman area.

During January and early February, Fish and Game field staff plans to conduct low-level helicopter surveys for elk in portions of the Sawtooth zone (units 33 and 35). Plans also call for capturing and placing radio collars on some elk during the effort.

“Using a helicopter allows us to accurately census a wide area in a short time and capture study animals quickly and efficiently,” said Fish and Game wildlife research biologist Craig White.

For more information regarding big game survey and capture efforts: 465-8465.

OUTDOOR SNAPSHOT

Hundreds of waterfowl flock to the small lake at the Hagerman Wildlife Management Area in early December. There is no waterfowl hunting at the Hagerman site, but the waters open in March to anglers. Keep your eyes open, as there is plenty of wildlife in the area, mostly a variety of birds but sometimes muskrats, beavers and deer.

Hunters know it’s about more than just the kill

By Bob Marshall
The Times-Picayune

GRAND LAKE, La. — Arriving at the dock after the hunt off Grand Lake, Cressend Schonberg and I were asked the obvious first question by some of the other guys clad in camouflage: “How’d you do?”

There were four ducks on the floor board. The limit for two hunters is 12. But Cressend didn’t give the physical evidence a glance.

“We had a great hunt, a really great hunt,” he said with a big grin, then began explaining.

“We had a beautiful sunrise. Then we decided to wake up an old friend in Montana at 6:30 in the morning his time. Then we helped pull some other guys off a mud flat. And in between all that we shot and missed at a few ducks, killed these four, and laughed a lot.

“It was just a great hunt.”

Responses from the audience went from understanding laughs to knowing smiles.

Hunting scenes like that are the ones I wish I could capture on video. So when all those non-hunting friends and family asked me why I hunt, I can press the “play” button, and they might understand.

As any veteran hunter knows, killing is only part of the endeavor. Don’t get me wrong; I’m not claiming I’d spend a small fortune on gear and put my body through hell if there were no chance at a duck dinner. That would be bird watching, which is a fine sport, and one I enjoy when hunting season is closed. But the scene from last week reveals the difference between a hunter and someone who is just a shooter or killer. Hunters who stay with a sport even as their success rate drops are saying they love the whole experience, not just pulling the trigger.

Schonberg is a perfect example. At 66, he’s a local waterfowler who has watched south Louisiana duck hunting slip from great to fair to slow, but never stopped hunting.

“Of course, it’s great to be out in the marsh at sunrise, that’s always so special.”

— Cressend Schonberg

“There’s just no comparison in the number of birds we see today to the old days,” Schonberg admits. “We’d be out of the blinds by 7 o’clock with limits, and then start catching specks, reds and bass.

“Things were just completely different when I started.”

That was in the early 1960s when Schonberg found a kindred spirit in Jesuit High classmate Guy Murphy, who remains his partner in outdoor adventures today. They started as waterfowlers by hitching rides with Schonberg’s father on his fishing trips to the marshes off Lake Borgne.

“He’d run up Bayou St. Malo or Bayou Sue and let us out in our wooden pirogue,” Schonberg recalled. “We’d paddle off into the marsh, and he would go catch specks and reds.

“On those first trips we had no idea really how to hunt ducks — none. But the thing is, there were so many birds out there, we always shot a few. And, of course, we just became totally hooked on the sport.”

The next year the two teenagers decided to expand their horizons — and opportunities. They got a 14-foot aluminum flat with a 15 horsepower outboard and a sack or two of decoys — which meant they could hunt even when Dad wasn’t fishing.

“We moved over to the Biloxi Wildlife Management Area, which was a long run in a 15 outboard from Pip’s Place in Hopedale,” Schonberg said. “But we were out there every weekend and holiday. We’d drop off our girlfriends after a Friday night date and then leave for the hunt right after that.

“And, being young and stupid, we’d go regardless of conditions. If there was a strong wind out of the north-west, we’d take so much water in that boat that when we finally got across the channel we’d have to beach it and pull the plug to let the water out.

The hunting never stopped, even as Murphy went to dental school and Schonberg got his doctorate in environmental studies. Eventually, they could afford richer and closer hunting grounds. They moved to a lease in Gheens, then joined the Little Lake Hunting Club south of Lafitte.

But as their personal circumstances improved, the quality of hunting began its steady decline. Even hunters on prime waterfowling habitats such as Little Lake began experiencing the ruinous effects of coastal land loss. Vast marshes that once surrounded that famous club steadily have been converted to open water, offering little or nothing for wintering ducks.

“I guess about 10 years ago is when we really began noticing it at Little Lake, when we really noticed a drop in the number of birds,” Schonberg recalled. “Just the steady degrading of habitat quality has been the biggest factor. The effects of salt water intrusion, subsidence, dredging — everything.

“Like a lot of us who have been at it for a long time, trying to explain to younger hunters what it used to be like is difficult.

“Of course, it’s great to be out in the marsh at sunrise, that’s always so special,” Schonberg explained. “And there are still birds, just not as many as there used to be.

“But a big part of it is the socialization. You meet the craziest and most interesting people in the world — duck hunters! You combine all that, and it’s an experience I still love.”

Sister's chronic cough remains a real nuisance

DEAR DR. GOTT: Do you have any suggestions to cure a chronic, choking cough? My sister has tried almost all possible remedies, but nothing seems to work.

DEAR READER:

Everyone coughs occasionally for one reason or another. The continuation for several weeks or longer, however, is classified as chronic and occurs when an irritant stimulates nerves in the respiratory tract. While we commonly consider irritants to be pollutants or chemicals emitted into the air, they can result from perfume, room fresheners, foods, spices, fresh flowers and a host of other possibilities. What bothers one person might not affect another. Then, to make matters worse, the cough may be accompanied by shortness of breath, wheezing (particularly with asthma), a runny or stuffy nose, and less frequently hemoptysis (blood in the sputum). Chronic cough can occur because of post-nasal drip, acid reflux, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (such as chronic bronchitis and emphysema), asthma and in a very small percentage of the population, lung cancer.

ASK
DR. GOTT
Dr. Peter Gott

Statistics indicate that women are more sensitive to cough reflexes than are men. Is your sister exposed to harmful irritants such as cigarette smoke — either as a smoker herself or through secondhand smoke? Is she on any medication, particularly for heart failure or high blood pressure? If so, she might have her answer. An angiotensin-converting enzyme (ACE) inhibitor cough is present in almost one-fifth of all people on this type of blood-pressure medication. Does she work in a facility that produces irritants, or perhaps a family member does and the offending substances are carried to her home via work clothes?

Your sister should be in the hands of a qualified physician who can sort out the possibilities and make a decision regarding treatment. If she has had the cough for some time now, it will likely remain until a physician can determine the cause. He or she may find it necessary to prescribe an antihistamine, modify the medication she may be taking, draw blood, schedule a chest X-ray or CT scan, or refer her to a pulmonologist (lung specialist). Once the underlying source of the cough is identified and treated, it should disappear, allowing your sister to regain a normal life.

To provide related information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report "Allergies." Other readers who would like a copy should send a self-addressed stamped No. 10 envelope and a $2 check or money order to Newsletter, P.O. Box 167, Wickliffe, OH 44092. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My daughter is a college student majoring in musical theater. She has begun daily saline nasal rinses, where she puts saline up her nose using a special device. She states that the saline comes out of her eyes, nose and mouth. Is there any harm in doing these rinses? She does it to keep her passages clear for singing.

DEAR READER: Your daughter is clearing her nasal passages with the aid of a saline solution and neti pot, both of which are available over the counter. The pot is a small plastic vessel resembling a teapot. By tipping her head to the side, she is pouring the saline through her nasal passages to keep them clear. I've not heard of the solution traveling through to the eyes and mouth, but it's possible, because the nasal passages do communicate with the eyes.

Generally considered safe, the process is often recommended by ENT specialists for those who have had sinus surgery. Those suffering from various sinus problems and allergies have also found success, and some research shows that the process does provide relief when used with other, more typical treatments.

AROUND THE NATION

M I C H I G A N Nigerian indicted in plot to blow up plane

DETROIT — A Nigerian man accused of trying to blow up a Detroit-bound Northwest Airlines flight on Christmas Day was indicted Wednesday on charges including attempted murder and trying to use a weapon of mass destruction to kill nearly 300 people.

Umar Farouk Abdulmutallab, 23, was traveling from Amsterdam when he tried to destroy the plane by injecting chemicals into a package of pentrite explosive concealed in his underwear, authorities say.

The failed attack caused popping sounds and flames that passengers and crew rushed to extinguish.

The bomb was designed to detonate “at a time of his choosing,” the grand jury’s indictment said.

There is no specific mention of terrorism in the seven-page indictment. But trying to use a weapon of mass destruction is a terrorism charge, U.S. Attorney Barbara McQuade said.

W A S H I N G T O N Study: More return to fight after leaving Guantanamo Bay

One in five terror suspects released from the Guantanamo Bay prison has returned to the fight, according to a classified Pentagon report expected to stoke an already fierce debate over President Obama’s plan to close the military prison.

The finding reflects an upward trend on the recidivism rate, although human rights activists who advocate closing the prison have questioned the validity of such numbers.

Early last year, the Pentagon reported that the rate of released detainees returning to militancy was 11 percent. In April, it was 14 percent. The latest figure was 20 percent, according to a U.S. official, who spoke on condition of anonymity because the report had not been declassified and released.

Critics of the reports say there is so little information in the assessments that they are nearly impossible to verify independently.

Obama seeks ‘Cadillac tax’ in health bill

President Obama told top Democratic House members on Wednesday that he favors a tax on insurance companies offering more expensive health care plans as a means of extending insurance to millions of people who are not covered, according to a person familiar with the meeting.

The so-called “Cadillac tax” is a feature of a health care bill that cleared the Senate before the Christmas holiday. But the House has chosen another financing method — a tax hike on the wealthy. Powerful labor unions at the core of the Democratic base are opposed to the “Cadillac tax,” saying that in some cases union members gave up wage increases in return for richer health care benefits.

Obama’s preference may put pressure on the House to drop its approach and adopt the Senate tax as part of a compromise between the two bodies. Obama made his views known at a late afternoon meeting with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi of California and other senior Democrats.

Accused Holocaust museum gunman dies

The 89-year-old white supremacist charged in a deadly shooting at Washington’s Holocaust museum died Wednesday in North Carolina, where he’d been held while awaiting trial, authorities said.

James von Brunn died shortly before 1 p.m. at a local hospital in Butner, N.C., said Denise Simmons, the spokeswoman for the federal prison where von Brunn had been held. He had been suffering from chronic congestive heart failure, sepsis and other health problems, she said.

Von Brunn, who faced charges that carried the death penalty, had been receiving medical care for months at the prison complex in Butner, which is known for its medical facilities for aging and sick federal inmates. His lawyer, A.J. Kramer, called the death “a sad end to a tragic situation” and declined to make further comment.

Authorities say von Brunn carried a rifle as he walked up to the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum on June 10 and then shot security guard Stephen T. Johns, who was black, as he opened the door for von Brunn. He was wounded by gunfire from two other guards.

Officials at the prison hospital had previously said chronic medical problems had complicated a psychiatric evaluation for the suspect, who prior to the shooting had written racist and anti-Semitic screeds on the Internet.

Experts: Global cold snap has no effect on global warming theory

By Malcolm Ritter
Associated Press writer

Beijing had its coldest morning in almost 40 years and its biggest snowfall since 1951. Britain is suffering through its longest cold snap since 1981. And freezing weather is gripping the Deep South, including Florida’s orange groves and beaches.

Whatever happened to global warming?

Such weather doesn’t seem to fit with warnings from scientists that the Earth is warming because of greenhouse gases. But experts say the cold snap doesn’t disprove global warming at all — it’s just a blip in the long-term heating trend.

“It’s part of natural variability,” said Gerald Meehl, a senior scientist at the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colo. With global warming, he said, “we’ll still have record cold temperatures. We’ll just have fewer of them.”

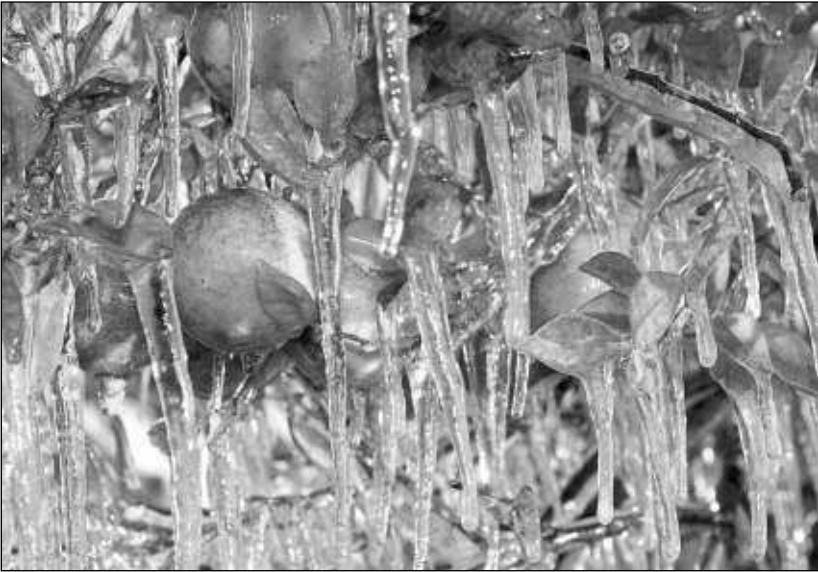

Deke Arndt of the National Climatic Data Center in Asheville, N.C., noted that 2009 will rank among the 10 warmest years for Earth since 1880.

Scientists say man-made climate change does have the potential to cause more frequent and more severe weather extremes, such as heat waves, storms, floods, droughts and even cold spells. But experts interviewed by The Associated Press did not connect the current frigid blast to climate change.

So what is going on?

“We basically have seen just a big outbreak of Arctic air” over populated areas of the Northern Hemisphere, Arndt said. “The Arctic air has really turned itself loose on us.”

In the atmosphere, large rivers of air travel roughly west to east around the globe between the Arctic and the tropics. This air flow acts like a fence to keep Arctic air confined.

Icicles cling to oranges Wednesday in Lakeland, Fla. Farmers spray water on their crops to help protect them from the cold. Temperatures in the area dipped into the mid-20’s, and farmers are working to salvage millions of dollars’ worth of strawberries and other crops.

But recently, this air flow has become bent into a pronounced zigzag pattern, meandering north and south. If you live in a place where it brings air up from the south, you get warm weather. In fact, record highs were reported this week in Washington state and Alaska.

But in the eastern United States, like some other unlucky parts of the globe, Arctic air is swooping down from the north. And that’s how you get a temperature of 3 degrees in Beijing, a reading of minus-42 in mainland Norway, and 18 inches of snow in parts of Britain, where a member of Parliament who said the snow “clearly indicates a cooling trend” was jeered by colleagues.

The zigzag pattern arises naturally from time to time, but it is not clear why it’s so strong right now, said Michelle L’Heureux, a meteorologist at the Climate Prediction Center of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. The center says the pattern should begin to weaken in a week or two.

Jeff Masters, director of meteorology for Weather Underground, a forecasting service, said he expects more typical winter weather across North America early next week.

That will be welcome news in the South, where farmers have been trying to salvage millions of dollars’ worth of strawberries and other crops.

On Miami Beach, tourists bundled up in woolen winter coats and hooded sweatshirts Wednesday beneath a clear blue sky. Some brazenly let the water wash over their feet and a few even lay out in bikinis and swimming trunks. A brisk wind blew and temperatures hovered in the 50s.

“Last year we were swimming every day,” said Olivia Ruedinger of Hamburg, Germany. “I miss that.”

Bomb, bomb, who’s got the bomb?

Training test gone awry results in traveler carrying explosives on flight

DUBLIN (AP) — A 49-year-old electrician emerged Wednesday as an unlikely symbol of what can go wrong in the war on terror after authorities in Slovakia planted an explosive in his backpack to test security — then let it travel all the way to Ireland.

The incredible chain of events included a pilot taking off with the explosive on board, the closure of a busy Dublin thoroughfare during rush hour and the man’s arrest as a terror suspect.

It all began Saturday when a policeman in Slovakia slipped 3.4 ounces of plastic explosive into Stefan Gonda’s check-in luggage at Bratislava’s Poprad-Tatry Airport as he and his wife were returning home to Ireland after a Christmas visit.

Slovak authorities said the bomb material and a dummy that smelled like explosives were hidden in the bag as a training test for a bomb-sniffing dog, who did pinpoint the fake.

But the police officer in charge got distracted and failed to remove the cache containing the real thing, the Slovak Interior Ministry said. That allowed RDX plastic explosive to travel undetected through airport security onto a Danube Wings aircraft.

While the Slovak ministry blamed the incident on “a silly and unprofessional mistake,” Irish officials and international security experts expressed disbelief that the Slovaks had hidden actual explosives in the luggage of an innocent passenger.

“It’s unbelievable, it’s astonishing,” said Rick Nelson, a former Bush administration official who worked at the National Counterterrorism Center. “I’m not sure what they were thinking, using an unknowing civilian rather than an undercover security official.”

Gonda didn’t find out about the explosive hidden in his bag until Monday night, when Slovak police called him and told him where to find it. Slovakia’s deputy prime minister, Robert Kalinak, also telephoned to apologize.

That didn’t stop Gonda from being arrested the next morning.

Ireland’s national police force, the Garda Siochana, said it received only a vague tip from their Slovak counterparts saying Gonda was suspected of possessing explosives.

So officers pounced Tuesday morning, closing a busy Dublin intersection at rush hour, evacuating several apartment buildings, sending in the Irish army’s bomb squad and taking Gonda into custody.

Gonda was released without charge three hours later after Slovakia’s Embassy intervened with more information.

'Bama and Texas: Blue bloods play for BCS title

AP photo
Heisman Trophy winner Mark Ingram leads No. 1 Alabama against No. 2 Texas in the BCS National Championship game tonight.

By Eddie Pells
Associated Press writer

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — Nick Saban gave Mack Brown a cooler full of Alabama's favorite, Dreamland Bar-B-Que. Brown presented Saban with a pair of genuine Texas spurs.

A quaint gesture, and a great photo op.

But the big prize — the one they really want — is that crystal trophy Brown and Saban posed with Wednesday, and it goes to the winner of the BCS national title game.

The undefeated Crimson Tide and Longhorns will each try to add another championship to their considerable pedigrees Thursday, a meeting that will pit All-American quarterback Colt McCoy of Texas against the player who beat him for the Heisman Trophy, running back Mark Ingram of Alabama.

"When you start with 120 teams and it's down to two, that's about 12,000 players," Brown said. "It's a great honor for your players and your coaches to be in this game."

This is a matchup of two old-line programs from Southern states — Roll Tide vs. Hook 'em Horns — where football, on many days, is bigger than life.

Saban, in his third year in Tuscaloosa, is aiming to bring the first championship to Alabama since 1992, when Gene Stallings — a protege of the late, great Bear Bryant — roamed the sidelines.

"We have a tremendous amount of respect for the tradition and the passion that our fans have," Saban said.

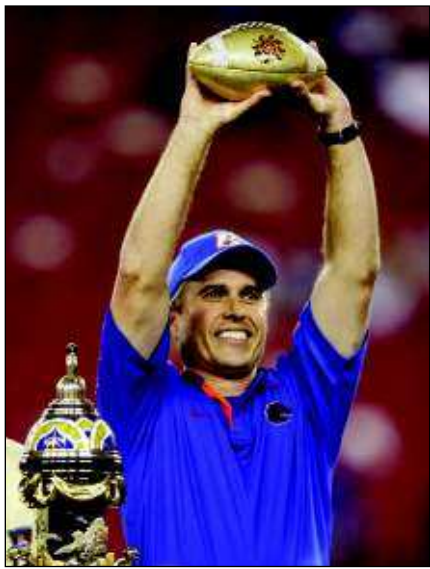

But, he said, tradition doesn't win ball games, and early in his tenure Saban even bristled against the so-called "culture of expectations" that surrounds most everything involved with Alabama football.

Since then, he has tried to ignore the hype and has gone about doing what he did six years ago when he led LSU to the BCS title: recruiting top prospects, coaching them up, Boise State coach Chris Petersen raises the Fiesta Bowl trophy after BSU defeated TCU 17-10 in the Fiesta Bowl Monday in Glendale, Ariz.

Broncos out of title mix — for now

By Andrew Bagnato
Associated Press writer

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — The second 14-0 team in modern college football history is back in Idaho, ready to watch Texas and Alabama play for the national title.

In the BCS universe, the Boise State Broncos might as well be on Mars. If you're not in the Rose Bowl tonight, forget about the national championship.

But while the Broncos were left out of the mix this time, they might not be all that far from a shot at the national title.

"Nothing happens overnight," Boise State coach Chris Petersen said after the Broncos wrapped up their perfect season Monday with a 17-10 Fiesta Bowl victory over Texas Christian.

Indeed, it could happen within the confines of the oft-vilified BCS, even as congressmen call for change and playoff advocates launch a televised ad campaign.

The Broncos return 21 of 22 starters next season. And with Virginia Tech and Oregon State on their schedule, the Broncos will have a chance to parry any strength-of-schedule questions presented by the feeble Western Athletic Conference.

"If we could beat the teams on our schedule, we would jump dramatically," Petersen said.

Playoff advocates argue that the Broncos shouldn't have to wait to play for No. 1. Their resume, which includes a win over Pac-10 champion Oregon, is as spotless as those sported by top-ranked Alabama and No. 2 Texas.

But not even the Broncos were demanding a shot at the championship after they beat TCU with a workmanlike, somewhat uninspiring, performance. Asked if he thought Boise State should be No. 1, Broncos tight end Kyle Efaw replied, "Probably not. But I mean, maybe next year."

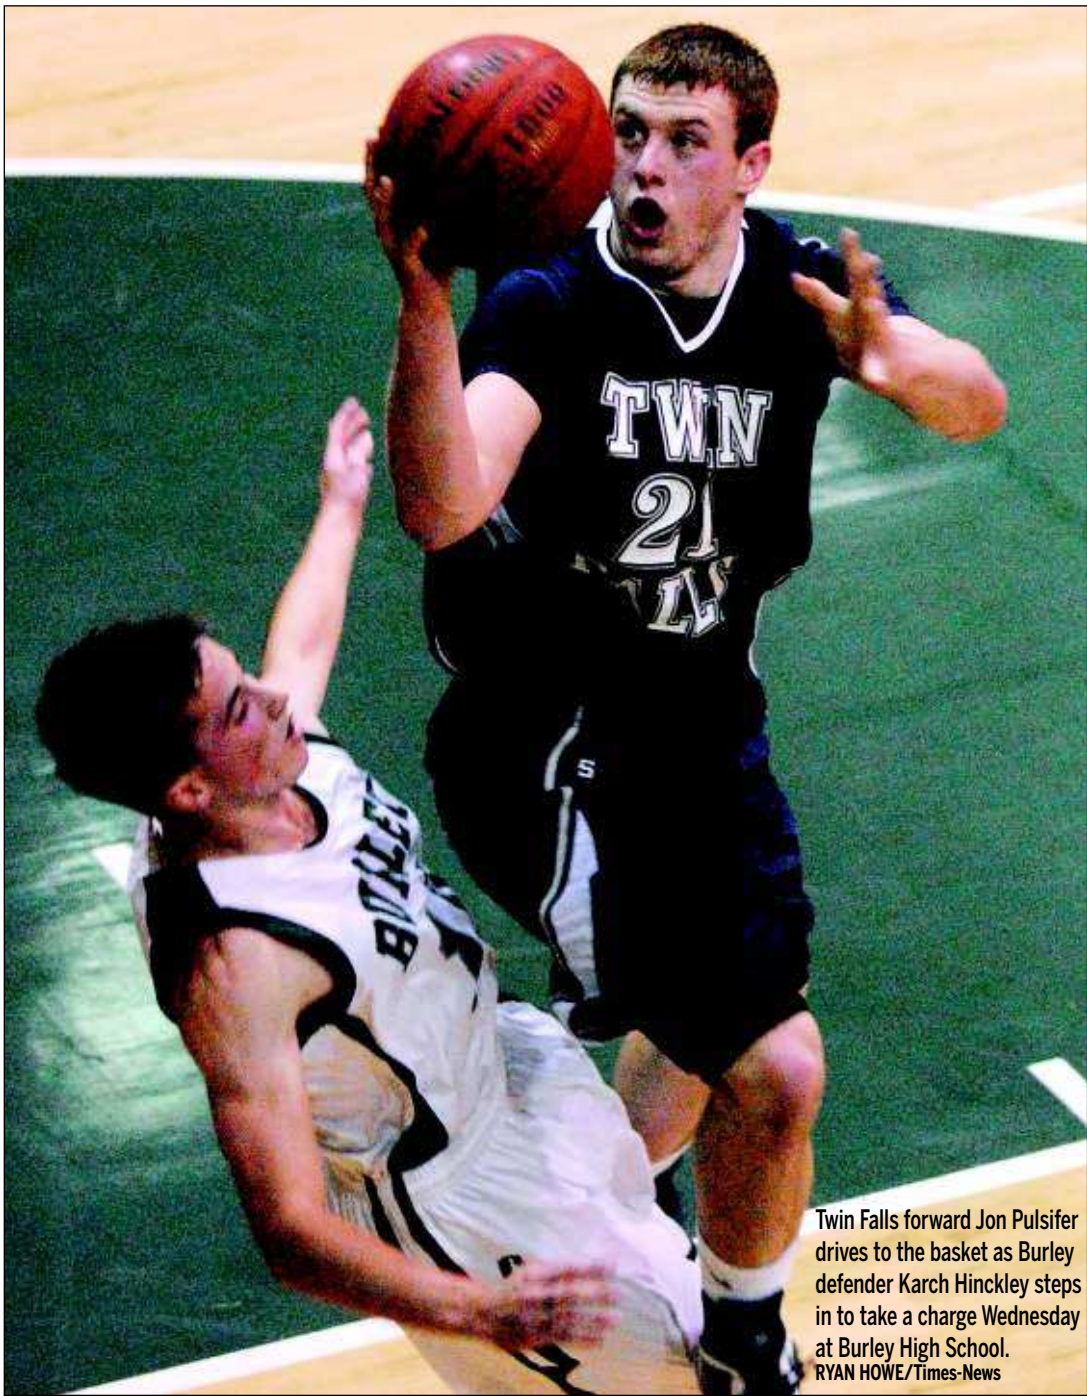

Maybe.

That's a step up from "never," which would have described Boise State's chances when the BCS opened in the 1998 season.

The Broncos have even made progress from January 2007, when some regarded Boise State as a colorful novelty act after its exhilarating Fiesta Bowl victory over Oklahoma. It was symbolic that the Broncos had to check out of their resort hotel the next day to make room for the Twin Falls forward Jon Pulsifer drives to the basket as Burley defender Karch Hinckley steps in to take a charge Wednesday at Burley High School.

RYAN HOWE/Times-News

Twin Falls boys race past Burley

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

BURLEY — The Bruins don't just win, they win big.

The Twin Falls boys basketball team's 58-25 thrashing of Burley Wednesday night was more evidence of the fact.

All of the Bruins wins have been by double-digit margins. In their eight wins, they have outscored opponents by 26.9 points on average.

"We definitely want to come out and prove that we're the No. 1 team in the state and get to that state title game," said Twin Falls senior Jon Pulsifer, who had 12 points and nine rebounds.

The Bruins (8-1, 2-0 Great Basin Conference) physically took it to Burley. Twin Falls had more offensive rebounds (27) than Burley had total rebounds (23). The Bruins scored 22 second-chance points.

"All week in practice (the coaches) have been hounding on us to get rebounds and get up and go," said Pulsifer. "We really wanted to come out and get all the rebounds that we could. We have to be aggressive because of our height, we don't have very tall people, so we want to play aggressive and we want to play well."

Eleven of Twin Falls' first 19 points came on second chances.

"Our weakness all year has been rebounding," said Burley coach Jack Bagley. "Until we can get the mindset that we need to get in there and put a body on somebody, we're going to continue to struggle with that."

Burley shot 23 percent from the floor in the first half and Brennon Lancaster scored 10 of his 13 points as the Bruins jumped out to a 31-10 halftime lead. Marcus Jardine scored nine of his 11 points before halftime.

"They really put it to us tonight," Bagley said. "They are aggressive and they're tenacious. They really get after you defensively full court and really take you out of what you want to do offensively."

Burley (4-5, 1-1 GBC) got a team-high six points from Alex Greener.

Twin Falls is on a five-game winning streak since its only loss of the season, a five-point road defeat at the hands of No. 1-ranked Skyview. The Bruins hosts Canyon Ridge on Friday.

It was Burley's second home loss of the season, but all of Burley's four victories this year have come at home. The Bobcats host Jerome on Friday.

HINCKLEY WINS HALL SCHOLARSHIP

Burley High senior Karch Hinckley received the Curtis R. Hall Memorial Scholarship in a ceremony prior to the Burley-Twin Falls boys basketball game Wednesday.

Curtis Hall, a 2000 graduate of Burley High, was killed in 2007 while serving as a U.S. Navy officer in Iraq. His family awards a scholarship each year in Hall's memory.

The recipient is chosen based on qualities of honesty, integrity and selflessness — traits Hall possessed.

"To be recognized is really humbling," Hinckley said. "It makes me want to be a better person. My work ethic is a lot better this year and I've come a long way. I've tried to hustle a lot more and be a leader."

BCS ruined bowl slate more than a playoff ever could

A national champion will be crowned tonight in Pasadena, Calif.

So the Bowl Championship Series tells us, at least. Not so sure Boise State as readily agrees. Heck, after watching the Broncos deliver a dominant performance worthy of bookending their beatdown of Oregon, I'm not so sure I agree. (Yes, I picked TCU to win the Fiesta Bowl. Here's hoping leather and neoprene are acquired tastes.)

David Bashore

In any event, another college football season will end this evening in the hallowed Rose Bowl, with loose ends.

This will be the fourth straight season, and sixth out of the last seven, in which at least one team that does not contest the BCS National Championship game has the same number of losses as — or fewer than — the team that hoists the trophy. It'll be the second time for Boise State.

But the clamor for a national playoff still remains little more than water-cooler talk, even with the recent Quinnipiac poll that said there is 2-to-1 support to ditch the BCS and come up with some form of playoff.

The BCS bigwigs continue to pooh-pooh this desire as nothing more than idle talk that would only gum up the works.

"It's easy to support a hypothetical playoff on paper, but no one has come up with a viable way to actually create one without diminishing the value of the regular season and ending the bowl games as we know them," BCS executive director Bill Hancock told The Associated Press last week. "Yes, a playoff could be created, but at a tremendous loss to the unique game that we love."

That's all well and good, Mr. Hancock, but there are only two problems. One, as Yahoo! Sports' Dan Wetzel put forth, if the regular season is a playoff, then in what week was Boise State eliminated? Two, the bowl games as we knew them (and as I, for one, loved them) were done when they introduced a definitive national championship tie-in 18 years ago

Declo boys outlast Buhl in OT

Times-News

Tyler Briggs scored 20 and the Declo boys basketball team hit 7 of 10 free throws in overtime to take a 62-59 win at Buhl on Wednesday.

The Hornets (6-2) fell behind but asserted control in the third quarter to make it a game again, then dominated the overtime after Buhl (4-3) rallied to force the extra period.

“It was a good ballgame, both teams battled,” said Buhl coach Ryan Bowman. “The difference was in the third quarter they came out and did a good job of getting the ball into the paint and finishing or dishing out to Briggs.”

Matt Hamilton scored 16 and J.D. Leckenby added 15 for the Indians.

Buhl is at Jerome Saturday.

Miles helps Jazz beat Grizzlies

SALT LAKE CITY — C.J. Miles scored a season-high 24 points and Carlos Boozer added 20 to help the Utah Jazz overcome the absence of Deron Williams and beat the Memphis Grizzlies 117-94 on Wednesday night.

Williams sat out with a sprained right wrist, which he sustained when he hit the ground after a driving layup in the fourth quarter of Monday's loss to New Orleans. The Jazz point guard warmed up prior to the game, but was only able to shoot with his left hand. An MRI scan Tuesday was negative and Williams plans to make the trip to Memphis and may play Utah's next game on Friday.

Backup point guard Ronnie Price, who started in Williams' place, scored 14 points and had six assists despite a sore left shoulder. Sundiata Gaines, a recent 10-day contract signee, played his first NBA game and had three points and five assists in 21 minutes as the Jazz won for the first time in four games.

Sam Young matched his career-high scoring 22 points for Memphis. Zach Randolph added 18 points for the Grizzlies, who saw their three game winning streak snapped.

Even without Williams, the Jazz set a season-high with 39 assists and shot 56.8 percent from the field.

The Vols (11-2) were without Tyler Smith, Cameron Tatum, Brian Williams and Melvin Goins, who combine to average 32.2 points, 14.7 rebounds and 7.8 assists per game. Coach Bruce Pearl indefinitely suspended the four after they were arrested Friday on gun and drug charges.

NO. 10 MICHIGAN ST. 54, NO. 17 WISCONSIN 47

Bowls

with the Bowl Coalition and then the Bowl Alliance, predecessors of the BCS.

It used to be that we woke up Jan. 1 to a veritable smorgasbord of college football games. The Hall of Fame Bowl. The Citrus Bowl. The Cotton Bowl. The Gator. The Orange, Sugar, and Fiesta. The Rose Bowl, above all the others.

All the prestigious, important bowls came on one day, and there were sometimes two or three bowls with championship implications. We had to wait a day or two to find out what team was the champion (or if the titles were shared, in some cases). It wasn't a perfect system, but it made New Year's Day bowl-watching special.

This year, there were “only” five games (as many as were played both Dec. 31 and Jan. 2), and only the love-fests for departing icons Bobby Bowden and Tim Tebow saved the day from being rendered completely meaningless.

Since we've killed that 14 hours of unparalleled pageantry and drama in favor of big-money payouts with less riding on them (except for one, of course), we might as well go the whole way and introduce the playoff.

To address all the hand-wringing, let's use the BCS as the Top 8 (to diminish the impact on the regular season). Then air the four BCS bowl games in succession on Jan. 1 (to preserve the bowls). Talk about bringing the pop back to New Year's Day.

The BCS could work with the NFL to arrange time slots for all their games and the college games for semifinals and championships. Play one semifinal on the following Saturday and the following Sunday, after the wild-card games, and play the championship game after the AFC and NFC championships one or two weeks later, depending on how the NFL schedule falls.

Who wouldn't want that kind of football frenzy?

It might not be as perfect. (The deadline for underclassmen to declare for the NFL Draft would have to be bumped back, for example). But I'm sure I'm not alone in thinking if games spill into January, I'd rather watch Ohio State take on Alabama or Texas and Florida play Boise State in semifinal games than sit through South Florida and Northern Illinois.

The bottom line is that something has to happen, and soon (preferably before Congress gets involved any further). The BCS can't continue to take the moral high ground and claim protection of the bowl games to perpetuate a clearly flawed championship system.

Especially when it's helped damage the bowls more than a playoff ever could.

Wizards' Arenas indefinitely suspended by NBA

NEW YORK (AP) — Gilbert Arenas tried joking about his gun trouble. David Stern found none of it funny. Arenas was suspended indefinitely without pay Wednesday by the NBA commissioner, who determined the player's behavior made him “not currently fit to take the court.”

A day after the Washington Wizards guard was photographed before a game in Philadelphia pointing his index fingers, as if they were guns, at his teammates, Stern warned the former All-Star that his conduct will “ultimately result in a substantial suspension, and perhaps worse.”

Arenas is under investigation by federal and local anclude that he is not currently fit to take the court in an NBA game,” Stern said in a statement. “Accordingly, I am suspending Mr. Arenas indefinitely, without pay, effective immediately pending the completion of the investigation by the NBA.”

With each game he misses, Arenas will lose about $147,200 of the $16.2 million he will earn this season in the second of a six-year, $111 million contract. The punishment came on his 28th birthday.

“I feel very badly that my actions have caused the NBA to suspend me, but I understand why the league took this action,” Arenas said in a statement through his attorney. “I put the NBA in a negative light and let down my teammates and our fans. I am very sorry for doing that.”

Arenas added that he had called Stern to apologize.

Shanahan 'excited and honored' to take over as Redskins coach

WASHINGTON — Mike Shanahan says he's "excited and honored" to take the reins of the Washington Redskins.

Shanahan was introduced Wednesday as the team's head coach and executive vice president. He signed a 5-year deal, averaging approximately $7 million annually with his final approval on personnel decisions.

New GM Bruce Allen introduced Shanahan, marking the first time owner Daniel Snyder didn't handle that duty.

Shanahan

strong return from a left knee injury that cost him an entire season has earned the Patriots quarterback The Associated Press 2009 NFL Comeback Player of the Year award.

He received 19 votes from a nationwide panel of 50 sports writers and broadcasters who cover the NFL, beating Tampa Bay running back Carnell "Cadillac" Williams, who got 14.

Brady led New England (10-6) to the AFC East title, throwing for 4,398 yards and 28 touchdowns.

HARVIN IS TOP OFFENSIVE ROOKIE

NEW YORK — Percy Harvin used his versatility and intelligence to win The Associated Press 2009 NFL Offensive Rookie of the Year award.

Harvin had 60 receptions for 790 yards and six touchdowns; rushed 15 times for 135 yards; took back 42 kickoffs for 1,156 yards (27.5 yards per return) and two touchdowns, one covering 101 yards.

Harvin had 41 votes Wednesday from the nationwide panel of 50 sports writers and broadcasters who cover the league.

HENRY'S FIANCEE WON'T FACE CHARGES

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Police will not charge the fiancée of late Cincinnati Bengals receiver Chris Henry in connection with his death last month.

Charlotte-Mecklenburg police announced Wednesday that there was no evidence that Loleini Tonga drove recklessly or with excessive speed last month when Henry came out of the back of her pickup truck on a curvy, residential road and suffered fatal injuries.

CHARLIE WEIS MAY JOIN CHIEFS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — All signs are pointing toward former Notre Dame coach Charlie Weis becoming offensive coordinator for the Kansas City Chiefs.

Coach Todd Haley, an old friend of Weis, said Wednesday that he would be a "good fit" calling plays for Kansas City, and Weis later told The Associated Press "there is action going on" between him and the Chiefs.

"Until a deal is done, I really can't say anything," Weis said from his home near South Bend, Ind.

NFL TWEAKS INSTANT REPLAY RULES

NEW YORK — The NFL adjusted instant replay rules to allow reviews of time remaining for the last play of each half or an overtime period in the playoffs.

The adjustment will be limited to situations in which time expired before, during or after a play that ends a half or overtime. Time can be put back on the clock or removed in certain situations if replay shows an error was made.

DEAR ABBY: I enjoyed the column you published Nov. 26 with letters from readers about 13-13-13, and I'm not the least astonished that many of them didn't get the humor.

You failed to point out that several calendars actually DO have 13 months, among them the Muslim and Chinese calendars, each of which are lunar-solar calendars. Thus, 13-13-13 could be possible. My personal preference would be for 12 months of 30 days with a midsummer two-day break and a midwinter two- or three-day break. It may not be practical, but it would be fun.

— JOHN S. CAPE GIRARDEAU, MO.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR JOHN: Thank you for the "timely" information and moral support. I confess that when I wrote my reply to the original letter, which appeared Sept. 4, it did not occur to me to check any calendar other than the one on my desk. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Your 13th month column was hilarious. It made people think. However, Orthodox Jews must be writing you by the thousands over your 13-13-13 "mistake." The ancient Jewish calendar is a lunar calendar in which a 13th month occurs every few years. Even secularists can count 13 new moons every 365-day year. This is why new moons are never at the same time of the "month," and why Jewish holidays never fall on the same day of the week.

— RICHARD IN PALM DESERT, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: There have been many calendars adopted throughout the ages as a way of measuring time, whether using the Gregorian currently used by Western civilization or by the lunar or solar means. Among them: the Mayan, Aztec, Babylonian, Zoroastrian, Hopi, Hindu, Egyptian, Roman and the Baha'i. Let us all celebrate in diverse and creative ways with love, compassion and encouragement.

— CAROL IN POST FALLS, IDAHO

DEAR ABBY: I was glad to see you embrace the intelligent idea that we will return to using the 13-month calendar by the year 2013. The insanity promoted by the ego-driven Gregorian calendar contributes much to the materialistic consumerism madness that pollutes our world.

Until we return our focus to the organic, cyclical nature of time we will not truly begin the healing of Mother Gaia to the extent we are able. Bringing mankind's consciousness back to a natural order of time will do much to heal the insanity that causes us to think we are superior to nature and the natural order of all things.

— A.J. IN YREKA, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: I'll bet most of your readers would be surprised to learn that there are some places in the world that DO have 13 months. Ethiopia's tourism motto is: "13 Months of Sunshine." Each month has 30 days, leaving five days (six during leap year) for the 13th month of Pagome. Their calendar is also about seven years behind ours. So, while you still can't celebrate 13-13-13 — even in Ethiopia — you CAN claim to be seven years younger.

— ETHIOPIAN AT HEART ST. JOSEPH, MICH.

DEAR ABBY: Thought you might be interested to know that George Eastman, founder of Kodak, established a company-wide calendar based on 13 months, each with four weeks — plus a New Year's Day. So in 1913, there WAS a 13-13-13. And if it had been on a Friday, then every month of that year would have had a Friday the 13th, too.

— LEONARD M. ROCHESTER, N.Y.
